The Woman on the Cross!

The half-naked troglodyte stalked forth from his cave in search of a mate. He clubbed her into submission. When she proved untrue the remedy was easy, for she was the weaker. He killed her.

Civilized man stalks his mate by cajolery and many promises. When she proves untrue, he slays her.

He does not cleave her with a stone hatchet as did the troglodyte. Civilization has devised more subtle methods. He makes of her an outcast; he tears her own flesh and blood from her arms; he turns a deaf ear to the agonized cry of motherhood robbed of its young; he crucifies her on the cross of convention.

It matters not that he himself has sinned. The woman is the weaker and she must pay.

But must she alone pay?

This question now is stirring the civilized world. Every woman is vitally interested; it is a potent force in the life of every man.

"That Sort," Essanay's five act feature, deals with just such a problem. Warda Howard depicts the agonies of the woman on the cross with a dramatic intensity that strikes straight to the heart. She is ably supported by Duncan McRae, Ernest Maupain and John Lorenz.

This photoplay is taken from the drama of Basil McDonald Hastings, produced under the direction of Charles J. Brabin and released through the V-L-S-E.

interested in. That's the test that denudes advertising claims and makes Serials stand on their merits alone. That's the test that "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring" has already been put to in the hundreds of theatres throughout the entire United States and the final proof positive of the huge money-making possibilities of "Peg o' the Ring" is the fact that Exhibitors who have watched competition draw the money with this new, novel and entirely unique serial are now after it. This is the NEW IDEA serial—new in theme—new in environments—new in swiftness of action—and the reason why this Serial is "Packing 'em In" is because IT IS EXACTLY WHAT THE PEOPLE WANT in Serial Photoplay Entertainment. There's your answer why "Peg o' the Ring" is already Tremendously Successful.

Where Are My Children?

Blocks Broadway Traffic

Old Timers along the Great White Way who saw the huge mob struggling to gain admission to the GLOBE THEATRE to see "Where Are My Children" pronounced it "Unbelievable" that Broadway Traffic could be blocked by ANY Moving picture ever produced.

Yet the crowd shown in the picture reproduced below is ONLY the crowd that jammed the sidewalk in front of the Globe Theatre.

Inside, in the lobby (which is nearly 100 feet deep), another huge crowd was massed from doors to entrance. That's how "Where Are My Children" packed 'em in on Broadway, the hardest show street in the world, and in spite of the fierce competition in this, the greatest Theatre neighborhood in the world. The New York Newspapers, the Clergy, the Trade Press and the Public pronounced it "Wonderful," "Amazing," "Sensational," "Dignified." With playing the lead, supported by a brilliant cast, including Marie Walcamp and others, "Where Are My Children" presents the Box Office Attraction of the decade. Scenario and story by that brilliant genius of filmdom,

The Universal Program

The Greatest on Earth

REASONS why the Universal Program reigns supreme are offered in the following review of the seven feature releases which head the daily programs for the week of June 12. Read and learn why the Universal dominates them all. Remember the balance of the week's bill includes one reels that other producers would pad to two or three. It includes animated cartoons; the "always first" Universal Animated Weekly. It is the one supreme varied program that never fails of interest. Get full particulars from your nearest Universal Exchange. If you cannot get the Universal Program NOW—watch your chance and get it at the very first opportunity. In the meantime book these features and bolster up your show.

"What Love Can Do." With Adele Farrington, C. H. Hammond and Mina Cunard. Story by Gertrude Nelson Andrews. Directed by Jay Hunt. Twentieth Reel Feather Production. Released June 12. A theme that stirs a responsive chord in the heart of every lover of moving pictures forms the basis of the strong photoplay reviewed here. That theme is the course of a great love that suffers all, gives all, conquers all—thereby proving itself true. Adele is a newspaper woman who for five years has given her love—her very life—to the owner of the paper. She is loved by the city editor—"Old Grouch," who is ignorant of her liaison. The "man" in the case thinks he is tired of Adele, and only her wonderful loyalty through a dangerous strike, and great mental trouble, bring him to the realization of his true feeling for her—that of unyielding love and devotion. Strong situations; a big strike scene; emotional moments of tense dramatic power, mark this as a fine play—one that will please your audiences at every performance.

J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Melody of Love." Three Reel Gold Seal Heroic Western Drama. Produced by J. Warren Kerrigan. Released June 13. Fortunate indeed, are the Universal Exhibitors, who recognize the box office power of J. Warren Kerrigan in plays like "The Melody of Love." Fortunately for them here is one of the best this great actor ever did, released at a time when he is at the height of his power—in constant demand for features of greater length. It was in this stirring story of drama that he made his first bid for fame, and the present release is worked out with all his old-time swing and dash that captivates every man, woman and child who sees it. This is an opportunity that happens once in a lifetime. If you are not showing the Universal Program, book this and be happy.

"How Stars Are Made." With Alice Howell and Ray Griffith. Two Reel L-KO Komical Absurdity. Released for laughing purposes only June 14. Alice has an ambition. She will be a movie star. She interviews the studio watchman. She sneaks into the star's dressing room and swipes a costume. There's a grand carnival in town that day and the star is to ride on a float as a queen—of something or other. Alice beats her to it and the fun is fast and furious. The street parade is a scream and the finish is typically L-KO—that means an absolute surprise with the laughing punch that will leave your audiences breathless.

"Her Soul's Song." With Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson Two Reel Laemmle Heart Interest Drama. Directed by Lloyd Carleton. Released June 15. The varied nature of the Universal Program has made it the greatest on earth. The recognition of what people want, and that they don't want the same thing all the time, keeps the U. P. at the top of the heap all the time. Here's evidence. The stars of this beautiful little drama have shown what they could do in heavy emotional work time and again. In this story of an opera singer who gave up her career for love, and who lost her voice when the baby came; who regained it under the most peculiar conditions, it is so absorbingly human that it is positively universal in its appeal to the finer emotions of the heart. Abounding in heart throbs, it will please any audience.

Hobart Henley in "The Devil's Image." Two Reel Dope Drama. Directed by Henry Otto. Released June 16. Every lover of Universal moving pictures enjoys handsome Hobart Henley's every moment on the screen. Clean, wholesome, young, good-looking, with the frank, engaging manner that makes everyone like him he has made millions of friends among the fans. In this fine picture his friends will get something of a shock. They will realize that Hobart Henley is an emotional and character actor of fine ability as well as a handsome man well fitted for heroic parts. Here we see him as a dope fiend deprived of the drug, and in one of the weirdest situations, where in a dream he fights with himself, is acting of the highest order. The thrills in this will hold 'em on the edge of their seats. The double exposure work of Mr. Henley has rarely been equalled.

"A Railroad Bandit." Two Reel Railroad Drama. With Lee Hill and Marie Walcamp. Directed by Henry McRae. Released June 17. Judged by their plays you would think that Director McRae lived on railroad wrecks; that Lee Hill would rather risk his life than eat, and that life held nothing for Marie Walcamp unless there were a few death defying stunts served to her every so often. This realistic portrayal of a Western hold-up, love rivalry, and the ensuing complications is a great picture. No living man, woman or child could sit through this marvelous film without being moved to their depths. A picture that will please everyone and that will stand a lot of boosting—in fact, all that you can give it. Don't fail to book this if you are not showing the regular Universal Program.

Ben Wilson in "The Finer Metal." With Dorothy Phillips. Adapted for the screen from the play by E. E. Kidder. Produced by Raymond L. Schrock. Two Reel Rex Emotional Drama. Released June 18. Pure drama of the most intense and emotional sort marks this photoplay which was originally written and produced for the Actor's Fund Benefit with Henry Kolker in the lead. Among other the unusual situation is presented of a husband coming to the room of his wife's lover to save him from arrest on a charge of embezzlement while the guilty wife learns of his magnanimity while hiding behind a curtain. Big in theme, in acting and in production, this is a big offering which fittingly closes the Universal Program for the week.

BLUE BIRD Photoplays (inc)

"LOIS WEBER directed the marvelous photo-drama—"The Eye of God," announced on the preceding page as the latest BLUEBIRD release.

To those familiar with the work of this remarkable woman, the statement is big with promise. Producer of the wonderful spectacles, "Hypocrites," Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "Scandal," "Jewel" and "Where Are My Children?"—to mention only her most recent work, Lois Weber today outranks any and every other director in the moving picture field.

Her breadth of vision; her innate humanity; her sense of the dramatic; the scope of her artistry unified by her long experience as both actress and producer, are shown in every script which finds its way to the screen through her hands.

"The Eye of God," in which Miss Weber plays opposite that eminent American actor, Tyrone Power, was written by her, staged, and directed by her, and is the strongest possible evidence of the new and higher standard set by BLUEBIRD Photoplays.

Such dramas are giving to moving pictures their rightful place in the field of entertainment—that of dignified, worthy and thoughtful presentations of subjects of universal human interest, capably acted and lavishly produced.

New York, N. Y., May 20th.

Dear Bill:

I've ben in New York three days now an' it's sure some big town. I seen the fight a few nights ago, but there wasn't much class. The big feller was too big an' the little feller was too small for him.

You tell John Tompkins he'd better keep his butcher shop and not take up prize fightin' for a business.

I've ben gettin' along fine since I've ben here, 'cept for the trains. They have 'em under the street and three or four stories high in the middle of the street and criss-cross an' every which way.

Last night I got a letter from Lucie and she sed to me that you had bought the Savoy pitcher theatre. An' speakin' of pitchers, I sure did see the funny man last night. His name is Daniels. I don't remember wether his name's Jim or Frank, but he sure is one funny fellow. His face looks like a cross between a sun burnt turnip an' a big ben alarm clock, an' the way he does act is grand. I just laughed until my left side hurt me an' I would be laughin' yet, but a girl next to me got hysterical and got choked on the gum she was chewin'. She was some pretty girl and I would liked to have helped her but I was laughin' so darn hard that I couldn't be of any use. Just as I did get ready to help her the feller she was with took her out.

You better see if you can't buy a pitcher with that feller in it. He's sure one funny guy.

I've order the cultivators and they're dandies.

Good luck.

Your friend,
JED HAWKINS.

Dear Sir:-

Notwithstanding the fact that "THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" had ten days' play at Fox's Bedford Theatre, four days at Lowe's Fulton Theatre, four days at the Classique, three days at the Summer, three days at the New Albany and before 12,000 people at the Thirteenth Regiment Armory, all these being within a radius of ten blocks from the Throop Theatre, we did a big business and had the
S. R. O. sign out at 7 o'clock.

We intend playing a return date on Variety Adds Spice!

If you were giving a feast you would not offer just one huge dish. No matter how palatable, the appetite would be surfeited by too much of one thing.

So is the mind surfeited by a similarity of subjects. A high class short comedy or drama on your program gives variety and relieves monotony. Spices are needed for a program as well as a feast.

Essanay is making a specialty of short, snappy subjects with its stars in the lead, to add variety to your program.

BIG FOUR'S OPEN BOOKING POLICY OFFICIALLY COMMENDED BY EXHIBITORS

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 23rd, 1916.

V-L-S-E,
1600 Broadway,
New York City.

Dear Sirs:

At a meeting of "The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn" the following resolution was unanimously passed.

"Whereas, The majority of feature film concerns are releasing their output on what is known as a program contract system, and

"Whereas, Some of these concerns bind the exhibitor by demanding a cash deposit as security on this contract, and

"Whereas, The exhibitor is forced against his will to take as part of these programs, film, that is good, bad and indifferent, and

"Whereas, The bad films the exhibitor has to show as part of these programs, not only do him incalculable harm, but have a tendency to hurt the entire industry, therefore,

"Be it resolved, that 'The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn' in meeting assembled, go on record as emphatically endorsing the open booking policy of the V-L-S-E which eliminates contracts and cash deposits and permits an exhibitor to show what he pleases, indicating this policy as being a fair and liberal one,

"Be it further resolved, that, the members of this Association heartily commend this policy and pledge their moral support and cooperation to V-L-S-E and recommend that all other exhibitors do likewise,

"Be it further resolved that, a copy of this resolution be sent to the main office of V-L-S-E."

Yours very truly,

By order of the President.

Gentlemen:

I have run a number of your features and my patrons were pleased with every one of them. They surely must have pleased or I should not have signed up for thirteen weeks more.

I think your policy of allowing the exhibitor to pick his own program will please the exhibitor more than anything else, as the exhibitor knows his patrons, where the exchange does not.

WORLD FILM CORPORATION

WORLD PICTURES

I will give $5,000 in prizes for good stories to use in making scenarios for World Pictures.

William A. Brady

I invite the co-operation of the writers of the country—amateur and professional—in the work of producing better scenarios for picture plays.

As Director-General of World Pictures, it is my ambition to heighten the standards of the silent drama. Frankly, I am convinced that one of the first needs is much better scenarios. There has been too much trash!

So I have deposited $5000 at the Mutual Bank, New York City, to be awarded to those who present interesting stories, ideas or scenarios that I select for making photo plays. Contest closes at 6 P. M., Sept. 15, and the prizes awarded Jan. 1, 1917.

Of course, I am now receiving most of the choicest scenarios on the market, and they are being made into World Pictures. Included in them, I believe, are some of the greatest film dramas so far.

But I want to continue buying better-than-usual stories for every new World Picture. I cannot stand mediocrity.

Surely there are hundreds of people—yes, thousands—who have ideas which could be worked up into first-class photo plays, to meet the new standards set for World Pictures.

$1000 for the Best Story

For the best story, idea or scenario, I offer $1000; for the second best, $750; for the third best, $650. The stories taking fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh place, each will receive $500, $400, $300 and $200 respectively. The next twelve successful stories will be paid for at the rate of $100 each. We will therefore accept nineteen stories.

You need not submit a technically perfect scenario, such as are prepared by experts. You may submit merely the story in narrative form. Of course finished scenarios by professional writers will be welcomed.

To give you an idea of the kind of material we are seeking, I have prepared a chart showing what will please and what to avoid. If you wish a copy, write to me for it.

Let me suggest here, however, that the World Film Corporation is interested in unusual plays of present-day life, full of human interest and realism, with plenty of action and with tense, dramatic situations. People seem to like the love element and some comedy in each play.

Please avoid stories of the underworld and of war. Nor do I care to handle anything that is sordid or gruesome. I want clean, wholesome stories for the entire family to see and enjoy. Each story should make a five-reel picture.

What I Seek

Probably you have seen either House Peters in "The Closed Road" or Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life" or Kitty Gordon in "Her Maternal Right." If not, see these pictures and you will get an idea of what we like. At present, thousands of people everywhere are enjoying and applauding the first of our new-day pictures.

Not long ago I stopped loaning my name to screen productions and entered personally into the supervision of World Pictures from start to finish. And now I am surrounded by the combined artistic and financial resources of two great organizations—World and Equitable.

These double resources, together with a reduced schedule of productions, permit me to carry out my most cherished ambitions. For thirty years I have been presenting stage plays to the people of eleven nations. Now I hope to win new friends in Filmland through greater triumphs.

See World Pictures

To further study what appeals to us, see some of the coming World Pictures which will be shown at first-class theatres everywhere. They include: Robt. Warwick in "Sudden Riches," Alice Brady in "Tangled Fates," Carlyle Blackwell and Ethel Clayton in "His Brother's Wife," Kitty Gordon in "The Crucial Test," Holbrook Blinn in "The Weakness of Man," Edna Wallace Hopper and Frank Sheridan in "The Perils of Divorce," Mollie King in "Fate's Boomerang" and Gail Kane in "The Other Sister."

Send your stories or scenarios to me personally. If you wish them returned, include postage. Your name and address should be plainly marked.

The American public has shown that it is patriotic—that it is for preparedness!—that it is going to follow every chapter with intense interest. This means continuous record-breaking capacity for exhibitors!

T.R. Endorses Stronger Navy

Roosevelt's great Chicago speech (April 29) was in effect a powerful endorsement for such a preparedness plan as suggested by "The Secret of the Submarine"! He said:

"We need beyond everything else a first-class navy. . . . We cannot possibly get it unless the naval program is handled with steady wisdom from the standpoint of a nation that accepts the upbuilding and upkeep of such a navy as cardinal points of continuous policy!"

Over 1000 Newspapers are publishing E. Alexander Powell's remarkable novelization of "The Secret of the Submarine" for millions who want to see the motion pictures!

Facts and Comments

MANY exhibitors complain as it seems to us with perfect justice about municipal shows that are conducted without a license. Whether an admission is charged for such shows or not it seems to us makes but little if any difference. The motion picture man who pays a license ought not to be compelled to compete with the very municipality which issues the license to him. We believe that if this matter was taken into court on an injunction the free and unlicensed municipal show might be stopped. Quite aside from the legal aspects of the case, however, the utter unfairness of such competition must be apparent to every person with any sense of justice or equity. There may be occasions when co-operation between the municipality and the exhibitor is necessary for the screen is a great factor in the promotion of civic welfare. When, however, rooms in the city halls or in state armories are used to hold motion picture shows in direct competition with men who have paid a license it is nothing less than a hardship and imposition on the exhibitor.

THE old complaint about long shows for little money is voiced once more and this time from the Bronx. A friend and reader of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD speaks of thirteen reels for a nickel as a common thing in some of the best and biggest houses. Must be something wrong here. It's a matter which might be taken up by the organized exhibitors of the place. The organization in the Bronx has the reputation of being strong and active.

CONSTRUCTIVE work is needed in the battle against censorship. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD highly commends the action of the organized exhibitors in the state of Ohio, notably Cleveland, in this connection. These men led by Mr. Megown have secured the support of practically all the women in the state who are organized in the doing of important and useful social work. They have co-operated with the women for special "family programs" to be run on special days. The exhibitors also did splendid work in connection with the "Better Babies" crusade. It seems to us that work of this kind is deserving of hearty encouragement on the part of all the manufacturers who are opposed to censorship.

THE memorandum accompanying the Governor's veto of the foolish Cristman-Wheeler Bill is a statesmanlike document. The Governor does not take up the question of the constitutionality of the proposed law but withholds his approval because the bill is confiscatory in effect. He says that the motion picture has become the most popular entertainment and that the closing of motion picture theaters would work a hardship upon the public. These words will wake up an echo in the mind of every fair-minded man. Governor Whitman has always been credited with a keen political vision and he certainly has gauged public sentiment correctly when he decided to stand between the motion picture and the men who would wantonly and ignorantly destroy it.

IT IS but fair to acknowledge the hard work which was done by the entire industry against the signing of this bill. This morning's mail brings many congratulations to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD for its share in the battle. One up-state exhibitor writes in to say that the work done on the suggestion and with the co-operation of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD had much to do with the final defeat of this unjust censorship bill. We could have done but little had it not been for the intelligent and persistent activities of the exhibitors. They were responsible for the presence of many disinterested persons at the hearing, such as the representatives of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce. They fought with slides, petitions and in many cases by direct personal appeal. Thousands of petitions were sent from the Capitol District alone. The victory over the forces of ignorance is due in equal proportion to every branch and to every friend of the screen. That the victory in Albany will dampen the ardor of censorship agitators in other states is morally certain.

Our American Girl

BY LOUIS REEVES HARRISON.

IT IS almost in vain that we look for her on the screen. A broad and deep characterology has depicted nearly every phase of the American makeup so far as males are concerned. They are shown in all their infinite variety, from men who take themselves seriously to those who are only mildly amusing, much to our edification, if not delight, but the ladies who appear, though they may be of the theatrical elite, are not the ones we meet in every-day society.

We have the artless little ingenue as regularly as eggs for breakfast, and she has all the innocent candor of a truly good egg, though the actress who plays the role may be as far removed from sweet simplicity as grease paint and late suppers can make her. She may be able to handle her "twin-six" like a speed demon and mount a stiff hill of Martins at "high," but who really ever saw an ingenue such as she depicts? She has one good reason for existence if she is a rich little girl, or a poor little girl who grows rich in the last act, and that lies in the darling frocks she reproduces straight from the latest fashion papers.

She is also very sweet in a riding suit of black velvet, and she is simply killing when she dons overalls to crawl beneath a motor car and emerge with a becoming black smooch on one cheek, her lips pouting in a tempting moue. She may stay with us as long as she likes, an airy-fairy cornflake, but it might not be a bad idea to humanize her once in a while, let us get the natural flavor without so much sugar. Girls in real life may be just as innocent and sweet to the eye with an occasional dash of temper to relieve their insipidity and bring them within range of our sympathies.

There are debutantes who have to start life at so much a week in factory and office. They not only have to stand the hard knocks that men receive, but also a lot of hard knocks from women who are merely sponging on men, yet they manage to get along when they have courage. Thousands of them make their living honestly in New York City with neither money nor pull at the outset, merely plucky girls of independent spirit. Some of them save money and are swindled out of it by the real estate sharks only to try again until they have little homes of their own paid for by hard work and self denial.

Who ever saw one of these spirited bachelor girls wearing boys clothes, as they do in screen plays, and looking as much like a boy as chocolate fudge does a ham sandwich? Only on the stage and on the screen are they lured to the villain's room to become "his plaything until cast aside." Of all members of their sex they are really the keenest in judging men and the motives of men, though the men may not know it. Girls whose minds are kept sweet and wholesome by work are seldom among those who announce tearfully before a criminal court, "I am not bad—it was because I loved him so."

Old theatrical producers who have been long engaged in clearing the working girl "in the eyes of the world" by showing that "her whole happiness was at stake," or because "she was a mere child in knowledge of the world," probably never met a working girl of any account, one whose clean principles are founded on hard experience, whose proof of fine character lies in her voluntary choice of the right way to get along, who often contributes from her scant earnings to help mother and father, or the younger children.

Practically every young actress in this fair land of ours longs to play the role of an "adventuress," just as the child in pigtails longs to get out of short skirts—or did before the present fashions appeared. "The human vampire" was conceived in the mind of some poor fish who was disappointed in love. It is to laugh. What a persistent old remnant of crass theatricalism is the idea of woman as an institution for man's demoralization! He actually prays for demoralization from the moment he learns to tie his cravat.

The poor old adventuress is still with us. She wears a big black hat and clothes that are poured on, the eternal temptress of poor misguided man, the girl ordered by the villain to get the "papers" at any cost. She and wax figures were once popular with the uninitiated. She might not have survived them but for the meanest poem ever written in English. She was originated by Adam and revived by Rudyard Kipling. Both of these gentlemen are on record as saying, when speaking of original sin, that it was all her fault.

Is it not almost time that the stock adventuress should go, along with the lady who visits the villain's rooms at night in order to hear the "something important" he has to say? Why portray woman as an agent of corruption when no crooked deal was ever yet put through that was not of man's devising? Why picture a perfectly normal woman as an abnormal one, as weak as a devalitized subject of hypnotic suggestion, for the sake of a so-called "dramatic situation?" Why not give us an occasional, and non-theatrical, glimpse of the robust and clear-visioned American girl such as those of us who are not running soubrette studios know millions of them to be?

The stage has given some very bright men to the screen, —some of the brightest have found the new medium better suited to their ideas than the old—but it has also given us a lot of barnacles who hang on and wax fat in spite of cleansing criticism. The theater is benefited by their desertion to new fields and is fast becoming an instrument of social culture. Contemporary authorship is being encouraged; plays of vital theme are being sought, and patronage is being gradually diverted to dramas which portray the social life that exists among us rather than that of tradition.

While this is going on in the older art, progress in screen portrayals is delayed by repetition and imitation of what has been entirely discarded by the stage. The American Girl is depicted in the false terms of the Gallic playhouses. Most of the characterizations of her shown on the screen are, therefore anomalies and perversities. We rarely see our women pictured as they really are because it is the tendency of theatrical people, particularly in New York, where they are affected by European traditions, to impose upon our art forms, ideas and systems borrowed from old-world countries.

Our American Girl on the screen should spring from our social life, her spirit our spirit, her courage, her self-reliance, her independence of thought, her contempt for hypocrisy, her ability to take care of herself under trying conditions, that of the American people. It is our business to know her as she is and as she is at her best. It is our business to discover her traits, those of coming generations, and to place them on the screen as revelations of what is fine in our national life.

A Great Historic Document

Full Text of the Report Against Censorship Submitted to Congress by the Minority of the House Committee on Education—Congressman William W. Rucker, of Illinois, Caleb Powers, of Kentucky, Edmund Platt, of New York, and Frederick W. Dallinger, of Massachusetts, Give Their Reasons for Opposing Federal Censorship—
Scathing Arraignment of the Film Men Who Joined Hands
With the Fanatics of the Crafts Type

THE Moving Picture World prints herewith the full report of the minority members of the House Committee on Education. These members have delivered the most conclusive, the most telling and the most convincing plea against the injustice and the tyranny of the censor and the inquisitor. Around this splendid document the anti-censorship forces ought to rally at once. Exhibitors who want to help in the fight which must soon take place on the floor of the House will be provided with blanks for petitions to circulate among their patrons. There is no more significant sentiment in regard to censorship among exhibitors; they at least are a unit in their opposition to film censorship. Among the film men who spoke for censorship at Washington there was not one single man directly or indirectly interested in the exhibition of motion pictures. Read this report and then send for blanks. Here is the report:

"This bill," (Smith-Hughes measure), "proposes to regulate by a Federal Commission the principal amusement agency and what is rapidly coming to be one of the chief educational agencies of the people of the United States. It is not proposed to censor the plays or operas produced at the high-priced theaters throughout the country, but it is proposed to give five men at Washington the absolute power to determine beforehand what the great mass of the American people shall be permitted to see depicted upon the motion picture screen. Before the National Government undertakes to thus exercise the local police power hitherto reserved to the States, and to regulate purely local amusements, thus stretching the implied power of the interstate commerce clause of the Federal constitution to the breaking point, it is incumbent upon the proponents of such legislation to show that a widespread evil exists with which the State and local authorities are unable to cope.

No Evidence for Need of Censorship.

"At the hearings before the committee practically no real evidence was introduced tending to show that any significant proportion of the moving picture films now being exhibited in the United States are objectionable. In the last analysis it appears that what the proponents of this legislation really desire is to prevent the exhibition through the agency of the motion picture film of any book or play which in any way depicts crime or immorality or paints the evil side of human life on the ground that such scenes tend to corrupt morals and incite to crime. It is obvious that any such test as this would prevent the great mass of the American people whose limited means will not permit them to patronize the high-priced theaters, from seeing depicted upon the motion picture screen practically all the great works of literature from the beginning of time. Judged by any such standard most of Shakespeare's plays and even many parts of the sacred Scriptures would be barred. That there are occasional indecent and obscene motion picture films exhibited here and there, is perfectly true, just as there are obscene and indecent plays produced in high-priced theaters and indecent and immoral books published. Such productions, however, are already prohibited by the laws of the several States, and their transportation from State to State is also prohibited by Federal statute under severe penalties. In our opinion, an amendment to the United States Penal Code including motion picture films in the list of objects barred from interstate transportation will answer every purpose and is as far as Federal legislation should go. Such an amendment is proposed in a bill introduced in the present Congress and now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary.

Police Power of State Is Ample.

"Moreover, there was no evidence whatever before the committee that local regulation of the exhibition of motion picture films has proved ineffective where it has been tried. It is entirely within the power of the several States to provide that the executive or police authorities of the local communities shall have absolute power to grant and revoke licenses for all places of amusement within their several jurisdictions, and in many communities this power is now being effectively exercised. Furthermore, most of the States already have laws making it a criminal offense, punishable by fine and imprisonment, to exhibit any obscene or indecent picture. Where the local police power is thus ample to effectively deal with whatever evils exist in the motion picture business, regulation by the National Government is manifestly uncalled for, unnecessary, and unjustifiable.

"The overwhelming weight of opinion amongst those producing motion pictures is against the proposed censorship bill. The opposition to the bill represents more than 85 per cent. of the total number of motion picture films produced. Those manufacturers who favor the bill represent a very insignificant proportion of the output. The attitude of this inconsiderable minority is naturally and frankly selfish and commercial. They believe that it would be less expensive and troublesome to deal with anti-perchance control a single Federal censorship commission than to devote their money to control the several State authorities acting under their already ample police powers. The notorious effectiveness of the prepublicity censorship of theatrical productions in England has undoubtedly influenced this minority of the moving picture manufacturers to believe that a like national prepublicity censorship as provided in this bill will have a similar effect in this country.

"In England the evidence produced before a special parliamentary committee which made a very exhaustive investigation and report in 1909 has established the following facts:

"(1) Prepublicity censorship 'tends to hinder the growth of a great and serious drama' by discouraging distinguished authors whose time is valuable from jeopardizing their time by writing plays which might be destroyed by the whimsical opinion of a censor.

"(2) It fails to prevent the production of immoral plays.

"(3) It atrophies the exercise of the local police power over local production of immoral plays because they have been licensed by the national censorship authority.

"(4) The censorship authority falls under the influence of the large theater interests and tends to exercise its censorial powers with undue consideration for box office receipts.

"(5) The large theater interests favor the continuance of the censorship bureau because it gives questionable productions immunity from prosecution by the local authorities.

"(6) The great literary lights of England are almost unanimous against prepublicity censorship.

"These considerations led the special parliamentary committee to recommend the abolition of prepublicity censorship in England.

Majority of Film Men Opposed to Federal Censorship.

"The great majority of the motion picture interests oppose this prepublicity censorship bill because it is in their judgment a bill that will tend to stunt the natural development of the usefulness of the moving picture art and will tend to confine it, as it has the English drama, to the lighter forms of mere amusement when its potential utility lies in the far wider field of information and propaganda. They believe that they are consulting an enlightened selfishness when they seek to keep the moving picture film from the stunting influence of arbitrary power, for this development of the potential utility of the art means a tremendous increase of business. They also frankly say that they are unwilling to enter into an inevitable political contest for the control of the censorship commission to be established by this bill. They fear the power of the censorship under a rival's influence, because it is a power over their business of life and death. The elaborate productions which are now being presented represent enormous outlays—sometimes more than a half a million dollars—before they can be exhibited to the proposed censors. A censorship commission under the influence of a rival could thus absolutely ruin a producer by exercising corruptly or even with unconscious partiality the arbitrary power vested in this commission to condemn the film.

"But we regard the balance of interests between those several small producers catering to high-priced houses who believe in censorship because it will relieve them of the necessity of deferring to local standards of decency on the one hand, and those large producers who want to leave the industry free to develop still greater fields of usefulness, on the other, as of little moment compared with another and very grave phase of this question.

"The most serious objection to this bill lies in the power it seeks to give an executive commission to trammel the moving-picture art, the propagandist power of which is already marvelously developed, and the potential power of which seems limitless.

The Motion Picture Has a Title to Freedom.

"It is in this rapidly-developing power and use for propaganda that the moving picture film has taken its place beside speech and press as a thing to be kept free from arbitrary control in the interest of free institutions. The essence of free speech and a free press is the power for propaganda as the media of intelligence. It was this power which reactionary authority in the old days sought to repress and which the guardians of free institutions struggled to keep free. In the beginning the attack was made upon free speech and upon free drama before the development of the printing press gave writing and printing also an effective power of propaganda. Before the influence of the press upon public opinion became effective, and before it was recognized as a possible aid to the discussion of political, economic and social questions, the drama was largely used as a propagandist instrumentality. Down even to the time of Walpole's ministry in England the drama was a very effective means of stirring public opinion, and the early laws providing for the censorship of the drama were political devices to muzzle it as an instrument which might be used against those in power. Walpole, whose government was the most corrupt England ever knew, found his power threatened by a popular play exposing the venality of his political followers and he learned that another play was about to be produced. It was to stop this second play that he caused to be enacted the present censorship law in England. It was effective. All attempts to arouse the people of England to the shame of Walpole's government through the medium of the theater ceased immediately.

"Thus, we see that the original and dominating purpose of the censorship of the drama in England was distinctly political, as was demonstrated by the parliamentary investigation of 1909. But the rapid development in the art of printing soon so overshadowed the drama in the effectiveness of its propagandist power that the struggle to free the drama from censorship was forgotten in the more important struggle to keep the new power—the power of the press—free. For the moment that place and privilege recognized the power of the product of the printing press to effect public opinion, they began to seek means to control it by the device of prepublicity censorship. The struggle to keep the media of intelligence free from the restraint of arbitrary power was thenceforward waged around the question of free speech and a free press until these institutions won their final victory and became firmly planted in the unwritten constitution of Great Britain and in all our own written instruments. Our Federal Constitution, in Article I of the amendments, says:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

The Follies of Ohio and Pennsylvania.

"If we keep in mind the important fact that the vital thing in speech and press which was sought on the one hand to be restrained and trammelled, and on the other hand to be kept free, was the power of propaganda, we shall understand more clearly the importance of bringing the moving picture film within the constitutional guaranty of a free speech and a free press, because the analogy in principle and necessity is complete. Indeed, the history of the attempt to censor moving picture films bears a close analogy to the history of the attempt to abridge the freedom of speech and of the press.

"In Ohio, for instance, one of the four States which has a censorship board, it appeared in evidence before the committee that a motion picture play depicting a manufacturer bountiful in charities which advertised himself, but hard on his employees, was suppressed on the ground that it tended to excite class feeling.

"In Pennsylvania the power of the censor was invoked to suppress 'The Battle Cry of Peace' upon the ground that it tended toward a breach of neutrality and to incite military spirit.

"In Massachusetts an organization to ameliorate the conditions of child labor has been exhibiting moving pictures of actual conditions in certain manufacturing plants, and the representatives of these manufacturers attempted to stop these exhibitions. If Massachusetts had had a board of censors, who knows what its action would have been in this case?

"In Massachusetts also, moving pictures have been recently used to illustrate the workings of savings bank insurance, an institution very bitterly opposed by the old line insurance companies.

"In France the moving picture films were credited with the tremendous success of the recent French loan, the greatest the world has ever known.

"Do we dare to put in the control of an executive board such an extraordinary power—a power to suppress a medium of thought expression which in this country alone speaks to 20,000,000 people every day?

"In short, this bill violates the principle of the constitutional guaranty of a free press. It denies to the public the very utility in this wonderful new art which made it so necessary to keep the press free. It gives a few men despotic control over an art which the very threshold of its development has power to influence more than 20,000,000 people every day. It completes the vicious circle by making it inevitable that the powerful moving-picture industry, already the fourth greatest in the country, will be precipitated into politics and used for political purposes by the party in power.

"In our opinion every reasonable protection to the public morals can be secured by the proper exercise of the local police power supplemented by the amendment to the Federal Penal Code already suggested. The extraordinary power vested in the commission proposes to be created by this bill will not only prove ineffective to protect public morals, as experience has shown, but it is utterly un-American in its character and in the highest degree dangerous from every point of view.

WILLIAM W. RUCKER,
CALEB POWERS,
EDMUND PLATT,
FREDERICK W. DALLINGER."

Speaking of the foregoing report, Congressman Dallinger said to a representative of The Moving Picture World:

"There is nobody who is more bitterly opposed than I am to the exhibition of indecent and immoral pictures," declared Mr. Dallinger. "I believe, however, as is pointed out in the minority report, that the proper exercise of the existing police power of the several states supplemented by an amendment to the Federal Criminal Code prohibiting the interstate transportation of objectionable films, is more than adequate to remedy any evils that may exist. That the regulation of local amusements by national legislation is entirely unnecessary and unjustifiable is, in my opinion, too plain for argument.

"Having been engaged all my life in reform work, I cannot understand how the official representatives of organizations which are striving to remedy some of the evils in our American life can advocate this legislation. From the beginning of time the most effective weapon of reform has been the portrayal of the evils of existing conditions, whether that portrayal has been by word of mouth, as in the days of the prophets; through the printed page of poet and novelist, by means of the artist's canvas or upon the stage. The motion picture art affords the most effective means of propaganda yet devised and to cripple its usefulness as is proposed by this bill would be most unfortunate and dangerous.

"The effect of Harriet Beecher Stowe's 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' in bringing home to the American people the evils of human slavery is a matter of history. How much more quickly and more effectively the same result would have been accomplished if the moving picture art had been in existence at that time? And yet does anyone doubt if such had been the case and a Federal Censorship Board had been in existence with the slave power in control of the National Government, that the film depicting the scenes portrayed in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' would have been refused a license on the spurious ground that it was inhuman and intended to corrupt morals?

"I am firmly convinced that should this bill become a law it is not only possible, but extremely probable that under the same conditions motion picture films setting forth the refuses a license. As the determination of the question whether a film is entitled to license is not based upon exact standards, but is a matter of opinion only, it should not be possible for one man, in his discretion, to destroy the large investment represented by a modern photoplay.

(5) A provision for an appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia from a refusal to license. As the determination of legal tests or recognized standards, it is of the greatest importance that the commission should not be vested with supreme power. Where great property interests are involved, the citizen should always be afforded an opportunity for relief from the court, if he feels that he has been treated unjustly.

(6) A provision permitting the producer to transport films prior to application for license. The producer should be free to transport a film from its place of manufacture to his home office or other place, where it will be cut and trimmed and otherwise prepared for exhibition.

(7) A provision for substantial salaries for the commissioners, so that the President can secure the services of capable men, who will accept office as a career and not for the purpose of carrying out preconceived and perhaps prejudicial ideas as to reform of the film industry.

(8) An examination from the operation of the act of (a) films exhibited in the public prior to its enactment, and (b) films which do not contain any dramatic or fictional element, such as pictures of current events, commonly known as news pictures and topical reviews, and pictures of places and peoples, geographical in nature, and commonly known as travel pictures.

(9) A provision granting discretion to the commission to issue a permit under which films may be exhibited pending revocation of the permit and application for license. Such a provision would enable the commission to adjust the question of temporary accumulated applications by granting permits (in effect, temporary licenses) to producers whose history and reputation entitle them to a presumption of complying with the law.

"As we are moved by the sincere purpose of co-operating with your committee in procuring a draft of an act which should prove effective and workable and at the same time fair to decent people in the motion picture business, we respectfully request that when a bill is ready for action by the committee a copy shall be sent to us, and we shall be given an opportunity to appear before the committee and make such suggestions and criticisms as may occur to us.

【Farewell Party to Lenore Ulrich

Trade Paper Men and Friends View Her Stage Characterization, and Are Dined at Wallick's.

MEMBERS of the various motion picture trade publications and their friends were afforded a special opportunity of viewing the talents of Lenore Ulrich as displayed on the speaking stage in "The Heart of Wexona," last Friday night, when the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company tendered her a farewell party. The occasion marked one of the closing performances of this play, which terminated a big season at the Lyceum theater on the following evening. Following her performance in "The Heart of Wexona," the guests were invited to dinner at the Hotel Wallick, where a sumptuous repast was served during the presentation of a midnight show, given by the restaurant management.

Miss Ulrich will prepare for her transcontinental trip to the Oliver Morosco studios immediately, and will leave before the end of next week. The present at her farewell party were: Mr. and Mrs. John Semler, Mr. and Mrs. Harold F. Rendall, Margerie N. Seagrave, Dickson G. Watts, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Blank, Des Moines; Mr. and Mrs. "Wid" Gunning, Estelle J. Murphy, Charles Condon, Pete McGee, C. P. Smaney, Bernard P. Fineman, Dave A. Levy, Margerie Ganss, Pete Schmid, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Irene Page Solomon, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Hoff, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Edwards, Wallace Thompson, Charles E. Moyer, Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Pierce.

DEFENSE COMMITTEE TO MAKE JAPANESE FILM.

To educate the people as to the great dangers of our unprotected Pacific Coast and a possible uprising of the Japanese in California, the Defense Reports Committee, with headquarters in the Woolworth Building, are making arrangements to take a series of moving pictures of the activities of the Japanese in California. Other films will be made at three strategic points along the Pacific Coast, to depict the lack of proper fortifications to resist an invading army. One reel will show an imaginary bombardment of San Francisco, including the landing of troops, the attack and destruction of buildings. Seven hundred people will be employed in making this picture, which will be exhibited under the direction of the Defense Reports Committee.

New Head for C. & S. S. S. Bureau

F. H. Decker Becomes Successor of Dr. William Carter—Society in Flourishing Condition.

AN IMPORTANT deal in the educational moving picture world was consummated last week when the Church and School Social Service Bureau, Inc., founded two years ago by the Rev. Dr. William Carter, took over the educational moving picture business of the F. H. Decker company and consolidated it with the Church and School Social Service Bureau. This has doubled the film stock of the latter, and also its business operations, as the F. H. Decker company has been serving churches, schools and social service organizations with moving pictures ever since the invention of the moving picture film. Mr. Decker was elected president of the Church and School Social Service Bureau, Dr. Carter declining re-election on account of increasing church duties. A vote of thanks was passed Dr. Carter for the admirable way in which the business had been developed throughout the two years that he had been with it. All of the old organization will be continued as before, with Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst as vice president, Charles G. Bond secretary and General E. A. McAlpin treasurer. The directorate contains in addition to these names those of Hamilton Holt, editor of the Independent; George T. Coxhead and Dr. Carter.

There is an advisory board of sixty-five members, taken from all the great institutions, churches, church boards and social service organizations all over the country. Among the names found there are those of Bishops Quayle and Hughes of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The affairs of the Church and School Company are in a very promising condition, it having established a business which has within the two years of Dr. Carter's development stretched across the continent.

Big Demand for Chaplins

One Hundred and Thirty Prints of "The Floorwalker" Being Shown in New York City.

Unprecedented in the annals of motion picture history are the bookings throughout this country and Canada for the first run releases of the new Chaplin-Mutual features released by the Mutual Film Corporation. One hundred and thirty prints of "The Floorwalker," first of the Chaplin-Mutual features released, approximating 260,000 feet of film, are being shown throughout Greater New York. Twice as many prints would have been necessary to supply the requests for the first run showings in the greater city alone.

It can be stated that, with but one or two exceptions, every representative theater throughout this country and Canada has secured bookings on the new Chaplin-Mutual features. Up to this time a total of $1,300,000 in bookings on the Mutual-Chaplin comedies for the United States alone has been reached, establishing a new record for similar operations in the film trade.

In addition $75,000 in royalties, according to announcement from the office of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and president of the Lone Star Corporation, which holds the contract for Chaplin's year's services, was paid by Henry J. Brock, film exporter. Above and beyond this each Chaplin print will be sold for the Australian market at a price not given out by President Freuler.

BRANCH MANAGER NEWHALL DROWNED.

Geo. H. Newhall, manager for the General Film Company, at Bangor, Maine, was drowned there Wednesday, May 17. With a party of friends, all in canoes, Mr. Newhall and companions started on a fishing trip. They had barely reached the middle of the stream on the way to fishing when Mr. Newhall's canoe capsized. He was a stout swimmer and appeared for a few moments as if he would succeed in reaching one of the other canoes that had started toward him when they saw his plight, but he was seized with cramps and sank.

Mr. Newhall was a valuable employee of the General Film Company, having entered its service in 1910, at the Boston office. He was transferred to Bangor in April, 1913, to assist in installing a new booking system. After this work was completed, he returned to Boston, where, in May, 1914, he was placed in charge of the booking department and the handling of the company's business. He was assumed the management of the Bangor branch December 15, 1915. Mr. Newhall was widely known in the motion picture industry and enjoyed the full confidence of every exhibitor with whom he did business.

Pictures at Woman's Convention

Interesting Program Arranged Gives Producers a Splendid Opportunity to Present Their Case to Big Meeting of Club Women.

POINTS IN THE CONVENTION OF INTEREST TO FILM MEN.

Tuesday, May 23—10 to 11:30 A. M.—Model Motion Picture Performance. Rialto Theater.

Wednesday, May 24—2:30 P. M.—Talk, "The Attitude of the National Board of Review Towards Censorship as a City Problem," by Dr. Cranston Brenton, president National Board of Review. Civics Conference, Laurel Annex, Hotel Astor.

Saturday, May 27—4:00 P. M.—Motion Picture Conference, Upper Drill Hall, Seventh Regiment Armory, Park avenue at Sixty-sixth street. "Censorship," Mary Gray Peck; "The National Board of Review and the Child Problem," Orrin G. Cocks, secretary National Board of Review; "Picture Problems of the Producer," John R. Freuler, president Mutual Film Corporation; three-minute speeches by Miss Helen Ducey, editor "Better Films" Department, Woman's Home Companion; Miss Mary Newell Eaton, of the Drama League of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Mrs. William Horton Foster, of the Community Service Motion Picture Company of Boston.

Every Day—Exhibitions of motion pictures, model children's programs, short talks, and general information on motion pictures, in the Upper Drill Hall of the Seventh Regiment Armory.

"THE motion picture conference, to be held at the biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at the Seventh Regiment Armory, on Saturday, May 27, is the most significant expression of the desire of the public to learn some way in which to communicate to the producers of motion pictures their tastes in films and to let them know that there is a vast army of American citizens which stands back of their efforts to produce worthy pictures," said Mrs. Charles Cartwright, of Minneapolis, Minn., chairman of the sub-committee on drama of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and Miss Helen Varick Boswell, of New York City, chairman of the department of education of the federation, at an informal gathering of people interested in motion pictures at the Hotel Astor, Sunday night, May 20.

"It is to be a joint conference held by the educational, the civics and the drama departments that the motion picture and its relation to American children and life is to be considered on Saturday afternoon. Not only will every available means be taken to acquaint the thousands of women from all states in the Union with every phase of motion picture production and consumption, but a practical, sane and constructive working formula, which will make possible communication between the consumers and producers in the creation and satisfaction of demand, will be aimed for.

"Because we are aiming particularly at the problem of the picture play for children," said Mrs. Cartwright, "there will be naturally many phases of the censorship problem presented. A number of cities, such as Minneapolis, for instance, have worked out a means of local expression in boards of censorship, to which two members of all representative local organization are eligible, which are called upon by the mayor to judge in the case of pictures which have been reported to him as undesirable or harmful. Other women will present their views in the discussion pro and con censorship. But the fact of main importance is this: For the first time in the history of either the motion picture industry or the General Federation, producers of pictures and the women of the country have an opportunity to air their problems at the same time, and an opportunity to come to an understanding."

Miss Helen Varick Boswell, chairman of the educational department, who will open the conference on Saturday, is in opposition to censorship of any kind. Although the children's film question is to be an all-absorbing one, since the greater percentage of the thirty thousand women who are in attendance at the biennial convention are mothers, the problem of the picture theater in the small town will be discussed thoroughly.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, editor of Film Fun, will discuss especially the problem of the women in the town where there is only one picture theater, in her three-minute speech from the floor.

Mary Gray Peck, whose talk at the conference will be on the subject of "Censorship," will discuss the magnitude and popularity of the motion pictures, objections to government censorship, and her ideas of the solution of the problem of gaining a middle ground for producers and theater patrons.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, will be the only producer to appear on the program, although all producers have been invited to be in attendance and to express their views in the discussion.

Miss Helen Ducey, editor of the "Better Films" Department of the Woman's Home Companion; Miss Mary Newell Eaton, of the Drama League of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Mrs. William Horton Foster, of the Community Service Motion Picture Company of Boston, will all present various phases of successful program presentation, both for children and adults.

While the culmination of the interest of this biennial meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs will center in the conference, to be held in the upper drill hall at the Seventh Regiment Armory, on Saturday, there is to be a continuous presentation of motion picture interests during the convention.

On Wednesday, the opening day, at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, at the civics conference, held under the chairmanship of Mrs. George Zimmermann, Dr. Cranston Brenton, president of the National Board of Review, will discuss the censorship problem from the civic standpoint, and the attitude of the National Board towards it.

All during the week, and until the middle of the next, the Motion Picture Board of Trade will maintain an information bureau in the upper drill hall in the armory. J. W. Binder and other members of the board and men interested in the industry, as well as Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, who is on the committee, will be present, and there is to be a continuous exhibition of picture plays. The board has consented to screen any picture requested. There are also presentations of model children's programs to be made, with suggestions as to how they may be successfully put on.

Motion pictures are being provided for any of the conferences of the convention at which motion pictures will aid in the discussion.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs has only met in New York City once before in its history. It will be many years before it will meet here again, and everyone interested in the motion picture industry, is especially invited and urged by Mrs. Charles Cartwright, chairman of the sub-committee on drama, Miss Helen Varick Boswell, chairman of the educational department, and Mrs. George Zimmermann, chairman of the civics department, to be present at the motion picture conference at 4:00 P. M. on Saturday afternoon, next, in the upper drill room at the Seventh Regiment Armory, Park avenue and Sixty-sixth street.

Drugs and Tobacco Barred

Rumor that Theaters Built for the Accommodation of the New Vitaphone Company's Pictures Would Have Commercial Adjunct Denied.

STATEMENTS made in the daily press to the effect that in all houses built for the exhibition of the pictures of the New Vitaphone Company would have as a complement a Riker-Hegeman drug store and a United Cigar Store is denied by the promoters of the new company. Nothing further of a definite nature has been made public since the announcement in the Moving Picture World of May 20.

It is intimated that the board of directors of the greater Vitaphone Company will contain such financiers as C. J. Ryan, a son of Thomas J. Ryan, who is a large holder of American Tobacco Company stock, H. H. Vreeland, former New York traction magnate and B. B. Hampton one of the vice-presidents of the American Tobacco Company. Others named for directors are J. Stuart Blackton, Albert E. Smith and W. W. Irwin, that latter general manager of the V-L-S-E.

Governor Vetoes Censor Bill

In Strong Memorandum Whitman Denounces and Disapproves Crisman-Whelan Bill—A Blow at the People's Amusement.

GOVERNOR WHITMAN has vetoed the Crisman-Whelan Censorship Bill, as repeatedly foreshadowed in the columns of the Moving Picture World. The bill came under the thirty-day clause, and would have died automatically if the Governor had merely failed to append his signature. Governor Whitman chose to go on record with a formal and well-reasoned message of disapproval.

In this memorandum the Governor avoids all discussion as to the principle of censorship, but bases his veto on two grounds. The bill is badly put together, denying to the film men the right of appeal from the decision of the censors. The second ground is even stronger. He draws attention to the confiscatory amount of the proposed fee of inspection. Comparing it with fees in other censorship states, he denounces it as unjust and highly injurious to the industry. Ken political observer that he is, he comments upon the popularity of the picture, and says that the proposed legislation would close many a theater in this state, depriving the masses of the people of their favorite amusement. The Governor, throughout the memorandum, makes it plain by repeated references that he was much impressed by the showing and the arguments of the film interests at the recent hearing in the Executive Chamber. The full text of the veto reads as follows:

"The framers of this bill seem to me to have disregarded two very important considerations: First, where a tax is imposed upon an industry in which our people are engaged, under ordinary conditions the tax is levied in part from the pocket of the consumer. The amount of the tax, to the end that the industry itself shall not be crippled or its development hampered, or that those who use or enjoy the products of the industry shall not be deprived of such use and enjoyment as a result of excessive taxation. Second, that in all legislative acts imposing a tax, the right of redress or appeal in all cases should be preserved to those who may be affected and who may be aggrieved.

"The first objection noted, namely, that it appears to place an unnecessary and onerous tax upon the activity which it proposes to regulate, results in part from apparent carelessness in the drafting of the bill. It requires that films be submitted for examination of the censors, and by making them a part of the censors' official report transmitted to the legislature, provides that the films be sold to the censors. The examination would be of absolutely no value to the State. The films after costing space in preservation, and would impose an expense upon the State, as stated to me at the hearing, of over a million dollars during the first year of the act if it becomes a law, and over $400,000 annually thereafter.

"To remove any doubt that the bill in its present form would require the retention of films submitted for examination and to reply to the declaration of one of the speakers at the hearing that the bill could not be so interpreted, I quote the following from an opinion of the Attorney General submitted to me on the measure:

"Contention was made at the hearing that a copy of the film must accompany the report to the Regents and that there was no provision made for the return thereof to its owner. My reading of the statute leads me to believe this would be the necessary interpretation of the statute."

"Before the actual examination of the films the applicants are required to pay the equivalent in trade measurement of ten dollars apiece for original films, and five dollars apiece for duplicate films examined. Based on the number of films examined annually by the Board of Regents and on the estimate that twice the actual number of films examined are in use in the State at any one time, the tax for the examination for the first year is estimated at over a million dollars in addition to the loss by failure of the law to permit the return of the films after examination. The estimated annual tax for examination after the first year is approximately three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

"As compared with the proposed fees for examination under this bill of $10 for original films and $5 for duplicates, my attention has been called to the censor fees in other States of the union where a moving picture censorship exists. The fees are as follows:

"Pennsylvania—One dollar for each 1,200 feet of original film, one dollar for each 1,200 feet of duplicate prints.

"Ohio—One dollar for each 1,000 feet, whether original or duplicate.

"Kansas—Two dollars for each reel or picture (length not specified).

"Maryland—Two dollars for each 1,000 feet of original film, one dollar for each 1,000 feet of duplicate print.

"The Hughes bill for the Federal censorship of motion pictures which was favorably reported in Congress during the present week, provides a license fee of two dollars for one thousand feet of original film, and five dollars for one thousand feet of duplicate prints.

"As there are approximately sixteen hundred places for the exhibition of moving pictures in the State (I am dependent for all these statistics upon statements made at the hearing, and not the disputed) the amount of financial burden imposed the first year by the bill under consideration would represent an average actual cost upon each owner of these places of exhibition of between thirteen and fourteen dollars.

"The moving picture theatre, because of the nominal admission fee of from 5 to 10 cents, has become the principal source of entertainment for the general body to be enjoyed by the vast Italian masses. It is stated by the representatives of the industry—and I believe it to be a fact—that the burden imposed by this bill in respect to the tax on production and lessors of these films would be so great as to close up many of these places of exhibition in communities where the expenditure of more than 5 or 10 cents would be prohibitive and increase the admission to the general public.

"My second and most important objection to the form of the bill is to that provision which permits the State Board of Regents to review the acts of the Board of Censors when the latter approve a film, but does not permit a review by the Regents when the censors reject a film. The language of the bill relating to the powers of the Regents in this matter is as follows:

"The Regents may, in their discretion, by majority vote, revoke such approval of any such film or reel at any time. Such revocation shall be complete upon personal service of notice of such revocation upon the proprietor of such film or reel or upon any agent of such proprietor having charge of the leasing, sale or exhibition of any such film or reel."

"This provision would give the Regents, acting on their own initiative, or upon appeal to them by a patron of any exhibition, the right to disapprove a film previously approved by the censors. But there is no opportunity afforded the Regents by an owner who might feel aggrieved by the censors' disapproval of a film, the action of disapproval by the censors being final under the bill as drawn.

"It has been urged that in this end and other respects the bill, if it became a law, would be unconstitutional. I do not think that we need to go even so far as a discussion of constitutionality to satisfy a provision such as that upon the statute books.

"It was stated at the hearing that it was not the intention of the makers of the law either to put an onerous tax upon the industry, or to deny to those who believed themselves aggrieved the right of appeal, and that if the bill should become a law I might be sure that the objectionable features would be eliminated by amendment next year. A practical answer to this objection, so far as the question of an unjust burden on the industry is concerned, is in the fact that the failure to provide for a return of the films would impose a wasteful and unnecessary expense, and one of no value to the State, upon the industry of the State of a part of a million dollars before any amendment could be obtained.

"In addition to this fact I deem it neither wise nor courageous to accept a badly drafted bill in the hope that future legislation may correct its manifestly objectionable features.

"I have found such fundamental objections to the form of this bill, and the procedure under it, that the necessity for censorship has been eliminated in its consideration.

"If we must have such censorship, it should not be established hurriedly or by an imperfect statute and one which is open to such serious and sound objections as are urged against this measure which I am asked to approve.

"In this connection, however, the fact should not be overlooked that the Hughes bill in Congress, to which I have referred, being now favorably reported out of committee, may be assumed to have an excellent chance of becoming a law at this session. The establishment of a national censorship of moving picture films would undoubtedly make such special legislation in this State for the same purpose unnecessary."

Alice Joyce Joins Vitagraph

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Vitagraph Company of America that the famous screen star, Alice Joyce, has signed with the company. Since Miss Joyce's statement of a few weeks ago, announcing her intention of returning to the screen, after a year of private life, much interest has surrounded her, and those who have watched her excellent work on the screen for years will welcome her return.

The Vitagraph Company says that the famous player will be starred in the leading female role of their new film masterpiece, "The Battle Cry of War," which is a sequel to the world-renowned "The Battle Cry of Peace." This role will afford Miss Joyce excellent opportunities, which to display the talents which endeared her to the public before her retirement.

Extensive preparations are under way for the filming of this production, and it promises to rival "The Battle Cry of Peace," in every phase of excellence.

Miss Joyce began work at the Vitagraph studios on Monday, May 29.

MISS PURVANCE STILL IN CHAPLIN COMPANY.

Reports circulated throughout the country to the effect that Edna Purviance, Charles Chaplin's leading woman, had left or was about to leave the Chaplin-Mutual Company, are denied both by the Lone Star Corporation, which holds Chaplin's $670,000 contract for his service for the next year, and by the Mutual Film Corporation. Miss Purviance is now at work with Chaplin and the other members of the Chaplin-Mutual Company at the studios in the Hollywood section of the city. Her features, which will be released by Mutual June 12 under the title of "The Fireman."

Thomas Dixon Lauds the Cinéma

Author of Many Novels and Plays Finds the Screen to Be the Greatest Medium for Epic Drama.

By Lynde Denig.

PERHAPS Thomas Dixon's "The Fall of a Nation" will grip the public as has "The Birth of a Nation," but whether it succeeds or fails the author's faith in the unparalleled power of the cinema (he prefers the word to motion pictures) for the expression of epic ideas will remain unshaken.

To talk with Mr. Dixon for five minutes is to realize the strength and to feel the inspiration of his conviction. Never for a moment could he be mistaken for a manufacturer of photo-plays, the maker of celluloid goods to meet the demand of the market. Just at present he is in the atmosphere of the trade, but not of it; he is a creative artist who has won renown through three mediums—the novel, the stage and the screen, and he will tell you, with a ring of sincerity in his voice and a flash of idealism in his eyes, that the cinema can be made to give the strongest interpretation of great world movements. And the natural ally of the motion picture is music.

The business of making films does not interest Mr. Dixon in the least; but the art of using the screen to stir the emotions of men and women as they cannot be stirred through other means concerns him vitally. "Six pictures of the quality of 'The Birth of a Nation' might be displayed in New York at the same time and there would be an audience for every one of them," he said. "There is not the slightest danger of overproduction of dramas with a big idea handled in a big way. We only need to conceive them."

"No one questions for a moment the superiority of the cinema for the presentation of spectacles, but spectacular effects are not the end and aim of a producer who understands the psychology of an audience and strives to interest the mind and reach the emotions. If a stage play, or a screen play, or a novel misses the human note it is a failure in the larger sense. I really believe that the biggest things in 'The Fall of a Nation' are the smallest things, the scenes in which a smile and a tear are combined. I would sacrifice any part of the picture rather than three minutes of heart-gripping action that should make an audience weep. One must be made to feel personal griefs and joys before he can be held by a story of epic scope."

Mr. Dixon drew from his pocket the letterhead of the National Drama Corporation, of which he is director general, with a contract calling for his literary output during the next five years. Pointing to a design giving equal prominence to a camera and a lyre, he continued: "That expresses my idea of the importance of music in a cinema production. The first time I saw 'The Birth of a Nation' it was unaccompanied; the second time there was a full orchestra and I realized from that moment how indispensable music is in bringing out the full value of a cinema drama."

"In writing for the screen I bear in mind the need for visualizing ideas in physical action. Always there must be action, but it is action with a mental motive behind it and the function of music is to assist in interpreting this motive to the audience. America boasts of no more gifted composer than Victor Herbert and none more certain of catching the American spirit. When I had written my scenario for the second time I sent him a copy that he might begin work on the score, the aim being to express through music the varying moods of the picture. Mr. Herbert, following out this plan, and with only the scenario for a guide, wrote exactly 1,285 pieces of music, and since that time the most effective of his compositions have been synchronized with the completed drama."

While having the highest regard for the technical efficiency of the best of our directors and admitting that some players possess a God-given gift, an almost telepathic quality by which they are able to communicate emotion, Mr. Dixon is convinced that the great demand is not for skilled directors, or exceptional actors; rather it is for writers with ideas and the power to visualize them. He is not in sympathy with those who contend that the cinema is by its very nature more akin to the novel than the drama. He finds that the fundamental rules applied to dramatic construction for the stage hold good in the new medium; but what is suitable material for one is not necessarily adaptable to the other.

"It is not surprising that many good stage plays make poor pictures," he went on, "because the action they contain is inseparable from the dialogue, and robbed of the dialogue we have an unconvincing plot without adequate motivation. The screen is not the place for the presentation of a drama arising out of complex personalities demanding verbal explanation; but it is the best of all places for the display of the great social forces that have moved and are moving the world."

"Had I prepared 'The Fall of a Nation' for the stage, the scope of my story must have been seriously curtailed and I figure that the chances of success would have been about one in ten. A prologue such as you will see in the picture would have been out of the question, yet it is absolutely vital in placing the subsequent story in the correct perspective. It might be compared to glasses designed to bring the dramatic action into focus."

"How many Americans really know the cardinal principles on which this republic is founded; the causes that led their ancestors to flee from Europe and establish a home in the new world? Vaguely they understand that this country must be defended from invasion, but the danger may appear far distant and impersonal. They talk glibly of the Monroe Doctrine without knowing what inspired it. Perhaps they are patriotic, yet ignorant of what patriotism means to them and their families."

"The prologue in 'The Fall of a Nation' in scenes so swift, varied and pictorial that they cannot be made into a series of shows just why the United States came into being and why every man and woman is concerned in their preservation. Here is a valuable background that could not be supplied on the stage. In fifteen minutes the audience is given a book full of reasons for preparedness."

"Then the story opens. We are unprepared. The nation, recruited from many sources, having in common a desire for life, liberty and happiness, is rent by sedition and treason. An invading force lands on Long Island and we are conquered; the descendants of the people who escaped tyranny in Europe are oppressed by the conqueror until they arise, a united nation, to regain their independence."

Mr. Dixon chose to write on preparedness, not because it happens to be a much discussed subject, but because he regards it as the most vital issue of the day. Of the appeal of the theme there can be no question and he is equally confident of other appeals. "There is a strong feminist element," he explained; "there is accurate characterization, and I believe we have succeeded in expressing great national problems in simple personal terms. We have tried to give all else to make audiences recognize their own part in the drama being enacted before their eyes."

"The battle scene, staged at a cost of $31,000, is the greatest ever made, bar none. Adjoining the field used for 'The Birth of a Nation' is a still larger tract, which a number of western directors pronounced impracticable for photographic purposes; nevertheless we used this land with results that I think will fully justify our choice."

Finally, the author-director paid a high tribute to the four players interpreting the leading characters. They are not recognized stars—not yet, at least—but in each he found that indefinable quality through which the picture on the screen may become a mirror of the mind.

THEATER CLUB ENTERTAINS FANNIE WARD.

The Theater Club of New York, a society organization interested in the drama, entertained Miss Fannie Ward of the Lasky company as the guest of honor at its meeting in New York at the Hotel Astor ball room on May 16. Miss Ward is spending a few weeks' vacation in New York City after seven months of constant acting before the camera at Hollywood, Cal.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS BACK CLUBWOMEN.

Eight Weeks' Trial of "Better Films" Ideas so Successful That Plans Are Made for Continuation.

THE "better films" movement is to be a permanent institution in Cleveland. This was determined at a mass meeting in the library of the Chamber of Commerce May 10, when the civics committee of the Cleveland Federation of Woman's Clubs submitted a report on the trial of the "better films" programs shown for eight weeks in various Cleveland theaters and submitted a plan to perpetuate their movement.

The statement of Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, that "The exhibitors will back these women to the end," is an index of the success of the trial of the selected programs.

The mass meeting was called by Miss Genevieve Cline, president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, to discuss the plan to make permanent the work which has been accomplished by the civics committee of the federation in conducting the "better films" campaign. The permanent plan was presented by Miss Bertelle M. Lyttle, chairman of the civics committee.

It provides that the films desired on the special programs be taken out of the regular service; that the exchanges be guaranteed payment for such films; that no picture theater be asked to show a selected program without a guarantee from the club women that a definite number of tickets will be sold; that a way of advertising be devised in which the name "better films" will not be used by reason of prejudice which has arisen against the movement in the minds of persons unfamiliar with the objects of the movement; that three committees handle the programs, namely, a committee on films, a committee on distribution and a committee on publicity.

The clubwomen admitted that while the exhibitors had done their part in the eight-weeks test of the "better films" programs, the clubwomen as a body and the theater patrons as a whole had not responded as readily as was desired. This was held to be due to the impression in the public mind that the "better films" campaign was a reform movement and therefore to be shunned.

Cleveland, Lakewood and East Cleveland are to be included in the activities of the clubwomen and August 1 has been tentatively selected as the date for the permanent work to begin.

The permanent plan as outlined by the clubwomen is to have the three committees on films, distribution and publicity organized under one chairman and an assistant. It also provides: That the film or program division be entrusted with the duty of selecting films to meet certain standards, to group them suitably and furnish the material for advertising; that the committee on distribution or contracts arrange for use of the films desired and for their exclusive control in certain territory if possible. The publicity committee will supervise all advertising and arrange all bookings with theater owners in accordance with the work of the contract committee.

At the meeting where this plan was outlined, club women of Lakewood through Mrs. H. A. Worman, reported that their efforts to have special programs for children shown on specified days had met with unusual success and would be continued.

Miss Lyttle in submitting her report, outlined the reasons which led the club women to undertake a study of moving picture problems.

"An investigation as to why the censorship of motion pictures is being criticised by both its friends and foes," she said, "led to a study of the general motion picture difficulty. One phase, the health and morality problems resulting from theaters improperly ventilated, lighted or otherwise carelessly managed, has received much attention and has become now a matter of police supervision and public efficiency.

"The grave problems now are how to minimize the harm of motion pictures and how the public may know the character of the show and thus select and enjoy the good. These are problems for the adult as well as for the child, although the public conscience is feeling it most acutely for the child."

GREAT ZEAL OF CHICAGO EXHIBITORS.

Widespread Special Advertising of the Sixth Annual National Convention and Exposition—Many Attractive and Original Events Promised.

THE various committees in charge of the preparation for the Sixth Annual Convention and Exposition of the M. P. E. L. of America in Chicago, at the Coliseum, from July 10 to 18, inclusive, are making every effort to surpass all events of the kind hitherto held.

Two thousand slides of attractive and beautiful design will soon be in readiness to be sent to different theaters throughout the country, calling for hearty support and to aid in advertising the convention and exposition far and wide.

Every moving picture theater owner or manager who receives these slides, will please consider it his duty to see that they are shown at his presentations, and do all in his or her power to boost the convention and exposition.

A "Beauty Contest" will be held at the exposition, and, although an announcement to this effect was made only a week ago, inquiries regarding the rules and regulations of the contest are coming in rapidly.

One moving picture beauty who resides in the south, has issued a very plaintive appeal asking the committee in charge not to draw the color line, as she believes she has a good chance of cutting out even Mary Pickford. She states that with the use of grease paint she could pass as a white lady in the picture. This plan was suggested to her by her "man," who is sure if the scheme can be worked out his "gal" will carry off the plume.

Aspiring photoplay writers, who thus far have been unable to market any of their scenarios, will also be given an opportunity to make good. A prize of $100 will be offered for the best scenario, and a prize scenario committee has been appointed to select the winner. Full information regarding this contest can be obtained by writing to the Scenario Committee, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, 1413 Masonic Temple, Chicago.

Wm. J. Sweeney, Louis H. Frank, Fred W. Hartmann and Fred Schaefer, the committee appointed to attend the two recent expositions in New York City, have reported very favorably regarding the sale of space in the Coliseum, for the exposition. Some very valuable contracts have been secured, and the committee will return to Chicago about Monday, May 22.

All indications, even thus early, point to a record-breaking attendance of exhibitors, manufacturers, and all connected with the trade at the coming exposition and convention. The members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Illinois already feel that the demands upon them are becoming very heavy, and they are sending out signal calls for help to all brother exhibitors in the surrounding territory.

It is the desire of those who have charge of the event to inform all visitors that no effort will be spared to make them feel at home just as soon as they arrive in Chicago. It would be a fine thing, many of the members think, if about one hundred exhibitors of the city and state would volunteer their services to the convention and exposition committees as a reception committee, and pay special attention to the entertainment and comfort of guests during their stay. This, no doubt, will be done, and visitors may rest assured that in addition to the necessary work of the convention there will be sufficient time devoted to introducing visitors to the beauty spots of Chicago, including our beaches, parks, museums, art institutes, universities, etc., etc. Entertainments of various kinds will be furnished and every pains taken to show a hospitality worthy the name of Chicago.

PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION.

Arrangements Being Rapidly Completed for Big Meeting of Exhibitors in Pittsburgh.

ARRANGEMENTS are progressing rapidly for the Pennsylvania State Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to be held in Pittsburgh June 27, 28 and 29. For the meetings and the exposition one of the largest and finest buildings in the city has been secured, the new Moose Temple. A beautiful auditorium seating over 1,000, beside numerous parlors, and 6,000 square feet of floor space will be available.

Many applications for exhibit space have already been received by Secretary James Delves, who advises manufacturers to secure their space as far in advance as possible, communicating with him at the league headquarters, Penn avenue and Ninth street, Pittsburgh. It is pointed out that Pittsburgh is located in the center of two-thirds of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States, and that within one night's ride from any direction there is over two-thirds of the population of the country, or 70,000,000 people. Pittsburgh is, therefore, considered the city most favorably located for a convention of the industry. From all advance indications the convention will far surpass any yet undertaken by the Pennsylvania League, and will be outvalued only by the national gatherings. Many exhibitors from Virginia, West Virginia, eastern Ohio and western Maryland have signified their intention of being present.

Within the next week or ten days representatives of the league will go to New York city to confer with the producers and the Motion Picture Board of Trade to arrange for some of the leading stars to attend the convention. Co-operation has been promised by the municipal authorities, Mayor Armstrong having agreed to deliver the address of welcome and other state and city officials will speak. It is needless to say, "Depend upon it, heavy guns will be trained upon censorship at this convention!"

KENTUCKY EXHIBITORS HOLD FIFTH CONVENTION.

At One-Day Session of State League, Louis J. Dittmar Re-elected President.

At the fifth annual convention of the Kentucky Branch No. 7, Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held at the Seelbach hotel, Louisville, on Friday, May 12, the following officers were re-elected: President, Louis J. Dittmar, Louisville; vice-president, J. H. Stamper, Jr., Lexington; treasurer, H. B. Strube, Louisville, and secretary, Fred J. Dolle, Louisville.

The session lasted from 2 o'clock until 5 o'clock in the afternoon and was given over to general discussions of local, state and national conditions. The meeting was of an executive nature with no one present except members.

In spite of the fact that the meeting was held the day previously to the running of the forty-second Kentucky Derby there was a very small attendance from out in the state, although the local attendance was good. No sessions were held on Saturday, the business all being rushed through at the one session.

SCHENECTADY EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

A meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Schenectady was held on Tuesday, May 16, for the purpose of organizing an exhibitors' association. The following officers were elected. John F. Mynderse, president; Gunner Bergstrom, vice-president; Jacob M. Freed, secretary and treasurer. The association has been named the following exhibitors: outside of the officers just named: W. A. Zeiser, Grand and Central Park theaters; Frank X. Shap, Pearl theater; Morris I. Silverman, Happy Hour theater; Vincent G. Bergstrom, Majestic theater; Fred A. Blumer, Jr., Lincoln theater; John F. Walker, of the same theater; Frank X. Breymaier, Orpheum theater; G. H. Roberts, Temple theater. This means that ten out of sixteen exhibitors have joined. Secretary Freed writes to The Moving Picture World: "With the spirit shown by those present, it is bound to be a success." A committee for securing more members was appointed and is actively at work. Application for a charter has been made to the state president, Lee A. Ochs.

EXHIBITORS TO SEE "MARIA ROSA."

When the exhibitors of Iowa meet at Des Moines for the annual convention from May 22 to 25, the principal photographic feature that will be shown to them will be the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company production of Geraldine Farrar in "Maria Rosa." At the offices of the Lasky Company in New York word was received this week from A. D. Flintom of Kansas City, distributor of Paramount Program, in a territory of considerable size in the Middle West, that he had completed arrangements also for the exhibiting of "Maria Rosa" at the Omaha Convention of Nebraska exhibitors as well.

MICHIGAN CONVENTION DATE NAMED.

Peter J. Jeup, treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, has issued a strong appeal to the exhibitors of the State of Michigan to attend the state convention which will be held at Bay City June 13 and 14. Mr. Jeup points out the present necessity for a strong organization of exhibitors, intimating that it was never greater than now.

Plans of Bureau of Standards

New Board of Trade Committee Outlines What It Intends to Accomplish.

THE Board of Trade is addressing itself to the task of standardization. A bureau of standards has been duly organized. The proposed plans of this bureau have been set forth by C. Francis Jenkins, its chairman.

"The purpose of the bureau is to bring about such a unification of processes, mechanisms and practices as will insure to the beginner as well as the masters of business in our industry a larger net return than now prevails," he said.

"Its edicts may not be mandatory, but rather express the composite thought of the business at large, a sort of clearing-house for trade expressions."

"In the course there will be published a descriptive list of adopted standards and approved ideas, methods and processes, but we will condemn nobody's device or idea at any time. Our first work will be the establishment of mechanical standards, some to take effect immediately, others later from time to time as will cause the least possible disturbance in the business."

"Every concern known to the bureau is or will be asked to designate an expert to become a member of the sub-committee relating to that branch of the industry. The sub-committee will select a representative to become a member of the general committee, and report thereto the recommendations of the sub-committee."

"The general committee will consist for the present of representatives of the following general divisions of the industry: raw material, production, projection, exhibitors, machine manufacturers, electrical goods makers, exchanges, lens manufacturers, camera manufacturers, reel manufacturers, fire underwriters, storage and containers, transportation, theater construction and arrangement and miscellaneous."

F. H. Richardson was elected secretary of the committee.

H. H. BUXBAUM AND C. C. KNAPP WIN PROMOTIONS.

The latest beneficiary of the General Film merit policy is H. H. Buxbaum, who has just been placed in charge of the company's New York exchange. Mr. Buxbaum's affiliation with the General Film Company dates back several years. He has been steadily advanced to positions of trust, and this last advancement will doubtless lead to something still better. A few years ago Mr. Buxbaum was manager of the General Film Company's Fourth avenue branch and was transferred from there to Minneapolis, where he was in charge of the office, and was then called East to take charge of the Philadelphia branch. When it was decided to consolidate the two branch exchanges in New York, it was Mr. Kleine's opportunity to reward Mr. Buxbaum and at the same time fill the position with an employee who had demonstrated exceptional ability.

Another promotion that is worthy of mention is announced in the assignment of C. C. Knapp as manager of the General Film Company's office at Minneapolis, succeeding J. T. Van Meter, resigned. Mr. Knapp has a splendid record as a salesman, stands well with the exhibitors in his territory, and appears to be slated for advancement.

Detroit Entertains Players

First Annual Ball of Wolverine Screen Club Is Successful—Visitors Attend Early Morning Banquet.

WHEN the members of the Detroit Screen Club decided to give a dance at the Arcadia on May 15 something was said about inviting screen stars. The following week Harry I. Garson, secretary of the organization, on his own initiative, jumped on to New York and spent three days making the rounds of the different producing companies and requesting stars for the affair. Nearly all of the companies promised to send some one.

The ball took place as scheduled. The screen stars consisted of Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady, Claire Whitney and Gertrude McCoy. Others in the special party were Mr. and Mrs. Lewis J. Selznick, Harry I. Garson, John H. Kuerste, George W. Trendle, George Weeks, Al Shapiro, F. Richard Schayer, publicity manager for Miss Young, and Harry Reichenbach, publicity manager for Alice Brady. The party was met at the station with motor cars and taken to breakfast. Publicity Managers Schayer and Reichenbach got busy immediately with the local newspapers, each boosting his particular screen star. The afternoon papers printed columns about the players—all of them—and ball that evening. The whole town had gone "screen" crazy before the end of the day. The players were entertained during the day with luncheon parties and automobile rides.

The ball at the Arcadia was attended by about 2,500 persons which included all the film exchange men and leading exhibitors. The women looked their prettiest in evening gowns of the latest materials and fashions. There were two orchestras—one of forty and one of twenty pieces. They were stationed at each end of the hall so that there was continuous music for dancing. Admission was $2 per couple—and everybody said it wasn't enough. All of the boxes were taken by members of the Screen Club and accommodated six to the box. The hall was attractively decorated for the occasion with American flags and red, white and blue bunting.

Oil paintings of several dozen screen players were hung around the hall and were draped with flags—all of which gave the atmosphere of a screen event. Dancing started at 8:30 and lasted until 4 o'clock in the morning. The executive committee, comprising Harry I. Garson, chairman; J. Spencer Trask, A. J. Gilligham, president of the club; James Kent, George Weeks, M. S. Bailey and others were in the foyer entrance and greeted their many friends as they passed into the hall. At 10:30 the players arrived and were ushered to a private waiting room. One by one they were escorted by members of the Screen Club to their respective places in the "Screen Stars' Box," the band playing an appropriate march. As the players reached the center of the hall they were announced by A. J. Gilligham, president of the club. The Players remained until the last piece was played by the orchestra. The dance was a great success.

The members of the Screen Club and the film visitors went to the Hotel Pontchartrain at 1:30 in the morning and sat down to a banquet. The green room on the convention hall floor was screened. The hotel management did itself proud in the arrangement of the tables and the entire handling of the affair. The main course was guinea hen with mushrooms under glass. During the serving of the courses there was vaudeville and cabaret entertainment. There was something done every minute—about thirty entertainers being on the program. It was about 3 o'clock before the conclusion of the banquet, and for the ensuing two hours the guests danced. It was well toward 5 o'clock before the last person had left the hall.

So successful were the dance and the banquet that already members of the Screen Club are talking about the second annual dance in 1917. An extra word of praise is justly due to Harry I. Garson—who was responsible for the coming of the screen stars to Detroit. The other members of the entertainment committee also worked untiringly to make both affairs a success.

On Monday and Tuesday, Clara Kimball Young appeared personally twice each day on the stage of the Broadway-Strand theater. General Manager Garson announced her appearance in the daily newspapers with the result that the house was packed to overflowing at each performance. She was enthusiastically greeted each time.

Tuesday was spent by the screen stars in sightseeing and visiting the various local playhouses. The entire out-of-town delegation departed for New York Tuesday evening on the 7:10 train.

Producers Out of Touch With Public

Grace Valentine Declares Manufacturing Authorities Fail to Appreciate the Progressiveness of Smaller Communities.

GRACE VALENTINE, who is starred with Lionel Barrymore in "Dorothy's Divorce," a forthcoming Metro-Rolie wonderplay, and who has achieved marvelous success on both the speaking stage and the screen, declares motion pictures are going to stride ahead when directors, producers and manufacturers get the correct angle on the public's intelligence. Many of them, she asserts, "point their cameras too low," so to speak, fearing they will shoot over the heads of the common people.

"It is the most natural thing in the world that the makers of motion pictures should make this mistake and place a false estimate upon the public," Miss Valentine said. "A great many of those responsible for making pictures have lost their perspective for the simple reason that they have not rubbed shoulders with the real people for many years. Like myself, they are from 'there,' as I used to hear a man express any distant point when I was a girl. In other words, they came from either a small place in the west, south or New England, from a provincial neighborhood in New York City, or from some small community on the other side of the Atlantic.

"This is the only reason I can explain why we are not keeping up with the country at large in the matter of offering better and greater pictures. They can be made, but the producer is afraid to make them. It makes my heart ache when I hear someone suggest something good around a studio, and I have worked around several of the representative studios and they are all alike, and then hear a corking good idea crabbled with the rubber-stamped trite remark:

"That's dandy, but it will go over their heads. You must remember we are appealing to the masses, and the 'hicks' won't get what. You have to spell everything out and give them a blue print, otherwise they will not understand."

"Every word of that is based on fallacy. I know, for I have just come back from a visit among my relatives and friends in Indiana. And I want to tell the truth, they made me feel ashamed of myself, for my downright ignorance. The motion picture men are mostly from 'there,' they do not understand, unless they have been back in recent years, how conditions have changed. They measure everything as it was when they were young and left to make their way in the great unknown world. Their minds the women back there are holding quilting parties, and their huskings and watermelon frolics are their only dissipation. Nothing of the kind. I thought so, too, but I got an awful bump.

"The same crowd of girls that I grew up with are so far ahead of me that I bow my head in shame. They have their clubs that study Ibsen, Shaw, Maeterlinck, Goethe, Schopenhauer, and loads of others I never heard of. In addition to this I found many of them as blasé as the average New York girl. If we only stop to reason, we can account for this change of affairs, in a way. We must remember the recent inventions that have been such valuable educational factors in this country.

"Do you think the plow boys plow his way across the fields nowadays, whistling 'The Arkansas Traveler'? Not on your life. The chances are ten to one that he will be whistling 'In the Hall of the Mountain King,' by Grieg, from 'Peer Gynt,' or doing a good imitation of Caruso.

"The old gray mare has been relegated to the boneyard for a modern car, and circulating libraries are within easy access with the rural free delivery. And last, but not least, they have motion pictures, the very best and lots of them. There are few things in the truly rural district to detract from the regular motion picture entertainment. As a result, the residents there are authorities on the subject.

"It is fatal to underestimate the public's taste and intelligence. It offends and it never entertains. Success awaits the company or companies that drops the plumb and gets the right angle on the so-called common or garden variety of folk."

GYPSY O'BRIEN JOINS VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Miss Gypsy O'Brien, who created an enviable reputation for herself in "Devil's Garden," a recent metropolitan production at the Harris theater at West Forty-second street, New York, has joined the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Wally Van. The acquisition of Miss Gypsy O'Brien makes another step forward in the Vitagraph policy of continually perfecting and improving its productions.

Gaumont Has Rare Indian Subjects

In "See America First" It Will Show Official Pictures of the United States Government.

THE value of the motion picture as an ethnological record has again been demonstrated, this time by the United States Department of the Interior in filming the very last ceremony of the Medicine Elk as performed by the Blackfeet Indians. The Department of the Interior has been actively engaged for some time in making motion pictures of parks, forest reserves, reclamation projects and other interests it protects. It was a piece of rare good fortune that H. T. Cowling, cameraman for the government, happened to be taking pictures in Glacier Park at the time Many Tail-Feathers smoked the Medicine Elk pipe for the last time. These pictures have been turned over to the Gaumont Company, and have been released with the authorization of the government. They form a historical record of great importance.

The Medicine Elk ceremony makes a most interesting release in the new series of Mutual pictures called "Reel Life" manufactured by the Gaumont Company. It is sacred to the Blackfeet Indians, being performed on behalf of all those in the tribe who are sick. Until it was caught by a government camera the ceremony had not been performed for ten years, both because the tribe is disintegrating and because only one medicine man, Many Tail-Feathers, was authorized to perform it. As the medicine man died in January, leaving no successor in the art, the weird incantation has passed into history.

These pictures of Indian customs are only one of many releases the government is making through the Gaumont Company. The Blackfeet Indians are shown in the "Reel Life" series. The majority of the government pictures, however, will be released in the Gaumont scenic series, "See America First." Among the pictures already on the screen are the notable views of Yosemite Valley. These pictures have been chosen for prominent places on the programs of such metropolitan theaters as the Strand and the Rialto.

The next United States government release through Gaumont will be "Yellowstone National Park." This is a highly entertaining feature of such length that it has been divided into two parts. There are pictures of all the beauties of nature in this wonderland and also of the great hotels maintained for the convenience of the thousands of visitors who throng the park each season.

The government pictures are being used with great success by exhibitors who make up special programs. They have a particular appeal to children. The Decatur theater, Brooklyn, reports that it always turns patrons away when these pictures are specially advertised for matinees.

MISS WIRTH IN THANHOUSER FILM.

Unknown but to a few of her intimate friends, Miss Louise Daniel Wirth, niece of Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, and prominently connected with social and diplomatic life of Washington, has become a motion picture player. Miss Wirth, who was engaged by the Thanhouser studio several months ago, will make her first appearance in "For Uncle Sam's Navy," a two-part drama to be released by the Mutual Film Corporation the latter part of this month.

New Kalem Player Reaches New York

Ivy Close Will Rest Until June 1, While Supporting Cast Is Being Chosen.

IVY CLOSE, the English actress who is to take up work for Kalem, is here. After an exciting time escaping from Ireland during the recent rebellion, and a disappointingly uneventful trip across the ocean, the player has arrived to take up her screen work under the Kalem standard.

Miss Close has planned a few weeks of combined rest and sight-seeing before taking up her screen work, probably making her debut before a Kalem camera about June 1. Meanwhile plans are being perfected for the one-reel comedy vehicles in which she will be seen and the selection of the supporting cast is being pushed.

When asked as to the supporting cast, Mr. Wright of the Kalem Company declared: "We are not yet ready to announce the names, but when we do you will find that we have continued the policy that insured the success of the Sis Hopkins Comedies, and that is the placing of a real player, a capable fun-maker, in every part. Kalem does not believe in the policy of making large expenditures for a star and then spoiling that star's work by inferior support."

BROCK GETS AUSTRALIA FOR CHAPLINS.

The sum of $175,000 has been paid in royalties for the right to release the new Mutual Chaplin comedies in Australia, according to announcement from the offices of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and president of the Lone Star Corporation, which holds the $670,000 contract for Chaplin's year's services. The figure is presented as an index of the big earning power of the Chaplin product. The royalty was paid by Henry J. Brock, film exporter. Above and beyond this each Chaplin comedy print will be sold for the Australian market at a price not given out by Mr. Freuler. A total of $1,300,000 in bookings on Chaplin Mutual comedies for the United States has been reached. This is said to establish a record for similar operations in the film trade.

During his San Francisco engagement of "The Cock of the Walk" Otis Skinner has given several mornings and early afternoons at the studio of the California Motion Picture Corporation to acquainting himself with the technical requirements of motion picture craft. This is in preparation for his forthcoming appearance in the big film dramatization of "Kismet."

In discussing his observations Mr. Skinner said: "I consider it a bit of genuinely good fortune to have reached San Francisco while the California firm was still busied with Otis Skinner, Beatriz Michelena and Andrew Robson.

Beatriz Michelena in "The Woman Who Dared." From the evidence of the few scenes I saw the production is one of real magnitude. Miss Michelena is a delightful actress and her work before the camera is nothing short of a revelation. I gleaned a lot of information that will stand me in good stead when I begin my work in "Kismet."

In the accompanying picture may be seen Mr. Skinner, Beatriz Michelena and Andrew Robson.

Variety in Pathe Program

Serials, Comedies, Educational, Scenic and News Subjects
Aboard in List for First Half of June.

WITH eight reels of "serials that pay," as Pathe calls them, two reels of slapstick comedy, a Goldberg animated cartoon comedy, four issues of the Pathe News, and five split-reel scenic and educational pictures, the House of Pathe shows its hand to the exhibitor for the two weeks to June 17.

In the week beginning June 5, "The Double Resurrection," an episode of "The Iron Claw," will be released. The same week will see the release of the fifth drama in the "Who's Guilty?" series—"Sold Out." In all of these two-reel dramas Anna Nilsson is featured with Tom Moore. The rest of the casts keep changing, among the supporting artists names appearing such well-known ones as Octavia Handworth, Alan Hale, etc.

"Luke Laughs Last" is the title of a slapstick one-reeler. It features Harold Lloyd, the well-known "Lonesome Luke" of the comedies produced by the Rolin Film Company for Pathe. "The Fatal Pie" is a Goldberg Animated Cartoon Comedy. "The Fatal Pie," to use Goldberg's own ludicrous description (which, by the way, appears as titles in the film) tells, for instance, of "Lotta Mince meat," admired for her charm and refinement, who eats soup without winking the baby and does not look for gold-fish in the finger-bowl. Attached to the cartoon, a two-reel entitled "Some Fresh Water Fishes" an educational film.

On this same program is another split reel. "The Zinc Mines of Lang Hit," an educational film of French Indochina, showing the methods employed in taking zinc from the mines is interesting because of the difference of Oriental method from ours. This is on the same reel with "Around Mount Fuji," a scenic picture of picturesque Japan.

Two issues of the Pathe News, No. 46, on Wednesday, June 7, and No. 47, on Saturday, June 10, round out the week.

For release in the week beginning Monday, June 12, Pathe offers "The Unmasking of Davy," another episode of "The Iron Claw." Next follows "Sowing the Wind," a drama of the "Who's Guilty?" series. "An Awful Romance" is the title of a one-reel slapstick comedy produced by the Mitchell Film Company for Pathe, and featuring James Aubrey, the ludicrous and lovable "Heinie" of old "Heinie and Louie" fame.

There is also a split-reel educational and scenic, "France's Canine Allies" and "The Gorges of Colorado."

Wednesday, June 14, brings with it the release of Pathe News No. 48, and Saturday, June 17, the release of Pathe News No. 49.

WARNING AGAINST A SWINDLER.

Complaints come from various parts in the east of the operations of a young man who is victimizing motion picture exhibitors with an attractive program proposition. The alleged swindler, who is described as a young man of medium height and dark complexion, approaches exhibitors with an offer to supply 8,000 printed programs with artistic cuts for $6.50 a week. When the exhibitor expresses surprise at this extraordinary bargain the glib young man says that national advertisers patronize his program, which makes it possible to get them so cheaply. The man claims to represent the "Kings Program Service," 11 Chapin Building, Buffalo, N. Y. To Alfred Murray, of the Montauk theater, at Passaic, N. J., the swindler said his name was William R. Danford. Mr. Murray says he wrote to the "Kings Program Service" when no programs were forthcoming and never received any answer. There was a New York address on the blank order to be signed by the exhibitor. This address was 402 Fifth avenue. Inquiries at the New York address developed the fact that such a man had desk room in the building some time before the swindling.

RIALTO'S FIRST PICTURE NEARLY READY.

"The House of Mirrors," the first picture to be released by the Popular Pictures Corporation, will be ready for showing within a few days. This picture is the first to be produced by the Rialto Film Corporation. Marshall Farnum, the director, was given a free hand in its making. Work has been begun on the second picture. The cast of the latest production contains several well known film favorites.

REMOVAL NOTICE.

The American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., producer of "The Battles of a Nation," announces its removal to new offices at the Godfrey Building, Seventh avenue and 49th street.

Thanhouser's June Program

List of Subjects to Be Released by New Rochelle Organization the Coming Month.

THERE will be two Thanhouser classics in June, the first releases of the new feature edition. The first of these is "The Fugitive," on June 15. This shows Florence La Badie in a new role, supported by Ethyle Cooke, Hector Dion, George Marlo and Robert Vaughn. In this title role Director Frederick Sullivan has woven Miss La Badie's art with a tense series of incidents from the pen of Philip Loneragan.

The second comes at the end of the month, on the 29th. This is "Hidden Valley," written by Emmet Mix, who recently joined the New Rochelle organization. It is an entirely different production from "The Fugitive" and indicates the scope of variety that may be expected from the classics. The Baroness Dewitz, known to the screen as Valkyrien, is featured, with Boyd Marshall her main support. Made in Florida, the interior of Africa is treated with unusual realism by Ernest Warde, who directed the production.

Another five-reel release is "Other People's Money," on June 1. This is by Lloyd Loneragan, inspired by Emile Gaboriau's story. Directed by William Parke, Gladys Hulette does another piece of work that explains her rapid rise. Mr. Parke's experience in the legitimate has helped him notably in this, his first five-reel effort. He shows the result of the application of stage methods to screen art. Fraunie Fraunholtz, J. H. Gilmour, Yale Benner and Kathryn Adams are in the supporting cast.

The shorter releases from New Rochelle introduce "A Flaw in the Evidence," "Brothers Equal," "John Brewster's Wife," and "The Window of Dreams," all two-reelers, except the last, which is in three.

In the comedies Riley Chamberlin's series, where he stars as "Conductor 786," will begin to issue on June 17. The Oscar and Conrad edition, in which Claude Cooper and Frank E. McNish cut up, will be released as "Real Estaters," "Musickers" and "Romeoers."

SELIG PLAYERS GO TO VICKSBURG.

Director Colin Campbell, of the Selig Company, has closed his work at the Selig Chicago studios and on Wednesday, May 17, left with his company for Vicksburg, Miss., where on or before May 23 Mr. Campbell expects to start work on production of battle scenes in "The Crisis." The interior scenes in the film dramatization of Winston Churchill's great novel have all been completed. It is planned to complete the work at Vicksburg by June 1 when the company will visit St. Louis for special work.

A staff of scenic artists, stage carpenters, etc., left in advance of the Selig Director and stars for Vicksburg, where special properties were prepared in anticipation of the arrival of the players. From St. Louis it is the present plan to return to the Pacific Coast.

It is not known when final work on "The Crisis" is to be completed. The production is so spectacular it may be some months before the film is finally ready for presentation. It can be conservatively stated that "The Crisis" is to be the greatest production released by the Selig Company.

INTERNATIONAL CONTEST WINNERS.

Announcement has been made by the International Film Service, Inc., of the winners of the new talent contest at the Madison Square Garden Exposition. This contest is a radical departure in the motion picture field, as it offers a short cut to stardom for six young women who have not had previous motion picture or dramatic experience. The winners will receive positions with the International. The following is the list of the winners in this unique contest: Miss Mary Cranston, Miss Helene Montrose, Miss Helen Raftery, Miss Frieda Peterson, Miss Julia Lorland and Miss May Brown, all of New York.

YONKERS SEES "WHO'S GUILTY?" PLAYERS.

The population of Yonkers crowded into Proctor's Palace theater recently to see Manager Waldron make good his promise to have Miss Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore, co-stars of Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" series, appear on the stage of the Palace in person. Then "The Tight Rein," the second of the "Who's Guilty?" series was shown and warmly appreciated, if applause is any indication. Proctor's Palace theater has contracted to show the entire "Who's Guilty?" series of fourteen dramas of two reels each.

Buffalo Film Ball a Winner

First Big Affair of the Buffalo Screen Club Makes Brilliant Mark—Film Stars and Many Prominent Picture Folk Present.

THE recently formed Buffalo Screen Club was ambitious to screen a film ball that would be second to none that had been given anywhere. The evening set was May 15 and the club committees and members worked to some purpose. The Elmwood music hall, with the biggest dancing floor in Buffalo, was chosen and was artistically decorated for the occasion. From the time the guests began to arrive till the wee sma' hours it was the scene of animation and beauty, and smiling faces showed that all were having a time that was fourteen karat gold.

When Daniel J. Savage, president of the club, was asked his opinion of the ball, he said, "A success? Believe me, it was, if attendance, enthusiasm, and other features, including box office receipts, are considered." Mr. Savage paid a tribute to the untiring efforts of the other officers and members of the club who spent many hours to make the affair a success. The names of the officers, board of governors and committees in charge of the ball were recently printed in the Moving Picture World.

The Seventy-fourth Regiment Band of fifty pieces played a lively air, "The First of March," when the screen stars, the guests of the evening, entered and were escorted by the Screen Club members about the ballroom. These were Roscoe Arbuckle, Ethel Crute, Earl Metcalf, Mignon Anderson and Helen Green. The paraders also included A. C. Smith, a director of the Vitaphone, Corinne Farren Parquette, who won a Triangle beauty contest at the Victoria theater, Rochester, and Miss Bonstelle and her stock company now playing an engagement at the Star theater, Buffalo. The crowd cheered and the visitors bowed their acknowledgments during the procession.

Everybody present seemed to be craving for comedy, and it was up to "Fatty" Arbuckle to do stunts which equaled everything ever seen on the screen. For instance at the end of a dance, he was invited to act as director of the orchestra. He accepted and hauled his prosperous figure over several chairs to the stage. Willing hands helped the comedian to the platform. Then with the motions of a regular orchestra leader, exaggerated just enough to win bursts of applause and laughter from the dancers, Mr. Arbuckle proceeded to lead the musicians.

John W. Bolton, who conducted the band of fifty pieces, and Herman E. Schultz, who led an orchestra of the same number of men, had charge of the music. These conductors arranged a program de luxe for the dancing. Mr. Arbuckle and Mignon Anderson headed the grand march at midnight.

Elmwood Music Hall was transformed into a veritable fairyland, with decorations in gold and white, the screen club's emblems, and hundreds of brilliant lights. More than 2,000 people either watched the movements of the screen stars or enjoyed the delightful programme of music and dancing. Above the stage was a large electric sign bearing the words: "Screen Club of Buffalo, First Annual Ball."

Holders of tickets for the boxes were the screen stars, Bonstelle stock company's players; Mutual, Victor, Triangle, World, General, Paramount, Pathe, Metro, Unicorn and Popular Film Exchanges; J. A. Schuchert; Norman E. Mack, proprietor of the Buffalo Times and party; Mayor Fuhrmann, Councilman Malone, Councilman Kreinheder, Palace Theater Company, James Savage of the Como theater; Matthew J. Valley of Lackawanna; Maxine theater; Miss Mittlestad and party, and Peter Hofmeister.

Among the New York City visitors were J. J. Schmertz, Variety Film Corporation; Harry A. Samwick, Ivan Film Corporation; Joseph Lee, New York State booking agent of the Merit Film Corporation, and Joseph M. Goldstein, Exclusive Features, Inc.

Other visitors were George A. Hickey of the Unicorn office, Syracuse; A. Wolfe, Colonial theater, Rochester; E. Wolfe, Palace theater, Rochester; Tom Brakey, Bradford; J. W. Barnes, Olean; W. Van Croix, Jamestown; A. Berg, Port Allegany; E. Nickum, Olean; Fred Keller, Lockport; Daniel Buss, Tonawanda and F. Watters, Corry, Pa.

A continuous round of entertainment was carried out by the club members for the visiting stars. An auto trip to Niagara Falls, luncheons and a theater party were a feature of the program. Part of the proceeds of the ball will go to the Actors' Fund of America.

The Screen Club will entertain the Friars who will visit Buffalo next month. The next big event will be an outing at a Niagara River resort. The club is only six weeks old, but despite its infancy it has the life and enthusiasm of a regular grown-up institution.

Two Three-Part Gaumonts for June

"Flames of Vengeance" and "The Spatulate Thumb," With Single Reelers, Make Program of Variety.

THE promised output of the Gaumont company for June is practically a program in itself, since the Mutual Pictures it will release provide that variety and interest exhibitors find best suited for an evening's entertainment. The first in quantity are the new three-reel dramas which begun so auspiciously with the release of the film version of Wilkie Collins' "Armada" on May 25.

Two three-part photoplays have been announced by Gaumont for June. The first is "Flames of Vengeance," by Paul M. Bryan. It stars Miss Gertrude Robinson, with Miss Iva Shepard in her support. The photoplay has been directed by Edwin Middleton. In the cast are John Reinhard, John Mackin, Birsha Shepard, Albert Mackin and James Levering.

The second three-reel release is "The Spatulate Thumb," released June 22. This is an unusual story, written by Lionel Barrymore and Wright Huntington. The identity of the mysterious criminal in this play is established by the fact that his thumbs differ, one is conic, the other is the spatulate thumb of a murderer.

Interest naturally attaches to the new Gaumont single-reel, "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine. The subjects for these pictures in June have not been announced. The Gaumont company has its own cameraman at work and until he has been some time in the field there will be no authoritative statement of what this film will contain. The character of the pictures may be gathered from the release of May 28, "Reel Life" on this date will show a terrapin farm in operation, life in the Florida Everglades, and the humane treatment of animals as undertaken by the Animal Rescue League of Boston, and the Angell Memorial Hospital in the same city.

"See America First," manufactured by the Gaumont company, has been selected by the United States Government as a medium for informing Americans concerning some of the wonders of this continent. The Department of the Interior has given the Gaumont company permission to release its views of government parks, forest reserves and other tracts under its direction. Those for June will include two releases devoted to Yellowstone National Park. This great playground of the nation is so large that it cannot be compressed into one reel. As it is the custom to vary these "See America First" releases, between the two there will be a release featuring some Southern city.

On the same reel with "See America First," the Gaumont animated cartoonist, Harry Palmer, releases his laughable "Kartoon Komics." "Nosey Ned" and "Escapades of Estelle" will alternate as they have been doing for some time.

COMPANY GOING TO ORIENT.

On May 17 Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan and their company of Signal feature players will leave the Los Angeles studios for an extended trip to the Orient for the purpose of securing proper atmosphere in their production of an original story by Mr. McGowan entitled, "The Diamond Runners." It was the intention of the company originally to remain in this country while staging the story, but as the story was developed and its unusual possibilities realized, it was decided to carry the work to the Hawaiian Islands that better effects might be secured.

MISS MUNSON IN "FLYING A" ALLEGORY.

The "Flying A" forces have about completed the filming of an allegorical art masterpiece featuring Audrey Munson. The name and release date will soon be announced by the Mutual Film Corporation. Notable poses in which Miss Munson will be seen in this allegorical masterpiece will be that of "Descending Night," posed on the lawn of another handsome Montecito country home. The piece of statuary, "Descending Night," posed for by Miss Munson, attracted wide attention at the San Francisco Exposition. In this picture she is seen posing for the same statue in life.

WOMAN PRESS CLUB WANTS CLEAN PICTURES.

At a recent special session of the Women's Press Club June Stannard Johnson, known in film circles through her former connection with the Paramount organization, presented resolutions urging producers of motion pictures to make clean pictures of high quality by giving the support of the club to such producers as will heed the resolutions, which were passed, and copies sent to all the principal producers.

Universal's June Openers

Comedies, Straight, Slapstick and Animal, and Dramas and News Reels Give Variety to Program.

THE Red Feather feature of the week of May 29 will be "The Iron Hand," released on that date with Hobart Bosworth and Jane Novak in the principal roles. The picture runs five reels and tells a most fascinating story of a gangster who later becomes a power in the political world. On the same date, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson disport themselves in "All Over a Stocking," a Nestor comedy.

On May 30 the feature of the day will be Bob Leonard and Ella Hall in the Gold Seal two-reel mountain drama, "The Silent Man of Timber Gulch." This will be followed by the Laemmle drama, "The Fur Trimmed Coat," in which Rupert Julian, Elsie J. Wilson and Fanchon Billington play the leads, and by "A Double Fire Deception," an Imp comedy in which Matt Moore and Jane Gail share honors.

"The Attic Princess," a Big U drama featuring Thomas Jefferson with little Zoe Bech, opens the program on May 31, and is followed by "Tough Luck on a Rough Sea," a two-reel L-O comedy featuring Dan Russell. Animated Weekly No. 22 will be released on the same day.

On Thursday, June 1, the feature will be "Two Mothers," a two-reel Laemmle society drama in which Emory Johnston and Dorothy Davenport play the leading roles. The Big U drama, "Brother Jim," follows with Thomas Jefferson and his little co-star again appearing in the principal roles. The Powers comedy, "It Can't Be True," with Ernie Shields and Marcia Moore, closes the day's program.

King Baggot in "Jim Slocum No. 46393," a two-reel heart interest drama, will be released under the Imp brand on June 2. Edna Hunter supports Mr. Baggot. On the same day Neal Burns and Billie Rhodes will disport in the Nestor howler, "Good Night Nurse."

On June 3 "Tammany's Tiger," a two-reel Bison animal comedy, quite the funniest animal laughmaker yet released from Universal City, leads off the day's program with Marie Walcamp and Lee Heel in the principal funmaking roles. On the same day Ben Wilson appears with Dorothy Phillips in the Rex drama, "A Cad," and William Franey and Gale Henry split the fun between them in the Joker comedy, "A Dark Suspicion."

"As in a Dream," an unusually strong three-reel human interest drama featuring Sidney Ayres, Olive Golden and Doris Pawn will be released on June 4 under the Rex Brand. It will be followed on the same day by Herbert Rawlinson in the Laemmle comedy "The Wire Pullers," in which Mr. Rawlinson is supported by charming Agnes Vernon.

The fifth episode of "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," entitled "The House of Mystery," will also be released during the week of May 29. Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, despite all reports to the contrary, will play the leading roles in "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring" to the end of the serial.

Dixon Film Opens at Liberty

"The Fall of a Nation" Premiere Is Officially Announced for June 6.

THE National Drama Corporation will present Thomas Dixon and Victor Herbert's musical film spectacle, "The Fall of a Nation," for the first time on any stage Tuesday evening, June 6, at the Liberty theater, New York. The playhouse is the same at which the Griffith-Dixon spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was first presented March 3, 1915. Mr. Dixon has described the new offering as a sequel to the earlier work.

The alterations now making at the Liberty by the new management will include some striking changes in the technique of picture presentation. Original costumes for the attaches will be in keeping with the atmosphere of the play. The complete grand orchestra for Victor Herbert's musical score is now being drilled by its conductor, Harold Sanford, under the personal supervision of Mr. Herbert himself.

About two weeks later than the New York opening, namely, on Monday, June 19, "The Fall of a Nation" will be presented in Los Angeles. Clune's Auditorium has been leased for the summer, and a production rivaling the one in New York will be made. The Los Angeles orchestra will be directed by Harold A. Levy, one of the most valued members of the Victor Herbert musical staff. Mr. Levy has directed "The Only Girl" and many other Herbert operettas. He was extremely popular as the conductor of the big band at Brighton Beach last summer.

While continuing to occupy its offices at 720 Longacre Building for promotion and booking purposes, the National Drama Corporation has taken a large executive suite in the Subway Central Building on the south side of Times Square. Here the offices of the president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer will be situated. The Subway Central (formerly the Heidelberg) building with its tall tower is one of the landmarks of Broadway.

The Corporation expects to utilize the exterior for a great electrical display.

Merit Film Corporation Expands

Extends Its Activities to New England and Buffalo—Personnel of the Exchanges.

ONE of the largest independent film exchanges is the Merit Film Corporation, under the management of Harry Samwick. As the exclusive distributors of Ivan Productions in the Empire State the Merit Film Corporation has progressed to the point where its business necessitates the opening of an office in Buffalo to take care of the large up-state clients. F. J. Willis has been placed in charge of the new Merit office in Buffalo, at 39 Erie street. Frank Wyckoff has been transferred from the New York office as his assistant. All Ivan features will be handled from this base for the northern part of New York state.

The Merit Film Corporation has also acquired the exclusive franchise as distributors of Ivan productions for New England, and Mr. Samwick left New York for Boston to open an office there from which point exhibitors desiring Ivan features will be supplied.

Alexander Gaden to Be Gaumont Lead

HAVING definitely arranged a series of three-reel releases, the Gaumont Company now announces that one of the special organizations making these photodramas for Mutual will be headed by Alexander Gaden. Mr. Gaden will be welcomed by exhibitors and their patrons as the male star in these productions, since he has won for himself great popularity as a Gaumont player.

The intention of Gaumont to have its three-reel release the same as its five-reel features in everything but length is seen in the decision to put this popular star at the head of one of these companies. Miss Gertrude Robinson will co-star with him whenever the scenario provides a part suitable for her.

Before appearing upon the screen Alexander Gaden had a varied stage experience. As a motion picture actor he has played with Universal and Vitagraph West Coast companies. He also supported Mary Pickford in "Fanchon the Cricket." He has been noted for his many narrow escapes from death, once having been hurled from the roof of a train while it was in motion. His life was saved by his good fortune in falling into a snow bank.

Mr. Gaden signaled his appearance as a Gaumont star by his impressive portrayal of the reform mayor in "As a Woman Sows." He followed this with the divinity student who was a victim of the gambling mania in "The Drifter." He next appeared in "I Accuse!" following this with the ministerial role in "The Quality of Faith." This is his latest Mutual Masterpicture release. The first three-reel picture starring Mr. Gaden is "Armada," a screen version of Wilkie Collins' novel of the same name.

OBSERVATIONS BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE women—God bless 'em!—are with us. The very people whom the self-appointed reformers claim to champion and protect have put a negative stamp upon the foremost of the claimants' pet measures—official censorship. The reformers have endeavored to convince the people that what they have been trying to put over on the moving picture industry was inspired and encouraged by the women of the land and that those opposed to the measures were sinful, grasping, evil spreading men who had no respect for the law-abiding and unprotected. It is indeed gratifying to find that at this momentous period in the history of moving pictures no less an organization than the Federation of Women's Clubs should come to the front as a defender of the fourth great industry of the country. The convention of the Federation of Women's Clubs was held in the Hotel Astor, this city, on the 12th inst., with an attendance of 839 delegates and alternates. It was a most auspicious gathering of representative and brainy women, and many topics of deep importance to the general welfare of the country at large were discussed and voted upon. Liberality of thought was a distinguishing feature of the sessions and the results cannot fail to command sincere attention and respect in all quarters where the keynote is rationalism, justice and good will. Moving pictures became a subject of consideration through the introduction of a resolution urging that a Federal commission be appointed to censor all moving pictures. It is significant that the resolution was the offspring of a Brooklyn organization. All supposed true reformers have their birth in Brooklyn—once called "the city of churches," now known as the hotbed of furnished room houses, and the butt of an old-time joke that reads "No, I do not live in Brooklyn. I sleep there." Among the most prominent and vigorous opponents of the conspirator-inspired resolution was Mrs. Helen Merrick Boswell. This lady declared that moving pictures should not be made a matter of politics and censorship should come from the people as a whole. The sentiment was by no means unopposed, but when a vote was taken upon the resolution it was tabled indefinitely. "Other papers please copy." The convention that took this action was made up of representatives coming from all the boroughs of Greater New York, who, in behalf of the 253 clubs they represented, made child welfare one of the chief subjects of consideration. Canon Chase, of Brooklyn, and C. Crafts, of Washington, played the take notice; also Governor Whitman, of Albany, as well as Senators Smith, Hughes and others, of Washington, D. C.

N. B.—The Motion Picture Board of Trade was holding its exposition in Madison Square Garden at the same time the Federation of Women's Clubs was in session at the Hotel Astor, but it had no delegates at the convention, nor did it have official knowledge that the convention was being held.

Secondary in thought to the success of its exposition to the Motion Picture Board of Trade was the Cristman-Wheeler moving picture censorship bill in the hands of Governor Whitman. The attention of the Board was riveted upon Albany. At each session of the exposition the moving picture people labored unceasingly in procuring signatures to a protest against the bill, and on the sixth day of the exposition an army of picture people carried the protest to Albany for consideration by the Governor. True to their crafty nature, the Brooklyn camp of so-called reformers and guardians against vice conducted a quiet campaign to offset that of the moving picture people, and on the same day the latter were presenting their gigantic petition to Governor Whitman they made their unsuccessful attempt to carry the Federation of Women's Clubs by storm. Its success could not have failed to make an impression upon the Executive and give joy to the supporters of the Cristman-Wheeler bill. Its failure should carry equal weight to the reverse.

Mrs. Boswell's remarks at the Federation convention that "moving pictures should not be made a matter of politics" carry with them the sentiments of all who favor a square deal to all legitimate commercial enterprises. Such is the manufacture of motion picture films. From a financial and operative point of view the business has progressed so that it now stands fourth in importance in this country. It has advanced solely upon its merits and has at no time been dependent for its success upon any political manipulation, any thing savoring of politics has been inspired and provoked by the people who found their ground based upon the claims of immorality untenable. In their blind, mad fight against moving pictures and their pernicious schemes to secure legislation in its behalf they have threatened to wreak vengeance at the polls upon those who did not do their bidding. In this direction their work became so brazen that the moving picture people were compelled to resort to like methods for self-protection. It was a difficult task to arouse the moving picture people to a realization of the true circumstances. For several years they humbly complied with law after law to regulate their business without the slightest suspicion that a warfare for their extermination was being secretly conducted by a combination of crafty manipulators operating under the cloak of fidelity to religious principles. During all this time their humility was being secretly flouted as evidence of fear and guilt and unconsciously the moving picture people were drifting into a state of bondage. Gradually the spider weaved his web and the picture people, unsuspecting his advance until the blood-sucking animal threw out his censorship cord. That capped the climax.

The moving picture people are too busy to bother with politics more than is necessary to exercise their duties as citizens and none of them have aspired to step beyond those bounds. But they do not intend to longer stand idly by and let the combination of church and state have full sway without determined protest. They feel that their constitutional rights have been trampled upon, that many of the fundamental principles upon which the great government of the United States stands have been ignored, and they are preparing to put up a fight which will challenge every sinew and muscle the enemy can command. If they cannot protect themselves and secure their rights in the halls of the legislature they will carry the battle through the courts. The cost must necessarily be great. It will fall heavily upon the shoulders of all except the true instigators of the unjust campaign. They have taken care to do their work through and under the cover of official acts and have nothing financially to lose through either defeat or success. Few of these so-called reformers have anything financially to lose, because they haven't anything to risk. If any money is spent on their side it is that which they have persuaded others to contribute in support of their so-called reform movements. All their spending is in lobbying, and they are the cheapest—in every sense of the term—of all lobbyists. Their chief expenses are self-pay, railroad fares and hotel bills. Those who serve them do not get money. They would be afraid to take it. The hirelings would not threat the hirers. What they do is almost invariably forced to threats to cut off political careers. These are the kind of people who have forced politics into the moving picture business. Their threat to the politicians is "Do as we tell you or you will be retired to private life." The moving picture people tell them, "Do what is right and just or answer to the people at the polls." An Assemblyman of this city laughed at the moving picture people last fall when they told him he would answer at the polls for monkeying with a pernicious censorship bill, but he is no longer an Assemblyman. The moving picture simply followed an example set by a clergyman in an Ohio town. He was not allowed to depend upon the decision of the courts. When the Aldermen of his town declined to enact an ordinance against the operation of Sunday moving picture shows, he declared, "I'll make them toe the mark," and proceeded to convince the Aldermen opposed as to the strength of the vote he could throw against them at the next election.

There is considerable discussion over the law recently enacted in this state prohibiting any children from taking part in moving pictures unless under permit from the head of the respective municipalities. This bill did not receive the attention of the moving picture people during its introduction or consideration. There are two reasons for this: First, the moving picture people favored all reasonable protection to children; secondly, the multiplicity of censorship measures detracted their attention from the details of the bill. They now find confronting them a new and old tape that makes the law appear almost ridiculous. The moving picture people concede that enactment of the law was provoked by people living upon the earnings of their children. In justice to some parents it may be stated that they have bank books which show deposits of the earnings in trust for the children, and these children are players in the moving pictures. How about that for child protection, Mr. So-called Reformer?

MILT HOFFMAN LIKES THE COAST.

M. E. Hoffman, who went to Los Angeles as manager of the Lasky Studios, writes that he has arrived safely on the job and likes the work in his new position. Incidentally he declares that conditions there are far ahead of those in the East.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Practical Poster Pointers.

WRITING from Brooklyn, M. S. Hankins, who is a practical poster lithographer, offers some suggestions on how to get good stuff for the boards, replying to a comment in this department some weeks ago. From his wholly practical point of view he confirms our own statement that flash paper cannot build a stable business and adds:

I would suggest that the manufacturer get several photographs of the scenes he wants lithographed and submit these to the lithographer, or rather to the artist in charge, to arrange the composition. To make paper efficient, do not use too many figures. Should the scene be a mob or even a large group, eliminate a majority of these figures or let them melt into the background, as it were, making them hardly distinguishable that the central figures may stand out prominently. The lettering should be largely a plain block letter, dark on a white ground or light against dark, the color to be in contrast to the general color scheme of the bill as a whole. Should this plan be followed, a one-sheet should be readable and distinct across the average street and a six at some distance, greatly increasing the percentage of display efficiency. It would seem, from an economic angle, that the studio should have its lithographic department where the copy could be prepared with the least possible delay, saving time and money while standardizing the poster style.

This is all foundation stuff; the knowledge that all manufacturers should have. Common sense should dictate that mob scenes should be faded so that the central figures could be given proper prominence, and still more elemental is the dictum that the lettering should be plain and readable at as great a distance as possible. Probably most manufacturers do know these facts. The trouble is that they do not apply them. They know that they should have, but they get the foolish idea that they want something "out of the ordinary." If it is attractive in the water color sketch, they do not stop to consider that it may be a pretty picture and yet not an effective advertisement for board display.

We take it that by "several prints of scenes" Mr. Hankins means several stills of the same scene. This is an excellent suggestion, because three or four stills may be combined into one good pose where a single still may be weak and ineffective. One great trouble is that the director simply will not take the trouble to get good lithographic stills. The only use a director seems to have for stills is to paste them in his scrap book. He will not stop to consider composition—many of them do not even know what composition means—and he rather resents the necessity for stopping his work to make the stills. Seven years ago this writer used to handle all of the stills prepared for one of the licensed companies. Only one out of four directors even tried to get decent stuff, though the head of the establishment himself begged and commanded. Last summer we watched the output of stills by the same company. Their average had not improved, though for seven years the company had been laboring to get its paid employees to plan in stuff that would help the sale of the films they made, and a poster artist was right on the ground to give suggestions and advice. As many as thirty and forty stills have been made for some five reel productions, not one of which was really suitable for poster work, though the play may have offered many interesting possibilities. The reform must start with the director, and continue through the various heads to the manufacturer himself, who must demand good work from those below and then be guided to some extent by the practical lithographer who will make the bill. The Lubin company has even tried the experiment of sending a man along with a graphic to get real scenes instead of posed pictures, but even this has not always worked well though it was about the most successful effort. It will take some time to train the directors, but at least the manufacturer can insist upon legible lettering and compliance with the elemental rules of display and composition. Take the ordinary black and white tiled floor. No one can get out and ante another. No one thing is distinct. Spill some red paint on one tile and every passerby will see that particular tile. It is the same with posters. Make them stand out.

A News Stock Folder.

O. B. Brown, of Putnam, Conn., sends in a folder for the Empire and asks us to "pull it to pieces." It is a six page folder pages three by five on cheap news stock. Evidently it is the best the local printer can do, but he can at least get a good quality of news. It will cost a few cents a pound more, but it will be worth the difference. Another fifty cents would make a lot of difference in the feel and looks of the sheet. Paper is high, but not yet prohibitive. The first page carries the house name and staff. The staff should be reversed, the names appearing at the left and the offices at the right hand margin. There is a time table and a price card, but the display is crude, even for a country printer. The back page is an underline with cut and the third page on this side carries some clipped matter used as house talk. Inside the program runs to days to a page for the three pages. The days should be dated. The feature is played up with a couple of lines, but the films added to make the full program are treated very casually, sometimes only the title being announced with no hint as to drama" would be better than the bare title. Much cannot be done with a poor printer, but these changes can and should be made. Mr. Bowen writes that he gets much good material from the department.

More Dates Needed.

The Lomo and Dixie theaters, McComb City, Miss., share a four page program that is well laid out, but one stingy little twelve point date line that is just off Old English is made to cover the week for the two houses. The programs proper carry no sign of date, even though the printer had to run in an ornamental square to break the blank space.

LOMO		DIXIE
Tuesday	THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD	Tuesday	THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD
Wednesday	THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD	Wednesday	THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD
Friday	THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD	Friday	THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD
Saturday	THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD	Saturday	THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD

With this change the program arrangement works nicely as is shown in the cut. The two parts deleted refer to lottery schemes and are cut out in accordance with the post office rulings. It may interest fans to brand that the program claims Pearl White as "our home actress."

Busy Again.

It has been several weeks since the Third street, Easton, Pa., came across with a new idea, but they are at it again and the new one is a winner. They were one of the very first houses to own a talking camera, and they have put it to good use, but never better than the stunt that is explained in this paragraph.

WANTED.

Twenty-five Healthy, Cute Babies—Six Months to One Year Old.

MOTHERS! Have you a baby you think is the cutest in the world? Does the baby do cute things? Has it a cunning laugh? How would you like to see this same baby in Motion Pictures many years after it has grown up? Here's a chance to have a Motion Picture made of your baby free of charge. We want to photograph twenty-five babies and have the mothers enter them in a contest. The baby best liked by our patrons will receive a five dollar gold piece and a motion picture of itself. All the rest of the babies will receive only the pictures. The pictures alone cost to make about $5.00 for each baby. Years after the babies grow up you can show these pictures. Just drop us a line asking to have your baby entered in the contest, we will take care of the rest. We'll bear in mind that our audience will decide which baby they like best.

These tears holes in the usual side contest, and it is worth several times the extra cost. Incidentally it will make twenty-five mothers supremely happy.

Better Still.

The second issue of the Empire Theater Weekly, Flagstaff, Ariz., is better than the first. It doesn't give a lot of space to films, but it gives the program and then lets loose some editorial matter on good roads that is better than telling that this film or that is a good one. The reader will carry the paper about with him and cannot help see the program. This sort of thing works only when the general matter is genuinely good and not flattery, but the editor is a real writer in this case and speaks through his pen with force. This clip is a suggestion to others, though we beat Mr. Costigan to it in Picture Theater Advertising.

Played Fatal Cards.

Raymond Robbins, of the Orpheum, Malta, Mont., sends in an interesting letter and wants data as to bound volumes as he wants to get back numbers for a reference library. These volumes run thirteen issues each, are strongly bound and cost about what the local binder would charge to bind your own loose copies and they have the advantage of not being cut until bound, which gives a better margin to the page. They can be had for three or four years back and such departments as this and Brother Richardson's form a most valuable encyclopedia, not to mention the rest of the material. Mr. Robbins writes:

This is a small town of about one thousand population, but we are now showing an all-feature program with daily change. We run Paramount two nights with World, Pathe, Mutual Masterpieces and Metro and hold one night open for miscellaneous features which are from twenty to sixty days old. I think this speaks very well for a town of this size—and we have an opposition at that.

All features is going some in a thousand town. Mr. Robbins sends in a card printed up for The Fatal Card, using the plaid back that takes print well and yet is not expensive. If we remember correctly, the company had some of these for the early run. The card made a lot of talk, for the play was not well known, and it built business. As a rule an oddity will always attract more attention than straight matter and is worth the additional cost. We would like to hear from Mr. Robbins on some other advertising stunts.

A Model.

Here is a model form of program that is even better than the style originally devised by the house, the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., which has supplied much good stuff to this department. The double page is eleven by seven and a half inches and the middle column is the regulation thirteen cm width, enabling the matter to be set on the machine. This house is run by the local Y. M. C. A., but it is as a theater should be. The back page is house talk and chat. Try this program form some time.

MONDAY, APRIL 10 Maclyn Arbuckle "The Reform Candidate"	Paramount "The Old Homestead"	THURSDAY, APRIL 13 Marguerite Clark "THE CRUCIBLE"
TUESDAY, APRIL 11 "The Old Homestead"	Paramount "The Old Homestead"	FRIDAY, APRIL 14 "THE CHEAT" with FANNIE WARD
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12 Marguerite Snow "ROSEMARY"	Paramount "The Old Homestead"	THURSDAY, APRIL 13 MARY MILES MINTER "BARBARA FRITCHE"

Say Where.

The Crystal theater, Little Rock, Ark., has started a twelve page house organ, but on a paragraph by chance states the name of the town. The town should appear in the heading of the sheet along with the date. The issue is a monthly, carrying the program for that period in full on a single page and giving the rest to house talk and notes of coming productions. Evidently Rothapel got their goat for their editorial remarks:

An Invitation.

We are glad at this time to inform the business men of our city that the Empress theater is at their disposal day time or any evening after the show gratis for meetings, etc.

We believe it might be of the best interests of us all if our business men would get together, say once each week, having for their object a discussion of local conditions; local needs etc. It will be a pleasure for us to be of service to you at any time.

Make your house a real home of ideas and they will naturally turn to it when they seek amusement. Be something more than the fellow who runs the picture house. Be a citizen and a prominent one.

Guessed Part.

In sending in a folder program of the Broadway, Philadelphia, Harry H. Rush writes:

There is one thing which I know you are going to criticize and that is the size. I agree with you that it is a little large for a railroad rider style and that it would look much better if it were stitched, but that would add to the cost and already I am at the limit of my appropriation.

This is a six page, six by nine inch page, which is rather awkward to handle, but another page of advertising could pay for an eight page, stitched program and allow another page for reading matter.

As the program is laid the front shows the house title and a cut. The back carries nine advertisements. The third page on this side shows when the front is turned, and gives the Friday and Saturday program.

Turning this back opens up the reverse side. Here the arrangement is a reader to go with the cut and the Monday program. Then comes another page of advertisement and the third page carries three days' program. It would be a better arrangement to throw that advertising page to the other side so that, when open, the three program pages appear side by side, in their proper order. The advertisers should not care since they get the benefit of the first flash as the page is turned, and it will work better for the house. The days are dated and well separated and the titles are properly played up. The arrangement should be changed, however, to get the fullest effect. With seventeen trade advertisements, the program should cost nothing, instead of costing the limit. Possibly the advertising rates are too small. Better make a decent price even if it does take a couple of weeks to fill the space.

See the Difference.

If you have late copies by you, look up the reproduction of the program of the Crescent, Bronx, and compare it with this cut.

This is the same program but with changes made as suggested. By making a few minor alterations Joe Vion gets a better program for the same price, and makes it work harder by playing up the important facts. Mr. Vion is an old showman and a good one, because he knows that he does not know it all and is willing to take any suggestion that will lead to betterment.

He is the first manager in New York to take the locally produced play for a business getter. He will produce a one reel story with local talent and with the aid of one of the locality papers he will hold the usual voting contest for the lead. It is not a new scheme out of town and not always a safe scheme, but sometimes very doubtful ladies will buy up the lead, but we'll bet that Vion gets away with it.

Defends the Printer.

L. F. Guilmond, of the Lyceum, Monticello, N. Y., has come in again after a silence of more than a year. Old friends will remember him as the manager who ran his house to kill opposition off before it came and was the first to take the house cut. We do not know whether he yet has opposition, but he is in the field with a bi-weekly program, eight pages 6 by 8 1/2, white paper and black ink. He puts in a plea for the printer "who only had twenty-four hours for the job." We would like to know how long the printer does that for an eight page job. The cuts, with the exception of the house cut, are badly brought out. Apparently they were not locked up on their feet. This is particularly noticeable with the Triangle cuts, which are all on the cant. The program form is rather unusual, for with eight pages to use, of which seven are taken by the house, the two weekly programs take only about three inches, double column, each. This merely lists the titles, the players and the brand, and the rest of the space is given to reader, much of it concerning the attractions listed. This is a good plan. Let the patron see what is coming and let him see it with the least expenditure of effort. Then add what you want in the reading columns and it will be read. There are three pages of reading notices, including some gossip and this works better in most instances than an overwritten formal program. Mr. Guilmond writes that he is not sending in the program as a model but as something to be beaten by later issues, and that is the right way to go at it. When he sends the next in, we would like a good photograph of the house, which is oddly located, being some distance back from the street with a lawn in front, and a fence that gives reason for the catchline "Behind the cobbles wall."

Both Sides, Please.

Will the Orpheum, Nampa, Idaho, please make certain that our copy of the Reel-ism is printed both sides. We like best the editorials on page two and the last issue to hand is printed only pages one and four. If the printer is careless the sheet should be checked up, but a blank is bound to happen now and then in spite of the most careful feeding.

Once More.

Once more it is shown that there is something new under the sun. The program for Wassman's theater, Nashville, Tenn., is it. It is an eight pager. The outside sheet is 4 by 5 1/2. The inside sheet is bound from three by four, and it is bound so that the bottom edges of both the sheets are aligned. For a moment you wonder why the inside sheet is stingy and then it dawns upon you that the sheet is so planned, as regards size and type placement that the inserted four does not cut off the titles and dates on the larger four. In other words, with the program opened in the middle the Monday and Tuesday and Friday and Saturday announcements show above the inserted Wednesday and Thursday announcement, so that you get the full bill at one glance. In the reproduction the inner page is outlined, that the idea may be more clearly shown. Until you figure it out, it looks like sloppy work and we think it might be a good idea to put small "fats" on the inner page pointing to the other part of the program. We have marked these in to give the idea.

In studying this cut it should be remembered that four and not merely two pages are shown, these pages being two and seven and four and five. Back of the latter is a common house advertisement of a colored border, larger sheet, and a straight rule border for the inside sheet does not look well, but it probably serves a purpose in marking the change. Perhaps a better idea would be to use two sheets of the same stock and of the same width, but with one sheet about an inch shorter than the other, thus leaving the inside sheet smaller in both dimensions. In any event it is the much desired something new. The envelope in which the program is mailed has a blue question mark to the left of the address, a rather odd, but generally effective device.

All But the Stock.

V. M. Trainor, of the Superba, Ramsey, N. J., sends in a four pager on which he asks for comment. The pages are $\frac{3}{4}$ by $\frac{5}{8}$ and the stock is a yellowish green ribbed paper. The color is as mournful as some of those Jersey suburbs, and to make it easy, the type is printed in a dark blue. This is not so bad with the larger faces, but the small stuff on the back page, where this is a "house talk" in an eight point, is faded out because there is a lack of contrast in color between ink and stock. If the stock had to be used, a black would have been the only permissible color, but even with a black a good impression of a small face cannot be made on paper with embossing unless the impression is too heavy to permit printing on both sides. The stock, regarded merely as stock, is good, but it is not good for the purpose for which it is used. Both the surface and the color are against it. That sick looking sage stock should never be used for printing for an amusement enterprise. Printed on other stock the program would be a good example. The house talk is particularly good, a modest brag without exaggeration.

On Courtesy.

Nearly every motion picture tradesperson one picks up nowadays contains a lot of superfluous advice from manufacturers and their press agents on the subject of "Courtesy."

One prominent New York city exhibitor, nationally known, makes the statement that he heard the words, "Thank you" less than five times from motion picture theater cashiers during a recent coast-to-coast trip. This exhibitor is clever, highly successful and knows what he is talking about. But like the negro's characterization of Senator Joe Bailey of Texas, "He sho do recommen' hisself highly." Nevertheless the fact remains that during his trip he did not visit the Crystal Theater in Little Rock, or he not only would have received a cheery "Thank You," from our cashier, Miss Anna Bono, but would have heard the same, accompanied by a welcoming smile, from Jack Hudgens at the door. The Crystal, however, goes further than the mere outward forms of courtesy, and endeavors to make all its patrons really "feel at home," the test of true hospitality.

One wonders whether the same space in the trade journals might not be better utilized in conducting a school for certain directors and also some so-called "publicity men," in order that the latter may learn to prepare synopses of pictures which do not have to be rewritten before they are presentable to the public.

We are sure that exhibitors throughout the country extend a great deal more courtesy than they are given credit for. At least we know a number who are successful enough not to require a group of film manufacturers to finance them.

We think there are many other exhibitors who feel that the visitor from New York went to more dinners than theaters.

A Note to Steve.

Steve—Next time you send in some Eldorado throwaways, please send just one on white paper and maybe we'll reproduce it, but we cannot do much on yellow stock.

Steve Farrar is getting out some nice throwaways, but evidently he has soured on features, for the stuff is mostly comedy, with Syd and Charlie Chaplin and Billy Ritchie on one bill.

Just a Little Credit.

The Owl, the O-Row-Nay organ, keeps up to date and William Lord Wright's column in Sell's's Scissors and Paste seems to help a lot. If you don't know about it and do want program stuff to clip, get the Selig sheet weekly and you'll find a whole column most of which is really readable stuff without any special Selig tinge. Not wanting to swell William up too much, it is about the best "pure reading" that goes into any manufacturer's press sheet, because it is the most available. But the best thing in the Owl for house purposes is an editorial column that tells things simply and honestly. There should not be so much surprise over the fact that some editors of house programs make Annanias look like an incompetent amateur. For example the Owl does not announce first runs. It tells what first runs are, tells why they cannot afford good first runs and tells why the subjects they run are still fresh in the public mind. That sort of talk is better for spiking guns than a lot of misstatement, and as a matter of fact, first run is no better than an older service if the reels have been carefully handled, except to the man who is afraid that a competitor will get the release first.

Archie Winning, the Princess, Percy, Ill., sends in a card ticket with an interesting explanatory letter in which he says:

I am enclosing a coupon or ticket I got out for "The Battle Cry of Peace." We worked it in this way: First, we called up the exchange to see on what date we could get the picture and then got them to hold it open for us for five days. Then we got the busy with the threat of a strike and they were not enough to assure the success of the engagement and sent the exchange the O. K. The idea of the coupon was that in case the sale was short we could give up the idea and permit the tickets to be cashed at the bank. This was the only way we could think of to swing the matter, as this is a mining town of 1,002 according to the 1910 census, and work is very poor just now. Have been a constant reader of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD since I have been in business (about three years), and the first thing I turn to each week is the Advertising for Exhibitors department. We have gotten so many helps from it we feel as though we could not do without it.

That is the way many others feel about it, for this paper gives REAL service in all departments of management.

The ticket states that the holder is entitled to one admission to the performance of the "Battle Cry" on a stated date and that in the event the picture is not shown on that date the card will be redeemed at the bank for twenty-five cents.

It seems to us that others could do well with this provisional booking scheme. It is as unique as the old scheme of the exhibitor in the State Rights who used to call advance tickets at a flat rate and get the rental money in before the day of showing to guard against bad business due to the weather. It takes the small town managers to get these real ideas. They have to be resourceful if they would make money.

Mr. Winning makes an excellent suggestion that we are passing higher up. He suggests that we put the page number on the back of each issue, that those who are looking for back material can tell what issue to find without taking down and examining a lot of copies. A simple binding would obviate this difficulty. Our own scheme is to punch a couple of the sixteen-hole inch holes in the issue close to the back, using a common drive punch and a hammer and gauging from the last previous issue. Then we make a binding with a shoestring. This serves until the bound volume comes out, but there is no time limit on the life of the binding. At the same time the paging on the ridge would help and will be done if it is practicable.

Took a Prize.

The Rex Theater, Colvis, Cal., entered a float in a recent festival and was awarded first prize for the best advertising float. We do not think that any prize should go to the photographer who made the post card that conveys this information, as the picture will not reproduce. It is an oblong frame work mounted on a bicycle with an arch of paper, streamers and flowers. On the side was lettered:

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Merwin Turns Producer.

BANNISTER MERWIN, former Edison story writer and for some time past the Editor for the London Film Co., has gone in for production. It was not a shift of his own seeking, but was due to changes in the staff that required a director in a hurry and, in default of an eligible director Mr. Merwin had to step in. He writes:

At the back of my mind there has for some time been a suspicion that a man will never get for his own work a production satisfactory to himself unless he makes it himself. The obvious reason is that a man who produces his own play recognizes the fact that on the production side he is not a creator but an interpreter. His production work consists chiefly in making his actors get his story over for him. He has the additional advantage of knowing what his characters and his sets ought to look like.

Another fact has been strongly borne in upon me during the last year or so. It is that no man can become a real photoplaywright unless he can get close to production. Books like yours are helpful, but their chief value is in teaching the tyro to understand the practical thing when he gets the opportunity of seeing it. That's why I have always given sincere tyros full access to our floor. Plimpton used to do the same thing at the Edison studio.

We believe with Mr. Merwin that practical knowledge makes the best man, but we do not believe that actual studio experience is absolutely an essential to success. On the question of books we believe that no book can teach an aspirant to write plays. It can only tell him how the work should be done and put him in possession of information valuable to the extent of the author's own knowledge, but we believe that good and practical scripts can be written without personal knowledge of the studios, if the playwright has done a proper amount of study and practice work.

But Mr. Merwin's letter is less interesting from this point than from his new point of view as a director. Even with his own stories to handle he realizes that as a director he is an interpreter and not a creator. This is what directors must realize before they are really competent. If they work with the stories of others they are not creators but interpreters. Paderewski is both a pianist and composer, but when he plays the works of other composers, he does not seek to create new compositions on the old theme. He does not make radical changes in tempi and notation. He does give to the rendition of the composition the best of his musical intelligence and because his intelligence is more fully developed than the parlor entertainer, his interpretation is more musically, but he interprets, he does not re-create; therefore he is master and not a faker. This is a point that most directors cannot grasp. They do not study the script in an effort to interpret the author's ideas in intelligent fashion. They read it if at all with a view to making the changes that will force the story to match their own narrow viewpoints. Mr. Merwin will win as great a success as a director as he has as an author because, being an author, he realizes the vital importance of presenting an idea as a whole and not in part the idea of the author and in part his own.

How, Please?

Says a Mr. White:

You quote William Lord Wright—"That an incompetent may hit upon a good idea, etc. In other words an incompetent gets a big idea, develops it poorly. Submits it to a producing company and gets it back with the usual rejection slip. Now Mr. Stauffer appreciating the value of the big idea, goes to work and turns out a great story. His story is not like the incompetent but the big idea is there and YOU DON'T CALL THIS STEALING. I DO and this is the best argument in the world for the copyright law.

Will Mr. White please write again and explain to an interested world how in hades a copyright law will help things any? Does a White know anything about the copyright, or is he one of those who thinks that "Copyright, 1915," will throw a scare into a Thief? Under the efficient administration of Mr. Thorvald Solberg the copyright law has never been more efficiently administered than at this moment, but copyright is still merely a registration and not a protective Copyright. Copyright merely recording of the fact that you claim protection for certain published material. It is a legal notice that you intend to protect your rights, but it is up to you and your lawyers to enforce that protection.

The incompetent may hit upon a good idea. Sometimes he does. If he does and the idea is stolen we call it stealing along with Mr. White, but it is only about one time in a thousand that the incompetent does hit upon a decent idea and it is only once in a thousand times that he does not think his stuff is stolen because he sees on the screen the idea that he and perhaps thousands of others have written in the last few centuries. It is not a "great idea" to tell of a mismatched pair who are about to break up the partnership of the century, unless they can't divide the grave of their dead child. It's still a reliable idea, but the novelty has been rubbed off. Quite recently a man swore to secrecy before he would divulge his plot, and we got out a carbon and showed him we had written the same thing three years ago. Had it not been for the carbon, he would have been positive we were stealing.

There is a serious angle to this boob wall of theft. It is becoming more and more difficult for the beginner to obtain any help at all. The latest to hold up his right hand and solemnly swear never again to help a man, woman or child with his script writing is Harry Chandler, who has just written:

The other day I had a letter from Lubin enclosing one form an embryonic author of picture plays congratulating them on a certain production and stating that in his opinion he had supplied the original idea for the story and that it had been appropriated without his consent and with compensation to him. I said I laid the blame on me and the following is the sad tale of why he did it:

Nearly two years ago this individual whom, I had known for about 20 years, sent a story to me personally at Lubin and asked if I would read it and give him a criticism. He had already submitted it to Lubin but it had bumped up against the shock absorbers and bounced back. I read the script and wrote him saying that it was not heavy enough for two reels and that we were making very few one reel pictures. It dealt with the plans of an aerial torpedo which were in the care of the male lead and, as usual, were stolen by the heavy. The heavy simply came in, ripped open the desk "and stole the papers." As I remember it the rest of the story was about as novel as this incident.

About 15 months after I returned his script and had forgotten all about it George Terwilliger handed me the synopsis of a story that he had been doping out and asked me if I would supply a means for electrocuting a man which would be technically correct and also if I would put the story into scenes. The picture was afterwards released as "The Nations Peril." This story involved the idea of an aerial torpedo, invented by the male lead, the plans of which are stolen by the female lead, who is tricked into doing so by the heavy. The rest of the story deals with the invasion of the United States by a foreign power with a multitude of detail concerning it.

Now, this author, still in the egg, gets the idea that his little one reel script submitted 15 months before anyone thought of the "Nations Peril" supplied the basis for the reel feature, and thinks that he should have been paid, and also that his name should have been given as co-author. Not only this, but without saying anything to me, he writes to Lubin and accuses me of stealing his story. As a matter of fact, Terwilliger had never even sniffed the atmosphere surrounding his script and the idea of the torpedo and stealing the plans was in the synopsis which he handed me. The complaining individual loses sight of the fact that the idea of stealing plans probably originated with Noah when he started to build the ark. He also fails to take into consideration if I had not shown him the kindness of reading and criticizing his story, the circumstance could never have arisen. He jumps in and yells "Thief!" the first crack out of the box without taking the trouble of looking into matters or to consider that he might possibly be wrong.

It might be interesting to add that seven or eight years ago, criticizing films for the old Film Index we commented upon a Lubin release and wrote that this particular company had within a short period used enough stolen plan stories to last them for a year.

Here you have the same situation, and here you have the reason for the gradual withdrawal of help from the novice. It is hard on the man who plays the game fairly, but he must suffer for the sins of his class.

More Than That.

A real photoplay is something more than a few sheets of paper covered with typewriting in a certain form.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of material awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps, (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 139.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Suppose you were running a film which you knew to be perfect, and there was an up and down movement in the picture on the screen; where would you look for the trouble? Enumerate the various things which would cause it. Suppose the movement was sidewise? Suppose the sprocket holes showed on one side?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 132.

Some of the names on the Roll of Honor this week are only there by some stretching, but none got by unless they answered at least two-thirds correctly. Where a man had gone to the trouble of answering and only fell down on one of three points in a question of this character I thought it only fair that his name be included in the Roll of Honor.

On the Roll of Honor are Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Elmer Paterson, Tama, Iowa; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; M. Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; L. Pagehardt, Westport, Md.; V. M. Kidd, Victoria, B. C.; E. N. Crain, Fort Worth, Texas; G. S. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.; C. W. Tuthill, West Orange, N. J.; F. E. Record, Jr., Mineral Wells, Texas, and W. D. Cady, Mt. Pleasant, Mich.

I have selected the reply of Brother Paterson as best suited to the purposes of publication. The ideas set forth with regard to that part of the question dealing with a man jumping off a wall were in some instances rather weird. Of course the understanding of those things has nothing to do with competency in operating, but broadly speaking I hold a man ought to look into the mysteries of everything connected with the things he is handling every day, his mind is broadened, and he is at least to some extent made a better man by understanding all about every phase of the profession with which he is connected.

Reply to Question No. 132. By Elmer Paterson, Tama, Iowa.

The Question:

In a projected picture it often occurs that the wheels of a moving wagon will either appear to stand still or to revolve backwards. How do you explain this? In some films the figures move at impossible speed; men and women jump to the top of impossible high walls with slight effort. How is this accomplished? Objects and inanimate figures are often made to seemingly move of themselves. How is this done?

The Answer:

In regard to the first part of the question, about why the wheels of a moving wagon often appear to be moving backwards or standing still, I offer the following solution. Let us suppose that the wagon wheel has sixteen spokes and that the wagon is moving at such speed that the wheel makes one revolution every second, and that the camera taking the picture is being turned at the proper speed of sixteen pictures per second. We thus see that after the camera has taken one picture, and is ready to take the next, which will be in one-sixteenth of a second later, the wagon wheel will have made one-eighth of a revolution (remember it was revolving once every second), hence each adjacent spoke will occupy very nearly the position of the first. When the picture is projected, the eye cannot tell the difference between the two spokes, therefore the spokes appear to be stationary and the wheel sliding along. When the spokes do not advance more than one-half the distance between any two of the spokes, the wheel appears to be going forward, but if it advances more than this, up to the point where the adjacent spoke formerly was, the wheel will appear to go backward.

With regard to the first half of the second part, the speed at which figures move is governed by the camera man and the operator. If the camera is turned slow and the people move at the ordinary speed, when the picture is projected at the ordinary speed the action will be very greatly increased. The way most commonly used, as I understand it, in taking the men and women take an impossible jump, say over a wall, is a strip of film of the proper length for the scene is turned through with the lens capped. The man or woman takes his position on the top of the wall with his or her back toward the direction in which he or she is to jump. The cameraman then cranks his camera backwards. The actor or actress then makes the jump backwards. Of course when the picture is projected in the proper direction, the direction in which the people jump is reverse and they appear to be making a high jump.

When pictures of inanimate things are made to appear to move the simple "stop picture" is used. Take for example a box of matches. The camera being focused on the box is opened, a trifle and one picture is taken. Then the box is opened a trifle more and another picture is taken. Then a match may be made to appear and light itself in the manner above explained. In this manner pictures of plants growing may be made, or one or two pictures of things taken every day until the plant has the desired growth. When the picture is projected at the correct speed the plant appears to have grown to normal size from a seed in a few minutes.

Madison Square Garden.

From the standpoint of the projection department there is not so very much to tell about the Exposition at Madison Square Garden; also the various exhibits have already been described in another department of a previous issue of the paper. The only projection machine exhibitor was the Nicholas Power Company, which, following its usual course, was there, in the vernacular, with bells on. The Power Company had a large, beautifully decorated space, which was one of the centers of attraction in the Exposition, particularly when our old friend, Power, was present.

J. H. Hallberg, supply dealer, and manufacturer of the Hallberg Beam, a large and quite attractive exhibit. The National Carbon Company, and the Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Company were both on deck, the former proudly displaying to the assembled multitude their carbons, particularly the new negative metal coated solid carbon designed for use on D. C., which was not only shown but also demonstrated in action. The carbons for 40, 55 and 65 amperes are 5/16, 11/32 and 3/4 of an inch respectively. The Westinghouse Company had, in their booth, one of their Mercury Arc Rectifiers in operation. Mr. Speer, manufacturer of the Speer Carbon was "among those present," and exhibited his carbons, giving away two sample carbons to each exhibitor and operator, the same being encased in a neat pasteboard box. The Pierson Film Cleaning Machine, a new mechanism designed to thoroughly clean film, was on exhibition in the balcony, where it attracted considerable attention. J. H. Gent, manufacturer of the Kinetograph screen, put in his appearance for one day, though he did not have an exhibit. The Photoscope had a booth in charge of W. J. Patterson. The machine attracted much attention, and Brother Patterson was kept busy explaining its good points. The Carroll Non-Revolving Magazine was displayed and demonstrated by its inventor, E. W. Harris. The Carroll has some excellent points, and is a thoroughly practical device which is designed to eliminate the rewinding of film. The Automatic Film Rewinding Company of Harrisburg, Pa., exhibited and demonstrated their rewinding machine, which is designed for use in operating rooms. This device will be described and illustrated in a future issue. It is a good stunt, and one which can be recommended to the favorable consideration of theater managers and operators.

There were various screen surfaces on exhibition, one of which was a new transparent screen surface, the Trans-Lux, which attracted much attention due to the fact that the same picture was projected constantly to its surface. This kept the screen surrounded by a crowd most of the time, and was a mighty good advertising stunt. Max Berner, of Local 306, was at the machine.

The Novelty Slide Company had an elaborate and a very attractive display of their "Fire Prevention" Company, attracted much attention with their fire prevention device which automatically closes the ports, and does various other things in case of danger. This device will be described, as will the Pierson Film Cleaning Machine, in some future issue.

Aside from these things I do not remember any exhibits of more than passing interest from the projection point of view.

On "Projection Day" the editor had the pleasure of addressing a gathering of operators and theater managers on his favorite topic, namely: projection with regard to the management of the projection booth. He pointed out incompetency in the operating room and theater managerial positions. The hour was set for 2.30 in the afternoon, and this meant that the crowd was comparatively small, since practically all New York exhibitors were busy raking in the coin in that hour, and the operators were equally strenuously engaged in bombarding something like six hundred New York screens with snap shot photographs at the rate of from sixteen to twenty-five a minute. Practically every New York operator who was idle or could get off was there, however, as well as some out of town men, among them Peter Benard, business agent of Local No. 227, Bridgeport, Conn., and two representatives of the Trenton, N. J. Local, whose cards have unfortunately turned up missing now that I need them. There were also a scattering of exchange men and exhibitors present, and I am told, some of the big producers were either there or represented.

The editor talked for nearly two hours, only to find at the end of that time there were still very much to say. He was nevertheless obliged to "cut it short" because there were other speakers to follow. Mr. Nicholas Power, vice-president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, presided at the meeting. Brother Power has the faculty of doing the right thing at the right time and in the right way, therefore he is popular. At the end of the editor's address Mr. Power introduced Mr. Hilles, the inventor, not of motion, but moving pictures in 1870. Mr. Hilles gave us a short but very interesting talk on the methods employed to produce the effect of moving pictures in those days. J. H. Hallberg then followed with a short talk which was well received.

Banquet in Hoboken.

Some time ago, following out the plans already formed, I communicated with the Hudson County Local Union No. 384 and was promptly informed that arrangements would be made as soon as possible. I did not at that time, however, except that the aforesaid arrangements would be so elaborate, though I have always known Local 384, and its president, Brother Ira G. Sherman, to be the liveliest kind of his wires.

The affair turned out to be a banquet, held in Hoboken at midnight May 6th. At the guest table were I. G. Sherman, toastmaster, Nicholas Power, who needs no introduction, W. Stephen Bush of The Moving Picture World, Robert J. Emory, manufacturer of the Baird projector, Edward Earl, treasurer of the Nicholas Power Company, J. H. Hallberg, the economist man (that was the way it appeared on the menu, but he was introduced as the Swedish Electrical Engineer), F. H. Richardson, editor projection department of The Moving Picture World, William C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, Mr. Wrede, superintendent repair department of the Nicholas Power Company, and H. B. Coles, president, Coles Motion Picture Company.

And now let me tell you how Local 384 does things. Each member of the local, in addition to paying for his own plate, paid for a plate for his manager. Oh, yes, of course, this costs money, but it was worth money. You cannot get good results cheaply. A few dollars expended this way is apt to have considerable more effect, and better effect, than an equal amount spent on a strike.

Dr. H. Charles Hespe, president, and John E. Moody, vice-president, of the Moving Picture Exhibitors League of Hudson County, were present. In speaking Dr. Hespe said, in part: "In the early days of organization, when I was approached and asked that my operator join the local I was distinctly opposed to any such action on his part, because I did not believe the men were of the type which would render such action on their part anything else than a breeder of trouble. I must say, however, that I am more agreeably surprised, and I am very glad indeed that I have attended this gathering, because in looking at the men before me I see that I was in error in this matter." (I don't pretend that this is a literal quoting of the Doctor's word, but it contains the meaning all right.)

The banquet was held in a high class, beautiful cafe. The democratic nominee for governor of New Jersey was to have been present, but sent his private secretary with regrets. The aforesaid secretary made a short well received talk. Our old friend, Nicholas Power, was called upon and gave a brief entertaining history of the early days of operating. He was introduced as the oldest moving picture machine operator, and addressed the gathering as "brothers and fellow operators," winding up his speech by presenting to President I. G. Sherman, on behalf of Local 384, a beautiful silver loving cup.

Messrs Earl, Stephen Bush, Emory, Hallberg, Smith and Wrede, spoke briefly, and the editor wound up the proceedings with a talk on projection, illustrated by drawings and photographs, which lasted until 4 a. m.

I was rather proud of one thing though. Naturally, the hour being so late, I had to curtail my address to some extent, and said so. After it was all over several of the exhibitors and some of the operators remarked to me that they would have been very glad, late (or rather early) as it was, to have listened for another hour, and certainly the lecture must be interesting when they were willing to do that at 4 a. m.

LOVING CUP.

Presented to Ira G. Sherman, President of Local Union No. 384.

Banquet of Hudson County Local Union 384.

1. Edward Earl, treasurer Nicholas Power Company. 2. W. Stephen Bush, Moving Picture World. 3. Nicholas Power. 4. I. G. Sherman, president Local Union 384. 5. F. H. Richardson, editor Projection Department Moving Picture World. 6. J. H. Hallberg, supply dealer and manufacturer. 7. H. B. Coles, president Coles Motion Picture Corporation. 8. Robert Emory, president Baird Motion Picture Machine Company. 9. William C. Smith, assistant general manager Nicholas Power Company. 10. Mr. Wrede, superintendent Repair Department Nicholas Power Company. 11. Dr. H. C. Hespe, president Moving Picture Exhibitors League of Hudson County.

New York Projection.

John Simons, Wellville, Pa., writes:

Am going to be in New York before long. Can you tell me where I will see the best projection?

That is rather a big order. There are about six hundred moving pictures theaters in Greater New York, and of course I do not see by any means all of them. So far as my personal knowledge goes, however, the best projection, everything considered, is at the Strand, Broadway and 14th street. The Strand Theater in Brooklyn. The Strand projection is excellent, since the speed, to which I formally took strenuous objection, has been reduced. Manager Rolfe is a man who believes not only in properly staging the picture, but in projecting it in the best possible way.

Over in the Triangle Theater, Flatbush avenue and Fulton street, I have sat through many performances and have never seen a single thing to criticize except the item of speed. They do, as a general proposition, run 'em a little too fast, though I have succeeded in getting the speed materially reduced. There may be places in the city where the projection is better than at the Strand or Triangle, but if so I do not at this time know where they are.

He Disagrees.

H. G. Crose, Gary, Ind., says,

I have read your statements in issue of April 8th on the fusing of rectifier circuits in answer to your question No. 124 with much interest, and would like to disagree with you on one point. For some time I have noticed when fusing a rectifier circuit on a 110 volt circuit, if fuses of the same amperage be used on both the A. C. and the D. C. sides the ones on the A. C. side will, most likely, blow first. I have noticed this in three different operating rooms where the voltage was in perfect condition. I am not taking from 40 to 45 amperes from the D. C. side of a rectifier and have blown 75 ampere fuses on the A. C. side when there were four 60 ampere fuses (one on each side of the line in two different places) on the D. C. side of the circuit. I believe this to be due to wattless current surging on the A. C. side which, of course, does not exist on the D. C. side, and which, while it does not register on the wattmeter must be taken into account in fusing the A. C. side, and in figuring wire sizes. This condition exists with motor generator sets and with rotary converters to a certain extent also. I have never had an opportunity to measure the power factor, or the instruments with which to compute it, but it seems to me a logical explanation of the case, and I think of no other reason for the condition. Even though the rectifier had the factor the ratio of transformation is not sufficient to allow an A. C. fuse of half the amperage of the D. C. fuse. A 40 ampere D. C. arc would require a pressure of about 55 volts, and as the resistance of the tube must be overcome in the secondary circuits, the pressure necessary to do this (40 volts) must be added to the arc voltage and numerous other losses then would make the A. C. amperage considerably more than half the D. C. amperage. As a matter of fact, however, considerable of the excessive voltage is overcome by reactance instead of being transformed. This giving the ball weight to the reactance, that is, preventing excessive current when the carbons are brought together and making the arc handle easier by keeping the amperage nearer constant with different distances between carbons. This reactance produces the before named condition, wattless current. The amount of wattless current depending to a certain extent upon the amount of regulating reactance in circuit. If the rectifier is operated on 220 volts, then, of course, there is more transformation.

You also stated that the resistance of the tube was constant. I have seen it written by unquestionable authority on the subject that the drop in the tube is constant under all voltages and amperages. It should be so as far as the voltage is concerned, but the latter part does not seem to conform to ohms law. The explanation is that the conductivity of the mercury vapor increases, or the resistance of the tube decreases, in the amperage. There are electro-chemical theories explaining this which are, however, of little interest to most operators.

By decreasing the D. C. voltage of the rectifier, the drop in the tube may be made practically nothing as compared to the voltage delivered, and the rectifier may be made to have practically the same efficiency as the auto transformer, which may be quite high, and it is on such circuits (high voltage and comparatively low amperage, like a number of street arc circuits in series) that the tube may be made to be saved. It effects a considerable saving in percentage over motor generator sets and converters (even if they could communicate the voltage required), but they also affect this saving over such a large amount of power that when a tube burns out it could be replaced many times over before still money could be saved.

In motion picture work, however, the drop in the tube is such a large part of the D. C. voltage that it cannot effect any large saving over a motor generator, and has the objection of the undesirable tube besides.

To me, the easiest way of remembering the construction and operation of a rectifier is to remember it as an auto transformer with a regulating choke coil, or reactance in the primary circuit, and with two secondary circuits, the current flowing in one of the secondary circuits through one-half of the tube, and the arc on one-half pole, and through the other secondary, the other half of the tube, and the arc on the other one-half cycle; each cycle overlapping the other, because of the reactance, so that the mercury vapor does not condense. Bearing in mind, of course, that in an auto transformer part of the secondary current is received by direct electrical connection with the primary and part being induced by the agency of magnetic flux.

If the tube of a rectifier flashes and goes out, the operator should be sure it is a burned-out reactance before connecting up his reactance to operate it as a choke coil in A. C. on the reactance burnt out the tube will flash very brightly on one-half cycle and go out, due to lack of reactance to maintain the mercury in vapor form through the zero voltage period.

A simple and effective way to locate an open circuit when the rectifier fails to start, or the tube fails to start, is to shunt the starting circuit with a test lamp and shake the tube by hand. If the rectifier then starts, the fault lies in the starting circuit, and it may be located and repaired at leisure. If it fails to start, then the fault lies in the D. C. side, provided, of course, there is voltage on the A. C. side.

After cogitating on this matter for some time, I finally sent Friend Crose's letter to the General Electric Company, Schenectady, with request for their opinion. In due time came the following reply:

Replying to your letter of April 11, attaching a copy of letter from an operator at Gary, Ind., would say that there is no reason why the Gary operator would have trouble by blowing 75 ampere fuses on the A. C. side of the rectifier which is delivering 40 to 45 amperes D. C., unless it is due entirely to the fact that he is feeding the carbons so rapidly as to blow more than 45 amperes from the rectifier. Don't think he should blow 75 ampere primary fuses even though carbons be frozen.—Ed.) Our tests show that a rectifier when operated from 110 volts, 60 cycles, delivering 40 amperes at 50 volts, will have a power factor of about 77 per cent; and, figuring efficiency on the basis of 55 per cent, this would show that about 30 amperes A. C. drawn by the rectifier when the line voltage is 110. The operator's argument regarding wattless current is taken care of when you consider the power factor of the outfit involved.

The following formula will serve in computing A. C. current:

$$\text{AC. line current} = \frac{\text{DC. amps.} \times \text{DC. volts}}{\text{E.F.} \times \text{P.F.} \times \text{A.C. voltage.}}$$

For example, the figures above, note that the

$$\text{AC. line current} = \frac{65\% \text{ E.F.} \times 77\% \text{ P.F.} \times 110 \text{ A.C. V.}}{40 \times 50} = 38.3 \text{ A.}$$

As stated above, the blowing of the fuse may have been due to holding the carbons together too long. When carbons are held together the A. C. current is increased considerably as compared to the D. C. output. This is due to the fact that the efficiency of the outfit falls off as well as the lowering of the power factor, which means the increasing of the wattless current.

I do not know where the operator gets the information that we claim that the A. C. current is only one-half of the D. C. current. This is not a claim made by the General Electric Company, because the input current of the rectifier does not bear any definite relation to the D. C. current; it depends on the D. C. output of the rectifier and also on the A. C. line voltage.

If the statement has been made that the resistance of the tube is constant, this should be corrected. Since, within certain ranges, the resistance of the tube varies inversely with the current flowing; that is to say, the drop across the arc remains constant for any current within the working range of the rectifier tube. It would be almost an impossibility to reduce the drop of the rectifier tube as suggested by the operator from Gary. The actual drop of the rectifier tube is due to the resistance of the spot of contact of the cathode and the resistance of the spot of contact of the anode, and not so much to the length of the arc or conducting vapor, which same holds true within the working range for which the rectifier is designed. If, however, the current was increased considerably, so that the density of the ionized vapor be increased beyond the limit for which the tube is designed, then the drop across the arc (tube, you mean, don't you? Ed.) would become appreciable.

The operator's statement regarding the rectifier when used on series street lighting is correct. The drop in the rectifier tube is proportionally so small as compared to the D. C. output, that the loss in the tube would reduce the efficiency of the system, as a whole, very little, but it must be understood that for low voltage work, such as that required for moving picture machines, the drop in the rectifier tube is appreciable, and the efficiency of the outfit is much lower, the exact percentage depending on the D. C. voltage at which it is operated. Some operators operate as low as 45 volts, while others operate as high as 60 volts D. C. The rectifier efficiency is, however, considerably better than that of the motor-generator set, because, while the motor-generator set with this capacity will have an efficiency of about 85 per cent, when run at full load, and as it also requires resistance, the loss of this resistance should be taken into consideration in comparing the efficiency of the two outfits.

I find myself unable to agree with either Brother Crose or the General Electric so far as the blowing of the 75 ampere fuses be concerned. Even with the resistance of the arc entirely eliminated, and the operator taking care of the carbons taken care of, it seems to me there would not be 75 amperes at least an 80 ampere flow would have to be maintained for a period of one minute or more.

I am wondering if it does not happen that Friend Crose's A. C. fuses are located in a very warm place, whereas the D. C. fuses are located in a comparatively cool place. This would make a lot of difference, and might explain the whole business. I would like to hear from operators, who are running rectifiers, and who have same fused on both A. C. and D. C., as to their experience.

Lens Combination.

I. F. Taylor, Newberry, S. C., says:

Have a 1.5 inch diameter objective. When the picture is in focus on the screen the distance from the aperture to the back surface of the lens is 3.5 inches. Will you kindly advise what combination of condensers are needed, and what distance to place them from the aperture? At present I am using a $6\frac{1}{2}$ - $7\frac{1}{2}$ condenser combination, with 18 inches from the aperture to the front condenser. I am afraid, however, I am losing light in the objective. Have been using National carbons, pulling 60 amperes, 65 volt A. C. through a Port Wayne compensator. Recently bought a new supply of carbons, and find they are not marked as Nationals have been in the past. In fact there is no mark on them at all. They give a good light, in fact better than the other carbons did, but they have one fault for which I cannot account, viz.: there is a small flame which periodically runs around the carbons just once. In other respects they are fine, and produce a brilliant white light.

Then to Table 1, page 141 of the Handbook, and look down the left hand column until you come to $1\frac{1}{2}$, the diameter of your objective; then following over to the right we do not find 3.5, or anything near to it; in fact we have to go down two horizontal columns in order to get 3.53 in the second column from the right, and 3.58 in the right hand column, opposite which, in the left hand column, we find $1\frac{1}{2}$. Even if you can get 21 inches between the apex of the front lens and the film you would have to have a lens $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter in order to avoid light loss. If, however, you have a machine with which you can only get 18 inches between the apex of the front condenser and the film, then you would have to have a lens 1.25-1.6 inches in diameter, using one $6\frac{1}{2}$ and one $7\frac{1}{2}$ condenser spaced so that their apices are not more than 1-32 of an inch apart. This whole matter, Brother Taylor, hinges on your understanding how to use Table 1, page 141 of the Handbook. If you can only get 16 inches between the apex of the front lens and the film, then following down the column under 16 until you come to 3.580, which is practically $3\frac{1}{2}$, and then running out to the left hand column you see that your objective would have to be 1 15-16 inches in diameter in order to avoid light loss.

Those asking questions of this kind will do well to advise me as to the extreme distance it is possible to get with their machine between the apex of the front lens and the film. Without this piece of information I am hampered in my reply, but owners of the Handbook will be able to match up their own optical apertures by means of Table 1, page 141, without asking any questions of any one.

As to the carbon fault, why I smiled at your description: "The flame runs around the carbon just once." The only reason I could advance for that is it wants to see if the back door is closed. Seriously, however, Brother Taylor, you will have to go into a detailed description before I could think of even attempting to diagnose the flame case. Presumably you mean that your arc is operating at 65 volts.

Closing the Books.

The editor is in receipt of complaints from a great many operators who have attempted to join the union, only to find the books closed. Now it seems to me that, granting the proposition that it may in some instances be not only advisable but necessary to "close the books" and refuse more members, still here is a thing which can be very easily overdone. The privilege of "closing the books" is one which is highly susceptible of abuse, nor can any union possibly justify the closing of its books unless it is in position to supply a thoroughly competent man for every job within its jurisdiction. I take the position that it is up to the union, because I do recognize the fact that legitimate arguments can be advanced both for and against the practice; also I am willing to concede the proposition that it is highly inadvisable to take in new members in a town or a city where there are already sufficient COMPETENT operators to meet the requirements. The privilege of "closing the books" is one upon the word competent, and of my own knowledge books have been closed in some cities when there was not one really competent operator to every five jobs. In my humble opinion the closing of books under these conditions cannot be, by the wildest stretch of imagination, justified.

It is a pretty tough proposition to keep a competent man out, in favor of an incompetent, and, mind you, competency means something more than mere ability to project a reasonably good picture. I take the position that it is up to the union to see that its members DO project that kind of picture. In other words I believe, as I have always believed, that it is a part of the duty of the union to check up the work of its members, and penalize those who fail to deliver the best screen result possible under the conditions the man works under.

I do not wish to go into this matter any further at this time. In fact I did not want to mention it at all, but feel that it is the duty of this department to warn operators that the wholesale closing of union books might easily breed a condition which would be intolerable. I see the matter now, the real solution of the proposition is an extended term of apprenticeship, and I believe there is no one thing will more thoroughly justify active work on the part of operators' organizations than the endeavor to force an adequate operators' apprenticeship, and I for one am going to quit talking one year and make it two in future. TWO YEARS APPRENTICESHIP IS LITTLE ENOUGH TIME FOR A MAN TO BECOME A THOROUGHLY COMPETENT MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATOR.

Mr. Dirt in the Aperture.

Raymond Brown, St. Louis, Mo., writes:

I guess you think St. Louis is rather slow, as I have seen nothing in the department from our city, though I have been reading the same for quite some time. Well, I am going to start them going, or at least try to do so by sending a description of a little device for removing Mr. Dirt from the aperture. This is designed specially for Power's projectors, but will work on any make of machine. I know there are many operators who don't mind dirt on the aperture, but this device is intended for particular men who don't care to have their picture framed with brickbats. The illustration will show how it works, and the whole thing costs but a few cents.

A is the front plate of the machine; B the lens jacket; C the slip tube or lens; D a small brass tube which is tapped at the end so as to accommodate two nuts, fitted one on either side of plate A to hold the tube in position. E is a small spray which may be obtained from any ten-cent store. It is attached to the end of tube D, and is bent to strike the aperture at an angle. F is an ordinary camera bulb, attached to the outside of tube D. Squeeze the bulb and bluey! away flies Brother Dirt.

As I understand this device the tube is designed to run along the side of the lens barrel and set back a little distance from the aperture, so that the air blast will strike the whole aperture and clean all sides of it.

I would suggest, however, that whereas this scheme ought to be practical, and while we appreciate Brother Brown's good intent in sending it in, the plan adopted by operators in large New York theaters is even better. They get a glass tube, similar to a medicine dropper, only larger and longer, and affix thereto a small bicycle or automobile horn bulb. This instrument is inserted either in an opening specially made in the casing of the machine or, in the case of the Power's Six, elsewhere, and you can take it from me that it is a pretty tough piece of dirt that will stand the resultant blast.

If any considerable number of operators would like to get a glass tube of this kind I will see what I can supply them to you for—without any profit of course.

The advantage of the glass is that if you happen to get it in the light ray it does not show appreciably on the screen.

The Making of a Direct Positive.

The production of a positive image instead of the usual negative on the moving picture film has been the subject of considerable investigation by photographers and chemists.

Various formulas have been tried with greater or less success, but the use of Thiocarbamide (Sulphururea, Thiourea), has probably been used less than any of the others.

The Editor has conducted some experiments along these lines and with the co-operation of Mr. Samuel Wein, Photo-Chemist has been able to make an exceedingly good positive direct.

The literature on this subject is not extensive as all investigators did not publish or speak of their results. However, Col. Waterhouse (Eder: Jahrbuch für Photo. Volume 16, page 170; 1892), first described the use of thiocarbamide (sulphururea, thiourea), and having its chemical formula as follows C. S. (NH₂). His work seems to have attracted little attention, however, and apparently the results obtained with thiocarbamide by others (Nipher; Trans- and Science, St. Louis Volume 10 page 210, 1900 quoted in Journal Physical Chemistry, Volume 13, page 237; 1909), were unsatisfactory.

The formula Col. Waterhouse made use of was:

Lithium carbonate	50 grs.
Sodium sulphite	50 grs.
Eikonogen	50 grs.
Thiocarbamide (saturated solution) few drops water	10 ozs.

Develop the film in the usual manner and fix.

Recent Perley (Joual Physical Chemistry Volume 13, page 649, 1909), has worked with thiocarbamide and has had better results with a hydroquinone developer instead of eikonogen as suggested by Col. Waterhouse. Herewith is the formula Perley used.

A.
Water	1000 grs.
Sodium Sulphite	126 "
Hydroquinone	21 "
B.
Water	1000 grs.
Sodium carbonate	126 "

Add 20 c. c. of a thiocarbamide solution to 25 c. c. of solution A and 25 c. c. to solution B.

All of Perley's work was done on lantern slides which are quite different from moving picture films, the writer having had the occasion to do some experimental research work along this line has concluded that his formula was unsatisfactory for the results were seldom successful and then only to a limited extent.

The predominant factors in the use of thiourea is the following:

1. The brand of film used.
2. The proportion of thiourea or its salts.
3. Developing agent.
4. Proportions of alkali.
5. Proportions of restrainer.
6. Character of thiourea salt used.
7. Temperature of solution.

Satisfactory positives were obtained with an adurol developer, containing a rather large amount of alkali, but with amidol the results were unsatisfactory. The effect of metal is very peculiar. A small amount of it added to the regular hydroquinone developer increases very much the density of the negative image. Hybrids generally result, although by decreasing the exposure very much and developing for a short time, some rather poor positives could be obtained.

The tetra-thiourea, ammonium bromide recommended by Col. Waterhouse, but apparently not tried by Perley or other investigators, was very much superior to the simple thiourea, giving clearer and better positives. The following is the formula made use of:

A.
Water	6% ozs.
Sodium Sulphite	390 grs.
B.
Water	6% ozs.
Sodium carbonate	830 grs.

C.
Water	34 ozs.
Tetra-thiourea-ammonium chloride	15 grs.

For use take one part A, one part B and two parts C.

With the exception of the temperature, the development is the same for negatives. The temperature is absolutely essential to the successful working of the process. The limits are between 15 degrees and 18 degrees centigrade or 59 degrees and 64 degrees, Fahr; and they must be strictly adhered to.

The negative appears and then the film apparently fogs, and is then exposed to a diffused light, and then replaced in the developer, after three or four minutes the positive image is clearly seen.

The corresponding chloride salt, however, appears to be better still, and works without a restrainer (bromide). The iodide was not satisfactory. All these salts were prepared according to the directions of Reynolds (Journal Chemical Soc. Volume 30, page 384, 1891).

Has Static and Other Well Known Troubles.

L. C., Nashville, Tenn., writes:

I am doing considerable amateur work in moving picture photography, but lately have had some difficulties to overcome about which I wish you would give me some advice. I am using an old model Prestwitt Camera in which the velvet track has been replaced by a metal one. The magazines are wood and also old.

I have had considerable static trouble, and as an experiment took the film in the camera into the dark room and gave the camera a hundred or so rapid turns but was unable to see any static in the camera. Then I developed a strip of unexposed film and found static present before the exposure was made. This form of static appears principally at regular intervals along the perforations. Was it caused by the perforating machine?

I also find my film slightly fogged along the edge. Is this due to leaky magazines, if so can I purchase aluminum or other metal ones and how expensive are they?

I project my own pictures in a local theater and find quite some up and down motion on the screen. What causes the vibration?

How expensive are Carl Zeiss F. 3.5-50 mm. lenses? Where is the best market for news pictures if I take any and how much do the News Companies pay?

If you will favor me with these answers I shall be very grateful to you.

The static trouble that you are experiencing undoubtedly comes from the perforating machine, unfortunately the manufacturers of film do not guarantee stock against static. The fog on the edge of the film is caused by a light leak in the magazines and if you will cover up any cracks with lantern slide binding or the ordinary paste putout tape this leak may be stopped.

Metal Magazines for the Prestwitt Camera can be obtained at a cost of about $12.00 each. They are superior to the wooden ones as they will not warp or crack.

The vibration of the pictures on the screen is of course magnified many times and probably is caused by the tilt or panorama being loose. If you will tighten up these too wherever possible, the vibration should be lessened.

Carl Zeiss lens are not obtainable except at a premium due to the present European War. The prices range from $10.00 to $100.00 for the 50 mm. F. 3.5.

The best information regarding news pictures was given in a recent issue under the title "Hints to Newsfilm Cameramen."

The price paid for good negative which is accepted ranges from 60 cents to $1.00 per foot.

Correspondence Club.

Leonard A. Bayer, 1435 Avenue "A," New York, writes:

Kindly add my name to this Correspondence Club that you mention in your column. Also please be so kind and send the full particulars pertaining to the principles of this club.

I am very glad, indeed, to note that each day or two brings a new member to this correspondence club. The object of this club is merely to develop the interest in Motion Picture Photography among photographers who are situated all over the country.

By correspondence you can take up with any of the men whose names we have published from time to time, any question or matters that you believe would later correspond to them. For instance, if you have been particularly successful in making a certain class of pictures, such as out-door work, or if you have lent your energies toward photographing microscopical subjects, either of these things will interest other members of this club.

If you write them, perhaps in return they would tell you of some interesting experience that they have had.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Musical Setting for "Fate's Boomerang"

Released May 29 by the World Film Corporation.

Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg.

By special arrangement with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsal, but by assisting materially in overcoming those difficulties encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local agents in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 61½ T "Two days later" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 63½ D "When Rick takes drink" is a description of action. George Castleman, engineer, is given charge of a railroad construction camp in the mountains of North Carolina. His wife Mildred, a society butterfly, refuses to leave New York, but remains in town, carrying on a flirtation with Arnold Morgan, a wealthy society man. In the mountains George meets and falls in love with Zell, a mountain girl. After a time Mildred wants a divorce and seeks evidence against her husband. She arrives at the camp and hires a rig to carry her to Zell's cabin. The driver, intoxicated, loses control of the horse and an accident ensues in which Mildred is killed. Zell and George are then united.

Care must be taken in scenes of dancing from 21½ to 46½. They are mostly flashes only and music suggested must be stopped by the orchestra and piano only continued. Note particularly: Agitato as suggested. Shot and Explosion, 34½; Auto effects, 38½; Train effects, 61½.

The THEME selected is "My Memory Maid"—Hintze. Time schedule: 67½ minutes (five reels—4,500 feet).

Time. Sub-titles or descriptive cues.

Musical Publications and Their Adaptability to the Screen.

Reviewed by S. M. Berg.

IN ARCADY. NEVIN. BOSTON MUSIC. 1. A Shepherd's Tale. Characteristic 2-4 allegretto semplice. Melody for flute, strings and oboe.

2. Shepherds Fair and Maidens Fair. Allegro con moto, glooso in 4. 3. Lullaby. Andante semplice. Melody for cello and strings.

4. Tournament. Allegro energico a la polonaise. Although published in 1913 it is so appropriate for motion pictures that leaders will find this suite a valuable acquisition. It is sufficient to say that Ethelbert Nevin composed it and that Hugo Rosenfeld is responsible for the very excellent orchestration.

LONGING. PIETRO FLORIDA. SCHIRMER. A pleasing Intermezzo in 2-4 andantino grazioso. Arranged for orchestra by Otto Laney.

INTERNEZZO. ARENSKY. SCHIRMER. This composition will admirably depict impending disaster, allegro action or chasing. Tempo 2-4 presto and prestissimo. Arranged for orchestra by Ross Jungnickel.

YESTER-LOVE. BORCH. SCHIRMER. As the name implies, Yester-Love is an Intermezzo. An original composition arranged by the composer. Well suited for a theme or semi-pathetic situations.

SONGS FROM SHAKESPEARE'S TIME. SCHIRMER.

This is a necessary requirement of the theater orchestra. It is suited to be used at English educational, scenic weekly or light drama. Songs are transcribed and arranged by Gaston Borch and include "The British Grenadiers," "The Hunt is Up," "Come again sweet Love," "Gentlemen of England" and "The Knouting Song" (SCOTCH POEM). MacDOWELL's "Schottisches Gedicht" (Scotch Poem) by Ross Jungnickel will be found to be one of the most effective pieces of storm music published. It has been carefully edited and extended and is easily repeated without modulations. No picture player can be without this publication.

NIK-O-DE-MUS. RICHARDSON. SNYDER. Don Richardson has given another of those melodious 2-4 numbers well suited for Western, comedy or allegro action.

INCIDENTAL AND DRAMATIC MUSIC. MIDDLETON. HAWKES.

No picture player can have too many incidental and dramatic collections. This set, published by that well-known English house, contains 36 numbers including allegros, agitos, marches, storms, burglary scenes, fogs and reels, death-bed scenes, comedy action, etc.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. ROSS. HAWKES.

INCIDENTAL MUSIC.

1. Prelude in 4, moderato. After introduction a cantabile movement for cello and bassoon with strings and harp accompaniment.

2. Intermezzo "Portia." Lento. Melody carried by wood-winds and strings.

3. Oriental march, tempo di marcia, poco a poco crescendo, later marcato closing maestoso.

4. Prelude, espressivo lento, later andante pathetico.

5. Duke's March. An excellent maestoso pageant march.

This suite within a very few months will be in every musician's library in the country. Nothing published is more appropriate for picture work than these very excellent compositions. They were originally written for the Shakespearian production of "The Merchant of Venice" as produced by Arthur Boucher at the Garrick theater, London, England.

SACHEN. ROSEY. ROSEY.

An Indian Intermezzo in allegro 2-4 well suited for light Indian drama or bright Oriental scenes. A valuable addition to the picture library.

SESAME. KING. FEIST.
This is described by the composer as an intermezzo Arabian. The tempo is allegro moderato and it can well be described as a neutral Oriental. So little of this material is available that it will be welcomed.

Preparedness.

From California to Maine and from New Orleans to Lake Michigan, the main topic of conversation is Preparedness. It matters not what a man's calling is, or by what means he is obtaining his livelihood, Preparedness arises in his conversation. In New York City on May 13th a continuous stream of human beings heralded with hands and carrying the Stars and Stripes marched up Fifth Avenue in an effort to convince the slackers that they were ready and willing to defend their country's honor when called upon.

These few words are published under a musical column so it is fitting that we deal with the word Preparedness from the musician's point of view, especially in the service of musical interpretation for the film. Preparedness means a preparing or fitting, to make ready, to qualify or to provide.

How many of those musicians who are expressing opinions today on Preparedness from a national standpoint are equipped to provide a musical interpretation for a picture on a moment's notice? How many are there who have their libraries classified so that whatever character of music is needed they can lay their hands on it? How many have a library which contains the national characteristics such as English, French, German, Russian, Chinese, Indian, etc.? How many have a collection of what might be termed the standard classics? Unfortunately the greater number of musicians that are earning their living by playing the picture are totally unprepared for their positions. They give no thought to the problems which they may be called upon to solve, and no preparation is made by them to provide themselves with material.

A few days ago a leader of a suburban vaudeville and picture house called on me. He said the management intended to discontinue vaudeville for the summer and were to run pictures only. He explained to me that he really needed a large library for this purpose and sought my advice. Immediately upon my asking a few questions I discovered he had no library as he had never bothered to play the pictures up to the present. His chief duty was to play the vaudeville while during the pictures he simply ran through some popular numbers and then left the pianist to improvise. I learned that he was being drawn the Union scale for leaders which I believe is $10 a week, and pointed out that from such a salary he could well afford to spend a small sum for music every week. However, his concluding remark was "I've got enough to do with my money. I don't intend to buy music every week." Of course this appears to be an extreme case but it never-the-less is a true one.

A leader in a motion picture theater must possess a large library. He should be thoroughly acquainted with every composition and understand its interpretation and the character of action it will depict. His music should be classified so that whenever he needs a particular piece he can lay his hands on it immediately. Thus musicians who desire to become leaders and secure a large share of this world's goods must assiduously apply the meaning of Preparedness as an individual. The old saying tells that charity begins at home. By the same thought Preparedness begins at home also, for you must be fitted and equipped to carry out the work you contract.

Opera Performance Nets $9,000

Actors' Fund Benefits by Entertainment at the Metropolitan —Rialto Week Next.

THE grand tribute performance of the motion picture campaign for the Actors' Fund, held on the afternoon of May 9 at the Metropolitan Opera House, was a huge success. It was the finest performance of its kind ever held anywhere and added substantially to the glory and the treasury of the great humanitarian undertaking of the heads of the film industry. Monday was National Motion Picture Tribute Day and was loyally observed in every state in the Union. The next event of importance in the canvass for the $500,000 endowment of the Actors' Fund will be another affair of large intentions. It will comprise an entire "Actors' Fund Week" at the Rialto theater with elaborate special features, 25 per cent. of the proceeds to be donated to the campaign.

The mammoth metropolitan tribute netted $9,000 for the cause. Every seat in the vast house was occupied and many people stood at the rails in the orchestra and balconies. The great crowd was treated to a most exceptional program. Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the National Executive Committee of the Campaign, and Daniel Frohman, president of the Actors' Fund, who arranged the affair, covered themselves with glory.

The offerings ranged from Puccini to Berlin in the music and from Bernard Granville to Edna May in the specialties. Geraldine Farrar was the principal attraction and never appeared to better advantage. She sang in excellent voice and was given a most enthusiastic reception. After singing the second act of "Madame Butterfly," assisted by Antonio Scotti, Rita Fornia, Angelo Bada and Pietro Audisio, Miss Farrar appeared once more at the end of the program when Mr. Granville sang a song written especially for the occasion by Irving Berlin and dedicated to her. George Polacco, with the full Metropolitan Orchestra, accompanied all the operatic selections.

The event at the Rialto will last for five days commencing June 5. It had been originally announced that this series of special performances would start on May 22, but S. L. Rothapel, director of the house, found that he had not sufficient time in which to prepare the Tribute on the scale he wished. The first two days will be Motion Picture Days, with appearances of the most prominent screen favorites in costumes of roles in which they are best known. Wednesday will be devoted to the appearance of leading actors and actresses of the stage. Thursday will be Musical Day, and Friday will be Allied Arts of the Theater Day.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of May 21 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs" at the Strand.

DURING the week beginning May 21st the Strand Theater presented Mae Murray in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," a photoplay produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in association with David Belasco. The film drama is from the play of the same name written by David Belasco and Egerton Castle and presented by Mr. Belasco in New York some time ago.

Mae Murray, one of the newest recruits to the screen, in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" finds a part well suited to her beauty and winsomeness. The play is a romance of the days of powdered wigs, courtly gallants, fair ladies and swords quickly drawn. The action occurs in Bath, England, the famous watering place, the latter part of the eighteenth century. The meticulous care given to Belasco stage productions has been employed in the direction of the film version.

Rube Goldberg's "The Boob Weekly," a scenic and a cartoon comedy, were also on the program.

"Going Straight" at the Rialto.

The Rialto offered a double bill during the week—Norma Talmadge and the "Fine Arts Kiddies" in a Triangle photoplay offering "Going Straight," and Charlie Chaplin in his last Essanay production, "Police."

"Going Straight," the vehicle in which Norma Talmadge is seen, is a five-reel drama by Bernard McConville and has for its foundation the difficulties that beset the reformed crook endeavoring to "go straight." It is a tale of action and dramatic suspense, with just a touch of pathos and heart interest, aroused by the children. By a strange coincidence Chaplin's comedy, "Police," is the direct antithesis—almost a burlesque on the same story.

"In the Land of the Midnight Sun" and "Spain" and a musical program were included in the entertainment.

"Pasquale" at the Broadway.

The attraction at the Broadway theater was the latest Morosco-Paramount photoplay, "Pasquale," with George Beban and Myrtle Stedman in the leading roles. Mr. Beban plays the part of Pasquale. The story is a deft blending of laughter and tears, several of the scenes being laid on the Italian-Austrian battle front. The Broadway Weekly, colored scenics, short comedies and cartoons rounded out the bill.

W. J. GILMORE WITH MELIES.

W. J. Gilmore, former manager of the 23rd street branch of the General Film Company, has been appointed eastern representative of Melies Manufacturing Company and will make a tour of the eastern states in behalf of Knickerbocker Star Features and Vim comedies. Mr. Gilmore left New York on Friday, carrying with him sample prints of several forthcoming productions. He is one of the most popular men in the film industry and has a high reputation as a judge of a picture's merits.

Mr. Gilmore's experience in film marketing extends over fourteen years. Graduating into the General Film Company from successful management of a chain of theaters, he entered the Twenty-third street branch and worked his way up until he became assistant manager. His assumption of the management of the branch was marked by a large increase in the volume of business done. He confesses that he has always leaned toward the representation of some brand to which he can devote all his energies.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

The Laugh Is On Louis Mann.

SOME time ago, in an address before the Altoona, Pa., Chamber of Commerce, Louis Mann was credited by the press with the following statement: "Over every moving picture house I would place the sign, 'The home of non-intellectuals!'"

We are indebted to Mr. Mann, because he has made the world laugh by his inimitable stage impersonations. In this instance he evokes another laugh, but the laugh is on himself.

Do I recollect aright? Did not Louis Mann and his amiable and talented wife, Clara Lipman, make an essay in feature pictures, a little over three years ago? Were not the productions made in New York? Did they not turn out to be a fizzle, financially, because the camera did not take kindly to Mr. Mann, and because Mr. Mann on the screen failed to make the appeal that he did on the stage?

That was not Mr. Mann's fault; it was his misfortune. But why blame the innocent moving picture for it?

Tut! Tut! Tut! Mr. Mann. Just as many (and then as many times more) intellectuals go to the moving picture houses as flocked to see you on your successful tours. Don't take any man's word for it. Attend the moving picture houses and prove it for yourself.

A Storm Raised by Illinois Vice Film.

"The Little Girl Next Door" (the Illinois vice film), which is now showing at the La Salle theater, this city, is raising a big storm among the reform forces.

The City Council Committee on Judiciary is at the point (at the time of writing) of recommending an order directing Chief of Police Healey to revoke the permit for the subject, for the reason that it is improper. It is well understood, however, that the Chief need not follow the order.

The reform forces are urging the committee to go ahead. A letter from Samuel P. Thrasher, superintendent of the Committee of Fifteen, which denounces the vice film, will be read before the committee. In this letter Mr. Thrasher says, in part:

"Why the law which applies to obscene books and pictures should not apply to a motion picture like this one I cannot comprehend.

"No one can view even the expurgated edition of this noxious effusion without being convinced that the intent and matter therein displayed could not be reduced to print without making the book so lewd, lascivious and obscene as to compel its exclusion from the United States mails and render its publishers liable to prosecution.

"I think the film should never have been released to the public. Now that it has been, it should be more thoroughly revised, by the elimination of additional features, or its exhibition prohibited."

Thomas Santschi a Victim of the Muse.

Thomas Santschi, Selig's well-known leading man, who was on here for several months past with "The Crisis" company, made a host of friends during his stay.

Tom is a great, gentle giant of a man in his normal moods; but—as his McNamara in "The Spoilers" shows—a fighting demon when he has his back to the wall. He has the part of Stephen Brice in "The Crisis," a character that should also fit him well.

To look at him one might be impressed that Mr. Santschi would be about the last man on earth to dabble in poetry; but he has done it, although he stoutly disclaims that it is poetry.

Out at Camp Nobles, Catalina Island, with Jack Prescott and a chum from Harvard as companions, one evening, several months ago, the crime was committed. The bracing air, aided by equally bracing libations and the picturesque beauty of the scene, inspired the trio.

"Let's sing a song of the weed," suggested Tom Santschi. "And another of the rose," said Jack Prescott.

And that was the origin of "The Weed and the Rose," which Tom Santschi finally evolved, as given here:

THE WEED AND THE ROSE.

A little weed grow at the foot of a rose,
And they both breathed the same summer air—
But the poor weed sighed as it looked at the rose—
For the rose was so sweet and so fair.

At twilight the little weed tremblingly spoke,
And it told of its love for the rose;
The rose never heard; for the language of weeds
Is a language a weed only knows.

Then at night the little weed heartbroken cried,
And its tears washed the foot of the rose;
And sweeter she grew and her green leaves spread wide
Shouting out the sweet sunlight and air;
So the little weed died at the foot of the rose,
And the rose never knew it was there.

To me, this little poem shows both imagination and great tenderness. Maybe, it will suggest an idea for a scenario to someone.

Chicago Film Brevities.

J. A. Kent, publicity and sales manager of the Great Northern Film Company, New York City, arrived in Chicago Wednesday, May 10, and remained until Monday night, May 15. Mr. Kent reported fair business for his product. During his stay here he interested himself in the censorship of several of his subjects by the Chicago board.

Jay E. Sherwood, state vice-president for Wisconsin of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, paid this city a flying visit one day last week. Mr. Sherwood is manager of the Grand theater, Madison, Wis., and secretary of the Grand Theater Company, which owns it. This house seats 750 people, and is showing to good business. Mr. Sherwood stated that conditions for exhibitors were very good in Madison, but that local women societies are trying just now to establish a local censorship board. He did not believe that anything would be done, however, as exhibitors in Madison are their own censors and very careful to look over their programs before exhibiting them.

Clarence A. Frammers, president of the Photodrama Club, 3018 Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, recently returned from California, where he has been writing special stories on the staffs of the Lubin, Triangle-Keystone, Thomas H. Ince and American Film companies. Since the policy of the club has been changed to make all photoplay writers who are not residents of Chicago eligible to membership, so many applications have been received that it was deemed advisable for Mr. Frammers to return and attend to the business matters and to have the meetings conducted under his personal supervision. The club is being conducted for the benefit of amateur and successful scenario writers, and is making a fine showing and doing a great deal of good for those interested in scenario work. Mr. Frammers informs me

The Selig players, who have been engaged for several months past in the production of the interiors in "The Crisis," left this city on Wednesday evening, May 17 for Vicksburg, Miss., where the famous battle scenes describing the Winston Churchill story will be filmed under the direction of Colin Campbell. Among the players who left were: Bessie Eyton, Eugenie Besserer, Margaret Fawcett, Thomas Santschi, George Fawcett, Matt Snyder, Marshal Neilan, Cecil Holland, Leo Pierson, and others. A large party of friends, among whom were William M. Selig and Gilson Willets, were at the Illinois Central Twelfth street station to see them off. An advance force of scenario artists and stage carpenters, under the direction of Gabriel Pollock, have been in Vicksburg for some time past, doing the preliminary work necessary before Director Campbell's arrival. Mr. Campbell expects to conclude his work in Vicksburg so as to arrive in St. Louis with the company early in June. After finishing the exteriors there, the company will return direct to the Pacific Coast studios.

James McCre, manager of the Selig studios at Los Angeles, arrived in Chicago Thursday, May 18, and after a brief stay, proceeded to Vicksburg, where he will act as business manager of the Selig "Crisis" company.

"The Valiants of Virginia," adapted from the thrilling novel of Hallie Erminie Rives, will be the next Selig Red Seal photoplay to be released, through V-L-S-E, Inc., following "Into the Primitive," which will be released on May 29. The Selig-Rives photoplay will be released on June 26.

Selig's revival of "The Two Orphans," which will be released through the General Film Company's regular service on Monday, June 12, has created considerable interest among exhibitors. It will probably be remembered that the fine cast of players in this photodrama includes Kathryn Williams, Winnifred Greenwood, Myrtle Stedman, Charles Clary, Thomas J. Carrigan and other photoplayers well known in the film world.

"Historic Indiana," the Indiana centennial picture which is being produced under the direction of the Selig Polyscope Company, is now nearing completion. Interesting scenes were taken on Monday, May 15, in which the noted Hoosier poet, James Whitcomb Riley, appeared before the camera at his home in Indianapolis. Mr. Riley will be seen in the picture with a small army of children surrounding him, each of them a devoted friend. The production of the picture is being financed by the Indiana Historical Commission.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday of Monday, May 21 and 22:

Studebaker—"Gloria's Romance," third chapter; "A Perilous Love" (George Kleine), and Mac Murray in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" (Lasky). Wonderful business is reported at this house for the first two weeks of "Gloria's Romance." Fine Arts—"God's Country and the Woman" (Vitagraph), written by James Oliver Curwood, and produced in eight reels. This picture was photographed in Great Bear Valley, 9,000 feet above sea level, in the San Bernardino mountains, in southern California.

Colonial—Mollie King in "Fate's Boomerang" (World); Harry Watson in "Musty Suffer comedy," "The Lightning Bellboy" (George Kleine); a George Kleine scenic picture, and the Hearst-Vitagraph Weekly.

Orchestra Hall—Edna May in "Salvation Joan" (Vitagraph), presented by V-L-S-E, Inc., and other pictures. Misses Nellie and Sara Kouns, soprano soloists, contribute the concert numbers. H. W. Hill, manager, advises me that the second week of his cinema concerts has been very satisfactory, and that the attendance exceeded the corresponding week of last year, at which time Mary Pickford was also the leading attraction. The revival of "Tess of the Storm Country" for the second week was a great success. Although the photoplay is three years old, and many advised against its repetition, it proved that the management's judgment was emphatically right.

Strand—Norma Talmadge in "Going Straight" (Triangle), and other pictures.

Ziegfeld—Edmund Breese in "The Spell of the Yukon" (Metro), and "The Unwritten Law" (California), the latter being held over for another week on account of the great interest it has created.

La Salle—Third week of "The Little Girl Next Door" (Illinois vice film). The biggest business in the history of this house is reported for this picture.

J. K. Burger, general manager of the International Film Service, Inc., New York, arrived in Chicago Wednesday morning, May 17, to assist J. T. Bowman, the Chicago branch manager of the company, in arranging for the exhibition of the fifth, sixth and seventh episodes of "The Mysteries of Myra" at the Princess theater, South Clark street, Thursday morning, May 18. A general invitation was sent out to Chicago exhibitors and to those in surrounding towns. The well filled theaters showed the great interest manifested in the serial by the assembled exhibitors, who displayed considerable enthusiasm as the films were screened. The exhibition was something unusual, as the trade has seldom been given an opportunity to see the fifth, sixth and seventh episodes of a serial when the fourth is still running in the theaters. Mr. Burger was so impressed with the success of the exhibition that he immediately decided to follow the same plan in all the larger cities in the country, where International exchanges are located. He left for San Francisco on Thursday evening.

William J. Flynn, general manager of the Park, Shenandoah, Juniata and St. Charles theaters, in St. Louis, arrived at this city Thursday May 18, and returned the following day. He made a pleasant call at the World office, during which he informed me that his company has done wonderful business at the Park and the Shenandoah for the past season. The former seats 2,000 people, and is so constructed that the roof can be removed during the summer months and everything made snug and tight against the inclemency of winter. At these two houses he has been alternating with a stock light opera company and a stock dramatic company. The Park Opera Company finished its one hundredth continuous week at both houses on April 24 last, and the Players their one hundredth continuous week on April 29. High-class talent was employed for both companies, and high-class productions were always the rule, sometimes as high as $500 royalty for the week being paid for a drama or opera. Mr. Flynn is thinking of presenting pictures in the Shenandoah during the summer months. The company shows moving pictures throughout the year in the Juniata and the St. Charles, the former seating 1,250 people and located in a residential section, the latter being in the downtown section. Paramount pictures are shown at the Juniata, and features of the Universal, Mutual, Metro and World at the St. Charles. Very fine business has been done at both houses, especially in the Juniata, for the past year.

The benefit at the Auditorium theater, Sunday, May 14, in aid of the American Theatrical Hospital association, brought $5,000 into the treasury. The proceeds will go towards the construction of a hospital where transient theatrical or moving picture people in need receive free care and treatment. The hospital is now under construction at Irving Park Boulevard and Sheridan Road.

Thomas H. Ince, Kay-Bee's famous director, made a brief stay in the city on Saturday, May 13, on his way from the Pacific Coast to New York City. While here, he announced that his big production, "Civilization," will soon be shown to the Pope. This great picture, which shows the devastation of war and the blessings of peace, will shortly be sent to Rome. First of all, it will be sent to Washington, where the President, his Cabinet, government officials and members of Congress will be given a special and private presentation. Mr. Ince expressed the opinion that the merger, which will include Triangle, Lasky and Famous Players, will make for efficiency and the reduction of overhead expenses. J. Barney Sherry, the well-known Kay-Bee character actor, accompanied Mr. Ince, and "Civilization" will be given its initial showing in New York City, although Mr. Ince expressed the preference to have Chicago see it first.

Monday, May 15, was Actors' Fund day at the moving picture theaters of Chicago, when over 200 exhibitors contributed 10 per cent. of their day's receipts to the Fund. Owing to the absence, in New York, of William N. Selig, who is the treasurer of the Chicago committee, no accurate figures of the aggregate amount can be given at the time of writing; but, from what I can glean, the total will make a fine showing for Chicago.

Harry Weiss, who for some time past has been a very successful manager of Metro's Chicago branch, has resigned his position. Mr. Weiss has not as yet given out what his future connection will be, but it is understood that he has several flattering offers. No one, as yet, has been appointed to succeed him; but J. S. Skirboll, district manager, will have charge until his successor is appointed. Harry Cohn, well known in exchange and exhibiting circles in Chicago, and who for a long time was connected with George Kleine and the General Film Company as exchange manager, is assisting Mr. Skirboll.

John Le Roy Johnston writes me that he has succeeded Charles G. Brown as editor of Amusements, Minneapolis. I met Mr. Johnston while in Minneapolis, and he acted in the capacity of editor of that publication during the recent exposition.

RELIABLE FEATURE SPREADING OUT.

Manager Schwartz of the Reliable Feature Film Company of Chicago reports that since going into larger quarters business has increased. "Defense or Tribute" and "The Ordeal" were recent purchases for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. From the manner in which bookings are being made it will be necessary to have several copies working at one time.

Jack Schwartz, road manager, is traveling through Wisconsin and C. Christopher through Indiana. George Lindon is Illinois representative.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

NO SINGLE FILM COMMISSIONER.

Mayor Sebastian Says He Does Not Intend to Appoint One—Believe Police Department Competent to Handle Situation.

MAYOR SEBASTIAN has announced that Los Angeles now has no moving picture censor.

The ordinances adopted by the council abolishing the local censor board and providing for the appointment of a single censor commissioner went into effect on May 4.

The Civil Service Commission has called an examination for the position of single censor commissioner which will soon be held. Mayor Sebastian, however, says that he does not contemplate appointing any censor commissioner. He expresses the belief that the situation can be handled by the police department. He said:

"The ordinance abolishing the censor commission is now in effect, and as I understand the situation, we haven't any censorship over moving pictures at the present time, outside of general police regulations. I have no intention of appointing a censor commissioner."

HARBINGERS OF "CIVILIZATION."

Leo S. Harding and Andrew C. Edison on Transcontinental Motorcycle Trip to Spread Propaganda for Great Picture.

Thomas H. Ince this week has undertaken a most novel and effective way of advertising from coast to coast his greatest production, "Civilization." Leo S. Harding and Andrew C. Edison of the Ince forces have started on a motorcycle trip across the continent to blaze the fame of this remarkable picture. They are traveling via the National Old Trails from Los Angeles to Portland, Me. The motorcycle is equipped with a side car and every available inch of its space is elaborately decorated with notices that "Civilization is coming," while a large suitcase is filled with literature and photographs to be distributed along the road.

Andrew C. Edison and Leo S. Harding Receiving Instructions from Thomas H. Ince Before Starting on Transcontinental Trip.

"Civilization" has entered its fourth successful week at the Majestic theater. Now that the big film has settled down to a steady run in Los Angeles negotiations are under way for its early showing in all the other large cities of the country. Producer Ince, accompanied by a large staff of aides, is now in New York arranging for its metropolitan premiere. It will probably be shown at the Knickerbocker Theater. When in the East Mr. Ince will also arrange for its presentation in Washington, Philadelphia, Boston and other big centers.

LARGE THEATER PROJECTED.

Motion Picture House With Three Thousand Seating Capacity Planned for Broadway.

The assurance of the launching of one of the most important building enterprises undertaken in Los Angeles in several years was announced this week. The Business Stability Association, composed of many of the leading business men and owners of business property in the downtown district took an option on a ninety-nine-year ground lease of the property at the corner of Third and Broadway and started a movement for the immediate erection of a modern theater and studio building on that site.

The association expects to erect a structure costing about $600,000. Of this amount $400,000 is declared to have been subscribed. As soon as another $100,000 shall have been added a contract will be commissioned to go ahead with working plans. This statement was made by Miles S. Gregory, secretary of the association. Mr. Gregory also announced that it was the intention to complete the project, with no indebtedness, each subscriber holding his proportionate amount of stock and participating in the returns from rentals on that basis.

The building in contemplation is to contain a motion picture theater with a seating capacity of three thousand persons equipped with a stage large enough to accommodate opera performances. There will also be fourteen small specialty shops on the ground floor, some on Broadway and others on Third. The plans, as roughly outlined, call for fifty-six studios, each measuring 16x28 feet, on the upper floors facing Broadway, and eighty studios, some 15x100 feet, and others 16x29 feet, overlooking Third street. A space, 120x100 feet, in the basement is to be given over to a cafeteria.

The building will have a frontage of 120 feet on Broadway and of 194 feet on Third. It will be of fireproof construction, probably of reinforced concrete.

MABEL NORMAND BACK AT WORK.

The Mabel Normand Feature Film Company Rehearsing a Four-Reeler at Their New Studio.

Mabel Normand and her own company of players began rehearsals on May 15, on the first of the features to be released under her name. Early indications are that the story will be in four reels and that of possible the Mabel Normand Feature Film Co. will make about eight such comedy-dramas a year.

Although Miss Normand has her own studio located in one of the beauty spots of Hollywood she has by no means cut adrift from the famous Keystone studio where she was featured for years.

Hampton Del Ruth, managing editor and assistant manager of production of the Keystone Film Company, has been given further anxiety through the four-reel comedy-dramas which require a de luxe treatment for The Mabel Normand Feature Film Co.

To those connected with the famous laugh-making plant of Mack Sennett the picture of the first rehearsal looked much like the rehearsals of the past when the young woman was being featured by the Keystone Company. With the exception of James Young, who will direct Miss Normand, and a carefully selected cast of associate players, Mr. Sennett and Mr. Del Ruth lent their aid as in the past, the only real difference being the story, which is straight comedy-drama.

"I am more than delighted with everything," Miss Normand said when asked what she had to say about her future as well as the present plans. "I am more than satisfied with the first story selected, I feel I have regained my old good health again, and now I am anxious to hear Mr. Young say 'camera' and begin work again."

The comedienne spoke of her trip to the East and said that she felt the trip had done her a world of good.

Miss Normand brought many trunks of costumes home from the American fashion center, and many of these gowns, like the plot of the first story, are to be reserved for the first nighters who enjoy her first picture.

The site of the new studio of the Mabel Normand Feature Film Co. is located just off Hollywood boulevard a few blocks before the traveler reaches the Fine Arts studio.

The women members of Miss Normand's company will dress in individual dressing rooms on the same tier with that of the leading woman, while the men will have their quarters on the ground floor. The front part of the building will be used for the general offices, the stage being overlooked from the dressing rooms.

ACTORS TO SPEED FOR FUND.

Will Hold Racing Events and Automobile Fashion Show at Ascot Speedway on Memorial Day.

Plans are under way and, with every well-known film star in Southern California appearing in some capacity, the race meet at the Ascot speedway May 30 for the benefit of the Actors' Fund will outdo a five-ring circus in its many features.

There will be speed contests for cars, motorcycle races, bicycle races for women riders, motion picture comedies in the making, old-timers' races, "grudge" races and, as a fitting finale, the classic motor car event ever staged anywhere.

At the wheels of the most stylish motor cars in the world will be seen the well-known beauties of the film world. This event will be known on the program as the Automobile Fashion Show. A committee of well-known judges will be selected to pick the most stylish turnout, car, driver and ability to handle the car to count.

Needless to say, the film queens will pick their cars with care. Almost all the well-known stars are good drivers and the competition will be keen. The judges will not endeavor to name the Motor Queen and the King of Cars. This will be left to the ten thousand persons who are expected to gather for the big event.

As each contestant parades her car in front of the stand the crowd will be asked to express its appreciation. The judges will decide which four receive the most applause. Then the crowd will be asked to pick the two best. And then the winner will be selected. The rivalry will be keen and there is certain to be some husky rooting for the various favorites.

The race for the old-time cars will cause lots of fun. The Keystone company is building a picture around this race and there will be much comedy in the making.

SEEING AN E. & R. PICTURE.

This week we made another stroll Eastlake Park way to the studios of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company.

We found Clem Pope, publicity man, in his den, as usual, surrounded by stacks of copy and pounding away for dear life on his typewriter. Said Clem after the usual greeting and perfunctory small talk, "Want to see a corking E. & R. comedy, which," modestly blushing, "I wrote myself?" Of course we would, never before having seen the famous "Nap and Sally" on the screen. So to the projection room we went and to make the occasion still more of an event, the leading man and the leading lady of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company joined us, and Nap took a seat on our right and Miss Sally on our left.

Of course we felt duly honored and glad to be in such distinguished company. However, we must confess that we at times became a trifle nervous when the big chimpanzees in the thrilling climax of the picture would excitedly squeeze our arms the same as two very human children. It certainly was most interesting to watch these intelligent apes gaze with rapt attention on the screen. Whether they recognized themselves is hard to tell. At any rate, they surely acted like it.

The name of the picture projected was "Teacher's Pet," a current E. & R. Release. It's really remarkable the stunts these animal actors perform seemingly without an effort. The photography is unusually good.

"DUSTY" FARNUM STARTS ACROSS CONTINENT.

Dustin Farnum, screen star, will be Dustin Farnum, racing driver, this week. Farnum has designs on the transcontinental automobile record, and will depart from San Diego this week, after dipping the wheels of his Marmon roadster in the waters of the Pacific at Coronado Beach. Farnum's goal is New York City, and he intends to drive there in ten days or less. Farnum's car is a new three-passenger roadster, which was delivered to him last week. His schedule calls for a drive of about thirty-four hundred miles, and he expects to average better than three hundred and forty miles a day in the ten days he is on the road. He will adopt no regular schedule, but will stop wherever quitting time finds him, and the six o'clock whistle will not mean quitting time for him either. He plans to sleep about six hours a night and drive practically all the rest of the time.

And the way he made the dust fly when he pulled out from the coast makes the record's life look rather short.

"DOUG" FAIRBANKS' WILD WEST PARTY.

One day last week Douglas Fairbanks, the popular Triangle Fine Arts star, gave a whooping western dance in his mountain cabin, located at Hollywood.

Most of the guests, who numbered over 200, were clad in picturesque "wild west" apparel of '49 and the scene was typical of those early California days.

Among the many film celebrities who attended were De Wolf Hopper, William Farnum, Dustin Farnum, Charlie Chaplin, W. S. Hart, William Collier, Marie Doro, John Emerson, Paul Dickie, Elliot Dexter, Oscar Apfel, William Hurlburt, Elda Furry, Al Jennings, Norma Talmadge and Winifred Kingston.

"Doug" Fairbanks' Wild West Party.

The affair was given by Douglas Fairbanks in honor of his cowboy and girl friends, most of whom came to the scene of the festivity on horseback. Fred Burns, champion American roper, entertained with some difficult feats, and Chief Big Tree Willow Bird, Eagle Wing and Leandro appeared in Indian dances. Many stage celebrities were seen dancing on the floor with the cowboys, cowgirls, Indians and their squaws dressed in full tepee regalia. Refreshments were served in the true western fashion and everybody had a cracking good time.

HEARST NEWS MAN ACTIVE.

Accompanied by world-famous racing drivers and a number of prominent men, L. K. Dewein, cameraman for the International News Service weekly, left this week on a picture-making trip.

The fame of San Bernardino's road building campaign, which has done wonders in advertising the county to the motoring public of the coast and transcontinental motorists as well, is to be exploited by means of motion pictures. Cactus Kate No. 2, a famous automobile, with Louis Nikrent, racing driver, at the wheel, leaving San Bernardino this afternoon for the desert carried the party.

W. S. Wood, L. K. Dewein and Charles Bigelow are in the party. The San Bernardino county highway commission, composed of W. A. Freemire, J. B. Gill and George Hinkley, accompanied the Los Angeles party through Cajon Pass this afternoon.

The route will include the San Bernardino to Needles highway by way of Barstow. The Grand Canyon will be covered on the north rim, Salt Lake City will be visited and photographs taken of the road work on the way.

The road through Cajon Pass is to be inspected, especially what is known as the new road. The members of the county commission will explain the road-making system and stretches of road where engineering feats have been called into use will be photographed and shown in theaters everywhere.

FAY TINCHER HAS STAR PART.

For the first time since De Wolf Hopper arrived in California last September to begin his motion picture work for the Triangle, Fay Tinchler has had a vacation. It proved a most profitable rest, too, because when she returned to Fine Arts two scenarios were waiting for her. When the pictures are completed and released Fay Tincher's name will appear in the big type.

This promotion is in recognition of the diminutive comedienne's faithful work at Fine Arts. She has been in the films less than three years, but when Hopper arrived in California she was selected as foil for the huge comedian. Then followed her Dulcinea in the Chester Withey version of "Don Quixote"; the Widow Marimore in "Sunshine Dad"; and soon she will be seen as Shortie Sal, a crook's "steady," in "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan." Her first appearance in the films was in Griffith's "The Battle of the Sexes." Subsequently she played in a series called the "Komics." Her stage experience began early, at an age when the permission of the Gerry Society had to be obtained for her appearance in Savage productions and the last Weber and Fields burlesques at the old Music Hall.

Los Angeles Film Briefs.

V. R. Day, manager Chicago office of the Essanay Film Mfg. Company, has been in the city during the week and paid a pleasant call to the World office. It certainly was a sight for sore eyes to see a friendly face from good old "Chi."

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, arrived in Los Angeles this week, and after visiting the local Mutual studios proceeded to Santa Barbara.

It's reported that Geraldine Farrar will come West again this summer to appear in pictures for the Lasky company. She has leased Blanche Ring's beautiful Hollywood home, Casa Blanca, in which to live during her picture engagement.

"Gloria's Romance," the wonderful George Kleine serial, has been booked for the entire circuit of Pantages Theaters and will shortly begin its engagement here for twenty weeks.

The Palace Theater on Seventh street, between Broadway and Hill, is now the home of the Triangle features. First run Incle and Griffith dramas and Keystone comedies will be shown there exclusively.

J. Warren Kerrigan has been made defendant in a suit filed in the superior court by his former manager, J. Van Cartmell. According to the complaint, the star owes his rise in the profession solely to the one-time manager's efforts. Before Van Cartmell condescended to take Kerrigan under his guidance, the latter was living on an alleged mere pittance, $100 a week, it is charged. He is now getting a salary approximately $500 a week, according to the complaint, due to Van Cartmell's business acumen.

The latter asks $2,706.23, alleged due for services. Van Cartmell states that he acted as the star's business manager from July, 1912, until January, 1916.

Cameron Coffey, four years old, champion child swimmer of the world, has been specially engaged by the N. Y. M. P. Corporation to do some very difficult "water stuff" in a new and as yet unnamed picture they are now filming.

He will dive from the deck of the big steamer "Congress" in the Los Angeles harbor one day this week. It is little Cameron's first appearance before the camera, although he has frequently done stunts fully as difficult as those outlined in the moving picture scenario. This sturdy little lad's prowess in the water, it is said, is truly remarkable.

Mayor Charles E. Sebastian of Los Angeles was adopted in the Sioux tribe at Inceville one day this week, when he was made a central figure in one of the most picturesque events ever staged at the big ranch in Santa Monica mountains.

The Redskins who appear frequently in Triangle Kay-Bee productions had made elaborate preparations for the ceremony. A large bonfire was built, and the beef slain in celebration of the occasion, and an extraordinarily large tepee erected within which to conduct the service.

Chief Two-Lance stood before the candidate, his beady eyes fixed on the Mayor's face:

"How?" he greeted.

"How?" said Sebastian.

Chief Two-Lance daubed a splash of red paint on Sebastian's brow.

"Warrior now; can fight," he grunted.

Seizing a horse's tail, he rubbed it over the candidate's face. Then he placed a gaudy head dress of eagle feathers on Sebastian's head.

"Huh!" he grunted. "Great man now. Heap big chief!"

The squaw of Two Lance brought moccasins. The Mayor's shoes were removed and the moccasins put on.

Then, in a solemn circle, the pipe of peace was passed around, Sebastian taking his puff with the others.

"Can stand now," ordered Chief Two Lance.

Mayor Sebastian arose. The others followed.

"How?" said Chief Two Lance. "You great chief of Sioux. You brother of Chief Two Lance. It is said. You Opy-ia Ompa. How!"

"How?" answered the newly made chief.

Escorted into the tepee of his "brother chief," the Mayor received his brother Indians and shook hands with each as the line passed along.

Then followed the ceremony, Chief Two Lance removed the head dress, stuck a feather in the Mayor's curly hair and the ceremony was completed.

The honor conferred on the Mayor is an unusual one. But few have had the distinction of being adopted into a Sioux tribe. One is Mayor James Randolph Hearst and Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

F. E. Dodd and Otto E. Sellhausen, business managers, and C. R. Wallace, director, representing the Selecto Film Company, Incorporated, are in Santa Ana, Cal., with a proposal to have the company make Santa Ana its home. They say that they want to sell stock up to $20,000 to Santa Anans and let the Santa Ana people run the company, they to be employees, and if successful in operating the company possibly to get a third interest in it. The three men have been investigated by the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce and their standing found to be good.

Friday night this week Shakespeare's great drama, "Julius Caesar," will be produced at Beechwood Canyon in Hollywood, with which it is probable the most notable cast that has ever appeared in one of Shakespeare's works.

The cast includes such artists as Tyrone Power in the role of Brutus, Frank Keenan as Cassius, Theodore Roberts as Julius Caesar, De Wolf Hopper as Casca, William Farnum as Marc Antony, and Douglas Fairbanks as Young Cato. Constance Crawley will appear as Calpurnia, Sarah Truax as Portia and Capitola Holmes as Lucius. Charles Gunn will play Octavius Caesar; H. B. Carpenter, Decius Brutus, and Tully Marshall, Lucius Brutus, the most unimportant characters, will be fulfilled by men and women of national reputation either on the stage or in films.

About five thousand people will take part in the drama and the pageantry that goes with it, and the famous battle on the plains of Philippi promises to be the most realistic thing of its kind that has ever been shown. It will start on the ridge of the hills behind the central stage and approximately half a mile away, with the armies silhouetted against the moonlit sky and gradually work its way to the finale on the central stage.

There will be something like four or five hundred women and dancing girls in the pageants before Caesar, the dancers being led by Mae Murray, Marjorie Riley and Capitola Holmes.

Arrangements have been made to seat 30,000 people in the vast amphitheater, and there is room for thousands more on the hillside. As a spectacle it will be the most magnificent that has ever been staged in this part of the country.

Kolb & Dill, the German comedians, are now busy rehearsing a five-reel American comedy at the "Flying A" studios at Santa Barbara. Rea Berger will be the director.

Will M. Richie, the editor and chief of the Balboa scenario department, returned this week to the Long Beach studios after a month's vacation.

Mr. Richie has supervised all the manuscripts produced by Balboa for over a year and a half. During this time he has written a number of photoplays, including "Who Pays" and the "Red Circle" series.

Douglas Fairbanks and Director Allan Dwan, with a large company of Fine Arts players, this week departed in automobiles for Calaveras county to film the first scenes of Bret Harte's western, "In the Carquinez Woods."

The location selected by the producer is approximately one thousand miles from the Hollywood studio, and the players will be compelled to travel part of the way on mountain burros, the roads being too narrow for the automobiles.

The company is expected to stay for at least two weeks.

Seena Owen, the charming Fine Arts actress, has returned from her three weeks' vacation in Colorado, and is preparing to start work in a new Triangle play soon to be announced.

A very unusual set was erected at Universal City, this week, for the use of director Jack Conway, who is producing "The Silent Battle" featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, and a large number of people were used in the various scenes filmed.

The design was of a large hunting lodge, with trophies of the chase and guns and pistols hanging on the walls of the huge room which had been constructed out of untrimmed timbers. A fancy dress ball was enacted, with many beautiful and odd costumes.

Representatives of all the leading jewelry houses of the Pacific Coast were entertained at Universal City for several hours by Charles Rankin, manager of productions, on Friday, May 12. There were a hundred in the party, all of whom had come to Los Angeles to attend the annual convention of the Pacific Coast Jewelers' Association. Mr. Rankin had the visitors meet a number of the leading actors and actresses and had a special animal act put on for them at the Universal Zoo. If it had not been necessary for the jewelry representatives to be present at the convention they would have spent the entire day watching the making of celluloid dramas at the big film city.

F. W. Woolworth, the well-known five-and-ten-cent store magnate and owner of the New York sky scraper which bears his name, was one of the most interested of visitors at Universal City last week. It was the first time Mr. Woolworth had ever visited a motion picture studio, and he declared that it was one of the most interesting of his experiences anywhere in the world.

Lucille Young has been engaged by the Universal to play lead in director Jay Hunt's Company, which will make two and perhaps three lumber camp film plays within the coming weeks at Eureka, Cal.

Jack Sheehan, American's leading man, has been seen two consecutive weeks in Los Angeles. He visited the stamping places of photographers and met the "old gang"—this week the comical laugh-maker visited the beach at Santa Monica where he enjoyed a swim, a dance, and the many amusements to be found there.

Anita King, the Lasky-Paramount girl, visited San Diego last week where she appeared at the popular Pickwick theater, met the president of the exposition, and a lot of picture fans. This week she, with the aid of Mayor Rolph of San Francisco, officially dedicated the new Mission Theater in that city. The Mission is the largest and finest of the suburban theaters in San Francisco, seating some twenty-two hundred people and being modern in every way. Miss King also went to bat with the San Francisco Board of Censors in the City Council Chamber and told them just exactly where they stood. She also took a hand in raising funds for the building of a new Y. M. C. A. home and is still in the north, after appearing at the Actors' Fund ball.

The Zenith Film Company with a capital of $200,000, has been incorporated here with a board of directors composed of Hamilton Senith, Thomas C. Malcolm and George Bronson Howard.

Vitagraph's Western leading woman, Nell Shipman, was the guest of honor one night this week at a gathering at the home of Henry Christen Warnack, a scenario writer of distinction and the dramatic critic on the Los Angeles Times. Mr. Warnack possesses a wonderful home in Alhambra. It is modeled after the Alhambra in Spain, which served as subject matter for Washington Irving's book, "The Alhambra." Among Mr. Warnack's guests were Mr. and Mrs. Tyrone Power, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Keenan, James Young, Kathryn Williams, Dustin Farnum, Mr. and Mrs. J. Farrell MacDonald, Arthur Maude, Constance Crawley, Captain and Mrs. Reuben Ford, Ernest Shipman and James Warnack.

Wallace MacDonald, assistant director to Rea Berger in the "Virtue" production, had a birthday one day this week and in the evening gave a party to ten at Edgerly Court. Mr. MacDonald introduced a number of novelties. The guests zigzagged into the dining room, which was handsomely decorated, an immense cake being the central figure.

To each fork was attached a string that led to a present. In place of napkins baby bibs were used. The place cards and other features were suggestive of the pictures. Mr. MacDonald was the recipient of a gold knife, gold chain and gold cuff buttons. His guests were Archer MacMackin, Frank Borzage, John Stepling, John Sheehan, Charles Newton, Ed Cohan, Rea Berger, Dick Rosson, Roy Stewart and George Ahern.

Another night this week, the big glass studio of the American Film Co. was the scene of another joyous frolic, when the third dance of the series was given by the Good Fellowship Association. This is made up of nearly two hundred employees of the American.

As on the two former occasions a distinctive feature was made of the lighting effects, all supplied by a technical department that is very efficient in that line.

That these dances are proving popular was shown by the fine attendance, and a large number of the townspeople participated as usual. Quite a number of strangers in the city took advantage of this occasion to see one of the finest glass studios in the country.

Here are a couple of paragraphs of interest sent to us from A. C. Gage of the Glendale Kalem studio. He says that:

Preparations are now being made for a new serial which will be as much out of the ordinary as "The Social Pirate" serial. It should prove to be the best series ever turned out at this studio, the name of which is withheld until a future date.

The fourteenth episode of the "Social Pirate" serial entitled "The Music Swindlers" is completed under the direction of James W. Horne.

Marin Sais had a chance to show that she is a singer by rendering a few selections from "William Tell."

Visitors at the studio were held spellbound by the wonderful performance given by Miss Sais and Mr. Jonasson, in one of the scenes of the music studio.

Next week the "Social Pirates" will take their last cruise in locating the fifteenth episode or final of the series entitled "The Black Magic." This has been a long and strenuous series for everybody concerned, and there will surely be a celebration upon the taking of the last scene, "when the ship goes on the rocks."

Manager Wheeler of Clune's Auditorium, announces that the coming week will find the big house dark for the first time in many months. In the succeeding week grand opera will hold sway and the usual film attraction will be withdrawn this week to permit the use of the stage for rehearsals for the opera and other preparations for the engagement, which will last three weeks.

Senor Florencio Constantino will be the artistic head of the venture and it is already assured that he will be surrounded by a distinguished company of principals and a chorus and orchestra both noteworthy for size and quality.

Following the opera engagement will come the premiere of Thomas Dixon's multiple-reel operatic cinema-drama, "The Fall of a Nation." For more than a year this big film has been in the making and the information which has leaked out is to the effect that its bigness justifies the time spent in preparation.

The new Garrick theater, formerly operated by J. A. Quinn, has changed hands again. A corporation formed of Los Angeles business men has taken over the property and will immediately place the theater in the front rank. Hereafter the Garrick will be known as "the home of Charlie Chaplin" for the new management has secured exclusive first run of all the new Chaplin comedies made under his new Mutual contract. In addition, the program will contain each week a first-run Mutual Masterpiece—five reel feature—with well known stars playing the leads.

The theater has been remodeled to some extent, a new ventilating system installed, new projecting machines and clear, perfect, flickerless pictures will be the rule in the future.

Another picture theater is to be provided for Colton for Jack McCreia is having excavations made where he will establish an air dome this summer and which he expects to be attractive enough to keep going permanently. Mr. McCreia was for a long time operator of the machine in the Crescent theater and is well known in his city.

Ince Talks of Culver City

Famous Western Producer Describes the New Plant of the N. Y. M. P.—Has Abandoned Outdoor Stages.

THOMAS H. INCE, the executive chief of Inceville and of Culver City, where are situated the Pacific coast dramatic studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, arrived in New York City on Sunday, May 14. His first move was to attend the Board of Trade exposition at Madison Square Garden, where for his benefit was put on the screen the film showing the new and elaborate N. Y. M. P. plant at Culver City.

"We have what I believe is the finest plant for the taking of motion pictures that you can find in this or any other country," said Mr. Ince, speaking of his new studio the next day. "We moved from Inceville because we felt there was good reason to believe that by the construction of a new and modern plant, built upon intelligent manufacturing lines, some of the enormous overhead expenses of taking motion pictures could be eliminated, with the result that bigger and better pictures would be made. Culver City is the last word in studio facilities. It is good commercial planning that has produced it, and then it won't do any harm to remember that close to half a million dollars expended in a tract of sixteen acres with another sixteen lying alongside of it for future development—makes some considerable showing in buildings.

"We have practically abandoned the open-air studio for the taking of our pictures," went on Mr. Ince. "We have come to the conclusion that the best results are to be obtained under glass, and we have equipped all our studios with the best lighting system that we could find anywhere, one that makes possible results that would have been impossible six months ago even. We have five big glass stages, and have the facilities and equipment to add more at short notice. Culver City, I believe, is the top notch in studio work. We have taken what I feel is a large step forward, and the keynote of the whole of the new plant has been something that is sadly lacking in motion picture making heretofore.

"I mean efficient manufacturing methods and proper administration in the layout of the work. I don't pretend to say that we have reached the point where no further improvement may be made, but we have taken a long step forward.

"I think what we are doing now at the Culver City studios will be sure to have its effect upon the motion picture industry, and I am reasonably certain that Triangle exhibitors and patrons will have no reason to complain when they see the steady gain that is now becoming apparent. What we are doing at Culver is going to have its effect elsewhere; it will have to. There is little doubt that the great things that have been accomplished in the motion picture business have been due to the hard, imaginative work of the men who have performed that work, but we have reached a point of industrial development now that makes it imperative that we should begin applying intelligent commercial methods to our work. No industrial corporation would stand for a minute the things that have been done in the name of motion picture production. We have got to make the most of our resources; we have to eliminate waste, and we have to cut our corners in order to maintain high standards and produce better pictures without sacrificing any of the artistic standards we have established. That is spoken for the whole motion picture fraternity.

"Triangle pictures have established themselves, and there is little need for us to do anything now but put the best ideas, the best people and the best work of which we are capable into them. That means, of course, that we will have taken the essential steps for a continued success along these lines.

"The move to Culver City does not mean that we have abandoned the Inceville studios at all. That plant will be used for the taking of special features, and all the William S. Hart pictures will be made there exclusively. Inceville, with its 18,000 acres of western landscape and hundreds of head of horses and cattle, lends itself better than any other studio in America to the making of western pictures."

All of Mr. Ince's society dramas will be made at the Culver City plant, which will be the headquarters of six of his producing companies. With several productions well under way Mr. Ince plans to spend some time in New York before returning to Los Angeles.

World Film Conducts Contest

William A. Brady Offers $5,000 in Prizes to Scenario Writers—Winner to Receive $1,000.

WHAT should prove to be a scenario contest of considerable significance will begin in the Saturday Evening Post of June 3, under the direction of the World Film Corporation, with the sole judge represented in the person of William A. Brady. Mr. Brady, who instituted the contest, and who will devote his personal attention to every scenario or story submitted, will give the writer of the best story or scenario $1,000.

In addition to the capital prize, there will be nineteen other cash awards. The first prize of $1,000 will go to the winner, of course, while to those fortunate enough to write material sufficiently interesting, awards will be made:

Second prize, $750; third prize, $650; fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh prizes will be $500, $400, $300 and $200, respectively, with prizes of $100 each to the next twelve best stories or scenarios accepted by Mr. Brady.

The first announcement runs in a full-page statement in the Saturday Evening Post on June 3. It is an expression by William A. Brady of the fact that, in his opinion, the stories and scenarios submitted and actually visualized during the past several years have been, in the main, trash. He wants live, present-day society and human-interest life stories and believes that almost everyone has had incidents and experiences in life which, if elaborated upon and built up into a plot, or series of plots, would make interesting screen material.

The five thousand dollars in prizes has been deposited in the Mutual Bank of New York, there to remain until the final judgment and awards are made.

The contest will close with the issue of the Saturday Evening Post dated September 15, at 6 o'clock P. M., and the awards made January 1, 1917. All writers are eligible.

GUS INGLIS IN TOWN.

Gus Inglis, a partner in the publicity firm of Willis & Inglis, Los Angeles, Cal., has been in New York for the past few weeks renewing old acquaintances and making new ones.

LUBIN ENGAGES ROBERT FRAZER.

Robert W. Frazer, whose last dramatic engagement was replacing Douglas Fairbanks in the leading role in "The Show Shop," has been engaged by the Lubin Company for an important part in "The Light at Dusk" the story by Anthony P. Kelly, which Edgar Lewis is conveying into a multiple reel screen feature.

AFTER EIGHT LONG YEARS.

Barney Sherry, who has been playing character leads with the Kay-Bee combination in Los Angeles, Cal., arrived in New York on Wednesday, May 17, on a vacation. Barney left New York eight years ago with the first Bison company of players ever sent to the coast by the New York Motion Picture Company and this is the first time in all those years that he has been seen on Broadway.

NEW TRIANGLE PUBLICITY MAN.

Sanford Stanton, formerly editor of the Metropolitan Section of the New York World, and more recently with Selwyn & Co., has joined the Triangle Film Corporation's publicity department, succeeding Wallace M. Powers. Mr. Powers, who has been associated with the Triangle since last summer, will rejoin his old chief, Henry MacMahon, at the National Drama Corporation, sponsor for the Thomas Dixon-Victor Herbert opera cinema, "The Fall of a Nation," which opens at the Liberty theater on June 6.

"The Yellow Menace" is New Serial

Unity Sales Corporation to Handle Picture Pointing Our Inability to Meet Oriental Foe.

AN IMPORTANT deal in the motion picture industry was consummated recently when the Unity Sales Corporation, through negotiations conducted by Andrew J. Cobe, its vice-president and general manager, purchased a new serial, entitled "The Yellow Menace," starring Edwin Stevens, and written by the celebrated author, Louis Tracy.

The picture was made by the Serial Film Corporation, under the direction of William Steiner, and is an elaborate and costly serial in sixteen chapters.

The scenes range from China to New York, employing thousands of people. No more timely subject could well be imagined than that set forth in "The Yellow Menace," which deals with the helplessness of America under present conditions to combat an Oriental foe. It brings home in striking fashion the weak nature of the United States defenses and her inability to defend herself against an invader from across the Pacific.

In support of Mr. Stevens there appears a strong cast, headed by Margaret Gale, who in the course of the production wears more than one hundred gowns, of the most advanced styles, representing an expenditure of over $15,000; Florence Malone, Gerald Griffin, Marie Treador, Armand Cortes and J. A. Hall are others in the cast.

Simultaneously with its appearance on the screen, the novelized version of "The Yellow Menace" is to appear in eleven hundred newspapers throughout the country, giving the picture a tremendous advertising value. Mr. Cobe also intends to inaugurate a nation-wide publicity and advertising campaign, which promises many sensational and unusual features.

Louis Tracy is one of the best-known of English novelists, and his works have been translated into almost every civilized tongue. Among the most noted novels are "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," "The Silent Barrier," "Karl Grier," "A Son of the Immortals" and "The Great Mogul."

As Ali Singh, leader of "The Yellow Menace," Mr. Stevens gives a striking portrayal of his sinister personality of "The Higher One." He depicts the cunning, scheming character of the plotting Oriental, and his make-up is in itself a work of art.

Vim Companies Coming North

Louis Burstein, Managing Director, Returns to New York to Discuss Plans for the Future.

LOUIS BURSTEIN, managing director of Vim comedies, arrived in New York from Jacksonville, Fla., last Thursday, to confer with his partner, Mark M. Dintenfass, regarding the summer plans of the four Vim producing companies. These will leave the Jacksonville studios early in June and will spend the summer months near New York. Mr. Burstein and Mr. Dintenfass have several studios and locations under consideration and the matter will be decided within a few days. The directors engaged in production under the supervision of Mr. Burstein are Harry C. Myers, director and co-star with Rosemary Theby; Walter H. Stull, of the "Pokes and Jabbs" comedies; Will Louis, directing Hardy and Ruge in the "Plump and Run" series; Harry Naughton and Bert Tracy.

Mr. Burstein waxed optimistic in speaking of the market for Vim comedies.

"I hear a lot of talk about overproduction," he said, "but I am here to say there never has been and never can be an overproduction of quality films. So much footage is being turned out at present that the picture of high quality shines out like a star of the first magnitude. And as the exhibitor has the advantage of the market he is in a position to reject what he does not want and take only the best—something he has not always been able to do. The consequence is that Vim comedies are going strong, and we are ready to increase our output whenever the demand is made."

Mr. Burstein brought with him a number of films, just completed at the Jacksonville studios, which will probably be exhibited privately before exhibitors and exchange managers.

Universal Film Loss at Detroit

Explosion in Cleaning Room Damages Stock of Universal, Bluebird and Metro Film Companies.—Service Not Interrupted.

An explosion, which originated in the cleaning room of the building at 159 Jefferson avenue, Detroit, Mich., Thursday afternoon, May 18, did damage estimated at $150,000 to the building and stock of the Universal Film Co., the Bluebird and Metro Film Corporations, who occupied the first and second floors. The entire building and stock therein was a total loss as a result of the fire, which was one of the most spectacular in many years. The flames spread so fast that it only required about a half hour in which to totally destroy the building. George W. Weeks, manager of the Universal Company, was in Cincinnati at the time. Fortunately no employees were hurt in the fire—all making their escape from the building in good time. Dozens of new and old film were destroyed. Temporary offices have been opened at 183 Jefferson avenue by the Universal, Bluebird and Metro companies. There has been practically no interruption in the service of these companies as additional prints were shipped the same day from New York.

VAN RONKEL STRONG FOR BLUEBIRDS.

I. Van Ronkel, manager of the Chicago Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., returned to New York with Mr. Hoffman from the first lap of his little exchange inspection tour. In the two days which he has now spent in New York he has looked at six Bluebird Photoplays, which have not yet been released. They are "Naked Hearts," "The Eye of God," "Bobbie of the Ballet," "The Three Godfathers," "Shoes," and "Yellow and White," and the excellence of the six, piling one upon the other, convinced him that there was room in the Chicago office for at least two more prints on all Bluebirds.

Vitagraphs for June's First Week

Brooklyn Studio Will Be Represented by Five Subjects, Produced by Brooks, Wolbert, Williams, North and Davenport.

THE Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature for the week of May 29 is "The Lights of New York." Other photoplays on the list are "The Rich Idler," "Kernel Nutt, the Footman" and "The Lonelies," one part comedies, and "Carew and Son," a three-part Broadway Star Feature. "The Lights of New York" is a five-part drama featuring Leah Baird. It shows how an East Side gunman works his way into the "upper ten." Walter McGrail plays the part of the gunman, and Adele de Garde is seen as the half-sister. Arthur Cozine and Don Cameron also do good work in this photoplay, which was produced by Van Dyke Brooke.

In "The Rich Idler," Mary Anderson takes the role of the proprietor of a small motion goods store, who, when the landlord calls for rent, thinks he is looking for employment and gives him a job. The resulting complications make an exceedingly interesting and funny tale. Webster Campbell is also seen in this comedy. Its filming was supervised by William Wolbert.

Frank Daniels in "Kernel Nutt, the Footman," is seen as one of the army of the unemployed. John T. Kelly and Alice Washburn assist in the funmaking. C. Jay Williams produced this comedy, which is the latest of the "Kernel Nutt" series.

Lillian Walker is seen in "The Lonelies." William Shea and Edwina Robbins make up the remainder of the cast. Wilfrid North directs.

"Carew and Son" is the story of the machinations of an adventuress. Charles Kent, Mary Maurice, Walter McGrail and Belle Bruce portray the leading roles. Harry Davenport is responsible for its production.

V-L-S-E Releases for June

Four Vitagraphs, a Lubin, a Selig and an Essanay Make up the Big Four Program

THE four companies which make up the Big Four have been diligent in presenting for the month of June an array of high tensioned features to assure exhibitors that their summer business will be up to the same standard as that of the cool months.

The four features that the Vitagraph Company has contributed to the June program consist of the first appearance of Lucille Lee Stewart, the new Vitagraph star, in "The Destroyers," a dramatization of James Oliver Curwood's dynamic novel, "Peter God." "The Destroyers" has been directed by Ralph W. Ince, and will be released in five parts. The other Vitagraph releases will be "The Redemption of Dave Darcey," in which James Morrison is featured, and supported by Belle Bruce and Billy Billings; "Winifred, the Shop Girl," which features Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno, and "Fathers of Men," which features Robert Edson and Naomi Childers.

Edgar Lewis for Lubin has produced a powerful drama in which Nance O'Neil is featured. "The Toilers," written by Daniel Carson Goodman, will be released in five parts. The Selig contribution to the June program will be an appealing drama, "The Valiants of Virginia," which conveys the spirit of the hospitable South to a marked degree.

The Essanay release for June features Warda Howard, supported by Ernest Maupain, Duncan McRae and John Lorenz in "That Sort," a drama which gives a glimpse of the beauty of the Riviera and the glamor of Monte Carlo.

General Film Service Program

No Weak Links in the Offering for Week of May 29.

VARIETY, snap and punch aplenty characterize General Film programs for the week of May 29 to June 3, if information from the General Film Company's publicity department may be relied upon—and when did a publicity department ever fail in its duty?

Beginning Monday, May 29, Selig releases "The Hare and the Tortoise," in which Fritz Brunette is featured. This production is especially attractive inasmuch as Miss Brunette's versatility. "The Rich Idler," a Vitagraph comedy, precedes "The House With Closed Shutters," a Biograph drama, and Lubin's "Fribly Frilled," a comedy, and the Selig-Tribune News Service add strength to the day's program.

Essanay, Tuesday, offers an all-star, two-reel drama; Kalem supplies a comedy, "A Bunch of Flivvers," and Lubin strengthens the day's releases with "The Final Payment," a two-reel drama. Edison provides a real climax with "Helen of the Chorus," featuring Sally Crute and Herbert Pryor.

"A Smokey Adventure" is the first offering Wednesday. This is a Kalem comedy of the high standard established by that company. Essanay provides a one-reel drama that remains to be christened, and Edison supplies a one-reel comedy. Biograph releases a three-part drama, "Woman Against Woman." The gentler sex is again represented in the feature of the day, a Biograph release in five parts, "The Woman in Black." In this, Lionel Barrymore and Millicent Evans have stellar roles.

Lubin for Thursday offers "The Code of the Hills," in three parts; Vim comes forward with "Schemers," a comedy, reinforced by the Selig-Tribune animated news of the day.

"Shadows," a three-part Knickerbocker Star Feature, ushers in the Friday program, with "Sis, the Detective," a Kalem comedy of the "Sis Hopkins" series, as a follow-up. Then, to make the laugh a long one, "The Lonelies," by Vitagraph, and "The Land Lubber," by Vim, each a one-reel comedy, will be unleashed.

For Saturday, Essanay provides a three-part drama, "Oui People," featuring Bryant Washburn; Lubin comes forward with a one-reel comedy, "Pickles and Diamonds"; Vitagraph strengthens the day's program with "Carew and Son," in which Charles Kent is starred. Then follows the most interesting episode of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen" series, entitled "The Spiked Switch." The week will be closed with the Selig one-part drama, "Crooked Trails."

! Pretentious Showing at Rialto

California Motion Picture Corporation Secures Big New York Theater to Present "The Woman Who Dared" to the Trade.

A TRADE showing of the new California Motion Picture Corporation feature, "The Woman Who Dared," with Beatriz Michelena, is announced for the Rialto Theater, New York City, for 10 a. m. Friday, June 30. Alexander E. Beyfus, general manager of the California company, has just arranged the affair and the big new theater has been taken over for the showing, complete with all of its equipment. The regular thirty-five piece symphony orchestra will play a special musical score which has been arranged for the picture and S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto, will superintend the trade screening.

It is announced that the sale of States Rights on the big picture will begin immediately after the showing in New York. This means that "The Woman Who Dared" will probably attract to New York many prospective buyers from as far west as Denver, Col., who have already made bids for the feature on the strength of the success which they made with the California company's previous "Better Than Program" release, "The Unwritten Law"; this last named picture was first shown the trade in New York City and some days later in Chicago but nowhere on as pretentious a scale as will be attempted at the Rialto.

"The Woman who Dared" will be an eight-part release. Miss Michelena, the star in the production, is supported by a number of the California players who scored with her in "The Unwritten Law" and the production which has required approximately eight months for its completion is said to be a particularly elaborate one. The story has a timely interest in that it has to do with diplomatic intrigue in the courts of Europe.

Canada's Fighting Forces

Official Motion Pictures of Canadian Contingent Will Be Shown in the United States.

HAVING just completed a tour of Canadian cities, "Canada's Fighting Forces," the official Dominion Government films, will be given their initial showing in the United States in Boston on June 12, opening an engagement at one of the leading theaters, under the management of Edwin Bower Hesser, acting for the Canadian authorities.

While these pictures, taken by Lieut. D. J. Dwyer, the official government photographer, have created intense enthusiasm throughout Canada, as is quite natural, they will undoubtedly be very interesting also to Americans as showing the extensive military activity going on within a few miles of the international boundary, and the important part being taken in the great war by Canadian soldiers. Few in the United States realize the magnitude of the effort being made in Canada, where already 300,000 men have been enlisted for active service, and a great part of them sent overseas to England and France.

"Canada's Fighting Forces" is just what the title implies: a record, dealing with the soldiers of Canada, without any attempt to portray actual warfare, unless we may designate as such a remarkably interesting set of animated diagrams shown on the screen and illustrating in a graphic manner all the changes in the lines during the historic battle of Ypres, where the Germans, by their first use of asphyxiating gas, broke through the French lines and the Canadians "saved the situation." A drawing, representing a bird's-eye view of the district, is shown, and the use of the block system in illustrating the changing tides of battle during the three-day fight becomes positively thrilling, accompanied, as it is, by a vigorous description by Sergeant Fred ("Doc") Wells of the Seventh Battalion of British Columbia, who was in charge of a platoon in this battle, lost his left arm through machine gun fire, was taken prisoner by the Germans and, after spending several months in a prison camp, succeeded in being exchanged and returned to England—by consistently feigning insanity.

Any review which neglected to give due credit to the part his "lecture" plays in the success of the film would be unjust. It is one-armed "Doc" Wells, dressed in the neat uniform of the Canadian sergeant, who raises the entire performance to its high plane of sustained interest. In addition to accompanying the film with explanations and anecdotes, he delivers, after the fourth reel, a twenty-minute talk dealing with his experiences in the German prison camp. Possessed of abundant "personality," and with an unbounded stock of humor, he sways the audience from laughter to applause—and always back again to laughter, and where the film without the lecturer might become slightly tiresome to those who have seen a great deal of this sort of thing, Sergeant Wells keeps the interest at a high pitch throughout. In all parts of Canada the record of the entertainment has been that at each engagement the business has shown a consistent increase after the first performance; and this is, after all, the final test of any attraction.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS.

In continuation of its campaign through the films for "Better Babies" the Paramount Picture Corporation will show in the seventeenth release of the Pictographs, its "magazine on the screen," the correct method of physical training for the boy who has his years in the schoolroom ahead of him. This feature of the motion picture propaganda, which is teaching mothers how to make their children healthier, contains the following camera lessons for parents to guide them in training the boy:

How to tell the "kiddies" to walk Indian-footed to avoid twisted joints and broken arches. The old-fashioned method of standing with the toes turned out has proved more injurious than otherwise, so the modern child keeps his feet parallel while walking.

How the child should be taught to sit in the classroom so that he will not become stooped. Round shoulders cause lung troubles.

How the child should breathe, inhaling and exhaling. Correct breathing is the basic principles of "method" in physical training.

MASTERS BACK ON THE JOB.

E. L. Masters, advertising manager of the V-L-S-E, has returned to his desk after a week in the hospital for what was supposed to be appendicitis. It wasn't—hence his early return.

"Billy" Sherwood, Metro Juvenile Lead

WILLIAM SHERWOOD, who plays the juvenile lead in "The Spell of the Yukon," in which Edmund Breese is starred, and which was produced by the Metro-Popular Plays and Players, is a graduate of Tulane University in Louisiana, and had hoped to be an architect. But in 1908, while attending a preparatory school, he was awarded a gold medal for his recitation of the "Polish Boy," and that set him to thinking. In fact, it veered him clear off his chosen path, and from that moment he decided to be an actor.

During his first year in Tulane University he attracted attention by unusual histrionic ability. At the end of the season the class chose George Ade's "County Chairman" for its annual production and "Billy" though a freshman, was given the leading role, that of the old picturesque chairman.

Mr. Sherwood is an all-around athlete and won the walking contest in the A. A. U. championship walk of the South. Before joining Metro he was the leading man for Marguerite Courtot in the "Ventures of Marguerite," and also appeared as the juvenile with John Barrymore in "The Lost Bridegroom."

In "The Spell of the Yukon" he has an excellent part and one that is admirably fitted to his talents. Evelyn Brent plays opposite him in this production, and they will be seen together in subsequent Metro subjects.

William Sherwood.

Harry Dunkinson

ESSANAY'S most jovial comedian has been picked to play the part of "the grouch" in a forthcoming three-reel release of that title. It is Harry Dunkinson, who almost constantly wears a smile and was never known to have a grouch in his life. He says it is his first experience, but that he knows what they are like by watching others.

Mr. Dunkinson, always good in comedy parts, has developed wonderfully lately in taking funny leads. There is no slapstick in his work.

It is genuine and subtle humor and it gets across, as was testified to by the reception by the public of his work in "Separating from Sarah," "The Misleading Lady" and "Mr. Butties," to say nothing of the George Ade comedies, in which he has appeared innumerable times.

Mr. Dunkinson is as clever an entertainer in real life as he is on the screen. He was born in New York City, and after an education in the public schools went on the stage at the age of nineteen. He played in drama, musical comedies and in vaudeville for twenty-five years before joining Essanay. With this breadth of experience it was found that he was exceptionally well qualified for cinema work, a channel of activity in which he has been making good ever since.

Harry Dunkinson.

Mutual Releases for Week of May 29

"Other People's Money" and "The Man from Manhattan" Are Top Liners.

THE big offerings topping Mutual releases for the week of May 29 are, "The Man from Manhattan," May 31, an American production, featuring William Stowell and Rhea Mitchell, and "Other People's Money," May 29, from the Thanhouser studios, with Gladys Hulette as the star.

In addition to these five-part feature productions, the Mutual releases for the same week offer a three-part feature and four two-reel subjects diverse in story and locale and presenting a host of popular Mutual players. Seven single-reel comedies and three exceptionally interesting single-reel feature releases, round off the Mutual offerings for the week of May 29.

"The Man from Manhattan" was prepared for the screen by J. Edward Hungerford and filmed under the direction of Jack Holloway. William Stowell, as the "city fellow," and Rhea Mitchell, as the daughter of the coming political boss, head a cast of capable players including Jack Prescott, Perry Banks, Warren Ellsworth and Charles Wheelock.

"Other People's Money" is a startling production in many ways, for it serves to bring to the public attention the numerous methods pursued by the "get-rich quick" men. Franine Fraunholtz heads a company of noted players appearing in Gladys Hulette's support. J. H. Gilmour, Kathryn Adams and Yale Benner appear in support of the principal players.

Winnifred Greenwood is the featured player of "The Trail of the Thief," June 1, and the three-reel feature release of the week. Edward Cohan plays opposite the star, and in their support are George Field, Jack Farrell, George Armstrong, Anna Morrison, Marie Van Tassel and several others of equal note.

"The Release of Dan Forbes," with William Stowell and Helene Rosson the featured players, which goes to the public May 29, is the first of the two-reel feature releases of the week.

"The Nymph," with Barbara Gilroy and Robert Vaughn, is the Thanhouser two-reel offering to be released May 30. "A Man's Friend," June 2, with Art Acord and Nita Davis, is the two-reel Mustang feature. The Centaur two-part release, featuring Margaret Gibson, will go to the public June 3, under the title of "Clouds in Sunshine Valley." "Disguisers," a Falstaff comedy, for the week include "Disguisers," May 29, another of the comedies featuring Claude Cooper and Frank E. McNish in the roles of Oscar and Conrad and "Perkins' Pitiful Plight," June 3, with Bert Delaney and Gladys Leslie.

"The Comet's Come-Back," with Carol Holloway and John Sheehan, is set for May 31, and "Ima Knutt Gets a Bite" for June 4, starring Orral Humphrey. These are the "Beauty" offerings of the week.

"Shy Thirty Cents," May 30, with Rube Miller and Madge Kirby in the principal roles, leads the Vogue laughmakers, followed by "When Papa Died," June 4, starring Ben Turpin, the new Vogue-Mutual comedian.

Billy Armstrong is the featured player in "Sawdust Love," Cub, June 30.

Mutual Weekly No. 74 is released May 31. The fourth edition of "Reel Life," the Mutual Film's Magazine, a recent feature addition to the weekly service, will be released as usual on Sunday, June 4.

Planet Soon to Begin Work

First Four Subjects to be Made at Raver Studios Will be Three Five and One Eight Reeler.

THE Raver studios and laboratory, which are now nearing completion at Rockville Centre, L. I., will be used by the Planet Film Corporation for the production of its pictures.

Harry R. Raver, vice-president and general manager of the Planet Film Corporation, is personally supervising the work which is being carried on at the Raver studios.

The Planet Film Corporation intends to start work just as soon as the studios are finished. The first picture will be a five reel adaptation of either a well-known play or novel, featuring some road star, one that is known equally as well in the small cities and towns as on Broadway. This will be followed by two more of the same length and then an eight reel feature will be released.

As it will be necessary to work on two pictures at the same time the original studio plans have been altered somewhat to allow for more space for the directors. The initial floor space of 30 by 60 feet has been increased to 30 by 120 feet.

Metro to Issue Travelogue

Beginning May 29 It Will Release Weekly Studies of Bird Life and General Scenic Subjects.

THE Metro Travelogues, a weekly feature, will have its first release May 29, under the auspices of the Metro Pictures Corporation. These features embrace a wide range of subjects including truly wonderful studies in animal and bird life and glimpses of the most interesting and picturesque locales in the world.

Unlike similar travelogues heretofore presented upon the screen, the Metro weekly features will carry a predominating element of humor in the animal and bird studies. The seemingly impossible has been obtained in the humorous "close-ups" of bird life. Real downright tragedies of their everyday life are presented, but they do not strike the spectators as seriously as they evidently do the birds. On the other hand, they provoke a laugh and are bound to arouse the interest of the most hardened critic and cynic.

William Lovelle Finley, biologist for Oregon, is the genius responsible for these intimate pictures of the bird and animal life. He has succeeded in penetrating the privacy of these interesting phases of their lives and the result is distinctly novel and interesting.

There is no end to the wonderful scenic beauties presented in the Metro Travelogues. Not the least of these is the feature dealing with the gigantic construction work being carried on under government supervision in the construction of the Elephant Butte dam and irrigation project on the Rio Grande near El Paso. This dam, which has just been completed, will store more water than any other reservoir in the world, and will be the means of converting a useless desert into a wonderful agricultural country. The dam is located 120 miles north of El Paso, and the motion pictures show many exceedingly interesting engineering feats. All these films were edited by the United States Department of the Interior before being released to Metro.

There are many scenic offerings in the Metro Travelogues, including an automobile trip over the Lincoln Highway, showing the most picturesque localities of that famous route. No expense or effort will be spared to keep up the high standard established in the first travelogues pictures now in the vaults of the Metro plant, and the world will be scored for novelties and special features.

Busy Days for Selznick

Clara Kimball Young Features Attract a Host of Exhibitors—"The Common Law" the First.

THERE are no busier offices in the film industry these days than the general headquarters of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation and Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., in the new Film Building at Forty-ninth street and Seventh avenue. With the opening of the New York Exchange in charge of Sol J. Berman, late of Bluebird and World Film, many local and up-state exhibitors are seeking franchises to present the feature pictures of Miss Young in their theatres, beginning with the first of the new company's releases, "The Common Law," by Robert W. Chambers.

In Philadelphia Stanley Mastbaum and W. B. Smith, Mr. Selznick's partners in the distribution of Miss Young's pictures in Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, are taking care of hundreds of applications daily, while in Detroit Harry I. Garson, the Michigan representative, is equally busy. The demand for "The Common Law," and the subsequent Clara Kimball Young productions, appears to be of universal strength and proves that the beautiful and talented screen star is one of the greatest drawing cards in the business.

The engagement of Albert Capellani as director general of the producing company is another stroke for which Miss Young and Mr. Selznick are being generally congratulated. Mr. Capellani has been identified with some of Miss Young's greatest productions, among them "Camille," and knows her possibilities better than any director in the profession. He has already begun to prepare his own scenario from Mr. Chambers' novel, "The Common Law," working both in collaboration with Miss Young and the noted author himself.

LILLIAN M. RUBENSTEIN IN NEW YORK.

Lillian M. Rubenstein, who for over a year has been writing articles on scenarios which have been printed in many newspapers, especially in the South, has for the past week been visiting in New York. Miss Rubenstein for two years was scenario editor for the Lubin Company.

Five Famous Players for June

Peggy Hyland and Ann Pennington Make Their First Appearance With This Company.

FOR June the Famous Players will release five big productions. These photoplays are of especial interest because, in addition to containing the names of the stars who have been long associated with the Famous Players, the list contains the names of several players who, though celebrated on stage or screen, are appearing for the first time under the banner of the Famous Players—namely Peggy Hyland, the British star, who makes her debut in an adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' "Saints and Sinners."

Another newcomer is Ann Pennington, the Ziegfeld "Follies" artist, who makes her first appearance on the screen in "Susie Snowflake." Louis Huff, featured in many productions for other concerns, whose delightful work in the Famous Players' adaptation of Denman Thompson's "The Old Homestead," has won her a permanent place on the latter company's roster, is featured in "Destiny's Toy," with William Courtleigh, Jr., playing opposite her.

"The Evil Thereof," a powerful morality play written by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, is released June 5. Chief in a strong cast is Frank Losee, whose work in many Famous Players productions, notably in Denman Thompson's own role in "The Old Homestead," has made him one of the most popular figures on the screen. Grace Valentine, Crauford Kent and others of equal prominence are in the cast.

On June 12, Marguerite Clark will star in "Silks and Satins," a delightful combination of comedy and drama, which opens in the present and goes back to mediaeval times. Appearing with Louis Huff in "Destiny's Toy," which is to be released on June 15, is William Courtleigh, Jr., who has been seen recently with Marguerite Clark in "Out of the Drifts," and with Valentine Grant in "The Innocent Lie." The exteriors for this play of romance and adventure were taken on picturesque Block Island.

"Susie Snowflake," Ann Pennington's introductory vehicle, will be released June 22. This is a delightful comedy-drama of musical comedy life which is peculiarly suited to the diminutive star, in view of the fact that her whole theatrical career has been devoted to this branch of stage activity. Pauline Frederick stars in "The World's Great Snare," an adaptation of the well-known novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim, on June 26. This is one of the most powerful dramas in which Miss Frederick has yet appeared, dealing as it does with the elemental life of a western mining town.

Pallas Pictures Engage Adelaide Woods

ADELAIDE WOODS, well known among patrons of the screen through her effective portrayal of character leads, has been engaged by Pallas Pictures to appear in important roles.

Miss Woods has appeared on the screen some three years, having been identified with Biograph for two years. After six months with Balboa she returned to Biograph where she remained until the closing of the West Coast studio of that concern. Her greatest work on the screen was evidenced in "Paths That Crossed" in which she scored a personal triumph. Preceding her affiliation with motion pictures Miss Woods played on the concert stage in many successes for your years.

As Mrs. Cleave in "The American Beauty" a forthcoming Pallas Pictures subject starring Myrtle Stedman, Miss Woods will make her initial appearance before patrons of theaters showing Paramount productions. In this character she is given a particularly difficult part and it is readily expected that "The American Beauty" will offer her an opportunity to register her greatest characterization on the screen.

Jourjon Expected in New York

Head of Eclair Company, Now in the Trenches at Verdun, Gets Leave of Absence to Straighten Out Affairs of American Branch.

CLAUDE PATIN, of the Beacon Films Company, is authority for the information that Lieutenant Charles Jourjon, now at the battle front with his command in the Verdun sector, has been granted leave of absence, contingent upon the apparent breakdown of the German offensive operation at Verdun, and will presently visit New York to straighten out the affairs of the American Eclair Film Company, of which he was the head when war was declared against France in August, 1914. It will be remembered that Mr. Jourjon and his associates, Claude Patin, also an officer of the Eclair Company, immediately returned to France at the opening of hostilities and offered their services to their country. Both were of the reserves. Mr. Jourjon was assigned to an infantry regiment and Mr. Patin, owing to defective eyesight, was assigned as an interpreter to the British forces and afterwards was retired from active duty.

How long he will be permitted to remain on this visit is not known, but when the war is finished and peace established, Mr. Jourjon will take up the rehabilitation of the Eclair Company in a large way. He has many plans to this end that are big and which will place the Eclair Company up in front ranks of motion picture producers and distributors.

E. G. BRIGGS, ONE OF PATHE'S YOUNG MEN.

E. G. Briggs, assistant manager of the Pathe Exchange in Albany, is still young in years but old in film experience. As a booking agent he is a magnetizer of exhibitors. Recently he returned from a "drive" through his territory richly laden with bookings for "The Iron Claw." He knows his territory like a book and he is welcome in every theater. Mr. Briggs, being a young man and very much alive, has grasped the fact that the exhibitor is getting to be an important personage in the film industry, hence his ardent desire to co-operate with the exhibitor and hence his unquestioned success. He has seen film service with the Exclusive, with the Fox Film Company and with the True Feature Company. Everywhere he has made a splendid record. Briggs served his country as a volunteer in the Philippines and has gone through some most interesting experiences.

QUICK WORK GETTING RACES ON SCREEN.

The interest New York City took in the automobile races at Sheephead Bay Saturday, May 13, caused the Mutual Weekly to satisfy the demand for pictures of the events by showing them the same evening in leading Broadway theaters. The work was done under the editorial eye of Fell Mitchell, who has charge of the Weekly. Although not leaving the track until the light failed, the film was prepared at the Gaumont Laboratories, Flushing, N. Y., in time to be run off for the patrons of the Strand, the Rialto, and the Palace, the three representative New York houses showing pictures. In addition to these prints, a fourth was made and shown at the Motion picture Exposition held at Madison Square Garden.

MISS BARRISCALE IN TRAGEDY ROLE.

From the "Balkans," the setting for the last Bessie Barriscale picture, "Bullets and Brown Eyes," the Triangle star, has gone to "Venice" for her forthcoming release, "The Sorrows of Love." Advance information indicates that this new Ince feature is a powerful drama with plenty of suspense and stirring action, an absorbing love story and that almost unknown quantity of the films—a tragic ending. At least, the lovers are separated by the death of one, while the other returns to the convent from which she had gone on an errand of mercy.

MINUSA FOR NEW GRAND CENTRAL.

The New Grand Central Theater of St. Louis, owned by one of the most popular exhibitors in America, Mr. Seivers, is about to project its photoplays on a Minus Gold Fibre Screen, the Minusa Company having been given the specifications of the house, with instructions to build a screen for Mr. Seivers that will give him the results that he is looking for.

Two Big Essanays Coming

Henry Walthall and Edna Mayo Will Each Head a Cast in Special Productions.

Two more Essanay feature productions, one presenting Henry B. Walthall and the other Edna Mayo, which will be released on the V-L-S-E program, have been announced by President George K. Spoor. "The Little Musketeer" was written by Charles Mortimer Peck especially for Mr. Walthall. It is in five acts. Mr. Walthall, who is making a short visit to his home in Birmingham, Ala., will return to the Essanay studios in a few days and take up work on this new feature, which is exceptionally well adapted to bring out his strong portrayal of emotions.

Mr. Walthall will be given opportunity to present his versatility in portraying character in this piece, as he takes two parts, the roles of two brothers, one the scapegoat of the family and the other its mainstay. Neither is guilty of crime, but each thinks that the other is and does everything in his power to shield his brother.

"The Return of Eve," also in five acts, is the vehicle in which Miss Mayo will next appear in feature productions. It is a strong drama, written by Lee Wilson Dodd and adapted by H. S. Sheldon, and is exceptionally suitable to her talents.

The story is of the Garden of Eden brought down to date. A boy and girl brought up on a desert island finally taste civilized life. It disgusts them, but when they go back to their island they find that they have eaten of the fruit of the tree of knowledge and their Eden is an Eden no longer. They are barred as effectually as were Adam and Eve by the flaming sword.

Essanay's short-reel releases, which it is producing with as much care as it does its features, have been booked through July and are just announced by Mr. Spoor.

Among the strong two-reelers is a fable by George Ade, that of the "Peculiar Feud Between the First Families." This is the first of Mr. Ade's fables to be released in two reels. The one-reel releases for the month consist of a Canimated Nooz Pictorial, cartoons on events of the day by Wallace A. Carlson, Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of New Orleans and two of Ade's fables.

The three-reel releases consist of "The Regeneration of Margaret," presenting Warda Howard and John Junior; "Power," featuring Sydney Ainsworth and Nell Craig; "Secret of the Night," featuring Sydney Ainsworth, Lillian Drew and John Lorenz; and "The Grouch," presenting Harry Beaumont, Harry Dunkinson and John Cossar.

Would Knit Film Factors

Charles W. Allen, President Unity Sales Corporation, Aims to Bring Together Maker, Exchange and Exhibitor.

CHARLES W. ALLEN, president of the newly-formed Unity Sales Corporation, brings to the film industry new ideals. Mr. Allen's primary object in founding the Unity was, as the name implies, to knit closer the interests of the manufacturer, the exchange man and the exhibitor. Mr. Allen's plans, which he has worked out with Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity, aim at idealizing the distribution end of the business and giving the manufacturer better profits and the exchange men and exhibitors a good and consistent grade of pictures.

Mr. Allen, who is a brother of Viola Allen, and managed her for many years, has a reputation for business ability and artistic sense in the theatrical profession. He brings to the film business the accumulated knowledge of his long experience in this branch of art. He is himself a producer, having to his credit several feature productions, among them "Diana," an elaborate photodrama starring Paul Swann and the Baroness De Wit, and "The Boy Scout," by the late Richard Harding Davis.

The Unity has ambitious plans for the future and has already distributed two features, Tom Terriss in "My Country First," a photoplay dealing with preparedness and patriotism, and "The Pursuing Vengeance," starring Sheldon Lewis, with Jane Meredith and Henry Mortimer. Mr. Allen announces that in the near future the firm has announcements to make which will be of interest to the industry at large.

"Our policy of service and co-operation to the manufacturer and exhibitor on our new system of mutual understanding has resulted in an instant response," said Mr. Cobe. "In fact, the results of our announcement of our plans have exceeded even our own expectation. As I said before, our plan embraces what I might term the new evangelism of the business. Consistency in the standard of our pictures and strict supervision of every print and every feature is not the least important part of our policy as exchangers and exhibitors will realize. I intend to see to it personally that our slogan, 'The concern with a conscience,' is no idle phrase, but one which will be lived up to in everything it implies."

Claire Alexander

A SECLUDED place in filmdom: four weeks ago—a leading woman today. That is the accomplishment of tiny Claire Alexander, who through her excellent work and thorough understanding of the parts assigned her has been signed to a contract at the David Horsley studios and in the future will be seen in the leading feminine roles in support of George Ovey, star of the Cub Comedies.

Four weeks ago, Miss Alexander, a little miss who lacks two inches of being five feet tall, was guided to the Horsley institution by her big brown eyes and a desire to cast aside the more dramatic side of the silent drama for comedy.

She was given a hearing. She told of having had about a year's experience before the camera and frankly admitted that most of her work was in the background, but occasionally a "bit" was given her to do.

Director Milton H. Fahrney, who has supervised the Cub Comedy Company ever since that brand of pictures has been produced at the Horsley studios, became interested in the young woman and consented to give her a trial. It was at a time when Mr. Fahrney was casting his net about to find a capable young actress "big" enough to handle leads in support of Mr. Ovey.

"The Traitor" was the first picture in which Miss Alexander was cast. A small part was assigned to her and her work and understanding of what was wanted impressed her director as well as everyone else who witnessed her performance.

In "Preparedness," the next Cub Comedy to be filmed, Miss Alexander was seen in a larger part and she was given even a bigger role in Mr. Ovey's next picture, "Jerry's Perfect Day." Then came "Jerry's Big Lark," and at the conclusion of that comedy Director Fahrney was convinced that he need go no further in his search for a leading woman.

HARRY O. HOYT AS SING SING WARDEN.

Harry O. Hoyt, chief of scenario writers at the Metro-Rolfe studio, has added another mark to his well-known versatility by his appearance before the camera in the role of the "Warden at Sing Sing," in "Notorious Gallagher."

LUBIN CALIFORNIA PRODUCTIONS.

Forthcoming releases from the California studios of the Lubin Company are May 30, "The Final Payment," two acts; June 1, "The Code of the Hills," three acts; June 8, "The Scapegoat," three acts; June 13, "The Avenger," two acts; June 15, "Sons of the Sea," three acts; June 22, "The Stolen Mariner," three acts. Each production was made under the personal direction of Captain Wilbert Melville.

WMAN MAKING GOOD AS BOOKER.

Miss Effie L. Ross came a year ago to the Pittsburgh office of the V-L-S-E in stenographic capacity knowing absolutely nothing about pictures. Being extremely apt, she quickly picked up the finer points, and became conversant with the business, the actors, and the vocabulary of the exchange. She has been advanced to the booking department and is reported to be most efficient. Manager Child has yet to receive a complaint from anyone who has been treated unfairly or ungraciously. Miss Ross is a college graduate.

San Francisco Fair on Screen

Ten Thousand Feet of Scenic Film Will Be Released Weekly in Eight Hundred Foot Lengths.

THE president of the Exposition Players' Corporation George A. Collins, arrived in New York from the Coast last week, at which time a deal was consummated whereby E. M. Asher takes over the world's rights for 75,000 feet of negative, which covers the complete history of the World's Fair which closed in San Francisco last December. The Exposition Players Corporation controlled the exclusive and only franchise which permitted the taking of scenic pictures inside the exposition grounds, and which is in full effect until July, 1917.

The compiling of the negative, which is due to arrive in New York next week, required almost two years of preparation, none of which has ever been released.

Mr. Asher announces the pictures will be ready for release in about two weeks, and after being cut to ten thousand feet will be marketed as a serial in eight hundred foot lengths at the rate of one each week, as follows: "A Story," "Gardens and Buildings," "Palaces," "Architecture," "Sculpture and Statuary," "Aviation," "Lighting and Night Illuminations," "Natives from Foreign Climes," etc.

KALEM FILMS "THE LOTUS WOMAN."

KALEM announces the release on June 20, through the regular General Film Service, of "The Lotus Woman," a five-reel drama staged by Harry Millarde. The producer also takes a leading role in the picture, which features Alice Hollister, the "original screen vampire" in the title role.

The work of staging "The Lotus Woman" carried the players from New York to Jacksonville and St. Augustine, Fla., and over four months of labor was necessary before the final touches could be put to it. The story carries the action from New York to a Latin American republic. The thrilling battles of a Central American revolution required the use of over five hundred soldiers.

Alice Hollister has never had a role offering the strong opportunities of "The Lotus Woman," and her work in the colorful part is said to be the best of her long screen career. In addition to Harry Millarde, Arthur Albertson is another Kalem favorite seen in the feature.

The unusual atmosphere of the story is greatly enhanced by the seventeenth century background of St. Augustine and its historic forts.

CHANGES IN V-L-S-E. FORCES.

In line with the policy of the V-L-S-E. to promote its members from the ranks, the company announces the promotion of H. E. Stillwell, who has been bookkeeper for the Atlanta Branch, to cover the territory in Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee as salesman.

L. E. Schaffer, who has been with the Denver branch since it was made a buying office, and who has covered the territories in Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, Montana, West Nebraska and Western South Dakota, has been promoted to assistant branch manager of the Denver exchange.

Patrick Doyle, who has had extensive experience with the Fox Film Corporation, and the World Film Corporation, now becomes associated with the Montreal office as salesman.

E. K. LINCOLN WITH WORLD FILM.

E. K. Lincoln, one of the youngest and most popular of photoplay stars and until recently the head and principal star in the concern producing under the E. K. Lincoln banner, joined forces with the World Film Corporation recently and will begin work under the direction of Robert Thornby at the Paragon Studio. The first production will be an elaborate affair, entitled "The Almighty Dollar," and in the production Mr. Lincoln will have as fellow players Frances Nelson, last seen in "Human Druitwood," and June Elvidge, whose work in "The Hand of Peril," and "The Closed Road," created so favorable an impression.

For years Mr. Lincoln was featured by the Vitaphone and Lubin companies and it was through the medium of short subjects that his popularity was constructed.

EUTERMARKS TAKES "THE OTHER GIRL"

The Raver Film Corporation production, "The Other Girl," taken from the stage success by Augustus Thomas, has been purchased for the Eastern Pennsylvania territory by Mr. Eutermarks of the Pennsylvania Feature Film Company of Philadelphia.

Essanay vs. Chaplin

Plaintiff Alleges That the Comedian Still Owes Four Comedies Under His Contract.

THE complaint in the action of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company against Charles Chaplin, the bringing of which suit was noted in these columns several weeks ago, alleges that Chaplin agreed to make ten comedies in a specified time for which he was to receive a bonus of $10,000 in addition to a weekly salary of $1,250. The company admits that he made six of these pictures, but that he failed to make the other four. It is this failure that is the basis of the Essanay suit and the value of each picture is estimated at $125,000 making a total of $500,000 for the lot.

It is further stated by the counsel for the plaintiff that Chaplin was paid a total of $180,000 during the time he was employed by the Essanay Company.

In the suit of Chaplin against the Essanay Company for an injunction preventing the distribution of the "Burlesque on Carmen," Judge Hotchkiss dismissed the application in a decision rendered Monday, May 22.

TANDY WITH WORLD FILM.

Vice-president Tandy of the Southern Paramount Company, New Orleans, La., has bought the rights for the World Film Corporation productions for the South and has formed the Southern World Film Corporation.

"UNIVERSAL" FLAHERTY VISITS NEW YORK.

F. J. Flaherty, of the Universal Film Exchange of Chicago, spent a week at the Universal offices in New York attending a conference regarding the sale of state rights of "Pawlowa," "Where are My Children" and other Universal productions, returning to Chicago on Saturday, May 20. He reports business in the Middle West as very good.

MAY ABANDON THEATER TAX

It is learned on good authority that when the Ways and Means Committee of Congress commence the consideration of the proposed omnibus measure for providing revenue for the maintenance of the government provision will be made for the abolition of the special taxes under the war emergency revenue law to take effect July 1. This will relieve exhibitors from the further payment of the tax assessed upon their theaters according to seating capacity.

HARVEY CLOSES WITH ACTORS' FUND CAMPAIGN.

The remarkably successful publicity of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund was handled by E. L. Harvey, who resigned from the assistant city editorship of the Evening Journal to take up the work. The campaign is drawing to a close and Mr. Harvey is undecided whether to return to newspaper work or remain in the film business, in which he has had several flattering offers.

UNIVERSAL SEEKING REGULAR SCRIPTS.

Helen Starr, scenario editor of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announces that she is in need of "regular" scripts. She is not interested in embryo amateur efforts. Work from established photoplaywrights will be welcomed and purchased with avidity. The Universal Company is in need of one and two-reel comedies and one, two and five-reel dramas. The scenario department at 1600 Broadway, New York, buys for both the eastern and western studios.

METRO'S "PICTURES MAGAZINE" GROWING FAST.

The "Pictures Magazine," a weekly publication devoted to motion pictures and their activities, which started about seven months ago, with a circulation of approximately 100,000, has now reached and passed the million mark. The marvelously rapid growth of this publication's circulation is a most notable achievement. There are few publications, of any character, that have a wider circulation.

Arthur James, director of Metro publicity and editor of the "Pictures Magazine," explaining the cause of the magazine's enormous growth in such a short space of time, says motion pictures are the entertainment of the masses and that next to seeing motion pictures the public likes to read about them.

Arrangements have been completed for a noteworthy series of articles from the pens of the foremost artists now appearing on the screen.

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs"

A Splendid Lasky Production in Which the New Star, May Murray, Shows to Better Advantage.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS feature comes up to the expectations which the public nowadays entertain when a Lasky production is on the program. "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" is a charming story told about the interesting people who lived in a picturesque age. May Murray, the star of the play, finds the part of a very beautiful and lively girl much more to her taste than the role she essayed at her first attempt in the drama of the screen. Miss Murray made a dainty lovable Kitty Bellairs; she was, as the French put it, "trem femme." Her girlish graces, her innocent witchery, her sweet roguishness are bound to captivate every audience. The young people will be delighted beyond measure of course, but May Murray's rendition of the coquettish little beauty will win smiles from the males and females of a tougher age.

The ever-conscientious efforts of the art director, Alfred Buckland, in beautifying pictures and choosing the best possible settings indoors and outdoors, are very much in evidence in this delightful feature. It is the first Lasky picture directed by Mr. James Young, and to this capable and gifted man belongs not a little of the credit for the undoubted success of the picture. There was a variety of those pretty and novel lighting effects which help to characterize the Lasky school of motion picture art. Altogether "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" is likely to go to the top of the ladder of Lasky film plays. Miss Murray had good support with the exception of Tom Forman, who was obviously miscast for the part of Lord Verney. Not that the young man was lacking in earnestness or in good intentions. He no doubt tried to do his best, but the part might have fared infinitely better in more skilled hands.

"The Sins of Men"

A Farce—Comic Characters Come in for Christmas Dinner and the Old Man Has Bad Dream—Fox Offering.

By Hanford C. Judson.

LOSE-UPS of passion scenes, and it makes no matter at all that some character in the picture only dreams them, are out of place and reprehensible in a picture like this. Lust draws the eyes in and gathers up the muscles of the cheeks and the spectator in his animallism sees it as an animal unless his humanity has been kept awake by intellectual considerations suggested by the picture's inner meaning. Twice in this farce there is pictured the whispered conversation that precedes seduction—in one scene the victim is a young girl and the film would be much more commendable if the scene were out of it. The story of the picture will show why the spectator is not compelled to see and think about seduction from the human side. It is an easy thing for a player coldly to make his face imitate passion of this kind.

The mainpaign of the action is a book full of diabolical philosophy that an author is tempted to write for the money in it. The publisher tells him the people want that kind of stuff. Three or four subtitles give the quality of the book—we get somewhat more than a taste of it and we are made to feel sure that the public really does want it. Now the author has a daughter and a son. The wife and mother scouts the idea of writing such a wicked book. The temptation comes at Christmas time and a room full of queer characters come in to the dinner and make the spectators laugh many times. But after they go, the author sits down to write the book till his wife advises him to turn in. In a dream he sees the book published and himself and family rich. But the evil in the book makes his daughter rebel at restraint. She spends the night out with a married neighbor. The son also reads the book to a sort of hired-girl protégée of the family and then lends her to a settle behind some curtains; the author discovers them in each other's arms. The author wakes up and finds it luckily only a dream.

Biographs to Be Seen Again

"A Fair Rebel," in Three Reels, and "The Unwelcome Guest," a Single-Reel Mary Pickford Drama.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

OF THE story in "A Fair Rebel," produced by the Biograph Company by the late David Miles and now scheduled for reissue, little need be said. The plot is commonplace, just about what audiences accustomed to Civil War dramas have every reason to expect; but even at that the three reels are well worth reviving, unless battle scenes have gone out of fashion, which, of course, they have not. The first reel serves to introduce the characters and prepare for the romance of a southern girl and a northern officer—a standard ingredient of Civil War pictures—then right at the opening of the second reel there comes as spirited a battle as one need wish to see.

The engagement takes place in the woods where the Confederate forces are defending a bridge. Cavalry and infantry charges, accompanied by exploding shells ripping the branches from trees and digging great holes in the ground, precede the best thrill of all when the bridge is rent asunder by an explosion, and an entire company of soldiers appears to be hurled into the air. In point of excitement these scenes in the second reel provide easily the best moments of the picture, although subsequent developments are moderately interesting. The famous Libby prison, adequately represented, is given a prominent place in the picture. It is here that the Union officer languishes with other prisoners until he tunnels his way out and, assisted by the fair Rebel, escapes. Linda Arvidson appears in the name part, supported by Dorothy Gish, Charles Derris, Charles West and Robert Inoué. "An Unwelcome Guest" shows Mary Pickford in the type of character that first endeared her to the public. She plays a poor little slavey whose companion in misfortune is an aged man. Almost literally they are fed on the crumbs that fall from the table of the master of the house, until a sudden change in fortune places them in control. Christine Miller, as the unwelcome guest, gives a perfect characterization in a picture filled with delicate human touches that ring true. Jack Pickford, Claire McDowell and Charles Mailles are included in the cast.

"Tangled Fates"

Peerless-World Film Production in Which Alice Brady Is Starred Under the Direction of Travers Vale.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE title of this five-part Peerless-World Film production is rather apt. We have a tangled story of tangled fates in which the spectator is expected to credit all sorts of odd happenings without inquiring too closely into the whys and wherefores. There is a little bit of almost everything, plenty of action and enough change in scene to prevent monotony. For a time it looks like a drama of life in a New England village dominated by an uncompromising Morals Committee; next we are transferred to New York, where the heroine, after a crackers and milk diet in a hall bedroom, is permitted to become a model that she may wear an assortment of elaborate gowns, and finally the tangled fates of the characters lead them to the snow-covered wilds of Alaska.

Fortunately, Alice Brady is in the picture. She is certainly one of the most attractive actresses on the World Film roster and bids fair to become one of the most versatile. Her playing of Jane Lawson in the photoplay under consideration is so sincere and convincing that one may grant the possibility of situations, which would hardly bear analysis. Take the most important incident in the first reel, for example. Jane's younger sister, innocently enough, goes for a moonlight walk with a traveling salesman, although her father, a member of the Morals Committee, has ordered her to remain in her room. Even in the most straight-laced communities, a in-chief of the navy, Lamberto, left behind to guard the city, in pique declares to Henry he will win from him his affianced, the Gorgona. He makes good his declaration in so far as that through bribing the young woman's servant he gains access to her home. Lamberto enters the room of Gorgona, seemingly prepared to stop hardly short of murder. He finds the young woman staying and keeping burning the sacred lamp of which she is the specially delegated guardian. Gorgona is not only unafraid; she greets the intruder as if he were the lover to whom but a short time before she had given so affectionate a farewell. The story from that point on turns on the efforts to save the life of Lamberto, who had contravened the edict of his father, the commander, that any one surreptitiously entering the city should be put to death—and Lamberto has been discovered.

As may be judged, "The Gorgona" is interesting more by reason of its elaborate staging than on account of its dramatic elements.

"My Country First"

Unity Film Sales Corporation Presents Timely Six-Part Subject Written and Staged by Tom Terriss.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN the staging of the photodrama "My Country First" Tom Terriss has hit upon a happy subject under present conditions. The story is presented in the form of a melodrama with the author in the principal role and a cast of players each one of whom is of a distinct type appropriately chosen. Among these appear the names of Alfred Henning, Helene Ziegfeld, mild flirtation between a boy and a girl is not unforgivable, none the less Jane follows the pair, sends her sister home and then, being found with the man herself, shoulders the criticism. These circumstances hardly justify a father in turning his penniless daughter out into the cold, cold world.

For the rest, "Tangled Fates" may be classed as a story conveniently arranged to introduce a dramatic situation every once in a while and to utilize the variety of locations already mentioned. Force of a kind, it unquestionably has, and in the final reel, with the triumph of lynch law and the hanging of a man—his shadow appearing on the snow as he is suspended from a tree—there is enough to work up excitement in an audience, though even an indirect glorification of lynching is in poor taste. Satisfactory performances are given by Arthur Ashley, Helen Veer and George Morgan. Also, it may be mentioned in passing that Miss Brady introduces white kid gloves in Klondike society.

"The Gorgona"

Four-Part Authors-Ambrosio Twelfth Century Story Bulks Big with Spectacular Scenes.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Authors Film Company is showing "The Gorgona," a four-part subject made by the Ambrosio Company of Turin, Italy. It is a historical tragedy, with Pisa in the beginning of the twelfth century as the place and the time. The settings are rich in noble structures of medieval architecture. Literally hundreds of persons are engaged in the making of the picture. From the staging standpoint—of great buildings unaltered in hundreds of years, of large craft especially built for the occasion, and in the number of costumed men and women who take part in the performance—"The Gorgona" is an unusual production.

The story is a surprise. When Henry is elected commander-

John Hopkins, Joseph Baker, Joseph Sterling, Jill Woodward and Alfred Vosburgh.

The plot of the story has been cleverly worked out and has been artistically visualized by Mr. Terriss, who has not only written it and played the principal role but has succeeded in perfectly impersonating the old chemist in the employ of Demy, the master plotter of the play. Those familiar with the splendid work of Mr. Terriss in the portrayal of Dickens characters such as Scrooge in "The Chimes" will not be surprised to learn that as the old chemist in the production in question he scores more heavily than in the character of the younger man. In the scene following the premature ignition of the chemicals forming the explosive which the old chemist has by foreign spies been set to analyze and in which the old man meets his death, Mr. Terriss does an excellent bit of acting.

The psychological side of this play will be found to have been nicely developed. Plenty of action and excellent photography are also valuable attributes of the production which will be handled as a states rights proposition by the Unity Film Sales Corporation.

"Gloria's Romance"

Chapters Two and Three Increase Steadily in Interest, with Miss Billie Burke Holding All Eyes by Her Art and Beauty.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

CHAPTER two of "Gloria's Romance," entitled "Caught by the Seminoles," stands out in strong contrast with the simple action of chapter one, yet from observation I have been inclined to the opinion that it did not come up to the expectations of spectators who have become so accustomed to viewing the impossible in preceding film serials that it will require time before they will be willing to content themselves with merely sane incidents. Youth, especially, craves the lurid and the extravagant in stories and is seldom content with the life-as-it-is-lived type. I have no doubt, however, after watching closely the career of Gloria at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, that the appeal of the Ruperts' motion picture novel will be wide and that interest will steadily increase in it, wherever it is presented.

Gloria has a trying time of it in the Everglades; and although she is an object of commiseration, Miss Billie Burke never seeks to create it either by look or demeanor. When she is robbed by the "Cracker" fellow she shows fine spirit, but never a tear, and when the "Cracker" urchin pinches her cheek she resents his familiarity with a resounding whack on the jaw that makes one fairly yell with delight. In the scene where the young Seminole chief offers Gloria the choice of becoming his squaw or being killed Miss Burke again makes Gloria fearless by baring her bosom for the knife.

The scrap between the Indian chief and Dr. Joyce (Henry Kolker) looks like the real thing. It creates the impression of a real lust for victory on the part of both men, and when the Doctor hands the Indian a left uppercut to the jaw falls puts him down and out, one looks around for the referee, for the count, so natural is it all.

Before that the Doctor had a hard time of it, rushing through swamps and the thick underbrush in a dress suit and pumps! The fight showed that he had the right stuff in him, and we forgive him that intense interest in Gloria's welfare had caused him to rush to her rescue without changing his apparel.

The entrance of Richard Freneau (David Powell), gentleman adventurer, in the story as a savior for Gloria's hand gives a new angle and point to important complications that will heighten the interest. He takes all the credit—yellow through and through as he is—for Gloria's rescue from the Indian, and Dr. Joyce calls him hard; an incident that suggests some important revelations concerning these two men, as Gloria falls in love with Freneau, believing that he had saved her from the Indian chief.

Chapter three is entitled "Perilous Love," referring to Gloria's attachment for Freneau. Her father, in order to sever this attachment, sends Gloria off to college for a five-years course, and so chapter three treats of her college days, with their pranks and waste of time. Here Miss Billie Burke is the one typical girl for the role of Gloria. I can think of none other with such grace and charm of sweet girlishness. Gloria's escapades—innocent, girlish pranks that have chiefly to do with the breaking of blue-stocking rules and the like—all ways end in one way, forgiveness. She is always ready to take the blame, in order to save her innocent fellow students, and her clear, straightforward eyes, with the spirit of good will that they show, banish all resentment from the hearts of her superiors.

Then Gloria returns home and reminds her father that the five years have elapsed and that, according to his promise, she must see her sweetheart, Freneau. She does see him soon after that, but in a way that shocks her. One night while entering the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, with her father, she caught sight of Freneau. Wishing to surprise him she approached so closely that her robe brushed against him. He cast a glance at her, but there was no recognition.

"He has forgotten me," sighed Gloria, and the heart-pain in her eyes, as revealed by Billie Burke, and the appealing beauty of her face as she sorrowed over the shattering of her dreams form a picture that will long remain with me. The beautiful opera coat worn on the occasion by Miss Burke will make the picture all the more lasting.

"The Suspect"

Six-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Presents Anita Stewart in the Role of the Daughter of a Russian Nihilist.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

SPECIAL interest attaches to a review of the work of Anita Stewart under her new director, S. Rankin Drew, and the fact that she has carried with her the same remarkable qualities for which she was famous under the direction of Ralph Ince proves that there lies within herself a wonderful power of dramatic interpretation despite the aid of the best of directors. And furthermore, S. Rankin Drew has in the staging of "The Suspect," an adaptation of a story entitled "The Silver Shell," by H. J. W. Dam, proved himself equal to the occasion of piloting the star. The production is one that required masterful treatment, one of the main factors of the story being its psychological development. This point has been grasped with avidity by the director, whose treatment of this side of the question has been reflected intelligently by the players.

The role of Paul Karatoff, son of the cruel Russian, Duke Karatoff, known among the Nihilists as "the Butcher," is played in a finished manner by Mr. Drew, the supporting cast consisting of Anders Randolph, Bobby Connolly, Julia Swayne Gordon, Frank Wupperman, George Cooper, Edward Elkes, Albert Babcock, and Anna Brody. The opening of the picture is singularly effective in style, and stamps immediately the origin of the plot in the brutal death by torture of the Nihilist, Karpinski, that of his wife from shoot at the awful happening, and the embittering of the mind of Sophie, the Nihilist's daughter, against Karatoff. Later Sophie is found to be one of the moving spirits of the Nihilist party and has been cleverly led by the author of the story into a misting with the son of Karatoff, when a bomb placed in a bunch of roses is directed by Sophie to be thrown into the carriage of Karatoff. The bomb misses its mark; young Paul Karatoff pursues the Nihilist agent who has thrown it, and creeps up the steps of Sophie's home after being shot. The meeting gives root to a thought in Sophie's mind which suggests the punishment of Karatoff through his son. A marriage takes place between the two, a son is born, and in the poisoning of the blood of the house of Karatoff with that of a Nihilist Sophie finds her vengeance.

MIT GOODE, the Samaritan," offers a dignified and kindly characterization admirably interpreted by De Wolf Hopper. In the role of a rich philanthropist, not distributing gifts for the sake of making an impression, but as one disposed to take a favorable view of his fellow-men wherever he finds them, even in jail, Hopper seems to be so perfectly at home that he fairly beams benevolence. There is no rough comedy in the part. Very much to the contrary, it rises to high comedy of a refined sort when it is shown that back of the philanthropist's faith in human nature there lurks a lot of sound judgment. Foolishly good in the eyes of his wife, a woman of social aspirations, he is not lacking in discernment when a well-disguised crook comes a courting his daughter, the very thief who sold the nice old man a stolen automobile.

This purchase lands Goode in jail, one of the kind where offenders are given the use of one large room. Goode takes a great fancy to his fellow prisoners. His natural love of mankind so dominates his natural discernment that he insists on making them all as comfortable as possible. There is a faint touch of farce in his refurbishing the place so that it takes on the appearance of a gentlemen's club and in his being robbed by some of the "dips" at one moment and his watch and money restored at another, all without his being aware of what is going on, but the character is preserved with unusual skill throughout, while an interesting story runs on to an end that justifies the fine old fellow's confidence in human nature after all.

"Going Straight" gives opportunity for Norma Talmadge, Eugene Pallette and the Triangle children to do some fine acting, and the story is admirably handled. With good structure, careful and tasteful treatment and a splendid cast, the presentation is generally satisfactory, but the subject matter has appeared so often on the screen that it is somewhat discouraging to see it re-appear, even under advantageous circumstances. Producers cannot be aware that the story of a reformed thief who is asked to go out and crack just one more safe to keep an old pal from squealing is shown to reviewers so often that it seems to bob up about once a week on the average, and with scarcely any variation.

"A Dash of Courage" contains a dash of new spirit, there is a genuine story involved in pure farce comedy. Through an

In the fourth episode Dr. Alden, displaying more valor than judgment, locates the secret lodge of the Black Order and effects an entrance. For some time it appears that he is hopelessly caught in a death trap; but after his burial, a faithful attendant digs his way to the coffin through an underground passageway and the intrepid doctor is released that he may save Myra from death by poisonous gases concealed in toy balloons. As in preceding reels, the settings provided by the Whartons are conducive to an atmosphere of mystery, and considerable care was expended in achieving odd effects in lighting.

The elaborate hypnotizing machine introduced in Episode 3 is again brought into play in the fifth instalment, and Myra's astral body is once more released from her human form. This time she goes in search of Dr. Alden, who is among the missing after he has led the police in a raid on the lodge of the Black Order. But it happens that the Grand Master of the Devil Wor-

An interesting situation is presented at the close of the second reel and one that suggests many possibilities for future development. The girl is so uncontrollably under the influence of the Grand Master that with words of love on her lips she attempts to shoot Dr. Alden. Several explosions, in which much earth is dislodged, preparatory to the entrance of the police into the quarters of the Black Order, lend a spectacular value to the first reel.

"The Eye of God"

A Bluebird Five-Reel Offering by Lois Weber—Full of Eerie, Creepy Quality, It Holds Strongly.

Reviewed by Hanford C Judson.

A ROMANCE in quality not unlike the weirdly imagined stories of Poe, and holding strongly from its start, "The Eye of God," the latest Bluebird picture, was written by Lois Weber and produced by the Smalleys. While it belongs with the ultra-romantic, trap-door-in-lonely-inn kind of melodrama, the mechanism behind it is so simple and, in the atmosphere of the tale, so convincing, that it gives a distinctly fresh impression and makes an offering that we can heartily commend to exhibitors. The main setting is a lonely farmhouse. We soon find that there's a closet off the main bedroom on the ground floor that gives access to it from the garret through a hidden trap door.

The opening scenes concentrate our attention on the farmer, powerfully portrayed by Tyrone Power, a morose, brooding, discontented man. His unloved wife, a piteous figure, is played by Ethel Weber. The land all about is barren-looking and the farm is breaking the man's spirit. One day, the wife is called away by her sick sister. A woman, played by Lois Weber, is left with her maid at the lonely way station. There is no train till the morning and they have to spend the night at this haunted farmhouse. There is excellent acting through the early evening scene between this woman and the farmer, starved for the outer world. In the night as she sleeps he makes use of the trapdoor and kisses her hand. She wakes in fright, but he is gone.

This is a very skilfully conceived bit of business. It not only establishes the hidden stair for the later bit of a terrible murder scene with lightning flashing in at the windows, but is used at the climax when the heroine, putting two and two together, fastens the crime where it belongs. For two men come one stormy night and ask for shelter. They have much money. One goes to sleep in the bed while the other watches in the other

Harry Gribbon, as the leader, offers much that is new in characterization and in his personality, and his support is active enough to make the little play move with snap from start to finish.

The male malefactor is a married man, his mate being of the same moral standard. The couple have defrauded their niece out of her fortune and driven her from their home. Mona and Mary learn of this and set about trapping the rascally uncle. He falls an easy victim to the charms of Mary, who is introduced to him as an unsophisticated maiden from the rural districts. Four, disappointed suitors attend the ceremony and arouse the jealousy of the bride with a winning smile and inviting eyes that she uses all too effectually, even after her marriage.

Having reached Europe on this inauspicious honeymoon, the troubles of the pair assume a still more serious tone; for the bride, continuing to use her eyes and her smile indiscriminately, captivates nearly all of the officers stationed in the neighborhood. One of them, it seems, is a traitor who possesses plans of extraordinary military value. Quite innocently, the flirting bride is made to act as his accomplice, then she is captured by bandits; then thrown into jail and so her troubles increase, until she promises to reserve her smiles and her eyes exclusively for her husband. As there is no pretense of even remotely reflecting life in the picture, it need not be criticised on the score of improbability. William Conklin, Edward J. "Prisoners of Conscience"

Three-Reel Lubin Photoplay Written by L. V. Jefferson and Josephine McLaughlin, Containing a Variant of the Enoch Arden Motive.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

HEROES of melodrama, like Caesar's wife, should be above suspicion. The authors of "Prisoners of Conscience" have cast a doubt upon the moral courage of the hero of their story and robbed him of the respect and sympathy that the leading lover of a melodrama should always command. Dean Carroll, a struggling young physician, is made to believe that he has given a wealthy patient an overdose of deadly poison. The mistake has been made by another doctor, who advises Carroll to run away and hide from the consequences of the act. Although happily married, Carroll does not wait to bid his wife good-bye, and hurries off and hides in the desert. Mrs. Carroll is led to believe that her husband has committed suicide. At the end of a year she has grown very fond of a young clergyman, who has long been in love with her. Just as the reverend gentleman is about to propose, the guilty man experiences a change of heart and his confession falls into the minister's hands. He puts his own happiness aside, after a struggle, and goes to Carroll, with the truth. The physician hastens back to his wife, the minister accompanying him. Carroll, inadvertently, learns the true state of affairs, but his wife realizes that he has the first claim, and sacrifices love for duty. Unlike Tennyson's mariner, this Enoch Arden accepts the sacrifice.

An attempt is made to justify the cowardice of the doctor by claiming that he was worn out with fatigue when he ran away. Even if this were accepted, it does not excuse his remaining away for a year and not communicating with his wife during that time. Dr. Carroll showed too much strength of character previous to his sudden flight to have acted in so cowardly a manner—a fact that is accentuated by the personality of Cecil Van Auker, who plays the part. This gentleman's mental and physical endowment give no suggestion of a yellow streak, although he is better adapted to heavies than to leading roles.

Setting aside the weakness of this one motive, the plot is dramatic, reasonably skillful in construction and the picture has been produced with equally favorable results. Adda Gleason as the doctor's wife gives the best performance of the cast. Creditable impersonations are contributed by Evelyn Page, George Routh, Ben Hopkins, Alan Forrest and Lucy Payton.

"The Littlest Magdalene"

Leonie Flugrath, the Star of a Three-Reel Edison Photoplay That Treats With Sincerity and Conviction, a World-Old Theme.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SCARLET women, vampires and Magdalenes may, generally, be relied upon to put a "punch" into whatever form of dramatic composition in which they are the central figures. Whether treated with the moral significance employed by Hawthorne in sketching Hester Prynne or prostituted for commercial purposes only, as in the case of certain photoplays devoted to the vampire type of women, the sinning sisterhood find many virtuous persons of both sexes that follow the chronicles of their lives and crimes with eager interest. Small wonder, then, that dealers in photoplays, as well as makers of the spoken drama, have turned to the Phryniens and Magdalenes of the present day and offer intimate histories of their careers in the market places!

"The Littlest Magdalene," the three-reel photoplay by Watkins Eppes Wright, is a somewhat different drama of besmirched womanhood. It is not related in any way to that class of fiction known to our English cousins as "the shilling shocker," and wins sympathy for itself by an ingenuousness in the writing that is only equalled by the convincing artlessness with which Leonie Flugrath invests the character of Mary O'Ryan. The girl, an East Side toiler, is drugged and taken to an hotel by an unscrupulous rent collector. The next morning, when she awakens, Mary is horrified by the thought of what she has become. She runs away from her home and finds employment as the model for an artist who is painting a "Magdalene." The painter falls in love with her, she confesses her fall from virtue, learns, through the testimony of the rent collector, that he was forced to leave her before accomplishing her ruin, and, in place of a grim tragedy, the final picture fades from the screen to the suggestion of orange blossoms and wedding bells.

Up to the time when Mary poses for the artist, the construction of the story is fluent, the motives convincing, and hackneyed situations are given an air of novelty by the evident belief of the author in the freshness of his theme. The real romance in the girl's life seems much more conventional, but the majority of picture patrons will heartily applaud the play in its entirety.

As Mary O'Ryan, little Miss Leonie Flugrath is as simple, wholesome and winning as the character demands. Her assumption of innocence and grief at her unmerited disgrace does not appear like acting but the reflection of a light from within. And she was able to denote the youth and purity of a seventeen-year-old girl without wearing her hair in little ringlets all over her head. Ingenues and ballet ladies of the pony class, please take notice!

Not the least attractive part of the feature consists of the splendid settings which provide the atmosphere. The scenes are for the most part laid in the coal oil region of Pennsylvania. They form a striking background to the story which deals with the wrongs of labor. There is nothing inflammatory in the play; the writer of the scenario has given us a thoroughly human story in which lights and shadows appear in probable proportions. The director, the able Mr. Edgar Lewis, has brought out this feature of the play in his usual strong and clear fashion. Bits of realism that were especially striking were glimpses of The Great White Way at night and views of burning oil tanks. The handling of groups and mobs was likewise splendidly done and reflects no small credit on the director. There is the usual photographic excellence which is to be found in all Lubin productions.

Romantic Comedy-Drama in Five Reels, Featuring Flora Parker De Haven as Unconventional Heroine.

Reviewed by Robert C. McClary.

ARTISTIC excellence is the strong feature of this five-reel Red Feather production. The first reel presents the dashing girl heroine in good style, but the expected action is deferred for a reel or more. Then the story picks up with renewed interest and the events of the last two reels are strongly entertaining. But for a certain lull in the action in the second and third reels this would be an exceptional offering.

There is a continual appeal to the eye, and the director, Wm. Dowlan, has succeeded wonderfully well with the atmosphere of the piece. It is based on a story by George Gibbs, the scenes being laid in Normandy and various French provinces. Flora Parker De Haven plays the part of Flora Fairbanks with animation. She puts conviction in the scenes where the girl is thrown from a horse and where she "drops in" on an aeroplane to pay her first visit to the artist.

Y.; burning of grain elevator, Chicago; police parade, N. Y.; scenes at Juarez, Mexico; auto trip, Washington to San Francisco; meeting of Allies at Paris; U. S. troops in Mexico.

A LUCKY TUMBLE (Vitagraph), May 15.—William Dugman is the chief funmaker in this short reel farce. He takes a tumble down a chimney, while clad in his pajamas, and captures a burglar and the money for his room rent. The scenario was written by James H. Styles and is good for a fair average of laughs. Florence Natol, George O'Donnell, William Lyttell, Jr., Lucille Crane, Jean Hubbell, and Harry Mayo complete the cast. Scenes in Iceland are shown on the same reel.

THE IRISH REBEL (Kalem), May 18.—A one-reel photoplay of the time when Ireland first started to rebel against her English rulers, the picture unfolds a romantic story, the scenes of which were taken in the Emerald Isle. It is well acted.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF SAN FRANCISCO (Essanay), May 17.—The merits of this clever artist's sketches are thoroughly understood. His drawings of the points of interest in the chief city of California show the same dexterity and skill in selection. The usual western scene is found on the same reel.

THE ARTFUL DODGER (Kalem), May 17.—A review of this picture was printed on page 1534 of the issue of May 27. It is an excellent one-reel comedy, with Ethel Tetre as the chief attraction. THE SELIG-TREKING, No. 40, 1916 (Selig), May 18.—Park scene, Chicago; burning of military stores at Columbus, and other scenes; "Better Baby Show," New York; Fusiliers Parade, Boston; new army base established at Marathon, Texas; hydro-aeroplane, Washington; Navy Yard, Mare Island, Cal.; with the U. THIRTY DAYS (Vim), May 18.—The material for this one-reel farce has been selected with excellent judgment. It has had a long and honorable career upon the French, English and American stages, and its powers of creating laughter are still unimpaired. Plump and Hunt are very funny as the two married men who are forced to serve a jail sentence, and deceive their wives concerning their whereabouts.

AN INNOCENT VAMPIRE (Kalem), May 19.—A review of this picture was printed in the issue of May 20, page 1534. The difficulty of associating Sis Hopkins with any sort of vampirism, innocent or otherwise, is not hard to understand. Her efforts are all largely humorous, however, and worth a good laugh.

ONE CHANCE IN A HUNDRED (No. 80 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), May 20.—If it were one chance in a thousand it would be all the same to Helen—she'd do it and make it! The hazard in this number is up to the standard in its ability to thrill, and the reproduction of life on the rail as authentic as of old. Edward Matlack wrote the scenario and James Davis directed the cast.

MORE MONEY THAN MANNERS (Vitagraph), May 19.—A comic duel is the big laugh-getter in this one-reel farce by G. Graham Baker and Lawrence Simon. Broad effects are aimed at in the fun-making, and John T. Kelly, Kate Price and Hughey Mack loom large in this result. The picture is a good slam-hang offering, and the remaining parts are vigorously acted by Templar Saxe, Ed. Dunn, Dan Hayes, Jewel Hunt and Genevieve Russell.

A FAIR EXCHANGE (Vim), May 19.—The exchange consists of swapping a suit of prison stripes for a frock coat and all that goes with it. Pokes and jabs are the swappers and the two suits of clothes are made to contribute largely to the fun of the reel. A lively and comical film.

A BOARDING HOUSE HAM (Selig), May 20.—A well trained leopard has one of the best comedy parts in this comedy. The reel has considerable humor, the characters being theatrical types. Wallace C. Clifton wrote the scenario, and Charles Le Moynes, Sidney Smith, Miss McKean and Olga Celeste attend to the acting.

SAUCE FOR THE GANDER (No. 8 of "The Social Pirates") (Kalem), May 15.—The third re-run of this number of the George Brown Howard serial is a lean shark, and his son and partner is given the same sort of dressing down by the lady avengers. The plot is skilfully devised. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of May 20, page 1534.

THE HARD WAY (Selig), May 15.—Something of the strength of theme to be found in Hogarth's "The Rake's Progress," has been put into this three-reel photoplay by the author, Russell E. Smith. It is the story of a rich man's son who starts on the downward road. He is shown as a forger and murderer, but, contrary to the English realist, author Smith insures a happy ending for his youthful sinner by having the events of the last reel take place in a dream. The incidents form a gripping screen drama. Jack Pickford, Lillian Hamward, Vivian Reed, Sidney Smith and James Bradbury complete the cast. F. N. Heffron, director.

THE DOUBLE CROSS (Essanay), May 16.—An appealing little love story is woven into the action of this two-reel photoplay, which deals with criminal life, a woman detective being the means of running down a gang of counterfeiters and bringing the romance of the lovers to a joyous conclusion. The picture is well made melodrama and receives good treatment at the hands of a cast consisting of Elizabeth Burbridge, Patrick Calhoun, Thurlow Brower, and Alice MacChesney.

THE BEGGAR KING (Lubin), May 16.—It is not always easy to believe that the events shown in this two-reel photoplay are a truth-ful transcript from life. As a melodramatic story, meant only to entertain, it fulfills its mission. Robert Gray, Jay Morley, Louis Fitz Roy, M. de la Parrelle and Eleanor Evelyn form an earnest and satisfying cast.

BEVERLY OF GRAUSTARK (Biograph), May 17.—A three-reel screen version of the George Barr McCutcheon "best-seller," displays all of the fine flavor of romance beloved by readers of this writer of novels. A handsome prince who rescues lovely ladies in distress and with Louis Mereddie under the guise of a mere officer, has a powerful attraction for many worthy persons. This photoplay will meet their approbation. The locations have been selected with intelligence, and a large company employed. Linda Aderson, Chas. Perley, Gertrude Robinson, George Pearce, Robert Drout and Chas. H. W. West have the leading roles.

SPELLBOUND (Knickerbocker Star Feature), May 17.—The first of the Knickerbocker live-reel features was made by the Horkelmeyers, with Louis Mereddie in the leading role, a performance in the leading role. The story, dealing with the spell cast by an idol stolen from India, is fairly interesting.

JACKSTRAWS (Lubin), May 18.—A three-reel melodrama, the story hanging upon a runaway marriage and its consequences. The man in the case is a worthless fellow, and the girl has a hard time in living down her early mistake. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of May 27, page 1534.

THE LITTLEST MAGDALENE (Edison), May 16.—A review of this picture is printed on another page of this issue.

A CHILD OF POITUNE (Knickerbocker), May 19.—This three-reel Star Feature photoplay opens quietly and pleasantly in the country, the action shifting to the slums of the city and closing with a grim tragedy. The story is of fair quality and very well told. Frank Mayo and Lillian West are excellent in the "leads," and Jimmie Mayo, Charles Dudley, Henry Stanley and Edward Peters do satisfactory work as the minor characters.

A ROSE OF ITALY (Essanay), May 20.—The scenes of this three-reel photoplay are laid in the country, an Italian girl, just from her native land, being the rose referred to in the title. She becomes a model; next a dancer, and the story is brought to a close after she has had a dramatic adventure with a rascally Italian banker, and is glad to marry her old sweetheart from home. An interesting and adequately acted screen drama, with Dan Kirk, Edmund Cobb, Patrick Calhoun, Richardson Cotton and Hugh Thompson in the cast.

MISS ADVENTURE (Vitagraph), May 20.—Three sisters and all attractive; young man makes love to all three, and picks out the youngest for his wife. Youngest a saucy bit of baggage and fond of playing practical jokes. Her adventures make an entertaining three-reel comedy. The part is romped through quite fetchingly by Mary Anderson. Webster Campbell is the lucky lover, and Annie Schaefer, Otto Lederer, Corinne Griffith, Carmen Phillips, Jack Mower and William Western round out a competent cast.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE SINS OF MEN (May 14).—A five-reel farce picture that made many laughs in the audience. It is a picture made to serve as a commercial offering of amusement. There are one of two scenes in it that are not morally edifying. A longer review will be found elsewhere in this issue.

International Film Service.

THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA (Internationale), May 15-22.—Episode four and live of this ingenious serial, based on occult phenomena, fulfill the promise of earlier instalments. They are well acted by Howard Estabrook and Jean Sothern and the settings are made to contribute to the atmosphere of mystery. A review appears on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 72 (Gaumont), May 17.—The horse show at Washington, launching of a big tanker in California, auto races, yacht races, cadet drills and war scenes on the Mexican border are included in this entertaining and instructive number.

HARMONY AND DISCORD (Cubi), May 19.—A Billy Armstrong comedy number in which the plot what there is of it, centers about the placing of a piano in a certain house. The piano takes fire, the piano mover gets in trouble and reinstates himself in the good graces of the mistress of the house by rescuing her daughter in an automobile accident.

BEEL LIFE NO. 3 (Gaumont), May 21.—A live educational subject, showing the way railroad tracks are renewed; drilling holes and sinking spikes by machinery, removing old rails and smoothing the roadbed. Other scenes show the way maple sugar is made on a larger scale. Then follow some very fine views of animal life, taken by Elwin R. Sanborn. The growth of antlers on the American elk is a striking feature. A good subject.

RIVAL ROGUES (Vogue), May 23.—This is an entertaining farce comedy number in which two thieves fall in love with the same girl, who promises to fix her choice on the best provider. The theme is not very high class, but has been developed in a fairly humorous manner.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 37 (Gaumont), May 24.—This half-reel gives interesting panoramic views of Savannah, Ga., and surroundings. The plantation views are attractive; also the view of the grove of live oak trees, centuries old.

NOSEY NED (Gaumont), May 24.—On same reel with above. Another of Harry Palmer's animated drawings, this time picturing Ned in the act of purchasing a spring hat. He gets a hand-painted one, which brings him much ridicule. A characteristic number.

SAMMY'S SEMI-SUICIDE (Faislart), May 27.—An amusing office comedy, featuring the corpulent Walter Hiers as a young man in love. He threatens suicide when things do not go right, and makes one or two unsuccessful efforts in that direction. In spite of the grimness of subject this is treated in good burlesque style and is quite successful.

THE PORK PLOTTERS (Beatty), May 28.—Orral Humphrey is the producer of this picture which deals with the near ruin of Mr. Siggers, impersonated by Mr. Humphrey, in a slump in the pork market. The turn of the tide comes when one morning Mr. Siggers enquires by his wife not to forget to bring home some pork chops with him, writes on his cuff, "buy pork." The result is that all who see, rush out to buy stock. A very amusing comedy.

THE DISGUISEES (Faislart), May 29.—There is not a very strong element of comedy in this number in which a discarded lover tries to separate husband and wife by concocting a false story and persuading the husband to disguise as a plumber, a painter, etc., at different times, in order to discover if his wife's supposed perfidy. The suspected man turns out to be the wife's uncle, who is about to give the newly married couple the deed of one of his houses as a wedding present.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE COURTESAN (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe), May 19.—A live-part production from the American studios, featuring Eugene Forde. The picture's most serious fault lies in the fact that it is developed too much along the lines of a narrative rather than a drama. The story deals with the career of a woman whose circumstances has forced into the wrong track. She places her son in good hands with the proviso that he will never know of his mother, and continues a life of wrong-doing. Later when the son has grown to manhood he is elected district attorney and the court scene is also picturesque. The story ends happily. An entertaining number.

THE BLINDNESS (Mustang), May 19.—Rhea Mitchell, William Stowell and Roy Stewart play the principal roles in this two-part production which treats of how a young school teacher in the west is wooed by two lovers, with the result that a bitter hatred takes root in the heart of one against the other, and in crossing the desert he takes advantage of the fact that his partner is stricken with sand blindness to leave him to what he supposes will mean death. A timely rescue of the blind man brings him home in safety to his wife, formerly the school teacher. An entertaining number.

BIG LIGHTS AND SHADOWS (Centaur), May 20.—A two-reel story of a fishing village on the coast of Africa, featuring Wm. Clifford, Margaret Gibson, Jack Nelson and Marie Gavette. An artist becomes enamoured of a fishing girl and neglects his wife, but later events occur which put him on the right track again. The costuming of the British fishermen is attractive and the coast scene is also picturesque. The boatack animals appear to advantage in the scenes taken in the Jungle later in the picture. The story is rather conventional in plot but contains many features of interest.

FOR UNCLE SAM'S NAVY (Thanhouser), May 25.—A two-reel subject, by Philip Lonergan, featuring Edwin Stanley, Kathya Adams and others. This is a story of international intrigue and centers about the person of "Captain Rudolph," who comes to America to get some military plans. The plot ingredients are familiar but have been set together in this instance in a new and absorbing way. There is a surprise at the close. The cast is pleasing and the story holds its interest well.

ARMATALE (Gaumont), May 25.—A three-reel special based on a novel by Wilkie Collins. Alexander Cadeaux plays the part of James Midwinter and Iva Shepard, the scheming governess, who tries to poison Allan Armatale Jr. The story is old-fashioned and crowded with incidents. It keeps the observer watching slowly to follow the various threads, but is quite strong in spite of this. The father's confession is pictured in a realistic way. The scene of the trial is a good feature. The close seemed a little abrupt. The theme of the narrative shows how a son tries to make up for his father's wrongs. The construction is good considering the number of complications.

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe), May 1.—A live-part production from the Thanhouser studios in which Miss Hulet plays the feminine lead. Miss Hulet, always attractive, does much to help the picture along by the manner in which she handles the role of a young woman who lives under the shadow of her father's crime, and gives her inheritance to satisfy his creditors. It is in rather a melodramatic fashion, but the idea of what should be a legitimate drama. This is bound to bring criticism as to construction, in spite of the excellent things accomplished by the players.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

PASQUALE (Morocco), May 18.—A tender-hearted story, the live-reel picture made by the Oliver Morocco company. It is an offering that is sure to please broadly and is commended. For a longer review see page 1532, issue of May 27, 1916.

HURTON HOLMES TRAVELOGUES (Paramount), May 22.—In this issue of the Hurton Holmes pictures, the party of travelers boards a yacht for a tour of the Philippine Islands. Barring the first part of the reel, which gives an unnecessary number of close-ups of the members of the yacht's crew, it is a very passable number (instructive as well as entertaining).

PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), May 28.—The preparedness section of this issue of the Paramount magazine concerns the making of a sailor, the training of raw recruits and the life on shipboard. Hugo Munsterberg offers another interesting test of mental alertness. An automobile equipped with every convenience for camping is shown in service; also there are instructive views of the Japanese method of preserving cut flowers.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 38, 1916 (Pathe), May 10.—In this issue is shown the Cymric on her last voyage out of New York. General Obregon and his staff in conference with Gen. Scott U. S. Marines and sailors, the training of raw recruits and the life on shipboard. At Paris, attractive American fashions posed by models of the Mood fashion house. Leo Stephens opening the Motion Picture House of Trade Exposition by ascending over Madison Square Garden, in a balloon, and the shipping of deer from Slesdon Island to the Adlon-dack.

PATHE NEWS NO. 39, 1916 (Pathe), May 14.—What can we doubt prove most interesting to Americans in this number are the behind-the-scenes views the Pathe camera man has succeeded in getting in the Preparedness Parade of May 13 in New York City. Other items of interest are Russian troops arriving at Marselles, Pathe's little baby in the recent contest in New York and views from the French war front.

LUKE'S LOST LAMB (Phonofilm)—Harold Lloyd, who appears in this series of films, is best known to most of us as Commerce Luke. In this number which by the way is an extremely entertaining one we follow Luke and his fellows in a series of the commonest, yet so amusing of situations occur on the beach. Seeing this little bit wit, fat and anxious to join the sylphs of the beach, Luke finds every child, which is found after much chasing and running, in the end, standing.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE IRON CLAW NO. 12 (Feature), May 13.—"The Iron Claw" is the title of this number of the serial. In it Janet O'Hara is pursued and trapped by Lewis and his associates, and is rescued by the Laughing Mask. Margery Golden also has an adventure while trying to foil the trade of the Iron Claw. In the end Lewis is shot through the Laughing Mask who suddenly appears on the scene and throws the bomb intended to end the lives of Margery and those with her, from the window. A full review of this number will be found on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corp.

A DIARY OF CURTIS (Keystone), May 7.—A lively little number containing some striking situations and a real story.

THE PRIMAL LURE (Triangle-Ince), May 21.—A rather poor vehicle for a good actor, perhaps the poorest in which he has appeared.

A CHILD OF THE PARIS STREETS (Triangle-Fine Arts), May 21.—An interesting melodrama of the Paris underworld with Alae Marsh in an animated leading role.

THE MARKER OF VAIN DESIRES (Triangle-Kay-Bee), May 28.—The story of a young preacher who won his bride through a fearless denunciation in the pulpit of loveless marriages.

MR. GOODIE, THE SAMARITAN (Fine Arts), May 28.—A delightful comedy of the better sort with De Wolf Hopper in an unusual characterization. A clean story, entertaining and original. Reviewed on another page.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

WHEN SLIM PICKED A PEACH (Imp), May 16.—A domestic comedy, written by Roy Clements, featuring Victor Postel and Jane Bernoudy. The story shows how a henpecked husband flirts with the new hired girl, who leaves the imprint of her hands on the back of his coat. His father-in-law comes and also falls a victim to her fascinations. It is a double act amusing in a conventional way and makes about an average release.

THE WOOLING OF AUD JEMIMA (Nestor), May 19.—A comedy number, by Clifford Howard, featuring Stella Adams, Neal Burns, Betty Compton, Ed Burns and Harry Rattenberry. The aunt inherits a fortune, and numerous rivals for her hand spring up. Neal impersonates the aunt and has some fun. There is not much novelty in this, but it is quite pleasing presentation.

ALL OVER A STOCKING (Nestor), May 29.—A pleasing comedy subject, by Arthur Mackley, featuring Ethel Lynde, Eddie Lyons and Betty Compton. The young husband is suspected by his wife of having purchased some silk stockings for the pretty stenographer. This is handled in a delicate manner and makes a good offering of the lighter type.

A DOUBLE FIRE DECEPTION (Imp), May 30.—A comedy number, by Jay Hunt, featuring Jane Gail, Matt Moore, Allen J. Holubar and Clara Beyers. The maid and her mistress change places, also the master and his valet. A double wedding results under amusing circumstances. This is an entertaining subject.

THE FUR-TRIMMED COAT (Laemmle), May 30.—An original comedy, by Jack Johnson, Douglas Gerrard and Elsie Willson appear. This concerns a fur coat and hat and muff, which are given to the wife by an admirer. She becomes conscience stricken and confesses. Then comes the twist at the close, which makes a strong number of it.

THE ATTIC PRINCESS (Big U), May 31.—A number, written by Calder Johnstone, featuring Zoe Bech, Marjorie Ellison and Thomas Jefferson. The story concerns a little girl, kept in an attic by her cruel aunt. An old artist, in the adjoining house, comes to her rescue. The part of the aunt would have been more effective if played by an older woman. A quaint little story, with a touch of heart interest.

GOOD NIGHT, NURSE (Nestor), June 2.—A number, written by Al E. Christie, presenting a familiar comedy situation, in which a young man pretends illness in order to get a hospital nurse who when he is infatuated. The rough house he creates among the patients is full of humorous action and certain to bring laughter.

A DARK SUSPICION (Joker), June 3.—An amusing knockabout comedy by Allen Curtis, featuring Wm. Franey, Gale Henry and others. The experiences of Bill and his wife in the coal bin are very funny. A pleasing number of the type.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE CIRCUS MONGRELS (Universal Special), May 22.—Episode No. 1 of "Peg against the Ring." An entertaining installment in which numerous interesting incidents occur. Peg assists Lund, Jr., to get out of the millrace and both escape from the lions den. They return to the circus and Peg once more falls into the powers of the Hindu. Lund, Jr., discovered the latter, who has shut Peg into a strong box. They have a hand to hand struggle, which fire starts in one of the tents. The circus stunts are pleasing. This serial is proving an enjoyable one in numerous respects, although the plot has not many complications.

CORPORAL BILLY'S COMEBACK (Big U), May 25.—A two-reel subject, adapted from a story by Harry Leon Wilson. This contains good characterizations, Thomas Jefferson plays the civil war veteran and Antrim Short the boy scout. The old man finds himself supplanted by a Spanish-American war veteran as grand marshal of the Decoration Day parade. Then he and the boy scout shame the old fellow's detractors by rounding up a negro murderer and bringing him to justice. This has a strong interest and is above the average production in entertainment value.

THE IRON HAND (Red Feather), May 29.—This five-reel offering, by George E. Hall, features Hobart Bosworth with Big Tim Nolan, leader of a gang in a tough ward. He clashes with the political boss and is thrown into prison, with his companion, Slim. Later in the story Slim is killed and his wife dies. Tim then adopts their baby boy, whom he afterward surrenders to a sociologist who desires to raise the child under a good environment. Twenty years pass and the story takes up again with Tim as political boss of the city and the youth in love with the daughter of a reformer. The story is interesting principally as a sociological study. The political scenes are true to life and, while not dramatic, the narrative probes deeper into human problems than the average film.

TAMMANY'S TIGER (Bison), June 3.—A two-reel subject in which wild animals play the important roles. The Tammany Club holds a meeting, for which occasion a "doped" tiger has been procured. It comes to life during the meeting and creates much excitement. An elephant upsets a circus parade and the animals invade massage rooms, strew carnage and chaos in places. The episodes are quite humorous in themselves, but lack a good connecting plot. With greater tension in the scenes this would have been stronger. It proves fairly entertaining as it is.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 39, 1916 (Vitagraph), May 15.—Preparations for the Panama-Pacific Exposition, Philadelphia; Boston; fire, Revere Beach, Boston; protest against conscription, Albany; end of conference between American and Mexican officials; General Oregon, wife and daughter; baby parade, New York; Tris Speaker honored at Boston; burning of elevator, Chicago; auto race at Sheepshead Bay, New York.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 40, 1916 (Vitagraph), May 19.—Russian troops landing in France; college regatta, Philadelphia; colored baptism, Chattanooga; boy scouts call upon Roosevelt; Junior day, U. of Washington; blasting stumps; launching ferryboat, Benicia, Cal.; burial of Private Cohen, New York; festival, Gardena, Cal.; park scene, Chicago; Sir Roger Casement; Kentucky Derby, Louisville.

World-Equitable.

TANLORED FATES (Peerless), May 22.—Playing the principal character in this five-part drama, Alice Brady gives an interesting performance. The story is not particularly convincing, but it offers enough variety in scene and action to hold the attention. A review may be found elsewhere in this issue.

Miscellaneous.

MY COUNTRY FIRST (Unity Terris), May.—A six-part production written and produced by Tom Terris. Mr. Terris also plays the principal role. He is found to be an engineering picture, which deals with the manufacture of an explosive by a young American patriot with a view to presenting it to his country. He is trapped by foreign spies, escapes and is trapped a second time, when he is given a choice between sacrificing his life or giving up the formula of his invention. A full review appears on another page of this issue.

PARAMOUNT PROGRAM.

Completing the Paramount program for the week of June 5, the three short subjects released by the Paramount Pictures Corporation will be the eighteenth of the Paramount-Burton Holmes travel pictures "Visiting the Sultan of Sulu," Paul Terry's "Farmer Al Faifa's Tentless Circus" and the weekly edition of the screen magazine, the Photographs.

The inventive hero, Farmer Al Faifa, scores the big top of Barnum and Bailey fame when he decides upon a circus of his own. Having seen the daring tightrope walker and the menagerie full of jungle beasts of a big show at close range, Al Faifa determines upon a rural enterprise of his own with the cows, pigs and horses of the old farm as performers in his improvised ring banks. Al Faifa himself acts as ringmaster and the entertainment proves more diverting than any yet staged under canvas.

Burton Holmes visits the Sultan of Sulu, who was made famous by George Ade, when he made his last stop in his screen journey through the distant Philippines. Governor General Cameron Forbes acts as host and the trip is made under the most advantageous of circumstances on board that official's private yacht. After one more stop in the cruise, Travel-Picture audiences may forsake the Far East to visit again the beauty spots of Europe, as they were before the outbreak of the great war. The first of this new film series by Mr. Holmes will be "Imperial Berlin."

Having seen how a "cop" is made, Paramount audiences will now catch a glimpse of the making of a fireman in the eighteenth Photograph release. In this edition, also, Huggs, the new boy, the noted educator, will show another of his mental tests on the screen, "Logical Imagination." "Free Play" will be the "Better Babies" release of this week and "First Aid to the Injured" will also be shown.

"MYSTERIES OF MYRA" GOES BIG IN BOSTON.

Frank D. Stratton, manager of the Franklin Park theater of Boston, is responsible for filling the Franklin Park to its capacity for the initial release of "The Mysteries of Myra." Suspended about the playhouse was a huge balloon kite with the title of the feature picture showing boldly on all sides. Mr. Stanton's idea of giving away souvenirs to the children succeeded in filling the street to the extent that the police were required to keep the traffic open. The souvenirs, in the form of toy balloons, were distributed to the children, and went a long way towards increasing Mr. Stanton's popularity with the little tots.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

VISITING THE MOROS WITH HOLMES.

Pirate-land—pictured by generations of poets and novelists as the haunt of romance and adventure—is shown in a "close-up" view to motion picture audiences in the seventeenth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, "Visiting the Murderous Moros of Mindanao."

A good fight is always more palatable than a good meal to the Moros, from the sturdiest chieftain to the smallest boy of the tribe, but the traveler in these "easy chair" journeys going to Mindanao with the escort of Burton Holmes and Governor-General Forbes views without danger to life or limb the murderous natives in their every day life in the streets and in the markets, and sees the warlike and barbaric splendor of their war dances and naval evolutions.

The Moros, whom the Spaniards were never able to subdue, but whom a wise and tolerant administration by American governors has at last made good friends of Uncle Sam, are descendants of a villainous and inhuman race of sea-roving pirates, who still cruise about in curious craft and make their homes in villages of queer huts built on stilts on the shores of Mindanao.

In this seventeenth release of the Travel-Pictures the chiefs of the Moros are shown as they turned out to greet the "White Chiefs from Washington" with all their pomp. Two of the Dattos are shown doing a spear dance and the principal chieftains execute a series of naval manoeuvres in their "vintas" or boats, before Governor Forbes and Mr. Holmes' camera.

NEW COMEDIANS FOR VOGUE.

Paddy McGuire, who first came before the eyes of the public as a leading man on the motion picture screen through vehicles furnished him by Vogue Films, Inc., has come into instantaneous popularity. In addition to Paddy's comic ability, Vogue has secured the services of the inimitable Ben Turpin, who needs no introduction to film audiences. The Vogue releases of the near future will show Ben in new characters to which this funny man gives laugh-creating powers beyond conception. The possibilities offered by these originators of pantomime comedy are unlimited. They see fun in everything, and are endowed with the ability to make the general public reflect their mirth.

With these two, and under the able direction of Jack Dillon, pretty little Rena Rogers lends the charm of beauty and grace to the Vogue productions. This accomplished comedienne is a photoplay star of repute. Her smile is contagious. Her personality appeals to all who see her work. On and off the screen, she is irresistible.

Then there is Arthur Moon, who enacts heavy lover and heavy villain parts with equal precision. He is a dark-haired, dark-eyed young man, congenial and likable, and he radiates good fellowship. His knowledge of screen technique adds materially to the strength of the Vogue comedy cast.

The productions of this company reach the screen through the medium of the Mutual Film Corporation, which has found that the Vogue comedies are constantly increasing in popularity both with exhibitor and theater patron.

CLEVER UNDER-SEA PHOTOGRAPHY.

Remarkable scenes photographed under water enhance the brisk comedy of "The Sea Dogs," the Vim release of June 3. The rescue of a family of castaways is effected by the simple expedient of towing a boat which drifts to their island. The towing is done by Babe Hardy, the famous "Plump," who wades along the sea bottom, pulling the painter of the boat, in which six persons are seated. Several other cleverly devised scenes lift this picture out of the ordinary run, including the antics of a hawser which obligingly ties itself into knots at the right moment.

J. P. MCGOWAN WINS POPULARITY CONTEST.

J. P. McGowan, whose latest far-famed accomplishment is the production of "The Girl and the Game" with Helen Holmes, has won the laurels of popularity in a contest conducted through the columns of the Minneapolis Journal.

Mr. McGowan is now at work in the title role and directing the production of "Whispering Smith," the novel by Frank H. Spearmin, which is being filmed as a ten-reel feature, with Helen Holmes in the principal feminine role, at the Los Angeles studios of the Signal Film Corporation.

"HER HUSBAND'S WIFE" (Ivan).

The Ivan Film Productions will release through their exchanges on June 1 "Her Husband's Wife," an original story by Ivan Abramson. The story of "Her Husband's Wife" treats of an unfaithful wife who deserts her husband and child and elopes with a sculptor. The child in later years becomes a famous violinist. The woman leaves the sculptor to marry another, but to him also she proves false and secures a divorce. Her husband marries the famous violinist (his wife's daughter) some time later. A wonderful dramatic story unfolds itself.

Scene from "Her Husband's Wife" (Ivan).

self and the situations are tense with interest as the play comes to the denouement and finally ends happily for the deserving.

A notable cast was assembled to enact the various roles. Sally Crute heads the list. To her is assigned the "vampire" role in this play. Mignon Anderson has the role of the vampire's daughter. Augustus Phillips, long with the Edison Company, returns to the screen in this play and creates the difficult roles of husband to both Brinsley Shaw, William Reecht and other well known screen players support the principals.

"Her Husband's Wife" will be released through the Ivan Exchanges throughout the country the last week in May. It will be in five acts.

"FLAMES OF VENGEANCE" (Gaumont).

The first June release of a Gaumont three-reel photodrama will be "Flames of Vengeance." This will reach the screen as a Mutual Picture June 8. Miss Gertrude Robinson has the stellar role, with Miss Iva Shepard appearing as the central female figure in the first reel. "Flames of Vengeance" tells the story of a woman's mistake on her wedding day. Miss Shepard has the role of the girl disowned by her hot-headed old father because she jilts the man she is to marry in a few hours to bestow her hand upon one of the men asked to serve as ushers for the happy event. The man she marries not only proves unworthy but also dies in a short time. The young wife is forced to struggle desperately to rear the daughter who is born to her.

Miss Robinson is the daughter of this union. When the drama itself opens she is a girl of nineteen. She secures employment as a stenographer in the office of a large manufacturing concern, not knowing that her employer is the man her mother had wronged by deserting him at the altar. The man falls in love with her. When there is labor trouble, he is abducted by striking conspirators and imprisoned in a barn far in the country. But his stenographer learns of his plight and rides to his rescue on top of a limousine which is taking several men sworn to burn the building with their employer in it. She effects his rescue in a spectacular manner, and all ends happily with the girl marrying the man her mother had once promised to wed. Others in the cast are Sydney Mason, John Reinhard, John Mackin, Birsha Shepard, Albert Macklin, James Levering, Mathilde Baring and Charles H. Travis.

"JACK" (Mustang).

Anna Little, with whose record as a cowgirl and horsewoman all film fans are familiar, has a splendid opportunity to show just what she can do in the characterization of a society woman also in a two-part Mustang drama entitled "Jack," in which Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson portray the principal male parts, under the direction of Borzage.

Borzage, who plays the title role of Jack, is a plain cowboy on the ranch owned by Gilman (Dick La Reno). Frances (Anna Scene from "Jack" (Mustang).

Little) is a girl who has been born and brought up in wealth and luxury. She goes West on a visit with her schoolmate, Gilman's daughter, and falls in love with Jack, promising to return and marry him when her school days are over.

Back East, Frances allows herself to be talked into marrying Welton, a rich club man (Jack Richardson), and thus writes to Jack. Meanwhile Jack has built a bungalow to be ready for his bride. When he receives the news of her approaching marriage to Welton, he burns down the new house and tries to end his life in the fire. However, he is rescued by neighbors; Frances is informed of the tragedy and realizes she loves Jack, who regains his health under her tender nursing; and the two lovers are married.

Anna Little is at her very best in the realm of cowboys and horses. In her charming, free-hearted girlishness there is an appeal that reaches out from the screen. The story is a splendid vehicle for Miss Little's abilities. "Jack" will be released on the Mutual schedule on May 26.

"FLOATING STAGE" FOR "SOCIAL PIRATE."

A "floating stage" is the latest innovation introduced at the Kalem Company's Glendale studio. Director Horne found it necessary to construct the new wrinkle to secure the desired realism for the ship's interior scenes in "In the Service of the State," a forthcoming episode of "The Social Pirates." A slightly rocking motion of the ship was required. In the small interiors this was an easy matter to evolve, but the concert room of the liner in which much of the important action occurs taxed the inventive genius of the studio floor. Director Horne refuses to divulge the exact means used, but the effect was much similar to a modified form of the "Witching Waves," so popular at amusement resorts. After two hours of rehearsing and playing on the gently swaying floor of the ship the players were of one mind in agreeing that one does not have to go to sea to get seasick.

SELIG-TRIBUNE GOES AFTER MEXICAN STUFF.

With commendable enterprise Editor Jack Wheeler of the Selig-Tribune, the motion picture news film, ordered a specially equipped automobile for carrying cameramen into Mexico when the United States forces recently entered that country. This is probably the first occasion where an automobile has been especially built and equipped for service on such an occasion.

Selig Tribune Touring Car.

This Selig-Tribune touring car has capacity for seventy-five gallons of gasoline, fifteen gallons of water and eight gallons of cylinder oil. An especially constructed top of khaki affords shelter during the day and can be adjusted as a sleeping and shelter tent at night. The novel car also is equipped to carry a camera, tripod, blankets, canned goods, cooking utensils, and there is a novel rack for machine gun equipment.

In fact the automobile has been so constructed that it can make a continuous journey of eight hundred miles without stopping for either gasoline, water or oil. There is also a box lined with steel plates and, in case of trouble, the car can be operated from the interior of the box.

The Selig-Tribune car is being used in Mexico by I. G. Ries and Nicholas McDonald.

RIALTO COMPLETES "HOUSE OF MIRRORS."

The initial production of the Rialto Film Corporation, "The House of Mirrors," by Frederick Chapin, directed by Marshall Farnum, is completed and will be released in two weeks. The photoplay is replete with dramatic situations and treats of a theme domestic in its nature.

Unusual sets were built for this production, but noteworthy of them all is the room of mirrors, after which the play receives its title. In order to construct this room twelve gigantic mirrors were placed in frames reinforced with steel in order to hold the tremendous weight. It required nine men sixteen hours of continuous work to install these mirrors.

It has been heretofore announced that the production will be in five reels, but difficulty has been experienced in cutting down the 16,000 feet of negative originally taken to fit five reels and it is not as yet determined whether the producer will be in that length or of an added reel.

Frank Mills is starred in the production.

"THE LURE OF A LURID LOVE" (Universal).

Have you ever observed how vamps work under the tropical Hawaiian moon? Do you know that they always slip a cigarette in the corner of their mouths and wear aigrettes? Have you ever noticed that vamps generally do their vamping on a most melodious lounge dressed in clinging silks and satins which suggest that they are trying to entice the object of their vamping into a compromising attitude?

If you have, then "The Lure of a Lurid Love," a Universal comedy, will give you a laugh that will last a week. It tells how a faithful wife and her still more faithful six-months old baby are betrayed by a wicked "wampire" who wins the "victim" to her by wile. Oh, it's a heart-rending tale, and if you are tired ad nauseum of the woman adventuring-vampire type of story don't fail to see "The Lure of a Lurid Love." It's a looloo.

"OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY" (Thanhouser).

Expose of a band of notorious "get-rich-quick" schemers and their nefarious methods pursued in obtaining the confidences and frequently the savings of a gullible public, has been made through the Variety Films Corporation, has resulted in the announcement by the Mutual Film Corporation. In the preparation of the scenario the Thanhouser-Mutual studios were furnished with considerable data by Federal agents and by several noted Government sleuths who have been instrumental in breaking up a number of bands of notorious "get-rich-quick" plotters.

This stirring production will be released through the Mutual as a Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, under the title of "Other People's Money," the five acts of the piece are alive with action and replete with thrilling situations. Throughout runs an unusually pleasing love story, ending with the happy marriage of the young girl who brines about the expose of the band and the young detective, with whom she worked.

Gladya Hulette, the five-foot star of Thanhouser-Mutual productions, is the featured player, supported by an extraordinary company of players, headed by Frankie Frankoluh, a newcomer, but by no means an unknown player. "Other People's Money" will be released in five acts, on May 29.

VARIETY FILM PROPOSES SERIES.

An unusual demand for, and the impression created by, the five-part feature, "Should a Baby Die?" being booked through the Variety Films Corporation, has resulted in the announcement by President Louis Rosenbluh that the present picture will form the first of a series that will be completed and exploited under this general title and each of which will be accorded a main sub-title appropriate to the phrase of the general question on which the ensuing chapters will dwell. This decision was arrived at as the result of a contest held by an up-to-date exhibitor who, in conjunction with the Variety Corporation, offered a cash prize among his patrons for the best suggestion offered by them for a serial story on this topic. The series, or as it might be called, the serial, will be in six or eight parts, and each will run approximately from four to five reels in length. Contracts for the production work will be placed in a few days, and the second picture started on at once.

I. J. Schmetz has left for an extended trip through the State of New York in the interests of the Variety Films Corporation and to exploit their big five-part feature, "Should a Baby Die?" Mr. Schmetz's first stop was in Buffalo, where he put over some remarkably unique advertising stunts which created a decidedly favorable impression at the Screen Club Hall. After a few days' activities, he reports good business and a big demand for the picture.

"THE DESTROYERS" (Vitagraph).

With the first week of June comes a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature of unusually high quality. In it is a face new to photoplay lovers, for Lucille Lee Stewart, Vitagraph's new player, makes her bow to followers of the big "V" in Ralph W. Ince's latest effort, "The Destroyers." The story is taken from James Oliver Curwood's novel, "Peter God," a tale of the Northwest.

Miss Stewart portrays the part of Josephine McClood, the wife of Peter God, a fugitive who is hiding in the frozen North. Year before he had been the main actor in a series of adventures of an unlit character for the majority and was afterward "framed" by the man and his confederates. The evidence against him assures conviction and he escapes to the North. Shortly after his accuser on his deathbed makes a confession clearing him of the crime. Josephine, after many hardships in the white blanketed country, finds him in the clutches of the "red death," and through her careful nursing and attention he recovers. Together they start back for civilization, happy in the knowledge of each other's love and devotion.

Huntley Gordon, John Robertson and Richard Turner assist Miss Stewart in the enactment of the story. It is a typical "Ince" production.

DRA-KO AD CARTOONS POPULAR.

The steady growth of the business of the Dra-Ko Film Company, Inc., is very gratifying to the originators of that concern. There can be no doubt about the field being a field for the animated cartoon as an advertising medium.

One of the main reasons why this concern has been so successful has been their care and foresight in handling this new type of advertising medium. They have placed the creation of all cartoons in the hands of Frank A. Nankin, a well known introduction. His splendid work is known from coast to coast and in many foreign lands. Back of every cartoon that he and his corps of able assistants turn out is the experience of this man who has been carefully studying his audiences for years. He knows what people want, and he goes them one better by giving them more than they expected.

Wherever these commercial advertising cartoons have been shown, they have had the hearty approval of the audience, and because of their clean-cut, spontaneous humor they have been highly praised by the theater men themselves.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPH PRESENTS PLASTIQUES.

"Did Sherman Say Law or War?" will be the second of Ashley Miller's "Plastiques" on the Paramount program to be released among the short reel subjects from the J. R. Bray studios. This screen novelty is a clever adaptation of sculpture to the films, the figures in motion being shown in relief. The characters in these scenes are produced by the action of the audience by evolution on the screen. Two farmers, a lawyer and a cow constitute the cast of "Did Sherman Say Law or War?" For plot this drama in sculpture depends on the squabble of the farmers over a cow which is claimed by both. The rightful owner engages a lawyer to defend his rights, but the litigation drags out through the courts until the cow wastes away to a skeleton. At the final settlement one farmer is awarded the cow's tail, the other her horns. To the lawyer himself goes the cow as payment for long and faithful service.

AUTO-TRUCK FILM DELIVERY.

Owing to the unsatisfactory express service, exhibitors and exchange men have been seriously inconvenienced in the handling of films between theaters in Connecticut and the distributing offices in New York. There has been lately organized the Interstate Film Delivery Company to transport films on stated routes, leaving New York at 3 a. m. and arriving at the farthest point in the service by 10 o'clock in the morning. The return service starts at 1 a. m. and delivers the films picked up along the way in New York by 9 o'clock in the morning. Two trucks of 1½-ton capacity have begun operating, and with one truck held for emergency it is believed that this service will end the annoyances that have prevailed. The main route runs to New Haven, with a spur from Bridgeport to Waterbury, making all intermediate stops at picture theaters and kissing a service in both directions.

TWO UNIVERSALS UNDER WAY.

"The Seekers" is the title of a five-reel feature which Director Otis Turner is preparing to film at Universal City, featuring Flora Parker in Haven with a large cast of well known Universal players in support. The scenes of the story are laid in the Eastern mountain regions and it involves the love of two strong men for a girl. The photoplay was written by Olga Printzian and the scenario by Turner.

Director Otis Turner has commenced the picturization of "The Deacon's Denial," a five-reel comedy-drama written by Reynolds and featuring Myrtle Gonzalez and Frank MacQuarrie. Others in the cast are Val Paul, Fred Church, Bertram Granby, George Hernandez, Jack Clark and John W. Van Vleet. The story is written around the proverbial church deacon and is a comedy of high class with many clever situations.

PARAMOUNT-BRAY CARTOON BY EARL HURD.

To the annals of fishing lore, Bobby Bumps, the mischievous youngster, contributed by Earl Hurd to the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, adds another chapter in the twenty-second release of these drawings. "Bobby Bumps Goes Fishing." When the hero decides on a fishing trip Dad accompanies him, both on pleasure bent. Bobby seats himself at one end of the boat, Dad at the other. The latter's luck is consistently against him, but Bobby's success is so phenomenal that he makes a catch every time he throws his line in. Dad changes places with his son, but having no better results, resumes his original position. Bobby's next catch is so large that Dad is sent headlong into the water. Dad registers such anger that Bobby hastily exits. Starting off in search of adventure, the hero buys a large stuffed fish which he rigs up with a motor attached to a propeller at the fish's tail. Entering the scene where Dad is still fishing the fake fish immediately gets his hook and they exit together. Dan's next stop is at the photograph gallery, where he and his catch pose before the camera. Then he goes home to mother, who listens to his tale, but at once discovers the fraud. Bobby is immediately bribed and exits victoriously.

"PAY DIRT" NEXT KNICKERBOCKER "FIVE."

"Pay Dirt," a drama of the gold fields, is announced for release by Knickerbocker Star Features on the General Film program, June 18. This is the second five-reel feature under the Knickerbocker brand, following "Spellbound," released May 17.

Henry King plays the leading role of a "drifter" from the East, who has staked out a claim that is coveted by Peter Gardner, an "old-timer." Gardner invokes the aid of Dick Weed, a gambler, and the two attempt to cheat the Easterner at cards. He is an inveterate gambler, but the influence of a woman, herself an outcast because of her passion for gambling, helps him to conquer himself.

Marguerite Nichols is again cast as the female lead. This young actress is rapidly making a name for herself through her skillful support of Henry King in his "red blood" roles. Others in the cast are Mollie MacConnell, Daniel Giffether, Gordon Sackville and Charles Dudley. Henry King, assisted by Reeves Eason, directed the production, which is from the Horkheimer studios.

"THE THREE GODFATHERS" (Bluebird).

When "The Three Godfathers" appeared in the Saturday Evening Post the editor of that publication declared that Peter B. Kyne had written the best story the Post ever printed. The opportunities that the narrative presented for unusual photography and scenes uncommon in moving pictures prompted Bluebird Photoplays to secure the picture rights, and as a result the scenario submitted by Harvey Gates was accepted and E. J. Le Saint was commissioned to direct the production.

With a special car filled with animals and paraphernalia necessary to the proper equipment of the scenes, Mr. Le Saint took a large company to the Mojave desert and there worked four weeks completing the exteriors. Incident to his stay on the desert Mr. Le Saint "caught" an actual sand storm in all its terrifying details, from the time it appeared in the distance until it overwhelmed the immediate scene and then passed onward.

The Bluebird production has other novel features, but the central motive of the story is the main dependence and is in itself unique in pictured narratives. Three desperadoes are called upon to keep the breath of life in the body of a newly born babe, suddenly and unexpectedly thrust upon them when its mother died, alone in the middle of the Mojave desert. The touch of human interest that develops from the sacrifices of these men in transferring the baby to a place of safety is the great element upon which the Bluebird feature is expected to make its appeal to the public. Harry Carey, Frank Lanning and George Berrell are ably equipped to play the roles of the three godfathers with rare artistry.

"THE LIGHT OF DUSK" (Lubin).

The gap that is supposed to separate church and theater and which is lessening as the endeavors of exponents in pulpit and on the stage increase in sincerity has been spanned.

A bridge upon which those advancing from either side may meet on untroubled ground is furnished in "The Light at Dusk," a remarkable story by Anthony P. Kelly, which, under the direction of Edgar Lewis, is being made by the Lubin Company into a feature photoplay destined to make a powerful impression on account of the lesson conveyed.

The introduction of the character of Christ into the warp of a photoplay story requires the delicacy of a master hand, an undertaking that only the spirit of true reverence and obvious intent to serve inspiringly, could save from protest. From the point of view of both church and theater, "The Light at Dusk" in its reverential introduction of the character of Christ bringing healing to exasperated minds and response to the prayers of the patient poor, must be regarded as a sermon on the screen.

The story itself combines all the elements of a modern drama in a theme of absorbing human interest. But the purpose of the author for which the figure of Christ is projected into the story is to give another exposition of the deathless text on charity, the greatest of all virtues.

It is the story told over again of the rich man who was counseled to sell all that he had and give to the poor, and in "The Light at Dusk" the theme is exploited in a way that must accentuate the tremendous value of the screen, as after all, the pulpit with the largest congregation.

BILLIE BURKE WELCOMED BY EXHIBITORS.

Topheavy business for the summer months is almost unheard of in the motion picture industry, and yet there are a vast hoard of exhibitors in the United States this year who are not worrying over the takings during the hot months. The reason for this lies in the fact that these managers have one and all signed up contracts entitling for the showing of Billie Burke in the new George Kleine motion picture novel, "Gloria's Romance," from the pens of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, at their theaters.

The magic name of Billie Burke has kept open more than one Broadway house during the hottest days of the summer season, when Miss Burke was a star of the speaking stage, and like results are assured for the picture theater managers who have arranged for her appearance on their screens during the same season. In addition to seizing the opportunity of playing Billie Burke during what is ordinarily a dull season these managers jumped at the chance to screen a clean, wholesome story with nothing of the sensational or melodramatic in its entire length of twenty feature chapters. Dainty, fascinating Billie Burke will charm and hold every one who beholds her in the opening installments of the new screen novel, and her romance grows more and more interesting as it progresses, so managers feel their patrons, who witness chapter one of "Gloria's Romance" are certain to flock back to the theater, no matter how hot the night, once they begin to follow the tale.

"OUR PEOPLE" (Essanay).

The trials of the small-town editor usually are pathetic and humorous enough to create a heart interest, regardless of his personality. But make him a young editor in love with the daughter of the town's leading banker, and she his only reporter, and there is the nucleus for a plot of delightfully human phases. Add to this Bryant Washburn as the struggling young editor and the only thing else required to make it ideal is a pretty girl. Gertrude Glover has that part. The three-act Essanay carries a clever theme, which can be enjoyed alike both in large and small cities. For the latter there is a multiplied appeal. There is no attempt to satirize the small town; rather the desire to glorify it. The plot culminates with the young hero getting out the town's first extra edition and frustrating a run on his prospective father-in-law's bank. The old man is then won over and a young editor and his assistant decide to fight for the rights of "our people" together, thereafter.

KERNEL NUTT SERIES FOR V-L-S-E.

With the completion of the Frank Daniels' "Mr. Jack" series of comedies the V-L-S-E announces another set of ten one-reel comedies, which will treat of the escapades of Kernel Nutt, in the person of Frank Daniels. These single-reel comedy plays will be released at the rate of one each week, the first having been released on May 15.

Each release has a distinct plot all its own, and has no connection with the other plays of the series.

With the favorable comments that the last series brought from exhibitors, the success of the Kernel Nutt series, measured by their present demand, is quite assured.

The first comedy, released May 15, was "Kernel Nutt, the Janitor," followed by "Kernel Nutt Wins a Wife," "Kernel Nutt, the Footman," and "Kernel Nutt and the Hundred Dollar Bill," to be released on May 22 and 29, and June 5, respectively, with six others to follow.

"THE HARE AND THE TORTOISE."

"The Hare and the Tortoise," produced by William Robert Daly, from the story by William Anthony McGuire, proves that the race is not always to the swift. John Drake can be likened to the tortoise, while his gay brother, Sidney resembles the hare, which, confident in its own ability, fritters away valuable time.

Released through the General Film Service, on Monday, May 29, "The Hare and the Tortoise" is a multiple-reel drama, which acceptably upholds the new standards for regular service set by the Selig Company. The cast includes: Fritz Brunette, Harry Mestayer, Edward J. Piel, Harry Lonsdale, Lillian Hayward, Edith Johnson and William Scott. There are a number of spectacular scenes, not the least of which is the interior of a large steel mill, which was turned over to the Selig Company for film dramatic purposes. William Anthony McGuire, the world-famous author and playwright, never wrote a more gripping and exciting plot than that of "The Hare and the Tortoise."

"THE WOMAN IN BLACK," MAY 13.

In the issue of The Moving Picture World dated May 27th the Biograph company's five-reel feature "The Woman in Black" was incorrectly listed as Wednesday, May 31, the release date should have been specified as Wednesday, May 13th. "The Woman in Black" features Lionel Barrymore and is obtainable through the General Film Company.

"REPAID" (American).

In the film adaptation of "Repaid," a two-part "Flying A" story written by Anthony W. Colclough, directed by Thomas Ricketts, to be released May 22, the strong note is the love of his parents which prompts a complete sacrifice of social and business position. The theme is true in note—as though taken from a chapter in the life of many a boy.

Edward Coxen, Lizette Thorne and George Field are the characters who give life to the story and their portrayals are excellent. There is not a moment throughout the entire two parts when the heart of the audience does not go out to the youth who is misjudged, and his dream of happiness rudely dispelled by the inabilities of a stern father. The pathos of the scenes with the heart-broken mother (Louise Lester) are wonderfully full of heart appeal and depth of feeling.

"Repaid" is to be released through the Mutual service on May 22.

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co.

The President, Watterson R. Rothacker, Describes in an Interesting Manner the Great Modern Laboratory and Studio Just Completed by the Company, and Announces Some of the Company's Plans.

THE thousands of requests for information concerning our new laboratory and studio, and the many inquiries relative to our plans for production and our policy have actually swamped my desk and taxed the capacity of our telephone lines. Here is the answer:

The Industrial Moving Picture Company was launched a little more than six years ago and has always been directed along lines definitely purposeful. The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company was named as successor to the Industrial Moving Picture Company to discourage confusion through names made to sound like our's and trade on the prestige we have gained for the word "Industrial." The name combination was also determined, because it is more representative of our increased scope.

We are particularly proud of this organization representing, as it does, the acme of scientific management and general efficiency in moving picture production. We are duly and truly prepared to occupy the ideal of our dreams and it is now ready for occupancy.

Our new building is located on Diversey Parkway, at Ward street—twenty minutes from the center of Chicago by surface line, and fifteen minutes by motor on Chicago's great boulevard chain which passes our doors. We are about a mile from Lincoln Park and the shore of Lake Michigan.

The laboratory and studios adjoin, are operated in combination, and are under one roof. The building proper has 125 feet boulevard front and 130 feet depth. We also own the adjoining property which we will fence so as to have an enclosure 50 x 130 feet for garage and storage purposes. We have a total floor space of 19,500 square feet in the laboratory and 6,500 square feet in the studio.

The entire structure is absolutely fireproof and dust-proof. The air is well washed by a special device, and both temperature and humidity are governed automatically. All walls at top and bottom have two inch coives which eliminate crevices where dust might accumulate, and the walls throughout are painted and treated by special processes, the floors likewise. Our general offices, with telephone exchange, service and audit bureaus, are on the second floor with north and east exposure. All of the office partitions are constructed of art metal or plate glass, and all the office furniture is made of steel, with mahogany finish.

We have installed a battery of five enormous International filters, which is located in a special room at the north end of the building, which serves the developing, wash and color rooms, as well as piping pure water to various departments. Our perforating room is a model of its kind, and we have here provided to operate comfortably sixteen Bell & Howell perforators, with all special attachments. The positive and negative developing rooms are separated and operated independently, for obvious reasons. In all of the dark rooms the Eastman system of indirect lighting has been installed, giving us higher efficiency, the employees more comfort, and securing a decided saving in cost of operation. The tanks in the developing rooms have been laid out scientifically so that there is no lost motion.

The wash room, and the tinting and toning rooms adjoin the developing rooms and are arranged and equipped so that the very best results may here be obtained in the very best time.

The dry room, which is really the clearing house, is of magnificent proportions and capable of drying many times the amount of footage our big battery of printers can turn out. The printing room is on a very elaborate scale, being capable of containing twenty-six printers. Our present equipment is composed of a large battery of Duplex step printers, Bell & Howell printers, and several Pathoscope printers for handling twenty-nine millimeter film.

From the dry room the film is transported by dumb waiters to the second floor, where it is received in the inspection and assembling rooms. All of the girls in these rooms use gloves and all of the furniture in these rooms is steel white enameled. Here the film is carefully assembled, inspected, cleaned by Duplex polishing machines, and made ready for screen inspection.

A special room is devoted to title making and a special room to trick photography. Adjoining the offices, and adjacent to the assembling room, is the large art department where drawings for animated cartoons are made.

In addition to the screen inspection rooms for the factory, we have installed a large and beautifully furnished projection room for customers where two automatic projectors are in service.

After the film has been screen inspected and passed, it is delivered to the shipping department which is conveniently located for the purpose. Here all shipments are checked, boxed, labeled, carefully inspected, and delivered by the electric elevator to the shipping dock.

Throughout the building we have inter-department telephone service so that our office can talk with any department head with no waste of time.

The studio floor is capable of comfortably and efficiently handling six complete sets at one time. Our lighting equipment offers something decidedly new in studio illumination, and not only secures a maximum of light, but saves a vast amount of time and inconvenience, and does away with all of the confusion incidental to cables being on the floor the time sets are changed. In this studio we have places for pit work and a large swimming tank 20 x 30 feet.

In conjunction with the studio we operate a completely appointed and equipped carpenter shop, paint room, property room and dressing rooms. The large electric elevator serves these various rooms and also is extended to the roof, and the roof is built to carry an extremely heavy life load, so that on the roof an outdoor set of imitations set on the platform. The studio floor is of heavy wood placed upon a solid concrete foundation so that there is absolutely no chance for vibration.

So far as has been possible, we have standardized our equipment throughout and have overlooked not a single opportunity to buy the best, install efficiently, and operate on a sound basis where there is no waste effort or motion. By doing this we secure the supreme degree of film quality at prices which could not be quoted under ordinary conditions. By maintaining and operating a studio in direct combination with the laboratory, we offer the moving picture trade everything needed in moving picture production.

In closing, I would like to lay great stress upon the fact that we have built, according to advice from the Eastman Kodak Company and the various Underwriters' Laboratories, the heaviest and most substantial structure in the world. It is of steel concrete construction thoroughly departmentized, with bafflers throughout, and air cushion protection against explosions, and with every department sprinkled. In fact, every department in the building is sprinkled by automatic sprinkling devices which are served by the 18,000 gallon tank on the roof. By virtue of the protection afforded by this vault, we are able to secure insurance against fire and theft on all of our negatives and the negatives of our customers, and it's enormous size enables us to store safely thousands of reels of negative and positive in addition to our raw stock.

Now, in reference to our plans of operation: We still operate the Industrial Moving Picture Company and specialize in moving pictures adapted for industrial exploitation, commercial education, general advertising and publicity, and we still maintain our department for developing, commercial developing and printing for all those who take moving pictures professionally or as amateurs. As a matter of accommodation, we supply Eastman raw stock to our customers, and by reason of the immense stock we always keep on hand, we can make shipment in any quantity the same day order is received regardless of quantity.

I am not prepared, just now, to explain in detail the plans we have for this year, other than to say that we will put our new multiple set studio and our entire factory at the disposal of the moving picture trade. We will rent our studio, with entire equipment, at reasonable rates; we will make moving pictures in this studio to order, under contract, and are prepared to put on the biggest feature or the smallest split reel, and give them equal attention. In fact, we are prepared to furnish complete service to any person desiring quality-moving-picture production.

ADVENTURES OF A PIANO.

What can happen to a piano bought on the installment plan is the subject of a brisk comedy scheduled for release by Vim on June 9. The title, "A Dollar Down," lampoons the sensational "dollar-down-and-dollar-a-week" advertising of some piano firms, and the action centers about the attempts of a lover to get revenge upon his rival, who has a piano on the installment plan. There isn't much left of the instrument after Fokes and Jabbs get through with it.

ABOUT "THE ANSWER."

Through an error a Thanouser drama entitled "The Answer" was advertised as being in one reel instead of two. This production is the first release of Emmet Mixx, the popular short-story writer, who has just joined the Thanouser scenario staff.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

THE remarkable ability of Pauline Frederick, displayed as the dancer in several scenes in "The World's Great Snare," need not surprise anyone. For the Famous Players' star first began her triumphant stage career in musical comedy and has never lost her clever pedal control.

It was announced by the Thanhouser-Mutual studios that Frederick Warde, Shakespearian star, who has been signed for a number of "Thanhouser Classics" to be released within the next eight months through Mutual, will begin work on his first picture within the next ten days. All of the interior work will be done at the New Rochelle studios, the exteriors being photographed in an up-state location recently selected by Ernest Warde, his son, who is to direct the features starring his father.

Phillips Smalley is directing a five-reel society drama entitled "The First Stone," in which Mary McDonald is featured. The story is by Miss Lois Weber, who took her text from the Scriptures and about it has weaved a powerful story. A large cast of players from Universal City including Horace Morgan, the Misses Emerson and Jack Mulhall, are working in this photoplay, many of the scenes of which are to be taken on one of the beautiful ranches in the vicinity of Los Angeles.

John Lorenz, Essanay leading man, appears in "That Sort," a forthcoming five-act photoplay taken from the stage play of Basil McDonald Hastings.

John H. Collins, the director, who is producing "The Flower of No Man's Land," with Viola Dana in the stellar role, began his career as a baseball pitcher. He played with many semi-professional teams in the east and turned down several flattering offers to play professional ball.

Director Henry McRae and his company, including his featured players, Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill, together with L. C. Shumway and Dr. H. G. Stafford, spent most of the week at the race track located at Tia Juana, Mexico, filming scenes for "The Jockey's Triumph," a race-track drama. The story is by Mrs. A. C. Robinson, from which Frank M. Wiltermood prepared the scenario.

Bud Lehman, who plays the part of a frontier postman in "The Quilter," a five-part Metro wonderplay in which Lionel Barrymore is starred, began his professional career as an acrobat with the Adam Forepaugh circus. He is now sixty years old. He broke both legs many years ago in a fall from the top of the tent. After he recovered, he went into stock and was on the speaking stage until his recent debut in motion pictures.

"Smiling Billie Mason" is directing and playing the featured lead in the second episode of "Baseball Bill," a rapid-fire comedy, supported by Miss Peggy Coudray, Victor Poter, Orrin Jackson and others of the Universal's stock company. Mason is using considerable trick photography in this picture.

Jack Mack, famous as a banjoist in Lew Dockstader's minstrels' way back in the 70's, is now doing special work as an "extra" at the American-Mutual studios. He appears in several of the scenes of "The Overcoat," a Masterpiece de Luxe Edition feature.

Cleo Madison, assisted by Wm. V. Mong as co-director, has commenced the picturization of "Priscilla," a two-reel photoplay written by Harvey Gates of the Universal staff, in which Miss Madison and Mong play the leading roles. In the supporting cast are Charles Gunn and Jack Abbott. Miss Madison has completed the one-reel slum drama "When the Wolf Howls."

Clarence A. Frembers, president of the Photodrama Club of Chicago, has been added to the scenario staff of the American-Mutual studios.

"The Reprisal," a Selig feature film with Fritz Brunette in the leading role, is in course of production by Director William Robert Daly at the Los Angeles studios.

Earle Williams, the popular Vitagraph star, is still having numerous experiences in the C. N. and A. M. Williamson story which Wally Van has well under way. It will be released in fifteen episodes, one episode a week.

The five-reel mountain drama entitled, "The Silent Battle," featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, is almost completed by Director Jack Conway at Universal City. Playing opposite Kerrigan is Lois Wilson and in the supporting cast are Maude George, Harry Carter and a large number of other Universal City players. Many of the scenes of this film play were made at Pine Hills near the Mexican border and east of San Diego. In addition some wonderful sets were erected on the mammoth stage at University City by Conway for use in this photoplay which promises to add greatly to the reputation of the featured actor.

"The Fable of the Fearsome Feud Between the First Families" is being constructed in two reels for Essanay. The fable is the customary Ade scream multiplied by two. Its production in two reels has allowed for more elaborate sets and the use of more people. It is one of Ade's unrivaled satires on the activities of the ultra rich. Essanay is continuing its regular production of single-reel fables.

Vernon Sniely, the son of the Los Angeles Chief of Police, is employed as assistant to Director T. N. Heffron, of the Selig Polyscope Company.

"The Fall of Deacon Stillwaters," is the title of a one-reel comedy being filmed by Director Allen Curtis of the Universal Joker company, featuring Gale Henry and William Franey and supported by M. Moranti, C. Conklin, Lillian Peacock, Jane Bernouddy, "Mother" Benson and a number of others. The story is written by A. B. Bishop and has a laugh in each scene.

Continuing to branch out, the Horkheimer Brothers have now added an animated cartoon department to their Long Beach studio. In J. R. Willis and J. Cammerer, they have two well-known artists.

Walter Pritchard, one of the Gaumont-Mutual cameramen attached to the winter studios at Jacksonville, Fla., has been called North by General Manager Bradford to become official cameraman for "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine released each week in the Mutual service. Pritchard will make his headquarters at the studios in Flushing, L. I.

Through the courtesy of Mack Sennett, director of the Keystone studios, Louella Maxam, leading woman with the Keystone forces, has been given an indefinite leave of absence in order to accompany her husband, William Brunton, on his trip to the Orient with the Signal-Mutual company, where numerous of the big exterior scenes will be made.

Little Zoe Beech is featured in a one-reel comedy drama entitled "The Availing Prayer," which is being produced by Director George Cochrane at Universal City. The story is by Richard Barker Shelton and prepared for the screen by Calder Johnston. The little star is supported by Miss Marjorie Ellison and Malcolm Blevins, together with others of the Universal stock company.

After completing the engagement in several Chicago theaters, Richard C. Travers returned to Essanay for a brief stay and then departed on the last leg of his vaudeville tour. The itinerary includes Cleveland, Buffalo, Syracuse, Rochester, Albany, Detroit, Indianapolis, and Omaha. At the conclusion of this bookish he will return to the studio and take the lead in several plays with summer settings.

Harry T. Morey, who supported Edna May in "Salvation Joan," a movie working in a short Broadway Star Feature Eugene Mullin, who is author of many Vitaphone successes, is supervising the filming of the story.

The part of John Vallant as a child in "The Vallants of Virginia," is in the capable baby hands of "Little Billy Jacobs." He is a veteran in experience, if not in years, and has already made himself at home in the Selig Zoo. He did not need on the grounds ten minutes before he knew all the animals by their first names.

Shirwood Macdonald has taken up the direction of "The Trip of Evil," the new photoplay series which Halton is producing for Pathé. It consists of fourteen stories, each episode complete in itself. Jackie Saunders, the featured player, enacts a different type of girl in each installment. In this regard the production promises to be a distinct novelty.

Seven comedies, each with its own star, are constantly at work in the Vogue-Mutual studios in Los Angeles. One single reel comedy is completed every third day.

For "Silks and Satins," the Famous Players built the largest set which has yet been constructed in their 56th street studio—and it was for the smallest star in the company's roster, little Marguerite Clark, who is the star of the production. The scene shows the interior of a huge medieval castle.

Director Henry McRae has completed "The Jockey's Triumph," a race track two-reel drama in which the lead was played by Dr. H. G. Stafford with Marie Walcamp opposite, and he is now preparing to film a railroad drama the title of which has not been announced, but it is settled that the leading roles will be played by Miss Walcamp and Lee Hill. This film story contained some very thrilling episodes.

Hughes Mack, Vitaphone's heavyweight comedian, is now appearing in "The Bachelor," a one-part comedy by Lawrence Seamon and C. Graham Baker. Hughes, as a boxer, introduces something entirely new in the "squared circle," when he uses gas bombs in his line of defense. Lawrence Seamon, besides being co-author, also directed the action of the story.

Lillian Drew, with whom picture patrons are most acquainted in heavy leads, has another such part in "Secret of the Night," a new Essanay three-act drama. Her last picture was a comedy drama, "A Return to Youth—and Trouble," and she demonstrated her versatility by packing it full of laughs. Sidney Alinsworth and John Lorenz also appear in the new piece.

Virginia Norden, late of the Vitaphone's eastern studio, has joined Balboa. She was specially engaged by the Horkheimer Brothers for dramatic work in a selection of stories being written for her. Miss Norden is statuesque, fine-featured and good to look at. Emotional roles are her particular delight.

"Not by Faith Alone," is the title of a story by Bob Wagner prepared for the screen by Calder Johnstone of the Universal City staff, which is being pictured by Director Lloyd Carleton, featuring Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson. Others in the cast are Alfred E. Smith, H. Skinner and Fred Witting. It is a story of the early days of the Spanish Missions of California and carries throughout a pretty love scene.

Marc MacDermott, now a recognized Vitaphone, is busily engaged on his first picture to be released by the Vitaphone Company. It is a five-part dramatic story by Louis Joseph Vance and is being filmed by Director William Humphrey as a Blue Ribbon Feature. Naomi Childers, Robert Whitworth and Josephine Earle play important characters in its enactment.

One of the bridges owned by the Pacific Electric Railroad was purchased outright by Director J. McGowan, who is staging the signal-Mutual five-part feature, "Medicine Bend," and destroyed by an explosion in order to get the proper realism for several of the important scenes.

"The Committee on Credentials," a story by Peter B. Kyne, and prepared for the screen in two reels, is nearly completed by Harry Carey and George Marshall acting as co-directors. Carey plays the lead in this western drama with Olive Fuller Golden opposite. Nearly all of the cowboys of Universal City are working in this film play which is being made with full realism of western scenes.

"Flames of Vengeance," second of the three-part Gaumont-Mutual feature releases, will go to the public early in June. Gertrude Robinson and Sydney Mason are the stars and in their support appear John Reinhard, Iva Shepard, John Macklin, Albert Macklin and James Levering. One of the big scenes in this production comes with the escape of the hero and heroine from a burning building. Another depicts Miss Robinson clinging to the top of a limousine while the car is speeding along at a terrific rate.

Frank Daniels, the popular Vitaphone comedian, is working under the direction of C. Jay Williams in a one-part comedy which comes from the pen of Mark Swann. The story gives the famous actor an opportunity to displaying the peculiar mannerisms which have won him many friends both on the legitimate stage and the photoplays.

Director Wallace Beery has completed the first episode of "Timothy Doreys," in which the leading role is played by Carter de Haven, and is now working on the filming of the second episode. Viola Smith plays opposite De Haven, while others in the cast are Helen Leslie, Jessie Arnold and Bertram Grassby.

Henry B. Walthall, leading man with Essanay, is the most popular photoplayer in Ottawa, Can., according to a poll of the city taken by the Ottawa Evening Journal. This is the second contest he has won within the last few weeks, having captured the prize in Australia as the greatest motion picture star.

A great cast of players has been gathered together in "The Two Orphans," the great play of Kate Claxton, filmed by the Selig Polycast Company. "The Two Orphans" will be released in regular General Film Company service. The cast includes: Kathryn Williams, Winnifred Greenwood, Myrtle Stedman, T. J. Carrigan, Charles Clark and other stars. Misses Williams and Greenwood assume the role of the Two Orphans. The date for the release is Monday, June 12.

While waiting for Director Stewart Paton to continue at Universal City a submarine feature on which he has been working in the East, Allen Holubar will direct a one-reel society drama, entitled "Any Youth," in which he will play the lead with Dorothy Phillips opposite. The photography is largely allegorical, with a number of special photographic effects. It is the story of a youth who eventually finds his better self for the love of a girl.

Anna Little, famous for her many daring feats of horsemanship in Flying "A" Mutual feature releases, casts aside her cow-girl raiment in "Jack," a forthcoming Mustang-Mutual drama for that of an Eastern society girl.

On his return from New York last week, H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Company, announced the appointment of William Stoermer as director-general of the Long Beach studio. He will have supervision over all productions. Having had extensive stage and screen experience in the putting on of plays, Mr. Stoermer is an important addition to the Balboa forces.

Director Jay Hunt has taken a company of Universal City players to Eureka, in the northern part of California, to film two, and perhaps three, lumber camp and mountain photoplays. The first one to be produced is entitled "The Trail of Honor." Lucille Young will play the leading role in at least two of the film stories. She will be supported by Jack Holt and a number of others of the Universal City stock company. Hunt will be away several weeks.

Edith Story and Antonio Moreno will soon be seen in a five-part Mexican story. Miss Story plays the part of a dancer and Mr. Moreno (her lover) that of a Mexican gentleman. Besides producing the picture, George D. Baker also conceived the plot. Mr. Baker selected an all-star cast to support the popular "Vitaphone pair."

Cleo Madison and William V. Mong are filming a two-reel comedy drama, entitled "Priscilla," written by Harvey Gates of the Universal City staff. Miss Madison plays the title role, with Charles Gunn opposite. Others in the cast are Mrs. Bertram Grassby, Rex Hanford, Wadsworth Harris and Frank McQuarrie. While the story is written as a comedy, it has a heart interest theme.

Director Rube Miller, who guides the energies of Vogue comedians and comedienne, has turned his duties at the Vogue studio, after a severe attack of blood poisoning which resulted from his stepping on a rusty nail.

Director Jacques Jaccard is not only filming a multiple-reel underworld drama, entitled "The Viewpoint," but is also supervising the production of a Western two-reel photoplay. Jaccard wrote the underworld photoplay in which the featured lead is played by G. Raymond Nye, with Mina Cunard opposite. Important parts in the cast are taken by Jessie Arnold, Helen Wright and William Quinn. Jaccard has been working day and night on this film story and declares it is one of the best he has attempted at Universal City.

Florence La Badie will make her initial appearance as a star of the new Thanhouser Classics, to be released through the Mutual in "The Fugitive." It will be released in five acts. Miss La Badie will be supported by George Marlo and a notable company of players, several of whom have been especially engaged for the Classics in which Miss La Badie is to be starred. Her second Classic will be released under the title of "Woman, Saint and Devil." It will be in five reels.

Director "Smiling" Billie Mason is making the third reel of his "Baseball Bill" serial at Universal City. These are being released in one reel and, the title would indicate, surround a baseball player who has plenty of action and many laughable situations. Mason not only directs, but is playing the featured lead himself, and, in addition, supervising some of the clever photography.

Red-blooded romance, adventure, financial and political intrigue, land grabs and the expose of crooked real estate transactions prevail throughout "The Reclamations," a five-act American-Mutual Masterpiece, De Luxe Edition, starring Winnifred Greenwood and Franklin Ritchie. It was directed by Edward Sloman.

Sunday Films in Boston

Present Method of Designating Special Sabbath Pictures Stands—Attempt to Discover a Better Way Fails—Clerk Macer Says Authorities Will Have to Depend Largely on the Honesty of Exhibitors.

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—Chief John H. Plunkett of the Massachusetts District Police, First Clerk Frederick W. Macer and Officer Harry Atkinson of the film inspection department of the district police have given up hope of ever finding a way of designating what films have been released for Sunday use in Massachusetts other than the one which exists at present. Chief Plunkett and his assistants held a conference with the local exchange managers on this question several weeks ago at which time several new methods of distinguishing Sunday films were suggested, but for every suggestion there were five objections with the result that nothing was accomplished.

In an interview with the writer this week Clerk Macer admitted the hopelessness of the situation from the standpoint of his department and declared they would have to depend on the honesty of the moving picture men not to run films on Sunday unless they had received the official sanction of the state police.

A NEW COUPON BILL.

Exhibitors Fear Cavanagh Measure May Stop Lucky Contests.

Boston, Mass.—Several moving picture exhibitors in this territory are wondering what effect the Cavanagh anti-trading stamp bill, which is now before the Massachusetts legislature, will have on the moving picture business in Massachusetts in case the bill is enacted into law. The bill as it stands at present prohibits the use of distribution of trading stamps, coupons or similar devices as premiums, and it is over the meaning of the word "coupons" that the exhibitors are ill at ease.

It is expected that if this becomes a law it will put a stop to the lucky contests and county fairs that exhibitors in various parts of the Commonwealth have made weekly features in their playhouses. This is not the intention of the proponents of the bill, but whether it is or not, the fact remains that many persons believe it will have a serious effect on this phase of the moving picture industry and the progress of the bill is being closely watched. In many of the smaller and poorer communities the county fairs and lucky contests have been first-class box office attractions, and if these assets are taken away from them many exhibitors will suffer a dent in their receipts.

JOHN W. GORMAN DIES.

Well-Known President of Local Amusement Co. Succumbs to Operation.

Boston, Mass.—John W. Gorman, president of the J. W. Gorman Amusement Company, with offices in the Colonial building in Boston, died last week at the Brooks hospital in Brookline, Mass., following an operation for stomach trouble. Mr. Gorman had been in ill health for some time. He went South during the winter and on his return to Boston was apparently feeling well. An old malady came back on him, however, and an operation was performed from which he never recovered.

Mr. Gorman had been prominently identified with many moving picture and other amusement enterprises in New England and other parts of the country for a great many years. Practically his entire life was spent in promoting amusement ventures, and for the most part he was successful. He was born in Foxboro, Mass., 61 years ago and received his early education in that town. He came to Boston while still a young man and was a pioneer in the summer park amusement plan in which he featured moving pictures. Mr. Gorman grasped the opportunities of the moving picture field at an early date and to this is attributed much of his success as a promoter.

Changes in World Film Staff.

Boston, Mass.—The new Brady-Made World service is meeting with much success, according to Frank J. Grady, New England manager of the World Film Corporation. Grady says several of the leading picture houses of New England are booking this service and are pleased with the results. Thomas F. Murphy, former manager of the Boston branch of Beekman's Tourist Agency, has joined the local World road staff and will travel Massachusetts with Loretta, one of the local World office has severed her connection with that company and is now the confidential secretary to the president of one of the largest leather houses in the United States, with a home office in Boston. Her place is being filled by Mr. Edward J. Saunders, Jr., an enterprising young man of whom much is expected.

Park Theater Manager Believes in Advertising.

Boston, Mass.—Thomas Soriero, the hustling manager of the Park theater, is showing the other exhibitors in this territory something in the line of advertising and is getting results for his energy. His publicity campaign to put over "The Reapers," a World release with John Mason, has made a few people sit up and take notice. Soriero is a firm believer in advertising and his success with the Park theater in no small measure is due to the fact that he persists in telling the people in one way or another what he has got.

MAINE EXCHANGE MAN DROWNS

George H. Newhall of Bangor General Film Dies on Fishing Trip.

By John F. Flanagan, Special Correspondent, 147 Parkview Ave., Bangor, Me.

BANGOR, ME.—Maine moving picture exhibitors were shocked beyond expression at the death by drowning on Wednesday morning, May 17, of George H. Newhall, Maine manager of the General Film Co., at Big Houghton Pond, Katahdin Iron Works, where he was on a two days fishing trip with Charles M. Stern, manager of the New England Universal Film exchange at Bangor. Mr. Newhall was known to all the exhibitors in the Pine Tree state and he was universally well liked for his fine qualities.

George H. Newhall.

Mr. Newhall had left camp early in the morning with the guide. At 5 o'clock he ventured out on the pond alone in a canoe. A sudden gust of wind and the rough water capsize the frail craft and in an instant he was struggling for his life in the pond. No one was around at the time of the accident and he soon went under.

The deceased was the first manager of a moving picture exchange in Bangor and thus practically introduced the wholesale film business to this thriving eastern Maine city, which has now grown to such proportions that 90 per cent. of the film exchange business in Maine is now transacted here. He was the first manager of the General Film Co. exchange opened here in 1913. He was succeeded by A. L. Ehrhott, then returning to the Boston office of the General. A few months ago he succeeded Mr. Ehrhott as manager of the Bangor office.

Edward J. Farrell, New England manager of the General Film Company; Frank J. Grady, New England manager of the World Film Company; Joseph Mack and a host of other exchange men and exhibitors from Boston and other parts of New England attended the funeral, while floral tributes were sent by scores of others who were unable to be present. A body of Elks was also present at the services.

Mr. Newhall was a prince and he will be mourned sincerely by all who knew him. The writer can testify to his genial and friendly qualities. The World correspondent was talking with Mr. Newhall so recently that about one-half of the other news items from Maine in the World this week were obtained during a conversation with Mr. Newhall, who always gave your correspondent the glad hand and furnished all the news he could possibly think of. He made good in the film business. Friends will extend sympathy to Mrs. Newhall, who is almost prostrated by the calamity.

New Theater in Keegan.

KEEGAN, ME.—Frank L. Watson of Keegan is using General Film service in his new theater, which has not been named as yet. Mr. Watson is going to conduct a contest among the school children to name his theater, giving $5 prize to child who selects best name.

Censorship Authority

In Newark, N. J., Vice-Chancellor Howell Forbids Police Interference With Showing of Film—Says All Police Can Legally Do Is to Bring Cases of Wrongdoing to the Grand Jury and in Proper Form.

By Jacob K. Kaller, Special Correspondent, 51 Strand Theater Bldg., Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J.—Vice-Chancellor Howell, recently issued an order restraining Chief of Police Long from interfering with the production of the photoplay, "Damaged Goods." The order was issued in advance as the film is scheduled to be shown during the week of May 22 at the Orpheum theater, 383 Washington street. The film is shown under the direction of Emanuel A. Schiller, of Bayonne, whom Chief Long told he would arrest him if he attempted to run the picture in this city.

The vice-chancellor in granting the order stated that the police have no right and no authority to interfere with the production of any dramas or photoplays. The vice-chancellor is quite emphatic on this point of the right of the police to act as censors. He said that the police could only bring an alleged objectionable production to the grand jury, and that in due order. When informed of the chief's official veto of the play, the vice-chancellor said: "The law has no authority whatever in the premises—not even the semblance of authority. The right of censorship is not vested in the chief of police."

Chief Long said that he would not interfere with the film in advance, but if after the exhibition it proved objectionable, the police would arrest the producer on the charge of keeping a disorderly house. He asserted that his information in regard to the play was that it was morally objectionable to the public.

The only other instance of a restraining order being given in advance of the presentation of the play was in the case of "The Birth of a Nation." Here also the court held that the police could not take legal action before the presentation of the picture.

Meisel Opens Office.

Newark, N. J.—Irving Meisel, formerly roadman with the Pathe exchange, 6-8 Mechanic street, has opened offices at the Strand theater building with Greene's Features. Mr. Meisel has just closed negotiations with several firms whereby he is able to supply service. The reports as to business indicate a successful Newark branch.

Coquet at Regent.

Kearny, N. J.—Eugene E. Coquet, former manager of the Garden theater, Passaic, N. J., has assumed a like position at the Regent theater, Kearny avenue, opposite the Town Hall. The Regent is a 1,600-seat house, and one of the finest-equipped houses in the state. The playhouse is owned by the Kearny Amusement Company, of which Max Gold is president; Harry Hecht, secretary, and Benjamin Zinn, treasurer. A technical description and write-up of the house will appear in an early number of this paper.

World Film Moves.

Newark, N. J.—The Newark office of the World Film, of which Leo F. Levison is manager, has been changed from the third floor to the fifth of the Strand theater building. The World Film now occupies suite 59-60.

Pioneer in Newark.

Newark, N. J.—The Pioneer Film Corporation has opened offices in Newark under the management of Morris H. Markowitz, who comes from San Francisco where he was booker at various exchanges. The new office is located at suite 54, Strand theater building.

Doyle Managing Casino.

Kearny, N. J.—Frank L. Doyle is the new manager of the Casino theater, 95 Kearny avenue. This house has just been purchased by Edward H. Burns, of the Monticello theater, Jersey City, and William Clauson. The Casino is a 700-seat house with all the latest improvements. The projection is in charge of John Gable, and with the splendid equipment that he has at his disposal, he produces a well-nigh faultless projection.

Fotoplayer Successful.

Newark, N. J.—The Fotoplayer, the musical instrument made by the Photo Player Company, of New York, is being installed in a number of houses in New Jersey. The instrument helps the pictures immensely, according to several exhibitors.

Lyon Returns from Trip.

Newark, N. J.—Louis Lyon, roadman for the Mutual Film, at 25 Branford place, has just returned from a trip through the southern part of the state. Mr. Lyon reports exceptional bookings of "The Secret of the Submarine," and also the New Chaplin-Mutual releases.

City Theater Now Film House.

Newark, N. J.—The City theater, at Seventh and Orange streets, has reverted again to pictures. The house has adopted a straight picture policy showing Triangle, Paramount, Metro, V-L-S-E and other features. Two features are given at each performance. The house is under the management of Nat B. Smith, who has as his assistant Harry Adams, both formerly of the U. S. Playhouse, Passaic.

BALTIMORE NEWS LETTER.

By J. M. Shellman, Special Correspondent, 1802 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

Improvements for Lubin's Theater.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Wm. Tyler, manager of Lubin's theater, 404-6 East Baltimore street, states that plans for extensive improvements are now under way. Among other things, new chairs and a large pipe organ will be installed, while the entire building is to be repainted.

The premier recital of the large Moller symphonic pipe organ, which has just been installed at the Picture Garden theater, 31 West Lexington street, was given on Saturday, May 13. Francis Perrica, an organist of Philadelphia, was engaged by the management to render the initial recital.

Gertrude McCoy at Gertrude McCoy.

It is announced by Fred C. Weber, president of the Lord Calvert Theaters Co., that arrangements have been made to have Gertrude McCoy, the beautiful Gaumont star, come to Baltimore on the 26th and 27th of this month. On the 26th of May the Mutual Master Picture entitled "The Isle of Love," produced by the Gaumont Co., and featuring Miss McCoy, will be played at the Gertrude McCoy theater, 1563 North Fulton avenue and Mr. Weber expects to have Miss McCoy there for both those days.

Tunis Dean in Pittsburgh.

Tunis Dean, who for many years managed the New Academy of Music on North Howard street, is now located in Pittsburgh, where he has been engaged by John T. Harris to manage the Schenley theater of that city. He will take charge of his new duties on May 29.

Children at Parkway.

At the special children's performance, which was given on Saturday, May 13, at 10.30 A. M., at the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, the program included "Molly Maids" and "The Wagon Wheel." Clark in the lead and Burton Holmes' travel pictures. The Parents' League usually calls attention to these matinees through their column which is published in the Evening Sun.

VIRGINIA NEWS LETTER.

By Clarence L. Lutz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N. E. Washington, D. C.

Better Prices at the Crossman.

NORFOLK, Va.—The Crossman theater, on Granby street, located near the American and Strand theaters, has become a ten-cent house, showing V-L-S-E and Bluebird features. Larry Finley, owner of the Crossman, is the latest convert to the better-prices, better-pictures creed, and the five-cent shows in Virginia is fast becoming a thing of the past.

ReX Theater of St. Petersburg, Fla., Sold.

St. Petersburg, Fla.—The Carroll Amusement Company has pleasure in announcing the acquisition, by purchase, of the Rex theater, located on Tenth St. to Fla. There will be no change in admission price, the motto being "5c—ALWAYS—5c." The local management will be under the direction of Mr. H. J. Gambate, who is experienced in conducting successful moving picture houses.

Ghent Theater Is Dark Again.

Norfolk, Va.—The Ghent theater here is again dark and Mr. Brennan, its former manager, has been named as the new managing representative for the Universal, a position he held prior to trying out his hand as an exhibitor. The exhibitors along the line will be glad to have him visit them again.

Casino Ready to Open for Summer.

Ocean View, Va.—The Casino reopens for the summer season on or about Decoration Day having been put in fine shape for the accommodation of the crowds of visitors expected there. It is to be under the management of M. Spain who was formerly in charge of the Wonderland theater, in Norfolk, Va. The Casino is operated by Otto Wells, who controls the entire Ocean View amusement park.

C. A. Somma Buys Hippodrome Theater.

Richmond, Va.—Charles A. Somma, of the Dixie theater, the home of refined colored vaudeville and first run pictures, has assumed the management of the Hippodrome theater, having acquired it from Mrs. A. E. Thorp, the pioneer woman exhibitor of this section of the country, on May 15. Mr. Somma, in announcing the change in management, states that the policy of both houses will continue as in the past.

The Boston to Be Enlarged.

Roxanne, Va.—The Boston, the only colored theater here, now having a seating capacity of three hundred and fifty, is soon to be enlarged to six hundred. It will be given, it is reported, a seating capacity of approximately one thousand. This house is owned by A. Andrews and is managed by S. Andrews, the mate to the colored population of Roxanne.

Buys Pastime to Close It.

Marion, Va.—The Pastime theater has been acquired by C. B. Eccles, who operates the Marion, and has been closed up. The Pastime was the first theater in the field here, but it has been supplanted by the Marion, a new and very attractive one. The town is not large enough to support two such theaters and one had to go.

More Pictures for Wytheville.

Wytheville, Va.—The Opera House has just installed a motion picture projection machine and under the management of C. E. Jennings is showing feature films twice weekly, doing quite a business.

The Bijou theater here, formerly strictly a program house, is also showing features and is uniformly successful.

Academy Sold and Closed.

Suffolk, Va.—The Academy, formerly operated by Matrix & Spence, has been acquired by Mr. Everhart, who operates the Fototro here, and has been closed. The former owners still control the Virginia, the show house, but they do not now run photostays. Mr. Everhart has put on an all-feature program and is reporting a steadily improving business. The Fototro has a seating capacity of about seven hundred.

Will Build in Lawrenceville, Va.

Lawrenceville, Va.—This place is soon to have a new and modern motion picture theater as a result of a fire in the operating room of the Opera House during which the five reel subject "The Sins of the Mothers," V-L-S-E, and a single reel Universal was destroyed. The owners of the building, which also houses a bank, refuse to allow the exhibition of motion pictures there in the future. E. K. Fox, who has been operating in the Opera House and who also has the Opera House at Snow Hill, Va., is fixing up a tent to use during the summer. He expects to have his new house ready early in the fall.

Will White Managing Local Theater.

Abingdon, Va.—Will White, a man who has had many years of experience in the motion picture business, has assumed the management of the Opera House in this place. E. A. Hines is the proprietor of this enterprise and he states that since the new manager has gotten on the job his business has increased in a most satisfactory manner. Mr. White is a man around man; he can operate a projection machine, has a good knowledge of electricity, and can play the piano for the pictures if his services along that line are required.

Fire in Crowded Hall Show.

Norfolk, Va.—More than a score of negroes were killed, and a like number very seriously injured in a fire in a crowded hall in Wallaceston, where they were witnessing a motion picture exhibition. The building was used by the employees of the Norva Land & Lumber Company for entertainments and lodge meetings. The assembly hall was quite small and could not accommodate about eighty people when crowded together. James Duffy was manager of the show, was fatally injured. The show was scarcely under way when there was a flash of flame, supposed to have followed an explosion of the gasoline tank that supplied the light for the building.

Jake Wells Gets "Gloria's Romance" Rights.

Richmond, Va.—Jake Wells has acquired the exclusive right for the showing in the State of Virginia of the twenty-part serial "Gloria's Romance," starring Thelma Todd. This serial has created a great deal of interest throughout the State. Mr. Wells here, and Otto Wells, in Norfolk, have been besieged with mail and verbal requests for information as to when the first installment will be made in the respective cities. Both of these gentlemen predict an exceptionally heavy run for the serial.

Commissioner J. F. Miller Buys Theater.

Hickory, N. C.—John F. Miller, United States Commissioner, and formerly owner and editor of the Times Mercury, at Hickory, N. C., has recently purchased the Pastime theater at Hickory, and will personally manage the business.

The Pastime is the new theater which was opened at Hickory last December, and is meeting with fine success.

By John P. Flanagan, Special Correspondent, 147 Park View ave., Bangor, Me.

W. C. Green With Pine Tree Amusement.
PORTLAND, Me.—William C. Green, formerly manager of the Mutual Film Exchange in Portland, is now manager of the Pine Tree State Amusement Enterprises, Press Bldg., Portland, and is connected with the Paragon Booking offices, Portland.

W. E. McPhee Managing the New Central.

Old Town, Me.—The new Central theater, Old Town, is now under the management of W. E. McPhee, who was connected with this house three years ago. He succeeds O. B. Fernandez, who still retains management of the Bijou. Mr. McPhee is using General Film service, as are other Old Town theaters.

W. B. Williams Buys the Colonial.

Augusta, Me.—William B. Williams has bought out the interest of his partner, William Gray, in the Colonial theater. Mr. Gray will confine his energies to his theaters in Lisbon Falls, Rumford, Berlin, N. H. and Manchester, N. H. Mr. Williams is now associated with Thomas Cuddy in management of the Colonial. Mr. Cuddy is also manager of the Augusta Opera House.

Wants to Open Airdome in Bangor.

Bangor, Me.—Loren D. Hall, a Bangor man connected with the Hall-Latham Amusement Enterprises for several years, has applied for a license to conduct an airdome on the lots in the rear of the Graham building and the buildings where the Mutual, Universal and General Exchanges are located.

Allentown's Lyceum Burns

Leading Picture Theater in Allentown, Pa., a Total Loss from Fire—Cause of Conflagration Unknown—Is the Second in Recent Weeks—House Was Leased by Frank Emmet—Was Insured.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

ALLENTOWN, PA.—The Lyceum theater, Allentown's leading moving picture theater, was recently totally destroyed in a conflagration which threatened to demolish the entire northern business section of that place. The blaze was first discovered late Saturday night, May 13, and continued to rage with unabated fury until Sunday morning, despite heroic efforts upon the part of the fire department. Due to high winds and other adverse conditions it was thought that the surrounding business establishments would surely become ignited and efforts were made to save articles of value contained in adjoining properties. However, the blaze was mostly confined to the theater and at midnight the south wall and roof of the stage fell with a crash, sending blazing embers and sparks high into the air. A few minutes later the north wall crashed in and the entire building was a mass of wreckage. This is the second time within recent weeks that the Lyceum theater, owned by Messrs. Chanock and Sanderowitz and leased by Frank Emmet, was threatened by flames, but in the previous instance the fire was extinguished before any serious damage was accomplished. Mr. Emmet is at a loss to explain the origin of the blaze, claiming that everything inflammable had been removed from the booth before closing the theater. The entire loss is covered by insurance.

Imperial Theater Sold.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Imperial theater, located on the east side of 60th street, 119 feet south of Walnut street, has been conveyed by Meyer Magill to Robert Bloomgarten, subject to a mortgage of $72,500. The property is assessed at $70,000.

Harry Hirschfeld Out of Bankruptcy.

It may be of interest to members of the moving picture industry in Philadelphia to know that Harry Hirschfeld, formerly trading as the Philadelphia Moving Picture Supply Company, has been discharged as an involuntary bankrupt.

Are They Going to Have the Picnic?

Philadelphia, Pa.—Numerous inquiries have recently been circulating among the industry in Philadelphia as to whether or no the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League are going to conduct an excursion to the shore this summer. As there have been no definite announcements concerning this trip and as the members of the League have been exceedingly inactive of recent date, any suggestions made along this line will not be warmly welcomed. It has long been rumored that the League has disbanded, but officers of the organization upon being approached will neither confirm nor deny the rumor. It has been suggested that the Philadelphia Operators' Local No. 307 take up the excursion and become active along this line. Success is assured as many Philadelphians look forward to the excursion with pleasure.

Mr. Reis has made many improvements to the theater, including the installing of several No. 6A projecting machines.

Time for Summer Films

Pittsburgh's Grand Opera House Will Keep Bright Through Warm Season With High-Class Feature Pictures—This House Is Owned by the Harry Davis Enterprise Company, and Plays Stock in Winter.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Grand Opera House, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, one of the theaters of the Harry Davis Enterprise Company, inaugurated its summer season of high-class motion pictures in an auspicious manner on May 22. This playhouse is one of the largest and finest in the city and during the past year has been the home of the Harry Davis stock company. The program of pictures has been arranged by V. F. Mason, manager of the pictures department of the Davis Enterprises, and promises to be the most attractive and portentous ever shown at the Grand. The first attraction has the World production, "Sadder Riches." This is followed by the Triangle play, "A Child of the Paris Streets," and Metro's "A Million a Minute."

Greensburg's Lyric Coming Along.

Greensburg, Pa.—M. Manos, proprietor of the Lyric theater, Greensburg, Pa., reports rapid progress on the erection of his large and modern photoplay theater in the central part of the town. The cost of the new theater will be in excess of $50,000, and nothing is being spared to make it one of the handsomest in this section of the state. The building is of fireproof construction, while the equipment throughout is to be of the most up-to-date type. It is planned to have the new house ready for opening about July 1. Mr. Manos recently underwent an operation for appendicitis, and his many friends in the trade are glad to know of his speedy recovery. He made a business trip to Pittsburgh several days ago.

The Movie Men in New Quarters.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Movie Men's Association, a social and beneficial club organized about a year ago, has recently acquired its handsome headquarters on the second floor at Diamond and Market street, on Wednesday evening, May 17. The new association was until recently composed mainly of operators and other workers connected with the film industry, but its scope has been broadened to include all branches of the trade. There are about four hundred members, including many exchange men and exhibitors of the Western Pennsylvania territory. P. J. McGinnis is president and John Richardson is secretary and treasurer. The attendance at the house-warming numbered between five and six hundred and the affair proved most auspicious for the future of the association. Following a dinner, there was a program of music and other entertainment by professional talent, a very enjoyable evening being spent.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Joseph A. McGuire, Special Correspondent, 611 Erie County Bank Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

Jerome Wilson, Road Man.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Jerome Wilson is well known among the exhibitors of New York state and northwestern Pennsylvania. He covers this extensive territory as road representative for the Buffalo branch of the Mutual Film. A picture of Mr. Wilson appears herewith. He is a persistent film salesman and digs up many new contracts for the Mutual. He has been in the business with that company for the past five months. He represented the Esesman Film Co. of Buffalo for one year. For a long time he was road man for Sawyer, Inc., and later for the Metro Co. In booking Mutual contracts he attributes much of his success to the co-operation he receives from G. H. Christoffers, manager of the Buffalo exchange of that company.

"The entire Mutual program is popular with the exhibitors of my territory," said Mr. Wilson. "Of course the Chaplin pictures are going big."

Jerome Wilson.

Olympic Theater's Anniversary.

Springfield, O.—The Sun Amusement Co., of this city, controlled by Gus Sun, and operating the New Sun and the Columbian theaters, has announced that it will enlarge both houses during the quiet summer season, practically rebuilding them, and greatly increasing their capacity and their facilities for the comfort and convenience of the patrons. Work will be handled on one building at a time, so that the other may be reserved for engagements, if necessary. The Columbus, which is now one of the finest picture houses in the city, will be given a seating capacity of 2,000, and work upon it will be started at once.

Arrested at Midnight

Cincinnati Film Man, Among Leading Exhibitors in Ohio, Arrested on Charge of Disobeying Censor's Elimination Orders on Fox Picture—Reformer Waited Till Middle of the Night and Took I. Libson from His Bed.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 510 First National

CINCINNATI, O.—I. Libson, one of the most prominent moving picture men in Cincinnati, and active manager of the Strand, the Family, the Walnut and other houses here and elsewhere, was a victim of the overheated zeal of self-styled reformers a short time ago, when he was literally taken from his bed at midnight and placed under arrest on warrants charging him with exhibiting pictures without eliminations ordered by the Ohio Board of Censors. The warrants were sworn to by a Cincinnati minister, who claims to have the backing of the churches, and he secured the arrest at the same time of A. M. Muller, manager of the Fox Film Corporation. The picture objected to was "The Eternal Sapho."

Mr. Libson was extremely indignant at the treatment to which he was subjected, declaring that he had no information to the effect that the film contained matter ordered eliminated, and pointing out that it was odd that the ministerial censor should wait until midnight of the last day of the picture's run to make any objection. He cited the high character of the houses with which he is connected, in proof of his desire to handle high-grade films only. According to Mr. Muller, the charge that eliminations ordered were not made is without foundation. A representative of the attorney general's office was in Cincinnati to handle the cases, and the matter has excited much discussion among exhibitors, who are wondering just how they are to protect themselves from midnight arrests on similar charges, inasmuch as they have no means of knowing whether eliminations ordered have been made in films furnished to them.

THEATER MASHER PUNISHED.

Annoyer of Girl Gets Three Months and a Heavy Fine.

Cincinnati, O.—Exhibitors who have had called to their attention instances of attempted improper conduct on the part of men in picture houses were delighted last week at the action of the Municipal Court in the case of an old man charged with attempting to attack an eleven-year-old girl in a local theater. He had been before the court a year ago on a similar charge, and recalling this fact, the court imposed a fine of $100 and costs and a jail sentence of three months. Exhibitors have frequently declared that if severe sentences were imposed on such offenders it would be no difficult matter to deal with those who attempt to take advantage of the gloom of a picture theater, and that they are more than willing to give the needed co-operation for the protection of their patrons.

STRAND THEATER IN DANGER.

Blasting for Excavation Nearby Causes Crowded Restaurant to Collapse.

Akron, O.—That the Strand theater might have been the victim of a disaster of sinister proportions is indicated by the collapse of a restaurant and the other side of building excavation adjoining the theater. The blasting done during the work of excavation gave some alarm to the management and to patrons of the house, but no serious damage was done, but on May 15, on another side of the excavation, immediately after several consecutive blasts, a crowded restaurant collapsed, killing nine persons and injuring many others. An inquiry is in process to fix the exact responsibility for the tragedy, and to determine whether more stringent regulations for the government of work of that nature may not be necessary for the protection of the public.

It is a warning to managers in like danger to be watchful.

CLEVELAND NEWS LETTER.

By Hubert Persons, Special Correspondent, Standard Theater Bldg., Cleveland, O.

Exhibitors Will Help Babies' Dispensary.

LEVELAND, O.—Charles H. Weston, director general of the Reserve Photo-plays Company, is busy "taking" pictures depicting the activities of the Babies' Dispensary and Hospital on a film to be shown by the Cleveland exhibitors in furtherance of a campaign to raise funds for the institution.

The picture probably will be shown early in June in more than 150 houses in Cleveland and vicinity. Mr. Weston has written a scenario to make the pictures attractive and Johnny Ray of the Reserve Company has donated his studio to inject a bit of comedy into the action.

The Cleveland exhibitors agreed to devote their time to pushing the campaign, after a conference with trustees and directors of the hospital, which cares for the babies of parents too poor to pay for medical services.

George Ridgwell Signs With Sunbeam.

Cleveland, O.—Wilbur Dunham, president of the new Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation, has just announced that George Ridgwell, New York scenario editor and producer, has signed a contract with the Sunbeam Company. Mr. Ridgwell will be a director in the corporation and will have charge of the studios just leased at Port Lee, N. J.

Censors Held "Peg o' the Ring."

New Theater in Euclid Avenue.

Cleveland, O.—Real estate men are negotiating for the lease of a part of the building at East 18th street and Euclid avenue, to be remodeled for a motion picture theater to seat 300 persons.

Will Help Child Workers

Indiana Exhibitors Will Boost Child Labor Measures Now Before National Congress—Officials of State League and Indianapolis Association Make Decision After Conference on Matter.

Special to the Moving Picture World from the Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Indiana moving picture theater owners are to take a hand in obtaining the passage in Congress of laws, now pending, pertaining to child labor. This conclusion followed a conference between Miss Kate Dayton, Cleveland, president of the International People's Aid Association; Frank J. Rembusch and Dr. J. M. Rhoades, president and secretary of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League; and Ike Geiman, president of the Indianapolis Motion Picture Association. The moving picture men will throw slides on their screens asking mothers and fathers to communicate with their representatives in Congress.

PRAISES INDIANA EXHIBITORS. State Fire Marshal Has No Trouble with Picture Theaters.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The state fire marshal has issued a bulletin calling attention to the case with which his office has protected the patrons of the moving picture theaters of the state. In the report he says it has been necessary for him only to call the attention of theater owners to dangerous spots in their theaters and that they readily and willingly make such repairs or improvements as are necessary to provide safety for help patrons. The moving picture men of the state realize that adequate protection is essential for the patrons of the theaters, if the patronage is to be maintained. The report is otherwise complimentary to the moving picture men and shows them to be alive and up-to-the-minute owners.

Mossman Brothers Buy the Isis.

Kokomo, Ind.—The Isis, Kokomo's largest moving picture theater, has been purchased by R. K. Mossman and H. F. Mossman, experienced theater owners, from Cecil and James Wells. The theater has been operated on a five-cent basis, but the Mossman Brothers immediately increased the price, together with an increase in the number of feature films shown and since the change in management the house has been showing to turnaway houses.

Veederburg Is on the Map.

Veederburg, Ind.—Veederburg is "ticked to death" because one of its beauties Bernice McCord, has been selected by the World-Equitable beauty and brains contest judges as a representative of her district in the elimination trials. The contest, has caused much excitement in Veederburg, because it has been one of the things which helped to put the town on the map.

Program for Children Succeeds.

Brazil, Ind.—The famous program for children, shown at the Colonia, was a success, and it is likely to be repeated within a few days. There is a likely prospect that it will become a regular weekly feature.

Sacred Pictures Make Acceptable Sabbath Show.

Princeton, Ind.—The Sunday moving picture show is here again, but with restrictions. The Yale and New Star theaters opened recently on Sunday, showing only sacred pictures, and were not interfered with. They were arrested when they tried it a week before. When the announcement that the theaters were to open was made there was a constant objection, but when it was reported that pictures of a sacred nature only were to be shown the objection disappeared.

Children's Hour in Ft. Wayne.

Ft. Wayne, Ind.—Ft. Wayne is to have its "Children's Hour" moving picture shows. Following the lead of Indianapolis the club women and those interested in the various phases of child welfare have organized a committee to carry out the object of this new section completed in other cities. The exhibitors have been interested in the project and will co-operate. It is possible that there will be a children's hour on Saturday afternoon in every moving picture theater in the city.

Wilson Grove Buys the Star.

Van Buren, Ind.—Wilson Grove, former city treasurer of Bluffton, has purchased the Star and will take over immediately the operation of the theater. While Mr. Wilson is a new comer in the moving picture exhibitor's world, he is well known through this section of the state and his welcome will be hearty.

New North Vernon House.

North Vernon, Ind.—The North Vernon Amusement Company has let the contracts and work has begun on the new $15,000 moving picture theater which the company will erect. When completed the theater is expected to be most beautiful.

E. F. Galligan Will Manage the Grand.

Terre Haute, Ind.—Edward F. Galligan, the popular manager of the Loftsport, will come to Terre Haute to take charge of the Grand of this city. Galligan is connected with the Carruthers, Smith and Colby Company.

Monon, Ind.—The Princess airdome was thrown open to the public for the first time recently. It is Monon's first experience with the open air theater and the favor with which it met indicates a prosperous season.

Bluffton, Ind.—Mama, or Wallace Sawyer of the Grand announces that repairs and improvements costing $5,000 will be made to his theater during the summer.

Can Censors Long Agree?

Members of Local Censor Board of Holland, Michigan, Tender Resignations, Following Disagreement.

By Frank H. Madison, Special Correspondent, 6747 Emerald Ave., Chicago, Ill.

HOLLAND, MICH.—There is discord, to put it mildly, among Holland people who have to do with moving pictures. As in many other cities, local censorship has engendered ill-feeling. Also as in other cities it is found that the censors do not agree as to what should be eliminated from a picture. The principal result was that the censor board members tendered their resignations to the city council, but they were not accepted.

Scenes in Part 4 of "Triby" were offensive to one member of the censor board. Manager Newman of the Apollo theater asked the members of the council to attend a private showing of the film and decide for themselves. He also wanted an opportunity to show the public all of the disputed part, declaring that any fair, impartial person would sustain his position that the picture is not objectionable. He readily agreed to make cuts ordered by the common council.

Pontiac's New Censor.

Pontiac, Mich.—Henry M. Lenanbury has been appointed moving picture censor and also a member of the police force by Mayor R. J. Lonsbury under the ordinance recently passed. He will draw the same salary as any other policeman.

Owosso's Strand Almost Ready.

Pontiac, Mich.—Henry M. Lenanbury has Company has filed articles of incorporation with capital stock of $10,000 to operate the Strand theater on North Washington street in this city. The incorporators are Eugene Brewer, Dr. Gaylord N. Finch, Frank Rayen and Major M. J. Phillips. The Strand, the new theater seating 500, will open sometime between June 10 and July 1. Brewer will be manager; Rayen, who is connected with the Citizen's Savings Bank, will pay special attention to the financial affairs, and Major Phillips, who is field director of the Military Movies Company of Port Huron, will co-operate upon the program.

Theater Changes in Michigan.

Flint, Mich.—W. S. Butterfield proposes to add the Palace theater to his other interests—the Majestic and Garden theaters—in Flint. This will be the name of a new vaudeville and picture house, in which he has purchased a site at Kearsley and Harrison streets. It will cost about $75,000 and will seat 1,450. When the new theater is ready the Majestic will be devoted to feature pictures, road shows and all rental attractions.

Mt. Pleasant, Mich.—Martin Howe of Owosso has purchased the Lyric theater here from Manager Kenney.

North Adams, Mich.—L. L. Westerland, owner of the Star theater at Almont and part owner of the Princess theater at Chelsea, purchased the Family theater here from Don H. Finkle. He will divide his time between the Almont and local houses. The house was reopened May 16 with "The Spoilers."

Newaygo, Mich.—The remodeled Vaudeville theater was opened by Manager J. M. Meade with "The Girl and the Game," Grand Ledger #1.—George C. Schultz of Owosso is now manager of the Palace theater succeeding Guy Goodrich, who has been transferred to Cadillac.

Monon, Mich.—Manager Gay has opened the new Gem theater. The house, which seats 288, is equipped for theatrical performances as well as pictures.

tioned Illinois Vice Committee, appeared at the Hippodrome theater here the week of May 14.—The first showings outside of Chicago. As Mayor Edward Beall of Alton was head of the so-called investigators and there was promise of seeing the film "just as it was produced." Prices were advanced to twenty-five and fifty cents.

Pontiac, Ill.—F. M. Bond, manager of Bond's theater, contemplates the installation of a pipe organ sometime this summer. The organ will make numerous changes to increase the seating capacity between 75 and 100.

St. Louis Airdomes Bloom

Summer's First Touches Set Out-of-Door Theaters Blossoming Hereabouts—Among Those Noticed as Beginning to Thrive Are Lyric, Crystal, Lee, Maple, Monroe, Mozart—A New Airdome Coming.

A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent, 236 Vanol Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—The weather man in charge of the thermometer in the St. Louis territory has delayed the outdoor theater openings for several weeks this season. There have been only one or two nights suitable for outdoor shows during the entire spring, and although the theaters have been doing their regular share of pleasing the poor audiences connected with any theater have been compelled to postpone date after date for opening days.

Lyric Skydome.

The Lyric skydome, one of the Cornelius group of theaters, opened on Monday, May 15, with a splendid program and a splendid audience, although it turned cold enough during the evening to make overcoats feel comfortable. David Silverman's orchestra of ten pieces was moved out to the Skydome, on Delmar and Taylor avenues, from the downtown Lyric, for the occasion, and the audience was enthusiastic over the entertainment, despite the cold weather.

The Crystal.

The Crystal airdome, 5946 Delmar avenue, in the extreme west end of the city, opened on May 12 with feature pictures and Victor Hugo's orchestra, another popular local orchestra. The Crystal is pretentious place, situated as it is in one of the most exclusive residence sections of the city, and having to keep up with the cultivated tastes of its patrons.

The Lee.

The Lee airdome, Lee and Turner avenues, also opened on the 15th. The Lee is a five-cent place and shows short subjects with occasional big features.

The Maple.

The Maple airdome, Kings Highway and Papin boulevard, opened the same night with a daily change of program of big features.

The Monroe.

The Monroe airdome, on California and Chippewa, run in connection with the Monroe theater, just around the corner on Chippewa street, opened last week for the summer. Mrs. L. Stoddard, proprietor of the two places of amusement, is one of the most successful woman exhibitors in St. Louis, and the constancy and appreciation of her picture that she has made a study of their tastes. Mrs. Stoddard judiciously mixes her program with features, serials and comedies, and manages to please all classes and ages of her patrons.

The Mozart.

The Mozart airdome, in the 4600 block on Delmar, opened on May 15 under the management of Hector Parnesoglio, with an all picture bill. Parnesoglio is the manager of the Congress, on Olive and Sarah streets, and has built up a remarkable patronage for his house during the past season. The Congress had been a posing proposition for a long time when the present management took charge of it, but it has now become one of the most successful houses in the city.

A New Airdome.

The Columbia Novelty Company have bought another lot on North Twelfth street for the enlargement of the airdome which had been begun on the lot adjoining the Webster theater. The work on the airdome had been going on for a few weeks when it was finally decided that the original plans would make the place too small to accommodate the crowds in that section of the city. The site as now enlarged to 150x150 feet will permit more seats to be installed, and more space for advance and other decorations. D. T. Graham is president of the company operating both theater and airdome.

Boosting "Peg o' the Ring."

St. Louis, Mo.—Barney Rosenthal, manager of the Universal exchange, at 2116 Locust street, says he is going to break all records and make ring-around-the-roses previous showings on the new Universal serial, "Peg o' The Ring," and Harry Rosenberg has been appointed special serial representative. Mr. Rosenthal is sending out advance cards announcing Rosenberg as the "Circus Movie Man;" then when Rosey gets in a town all he will have to do is to call on the exhibitor and book him and be on his way.

No Flowers at Its Funeral.

St. Louis.—The censorship bill, which has been hanging fire in St. Louis for so many months, has at last been laid to rest by the Board of Aldermen. Alderman Barney Schwartz was the principal opponent, and by his sincere and convincing arguments against the bill, has done much to prevent its becoming a law. Several exchange men and others interested in the film industry aided materially in the defeat of the bill.

Kleine Opens Local Office.

George Kleine has opened a branch office in St. Louis to distribute the films put out by his company for the territory covered by the St. Louis exchanges. Manager Rosenberg, who has been put in charge of the branch, installed in the Empress theater building at 1615 Olive street, had has wide experience in the film business and is well known to the trade.

Manager George W. Fuller of the World Exchange, gave a private showing of the new World serial released at the New Grand Central theater, on May 16. A large number of exhibitors took advantage of the opportunity and went to see the films before making bookings.

High Tax in New Orleans

Exchange Managers Started by City Tax Assessor's Idea of the Value of Film Stock in Local Exchanges—Has Read Glowing Stories and Thinks About $50,000 Each Would Do—Film Men Will Fight It in Court.

By George M. Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—One fine morning recently when film exchange managers got down to work they didn't succeed in accomplishing much for a while. Each one of them found a tax assessment list in his morning's mail that called for a payment on approximately $50,000 worth of film, regardless of whether his particular exchange handled one thousand feet or film of a hundred thousand.

They have hired attorneys and will go to court before June 1. Numerous meetings have been held; a committee has visited the mayor and commissioners of New Orleans, the Association of Commerce, and other civic bodies. Nothing much has been accomplished so far except that the film men were granted a dispensation by the City Council to file a suit before June 1, when, under ordinary circumstances, such a suit could not be filed after March 1.

A long list of grievances, extending over six or seven years, or since the film exchanges were first established in New Orleans, is charged against the tax assessor's office. This is not the first time the exchanges have gone to court over inflated film values. According to the tax assessor, an exchange must pay on $50,000, regardless of the quantity of film disposed of yearly. But little satisfaction came from a visit paid to the tax assessor's office by the film men. The conversation went something like this: "Mr. Assessor, our shops aren't big enough to hold that much film." "But you call yourself a film exchange?" "Yes." "Then it's $50,000." And at that figure it stood, until the arguments of the film bosses finally induced the assessor to lower his figures for eight exchanges from an average of $50,000 for each exchange to a list of $10,000. The latter figures proved not a bit satisfactory, so the film men hired Edward Righor, a prominent local attorney, to represent their interests in a court battle that will begin this month.

According to this onerous taxation, every foot of film in some exchanges is worth $5 or $6 a foot. Just what induced the tax assessor's office to set such a high valuation is not known, but it is a matter of history that the tax assessor said to one film man: "These newspaper accounts I read certainly make me believe that your films are bringing great big prices."

Each film exchange in the Crescent City is yearly taxed both city and state taxes. There is no kick on the state taxes, as these are based on a fair price per one thousand feet of film. Years ago the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, managers of New Orleans film exchanges, film man, Al. G. Shear, "went to the mat" with the tax assessor over a little matter of onerous taxation, and won their case in court. The judge in this case decided that a reel of film was worth from $15 to $30, the exact valuation being based on the physical condition of the reel.

The companies protesting in the court suit are the General, Consolidated, V-L-S-E, Paramount, Mutual, Fox, Pathe and and World.

H. F. Wilkes Weds Atlanta Girl.

This week a mysterious-looking document was shuttled back and forth among the offices in Film Row. It was brought to notice by a messenger that the "business" consisted of reading the document, after which each manager was seen to reach for his check book. The secret came out later when a hilarious party descended upon the New Orleans office of Paramount and presented to H. F. Wilkes, manager for a month and blushing benedict for a day, a handsome silver present. Mr. Wilkes had, not three hours before, been married to Miss Angene Simrile at the Catholic church in Algiers, La., just across the river from New Orleans. Miss Simrile comes from Atlanta, in which city Mr. Wilkes held the Paramount fort for several years before coming to New Orleans, and it is hinted that there is just a wee bit of the runaway act in the romance. At any rate the last chapter of the film does not read "Passed by the Board of Review," but instead is labeled: "Papa forgives; and They Live Happily Ever Afterward."

C. W. Harden Takes Charge.

New Orleans—Prior to the arrival of Charles W. Harden, the new Southern division manager for the Fox Film, the New Orleans offices of Fox were rearranged and additional working space added. Mr. Harden is strictly on the job at present. Film exchange managers along the row have made him welcome in a right royal fashion.

C. B. Gondolf, booking clerk in the Fox lair, has been promoted by Manager R. E. Barron to a position as travelling salesman.

Local Fidelity Office Closes.

New Orleans—The Fidelity Film Company, which for the past three months has had an office in Baronne street, booking independent film, has closed its office. A. C. Bernard, its manager, going to Houston, Texas, where he will open a Fidelity branch in that city. Mr. Bernard's new arrangement will be made to book Fidelity films in this city through a booking office which he will establish shortly.

F. F. Creswell Heads Local World Film

New Orleans—There have been a number of important changes in local film circles. F. F. Creswell, well known in New Orleans, but more recently of the Memphis office of Paramount, is the new manager of the New Orleans office of the World Film. He succeeds Ross Hardenbrook, who, however, it is announced, remains with the company.

Elmer Smith With Local Kleine.

New Orleans—Elmer Smith, formerly with United Film, is handling the Billy Burke serial in this territory. The Billy Burke serial, backed up by extensive local advertising, is going strong in New Orleans and contiguous territory.

Joe Klein in Atlanta.

Joe Klein, formerly the Southern division manager for the World Film, with headquarters in New Orleans, now is with Pathe in Atlanta as special representative.

The Portola Opens.

New Orleans—The Portola, New Orleans newest photoplay house, and one of the most attractive to date, opened on May 10. J. J. Fabacher & Son, owners of the Portola theater and the Portola, received many congratulations and numerous flower tokens from their film friends in New Orleans on opening day. The new theater is in Canal street, at University place, and its appointments are exquisite. A new lighting system, never before seen in a local moving picture house, has been installed. The lights are inclosed in glass pillars, and give a subdued effect that permits patrons to easily find seats, and at the same time does not affect the showing of the pictures.

A New Orpheum Coming.

New Orleans—Charles E. Bray, representing the Beck and Co. of the Orpheum circuit, this week closed a deal for the Denegre property, fronting 120 feet in University place, which will be the site for a new Orpheum theater to cost $400,000. Construction of the new theater will begin in October and it will be finished in time for the opening of the 1917-1918 season. It is probable that the old Orpheum theater will be converted into a picture house.

Harcoll Film, a New Company.

New Orleans capital is back of the Harcoll Film company, which organized on May 15, with John F. Collins, president, and A. Harrison, Jr., vice-president and manager. Heretofore the company has been known as the Paragon Film company. The new studios of the company will be at 1921 Palmyra. The company has produced several commercial films and is under contract with the New Orleans Times-Picayune for a film in five-reels which will have as actors the winners of the newspaper's moving picture contest, which came to a close on May 15.

DETROIT NEWS LETTER.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent, 593 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

A. I. Shapiro Comes to Head Local Triangle.

DETROIT, MICH.—A. I. Shapiro, former manager of the Detroit branch of the Fox Film Corporation, and who for the past few months has been doing special work in the east, is back in Detroit—this time as manager of the Triangle exchange. Although his new headquarters at 133 East Jefferson avenue, the new permanent location is to be 73 Broadway, which will be ready by the latter part of May. The company has leased the entire top floor of the new building at that address and will fit it up very handsomely. Mr. Shapiro is welcome back to Detroit where he has a host of good friends. Good luck, Shap. Don't forget the World office at 593 Free Press building.

F. Rutledge Opens Local Kleine Office.

Detroit, Mich.—Frank Rutledge, Michigan representative for George Kleine, has opened an office at 201 Broadway Market building Detroit. When the writer dropped in there this week, Mr. Rutledge was extremely busy answering letters from exhibitors in all parts of Michigan who were asking for copies of the new Billy Burke serial. The first-run of this serial has been placed with the Majestic theater, Detroit, starting May 21.

Local Mutual Doubles Office Space.

Detroit, Mich.—The Mutual Film Corporation has considerably enlarged its Detroit exchange, which is under the management of C. Spencer Trask. The new space again has been added by taking over the fifth floor, this additional space being used for the poster and advertising department. There is an overhead skylight which gives the force of exposure plenty of daylight; all racks are double-decked and there is a mezzanine around the entire floor. It will materially relieve the strain on the second floor. The Detroit exchange handles Michigan and seven counties in northern Ohio. Manager Trask reports excellent business, particularly on the new Charlie Chaplin comedies and "Girl in the Game" and "Secret Submarine" serials. Six Chaplin prints are working every day in Michigan.

New Assistant at the Lair.

Detroit, Mich.—Harry Brennan has been appointed assistant to Nell Kingsley, manager of the Detroit exchange of the Fox Film. Mr. Brennan was formerly in the theatrical business having been a performer for a number of years with high-class musical comedies.

H. W. Smith to Represent Mutual Film.

Detroit, Mich.—H. W. Smith, who was for five months manager of the Garden theater, Detroit, has been appointed special local representative for the Mutual. The employees of the Garden on the evening of Mr. Smith's departure presented him with a beautiful silver loving cup on which was engraved "To H. W. Smith from the boys at the Garden theater, May 6." Signed A. J. McVelle, A. E. Ketchum, L. Welch, A. Bradley, W. Pear and G. P. Applehoff.

Picture Playhouse Opens Exchange.

Detroit, Mich.—The Picture Playhouse Film Co. has opened an exchange at 32 Griswold street, Detroit, with A. Leo in charge. W. W. McEwen will be special representative.

L. W. Foster Representing Triangle.

L. W. Foster will continue with the Detroit branch of the Triangle Film Corporation as special representative.

Ed. E. Kirchner at the Family.

Detroit, Mich.—The manager of the Family theater, Detroit, is Ed E. Kirchner, who has been associated with the house as auditor since it opened eight years ago, May 2. During his connection with this house Ed has never lost one day. He told the World correspondent that the entire first floor was to be resented on once and that later the balcony would be resented. Many other improvements are also to be made throughout the Family which will practically conform it into a new theater. Mr. Kirchner says that the picture policy is to remain permanently and that business is getting better every week.

LOUISVILLE PICTURE NOTES.

School Fund Benefit at the Ariston.

Louisville, Ky.—Under the auspices of the Parent Teacher Association of the Gavin H. Cochran school a special film exhibition was handed at the new Ariston theater, Second and A streets, on Saturday, May 20. The bill included the interesting film "The Patchwork Girl of Oz." Leading residents in the neighborhood arranged for selling popcorn, ice cream, etc., and also a grab bag. Mrs. Fred Levy, head of the local children's censor board, and other leading ladies received tickets. The proceeds of the exhibition went to the benefit of a special school fund.

Parkland Theater Closed.

Louisville, Ky.—T. H. Johnson has again closed the Parkland theater, and is preparing to go West to enter another line of business. The Parkland has been offered for rent.

Joseph Goldberg Gives a Lecture.

Louisville, Ky.—Joseph Goldberg, manager of the Hippodrome theater, recently delivered a talk at the Y. M. H. "Sidekicks in the Motion Picture Industry." Mr. Goldberg is well informed on the subject. He recently spent several days in Chicago, and made a trip through the plant of a company. For some time he has been a moving picture editor of the Louisville Evening Post and conducts a column of queries and answers concerning moving picture stars, etc. The public was invited to attend the meeting.

New House in Nashville

Crescent Amusement Company, Now Operating 22 Picture Houses in Kentucky and Tennessee, Plans a Fine New Theater for Nashville—Will Cost $100,000 and Be Ready by September 15.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Announcement has just been made by the Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, to the effect that work will be started on the site of a new moving picture house. The new theater will be known as the "Majestic," and will occupy the present site of the Rex and Alhambra theaters. The old buildings will be torn down at one, and the new building is to be completed about September 15. The theater will have a seating capacity of 1,500, the seats to be twenty feet wide and about thirty-two inches back to back, and there will also be fifteen private boxes.

The plans, which have been drawn by Marr & Holman, architects of Nashville, call for an expenditure of $100,000, and it is the aim of the company to erect the best work of the kind ever seen, that can be constructed. The plans call for a refrigerating system in connection with the ventilating system, and for the air to be drawn over brine coils in the summer. There will be three large air conditioning fans will be part of the equipment. Arrangements will be made to warm the air in winter by drawing it over tempering coils. The building will be absolutely fireproof in construction and will contain many novel features.

Immediately inside of the entrance there will be a waiting room which will be equipped with a wide log fire place, telephone booth for the convenience of the patrons. Ladies rest rooms and men's smoking rooms will be installed at either side of the building. The four stairways leading to the balcony will be of marble with bronze handrails. The screen will be placed at the stage wall, with scenic effects built around the picture and a garden at the front of the stage, and the entire scene will be visible from the back from the screen. A large pipe organ, with two echo lofts will be a part of the equipment.

The lighting will be of the semi-indirect type, and the fixtures will contain various colored lights to produce special electrical effects. These fixtures will be suspended from the ceiling which will be fifty feet from the auditorium floor line.

The Crescent Amusement Company has been operating in Nashville for ten years, and is now operating twenty-two houses in Nashville, Tennessee and Kentucky. The new theater with its large seating capacity will enable the company to put on the most extensive photoplays that are at present manufactured.

Got the Kids Coming to See "Myra."

Knoxville, Tenn.—Manager George N. Shorey, of the Gay theater, of Knoxville, recently handled one of the keenest advertising stunts on record for the purpose of getting a serial well started. Mr. Shorey sent out ten thousand copies of Charles W. Goddard's fascinating story "Myra," and announcement was made to the effect that every boy and girl who received one of these copies to the theater would be admitted free of charge on Saturday, to see the story continued in pictures. In addition to the serial an excellent Melicandine Keystone comedy, "Sunday Supplement" Cartoons were offered. To such children as did not get the paper delivered at their homes the management offered to furnish one on Friday night at the theater. It is needless to say that the house was packed by eager youngsters who will undoubtedly force their fond parents into furnishing the necessary coin with which to see the rest of the serial.

FILMING THE GREAT DERBY.

Camera Men Hustle and Show Race in Louisville Theater Next Morning.

G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Nearly every camera man in a radius of 150 miles of the city was present on Derby Day, May 13, to take pictures of the famous old Kentucky Derby, at the historic Churchill Downs track, where the event has been run off for forty-two consecutive years. The Derby, by Kentuckians, seems of more importance than gubernatorial or presidential elections, especially the Bluegrass, and there were eight moving picture cameras and many others trained on George Smith, the winner, as he shot across the wire in one of the most exciting finishes in years.

The race was fifth on the card, and the films were rushed out on night trains to Chicago and Cincinnati. Following the Derby the moving picture men ran some little race of their own in getting the films completed for showing in the local theaters. The race was won by the Pathe operators, who managed to get the films developed in time to show the Derby scenes at the first Monday shows at the Majestic theater, Louisville.

Local Mutual Offices Improved.

Louisville, Ky.—A number of improvements have just been completed at the Louisville office of the Mutual Film by Smith & Brown, the local managers. The office and work rooms have all been repapered throughout, a private telephone exchange installed and connected to the various departments, and a number of new signs and shelves installed for posters, supplies, etc. The exchange is now the most complete one in the city.

Will Take Colored Local Films.

Louisville, Ky.—The Broadway Amusement Enterprises, operators of a string of theaters in Louisville and out in the State, has just purchased and installed a 1916 Pathé camera and projector, and will take color pictures to be used in the company's theaters. There is a steadily increasing interest in local pictures and the company decided that it would facilitate matters considerably by the purchase of the machine.

News Notes from Louisville.

L. J. Dumar, president of the Majestic Amusement Company, recently left the city for New York, where he will spend about ten days or two weeks on special business.

Louisa, Ky.—D. J. Burchett is making arrangements to move his picture show into larger quarters, the business having outgrown the present building. He has also made arrangements to start a new pool room.

Winchester, Ky.—R. L. Badger, of Sardinia, O. has opened the Colonial theater as a moving picture house.

Richmond, Ky.—Extensive improvements are under way at the Alhambra theater, where the main building is being extended 8 feet and a new balcony installed. The seating capacity will be about 600 when completed. Leather chairs will be installed on the lower floor, electric fans, exhaust fans, two new moving picture machines and a gas flare. Miss Anna Bell Ward is manager of the theater.

Serials More Popular

Kansas City District Very Favorable to Serial Motion Pictures—Newspapers Find That the Stories Printed with the Weekly Installments Are Circulation Boosters and Are Eager for Them.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—The serial seems to be coming into its own in the Kansas City district and is being read with a rapidity that is almost beyond the grasp even of the men who have boosted it. One of the most interesting indications of the popularity of the serial, is the eagerness of the newspapers to publish the stories. The country editors have been made to feel that the publication of the serials is a circulation-winner—and they are finding this to be a fact. The readers are asking for moving picture news, and they are inquiring about the serials—so the editors have to come across. One salesman reported recently that he was surprised to find how glad the editor of one newspaper was to pay for the plate matter of a serial.

Charles Newman, Leonardville, Kan., is one exhibitor who had no difficulty at all in getting the "Exploits of Elaine" published in his local paper. C. L. Simpson, editor of the Monitor of that place, met him more than half way—he was about to urge Mr. Newman to put on such a serial, so he could run the story of it!

In Kansas City the "Iron Horse" is proving a winner; and it is booked in 37 houses in Missouri and Kansas served from the Kansas City exchange.

J. S. Stout Promoted.

Kansas City, Mo.—A much deserved promotion recently announced is that of J. S. Stout, who is now manager of the Salt Lake City branch of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Stout has for the past eight months been working as a traveler under Mr. Robertson, manager of the Kansas City office of the same company, and his promotion comes as the result of his excellent work in that position. No one has as yet been appointed in his place here.

D. O. Reese a Bluebird Road Man.

Kansas City, Mo.—D. O. Reese is the latest addition to the Bluebird Company's Kansas City office, succeeding the place vacated by W. B. Emrich, after his appointment as manager of this company. Mr. Reese is by no means a newcomer in the film industry, having acted for some time as traveler for the Kansas City Feature Film Company. He has recently been identified with several stock companies in the Southwest.

Universal's Educational Department.

Kansas City, Mo.—The latest plan to be worked out by the Universal Film and Supply Company is that of a Juvenile Performance Department, which is being conducted in the territory under the direction of "Marty" Williams. Letters are being sent out to each exhibitor in this territory, suggesting the adoption of a Saturday morning children's program and suggesting, of course, appropriate films which the Universal can offer for such entertainments.

Howe-McMillin Wedding.

G. B. Howe, assistant manager, and Miss Leola McMillin, assistant booker, both connected with the Universal Film and Supply Company of this city, were married here on May 18, in an apartment which they had fitted up before the ceremony. Miss McMillin has won a reputation over the city for the character of her work as an assistant booker, and one of the hustlers in the local industry. A large floor lamp was the gift of the office force of the Universal. In Miss McMillin's place Mrs. W. B. Emrich, wife of the manager of the Blue Bird Photoplay Company, was installed. Mrs. Emrich is also experienced along this line, having resigned from the Fox exchange to go with the Universal.

W. P. Cuff Buys the Best.

Topeka, Kans.—The Best theater at Topeka clanged hands last week, when W. P. Cuff, former manager of the Orpheum at that place, took it over from Lew Nathanson. No radical improvements are contemplated at present.

Alhambra at Springfield, Mo., Opens.

Springfield, Mo.—The "Battle Cry of Peace" was the first attraction of the Alhambra theater at Springfield, Mo., which recently opened its doors after an extensive series of alterations and improvements. The new house is one of the most modern in the Southwest and has many interesting features.

W. S. Quade Traveling with Unicorn.

Kansas City, Mo.—A new traveler with the recently-organized Unicorn Film Service is Walter S. Quade, who will have as his territory Kansas and Oklahoma. Mr. Quade is one of the oldest exhibitors in the local field, having managed the Olympic, one of the oldest houses here, before it was torn down. He recently has had charge of the Bonaventure, a Kansas City house.

W. B. Emrich Promoted.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. B. Emrich is now manager of the Kansas City branch of the Bluebird, being appointed to the position left vacant by A. G. Hull, who recently left for the East. Mr. Emrich is an experienced man in the moving picture game, being connected with the Fox Film Corporation, both in the Kansas City and Chicago office. His excellent record while on the road for the Bluebird company earned for him this position. He won five out of a possible six prizes offered by the local office of the traveler turning in the largest number of contracts at weekly intervals.

Among the Kansas City Exchanges.

Richard Robertson, local World Film manager, still enthuses over the great reception given the Brady-Made-World pictures, declaring that at they are going in wonderful shape. The Colonial, St. Joe, Mo., the Novelty in Topeka, Kans., and the Palace at Wichita, have all booked these releases for two days per week, which Mr. Robertson declares is good. A recent contract he obtained with the Apollo, the highest type of suburban theater in Kansas City, which will run these pictures each Monday night. "I am more than pleased to think that they have taken my stuff for the hardest night in the week. That shows that it is good," recently said Mr. Robertson.

Although he was here but thirty minutes, Harry Nolan, of the Nolan Supply Company, Denver, Colo., had a pleasant time in Kansas City. Mr. Nolan, who was en route to New York from El Paso, telegraphed his old friend "Pat" Hall, and the latter was on hand at the depot to greet him.

Leo D. Balsley, publicity manager of the Kansas City Feature Film Company, has been in Des Moines and Omaha attending the conventions of the Des Moines and Omaha Screen clubs. The Kansas City Feature Film Company had booths at both shows, and Mr. Balsley and R. C. LeBeau, manager of the Des Moines office, were the representatives in attendance.

Harry Drum, assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation, visited Richard Robertson, Kansas City manager, recently, making this one of the stops on his tour of the branch offices of that company in the United States.

The fourth monthly contest of the Universal office for a $25 prize to the salesman bringing in the most business during that time went to J. Erwin Dodson. This is the last of this series which the Universal will conduct.

A series of Saturday night salesmen's meetings has been started by C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathé exchange here. This is for the purpose of exchanging ideas, discussing mutual questions, "swapping" experiences and for a general betterment of the Pathé's business. Winning method used by one traveler will be suggested to the group and the same plan will be tried out if it is thought that it will work in other territory. Mr. Edwards, by his expert handling of his travelers, has developed a set of salesmen who are making great records for themselves, and incidentally for Pathé.

ATLANTA NEWS LETTER.

By A. M. Beatty, Special Correspondent, 43 Copenhill ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Screen Club Gives Special Show.

ATLANTA, GA.—The Screen Club of Atlanta offered a rare treat to motion picture followers Sunday at the Grand theater. A program selected from first run subjects which have just reached this southern distribution point was given to a crowded house.

Paul Engler Heads Local Fox.

Atlanta, Ga.—Paul Engler, one of the best known and most popular film men in the south, has been made manager of the Atlanta branch of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Engler is very popular in Atlanta and is receiving congratulations from his many friends.

Will Make Home Talent Picture.

La Grange, Ga.—The proprietors of the Ideal and Grand theaters at La Grange have made arrangements to stage a photoplay in which young people of the city will participate. A prize of $75 will be offered to the young lady who is selected for the leading role in the unique production. All those who enter the contest will be given an opportunity to take part in the picture.

J. Marius Olsen Here.

Atlanta, Ga.—J. Marius Olsen, prominent in the screen world, who arrived in Atlanta last week from Florida, is so well pleased with Atlanta and its moving picture interests that he declared he is going to enter the film game in this city.

Mr. Olsen opened the first motion picture theater in Glasgow, Scotland. He has since managed several film houses in Florida.

"The Feud Girl," a Georgia Picture.

Atlanta, Ga.—The photoplay for which all Georgia has been looking, "Feud Girl," the Homestead production, that was staged in the mountains of North Georgia, is being shown in Atlanta this week.

It will attract more widespread attention through the south than any picture in months, due to the fact that hundreds of Georgians appear in character roles.

Most of all the scenes are laid in the Georgia hills around Gainesville, Rome and Helen. The natives of those vicinities take the parts of feudists and clansmen, and performed their work better than any class of non-professional extra folk with whom Director Thomson has ever had to deal.

What Makes the Strand Flag Fly?

Atlanta, Ga.—An unique contest is being held by the Strand theater. An American flag flies each day on the roof that stands out as if in a gale, when at times scarcely a breath of air is stirring. To the uninformed it's a puzzle. A prize of $10 is offered to any one not connected with moving picture interests who writes the best description of how this flag feat is accomplished.

C. W. Harden Goes to Metro.

C. W. Harden, district manager of the Fox Film for the Atlanta and Southern district, has resigned his position to accept the management of the Metro Picture Corporation for the district of Kansas City and surrounding territory. Mr. Harden is one of the original screen club boosters. His departure will be regretted by the Atlanta film men.

Beautified Bonita Reopens.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Bonita theater, on Peachtree street, which has been closed several weeks for improvements, opened Monday completely remodeled and fitted with the modern photoplay house equipment.

In remodeling the theater $10,000 was spent on interior and exterior work with the view of securing maximum comfort and beauty. A new player has been installed in front of the theater. A five-piece orchestra will furnish music on the inside of the house.

The Bonita will show General Film productions and Triangle-Keystone comedy.

PRAIRIE STATE NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Decision Favors "Nation" Films.

DES MOINES, Ia.—"The Birth of a Nation" was shown in Des Moines without violating the law. Judge Meyer in the municipal court decided the film did not come within the scope of the ordinance which prohibited performances which are "indecent or would tend to incite riot." This opinion was given at the trial of Harold Cavanaugh, house manager of the Berchel theater and two operators who were yanked out of the theater.

Theater Closes in Iowa.

State Center, Ia.—Albie Nolte has sold the Princess theater to Louis Riemschneider and Herbert Hough of this place.

Grinnel, Ia.—H. C. Armstrong has opened a five-cent picture show in the Army.

St. Charles, Ia.—L. A. White has opened a moving picture theater here.

Fairbanks, Ia.—Clifford Hayes has been making preparations to operate a moving picture show in the opera house.

St. Anthony, Ia.—A moving picture theater has been opened here by Byron Uford.

Wapello, Ia.—The Kreck theater has been taken over by the Real Amusement Company.

IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Officers of New Federal Features, Inc.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Oscar Freedman, formerly manager of the Seville, Main, Milo and Gopher theaters in Minneapolis, is now head of the new Federal Features, Inc., which has been organized here and taken quarters at the Film Exchange Bldg., 18 North Fourth street. The first release of the new feature company is "Defense or Tribute." Associated with Mr. Freedman are A. M. Gruenberg, Pei Markus, Sam Freedman and Meyer M. Isaacs.

Why Picture Was Banned

Minneapolis Board of Censors, Advisory to Mayor, Gives Its Reasons for Not Recommending "The Eternal Sapho"—Care for the Young Spectator and the Unintelligent Spectator Its Aim.

By Perry S. Williams, Special Correspondent, Address Minneapolis Tribune.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—The Minneapolis Board of Censors, composed of about thirteen men and women representing the civic organizations of the city, and which guides Mayor Wallace G. Nye in his actions on motion picture films, has barred "The Eternal Sapho." The film had been shown for half a week at the Lyric theater, but the board by unanimous recommendation brought out Mayor Nye's ban on further displays of it. In taking action on the film the board issued its first comprehensive statement giving its methods of censorship. The board's statement may be stated briefly as follows:

Pictures must appeal to good citizenship and especially avoid having evil influences on the audience. Particular care must be taken to avoid evil effects on young people because three-fourths of all picture audiences are persons under 35 years and a large number of this audience are under age. In the case of "The Eternal Sapho," the board holds that in depicting the character of a child, Theda Bara's performance is perhaps a little exaggerated." General objection is made to the scenes of drunkenness, the idea of the married man's visits to the model and the scenes in the haunts of vice. Especial objection is had to the staircase scenes when the married lover sees his mistress clandestinely. The board holds "There can be only one conclusion as to the purpose of the ascent of the staircase. It is led by the artist, the girl, the married lover, the degraded father, the murderous thief, is an evil life marked in no case by extenuating circumstances." The hint at "easily-earned luxury" also is objected to.

In conclusion the board says: "It portrays sensuality, it is suggestive, it leads the spectator to contacts with immorality—pictorially speaking—which no parent would permit a son or daughter to seek. No really intelligent person is likely to be led astray by this film, but whether it is shown to their twelve or twenty or even women of middle or old age, there can be no mistake as to the relations between the evil characters of the film play, and hence no moral gain or even maintenance of moral level in witnessing the exhibition of lovers and mistresses. It is beside the point to reply that this is to deny existence of such relations in real life; it is not best to deny the existence of such relations contributing elements of such relations are far from true to life."

Correcting an Error.

In the list of our correspondents recently printed in this paper the address of Mr. Perry S. Williams, our Minneapolis correspondent, was given wrongly. His address is the Minneapolis Tribune.

Granstrom's Special Juvenile Shows.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—George Granstrom, a Minneapolis exhibitor, has joined the move backed by parents of this city to furnish special films for children. His program in co-operation with the mothers and fathers includes "Rip Van Winkle," which he will show at the Garrick, 26th street and Nicollet avenue, and "The Wizard of Oz," which will be an attraction at the University theater, University street.

Granstrom says he has found not only the parents, but the school authorities anxious to show their appreciation of his efforts to cater to the children's wants.

Screen Club Profited by Convention.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Although only about a month old, the Twin City Screen Club, whose membership comprises exhibitors, exchange men, road men, newspapermen and other real fellows engaged in or connected with the picture business, boasts of a membership of about 150. The convention of the Northwest Exhibitors at the Armory a few weeks ago furnished the opportunity for winning over a number of out-of-town members. It was easy work, too, once the boys had glimpsed the fine club quarters in the Radisson Hotel, where they could make their headquarters when in Minneapolis.

Zenith Opens New Quarters.

P. S. Cary, manager of the Zenith Feature Film Company, which is a Duluth company, reports he is ready to meet his traders in his new quarters, sixth floor, Produce Bldg.

F. L. Andrews Goes to Friedman Film.

Denver's New Theater

Half Million Paid for Site for Magnificent New Picture Theater by Bishop-Cass Investment Company—Will Stand at Corner of Sixteenth and Curtis Streets—Named the American—Locality Business Analyzed.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLO.—This city's "Movie Row" long has been the marvel of every big man in the film industry who chanced to see it, and claimed as the greatest in the United States, is only in its infancy, judging from plans revealed this week. With high-class motoplay houses now doing business within a radius of two city blocks and a sixth nearing completion, announcement has been made of another.

This seventh theater is to be higher and better than any of those now on Curtis street or "Movie Row." It is to be known as the American. It is to be built in the corner of Sixteenth and Curtis streets. The Bishop-Cass Investment Company, back of the project, purchased the site for $500,000. An old building now on the ground will be razed and its place will be erected a three-story structure, 100 feet wide by 125 feet long.

The theater will be located in the center with store rooms around the outside. The plans are now drawn call for entrances to the theater from both the Curtis and Sixteenth street sides. These are Denver's two principal business thoroughfares. The theater will have a seating capacity of 1,500 and will have elevator service to the balconies.

Fisher & Fisher, architects, are in charge of the plans and they declare that "the American" will be the best ventilated, most brilliantly lighted and the most comfortable in the United States. It will be entirely fireproof and it is promised will embrace a number of new features the nature of which are being withheld pending the completion of details.

Business Statistics for Neighborhood.

With the opening of The American the seating capacity of the Curtis street houses will have reached a total of approximately 15,000. This includes in addition to the seven high class or 10 to 25 cent houses, four second class or nickel theaters.

Each of these houses runs 12 hours a day. Six daily performances is the minimum and figuring that all showed to capacity at every performance it would be possible to accommodate 90,000 people in day or almost half of the city's population.

This takes into consideration only those houses in the heart of the business district and does not include five nickel theaters on Larimer street, in the lower part of the downtown district, nor any of the 60 or more houses in the residence districts.

Most of the latter are now running full ten-cent programs or get an admission of ten cents on four or five nights a week.

Unicorn Office Opens.

Denver, Colo.—Louis Goldstein, late manager of the Universal in Denver, has laid his plans for opening a private office for the exclusive distribution of big feature pictures, and instead has accepted the management of the Unicorn exchange. An up-to-date office has been opened at 142 Welton street.

Coincident with Goldstein's retirement from the Universal service comes the announcement that Carl Stern, manager of the Denver Bluebird office, has gone to "Unicorn" to be in charge of one of the offices on the Pacific Coast.

W. P. Moran Managing Denver Universal.

Denver, Colo.—W. P. Moran, formerly in charge of the Mutual interests in Salt Lake City, has been made manager of the Universal exchange in Denver. He has assumed his new duties.

Moran is not new to Denver, but it has been several years since he worked in this city. He was initiated into the film industry, being one of the aides of H. H. Buckwalter, when the latter was manager of the General Film Company exchange, and when this was the only film distributing agency in Denver.

L. E. Schaeffer Made Assistant Manager.

L. E. Schaeffer, road man and special representative of the V-L-S-B in the Denver territory, has been called into the office and given the position of assistant manager of the local exchange under Frank Harris.

Politicians Fear Hearst

San Francisco Agitation for Stricter Censorship Due to Fear of Prohibition Films—Hearst Expected to Use Power of Film to Advocate a Dry State—Real Forces Lined Up Over Matter.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif.—Within the course of a week exhibitors, producers and exchange interests of this city will know whether or not a strict board of moving picture censorship will be passed here. The Police Committee, the Board of Supervisors, has recommended the passage of the ordinance prepared by the California Club and other interests, and it is now up to the board as a whole. At a recent meeting of the Board of Supervisors this matter came up for discussion, but upon the request of Attorney John T. Williams, representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, a postponement of one week was granted as the attorney had just been called into the case and wished to prepare himself. The understanding was reached at this meeting that there would be no further postponements.

Fear Prohibition Films.

For some time the moving picture interests of the city have been endeavoring to get to the bottom of the agitation for the creation of a board of censorship, but not until the last meeting of the Board of Supervisors were they able to understand it. At this meeting Cornelius Deasy, a member of the Police Committee, which had recommended the passage of the censorship ordinance, unwittingly exposed the motive of the agitation. It was apparent that insofar as this committee was concerned the protection of public morals was not an issue and that the entire matter was merely a question of politics.

"I will say that a motion was made by one of the supervisors as an amendment to the ordinance under discussion that the Board of Censors be abolished Mr. Deasy arose and said: 'I will say to the members of the Board of Supervisors, although I did not say it in committee. I was in favor of abolishing the Board of Censors, but I understand that Mr. Hearst is interested in the moving picture business. There is to be a fight on prohibition in this city and state next fall. It is said that Mr. Hearst intends to use the moving pictures to put forward his propaganda in favor of prohibition. I, therefore, am not in favor of abolishing the Board of Censors.'

This frank confession that a Board of Censors is desired for its power over political questions has been seized upon by film interests as a convincing argument why the ordinance should not be passed and has brought forth a flood of editorials in the daily press opposing censorship in all forms. The Ironquels Club of San Francisco and the Carpenters' Union, each with a large membership, have passed resolutions against the proposed censorship ordinance and have so advised the Board of Supervisors.

Film Stars Appear in Person.

San Francisco, Calif.—The management of the Imperial theater makes splendid use of its large stage and with each Paramount picture shows an elaborate stage set is featured. Recently it has been enabled to present several film stars in person, two of these having appeared within a week. Anita King, the Paramount girl, appeared during the engagement of "The Race." In which she starred, and she was followed by Sessue Hayakawa, whose portrayal in "The Cheat" created a sensation here a short time ago.

Visits Los Angeles Branch.

San Francisco, Calif.—E. H. Emmick of the Peerless Film Company has left for Los Angeles to make a stay of two or three weeks and assist in stimulating business at the southern branch. During his absence the business of the local exchange will be looked after by H. Solomon.

Visiting Coast Branches.

San Francisco, Calif.—W. O. Edmonds, who has charge of the George Kleine interests on the Pacific Coast, made a short visit recently to Los Angeles to get the branch opened there in working order and has since left for Seattle and the Northwest on a similar mission. Business has been coming in in fine shape and the first showing of "Gloria's Romance," at the City Theater, has proved to be a great success.

Nat A. Magnor Goes East.

San Francisco, Calif.—Nat A. Magnor of the Nat A. Magnor Company, Pacific Bldg., is making an Eastern trip for the purpose of securing new feature films. His latest purchase, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," is still being booked heavily in this territory.

Walter Prededy Establishes Plant.

San Francisco, Calif.—Walter Prededy, who conducts a large supply business on Eddy street, has established a plant at Berkeley, Calif., for the reflowing of mercury are rectifiers and for all kinds of glass work connected with the moving picture business. He has been working this class of work for some time, but is now engaging in it on a larger scale than ever.

Producing Company Very Busy.

San Rafael, Calif.—Marked success has been met with by the California Motion Picture Corporation in booking "The Unwritten Law," direct to exhibitors in California. Three prints are now working in the northern part of the state and long runs are being booked for Sacramento, for instance, where three or four days are considered a long run, the production has been booked for a solid week at the Strand.

"Myra" Dinner Planned.

San Francisco, Calif.—Plans are being made for a "Mysteries of Myra" dinner and high jinks to be tendered the one hundred and more exhibitors in the San Francisco territory, who have booked this serial. Those who attend will be garbed in weird costumes and both the dinner and the entertainment will be thoroughly in keeping with the mysticism of the serial.

New Concerns Incorporate.

San Francisco, Calif.—The Animated Cartoon Film Corporation has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000 by F. W. Hargis, J. F. Forbes and T. L. Ford. The Animated Film Corporation of the Stereoscopic Motion Picture Company have been filed by J. D. Grant, J. T. Edwards, V. L. Dunne, H. N. Duham and Purcell Rowe. The capital stock is placed at $50,000.

"Battle Cry of Peace" Scores Hit.

Berkeley, Calif.—For four days the "Battle Cry of Peace" was shown to capacity houses at the Berkeley T. & D. theater, scoring one of the greatest successes ever witnessed in the College City. The production was well advertised and the plans for a number of novel stunts were worked out by former manager of the house before his departure for Portland, Ore.

New Theaters Open

T & D Theater and A & H Hippodrome Inaugurate Their Shows With Fine Success—M. O. Leonhart Manages T & D—Municipal Red Tape and Censorship Are Disagreeable Features Encountered by New Enterprises.

By Abraham Nelson, Special Correspondent t, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, Ore.—Two big theaters have been added to the city's list of photoplay houses. The Ackerman and Harris Hippodrome, featuring photoplays and filling in with vaudeville, opened May 19. Although the opening day was in the middle of the week, the house enjoyed excellent patronage. About noon a line formed at the box office and by 1 o'clock, the opening hour, it was nearly two miles long. The "Hips" has enjoyed S R O business since the opening day. The opening picture program consisted of the Gold Rooster play, "Big Jim Garrity," a "Lonesome Luke" comedy and a Pathe scenic. The vaudeville acts are booked through the Affiliated Booking Corporation and the Western States Vaudeville Managers' Association. Irving Ackerman of San Francisco and Adolph Ramish of Los Angeles were in Portland at the opening of the Hippodrome. The theater men already established in the city forgot their feeling of rivalry, if any existed, and joined in sending the Hippodrome a long and hearty welcome. The Hippodrome's lobby is in the shape of a horseshoe bearing a legend of good wishes and was large enough to occupy a big portion of the Hippodrome's spacious lobby.

T. & D. Opens with Straight Pictures.

The T & D theater, Portland's biggest straight photoplay house, opened Sunday, May 14, to record breaking business. The little Pathe serial, "Gloria's Romance," was featured together with Lubin's "Dollars and the Woman." A twelve-piece orchestra, the largest theater orchestra in the city, accompanied the pictures and an elaborate stage set was prepared for the Lubin feature.

M. O. Leonhart is manager of the new T & D. He hales from Berkeley, where he managed the local T & D house, and has been associated with Turner and Dahnke for four years.

Among the many changes that have been made to turn the T & D into a straight picture theater, the changes in the lobby are important. This has been nearly doubled in size, new ventilators constructed and two Power's machines installed. The throw is 135 feet to an 18x24 screen.

Red Tape and Censors Bother.

The two new theatrical enterprises were confronted by the necessity of being compelled to unwind an excess of municipal red tape that the present administration has sort to wrap about the permission to transact legitimate business in Portland. The men who assisted in getting the two theaters ready for opening spoke not pleasantly of their dealings with the administration and one of them declared that with the batteries of municipal inspectors and investigators it was a wonder to him that the theater was ever opened at all.

The censor board initiated the T & D right off the bat. The board's viewers refused to pass "God's Country and the Woman," which was intended for the opening and the picture was put to the regular censor board on Saturday afternoon before the Sunday show. Bruce Johnson saved any unpleasantness with the board by substituting "Dollars and the Woman" at the last minute. Tom North's flying trip down from Seattle when he heard of the board's action.

Audiences Want Mixed Programs.

Oregon City, Ore.—W. A. Long, manager of the Star theater here, recently took a vote from his patrons on the length of pictures they preferred. The result was big odds in favor of mixed programs of one, two and three reels. However, preference was shown for features one or two days a week. The growing tendency in the West to mix pictures with vaudeville also received attention from Mr. Long in his quest for opinions and he stated that the number of people who wanted vaudeville with their pictures and those who did not were about equal.

Business Good in Central Oregon.

Portland, Ore.—H. H. Brownell, traveling for the out of the city, recently returned from a trip through the central part of the state, a territory not often made by road men, and stated that nearly all the theaters there were enjoying prosperity. At Bend there are now two theaters, the Dream, R. C. Rudow, and the Bend, Caltow and Donner. At Redmond a theater is operated by Mrs. Dobbs and at Heppner J. B. Sparks's house, the Star, is the only one in operation. C. C. Ghorneley has leased his theater at Enterprise to S. A. Gardiner, formerly of the Arcade at La Grande.

Service Film Company Moves.

Portland, Ore.—The Service Film Company is now established on Film Row next door to the General Film exchange. The number is 393 Oak street. Manager Humphrey stated that the company would handle pictures exclusively and did not intend to enter into the exchange end of the business. The company has arranged to handle all machine parts in stock, obviating the long delays to which exhibitors were formerly subjected in being required to send away for parts. The Service Film Company is the Pacific Northwest distributors for the American Standard machines and agent for other companies.

The Reliable Film, a New Exchange.

Portland, Ore.—The Reliable Film Service, organized by C. H. Johnson and E. A. Stone, has occupied the former quarters of the Service Film Company at 65 Broadway. The storeroom has been remodeled and enlarged and new fixtures have been installed. W. A. Stone, formerly president of the Service Film Company and well known in the film rental business in the Pacific Northwest, will handle the film department of the new concern. Peerless and United Service has been added up. The new company will also handle films for outright sale and D. J. Chatkin, vice-president of the United Service, will visit Portland soon on business in connection with this department of the new company. An adequate projecting room will be maintained for outside films as well as for those of the company. Mr. Johnson, the president of the new company, was formerly a contractor in Portland.

Theater Notes of Interest.

Centralia, Wash.—The City Commission here appointed a censor board at the request of the Women's Civic Club. The board consists of seven members headed by Rev. C. W. Dubois.

Albany, Ore.—E. W. Hughes has sold the Opera House to C. W. Repass, formerly a real estate man of Portland. Portland, Ore.—Lou Campan, who with Zola Brooks conducts the Star theater at Goldendale, Wash., and J. H. Rose, owner of the Dime theater, Toledo, Ore., were in Portland recently booking service.

Portland, Ore.—Pete Sabo recently sold a new Power's 6A to the People's theater. The People's has another Power's 6A they have used for four years.

Portland, Ore.—H. W. Francis of the Pathe serial department was a recent visitor in Portland in the interests of Pathe's new serial, "The Grip of Evil." The story will run in the Evening Telegram.

BIG ORGAN'S PREMIER.

Salt Lake City's American Has Immense Instrument.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—An audience of 3,500 people, the largest ever assembled at a motion picture theater in this city, was present at the American on Tuesday night, May 9, at the dedication of the gigantic new pipe organ.

The occasion was made notable through the presence of Governor William Spry of Utah, members of the military staff, Mayor W. Abbott Ferry of Salt Lake, the city commission and other officials of the state and city government. President Joseph F. Smith and other authorities of the Mormon Church and many pastors of leading denominational churches were also present.

The formal address of the evening was made by Governor Spry.

The program began with a short speech by Maurice Tobin, the new manager of the American, Rex and Liberty theaters. Mr. Tobin introduced William H. Swanson as "the first exhibitor of motion pictures in the United States and the founder of the Universal Film Company."

At the conclusion of Governor Spry's speech, Prof. John J. McClellan, who is also organist at Mormon tabernacle, played the "Grand Toccata in F," by Widor, followed by the country waltz, "Old Kentucky Home." All three selections were tumultuously applauded and the organist responded with "The Star Spangled Banner" as an encore, during which the audience sang and the flag was flashed on the screen.

Summer Films at the Orpheum.

Salt Lake City.—Beginning May 27, the Orpheum theater will show motion picture features throughout the summer, with the exception of a week or so of a brief grand opera season next month. The pictures will continue at the big vaudeville house until the resumption of the regular circuit season next August.

C. W. Meighan Will Organize Swanson Circuit.

Salt Lake City.—Charles W. Meighan is now publicity director for the Swanson circuit houses in Salt Lake and manager of the Rex and Liberty, under direction of W. Maurice Tobin. E. C. Schmidt continues as editor of the Swanson Circuit News, the weekly newspaper of the three houses.

IN NEBRASKA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Filming Local History.

OMAHA, Neb.—Historical events of Nebraska are being reproduced in moving pictures by Frank B. Harrison, a newspaper man, under the auspices of the Territorial Pioneers' Association. He visits the scenes and wherever possible secures active participants in the events and uses local residents to play the other parts. Simultaneously he is writing a series of articles dealing with these historical events. The series is being published by the Omaha News. None can estimate the value of the year's work on these events caught while the memory is fresh.

Oxford, Neb.—J. B. Reed has purchased the Gem theater.

OLD-TIME FILM MAN.

Long Service of J. M. Robertson of the Dominion.

By E. C. Thomas, Special Correspondent, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

VICTORIA, B. C.—J. M. Robertson, manager of the Dominion theater in Victoria, is in point of service the oldest employee of the J. R. Muir of the Dominion Theater Company, having been connected with him in the early days of the industry in this province, when Mr. Muir conducted an exchange in Vancouver, handling Kleine releases. When the General Film Co. came into the territory and absorbed the exchange, Mr. Robertson took a position with them, and continued there for a year. On the completion of the Dominion theater in Vancouver he returned to the service of Mr. Muir, and when a year and a half later the Dominion in Victoria was built, he was placed in charge of that house.

Mr. Robertson is probably as well qualified to manage a moving picture theater as any man in this territory, as in addition to acting as manager for several years he is a qualified operator, an accomplished pianist and organist, and in the early days was a singer of illustrated songs, having taken up this work shortly after his arrival here from Scotland. He is a firm believer in the value of personal acquaintance with his patrons, and in personal attention given to anticipating their desires, and the line of automobiles in front of the Dominion seems to indicate that his policy is the correct one.

Paramount pictures are shown at the Dominion, and Mr. Robertson reports that business is very satisfactory.

Earnest British Columbia Censorship.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Universal feature, "The Campbells Are Coming," has been rejected by the British Columbia censor, and it is stated that the reason for the move is that Indian troops are shown in revolt against the British, whereas they are now fighting for the Empire. In view of the fact that the picture has been passed by other provinces and has been used for recruiting purposes by the military authorities, its rejection for this cause seems somewhat inconsistent.

Vancouver Notes.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Starland theater is becoming widely known as the house of serials. Having completed "Graft" early in the month, the ones now being shown are "The Iron Claw," "Reg of the Ring" and "The Red Circle."

Nelson, B. C.—The O-Row-Nay theaters, comprising the Gem at Nelson, the Star at Trail, and the Orpheum at Fernie, have contracted for the feature "The Ring" will run them for two days at each house. A few Big Four productions, which the Triangles are superseding as the program handled by the National Film Service, will be shown at these houses, and the feature admission price of 25 cents will be reduced temporarily to 15 cents on the balance of the Big Fours.

"Sixty Years a Queen" was run at the Gem in this city on the late Queen's birthday, and on the following day at Trail. "Tillie's Nightmare" is booked for an early showing.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Orpheum theater, playing Orpheum Circuit vaudeville, closed the 1915-16 season here May 6, and Manager E. J. Sullivan has left for New York.

Vancouver, B. C.—Manager James Pilling of the Orpheum theater did his best week's business in many months during the recent engagement at his house of "Canada's Fighting Fours," the official Canadian Government films, which were shown for the entire week of May 1 at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.

Taxing Theater Patrons

Ontario Authorities Issue Tax Tickets to Go with Regular Admissions—Rates Are One Cent for Seats Costing to Ten Cents; Two Cents, Up to 50 Cents; Five Cents, to One Dollar; Ten Cents for Higher Priced Seats.

By W. M. Gladish, Special Correspondent, 1235 Garrard St., Toronto, Can.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—Moving picture and theater patrons of Ontario from May 15th have been astir, because of the enactment of the Amusement Tax Act for the Province and also because of the application of important amendments to the Theaters and Cinematographs Act.

Starting that day the theater-goers purchasing an admission ticket not in excess of ten cents are required to pay a tax of one cent. For admission tickets, the price of which does not exceed 50 cents, the schedule of war tax rates calls for an assessment of two cents. Tickets of from 50 cents to $1 are for an extra 5 cents. On all tickets over $1 the tax is 10 cents. As a start the Government, through the provincial treasurer's department, made and distributed 10,000,000 tickets in reels of 50 each, the great majority being the one and two cent denominations. The authorities, incidentally, expect to dispose of at least 60,000,000 tax tickets during the coming year.

Arrangements have been made whereby a local officer in each city and town will look after the sale of the pasteboards to the exhibitors, but the moving picture exchanges at Toronto have also been given the privilege of distributing tickets to the theater managers. The exhibitors are given a commission of ten per cent, and seven and one-half per cent to enable the show managers to cover the cost of extra help at entrances if necessary and also the cost of a chipping machine in the lobby, which is now required by law.

Exhibitors will be required, under the new act, to make weekly reports to the Government of attendance figures, and the number of war tickets sold during the week. With the use of turnstiles, which register the number of people admitted, no tax tickets need be sold to patrons, although the tax must be collected from the people in some way. In this instance sworn returns must be made to the Department at the close of each day.

Pass Holders Also Pay.

Under the provisions of the act pass-holders are not exempted—in fact the only persons who escape, beyond the employees in a theater, are the Government inspectors. In case of a theater proprietor runs out of his supply of tickets, he must still continue to collect the tax by taking the money from the patrons. In this instance he must make a return of the actual money so taken to the department at Toronto. By arrangement with the Government it will be permissible for the ticket-seller in the box office to deposit the war tax tickets in the chopper in which case the theater patron will not handle a tax coupon at all.

The decision of the Government is that patrons of fall fairs, county exhibitions, patriotic and church concerts are not affected by the act. In the event of patriotic exhibitions the proceeds of the ticket sale show that the proceeds are really for the announced purpose.

The Provincial Treasurer is empowered to revoke the license of any theater where a convention of the act is violated. There are minor penalties for offences against the law, however. The responsibility of collecting the assessment is placed entirely on the shoulders of the exhibitors and show managers, however, who will, in future, have to pay for the tax coupons in advance.

Exhibitors Must Buy Two Licenses.

On the same day that the Amusement Tax Act went into force in Ontario the changes in the act governing the operation of the theaters themselves also became effective. An important feature of the modifications is that municipalities are now not only authorized to license local moving picture theaters when the latter are licensed by the Provincial Government, but they are obliged to do so. Every exhibitor in Ontario will, therefore, be required to pay for two licenses, a provincial and city or town license, in future. Many, so far, have escaped with only one license. The municipalities, further, are empowered to supervise and restrict the constructional features of new picture houses while the inspection department of the Provincial Hydro-Electric System, a Government corporation, now has charge of the installation and inspection of wiring, generators, transformers, etc.

The changes also provide for the equipment of theaters with standpipes wherever there is not a local water system.

The new act also provides that municipalities shall issue a license to any theater until a Provincial license can be produced and also that no municipality can refuse to issue a license to any holder of a Provincial certificate.

Oh, wonderful and comprehensive is law!

Summer Films at Shea's.

Toronto, Ontario.—J. Shea, manager of Shea's theater, Toronto, the finest vaudeville house in Canada, has turned to moving pictures for the summer season in place of the usual stock company engagement. The prices will not exceed twenty-five cents for the evening shows.

Universal's Essay Contest.

Toronto, Ontario.—During the past six weeks the Canadian Universal has conducted an essay contest for boys and girls, through the medium of the Toronto Star Weekly, to ascertain what style of pictures the children liked to see.

Rebuilt Theater Burns.

Orillia, Ontario.—After L. W. Robbins has just completed the transformation of the Orillia hockey rink into an attractive moving picture theater at a cost of $2,500, the building was destroyed by fire. The theater had not yet been opened. The insurance amounted to only $900.

Schreiber House Opens.

Schreiber Ontario.—The Princess theater, the only amusement house in this village, has been reopened as a picture house after being dark for many weeks.

Toronto World Has Film Section.

Toronto, Ontario.—The Toronto World, a local morning paper, has adopted the policy of running a motion picture section every day. The Sunday edition of this publication has long published a moving picture department which invariably occupies three whole pages.

New Incorporations.

Toronto, Ontario.—The Maple Leaf Amusement Company, Limited, has received its incorporation papers to own and operate moving picture theaters throughout the Province. The authorized capital is $40,000.

Canada Amusements, Limited, is the name of another newly incorporated company with the same amount of capital and organized for the same purpose.

IVIM.

BABY DOLL (May 25). Business having slackened with Plump and Runt, our small irish decides to write to his uncle for a little ranch. (Uncle tells him to make a man of himself by the way of saying "To this, Runt immediately replies" saying that he has taken a spouse, and arranges with Plump to impersonate the lady.

Uncle leaves the farm to visit his relative and on his way is inveigled into a flirtation with Plump who is returning from the country arrayed in female attire, so delighted is Plump with his powers of deception that he encourages the old man to the point where the gay old sport will not quit. Time is passing and Plump has to rid himself of his too ardent admirer by dropping him into the river.

Poor Runt, meanwhile, is in a fever of anxiety at his proud wife's non-appearance. Finally, Plump arrives and relates his experience as a female impersonator. On the point of giving up hope of the uncle's visit, Plump is about to disrobe, when Uncle arrives and meeting his erstwhile charmer, bursts into rage. Unhappily for him, his wife, who has also determined to visit her nephew, appears on the scene. Caught between two fires, poor Uncle has to keep quiet and incidentally part with the $5,000.

KALEM.

A ROGUE'S NEMESIS (Episode No. 7 of the "Social Pirates"—Two Parts—May 8). The "Mona" (Mary Sue), "Uncle" (Edw. Kelly), "Goodwin" (Thomas Lingham), "Buck" (Minter (Frank Jonasson)), "The Judge" (Edward Clarendon).

At the trial of the Clay divorce suit, Mona and Mary have their sympathy aroused for the wife who is being grieved by the husband. The cause is the woman's learning that she has been left penniless, they set about to teach Clay a lesson and also secure funds for the wife. The woman, however, is interested, but Mary is intensely afraid of her jealous husband, whom she describes as an eccentric musician. The trap is laid, and with Mona masquerading as the husband, Clay is forced to pay a bitter penalty for his wrongs.

THE TANK TOWN TROUPE (May 9).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); The Sheriff (Ed. Edmunds); The daughter (Norma Nichols). Directed by Harry Edwards.

Ham and Bud are seen in "The Balance Brothers," a traveling acrobatic act. When they stop at the sheriff's house on their way to the village the music of their bass drum and trombone causes the sheriff to ask, "Can it be angels playing?" Especially do they score with the sheriff's fair daughter. Her stage ambition grows, and she steals away from the homestead the following morning to follow the "actors." The sheriff also follows, with dire thoughts concerning Ham and Bud, who are entirely innocent of the mischief of their vaudeville act—which, by the way, is a scream—the sheriff and his cowboy friends bust up the show because these who are creating excitement happening after another clear up to a smashing finish.

NOT THAT THE DOCTOR ORDERED (May 10).—The cast: Jennie (Ethel Tetter); Monty (Monty Belmont); The doctor (Monty Belmont); The Butler (Gus Leonard); The Nurse (Myrtle Sterling). Author, Burk Symon.

Monty Belmont, who plays the doctor, prescribes a visit to a yard-long prescription and says that he is sending a nurse around to keep the invalid in and home until the real nurse has an engagement so she consents to let Jennie, who would be a nurse, take her place. Monty arrives at the house and finds that the nurse is the pretty nurse on her way, and when he hears Brown's complaint readily offers to be a substitute invalid. All works well until Brown also takes a view of the nurse, and then there is a fight to see just who will be the invalid. Brown plans revenge and before long everything is in a state of confusion. The real nurse then tending all the invalids in the house.

A LUNCH ROOM LEGACY (May 12).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); the Chef

(Henry Murdoch); the proprietor (Richard Purdon); the cashier (Harry Kennedy); the dancer (Olive West); the lawyer (Frank Minsky); his clerk (Arthur Albertson). Author, Taylor. Director, Harry Edwards.

Word that she has inherited a restaurant causes Sis to pack up and leave the farm. On her arrival in the city the lawyer's clerk takes her to the restaurant which turns out to be a fashionable cabaret palace. Sis proceeds to take the place in her own right, and it is here that what a restaurant should be. The cabaret dancer is put to washing the dishes, the waiter because they are not allowed to take tips, and the chef because of his incompetence. In different Ignatz's mixtures as chef cause the newspapers to glory in the new foreign restaurant novelty.

THE BRIDGE OF DANGER (No. 79 of the "Hazards of Helen"—May 13).—The cast: The Operator (Helen Gibson); Superintendent Thomas (Roy Watson); Bob Bates (P. M. Pembroke); "Pop" Bates (G. A. Williams). Author, Herman Blackman. Producer, James Davis.

The new superintendent is an apostle of efficiency. His first order on taking the post claiming to be the man who he terms old, which costs "Pop" Bates his job as Helen's railroad operator. His next declaration is that active railroad work is no place for women, and Helen is also dropped from the service. While Helen is breaking the news to Bob Bates, the new superintendent is bustling about the road yard speeding up the work. Put not to snap into your switching," he tells the men.

A minute later, while he is making an inspection of the box car with the new brakes, a switching engine rams the car. The force of the impact—heightened by the recent accident—has the superintendent so floor stunned, and starts the car on the down grade. In a few moments it is speeding along the road and there is consternation among the men for the road means that it is headed to certain destruction.

Helen prevails on Bob to set out in pursuit of the car on the parallel track. The engineering plan has suggested itself to her. After a thrilling pursuit they arrive alongside the box car and the superintendent is seen in the beam. Climbing out from the cab she then goes hand over hand to the box car. There is a crash, and the box car is brought to a stop within inches of the washout point. Needless to say, the superintendent's ideas of efficiency are somewhat altered by his experience.

LUBIN.

FRILBY DRILLED (May 29).—The cast: Svangaric (Fayl Don); Frilby (Patsy De Forest); Diggo (George Egan); Gilly (Charles Ebbinger); Sculptor (Bernard Siegel). Written and directed by Edwin McKim.

Svangaric, a German musician, discovers by playing the piano at a friend's studio he meets Frilby, the artist's model, who insists he hear Frilby sing. Her singing is bad. Svangaric tries his powers. While under the mercurial spell she sings so well everyone is held and enraptured.

Svangaric arranges a concert to make her debut. Frilby enters, but cannot sing. Svangaric tries to make her sing, but she fails, but his power is waning. He hurries away to the city power house to absorb more of the deadly current, only to find the engineer on the look-out.

Frilby's young lover having watched Svangaric on a previous trip to the city, is bribed by Svangaric not to allow Svangaric in, and to stop the dynamo at 9 o'clock. Svangaric rushes madly back to the theater, but everything is in an uproar. Her powers are gone. Frilby's lover jumps upon the stage takes her in his arms and rushes out.

THE FINAL PAYMENT (Two Parts—May 30).—The cast: Richard Ayres (L. C. Shum); Helen (Helen Weston); Mrs. Bates (Benton (Velma Whitman)); Douglas Benton (Melvin May); The Burglar (George Routh). Also music by Maude Thomas. Directed by Leon D. Kent.

Richard Ayres, a young clerk, gives his butterfly wife, Effie, a new bungalow. Effie is invited to an afternoon party by her rich friend, Mrs. Benton, and takes the money given her for the party and indulges in a game of bridge. Effie is surprised to learn that they are playing for money, but with foolish pride, pays what she owes, although it take all her savings. Mrs. Benton slips the money in her purse. In the purse is a pendant which Mr. Benton has that day given to Mrs. Benton because she kept a dinner engagement with her husband at the country club, and in her hurry leaves her front door ajar.

Effie tries to rest in the park, and discovers that she has left her scarf at the Benton home. She returns for it, and finding the door open, enters. She calls for Mrs. Benton, and receiving no answer, gets her scarf from the bedroom. There she discovers the money. It is a struggle with temptation, but she finally succumbs and puts the purse in her bosom. She then goes to the room to get her impression that burglars have broken in. Then she goes home. A burglar watches her from the window.

Effie is horrified to find that the purse contains not only the money but the pendant. She tries to find the dress, but the burglar has come. He notices her agitation, and the feigns illness. That night the burglar enters Effie's room and steals the purse. He is chased by a policeman, and throws the purse under shrubbery in the park. The next morning, Ayres shows his wife the paper which gives an account of how the burglar stole the money home. Effie is agitated. She goes to her room and finds the purse gone. Her husband telephones her to tell her to come to the money with him, but will be home promptly at noon.

Effie wanders to the park. A child finds the purse under the shrubbery. After a little persuasion, the child gives her the purse. Effie's better self then awakens, and she determines to do the right thing. She takes a clean breast of everything. But her courage falls her, and she sends a newsboy with the purse instead of the money. She waits for the recovery. Effie goes home to await her husband. He enters and she is about to confess all as she sees him going to the bank to get the money, when there comes a ring at the door. She opens it and there is Mrs. Benton's maid with a note. Effie opens the envelope feverishly and reads the letter. The note states that Mrs. Benton knows that Effie's position is not such that she can afford to lose the sum of money. She offers to return the money the day before, but had forgotten to do so. Effie goes to her husband, and with a glad heart tells him of the money. "Here it is! Haven't I taken good care of it?"

THE CODE OF THE HILLS (Three Parts—June 1).—The cast: Jim Lane (Melvin May); Matt Lane (Millard Wilson); Mrs. Lane (Adele Bront); Judge Cary (Bird Hopkins); Robert Emerson (Robert Emerson); Lucy Payton (Lucy Payton); Grace Caldwell (Evelyn Page); Nan—the daughter (Lucy Payton). Written by Millard Wilson. Directed by Harry Edwards.

Robert Emerson, a rising young District Attorney, is ordered to the mountains for his health. While hunting one day he accidentally wounds Nan, Lane's adopted daughter of Mrs. Lane, and a love affair springs up. Nan is loved by Jim Lane, the leader of the Lane clan, who, with his younger brother, Matt, is jealous of the "furriner." The girl loses her heart to the stranger and after an impetuous wooing a wedding takes place.

Back in the city, the mountain girl soon feels the difference between her husband's friends and herself. She is a human being, and her mistakes embarrass her husband and his lack of patience starts a coolness between them. Unintentionally she is a human being, and her assistance Emerson was seeking, and the breach between husband and wife widens, until finally stung by the realization of her position, she turns to the mountains not telling Robert of her approaching motherhood.

The baby girl arrives at Nan does not recover and she dies. Emerson constantly calls for her husband. Believing his presence might pull her through, Lane travels to the city and forces Emerson to go to his wife. They arrive too late. Nan has died, exacting a promise from Mrs. Lane not to tell her husband of the arrival of the child. Emerson is left alone and ignorant of his parentage. Back in his home, he realizes Nan's true worth and his own shortcomings, and devotes himself entirely to his profession.

The daughter, Nan, grows to girlhood, ignorant of the truth. She is in love with her "Uncle Jim and Uncle Matt" and one day insulted by a member of the opposite clan she tells them about it. Her father, Matt, is killed. Jim is arrested for the murder, and through the strange workings of fate the girl, Nan, is taken to the city to face to face at the trial, Emerson being the Judge. Lane is found guilty and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary. The news of the conviction is conveyed to the hills and Nan filled with rage and hate against the man who sentenced her "uncle Jim," starts to the city. But the "furriner" who has also come to the city, where, seeking out Emerson, he confesses to the murder of Powell, explaining the circumstances. The Judge immediately writes the Governor, requesting Lane's pardon, when Nan enters and is about to carry out the threat and kill Emerson when Matt explains the relationship between the two.

PICKLES AND DIAMONDS (June 3).—The cast: Adolph Pfeiferschnitzel (Francis Joyner); Louisa Pfeiferschnitzel (Florence Williams); Dan Dill (Dillon); Della Elliott (Lena). Written by Dave Reed. Directed by Clay M. Greene.

Clay M. Greene, proprietor of the once prosperous Peerless Pickle Emporium, finds his business on the verge of failure. Consultation with the attorney results in the decision that the only remedy to avoid ruin is to find a rich husband for their daughter, Lena, and inveigle him into buying a half interest in the Pickle business. Lena protests, but she sees father's bank book showing a cash balance of $10,000, and approves of the plan. Father agrees to place Lena on exhibit as the daughter of the "Peerless Pickle King," hoping to attract the desired rich husband. They finally become established in sumptuous quarters in Atlantic City.

Conspicuous among the guests of the hotel is a diamond field, who poses as a wealthy vast diamond fields in South Africa, but who is merely a fortune hunter there on the same mission as Lena. Attracted at once by Lena's striking appearance, he immediately lays plans to annex himself to the old man's money. He tells the hotel that he has been invited to the meeting. Father, fooled by Elliott's appearance and talk, thinks he has landed the money and so does all that is possible to hasten the match. But the pace finally becomes too speedy for father, his money giving out, and he suddenly returns with his flock to their city home. Elliott follows.

One night Elliott decides that the time is ripe for his coup. He has been waiting for some of his coin so decides to sell him an interest in his business for the paltry sum of $10,000, and adds to the deception that father has devised the same scheme at the same time and for the same amount of money. He then adds to the deception that father has just received an order for a million picks. Elliott, not to be outdone, boasts that he has just filled an order for a million diamonds. Father, fooled by Elliott's hurriedly signs a check for Elliott, expecting his money in return but Elliott assures him that the sale is obligatory. When the steamer arrives bringing his draft from London. Father is suspicious after Elliott leaves, and asks him to ask them for the full amount, but the president angrily upbraids him. Finding the check "N. G." Elliott returns to leave with his father with violence for trying to cheat him.

Lena, meanwhile, having called at the office to tell father that Elliott's father should have fide large order he has just received, promises to make good, and tells him to take Lena to the party. He tells her to go with money. Elliott replies, "The steamer has been sunk by a German submarine." Father glad to lose his money for the German cause promises Elliott a half interest in his business for a wedding present, and tells him he may perhaps make a good pickle salesman.

John Stewart is greatly in love with his wife. That she danced twice with Richard Noel, fiance of a girl friend, Guilbert Allen, while the four were together at a party, does not matter. However, next day he invites his wife to take lunch with him downtown as a peace offering. She pleasantly accepts the pleading. Undisposed, Guilbert calls to exhibit flowers sent her by Roger and persuades her to meet him at lunch. John is almost in a rage. He goes to the place to locate him to include him in the party. He happens to drop into the same cafe just as Guilbert comes in. He sees Mrs. Stewart and Roger seated at the table.

Only the return of the girl erases his sudden fury. But the girl is not to be seen. He has been eradicated from Stewart's make-up. The day following the girl again visits Mrs. Stewart to tell of a lovers quarrel. She offers attempts to arrange matters. She dresses the younger woman in one of her prettiest frocks and phones Roger to come to her for a moment. Crowsed wires put Stewart on the line and he is livid with rage. He rushes home and seeing Guilbert in the room, he rushes in the arms of Roger. In the room beyond, point a revolver at them. His wife rushes in before he shoots.

The young couple are unaware of the action. John Stewart, however, is not so unaware. He averted tragedy caused by his ungovernable jealousy, has learned his lesson and his wife is content.

The cast: Richard, Angela's fiance (Richard Travers); Angela (Angela Travers); George (George Travers); Bryant (Bryant Travers); John, a bird vendor (John Cooney).

It was quite natural that Angela and Richard should be engaged. They were both sweet hearts since childhood. Angela, who loved nature, purchases a canary from a bird vendor. When she discovered the bird to be blind, she seeks out the vendor. He explains that all birds are blinded purposely as they sing better thus. She becomes furious and has the bird arrested. Her brother, George, an attorney, prosecutes the case and the vendor is severely punished. Then fate took a hand. The day was set for the wedding. Everything was in readiness, and the vendor is in the eyesight. Would Richard forget he had asked her to become his wife? She was blind—never see light again. But she found herself strangely happy with the canary as her only companion.

Richard's ardor had cooled of late. But one evening he was at her home playing chess and found her. She stole softly down the stairs and found her way to the piano. When the music reached Richard's ears he went to her and said and said, "It is I who am blind; I love you."

days past. Clara examines the coat, then sits gazing at it, lost in perplexed meditation. Finally she rises, packs the coat, puts on her wraps, goes out and pawns the coat.

That night at dinner, Clara hands her husband, Walter, a pawn ticket, explaining to him the circumstances and asking him to look into the matter. The next morning, Clara amounts to anything. The following afternoon Clara makes a casual inquiry in regard to the ticket. The next day she calls to find out it, but will drop into the pawn shop and look it up. However, he does not mention the matter next evening on his return from work. Clara, however, is not satisfied with this shopping expedition, and calls at her husband's office with a request for some money. When he declines, she makes a second request he to get the money for him. With a superior air, Nellie calmly gets up from her desk, walks to the door and summons her clerk, who gallly bedecked in the uniform of a messenger. Mr. McCall continues turning over the papers on his desk, wholly unconscious of the fact that his wife has just been up to his neck in the possession of the stenographer. Clara says nothing, but she registers a vow that the next morning she will have her Friend Husband.

TWO MOTHERS (Two Parts—June 1).—The cast: Richard Angus (Alfred Allen); Dick, his son (Gordon Griffith); Nina Angus, his wife (Virginia Southern); Violetta Andree (Dorothy Davenport); Violetta's Second Husband (Emory Johns). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by Lloyd Carleton.

The boy was a twelve-year-old edition of his father. The man was an invalid, and the boy's stepmother was an opera singer. Everything depended upon her securing a contract with the Grand Opera Company. When she returned home after the first trial, she told her husband that she had a rival—a woman who could sing much better than she; and he told her to go to bed, she told her husband who the woman was. Veron, the rival singer, was no other than Violetta Andree, the first wife of Richard Angus and the mother of his boy Dick.

Late that evening, Violetta called upon Mrs. Angus, determined to have her boy back. She offered the wife any inducement, even going so far as to promise not to sing, and thus permit the wife to secure the engagement; but the wife refused, believing all that her husband had told her of how the other woman had wrecked his life and left him with the boy.

of how the husband drank heavily, how she supported him for several years, and how the husband had been unfaithful to her. She had a band, and of how her first husband had mistreated her. Mrs. Angus understood their friendship. But Mrs. Angus realized what she had done for the boy, the mother of the boy, and how she had helped him. His own mother would now have over him.

The next evening in her dressing room, Victoria was surprised to receive a card from Mr. R. Angus. The card was from the boy to show him in. A boy of twelve years, in a somewhat worn evening suit, stood before her. She looked at him and then at the card. The boy pleaded for his mother; and slowly the woman drew the truth from him, realizing that for the first time that the boy believed his mother. She took the card and found it was a worn and faded photograph of his mother—her own picture when she was a young girl. She bade him return to his mother, and told him that she would write to her and tell her of them. When the boy was gone, she sent the manager word that she was ill and would not appear. She then wrote to her mother, Mr. Angus, and advised him to send for Nina.

THE SILENT MAN OF TIMBER GULCH (Two Parts—May 30).—The cast: The Man (Robert Leonard); His Wife (Ella Hall); The Stranger (Marc Robbins); His Granddaughter (Ella Hall). Written and produced by Robert Leonard.

Like a wounded animal seeking the cover of the woods, the man had come to Timber Gulch. Taking possession of an abandoned cabin, he had lived a lonely existence. He was never known to say a word to the other inhabitants, keeping his business to himself and his queer actions had become the subject of speculation among the natives. At other times his nature would seem to change and the sound of a gun shot would have a strange meaning for him. He had been known to trace the sound of the shot, to follow the wraith that ran from the hands of the hunter.

One day a stranger and a child arrived in the camp. The boss of the camp meets the stranger and it turns out that he and the stranger are old friends. They talk of old times and the boss asks his friend about the child. The friend tells him that the child is his grandchild and that several years before a stranger had drifted into the home town, and after a rapid fire wooing had married his daughter. He was liked by all who knew him, but after the marriage the young husband got into bad habits.

At first his home life was happy, but the husband became addicted more and more to drink. It was an easy step from drink to gambling, and the wife from had to worse. In the meantime a child was born, and she was the bright spot in the mother's life. One night, while the husband is at the dance hall, one of the girls flirts with him and arouses his passions. He goes home, and the husband and the lover is killed by the husband. The husband escapes, and that is the last that is heard of him. Meanwhile the little wife grows old and feeble, and she is alone. The baby girl is left in the old man's hands to raise as best he can. He finishes the sad story and the boss tries to comfort him. They go out to find the little child, but she is missing.

The child has wandered on into the woods and becomes lost. All join in a frantic search for her, but can find little trace. The child is found by the old man, who has been looking for a cabin among the trees. She stumbles inside and falls on the bunk asleep. The silent man has wandered outside and, returning, sees the child. He is struck by the remarkable resemblance to his dead wife. He clasps her in his arms, and, when she awakes, tells her of his life and his wife. The stranger and the boss, hearing voices, come in. Recognition follows and the man is told of his wife's death, but finds comfort in the old man's memory and in the presence of his little girl.

ALL OVER A STOCKING (May 29).—The cast: Mrs. Newlywed (Ethel Lynn); Mr. Newlywed (Eddie Lyons); The Stenographer (Betty Compson). Written by Arthur Mackley. Produced by Al. E. Christie.

Mr. Newlywed's wife is extravagant. A notice of a bargain sale is to Mrs. Newlywed an invitation to buy, and she seldom allows one to pass without getting something.

One day she sees a notice of an extremely cut-rate bargain sale on stockings. She shows her husband the notice, stating that the guaranteed five dollar silk stockings will be sold for two dollars, and asking him for the money. Newlywed refuses her request. In spite of the fact that Mrs. Newlywed has several dozen pair of stockings, she insists on getting some at this bargain, and her husband leaves the house after the two have a fuss over the matter.

Arriving at the office, a stenographer requests leave of absence to go on an errand; and shortly after she leaves Newwyld sees the same ad that provoked the discussion between his wife and himself. He decides to surprise his wife by buying a pair of stockings and takes them home as a peace offering. Not to be denied, Mrs. Newwyld borrows the necessary funds from the maid and sets out for the bargain counter. The stenographer buys her stockings, and is so pleased with them that she puts them on before leaving the store.

Ethel sees her husband at the bargain counter and is happy, believing that he is getting the stockings for her. To be on the safe side, however, she purchases a pair of the stockings and sets out for the office. Eddie has returned to the office, and is met by a customer, who desires to see some property.

He leaves with the customer, and tells the clerk that should he not return before five, to close the office. He also leaves the package of stockings he has bought for his wife.

Finishing her shopping, Ethel returns to her husband's office and finds him missing. She determines to wait until he returns; and while waiting, discovers that the stenographer has on a pair of the bargain hose. Suspicion against her husband is aroused, and she awaits his return with injured feelings. When five o'clock arrives and Eddie does not return, the office is closed. Ethel is forced to return home alone. Shortly after she leaves the stenographer, while placing some letters on Eddie's desk, discovers the package of stockings, and, written upon it is a little note stating it is for his wife. The stenographer, thinking he has forgotten the package, determines to take it home. When Eddio arrives home that night he runs into a tornado in the person of his wife with her injured feelings. In the midst of her ravings, the stenographer comes in with the package, and Ethel, in her frenzy, tries to beat up the girl. She finally sees the note on the package, and her anger subsides. Explanations follow, and Eddio decides that never again will he try the bargain counter.

GOOD NIGHT NURSE (June 2) The cast J. Nutt (Neal Burns); Stella (Stella Adams); Billie (Billie Rhodes); Harry (Harry Rattenberry). Scenario written by Al Christie. Produced by Florence Davey.

Neal, while sitting in his room, notices an accident in the street and kindly goes to the man's rescue with his car and takes him to the hospital. The nurse assigned to the case, Billie, makes a great hit with Neal.

That night at the club Neal cannot get the pretty nurse out of his mind. He pretends illness, and is rushed off to the hospital, but, much to his disappointment, Stella is assigned to him. He throws pillows at her and altogether gives the impression that he is violent. A new nurse is put on the case, but when Neal discovers that it is not Billie, he again raves. Harry and Stella try to soothe him and Harry promises to give him another nurse but again Neal is disappointed, and the two start fighting.

He decides that he will leave the place. As they have taken his clothes he wraps a shirt around him and starts out. A chase follows through the ward which disturbs the patients very much. Billie is attending a woman in a private room. Harry and the others finally capture Neal and tie him in bed, but he manages to get loose again. In the hall he encounters one of the attendants and the two grapple. Another chase follows through the ward, and back into the hall. Neal knocking down a couple of cripples and Harry.

Neal finally manages to barricade himself within one of the rooms and escapes through the window, but his escape is soon noted and the attendants give chase. Neal hides in an apartment house, and from there runs to an alley. Billie, who has left her patient, is walking along the street when Neal spies her, and, oblivious to everything, rushes up to her and commences to talk. The attendants soon come on and they take him back to the hospital, where Billie is installed as his nurse.

BISON.

TAMMANY'S TIGER (Two Parts—June 3).—The cast: Jim Little (H. Griffith); Percy (Lee Hill); Arena (Marie Walcamp); Robt. Riot (L. C. Shumway); Spuds (E. N. Wallach). Written and produced by Henry McRae.

A committee of old-time Tammany leaders determine to revive the "Grand Old Party." The chairman of the committee, in an effort to make their emblem a feature of the revival, suggests they secure a stuffed tiger to be displayed during the reception. Jim Little, the former owner of a circus, sees a chance to make some money in securing an animal. Jim tells them that there is no such thing as a stuffed tiger in the country, but that he will get one and have it "fixed" so the animal will be perfectly harmless.

Jim has a daughter, Arena, who has a hobby for strange pets. Percy Peace, the son of the bitter political enemy, is an ardent admirer of the lady. Robert Elliot, who is caught love-making by Arena's father, who is a firm political friend of the father, is an admirer of Arena's. Shortly after Percy's arrival, the two friends are asked the question of securing a tiger with Robert. Robert suggests they visit a circus with quarters nearby. The tiger is secured, but the owner of the tiger. Percy has slipped back, but the tiger is talking confidentially, he overhears their plot. The tiger is released, but the owner of the tiger fixes matters with that gentleman. Robert and Little make arrangements for the tiger to take place, however, influenced by Percy's previous visit, the veterinary gives the tiger only

It is the custom of the Tammany party to have a parade each evening. The parade consists of several animal cages drawn by a huge elephant, and is in full swing passing the hall where the tiger is kept. The elephant stampedes, the cages are overturned, and the mammals scatter in the city streets. There is excitement among the citizens. The elephant becomes thirsty, and smelling water in a nearby house, runs his trunk through the window. Unfortunately, the animal is so excited that he would take a bath. She suddenly feels the water receding from about her, and upon turning around sees the elephant's trunk. When she becomes hysterical the elephant grab her with his trunk and jerks her out of the window.

In another part of the city a bunch of women are trying on gowns. Tampana, Alice and Jack is taken from the burning cabin. A doctor is hastily summoned, and pronounces the burns very serious. Too late Frances realizes that it is Jack she loves. Downstairs the guests are waiting for the bridal couple to appear. Then comes a telegram from Gliman's daughter stating that if Frances cares to see Jack alive, she must come at once. Quickly she tears off her trousseau, and, doing up her hair, rushes away from her hysterical mother, bursts through the astounded wedding guests—and reaches the railroad station. The doctor states that a man in Jack's condition, especially when he does not care to live, has no chance, but at this juncture Frances arrives, and when Jack realizes that she is his wife, his attitude changes and he survives.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, No. 36 (May 17). The Yosemite National Park, the pride of the Department of the Interior, and the pictures presented in this release are official and show the care with which the park, the animals and the natural landmarks are being looked after. The pictures were taken by a government cameraman, and are obtained by Gaumont through special arrangement. The beautiful scenery, the wonderful water falls, the magnificent natural grandeur, and the unequalled animal preserve are all shown. The richness of the landscape has been admirably caught by the lens of the camera. This release is an amplification of the number of times as it was found that it was impossible to do the vast subject justice in a half reel.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, No. 37 (May 24).—This release takes the spectator to the port of Georgia and the second largest city of the State. Savannah is one of the most important cities of the rapidly developing South and it has an extensive export and coastwise trade. It has many diversified industries and manufactures extensively. The Telfair Academy of Arts and Sciences is the pride of the city and contains a collection of casts, paintings and art objects that have historical value. All of the interesting points of Savannah are faithfully pictured in this release. "Nosey Ned and His New Stray Lid" is Harry Conover's contribution for this issue of the split reel. Ned's hat gets into endless difficulties and so does Ned.

AMERICAN.

REPAID (Two Parts—May 22).—The cast: Jack Hardin (Edward Coxen); His Father (Harvey Clark); His Mother (Louise Lester); Harriet Lawrence (Lizette Thorne); Norman (Harriet George Field); Jasper Wade (Charles Newton).

Jack Hardin, the black sheep of his family, returns after an absence of five years. He remains a moment motionless and then goes on into the house. He looks into the library, and sees a figure at work before his father. He enters the room, but the figure slips out before Jack can reach him. Jack crosses to the door and reaches in to see what is happening. As he does so, his father working late in his private study of the library, enters. Jack endeavors to explain, but his father answers more and more excited. The accusation follows and Jack answers with an emphatic denial. Their voices arouse his mother. She sees the situation and begs her husband's mercy, but the old man is unrelenting. Jack, feeling the injustice of the accusation slips upstairs to his own room and throws a few personal belongings in a bag. Meanwhile, his brother, Norman, arrives and learns the cause of the trouble. As Jack leaves Norman realizes that his father's field is open to him. A vision of Harriet Lawrence, whom he has loved as a rival to Jack, comes before him. Forgiving the injustice of it, he feels a bit of satisfaction that Jack is out of the way. Jack, who is now by the outside gate, decides to see his mother one again.

Going to the window he raps softly on the window of the room in which his mother is seated. She sees him and goes to the door. Then his father appears and orders him away. Again his mother intervenes and this time with success. His father relents, and all is forgiven.

Sitting alone with Harriet in the garden, as her home Norman proposes, but as happened before, Harriet refuses him. She confesses it is the thought of Jack which keeps her from accepting Norman. He promises her that if he is her promise that if she does not hear from Jack within the year she will marry him. When Norman reaches home he is greatly astonished to learn that his brother has been taken back.

Jack goes to work in his father's office. Harriet, Sr., and his partner, Jasper Wade, are the sole owners of a prosperous mercantile company. Norman has been with them a number of years and it is Harriet's intention to buy a place in the firm for him. Accordingly he gives Wade his note for a part of the interest, which he turns over to Norman. The note in-dictates that Hardin is short of ready money and Wade determines to block business to such an extent that Hardin will be unable to pay off the note out of the returns from the company. Jack's inquiries as to how Harriet is getting along, for he knows if they meet again Harriet will immediately accept Jack. So the first time Jack speaks of her to her mother he tells him confidentially that she has promised to marry him. This is to Jack the last blow.

At last the fact that Hardin, Sr. is in trouble becomes known to Jack. He finds out that Wade has deliberately caused the business to shrink in order to force his father out of it with the note as a lever. Jack has kept away from Harriet and she has accepted this to mean he no longer cares, consequently his acceptance of Norman. Their wedding invitations are sent out.

Jack overhears the conversation between his father and his mother, in which his father confesses his inability to meet Wade's note. It will, he says, result in his withdrawal from the firm for his note now, based on current earnings, would represent more than his share is worth. Jack waits until his mother is out of the room and then enters to his father. Jack explains what he has learned about the conditions under which Wade has been handling the business. His father waits until he has finished, then asks him what he means. Jack tells him he should repudiate the check. His father sneers at him. Morning comes and Jack is ready to leave. He tells his mother he is going until noon. It is Saturday. As his father and Norman leave Jack seeks Wade in his private office and tells him that he has come to redeem his father's note. Wade is disappointed, but has to accept. Jack tenders him his personal check for an amount in excess of the value of the note.

Home again in his own room he slowly packs up a few belongings and leaves a note for his mother. Jack boards the train, leaves, and out a regret except for his mother. Back home she finds the note and reads it heartbroken.

The following morning comes and Wade visits the bank. There the check is refused. Jack has not even an account there. He returns to the office and confronts Hardin. The note is gone and the check is worthless. Wade tells him his gravest fears. It is what he thought all along, the black sheep has gone wrong again, but as Wade leaves he remembers that Harriet is removed from his shoulders, he can repay as he wishes, his worry is over. He breathes a sigh of relief and then sees a glimmer of light—perhaps, after all, the black sheep was not so black.

THE RELEASE OF DAN FORBES (Two Parts—May 29).—The cast: Dan Forbes (William Stowell); Alice Forbes (Helene Rosson); Piper Stark (Harry Von Meter); Von Moran (Harry McCabe); Jim Corbin (Perry Banks).

The flickering flame of manhood flashes long enough in the breast of "Piper" Stark to prompt him to clear Dan Forbes of the charge of murder and to place the stamp of virtue on the brow of Alice Forbes. Nearing the end of his prison term, Dan Forbes is filled with tender thoughts of the little wife he left behind. He is wondering if she will be there—if she has remained true to him.

Wearied at the glove counter of a department store, Alice, his wife, is beset with the double danger of poverty and sin. She is held astoringly before her face by "Piper" Stark, who tries by every argument and bribe to lure her from her allegiance to her prisoner husband.

By good behavior Dan saves several months on his term, and on his release goes back to look for Alice. He goes up to the police cage to enter the department store where she works, and wanders in a saloon. Unknown to him "Plick" Moran, the man who turned the state's evidence that sent him to prison, is also in the room. During the bartender's momentary absence, "Plick" is murdered and because of Dan's friendship toward him, his circumstantial evidence points to him and he flees. The evening newspapers accuse him of the murder.

Unaware of this, Alice is again approached by "Piper" Stark, whom she endeavors to avoid. As she rushes into a room, she is suddenly finds her husband hiding. There is an affecting scene in which she falls upon his breast with all her old love and confidence renewed.

"Piper" appears, and Dan hides for safety in a closet. "Piper" renews his attentions to Alice—handles her roughly, and in a flash of manhood, declares that he saw the murder committed, that "Dan is innocent and that Dan's wife is straight."

Brusled and bleeding from his severe beating at the hands of Dan, "Piper" recovers only consciousness for a moment and in a flash of manhood, declares that he saw the murder committed, that "Dan is innocent and that Dan's wife is straight."

MUTUAL MASTERPIECE.

THE MAN FROM MANHATTAN (American Play Parts—June 29). The cast: Willoughby Whipple (Wm. Stowell); Clara Whipple (Whitely); Virginia Winters (Khea Mitchell); Her Invalid Mother (Jo Taylor); Squire Bonjames (Horton Jackson); Squire's Cousin (Warren Ellsworth); Ed. Wheelan (Otto Nelson); "Daddy" Eggleston (Perry Banks); Hiram Blodgett (George Baily); and Julia (Harry Edmondson and William Tedmarsh).

Willoughby Whipple, son of a New Yorker, inherits his all in a rundown country newspaper, after his father's death. He is writing poetry, instead of attending to business. The paper turns out to be a "lemon," but Willoughby is determined to make a success of it. With the assistance of Virginia Winters, a practical young woman of high ideals, and "Daddy" Eggleston, a country doctor whose primary enemy is drink, "The Bugle" finally shows signs of coming to life. Then, Squire Barton, who has announced himself as a candidate for mayor, and who owns the building in which "The Bugle" office is located, calls on Willoughby, and offers him rent-free if he will agree to boost the Squire's candidacy.

In the next issue of "The Bugle," Willoughby denounces the Squire a grafter, and exposes his attempt at bribery. Meanwhile, Willoughby has protected Virginia from the unwelcome advances of Spence, the Squire's son, and has gained his country. As a result, the Squire calls on Willoughby and orders him to get out of his building. When Willoughby goes in search of a new location, he discovers that the Squire owns every other available store building in the town. Not to be beaten, Willoughby moves into a private building, and later, in a public encounter, threatens to get even with the Squire, and defeat his candidacy for mayor.

To get Willoughby out of the way, the Squire plans to set fire to the old Bugle building, and to get Willoughby's threat as evidence that he committed the crime for revenge. The night that the Squire plans to commit the outrage, "Daddy" Eggleston goes on a spree, and through force of habit wanders back to the old Bugle office, now an empty store room, and falls asleep on an old abandoned sofa. Later, he catches the Squire in the act of saturating the premises with coal-oil, and in a struggle that follows is thrown down stairs. Regaining consciousness, "Daddy" discovers the building on fire, and drags himself into an old vault to escape the flames. The building burns down, and Willoughby, reminded of his threat to get even with the Squire, is arrested, charged with the crime.

While an angry mob clamors about the jail, Virginia telegraphs Willoughby's father, who comes for him. The mob is broken into the jail and are about to drag Willoughby forth, when a tramp looking about over the ruins, discovers "Daddy" Eggleston, and sends him the old brick vault. Daddy, who has died of suffocation, has left a chalked message on the vault wall, implicating the Squire. The discovery exonerates Willoughby, and the Squire and his son, Spence, meet with their just deserts.

The citizens of the town nominate Willoughby mayor in the Squire's stead, and are carrying him aloft on their shoulders, with shouts and cheers, when Willoughby's speed brings him home. When Willoughby announces his engagement to Virginia, the old man is so proud of his boy that he promises to build him the finest newspaper office in the state for a wedding present.

raise, he rides furiously to the dam and accuses Carr, whom he holds responsible, of the mob to scorn. Wilton rides to the shore and hopes that he may invoke the law, but the sheriff and his posse find him almost helpless. Murder comes into his heart almost before he thinks of the ruin that is coming to himself and the ranchers, who have pioneered and have made the desert to bloom like a rose and now are threatened by ruin.

Mary's father deeply fears Carr, because his land is mortgaged to him, and when the enraged ranchers form a mob to take the law into their own hands, he joins the faction that comes to Carr's defense. He ends himself a rancher who has toiled for years on his little piece of land is a Mexican. He joins the mob, and in the deadly battle that ensues, he and Mary's father are killed.

Robert in the meantime has refused to join the mob, believing that Carr is the better way invoked. After the battle, the Mexican woman, Pedro's wife, goes mad with grief and despair. She swears vengeance on her husband's dead body. She goes to Carr's cabin and shoots him. In the morning Robert goes to plead with Carr. He, to be sure that his own passion of soul does not master him, empties his gun and leaves it near the house. This, with the many quarrels and the refusal to the rancher, do not do this boys, there is a better way, forms a chain of circumstantial evidence that connects him with the killing. In the meantime, the Mexican woman has gone into the desert, realizing that another life is coming, she returns. Mary finds her and nurses her and it is through this chain of events that Robert is saved. At last hands down a decision and peace and love at last reign in the valley.

BEAUTY.

THE COMET'S COME-BACK (May 31).—The cast: Professor Pedesque (John Stepping); Fuller Speed (John Sheehan); Claire (Carol Holloway); Hess E. Tate (Dick Ross).

Fuller Speed flirts with the law when he tries to make eyes at a fair damsel nearby. But she was one of the chaste variety and straightaway called over a bluecoat to rout the fresh young man. Fuller did not mind the law, for he made his getaway and happened to stroll into a lecture hall where Professor Pedesque, aided by his pretty daughter, Claire, gives a lecture on "Speed-Speed." The Professor told his listeners that the world was speeding itself to death and unless it stopped shortly there would be no world in 1926. Fuller is more interested in Claire than he is in the lecture, so sticks around.

Hess E. Tate, Claire's sweetheart, anxiously awaits her coming at the Professor's home. When the young man comes, he tells the Professor takes his telescope and scans the sky. Suddenly he darts back in amazement. High in the blue sky is a strange comet. The Professor takes a withered parchment from the safe and anxiously reads it. He finds that Hoe Kem, an ancient astronomer, in the year 910 had discovered a comet, which he claimed would return at the end of every thousand year period. The gases emanating from the comet slowed up the world to the extent that every moving body barely crept along.

The maid's call for dinner interrupts the Professor's discourse. After the meal, the young folks go for a stroll into the garden, and the Professor to his "oxygen studio" to watch the meteoric comet. The Professor claims that the earth is being slowly mechanical beings. As they watch they rejoice in being safe from the effects of the comet, but their safety is not long-lived. The depressing air grews livid the studio and the Professor rushes to his dial to find the trouble. He returns and informs the young folks that the machine has used up only enough oxygen for three and that one of them must go.

Fuller and Hess look at each other and realize that one of them must go into the world of "slow-down." Lots are drawn and

TRIANGLE

PLAYS

H.B. Warner

in

The Market of Vain Desire

May 28th is the release date for this latest TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAY in which H. B. Warner appears. For years a prominent figure on the speaking stage he has now achieved an enviable position in motion pictures and in this latest play he more than repeats the success he made in such other TRIANGLE PICTURES as "The Raiders" and "The Beggar of Cawnpore."

He was a young clergyman and she an American heiress. Her mother wanted the girl to marry a Count for his title and position, and the Count wanted to marry her for her American dollars, so a match was planned that would have wrecked the happiness of three lives.

Should a young girl consider matrimony for the sake of a title? That's the vital question in this TRIANGLE PICTURE, and it's a question that is of deep interest to every motion picture patron, whether young or old. A father or mother will put their daughter in the place of the girl on the screen, or the daughter will consider what she would do under the same circumstances.

THE number of American girls who sell themselves or are sold by scheming mothers merely for the sake of a title or foreign position is ever increasing. Nine times out of ten the girls repent in later years and look back with sorrow at their happy youth. Whose fault was it?

H. B. Warner had to take a mighty radical step to convince the girl and her mother that they were making a big mistake. Few young men would have dared to do what he accomplished. But when your patrons have seen the last of this play they'll believe he did right.

De Wolf Hopper in "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan"

Then the other TRIANGLE DRAMA will feature another prominent stage star—De Wolf Hopper. His previous TRIANGLE PLAYS were "Sunshine Dad," and "Don Quixote."

"Mr. Goode, the Samaritan," is a real comedy drama that gives Hopper every opportunity to display his great ability as a laugh-maker, and in it he more than lives up to the reputation he attained on Broadway. For your patrons to appreciate this play they'll have to see it themselves.

Are You an Exhibitor?

Have you carefully considered the advantage of running TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAYS? Have you secured the necessary information in regard to terms, releases, etc.? If not, do not wait, but send in the attached coupon. Possibly we can be of service to you, and there's no obligation on your part.

the tension increases. Fuller draws the long straw and is forced to accept the inevitable. He is launched into the air through one of the portholes in the studio. Claire watches with tear-dimmed eyes.

Fuller "floats" to his feet and after many slow and sad wavings of the "au revoir" type slowly moves into the sphere of the "gas" world, while in the oxygen studio, immune from the action of the gas, comes, sadly watch him drift into oblivion.

VOGUE.

SHY THIRTY CENTS (May 30).—The cast: A Country Boy (Rube Miller); His Sweetheart (Madge Kirby); King of the Gypsies (Arthur Tavaras); His Dirty Workers (Edna Shaw and Charles Evans). Scenario written by Thomas Delmar. Produced by Rube Miller.

Rube has a sweetheart, Madge, who is going to marry in the near future. One day when they are taking a walk, they see a gypsy man being, and Rube interferes and saves her. Later the Chief of the Gypsies sees Madge and has her kidnapped, sending her father a note telling him that if he does not come across with the sum of one dollar, that his daughter will kick the bucket.

The father gathers all of his savings, which is only seventy cents, and takes it to the Chief. That is not enough, and Madge is condemned to be tied to a tree and blown up with a keg of dynamite. Rube tries to save her, but is rolled and tied up himself. However, the old hag releases him, and he pleads to be allowed ten minutes to return with the thirty cents that is shy. The Chief tells him that he will, but he lights the fuse as soon as Rube is out of sight.

Rube has his money buried six feet deep underground. He digs it up and buries back. He arrives just in time to throw the keg of dynamite after the fleeing gypsies and blows them up. They land in a hole that he has dug his savings from, so Rube just shovels the dirt in on top of them, and lives happy ever after.

SAWDUST LOVE (June 2).—The cast: Simpkins (Billy Armstrong); Jigger (Tommy Hayes); Nina (Ollie Otway); Bigguts (Carl Lang); Tonno (Ed. Roberts).

Simpkins and his friend, Jigger, are awakened one morning by the sound of much hammering and shouting. Arising from their soft bed in a fence corner they are surprised to see a small traveling circus getting ready for business near by. Curiosity leads to the scene. The most attractive object to Simpkins is Nina, daughter of the owner, Bigguts. Simpkins also loses his heart, and he loves her more than a friendly love. Then and there he decides to be nearer this charming girl. He asks Bigguts for jobs for himself and Jiggers, and they are employed. Simpkins gives more attention to Nina than to his work. Tonno, the clown and strong man, who is himself in love with Nina, notes this, informs Bigguts, and Simpkins and Jiggers are ordered off the lot. They take refuge in the fence corner; Simpkins in his misery ever sees the face of Nina.

Both manage to get into the night show without benefiting the box office. Next week, up in the stands, Simpkins is overjoyed when Nina appears to do her act. A mad rush over the spectators, and he lands in the front row. The disturbed spectators raise a strong protest. Nina, turning to see what the noise is about, observes Simpkins. Ah, she loves him! With outstretched arms she goes to him. The people demand her to go with her lover.

Bigguts and Tonno rush in and throw Simpkins and Jiggers out. Nina refuses to go on and returns to her dressing-room in tears. Simpkins, who has watched her from the other side, passes Nina's room and hears her sob. Under the canvas he goes; but his joy is short-lived, for father and mother enter. Father chases Simpkins and they run away into the big tent. Tonno has gone on with his act, but he has made a failure; spectators hiss him. Into the ring rush Simpkins and father. Simpkins does several stunts while being chased, and is vociferously applauded. Bigguts is amazed at his work, and offers him a job at his own price. Simpkins replies the price is Nina.

Here Tonno and mother raise a row, but Bigguts accepts the terms. Tonno demands revenge. Simpkins is doing a trapeze turn. Tonno cuts one of the ropes, but does not get out of the way quick enough, and Simpkins falls on him and lays him out. His act cut out for the night, Simpkins retires and is met in loving embrace by Nina. Suddenly Simpkins wakes up to find that he has been embracing Jiggers—and that it was all a dream.

FALSTAFF.

DISGUISES (May 29). The cast: Oscar (Claude Cooper); His Bride (Louise Emerald Bates); Conrad (Frank E. McNish).

When Oscar returned from his honeymoon with his beautiful bride, Conrad was jealously unhappy, for Conrad had been one of the authors she rejected. So when Conrad happened to read "Othello" he decided to cast the trustful Oscar as the Moor, and be himself a successful lago. The plotter's way was made easier by the sudden arrival of a man who Pearl introduced as "My Uncle Dave of Dakota." Oscar was suspicious of him from the first, and Conrad fanned the flames successfully. He tried to induce the "wronged husband" to inflict upon Pearl the fate that befell Desdemona. Oscar, who first showed signs of yielding, regained self-control, and simply said, "Sly upon my wife? Yes, 'til pillow her? No." So Conrad was to be content with an agreement to closely watch Pearl and any callers she might have.

Oscar and Conrad plotted their own detestable, and gained admission to the house in various disguises, but with uniform ill luck. First they were janitors, next painters, who damaged the place beyond repair, and finally plumbers. During this final appearance, "Uncle Dave of Dakota" appeared and the husband, from his place of hiding, saw him kissing his beautiful Pearl. Then he went for a pillow and tried to smother Uncle Dave, only to find he had made a terrible mistake for Uncle Dave was really an uncle and had called with a deed for a house and lot as his wedding present. After the way he was treated it is not surprising that he tore up the deed. In the meantime Conrad had been having all sorts of trouble as an amateur number. He nearly drowned in a tank, dropped the dumbwaiter and Oscar down the shaft while the unhappy bridegroom was trying to escape, and was landed in jail after a lively battle with a policeman. In court Conrad was sent to jail, but Oscar was set free after his wife had promised to "see he never did such things again."

All the same, Oscar was far from happy, and as he shook hands with Conrad before the latter was led to his cell, Conrad said enviously: "Lucky man! You are going to jail, but I, I am going home."

For Oscar knew he was in for a lively session with the angry Pearl.

THANHOUSER

THE NYMPH (Two Parts—May 30).—The cast: The Girl (Barbara Gilroy); Her Fiance (Robert Vaughn); The Artist (Thomas A. Curran); Girl's Aunt (Inda Palmer); Girl's Uncle (Arthur Bauer).

Strangers never came to their island home, and the girl lived there happily, "a child of nature." One day, however, a stranger did arrive. He was an artist, who was rowing past the island, and, struck by its beauty, decided to land. While on his tour of exploration he discovered a little mermaid bathing in the sea—the fisherman's little daughter. The girl, trusting to the absolute seclusion of the island, did not wear a bathing suit, and as the artist was so struck with her beauty of form that he decided to engage her as his model. On her way home when the artist overtook her and offered to pay her well if she posed for the painting "The Nymph." She hesitated, but the pleading of his offer the girl refused it and the artist was compelled to abandon his proposed picture, for he felt that no other model would be as satisfactory.

Several weeks later wealthy relatives of the girl came to the island, and induced her to return to her home with them to the city. There the girl was provided with handsome clothes and became a part of the society of the city. She met a wealthy young man with whom she fell in love, and promised to marry him. The artist, who was well known in the city, met the girl at her relative's home, and asked her to marry him. To his dismay she told him of her engagement. The girl thought that the artist was a gentleman, and would never mention the meeting at her uncle's island, but, spurred on by jealous rage the artist determined to have revenge.

When he invited her to attend an exhibition of his paintings she came to his studio with her aunt and uncle, and there she felt the brunt of a cruel revenge for upon the wall was displayed a painting of an unkind girl at the water's edge, called "The Nymph," and the face in the painting was her own. The artist told the girl's relatives that he and she had been very good friends when he visited the island, that she had posed for the painting willingly, and he had no idea she would object to its exhibition. The relatives knew that the girl and the man had met at her old home, and circumstantial evidence was so plainly against her that they refused to listen to her pleas of innocence, and requested her to leave their home.

The girl was heart-broken. When her sweetheart learned of her trouble he alone believed her story and went to the artist's studio to compel him to tell the truth. There he forced the artist to write a confession, saying that he had used another model for his picture shown in the painting, but to secure his revenge had made the face of the painting that of the girl who had rejected him. Worried to death by his fiancée's innocence the young man called upon her relatives, only to learn that she had returned to her home, and that he was resolved in her misery to forget even him, but he followed her to the wilderness and saved her. She was presently able to take her own life. Then she learned the deep, noble character of the man she had promised to marry and realized that by living with him and letting him make him happy, and so the "little nymph" forgot her troubles of the past in contemplating the happiness of the future.

FOX UNCLE SAM'S NAVY (Two Parts—May 25).—The cast: Uncle Sam (John L. Crowley); His Sweetheart (Kathryn Adams); Niece to Secretary of Navy (Louise Wright); Conspirator (John Lehnberg); J. L. Richards (Jere Austin).

An American admiral invented a new torpedo, which tests proved to be one of the most destructive projectiles ever invented. This new or torpedo boat destroyer, while out of range of a battleship's guns could launch this torpedo at the battleship and destroy its powerful antagonist. The invention made it possible for a small American fleet to defend the coast against a powerful squadron of vessels.

"We must secure the plans of this torpedo," the head of a forcing secret service said to Captain Rudolph, one of his trusted aides. In America the foreign officer appeared in the guise of an American naval officer, who had been reported killed in the Philippines islands several years before. Captain Rudolph looked like the missing officer and he accounted for his long absence by saying that he had been held prisoner by the Moros and had just escaped. He was welcomed back to the navy and assigned to a post on the Admiral's flagship.

As time passed, the member of the foreign secret service gained the confidence of the Admiral, and the love of the latter's daughter, but one person distrusted him—the niece of the Secretary of Navy. It seemed to her that she had met him when she was in Europe. One day a man who had served in an army abroad, met the naval officer, recognized him, and gave him the stiff military salute characteristic of the foreign army, receiving an answering salute before the officer realized he had betrayed himself. Then the naval officer decided to drop the act, and then she recollected how she had met him while she was abroad last summer.

Her first impulse was to inform the naval authorities and cause the officer's immediate arrest, and then knowledge that the admiral's daughter loved the guilty man caused her to stay her hand. She decided to tell "Captain Rudolph" that his identity was known, and permit him to make his escape before he had accomplished any mischief. It seemed that her merciful devotion was misplaced, for that evening she learned from the admiral that the plans of the torpedo had been discovered, and that several of the officers of the warship, including the man she knew to be Captain Rudolph, were under suspicion. She had discovered the man she married away the plans and knew where he had taken them. Should she denounce the officer, or should she try to secure the stolen documents and permit him to escape? Consideration for the admiral's daughter prompted her to adopt the latter course for not even the overwhelming evidence against her sweetheart could make the girl believe that he was guilty.

The two girls gained admittance to the headquarters of the foreign spies, and by a daring ruse gained possession of the missing documents, but before they could escape, one of the band who was a trusted member of the American secret service, arrived and exposed them. The spies decided to place the girls on a steamer bound for South America, to ensure their silence until their captors could escape from the country, but as this plan was about to be carried into effect, "Captain Rudolph" appeared and took charge of the situation. He did not seem to care at all for the open scorn with which the two girls regarded him, and coldly told his subordinates that he was himself sure that the two girls were safely placed on shipboard, but before he could leave the room with the girls a most unexpected message came over the telephone, which resulted in the spies making "Captain Rudolph" their prisoner.

Then the girls learned the truth about the mysterious officer. While "Captain Rudolph" had been in the foreign secret service for several years he really was the officer who had been reported killed in the Philippines, but the American government desired information concerning a powerful European government, and he succeeded in hoodwinking the foreign secret service, and succeeded in being sent to secure information concerning the new torpedo.

He was suspected at last and was made a prisoner in the hands of his country's enemies.

The girl he loved and her friend who had suspected him, bitterly regretted their suspicions, and they realized that he would probably pay for his bravery with his life, but they did not know that the house was surrounded by agents of the American government, who swarmed into the place a few minutes later and took the spies into custody. The arrival of the Admiral cleared up the mystery. The spies had not secured the plans at all, but merely blank paper which had been substituted for the real documents, to trap the spies for whom the government was searching for months, but it took "Captain Rudolph" to turn the trick. The admiral's daughter, who commented for his daring, but it did not seem to please him half so much as the fact that he was soon to wed the admiral's daughter, while for the naval secretary's niece, strange to say, she never was in love with the young officer, and was sincerely glad that he was to wed the girl of his choice.

then sends a note to Fleetwood telling him that Kendrick will offer him a large salary to travel for his firm. She urges her dance to accept the offer, and he does.

Kendrick, with a clear conscience, finally marries Ruth and makes her life miserable. She, in turn, proves most extravagant, and Kendrick tells her that her profligate ways must cease. In the time Blair returns from his trip and goes to Ruth. But he learns that she has wedded Kendrick and is proud of her choice. Kendrick is in the midst of a big deal in copper and Ruth tells his secrets to a rival firm, these people using the information to bring about his ruin.

Later in the day Ruth asks Blair to come to her home and there they learn of the forged letter that Mrs. Winchester sent to the young man. Kendrick returns home, a beaten man, while Fleetwood is in the house, and a violent altercation follows. Blair is injured, and before help arrives fires at his wife and her sweetheart. When the smoke clears away two bodies lie stretched out on the floor—dead. "Who's Guilty?"

LUKE'S LATE LUNCHES (Bohn—May 22).—Luke starts off as the proprietor of a bean foundry, where the gentle little flies mingle with the peaceful butter cakes. But they're the best butter cakes Luke feels no qualms for the flies' digestions. It does worry him, though, when the beard of one of his customers gets into the soup. Luke ties the beard about its owner's neck, and the old man Niagara's on. It worries Luke again when one of his customers insists on him by calling it cracked—when there's only a hair on it! The old dish rag, soaked and wrung out as occasion requires, is the source of all soup, though windy, and anon, a resigned bean is passed, to give the dish atmosphere. Of course, Luke can't get away with this stuff, and the picture ends in a scrap that is "enjoyed by all."

SAVING THE SHAD SUPPLY (Pathe—May 22).—This film is an official picture made for the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries and released by the Government approval. The shad, so famous wherever people eat, for well known roe and other succulent parts, is decreasing so rapidly along the Atlantic Coast, that commercial extinction is prevented only by the artificial hatching which the Bureau of Fisheries conducts. These pictures were made at the Government's principal shad hatchery, Albemarle Sound, N. C.

This picture shows how the shad is caught in gill nets, pound nets and seine nets. The fish culturist is shown selecting ripe shad from the catch, squeezing mature eggs from the females and fertilizing them by mixing them with a small quantity of milt from the males. The eggs are hatched in a jar, the fish swim out of the top of it and into waiting tanks by the outgoing current. The little shad then are removed from the tanks, taken out to sea and dropped overboard.

YUNNAN-FOU (Southwest China—On same reel as foregoing).—The picture shows Yunnan-Fou, the capital of the Province of Yunnan. It is a flourishing commercial city, and has a population of upwards of 100,000.

The market place is filled from daylight to dark with a busy crowd of merchants and buyers. Yunnan-Fou is a walled city, intersected by canals. The quaint East Gate is also shown. It is the principal entrance to the city.

Women dealers in silk rags are encountered on almost every street. Then the market for old iron, knick-knacks and jewelry and the shop of a thread merchant are pictured. Next we see Yunnanese horsemen who use sturdy ponies of great speed and remarkable powers of endurance.

The film ends with the picture of the women of Yunnan-Fou, the old Chinese women, care nothing how much they suffer provided they can make their feet small.

LEAP YEAR (Pathe—May 22).—This animated cartoon, which is the second of the Goldberg series, tells the story of a fourteen-year-old maiden who would have been more popular if all men were nearsighted. The maid is described as Miss Ophelia Faded-out, whose face has frightened all the children in the neighborhood, but who, nevertheless still hopes to "chloroform some poor simp into matrimony."

He gives orders to the janitor to hold a sack under the sidewalk and "wait for my future husband to drop into it." Then she rigs a contrivance to make the sack to be triggered by the unwary will drop through and be banged. But the men who pass are watched over by a special Providence and she is at last forced to the extremity of taking a tailor's dummy to the justice of the peace.

HOW TO BRING UP A CHILD (Pathe—On same reel as foregoing).—This picture is charming in that it shows a poly-pid kid in its both and funny in that it shows the child's toilette are ludicrously burlesqued in the subtleties which accompany it. We quote a few of them:

"Strong hands should be employed in giving the baby a rub-down. Rough treatment early in life will prepare the child for car crashes and other pleasures of later days." "If the child wants to wind its legs around its head, let it do so. It may develop into a contortionist and earn a good salary for you in your old age." "If the kid doesn't go to the contents of its bottle, don't worry. Biting the glass will help the shape of its mouth and make its sprouting teeth nice and loose." "The bright sunlight, of course, is the place to let the child take its nap. If the baby comes blind early in life, it won't mind it so much later on."

THE IRON CLAW NO. 14, "The Plunge for Life" (Feature—Two Parts—May 29).—The Laughing Mask, pursued by the police and suspected as being the perpetrator of the crimes committed by the Iron Claw, takes up his abode in a cave high up on the Palisades.

He discovered there later and has to flee. Margery is with him at the time, and together they jump over the cliff. The police find that Legat has also taken place to the cave, and that of the Mask, and he, too, makes the perilous jump to the river below. The Mask later goes to the Golden Gate house, and Margery and is discovered there by the police. He makes his escape and runs to a trolley car which is running along some distance off. Considering that he is driving off the car, the man and takes charge of the car. It jumps the track as it crosses a bridge and falls into the street below, a twisted, splintered wreck. The detectives, following the Mask, run up, but no trace of his body is found.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 4, "The Silent Shame" (Arrow—Two Parts—May 29).—In this picture we see Mrs. Hilliard married to a man who has ceased to love her. Their young daughter is kept at boarding-school. Mrs. Hilliard admires and is deeply loved by Bruce Kingston, a rising young author. Their relationship is of the purest. Gossip plays with their names and infuriates Hilliard. He casts his wife out, saying he will divorce her. Kingston says he will marry Mrs. Hilliard as soon as the decree is entered.

By the discovery of an unscrupulous attorney, Mrs. Hilliard is led to believe her husband has obtained a divorce when, as a matter of fact, he has not. Believing her husband has married Bruce Kingston. Of course this second marriage is bigamous. That is part of Hilliard's revenge. When it suits his further purposes, he tells her of the trick that has been played on her and she tells Kingston. She leaves Kingston and remains for years self-exiled in Europe.

When she returns it is to find her daughter grown and destined to a splendid theatrical career. The daughter is to be married to a new play of Kingston's. The two love each other devotedly. The daughter's stage name has hidden her real identity from Kingston. The mother-love is strongest, and Mrs. Hilliard does not reveal her past to her daughter nor does she tell her daughter about Kingston's exile in Europe.

But Hilliard does when he learns of the marriage of his daughter to Kingston. The revelation is so great that it drives him to his dire effects. The one-time triangular situation bred by divorce is affecting the lives of four people. "Who's Guilty?"

ICE (Mittenthal—May 29).—Our old friends Heinie and Louie are featured with the ice, or rather, on the ice. The picture is a study of rough ice riding. The cake of ice gets started on its downward path early in the story, but is captured by the ice men, and is taken back to its owner. A little lighter for an exercise, but then you can't melt your cake and have it. So the proprietress, a fascinating Mariuch, is content. She is the only content—she is actually breaking; for the gallant Heinie has appealed to her as a man whose place should ever be her ice house. Heinie doesn't mind being liked, but he never was clever on the ice, so he puts his partner Louie on the job while he melts the ice lady's heart. Mariuch's former sweetheart, then appears on the scene and with the aid of some companions, proceeds to cool Heinie's heart by tying him to a cake of ice and starting him down from the top of a high hill, for heaven knows where.

SIBERIA, THE VAST UNKNOWN, NO. 8 (Pathe—May 29).—The latest installment shows the 2,000 mile Kolyma River, at the end of the Siberian winter, frozen over with a mass of ice four feet thick. The river is three miles wide at the point shown. The scene is about June 1, the warm weather sets in, and the ice begins to break up and flow away. It usually takes about a month for the ice to melt in the river of ice. The first motor boat to ply the waters of the Kolyma in eight months—a mail carrier—is here shown.

The next scene shows the Russian officials at the town of Nijni Kolymsk awaiting the arrival of the mail. Then comes the picture of a Tartar, who has been living in Siberia as an exile for 28 years. During this man's exile he has brought up a family and has become richer. His daughter, also shown, is quite the most beautiful girl in Nijni Kolymsk. Various other interesting scenes are shown.

THE TOKIO EXPOSITION (Pathe—On same reel as foregoing).—The picture starts at the entrance to the exposition grounds in Ueno Park, a picturesque location on the shores of Lake Shinobazu. The lake divides the exposition grounds in two sections. The Tokio Exposition, like all other expositions, has a part devoted to attractively to the eye, comes a view of the entrance to the second section of the exposition. Then a panorama of the lake, showing the Palace of the City, one of the handsomest of the exposition buildings. The Chinese Pavilion and the Pavilion of the Islands are also shown. Another scene, this one a night picture, shows the exposition buildings, brilliantly illuminated, transforming the shore of the lake into a fairland.

THE LION AND THE GIRL (Keystone—Two Parts—April 30).—The cast: Joe Jackson, Claire Anderson, May Wells, Leo Morrison, Clarence Lyndon, Leo Kendall and Billy Hauber. Joe Jackson is engaged in his usual vocation avoiding toll when he becomes very angry. Routed from the monkey cage at the zoo, he goes to a nearby brook and finds a fishpole on the bank. He casts, but the hook never reaches the water. It takes hold of a scruffy bulby handbag in the lap of a woman who is dozing on a park bench. Joe reels in and examines the contents of the bag. He is looking over a costly watch when a policeman interrupts him and sends him on his way. The woman recovers her bag minus the watch.

Joe now goes to a show where they lend money and sell clothing and everything else so fine. He exchanges the watch for a gay outfit and departs through the window when he overhears a conversation about a stolen watch. It develops that the timepiece has been given to his wife by one of the partners in the shop. Joe is well on his way before the watch is discovered and goes to the zoo. He arrives just as one of the girl members of a party has been thrown from a swing into the cage of a raging lion. Joe goes over after her, routs the lion and lifts the girl to safety. The girl is Claire, daughter of the woman who lost the watch, and is stolen. In the party is the son of her father's partner. He loves her, but Joe is now her hero. He pines for a count and their engagement is announced.

The day of the wedding Joe appears without a ring and in haste father's partner comes from the store with one. He recognized Joe instantly as the man who had obtained the outfit for the store watch. The store that follows leads to the top of a skyscraper. Father and Joe fight at the top and the former drops to a lot of telephone wires below. In the end Claire is obliged to marry Joe. But she confesses that still wants to marry the man who confesses that he is only a tramp and departs, leaving her in the arms of Leo.

HER MARBLE HEART (Keystone—Two Parts—May 7).—The cast: Charles Murray, Louise Fazenda, Harry Booker, Frank Hayes and Wayland Stark.

Charles Murray, a neighbor of Booker, wants to marry the girl. He is a miser and he uses a mortgage to overcome the young woman's objections. Louise wants to wed Wayland, her father's hired man. She is frightened by the prospect of foreclosure of the mortgage and refuses to consent to the love match. A marriage of convenience is arranged, but this reveals a rude plot when Wayland falls heir to a small fortune. Booker opens the letter and reads the glad news and the hired man doesn't know why his emerald suddenly changes his mind and consents to the wedding of the farm hand and his pretty daughter.

Wayland Murray goes to the city and of affairs he demands an explanation. Booker shows him the letter. On the day of the wedding, Murray goes to the house of the miser, informing him that the first news was wrong; the fortune was left to another man with the same name. Giving it to a messenger, he starts for the Booker home with a minister, believing that his plot will be successful and that in the circumstances Booker will be glad to throw out the hired man's account of the neighbor in whose hands is the fatal mortgage.

But the messenger dawdles by the way and when Murray and the minister arrive the hall has been no cloud cast over the ceremony as planned. Murray goes in search of the messenger and they return to the city. The miser is in progress. Booker intercepts the telegram but refuses to read it until the couple have been pronounced man and wife. Then he reads. Later he goes for his shot gun, believing that Wayland has obtained Louise by a trick. Before murder is actually committed, however, a man arrives with the hired man's $10,000. The mortgage is paid off and Murray put to rout by a few well-directed charges of buckshot.

NOT MY SISTER (Ince—Five Parts—May 14).—The cast: Grace Tyler (Bessie Barrisoler), Deitchman (William), John Marshall (Franklin Ritchie), Ruth Tyler (Alice Taaffe), Mrs. Tyler (Louise Brownell).

Grace Tyler, elder daughter of a family that is now in poor circumstances, poses for a sculptor, Arnold. One day her sister, who has always accompanied her, is not present, and Arnold takes advantage of the occasion to force his attentions upon Grace. She tells no one at home, but goes no more to the studio, and later makes a good marriage.

Several years pass before the sculptor again comes into her life. This time he wants Ruth to pose for him. The girl is enthusiastic and, as Grace cannot give the real reason for her opposition, Ruth accepts the invitation of the great artist to be his model for youth. As before, the two sisters always go to the studio together. After a while Marshall begins to suspect that his wife is fond of the artist, and to test her, suggests a little play. Near Grace protests that she cannot go until Arnold has completed his work and in the jealous argument that follows Marshall is so outspoken that Grace finally tells him why she cannot leave Ruth.

Meanwhile Ruth has gone alone to the studio. But in her Arnold has found a more desperate victim. She is willing to kill to protect herself. She is just fleeing from the studio and its dead when she meets the artist with a revolver. His decision has been quickly made after Grace's confession. He is arrested and it appears that the artist is guilty. On circumstantial evidence when Ruth can remain silent no longer. She takes the stand and tells her dramatic story; Marshall is acquitted.

SUSAN ROCKS THE BOAT (Fine Arts—Five Parts—May 14).—The cast: Susan Johnstone (Dorothy Gish), Larry O'Neill (Owen Moore), Jim Cardigan (Fred J. Butler), Jasper Thornton (Fred A. Turner), Randolph Johnstone, Susan's grandfather (Edgar G. Harley) and Mrs. Randolph Johnstone (Kate Bruce); Percy Winston (Clyde E. Hopkins); Patrick Casey (James O'Sullivan).

Susan Johnstone, with a large fortune and no responsibilities, tires of her brainless existence and, after much reading of the story of Joan of Arc, is inspired to become a modern Joan. She decides to give her life to the emancipation of the poor and persuades Jasper Thornton, brilliant criminal lawyer, to help her. In founding the Joan of Arc Mission in the slums. The local element looks upon her work as an easy solution of the prevalent slum desire to avoid work. All the loafers in the neighbor-now take advantage of the young girl's innocence to get gifts of money. The owner of the property, Cardigan, who runs the principal die in the district, looks upon Susan with different eyes and schemes to get her in his power.

Meanwhile Larry O'Neil, son of the late poor boss of the district, resents the society effort to uplift the district. He has been a speaking acquaintance with the young man, naturally resents his attitude. As time goes on, Larry finds himself more and more in Susan's work, so much so that he puts an end to much of the petty grafting of which she has been the victim.

But there remains a trace of resentment for her interference, and this is almost fatal. A good character discovers that the girl has been sure to Cardigan's rooms and tries to tell Larry so that he can rescue her. Larry is resented almost to the breaking point before he will listen. Then he loses time. Susan has been putting up a fair defense but is about exhausted when Larry breaks in. Several of Cardigan's followers interfere but are overcome. The end is obvious.

MYSTERIES OF MYRA (No. 4.—Two Parts—May 15).—Dr. Alden is aroused by the plight of Myra Maynard, and, knowing the evil power which is behind her persecution, he determines to enter the Black Lodge and bring an end to the scheme. He schemes with his Hindu colleague, who has already gained access to the Order.

Meanwhile the Grand Master is perfecting an evil scheme which will bring about Myra's destruction. In the meantime, the laboratory he places a mask over his mouth and infuses a toy balloon with a poisonous gas. The over-inflated balloon bursts. In devilish glee as if contemplating what will happen when the gas is again liberated. The Grand Master calls two of his men and instructs them as to the safe delivery of the balloons into the hands of the one whose death he seeks. Disguised as men who peddle balloons, they enter the Black Lodge and enter the secret door in a hollow tree. Hurrying through the nearby woods one of the balloons catch upon a twig. Fearful lest it burst while attempting to disentangle the string, they leave it there.

At this point Dr. Alden and the Hindu reach the hollow tree and array themselves in the garb of the Order. The Hindu seizes the toy balloon and in trying to extricate it, it bursts and he is partly overcome. They both wonder at the incident, but put it aside as the serious business at hand. The Hindu leads Dr. Alden through the usual entrance and they descend a flight of stairs. They find themselves in a large room. The Hindu exchanges signals with someone above. Then Alden, grasping the hooks of the circular trap door, is swung into the chamber above. He intimidates the lone sentry, who is bound hand and foot by the Hindu. They pass into the next room. Once inside the strange thing happens. The supposedly stone figure squatting at the left of the altar suddenly becomes alive. Springing from its pedestal it attacks the sentry. Once freed this man starts in pursuit of Alden and his companion. He is about to strike as the Hindu, turning quickly, pursues him back through the council chamber. As they scurry through a dim archway the fake statue presses a spring and a heavy grating descends. The men escape and narrowly escape the others that they are in danger. As the members pass through the doorway the Hindu joins the ranks and passes unnoticed.

Meanwhile Alden has wandered into the Grand Master's abode. The Master throws his strange evil power over him and seemingly electrifies him. While he can see and realize what is taking place, Alden cannot move a muscle. Scornfully the Master speaks from the darkness. "You have forced your way into our league. I sentence you to be partly alive and partly dead. As you die Myra will also breathe her last."

Suddenly Alden is surrounded by a red glow and the spot upon which he is standing begins to slowly sink into a pit below. The members have arranged themselves in a half circle, and as the platform upon which he is standing touches the ground the men step forward and silently lift the rigid form of Alden and lower it into the pit. The box is put into the grave and all but two of the members file out. The Hindu drops out of line and descends to a lower level of the strange abode. Seizing a pick he begins to dig into the ceiling above. He eventually succeeds in getting the coffin out of the ground, and with the Hindu, Alden escapes.

Meanwhile, the Hindu succeeds in hanging the balloons met Varney outside of the Maynard home. Varney ascertains that Myra is in the room and succeeds in getting into it, seeing a red toy balloon float in through the window. Impelled by curiosity she attempts to touch it. Myra another escape from the room.

Alden bolts into the house much to the astonishment of Varney and Mrs. Maynard, and, without a word, dashes upstairs. As he opens the door to the room he finds a red toy balloon in doing so, explodes one of the balloons. Caught as a flash Alden covers her mouth and roughly pushes her into the bathroom. The door slams after him. Myra demands an explanation. Mrs. Maynard is astonished at his strange behavior. The case is cleared up. Alden is convinced, although confident that the deadly gas is by this time dispelled, leaving no evidence to support Dr. Alden's unbelievable claim that his prompt action had saved Myra's life. Together the four enter Myra's room. Everything is in order as before. Suddenly Myra utters a stifled cry of surprise and grief. The door is discovered in its ornate cage the lifeless form of her pet canary.

MYSTERIES OF MYRA (No. 5.—Two Parts—May 22).—Having firmly determined upon entering the abode of the Black Order and putting an end to the insidious scheme against the life of Myra Maynard, Dr. Alden informs the authorities and secures the assistance of the police. Varney has acquainted the Black Master with his plans and the Master is prepared for the coming of the police. In addition, the wicked head of the order instructs Varney that it is his duty to see that Myra's arrest is made. The plan is to wait until the moment before Alden arrives with his assistants. As they pass the hollow tree it is upon the explosion of the balloons that the plan is brought about by the Grand Master. Already pre-planned the blast. Alden commands the police to seize the dead body. The police approach the building it bursts into flames. Grati-fied by the success of their plans, the members of the Council of the Black Order, led by the young Hindu, Alden's colleague, attempt to depart from the other members. His departure is noticed and, suspecting that he is a traitor, the Master commands that he be followed.

Varney has now arrived at the Maynard home and is in the act of a raid on the Black Order. He is interrupted by the arrival of a letter from the Black Master for Myra. The letter states that if Myra does not appear Payson Alden will be dead. Fearing for Alden's safety, Myra suggests to Varney that she try Alden's hypnotizing machine in hopes that she might be able to send her astral body in search for the doctor. Torn by conflicting emotion and yet loyal to the compelling will of the Order's sequences, and they depart for Alden's laboratory.

Having safely escaped from the lodge, the Hindu writes Alden a note, in which he plans to meet him at noon. It is delivered to Alden, who leaves for the appointed place. There he is keenly disappointed by the non-appearance of the Hindu. Still he waits until noon. The Hindu has indeed kept his appointment. But he is dead and horribly mutilated. Having suggested him of being shy, the Hindu has followed him and killed him before he could meet Alden.

The Grand Master determined to bring about the destruction of Myra, hypnotizes himself so that if Myra's astral body is released his may also be near hers, in order to offer greater assistance in bringing about her destruction. Back in Alden's laboratory Myra allows herself to be hypnotized by Varney before the reviving machine. The moment when the astral body is passing from its natural form, her astral body is also being released from her young figure.

Mrs. Maynard has become excited about Myra's disappearance and, learning that her daughter and Varney went to the Black Lodge, she enters there. In the secret chamber of the Black Order the members are assembled in seemly convolve. Suddenly the astral bodies of Myra and the Grand Master appear in the smoke from the incense burners. The argument of the kneeling members the two bodies sway back and forth, dissolving into one, and then reappearing.

Mrs. Maynard has arrived at Alden's home and Varney tells her that Myra asked to be hypnotized and to be taken to the Black Lodge. At this moment Alden bursts into the room. At a glance he comprehends the situation, and Mrs. Maynard suggests that they try the hypnotizing machine. Alden agrees to the method which put Myra into her trance might bring her out of it. This proves successful, much to the amazement of the members of the Black Lodge, who see first one and then the other astral body disappear before their eyes. Alden is ordered to take Myra to the laboratory. In the mental contest, for the two astral bodies are confused, so that when Myra awakes it is with the soul of the Black Master, while the Master's body contains the innocent spirit of the young girl.

This change is unnoticed by Mrs. Maynard, Varney and Alden. At the Maynard home, Myra calls Dr. Alden to one side and frankly tells him of her love for him. At this point the Master, in the form of the Black Master, is uppermost in her, and she draws Alden's revolver from his pocket and attempts to shoot him. The Master, however, is in control. She enters into the room with Varney. Alden begins to explain to them what has happened. The story is so unbelievable that they judge Alden insane and he departs.

UNITY FILMS SALES CORP.

MY COUNTRY HOME (Terrill Film Co.—Six Parts—May).—The cast: Frank Draper (Tom Terriss); Helen Lowell, in love with Helen (Helen Ziegfeld); Dempsey, master plotter (John Mackay); Florian, the employer of Dempsey (Alfred Heming); Philip Thompson, an artist working for Dempsey (Joseph Coker); Ferdinand (Ferdinand), the photographer in the employ of Dempsey (Joseph Sterling); Nana, wife of Blackie, in love with Dempsey (Helen Lowell); the cousin of Blackie (Alfred Vosburgh); Morton, an old chemist in the employ of Dempsey (Tom Terriss).

Frank Draper, a native young American, has invented the most wonderful machine in the world which he intends giving to the United States. In defending a pure girl from the machinations of the cousin of Blackie, a serious crime which sends him, an innocent man, to prison. Angered at this interruption to the plans of the cousin of Blackie, the explosive for a foreign government, international spies connive successfully at Draper's escape.

They then hold him a prisoner and the young patriot is given the choice of sacrificing his own life for his country. He chooses the preservation of the latter, and his sands of life have almost run out, when trapped and bound, he is rescued at the eleventh hour. Thankfully acknowledging his escape and return to freedom, he gives to his country a wonderful weapon of preparedness and together with the nation's thanks, he receives the love of the girl he once defended.

THE GORGONA (Ambrosio—Four Parts—May).—The action of this picture takes place in Pisa at the beginning of the XII century, during the culmination of the Italian Sea republics. The story is told in a most dramatic manner when the Pisan fleet starts with the allies to the conquest of the Balearic Islands in order to deliver the island of Sicily from the yoke of the Turkish yoke. Marcel Figliuolo and his son Lamberto, are sent by the City of Florence to command an army which to guard Pisa while the Republic is fighting the war in the Mediterranean Sea. But Lamberto, rather than remain inactive outside Pisa, prefers to sail and is captured by the navy of the Gorgona. He asks Henry "the Coscetto," who has been elected commander-in-chief of the navy, to relinquish his post and to go with him. Naturally the "Coscetto" refuses to do so, and then Lamberto threatens him to take revenge by the capture of the Gorgona. Henry is threatened, laid in love with him during Henry's absence. Henry sails, and Lamberto keeps his word. The night he leaves the barracks and enters the Gorgona. He is met by the captain, praying and keeping the sacred lamp burning.

Published by

THE CHALMERS

Publishing Co.

The third and latest edition of this valuable work has just come from the presses.

It is bigger, better, and more helpful than have been either of its predecessors by the same able author.

In daily touch with practical operators throughout the country by reason of his connection with THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in which his PROJECTION DEPARTMENT is featured, Mr. Richardson is especially well qualified to deal with the problems which are constantly confronting the motion picture mechanics upon whose skill the industry depends so largely for its healthy growth.

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK is a carefully prepared guide to perfect projection.

It is an invaluable help to every single individual in the trade who has to do with the mechanical handling of motion picture film.

There are more than 400 Pages of Text and the illustrations—of which there are many—have been especially devised for this particular publication.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

A charming love-scene takes place between the two.

Meanwhile Marcel, Lamberto's father, and commander-in-chief, strictly forbids the soldiers to leave the barracks and enter the City of Pisa, under pain of death. Lamberto having been discovered, is therefore, by his own father, sentenced to be beheaded. Before the appointed hour, Lamberto asks his father to let him go once more to bid farewell to Gorgona, under oath to come back before dawn. Marcel consents, but should Lamberto fail to return in time, he himself would have to die by his stead.

The girl endeavors to prevent Lamberto from going back to the barracks and thus avoid meeting his fate. The time flies and day-break finds Lamberto still there. Suddenly the news is spread that the victorious ships are in sight, and Marcel, amid the general excitement, enters the City and orders the garrison to escort her towards the victors, with the votive lamp. He finds the girl weeping and kneeling by Lamberto's body, the young man having killed himself to atone for his broken oath.

Outside the crowd was still applauding the Gorgona and the victors!

UNCLE'S LITTLE ONES.—The Widow Billings is in despair over her nephew when she receives a communication from her uncle's lawyers stating the death of the old man and the fact that she will become heiress to his vast estate at the time his "little ones" reach the age of, up to that time, she will give them the care and attention of a mother. She is delighted with the chance and telegraphs her acceptance of the conditions. She tries to be conscientious in her fulfillment of the conditions and fits out a lovely nursery for "little ones." One afternoon, they arrive—with their keeper. Uncle's "little ones" are the chimpanzees, Nap and Sallie, and the Widow Billings finds she has her hands full.

She tries to keep the knowledge of the little ones from her society acquaintances, particularly from a wealthy bachelor, Mr. Richman, in whose wealth she sees an escape from the ridiculous chimpanzees. Her efforts to keep her suitor from a glimpse of the chimps lead her to subterfuge after subterfuge and finally become almost an obsession with her. Mr. Richman begins to think that her mind is affected. She gets up and closes doors with the utmost haste, and no reason whatever, and one afternoon, just as the proposal is about to "happen," the hammock in which the lovers are seated falls and an examination shows a clean knife cut in the rope, which the widow is unable to explain.

These things prey upon Mr. Richman to such an extent that he almost gives up the widow, especially as he thinks that he is surrounded by terrible monkeys upon the place on several occasions. But the widow is determined and finally when he complains that he sees the chimps, she burries him away to her friend, a physician, with whom she has made an arrangement. The doctor advises Mr. Richman to marry and settle down, as he is a "very nervous man." Mr. Richman decides to take his advice and goes to Europe. At the wedding ceremony is performed immediately, as the widow takes no chances, but fate steps in and as the vows are about to be said the monkeys are seen tearing the draperies demolishing the wedding meal. The sight so terrifies Mr. Richman, who is at last certain that he is being haunted by the run from the widow, who realizes, in despair, that the chimps are now "the only hope."

WHAT D'YE THINK O' THAT!—John, a traveling salesman, and Sarah, an old maid, are in love. Both are residents of the same town. When the story opens, the wedding day has dawned and a few hours will see the pair husband and wife. Both are residents of the same town. When the story opens, the wedding day has dawned and a few hours will see the pair husband and wife. Both are residents of the same town. When the story opens, the wedding day has dawned and a few hours will see the pair husband and wife. Both are residents of the same town.

But the bellobos harbor a scheme of revenge and chance throws coincidence in their path. After the boys have champagne and are sauntered down street, they come upon Nap and Sallie, the chimps, who are tied outside the tent of a little seer, dressed in a white act. Ben and Nat steal the chimps and carry them to their rooms in the hotel, where they pack Nap in a box addressed to John from Sarah, and Sallie in a box addressed to Sarah from John. They take the boxes to their respective rooms and wait for the fun to commence.

Now John and Sarah have their Terrible Secrets. John fears a wig and Sarah has false teeth, but he has managed to keep the disgusting fact from the others. But with the advent of Nap and Sallie matters take a turn for the worse. Neither dare he confess his feelings to the other, but the chimps on account of the unvoluntary implied toward the loved one, but each is frightened almost to death at the new pet.

Sallie sets half of Sarah's false teeth and disappears with them onto a painter's scaffolding out the window, and Nap takes John's wig and drops it downstairs on the head of one of the painters, who is busy painting the kitchen cook. The minister and the guests arrive, but the distracted couple who are to be married are wringing their hands over their misfortune. At last they know that the fateful minute can be put off no longer, so John seizes a high hat, and Sarah pulls her bride veil over her face, and place her teeth ought to be and they sail forth.

The guests see the strange actions of the bride and groom, but attribute them to embarrassment and the ceremony progresses. Sallie dabs the teeth into a can of red paint and leaves them on the bedroom floor to hide from the bed at the approach of a chambermaid. The maid sees the teeth in a pool of red and decides that Miss Sarah has been murdered. She exits, shrieking and waving the teeth.

Meanwhile, the owner of the sidewalk has discovered the loss of his chimps and traces the boys and animals to the hotel. He confronts Ben and Nat, and he and the boys, the painter and the maid, break up the wedding. Explanations are made to the amusement of the guests and to the shame of John and Sarah, but that is the end of the story. Each other in spite of the physical deficiencies, and fall happily in one another's arms.

THE JUNGLE CURE.—Tom and Jack are chums and come into the rooms of the Good Fellows' Club rather the worse for liquor. The place of Tom's mother, who has been drinking, is ruining his young manhood with the "filthy stuff" falls on heedless ears. But while Tom and his chum carouse at the club, a plan is on foot to cure the young man of his vice. Ruth, his sweetheart, has read in the morning paper of a young man who was cured of drinking by seeing a snake run across his path as he journeyed along a country road. She tells the news to Tom's mother and together the two women decide to try the cure. They rent the animals with which they intend to accomplish Tom's salvation. Among the animals is a snake, a lion, bears, monkeys and a leopard.

Tom comes home from the club little better than a dummy and the result of too many drinks and things begin to happen. Snakes come over the transom door, lions enter through the door, snakes appear mysteriously in his bottle of whiskey and monkeys play over his head. He tries to call for help and a great rat, the size of a pig, appears. He tries to get out of the doorway, but is held back by hideous shapes. He decides that there is nothing in the "drink habit" and swears off. Of course his mother and his sweetheart are delighted at the success of their ruse and the wedding ceremony is performed with the groom an avowed teetotaler for life.

TANGLED FATES (Peerless Five Parts—May 22).—The cast: Jane Lawson (Alice Brady); George Blake (Arthur Ashley); Ruth Lawson (Helen Weer); Will Rogers (Geo. Morgan). Directed by Travaas Vale.

Jane Lawson lives in a small country town with her parents. Her father is the first member of the Moral Committee, and forced Jane and her younger sister, Ruth, to live barren, colorless lives. Ruth steals away to meet George Blake, a young drummer from New York. She is seen rowing across to a small island, with Blake by one of the town girls, who reports it to the Moral Committee. Jane, to save her sister from being disgraced because she is engaged to the minister's son, sends her some hot time and herself faces the town in company with Blake, assuming her sister's guilt. Disgraced, her father orders her away from home, and she leaves town to find work in New York.

After six months of hard struggle, living in an attic room, she accepts a position procured for her through Blake with the firm for which she works, for although she is not aware he had anything to do about it. There she falls in love with Will Rogers, agent of her employer, and they subsequently marry. Two years after their marriage, Will degenerates and takes to drink. When his father dies, he disowns his interest in the business and is caught by Blake stealing the bonds of the company from the safe. Blake, now in company with his company, finds good the deficiency and sends Will to Alaska, grub-staking him.

In Alaska, Will meets Dolly, a dance-hall girl, cast off by Big Tom, one of the wealthy miners and becomes infatuated with her. Dolly, to avenge herself on Big Tom, betrays his claim (which is not real). Will, who succeeds in having it registered in his own name. Will's long silence becoming suspicious to Blake and Jane, the former starts to investigate, finding him wealthy but also in a state of debauchery with Dolly. A fight ensues, in which Blake obtains half of Will's money. This he brings to Jane, telling her it is from Will. This reawakens Jane's love for her husband, and while Blake is away on a trip, leaves to join her husband.

Arriving at Nome, she is shown the cabin where Will and Dolly live, and realizes on the instant her husband's peridy and Blake's loyalty and generosity to both. While Jane is waiting, there is a fight between Will and Big Tom in which the latter is victorious. As Big Tom starts off, Will shoots him in the back, and starts for his cabin. Here he is surprised to see Jane, but his greetings are rebuked. Big Tom, though dying, manages to crawl to his dog sled and reaches the villagers, telling them of what has happened. Incensed the miners, who always make a law unto themselves when one of them brands himself a coward, get a rope and drag Will out of his cabin.

Blake, returning from his trip, realizes that there will be something doing when Jane arrives in Alaska, so starts off on the next train, arriving there just in time to see Will lynched, his protestations being of no avail. The villagers are all returning and Will's body swings from a tree. For a week Jane lies unconscious in the house of the parish priest and when the danger is past, Blake is there, kneeling beside her, and at the sight of Blake, Jane realizes she loved him all the time, and they look forward to days of happiness together.

NAKED RHYTHM (Five Parts—May 29).—The cast: Maud (First Period) (Zoe Dech); Maud (Second Period) (Francella Hillington); Cecil (First Period) (Gordon Griffith); Cecil (Second Period) (Rupert Julian); Lord Lovelace (Douglas Gerard); Howard (First Period) (George Hupp); Howard (Second Period) (Jack Hupp); Maud's Father (Ben Horning); Cecil's Father (Paul Weick); Cecil's Mother (Nannie Wright). Scenario written by Olga Printzlau. Directed by George Hupp.

Two families had lived neighbors in the South for years. Maud, her brother Howard, and Cecil were playmates. One day, when the boys were playing on the lawn the fathers of Maud and Cecil betrothed their children in a bumper of wine. Shortly thereafter Cecil's father loses his fortune through poor speculation and committed suicide.

Maud is sent away to school. Cecil begins a musical education, remaining at home and growing up to be the village music teacher. In after years, Maud comes home, and soon her brother Howard arrives with a new friend, Lord Lovelace, who straightway shines side to Maud's heart. At the village shrine Maud and Cecil have met, and their childhood love is renewed.

Against her will Maud consents to a betrothal with Lord Lovelace. In the midst of a betrothal party Maud and Cecil plan to elope, but their arrangements are discovered and thwarted, a duel between Cecil and Howard developing within the hour. Maud hears the shots fired, and beholding her brother slightly wounded sends Cecil, in anger, away. He leaves the village under the impression that Howard will die.

Cecil goes far away, and in a great city his musical talents are recognized. Maud, meanwhile, in contrition, would have Cecil return to her, but he keeps his mother poorly informed and Maud is unable to get word from him. Cecil composes the song, "Come Into the Garden Maud," his fame is assured.

At this time war breaks out and Cecil, Lord Lovelace and Howard become soldiers, eventually meeting on the battle field. Lord Lovelace knows of Cecil's song and fame and as his composer, and at the moment he is about to die of his wounds, Lord Lovelace sends word to Cecil, that Maud is waiting for Cecil in the garden.

Believing that Cecil has been killed in battle at the same time his brother Howard and Lord Lovelace die of their wounds, Maud decides to dedicate her life to religion and enters a convent. When Cecil ultimately comes home, it is too late to re-join Maud with any communication. He spends the rest of his life in sorrow going every day to the convent walls and playing his famous song that Maud may hear and know that he thus awaits the final end, faithful to his childhood's sweetheart.

Her father, Pierpont Stafford, notes this growing affection on the part of his daughter for the young stock broker and attempts to laugh Gloria out of what he considers a mere whim. Freneau, when offered check for seven hundred dollars as a reward for saving Gloria, rejects the slip of paper and declares he wants Gloria.

When Pierpont realizes the affair is liable to grow into something serious he bundles Gloria off to New York and soon packs her off to exclusive boarding school for girls. Gloria has been assured, however, that if at the end of five years she and Freneau still love one another, they may marry. All through her college career Gloria cherishes fond dreams of her lover and his bravery. Freneau, unfortunately, is not faithful and flirts with every pretty woman he encounters. Upon returning to New York City, he goes into partnership with Frank Mulry on the stock exchange and though at first successful, eventually finds that the business is suffering for want of attention.

Lois Freeman weds David Stafford, Gloria's brother, but still finds delight in carrying on flirtations with former male acquaintances, one of whom is Freneau.

The night Gloria returns from college, she goes to the opera with her father and Dr. Royce. On the main staircase of the Metropolitan Opera House she encounters Richard Freneau and is amazed when he fails to recognize her. Her heart turned to lead in her bosom, Gloria steals quietly into the first upper box as the curtain rises on the first act of the opera. Freneau suddenly awakens from the serious mistakes he has made in his semi-engagement to Gloria and resolves to square himself at the first opportunity.

INTO THE PRIMITIVE (Selig—Five Parts—May 29).—The cast: Jenny Leslie (Kathlyn Williams); Thomas Blake (Guy Oliver); Honorable Cecil Winthrop, with an alias (Harry Louie). Directed by T. N. V.

Thomas Blake, American engineer, was half drunk. He stood at the ship's railing, and he eyed the beautiful young lady, who stood adjacent with bibulous approval. He stooped, unsteadily, to recover a book the young lady had dropped. He chuckled as the girl promptly turned her back to him, and greeted Cecil Winthrop. The friendship between Jenny Leslie and Cecil Winthrop began early aboard ship. Cecil cultivated that friendship for he needed money, and he believed that this American heiress would supply it.

An open boat without oars tossed on heavy seas; reeling in the bottom is Thomas Blake insensible from drink. Perched each in the bow and stern, are Miss Jenny Leslie and the Honorable Cecil Winthrop. Fate has cast the three adrift on a waste of waters, sole survivors of a wrecked ship. The little craft finally lands on the desert coast of eastern Africa. Thomas Blake came to his senses and he suffered a severe headache. This and the fact that his supply of whiskey was low, made him really ill tempered. However, Thomas resolved to share his remaining stimulant with the man and woman. When they refused to partake thereof, Thomas was just as well satisfied, and drained the contents of his flask. Posing before Thomas Blake sized up the situation. He had always sized up previous situations and had mastered them by his flask. Slowly, but surely, Thomas Blake grew at the Honorable Cecil and Jenny Leslie, who seemed to be helpless to follow him into the jungle and to explore the island. They obeyed.

As hunger came to Thomas Blake, he fashioned himself a club and went forth in search of food. The Honorable Cecil and Miss Jenny Leslie reclined at the foot of the tree and both fell asleep. Along the branch of the tree a python slowly coiled itself down the tree and toward the sleeping woman. Soon the darting fangs were very close to the unconscious girl. Then Thomas Blake returned, and clutching the reptile in his bare hands he strangled it. That night Thomas Blake selected a tree and ordered Miss Jenny Leslie to repeat the protestations of Winthrop and Miss Leslie, they were forced to the refuge. In the dead of night, a lion prowled at the foot of the tree and endeavored to reach the cowering persons in its branches.

It remained for Thomas Blake to get food, carry water, and to order the march for the next day. The experiences of the three with lions, tigers, herd of wild elephants, rivers warning with crocodiles—are too many to narrate. When the Honorable Cecil sacrificed all the priceless matches in order to light a cigarette, Blake punished him. He confiscated Winthrop's monnaie, which he used to light fires.

Blake, with little or no assistance from Winthrop, fashioned a rude dwelling, in which they lived comfortably, and he built a special apartment for the somewhat suspicious of Blake and despite the fact that Blake had saved their lives many times, Winthrop whined to Jenny Leslie, who, in turn, she believed she was in from the association of this so-called "brute." Jenny believed Winthrop and Miss Leslie. Winthrop endeavored to force his way into her room in the dead of night, but was frightened away by wild animals. In the morning he told her that it was Blake.

Time passed, and Jenny Leslie came to know the cowardly nature of Winthrop. She observed that he believed I have more cause to fear the gentleman than I have to fear the brute.

Thomas Blake only grinned, and he ordered Jenny to discard her dress, which was fashioned from skins. "I want the skirt for a signal of distress, for some ship may pass here sometime," he said. He took the skirt and affixed it to a long pole placed on the highest peak along the coast. One night Blake announced that he would go to the beach, and that same night Winthrop plotted against Jenny Leslie. Despite the mutterings of the approaching storm, he tried to reach the rude door leading to Jenny Leslie's room. The tropical storm broke quickly and wind and rain lashed the dwelling. Trees were blown down, and one, as if directed by an avenging hand, pinned Winthrop, crushed and bleeding, under the tree. As it crashed to earth, he found the next morning by Blake, who cut away the timber, and who tried with Jenny Leslie to revive Winthrop.

"I have a confession to make," whispered Winthrop. "My real name is Hawkins. I was TOM AND JERRY-BACHELORS (Episode

No. 1—Two Parts—June 3).—Jerry Simpson and Tom Bradford are two happy-go-lucky chaps with a weakness for pretty girls, and the fact that they possess two beautiful wives does not restrain them from indulging in their flirting propensities.

Mrs. Bradford and Mrs. Simpson, who are sisters, receive a letter from their mother, inviting them to spend a Sunday at their country home. After consulting a time table, they decide to take the 3:15 train. This is so much to the satisfaction of their husbands, who are more than pleased to be relieved of their wives' presence for a short time so they may indulge in a little harmless frivolity.

Tom and Jerry, in arriving at their office receive word by letter that their French mother, Madame De Luxe, has arrived in the city. Her husband, Count De Luxe, is somewhat irascible and objects to a sudden departure to the office of her new employers, Bradford &
Simpson, but, nevertheless, she at once departs, and her French maid, who is to wait secure for her a hearty welcome. Jerry knowing that his wife is to leave the city that day, extends the Madame and begs that she visit his apartments, under a pretense that they have a number of new costume plates which they desire her to look over. With a reluctance she consents.

Mrs. Simpson and Mrs. Bradford leave for the train, and Jerry and Tom, who meet
Madame De Luxe in a He-up on the boulevard,
Madame De Luxe arrives at the home of Jerry Simpson and is received with open arms, while the wives of the two developers arrive at the railway station to learn that the 3:15 train does not run on Saturday. Jerry has ordered an informal luncheon with sparkling wine, an adjunct, and in his excitement has overlooked hanging up the receiver, which leaves the telephone lines of the apartment closed. The wives decide to take the 7 o'clock train and also decide that while waiting they will call up their loving husbands. They are unable to receive an answer to their call and Mrs. Simpson, becoming suspicious, determines to return home and investigate in the meantime, Tom and Jerry are entertaining their French mother royally, giving no consideration to their wives or to Count De Luxe, who is in a rage at the Madame's prolonged absence.

The Count discovers a card with the address of Jerry Simpson, and being of a jealous disposition, hurries to see the wife of the sisters of his peace of mind. In the midst of Tom and Jerry's tele-tele with Madame De Luxe, the wives arrive, and Jerry and Tom try to rid themselves of the danger of their position, complications follow one upon another. The Madame is hidden in the closet.
The felons sickness to disarm the wives' suspicion, but they do not count upon the numerous accidents which happen to disclose their unfaithfulness.

The Count De Luxe arrives at their apartment, and Jerry and Tom, who have observed that he is also deceived. If wives vengeance and later returns with his child which he forces Tom and Jerry to restrain in their appeal to relieve themselves of this new burden, they hide the baby in the closet. The wives hearing the cries of the infant, seek the hidden treasure. Madame is also brought to light and when Count De Luxe, seeking vengeance, enters with a lighted bomb to blow the suspicious rivet in utterance the story is brought to a climax with many laughs.

"A Satisfied Patron Is Your Best Advertisement"

To bring them back again to your theatre, you must give a good show.

Pictures projected clearly, brightly and without flicker are always good pictures and it is only with direct current that such pictures are possible.

The G-E Mercury Arc Rectifier

is the simplest, most dependable and most efficient device for transforming alternating current into direct current. The G-E Rectifier also shows a big saving in your current bill.

And did you ever think of the advertising value of a G-E Mercury Arc Rectifier in operation outside your theatre.

You can't STAY on the Fence

—you must come down.
On which side will you
land—success or failure?
Do you want to know how others have landed on the side of success?

Wagner WHITE Light Converter
Equipment

Better films may be the first remedy that suggests itself. Of what good are better films when they are presented to your audiences, projected on your screens with flickering, wasteful alternating current or with direct current from unreliable, out of date, cumbersome direct current apparatus.

If we can convince you that

will improve your projection, materially save you current (if you use alternating current now), and increase your patronage, you must admit it is a thing to be desired—almost necessary to success.

We want to send you Bulletin 10923 and ask that you read it thoroughly. It may be the means of turning a failure into a success. Send today!

Take Temptation Out of Your Ticket Booth

Every ticket seller wants to be honest. And she will be if you don't put temptation in her way. Remember she's human and the control which every human being has over his or her will power varies. When you allow temptation to inhabit your ticket booth, you are inviting losses. You can guard against them—you can save money—you can remove temptation from your ticket booth by installing

CAILLE Ticket Office Devices

The Caille Ticket seller automatically registers every ticket sold. This register is under lock and key. The theatre owner holds the key. There is no way that the ticket seller can get at the register. Every ticket sold is accounted for. It removes temptation and discourages dishonest efforts between the party in the booth and the ticket taker.

A Battery of Two Ticket Sellers

Delivers Tickets Separately

Whether a patron buys one ticket or five the Caille Ticket Seller delivers them to him cut off separately, but stacked together like a deck of cards. Tickets delivered in this way cannot lay across the knives in the chopper. They will drop through instantly.

Handles Tickets of Different Denominations

The Caille Ticket Seller is built in sections. When it is desired to sell tickets of different denominations, additional sections are added. Each section has its individual motor for direct or alternating current.

Caille Ticket Choppers

They tear tickets to shreds. There is no possible chance to use them again. These machines are built for foot, hand or electric operation.

Our Lightning Change-Maker

computes and pays the difference between the amount tendered ($1.00 or under) and the price of admission. Simply press one key and the machine does the calculating and instantly delivers the change direct to the patron in a saucer-like receptacle. Saves time, prevents errors and disputes

OUR FORESIGHT MEANT YOUR PROTECTION!!

Ten days after the outbreak of war we received the largest stock of French-made condensers ever shipped into this country

That's why we are able to offer you now

THE KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSER

at before-war-time prices. Foreign factories formerly engaged in the manufacture of optical goods for the entire world now devote their sole energies to war merchandise for their own countries, thus making possible the distribution of inferior, cheaply made and costly-in-the-long-run domestic substitutes.

Is Your Projector Giving Satisfactory Results?

If you buy projecting machines of the same make repeatedly you do it, not because of what the manufacturer says (advertising) but because of what you get (service).

Clever salesmanship or advertising may have secured the first order, but YOUR PROJECTOR must demonstrate its ability to "deliver the goods" right along before you will buy another of the same make.

That is why MOTIOGRAPH SALES have increased 500% in six months.

Just try a LATE MODEL MOTIOGRAPH in your booth. Its ability to give satisfaction will put you right as to what projector to use.

Manager Sharding of Georgia Motion Picture Theatre, writes that his net profits are $63 to $70 a week.

Motion put the money in the motion picture business and the BUTTER-KIST Pop Corn Machine acts the same way in making people stop, look and buy! Hundreds of theatre owners are now operating this "little gold mine." And you are missing from $300 to $3000 EXTRA yearly profits without it.

This wonderful machine will make big Extra Profits for any theatre, large or small.

"Profits as high as $112 per week," writes F. G. Pickett of the Hippodrome Theatre at Fairmount, W. Va.

"Profits $5.25 to $8.50 a day from Butter-Kist machine in our lobby," writes H. G. Heck of Utica, N. Y.

Scores of theatres paying rent, light and heat from Butter-Kist sales.

Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine

makes the famous crackling white pop corn with the toasty flavor. Folks can't resist its coaxing fragrance. Draws people to your theatre. Occupies only 36 by 32 inches of floor space! Plenty of room in the lobby or down near the stage. Move a chair and you have room for it.

A Small Payment

starts this machine popping up extra profits and increasing theatre attendance. Balance soon paid out from Butter-Kist earnings.

Mail the Money-Making Coupon and get our handsome book, "The Little Gold Mine," that gives photos, letters, proof of profits, easy terms and full details. It's F-R-E-E! You lose could cash every day you delay. Sign and mail the coupon AT ONCE.

Runs Itself

Automatically pops, removes the unpopped kernels, and butters each fluffy white morsel evenly—then super-heats it to a tantalizing crisp!

We're advertising this matchless treat to millions—line up your theatre with this big new national success.

The Success of a Film---or of a Motion Picture Theatre is more than a question of film service—it is the best presentation of the various film stories on the screen. That means success just as surely as the poor showing means failure.

Bausch & Lomb Projection Lenses reproduce the action played before the camera with the brilliant illumination and sharp definition that mean satisfied audiences and satisfactory profits.

When your machine has Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers, the operator knows that his results are sure to be high class—and the public knows it, too.

Edison and Nicholas Power Machines are always equipped with our lenses. Any film exchange can supply you.

Warning!

We coined the phrase

Perfect Developing and Printing

And when associated with our name it represents the supreme degree of film quality.

Imitators have counterfeited our coin, but remember there is only one home of Perfect Developing and Printing—the original—and we own, occupy and operate that home in its entirety.

Any parrot can memorize phrases.

Sometimes piracy unwittingly is committed where one confuses memory with thought. Plagiarists skirt the limits of business ethics by lifting bodily and using boldly, studied statements built to identify a particular institution.

There's a difference between the unwitting and the witless, but each is a menace to honest advertising.

Your safety first demands that you investigate our claims and compare the result with what you find—or fail to find—back of the claims of those who imitate our expressions.

It is your business duty to determine the difference between sound and noise.

What the Critics Say of "Sherlock Holmes"

"The Essanay Company has scored a clean and decisive knockout with the film version of William Gillette's stage success—'Sherlock Holmes.' It is not merely a photoplay with a punch—it is a screen triumph with a varied assortment of punches, and veritable triphammer punches, all of them. 'Sherlock Holmes' goes to the public bearing the stamp of critical approval of all who witnessed its private showing. It is an undoubted super-feature of film land!"

New York Dramatic Mirror.

"'Sherlock Holmes' is a picture that can be given unqualified praise and is a credit to author, actors, director and photographers. It is one of the most effective pictures ever undertaken. From the beginning to the end of this seven part feature there is not a dull moment. The fade-in and fade-out process used in this production is positively the best that has been accomplished."

New York Morning Telegraph.

"A big winner. With the name of William Gillette and the famous Sherlock Holmes, this should be a tremendous box office attraction. Certainly the film is well enough done to prove a real winner. It should pull big business."

Wid Gunning's Independent Reviews.

"William Gillette as Sherlock Holmes in moving pictures is a fitting consummation to this artist's wonderful stage career. Mr. Gillette before the camera is just as natural and forceful as we have seen him on the stage."

Moving Picture World

"The old classic which seems to hold its youth better than most things reaches the screen in excellent form. William Gillette appears to unusual advantage in the film version. The direction of the picture by Arthur Berthel is excellent, and the supporting cast is capable."

"When the Trapeze Broke"—

And the daring aerialist plunged to her doom; when the undaunted animal trainer entered the cage of the maddened king of beasts; when the villainous groom caused the horse to rear and an acrobat to get a fatal fall—while the circus band played and the clowns made merry—the stirring "Adventures of Peg O' the Ring" not only held all first-night audiences, but left them eager to come back for more of the wonderful fascination of circus life as depicted in the Universal's greatest of all serials.

"The Adventures of Peg O' The Ring"

Original in theme, novel in treatment, produced on a scale more lavish than any other moving picture serial, this wondrous serial photo play has greater drawing power, more crowd-getting capacity than all other serials combined. With an immense and brilliant cast headed by the two popular serial favorites

Grace Cunard & Francis Ford

It has attracted—with its glitter and glamor of circus life—thousands of people who never before were interested in moving pictures. You still have the opportunity to book this money-maker and cash in on its unexampled prosperity. Send for the FREE (to Exhibitors) Campaign Book, filled with advertising suggestions; ready prepared ads; free publicity stories, and all the props necessary to make it a howling success in your theatre.

Something NEW and UNIQUE for Your Patrons something novel—educating—interesting—fascinating. A genuine FEATURE that would cost you big money if booked direct from a feature concern handling travel subjects. Here's a famous travel series.

A $250,000 Feature Travelogue Series as Different from the Ordinary Travel Pictures as Day is from Night

Here's a genuine surprise for thousands of people who believe they have seen genuinely interesting travel subjects. The DORSEY EXPEDITION PICTURES are wonderful—and were secured at a cost of over a quarter of a million dollars.

MILLION DOLLAR EDITION PICTURES UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

Here's a feature that will give your house more popularity in a minute than any Feature Drama would in a month—and the beauty of this DORSEY TRAVEL SERIES is that it runs for FOURTEEN STRAIGHT CONSECUTIVE WEEKS—insuring fourteen straight consecutive weeks of capacity houses. Here is

A Feature that you can advertise for 14 straight weeks—
A Feature Found on No Competitive Program in the Business
—A Feature that is a real, genuine, Box Office Attraction

The Famous Dr. George Dorsey (Curator of the Field Museum, Chicago) was in personal charge of the expedition which secured the entire series. When first projected at the Studebaker Theater, Chicago, their success was instantaneous and huge. It is utterly impossible to even begin to describe the immense number of fascinating subjects, scenes, incidents, events—covered in the wonderful DORSEY EXPEDITION PICTURES. Marvelous pictorial records of daily life from the unknown parts of the Orient—the taking of which involved every element of danger—from hostile natives—from climate, etc., etc. Through both unfamiliar and previously explored parts of China, Japan, India, Ceylon, Burmah, Borneo, Siam, Australasia, and many other countries these fascinating pictures will carry your patrons. Each week's showing will simply whet their appetite for more and more—so as to bring the fortunate Exhibitors solid capacity business for fourteen straight weeks.

On the Regular Universal Program

WITH the many regular weekly box office attractions on the mighty Universal Program each week, plus the tremendous drawing power of such a new, novel and entirely unique series of travel pictures, you insure your business against any kind of competition that can be found anywhere.

Remember.—This entire fourteen weeks' series of the RENOWNED DORSEY EXPEDITION PIC-

WASHINGTON.

May 17, 1916.

My dear Mr. Urban:

I had the pleasure last night of seeing the motion pictures entitled "How Britain Prepared," which I understand were made under your direction, with the approval of the English Government, and take this occasion to express my very keen interest in the pictures and to say that both in subject and in execution they gave me valuable information and great pleasure.

IN A FASCINATING STORY OF THE PERILS OF THE STAGE
"BOBBIE OF THE BALLET"
BY GIGANT CARPENTER
DIRECTED BY JOSEPH DE GRASSE

BLUE BIRD Photoplays (inc)

THE most beautiful woman on the screen" is the appreciative title bestowed on Louise Lovely, star of the BLUEBIRD organization who plays the lead in the beautiful photo-drama, "Bobbie of the Ballet," announced on the preceding page.

Miss Lovely's bid for fame, however, does not rest solely upon her ravishing loveliness, nor the exquisite charm of manner which she knows so well how to register on the screen. Her histrionic training has been thorough on both stage and screen.

To the part of "Bobbie" she brings the charm of youth and beauty, and a vividness of expression that grips the audience from her first appearance, and holds them spellbound through pathos, laughter, stress of emotion, and the tensest dramatic moments of this fascinating play of the dangers of stage life, and the wolves in human guise that infest its environment.

With an unusual supporting cast, a generous, even lavish staging and production; with an intensely human heart interest story; a big climax and a vigorous and artistic direction, "Bobbie of the Ballet" is a worthy successor of the illustrious BLUEBIRD releases that precede it.

BLUEBIRD Photoplays differ in kind and in treatment — as they should. BLUEBIRD Photoplays never vary from the high standard set for them with the outlining of the BLUEBIRD policy at their inception.

When you BOOK a la Carte

You can see what you get—

You can pick what you want—

When you want it—as long as you want it—

You pay for each feature at a price based on its box office value TO YOU.

By booking a la Carte you are encouraged to advertise more—you are sure to satisfy your patrons—you popularize your theatre—and you INCREASE YOUR BANK BALANCE.

Table d'hote eating and booking mean paying for unattractive "dishes" in order to get the attractive. You pay the same rate for the weak as you pay for the strong.

Happy and contented are those exhibitors whom the Big Four has served on the a la Carte plan. And that same service will also make you a satisfied customer.

We stand ready to serve you as we have served others.

Your Copy of This Book Is Awaiting Your Call
At The Nearest Big-Four Exchange

This handsome, two-colored, forty-eight page book—the size of this trade paper—done up in rich style, gives striking “off stage” photographs of each stage and screen favorite in V-L-S-E Plays—along with a snappy, out-of-the-ordinary personality sketch of the rise and success of these stars with intimate human interest high lights in their lives.

Besides being a book for ready reference on all the features released since the company started, “Who’s Who In V-L-S-E Plays” has been designed to aid exhibitors in compiling press notices, program write-ups, and other publicity, all the matter being written from an angle to appeal to every editor. It is a book which will be invaluable to any theatre manager.

A request in person to the branch manager, a word to the V-L-S-E salesman in your territory, or a letter to your nearest exchange will bring your copy to you. Act now before the supply is exhausted.

Gentlemen:

I have just seen Douglas Fairbanks in "Reggie Meece in", also making the sixth picture that I have booked, and cannot refrain from telling you that never in my career have I seen or had the pleasure of booking such wonderful pictures that have been so consistent in their general excellence. Their artistic value, their direction, their quality and everything about them have given to the Rialto Theatre solidity and have created a standard that I know will be impossible to duplicate with any other films now before the American public.

The pictures are improving, the comedies are especially good, and on the whole I am not only satisfied but thoroughly delighted, and I am sure that any exhibitor who will handle these pictures in the proper manner will create for himself a following that nothing but sheer stupidity and neglect could ever destroy.

Wishing you every success and trusting that you will continue with the good work, I am Very sincerely yours,
S. L. Rothapfel

SLS/S

The two letters shown on these pages from S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto Theater, New York, and E. C. Divine, of the Strand, Chicago, should be of particular interest to motion picture exhibitors at this time.

By the men who are responsible for the success of the two largest motion picture theaters in the two largest cities in this country they are of great importance to the exhibitor who is considering whether or not his audience will appreciate and pay to see TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAYS.

Both letters give the candid opinions of recognized authorities on motion picture exhibition and tell why they are basing their success on the presentation of TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAYS.

Seven months ago TRIANGLE PLAYS were first released without a single theater. Now the number of houses showing these pictures runs into the thousands, which in itself is proof enough that the public enjoys, and in fact is enthusiastic, over the presentation of TRIANGLE PLAYS.

Chicago, May 19, 1916

Gentlemen:

I cannot resist the impulse to tell you how greatly I appreciate the Triangle Plays. We have the most critical audiences, I think, at the Strand Theatre, and yet they are uniformly pleased with your productions.

The consistent high quality, the care used in production, and the superb artistry of these plays stamp them, to my mind, as the greatest advance in the motion picture industry.

If—as surely seems improbable—there should be theatre manager anywhere who cannot put Triangle Plays over, he must be exhibiting either in a blind asylum or a cemetery. I ask nothing better than the opportunity to continue showing them. I cannot make my appreciation too strong.

Yours very truly,

STRAND THEATRE COMPANY

* R.D.S.

Cheap motion pictures no longer satisfy the public. Bigger and better pictures, with bigger and better plots, people and ideas are required now—pictures of the TRIANGLE sort are essential for the successful house.

If you are a motion picture exhibitor and have not carefully investigated the possibility of presenting TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAYS in your theater don't you think it worth while to drop us a postal card? There's no obligation on your part and it is just possible that we will be able to point out an advantage to you.

For the week of June 4th the TRIANGLE Drama Pictures will be Norma Talmadge in "Going Straight," and William Collier, Jr., in "The Bugle Call," and as usual two Keystone Comedies.

Dear Mr. MacManus:-

I am not in the habit of praising photoplay productions but feel that I must write to you regarding "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA".

I had no idea, when I booked this picture, can truthfully state that on the days that I show this serial my business has increased perceptibly. I can trace the direct results of your publicity to this excellent picture.

At first I was skeptical about "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA" because the story is so revolutionary but I now see that nearly everybody is interested in this new type of photoplay.

I want to congratulate you and wish you all success with "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA", as I consider it the best serial I have ever used.

Yours very truly,

it's merit alone.

The MYSTERIES of MYRA

"FOR a long time I have been trying to get the best new one and two reel films that the market offered. My efforts have been untiring because I wanted to give my audiences something that I felt sure would please them. My search is now at an end. UNICORN FILM SERVICE meets my requirements exactly.

"After the very first showing of UNICORN pictures I was showered with compliments regarding the merit of the subjects. It was the first time in my experience that I had been able to get good short subjects with casts composed of stars.

"I was well pleased with the clear and clean appearance of the film, and best of all, the prices for service are right—much lower than I have paid in the past for poor subjects and worn-out film. As for posters, they are the best I have seen. They are real business-getters."

Have you investigated UNICORN FILM SERVICE? If not, do so at once and you will find that we can furnish the best new one and two reel films ever produced—with star casts—at prices much lower than you are now paying.

We release regularly twenty-one reels every week—Comedy, Drama and Westerns.

Facts and Comments

THE exhibitors in Great Britain meet the war-tax by a rigid suspension of the free list. Well, we are paying a war tax too. Let us revise the free list downward, if we cannot suspend it altogether.

LITTLE Tarrytown of classic and legendary fame has struck a blow for Sunday opening. Perhaps the better way would be to say that the exhibitors there want their legal rights. The Court of Appeals has decided that motion pictures may be shown on Sunday anywhere within this state and that no town or city has the right to overrule the state law by the enactment of local ordinances. The agitators in Tarrytown are just learning these facts much to their disappointment and consternation. By the way the late legislature of this state made no attempt to amend the state law so it would prohibit motion picture entertainments on Sunday. Is not this significant? Does it not show that public opinion is not opposed to a Sunday entertainment?

A GOOD deal is said about the failure of American producers to adjust themselves to export conditions. A good deal of it is true, especially when the South-American market is considered. On the other hand it seems to us that some of our foreign friends are equally slow in adjusting themselves to American conditions. Hence the lack of permanent American agencies of some of the great countries of Europe. The men who know and control one market cannot for this reason impose their ideas and their terms on another market. If some of our foreign friends would study conditions here more carefully and then adjust them selves to conditions they might do much better than they are doing now.

DOWN South exchangemen have organized to get rid of the fly-by-night men in the exhibiting ranks and the exhibitors have organized to insure fair treatment at the hands of the exchange. The idea is good. We hope there will be no black lists. An equitable regard for the rights of your neighbor and especially for the man you deal with in business is all that's required. With the present fierce competition among exchanges a black list will be found impracticable.

NEXT to the rapid enlightenment of the press on the question of censorship comes the growing conversion of clergymen on the Sunday question. In the Middle West one minister announced from the pulpit that he would be willing to close his church at night if the right sort of film were shown in the nearest motion picture theater. Other clergymen are openly in favor of Sunday opening provided the right sort of program is furnished. It has been said in answer to this position that a show good enough for week-days ought to be good enough for Sunday and that no distinction can logically be made between the ordinary entertainment and the Sunday show. We beg to differ. There is such a word as seasonable and its meaning is easily understood. We have an overabundance of film material specially suited for Sunday exhibition. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has compiled a large list of such programs.

IN a splendid editorial written by Granville S. MacFarland, the Boston American, emphasizes once more the dangers of Federal censorship. In the course of the article stress is laid on the civic value of the film and attention is called to the work of Louis D. Brandeis, who is about to go to the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Brandeis it will be recalled has used the moving pictures very effectively to call public attention to the advantages of savings bank life insurance, by which men of moderate means may obtain life insurance more cheaply than it can be obtained from the old private insurance companies.

AN extract from the copy-book of an old advertising man: Boasting shows nothing but the moral weakness and the mental poverty of the boaster. To which by way of a modern supplement we may add: Uncle Sam is watching the man who boasts not wisely but too well in his advertisements. These be "pious days" for the reckless circulation "booster."

Merely Fromage

BY LOUIS REEVES HARRISON.

NO mechanical contrivance intended to produce uniformity of motion could be more dully unvarying than the string of machine-made plays released day after day. They are only new to the cub critic and the occasional patron of the picture show. To the fan and to the experienced reviewer they present a dreary waste, a Sahara-like monotony broken by an occasional oasis of originality and creative talent.

The experienced critics who sit in judgment to the benefit of the whole art are not inclined to find fault—their whole tendency is to be generous in correcting shortcomings and to give praise where there is even sincerity of attempt. A very large number of the reviewers are not only men of high intelligence, but they are fair-minded enough never to discriminate in favor of one producer as against the rest. They go to the trenches to do their duty, knowing in advance that they need expect but scant praise and that their chances of coming away unscathed are very slim. None of them has ever yet succeeded in rendering full justice to all and in pleasing every one concerned at the same time.

Experienced critics have seen photographs in greater number and variety, perhaps ten times over, than any producer in the land. It is quite in the nature of things that they should not become wildly excited over some much-touted production—no partisan can be keenly perceptive and calmly judicious—hence the experienced critic is sometimes thought to be lacking in fine sensibilities, whereas he merely holds his sympathies in reserve that they may not blur his vision nor interfere with the exercise of his good common sense.

A great deal has been tolerated in the theatrical art, now just beginning to simulate verity, which should not be perpetuated on the screen. Not to be tolerated is an arrangement for the banal disclosure of what intelligent characters wish to have studiously hidden. Some keen business men, every one of them alert and suspicious, confer on a crooked deal in a room where there are portieres in place of a door. Although secrecy is of prime importance to the success of their plans, no one is stationed at the entrance to keep watch. The set is deliberately prepared for an overheard conspiracy.

The unsuspecting husband leaves wife and best friend in a parlor and steps out into the hall through portieres. The guilty ones fly to each other's arms so that the husband may suddenly throw open the curtains, discover them and stand in scowling silence, a terrible menace to their plans of future happiness. A general and members of his staff confer in the dining room of a house in hostile territory. There is a trunk, or some other equally appropriate object of furniture, in the room capable of concealing a spy, but it is not examined. Thus the beautiful young heroine learns all, to mount a horse soon after and carry news which may decide the fate of a nation.

If a compromising conversation must be overheard, a door would be reasonable, and an emotional outburst could be made responsible, but old stage directors cling to portieres, as they do to the mistaken identity plot, the mythical kingdom play and the innocent man's weapon placed by the villain at the side of his murdered victim. The producer is to blame who asks stage directors to write their own plays, or who delivers to them scenarios not well-formulated in advance.

Wherever a studio can afford to set up a strong door, one which can be slammed without shaking the walls, the portiere should be relegated to the dump, along with the incriminating document, or letter, which is carefully placed where it will fall into the hands of those who should not have it. These are antiquated contrivances of the stage. They are as tiresome as stories in which the leading lady dons her maid's clothes. Only a widespread critical vaccination can protect us against the recurrence of stale devices, the worst of which might be called "forcing the issue."

It is obvious that fiction, while it may aim to promulgate the truth, is not in itself truth but skilled deception. The whole art of its reasonableness lies in skill of deception. It is made ridiculous in the hands of a bungler because his interpretations are false. He belittles the art of story-telling when he has no idea of what is meant by verisimilitude, or simulating verity. That fiction does not record historical truth necessitates care not to thrust the false upon attention.

In a very large number of the stories presented to the critic for review there are situations offered which would jar any audience, if not excite open derision such as compelling the movements of hero and heroine, so that they "chance" to meet where the chances are a million to one that they will not. In a recent release the hero rescues the maiden in his home town. Shortly after he rescues her, though neither expected that they would meet again, in her home town. Then they happen to be on the same vessel at sea. When the others leave the vessel in boats when it is afire, the lover and heroine happen to be the only two who do not. Thus they happen to be the only ones who discover an uninhabited island near by, the others happening not to see it at all.

Less offensive to common sense are purely arbitrary representations which are far from artistic ones. Prominent among these are the theatrical man's idea of how people dress and act in clubs of the first class and in good society.

We are treated to the spectacle of a gentleman wearing his silk hat at country places, or at the seaside, and even aboard ship. We are shown gentlemen gambling and getting drunk in the open club rooms. The skipper on board a steam yacht removes his cap in the presence of the owner. Flunkies act like studio hands badly disguised. The chauffeur of the millionaire is obviously the director's employee. There is no verisimilitude possible without plausibility of environment.

In the case of environment it might be better to let girl supers wear their own clothes when mingled as butterfies of high society instead of hiring dance frocks from the second-hand clothing shops. In the line of plausible events it might do to have a few days instead of hours elapse before the villain succeeds in ruining the heroine's father in the stock market. And so far as chance and coincidence are concerned, "Only Seen at the Movies" is finding a department all its own in the comic papers. What the characters do, less than what they are, seems to bother the bungler most—he can not arrange matters so that his people live, move and have their being in any believable series of events. The long arm of coincidence has its legitimate functions, but it becomes a lame and impotent arm when there is "nobody home."

Federal 'Censorship is' Wholly Bad

By W. STEPHEN BUSH.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD deems it a sacred duty to the industry to urge all friends of the motion picture and indeed all true and intelligent Americans to begin a campaign against the vicious Smith-Hughes bill, which has just been favorably reported to the lower House of Congress. There was a very strong minority report which was published in last week's issue. This minority report, which will be ably defended by members of the House in the debate on the floor, gives us a splendid rallying point. We are willing to supply our readers with blank petitions to be circulated among the patrons of motion picture theaters. Any exhibitor who will write us will be provided and he will incur no obligation whatever except of course the obligation to use the blanks carefully and not to waste them.

In the meantime we want to urge upon every honest, sincere and disinterested friend of the motion picture the reasons why this bill spells irretrievable ruin to the industry and why it makes a sorry joke of every attempt to uplift the industry and to develop its artistic possibilities.

After a very patient and a very painstaking perusal of the favorable report of the majority of the House Committee on Education (to be found in last week's issue), we are more deeply than ever convinced of the harm which will befall the industry if this bill is enacted into a law. We have had and still have an open mind on this question. We are entirely willing to be proved wrong and we utterly despise that consistency which consists in sticking to an error, but the Smith-Hughes Bill is so full of childish fallacies, of bad logic, of unwarranted assumptions, of bad principle, that it is impossible to refrain from exposing and condemning it. No matter at what part it is taken up you will find that it bristles with absurdities and that it lays foundations for oppression, hardship and injustice to the men who produce, distribute and exhibit motion pictures. Indeed, the whole report refutes itself.

The strongest though withal the most specious argument put forth in favor of Federal censorship has been the claim that it will do away with other forms of censorship. Now what light does the report throw on this phase of the subject? Nowhere is to be found the slightest indication of any such claim. "The National Board," says the report, "will be considered the leading motion picture commission and its decisions will carry the weight of leadership. Should a picture be passed by the national board a local board would have to give a good reason to the public for prohibiting the exhibition of the picture." This is nothing more than one hope built upon another and no foundation in law or reason for either. When have local boards ever been at a loss for "good reasons?" "Good reasons," indeed! When have Breitinger and Maude Murray Miller and all the other executioners of films ever lacked "good reasons?" If Federal censorship affords no more protection against local and state censorship than such slender hopes it is just a delusion and a snare. Nowhere does the report even intimate that Federal censorship will be a legal barrier to other censorship. The report says: "The character of the motion picture industry renders State and municipal regulation inadequate." It says "inadequate," not "illegal." The regulation of public morals is one of the attributes of state sovereignty, and the whole political history of our country is nothing more than a fable if it does not show by overwhelming evidence how jealously every state insists upon this prerogative. It is nowhere pretended in the report that the censorship states will surrender their particular brand of censorship in favor of the Federal brand. We are urged, however, to approve of a quick passage of the Smith-Hughes bill because "it would be much easier to prevent the formation of a state or city board of censors by showing that there is already in existence an efficient Federal regulation than it will be to have a local board abolished which was created before the Federal law became effective." Again we have the promptings of hope triumph over the hard cold facts of experience. The burden of proof rests entirely upon the shoulders of the advocates of this bill. They are proposing something new and they must furnish affirmative and credible evidence that their proposals are reasonable and their plans are feasible. They have so far failed to adduce a scintilla of evidence in favor of their proposition. Let us be fair and candid about this thing: Every man of sense and education knows that whatever censorship may be exercised by the Federal Government will not and can not be exclusive. The Federal censorship will run with but never against the local and state variety of censorship. Such concurrent jurisdiction of state and nation is nothing new or unusual in our structure and policy of government and is going on around us every day. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, as is well known, is opposed to censorship on principle; we look upon it as an old engine of oppression condemned centuries ago by the experience of the English-speaking races. Even if we were capable of descending to the lower level of mere expediency we could not consistently support Federal censorship. At best it would mean nothing more than additional censorship.

Read carefully this statement in the report:

As the determination by the commission would be really arbitrary because of the absence of legal tasks or recognized standards it is of the greatest importance that the commission should not be vested with supreme power. Where great property interests are involved, the citizen should always be afforded an opportunity for relief from the court, if he feels that he has been treated unjustly.

This statement is quoted from the brief of the attorneys of the producers who have committed themselves to the principle of Federal censorship. It seems incredible that such a statement should come from the advocates of the principle of censorship in any form. Read it carefully and it seems like an ill-conceived attempt to foist the functions of censorship on the courts. The courts of this country never have exercised and never have attempted to exercise any such power. As Bainbridge Colby said before Governor Whitman, the whole idea and institution of censorship is so alien to American conceptions and traditions that it nowhere fits in with our system of government; it's an anomaly as well as an abortion. What these learned attorneys evidently overlook is the plain fact that we know no arbitrary power in this country and never have known it since we became a sovereign and independent nation. Ours is a government of laws and not of men. The laws now on the statute books are ample to deal with vicious pictures and always have been. Imagine a producer whipped from the pillar of the Federal commission to the post of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. Of course there are no recognized standards in censorship and we do not see how there can be. The question of "Who Will Censor the Censors" cannot be answered satisfactorily in a country where the people are supposed to rule. There is no censorship in America founded on any precedent of law or reason; there is and always was regulation by public opinion crystallized into law.

What is to become of the producer who finds his film disapproved by the Federal Commission and fully approved by the state censors of Ohio or some other censorship state? His film cannot leave the boundaries of the censorship state. What about the film disapproved by the state censors but fully approved by the Federal Commission? If the producer or the exhibitor is arrested on a charge of displaying a film not approved by the state board will he be in a position to quote the Federal approval in his defence and will his reliance on the Federal approval save him from fine and imprisonment for violating the edict of the state censors? We will be glad to have the learned attorneys who are supporting Federal censorship enlighten us as to that. There is bound to be a conflict of the variable standards between the various state censorship and between the decisions of the Federal Commission. How will this conflict both of standards and of legal authority affect the producer and exhibitor? It will beget infinite confusion and uncertainty. It will simply kill every artistic development. No director can do himself justice if the thought is haunting him that he has to satisfy variable and perhaps conflicting notions and standards of ethics and of taste.

We are being told that the Federal censors will be "so entirely different." We are assured that they will be supermen. It is hard for us to grow hopeful on this question. The best of men are unfit to exercise arbitrary power and to impose their standards and their notions upon the rest of their fellow citizens.

"The Play's the Thing," But--

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

WRITING in the Dramatic Mirror, Jesse L. Lasky laments that the motion picture has not advanced of late. The gist of his remarks is that after rapid growth in all lines advancement seems suddenly to have come to a standstill. Directors, he says, are doing better work, camera results are better, players are more eager to do well, and still the business is at a dead center. Then he sagely remarks that "As in the spoken drama, so it is with the moving drama, the play is always the thing, the foundation, the heart, the vitals, the very life of the motion picture drama." Then he goes on to complain that our dramatists are not writing decent plays, though plays are being written by the thousands.

This seems to grieve Mr. Lasky, and yet, is he doing his share toward making things better? Is he giving any definite aid or encouragement to the writing of better stories for films? His editors announce that they are not in the market; that all scripts are written by the staff. There is no incentive to real writers to supply a commodity for which there is no demand. If it were Mr. Lasky alone this would not be important, but he is just one of dozens of others. Thomas Ince recently said that he had not purchased a script in two years. This was in a controversy in one of the western papers, and he may not have been correctly reported, because he has purchased a number of scripts within that period if paying "for the idea only" is to be classed as buying script. A well known director has announced that no one but himself knows how to write plays and that he will buy synopses only, and this same idea is advanced by many other companies. No one knows how to do anything save their own little hand-picked troupe of trained authors. At least one large releasing organization engages a majority of its directors to "write and produce," the salary covering the cost of the script; indeed so common has this become that one or two men are making fairly good money fixing up ideas for men not competent to write and yet who have taken contracts to do so.

In a word, Mr. Lasky and all other manufacturers want stories, but they do not buy them when they see them and do not encourage authors to write. Two classes of authors make the majority of few sales. These are the half trained beginners who can get their ideas over in synopsis only and the men with well known names who accept amazing sums to write junk. The salvation of the business is good plays, and neither of these two classes can write good film stories. The man who must be interested if the standard of production is to increase must be recruited from the ranks of what may be termed without discourtesy the second rank of authors; the men who write good stories but who have not yet established their names in the literary field. These are the men who can and will write good, sound stories, and who will write their stories in continuity of action if they are given the proper encouragement. At present they are either ignored or insulted.

Recently a writer on the subject has been foaming at the mouth in his effort to get over the argument that if manufacturers will spend more money for scripts they will obtain better stories. This is true only in a sense. More money must be paid for good stories, but the mere expenditure of large sums will not bring about the result. The money must be spent intelligently. At present it goes in too large sums to persons utterly incompetent, in spite of their reputations to write good film stories, and it is film stories and not reputation that are needed at the moment.

A good example of this may be found in the late and unlamented Runaway June. It is said that between $12,000 and $15,000 were paid George Randolph Chester for the scenario of this serial, and here scenario is used in its proper sense as the sketch of the action and not the action itself. It is further reported that Mr. Chester did not take any care to write the story, as he could make as much elsewhere with work in his own line. He wrote a scenario, and this was done into a continuity by a staff man who endeavored to follow the script. Here was a case where a large payment did not bring an adequate result. Another instance is "Zudora," the script of which was thrown away when the cancellations began to come in, the director and Francis Worcester Doughty, a veteran writer of detective stories, finishing the series and saving the day. These are but two instances. They might be multiplied indefinitely. Clearly a large investment is not the answer.

There are four classes of authors; the beginners, whose name is legion, the men and women who can write well enough to make the lesser magazines and the newspaper syndicates, the writers who have passed this stage but whose reputations have not yet been made and the men who are recognized as leaders. It is from the second and third classes that the film writers of tomorrow must be drawn. The beginners—or some of them—will eventually work into the second class, but for the moment they are in the center and up the second and third classes, for few of the men at the top of their profession will take the trouble to study the new art with care. They will write scenarios that may or may not be practicable, but they will not bother to write their ideas out in action, as is required and only the author himself, if he knows how to do the work, can tell his story in the action that will best convey the ideas he possesses to the audience. It is not the part of the director to write the script of action, nor should any form of studio reconstruction be permitted. The work of the author should be further encouraged, if only authors are trained to give the best exemplification of their ideas in action.

This is not as difficult as it would seem. Bannister Merwin was one of the first script writers, but soon dropped the work when he found that the production methods of that early day could not permit the making of his stories nor the payment of a sum that would show him a profit on his time. It was not until two or three years later that he found a proper opening with the Edison company. Emmett Campbell Hall, on the other hand, had not yet reached the point Mr. Merwin had. He was willing to accept $25 and $35 for a single story scene, but he said that this business offered him a better future than the magazine field seemed to provide. Captain Peacocke, at that time, was selling to the Black Cat and magazines of that grade, but could not reach the better class of magazines, and used to pester editors with copies of the Black Cat and the Ten Story Book. They found encouragement and grew. They made good. There are others who could be similarly trained, but they must be given assurance that there is some sort of market and that they will not always be paid an average of ten dollars a scene for the idea alone." Come out in the open and buy and pay for stories. Give the promising writers a chance to see how things are done. Follow their scripts until they no longer have to write in to inquire if the current release is their story or one like it, as has been done in the past, and it will be found that the supply will equal the demand when there is a real and genuine demand backed by checks.

Club Women Discuss Pictures

Women's Federation Goes On Record Against Official State or Federal Censorship—High Praise Accorded to Motion Picture Art.

By Betty Shannon.

ART LIBERTY for the motion picture is the plea of the clubwomen. Students of the motion picture as an art, an industry and a great public amusement spoke before the motion picture conference of the thirteenth biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at the Seventh Regiment Armory in New York, Saturday, May 27. Most of the speakers were clubwomen and leaders in the organization. Their expressions were unanimously against censorship for the motion picture.

While censorship was obviously the principal topic of discussion, it was brought to the fore by the fact that the conference had set out to discuss means of securing proper and adequate motion picture programs for children of pre-adolescent age. The women were advised, both by their own speakers and by representatives of the industry, that it would be easy to secure "films for children" if the manufacturer and the exhibitor of motion pictures could be assured of the patronage that would make them profitable.

No formal action was taken at this session, but before the close of the week's activities it is probable that a definite plan of action will be endorsed by the federation and officially adopted. It appears likely that this action will include the appointment of a committee which will represent the clubwomen in future conferences and co-operative efforts between the organization and the makers of pictures.

As this report is written it seems most certain that if the federation follows the reports and decisions of its specially delegated investigators of the motion picture, a definite and positive stand against censorship will be taken by the whole body. This may be expected to have a highly important influence against the establishment of federal censorship and against state and local censorships in the thousands of communities represented in the federation membership.

To the motion picture manufacturer and to the exhibitor the conference of Saturday must be viewed of particular importance, in that it points to the development of a well-defined and established market for children's films. The whole spirit of the conference was a plea for co-operation with the exhibitor in behalf of the children's show.

Mary Grey Peck, of Geneva, N. Y., a club leader, and foremost among the clubwomen as a foe of censorship, was the first and principal speaker.

"The motion picture drama has come naturally. It is a great conservator of our civilization," said Miss Peck. "Every great civilization before ours has fallen because beauty has been withheld from the masses. The motion picture presents beauty in the only form in which it is available to the poor.

"The motion picture is also a conservator of morals. Investigation shows that the saloon and the tobacco trust have found the competition of the motion picture a more serious foe than the W. C. T. U. or any anti-saloon or anti-cigarette league. As long as the admission price for the motion picture theater remains as low as the cost of a drink or a box of cheap cigarettes it will continue to be.

"The motion picture has its faults. The producer realizes this as much as we do, regretting it as much as we do. There are two ways of going about the betterment of the picture—one is destructive, the other is constructive. The root of all objection to motion pictures can be found in the fact that children are being shown pictures intended for grown-ups, and that these grown-ups are of the masses, with uncultivated tastes. If we allow 60 per cent. of the race to live as cattle or as pigs in a sty, we cannot expect them to have high standards.

"Children have been seeing pictures designed for the man with no standards of taste; therefore the children's tastes have been demoralized. It is up to the manufacturers and people with taste to raise the general standard. This cannot be done overnight.

"Do we want forty-eight different boards of censorship?" continued Miss Peck, launching out into the state censorship problem. "Do we want to multiply the expense at looking at films forty-eight times? If we set up forty-eight boards of censorship, there will be merely forty-eight standards, multiplying the friction. It will mean that the expense of carrying them on will have to be met. It will mean that the tax on every ticket sold will be passed on to the working man and his family. That will mean the death of the picture show.

"The constructive solution is not to put the censorship of motion pictures into politics. We women do not want to aid, by our consent and support, the establishment of forty-eight political rings, when in thirty-six states we have not the vote to control them.

"The obvious thing to do is to work for the creation of motion picture shows for children. The adult play cannot be modified into ones suitable for children. There must be a children's picture drama. Educational pictures alone will never entertain them. Pictures must be given to them in interesting, well-balanced programs. And then, when picture programs for children have been procured, it is the duty of mothers to send their children to these shows. Motion picture theater managers cannot be expected to open their houses to children, if children are not sent to the performances.

"We stand in a position of balance of power. If we do not take our stand on the side of cultural art for the masses against the making of the censorship of pictures a political thing, we shall see the pictures crushed and their value vitiated. We can make the children's program and children's picture a practical thing by helping create a paying demand for them.

"The solution of the child problem has already been solved in many places by the successful establishment of children's programs. New York City has tried them out, as has Providence, R. I., and Brookhaven, Miss., and many other cities and towns.

"Children want to go to see good pictures. We want to send them. The producers want to give the pictures. So the only thing for us to do is to make it pay.

"We of this generation are looking at something no generation of the world has ever looked at before. We have seen a great art grown and approach maturity. We are the only generation which has seen such a thing. It took centuries for the Greek drama, the picturesque art of Italy, and the German music to develop. And yet one of the most appealing and sensitive arts has had its growth under our eyes. We are the guardian angels of this latest, and perhaps the last, great art.

"No great art has ever fallen below its initial impulse. The motion picture has permanent beauty. I plead with you to give it freedom to develop. You cannot do anything with art by confining it. Let it grow as God does His works."

Miss Peck closed her speech by quoting a paragraph from Milton written against censorship of the press.

She also spoke at some length on the work of the National Board of Review, saying that the standards of that body were the standards of the great mass of people, and that it was the work of the board to bring up their standards as fast as human nature would permit them to.

The second speaker on the program was John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Freuler said:

"I understand the general purpose of this conference to be an effort toward a fuller understanding between the patrons of the motion picture and the makers of the motion picture. Speaking in general for the industry and in person for seven great studios, I can say that motion pictures are made and always will be made to meet the demand of the public.

You represent a very large and important part of our public. We want to please you as that part of our public. Therefore, it only remains that you should decide what you want and that you shall adequately communicate to us what that want is.

We make pictures for a market. The pictures of today are made for the market of today, to supply the demand as it is interpreted to us. Underneath that there stands the basis of the motion picture theater, which gives you entertainment with our product. Your pictures are bought for you by the man who operates the motion picture theater—the exhibitor we call him.

The exhibitor has invested his money and his effort with the principal and final purpose of making a profit. We have made our investment for the same purpose. We must serve the exhibitor with what he demands. If, to succeed, we must serve his patronage with what it is demanded to pay for. This makes it rather certain, and speaking broadly, the expression of the demand of the public must come to us from you through the exhibitor. It would lose money for us and benefit you none to have pictures made for you which the exhibitor would not show to the public. That sort of thing has happened more than once in the motion picture business, too.

The exhibitor who runs the theater in your community stands in somewhat the same relation to you as the editor of your local or neighborhood newspaper. Following the simile, our relation to your reader is somewhat like that of the Associated Press. We make and receive pictures in a similar output of pictures. The exhibitor chooses to exhibit them to you by the exercise of somewhat the same kind of judgment as that which guides the editor in culling the news that comes over the wires to choose what he will present to you in your morning paper.

If you do not like the kind of a paper you are getting, you either quit reading it—or you write a letter to the editor. You make him feel that he is not getting your patronage because you do not like the product he offers. He is anxious to have you, the subscriber, a patron. The letters that go into a newspaper office always get careful consideration.

tion because they are the indices of the demand and the trend of taste. The result is, that the public gets the kind of a newspaper it wants. Special editions and special pages and sections are issued to meet specialized demands such as yours—the woman's club column is a good example.

The newspaper conducts its special columns because they are "good business." This seems to me to point the way for the solution of the problem which your committee has before it.

Your special purpose here, as I understand it, is to concern yourself with what you call the problem of securing motion picture productions for children. You will have to make it worth while to the man who runs your motion picture theater.

You do, he will say, he will say to us for the pictures and he will get them. You might take issue with you on "the child and picture problem." Frankly, I do not believe that the motion picture of today is doing harm to children. The drama and, the motion picture in particular, present "predigested experience." I believe that motion pictures and the education of the young have more in common than you think. I think today the cleanest generation in our history—clean with positive strength and knowledge, rather than clean with the negation of sheltered ignorance.

Probably you will be interested in some of the primary facts about the great physical and financial machinery of the picture business, with which you here propose to deal. The making of a five-reel production, which it takes about one hour and a quarter to show to you, involves vast labor and big expense. We must, in the first place, have the studio, a special equipment for lighting, scenery and various mechanical accessories. Any studio worthy of the name which represents an investment of approximately one-quarter million dollars.

Next we are concerned with our play, which, at this stage, we will call a scenario. The working of a scenario is the making of a photograph-drama as it is being run into words by the author or, more properly, by a series of authors, who have evolved somebody's plot into a motion picture scenario. This cost, in the average case, is from $500 to $1,500 in common practice. According to the requirements of the scenario, a cast must be chosen. Actors and actresses employed for extra people are taken from the stock of the studio. The director will draw a salary of approximately $1,000 a week, and that that star will be supported by a cast costing perhaps $2,000 in addition per week; the director, who has chosen the cast, will receive anywhere from $200 to $1,200 per week; that the cameraman who actually takes the picture receives $75 or $150 a week. Now we have our people and our place to work in. It is going to take a minimum of five weeks to make this picture. Meanwhile, we are using the expensive equipment of the studio and perhaps all sorts of accessories and incidental properties like automobiles, special trains and so forth.

Someone by now has taken the picture and the picture is complete. In making a five-reel production—which will ultimately be shown to you as 5,000 feet—a total of 10,000 to 40,000 feet of negative will be taken, because many scenes are taken over and over again. The picture is released by a conference of the director of the picture, a representative of the executive office of the producing corporation, probably two men from the negative department, and a cameraman. The picture is released, a first print or positive copy from the negative is projected on the screen for examination. A conference is held. Various scenes are eliminated and shortened or modified. The titles have to be written, photographed and inserted. The expense of the picture is increased. The picture is released and it is projected and screened again before another conference with the titles in their proper places. If it passes this examination the negative is then out to conform with the form and the approved positive print.

According to the scope of operations of the concern through which the picture is released or through which it is distributed, the number of theaters, a large number of prints are made. In the instance of a certain great comedian a total of several hundred prints are made while the usual five-reel production of the average picture is made in 40 to 50 prints would be made for release in the United States. Each of these prints will be 5,000 feet long and will require many hundreds of dollars' worth of film stock. The making of these prints involves expensive chemical and mechanical processes. Very large quantities of chemicals, costing as high as $50 per pound, are used. If our five-reel production is run into a total of approximately 50 prints we may say that probably no less than $30,000 and maybe $30,000 in capital is tied up in that production.

Now the distributing organization begins its work. These prints must be shipped to the motion picture exchange, from which the theaters get service. In the case of the motion picture exchange, in the United States this means supplying prints to 68 branch offices or exchanges. There are others nearly as large. From these exchanges the positive prints are distributed to the theaters. The picture is booked this production. I have not burdened you with any of the very expensive considerations of advertising and promotion which every picture of the magnitude of this picture has to be advertised on theaters. From the exchange the film goes to the theaters variously by express and messenger service. Its rental begins by the big theater of the big city, what we call "the first run." After the picture has had its "first run" it goes to other theaters in other parts of the same district, until it has run through its working life, which may be from 120 days to 2 years.

A great releasing concern, such as I have discussed, to operate effectively, must have a capital of several million dollars. All this is at your service for the 10c, 15c or 25c which you pay to sit in an opera chair and see motion pictures on the screen. This simple, but wonderful, product consumes thousands of dollars' worth of capital for entertainment offered to the individual patron of the motion pictures.

The first thought of the average American when he wants to change anything is to suggest legislation, to urge a law. Unfortunately, too many people have suggested censorship to improve the motion picture. History proves censorship never improved anything. Censorship is destructive, not constructive. It preaches do not instead of do. Censorship did not make the newspaper a better newspaper. It did not make the greatest constructive forces for good in modern civilization, did not come into real existence until the institution of censorship for the press and the destruction of censorship for the motion picture. The publishers of motion pictures have the same rights as those which protect the free press. Existing law is ample to punish the guilty patron of the motion picture. It is ample to punish the man who exhibits such a picture. Trial by jury will decide.

Do not hold every picture guilty until proven innocent. Do not try to choose for the public. The only choice for the public must come from the whole public. The motion picture as an institution is greater than any one of us or any group of us.

As a maker and distributor of pictures, I offer you co-operation and ask from you co-operation. Let us avoid misunderstandings, they are unprofitable to us both.

Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the National Board of Review, was the third and last speaker on the regular program.

"The problem of the child and the motion picture—if it is a problem—is being met in a definite kind of way."

"Many people have not realized that there is a child world and an adult world; that children must have their own plays, lectures, recreation and interests, and that pictures for adults are not always suitable for children. There is a vast amount of film for children worked out for children and to be used in programs are being shown. This means that we are past the experimental period in the matter of films for children."

"We represent the elevated tenth. There are nine-tenths below us. We can't impose our tastes on the tastes of the masses. We must find out what the girl in the factory and the day laborer wants. It is the same with children. They do not want educational. They don't want to watch the great American Beauty rose open. They will run around the corner to see some popular player. They want fun and action. And yet too often we try to give them what they do not want, because we think they ought to have it."

Mr. Cocks explained the matter of cost and picture distribution which made it impossible for the average small town theater to get the biggest and finest productions when they are new, explaining that the larger audiences of the city pay for the costs of expensive programs. He said that the exhibitor in the small towns could get any picture that his patrons desired if they would make it worth while.

"It is possible for you in the small towns to find out what is good and available through people interested in the problem in the cities. The National Board of Review can also help with its lists of selected films which it especially recommends. We have a list of 1,450 'family films' which we recommend for the entire family, aside from lists of children's pictures."

"The whole question of better and cleaner pictures must be worked out with, for and by all the people. Begin by finding out what the mass of people think and want. Find out what the children like. Then give them what they like and want, not what you think they need."

Following Mr. Cocks' talk, came an open discussion with a number of three-minute speeches from the floor.

Miss Helen Ducey, editor of the "Better Films" department of the Woman's Home Companion, was the first to appear. She spoke of the motion picture as "the play of the day," and begged the women to help to make it a "better play of the day" by their sane co-operation. She asked them to shut their eyes to the bad qualities in the present pictures, and at the same time to shut their pocketbooks, which, she said, would remedy matters. She spoke of the lists of films for family use and for children gathered by her magazine, which would be sent out on request.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, editor of Film Fun, who was formerly a clubwoman from a small town in Kansas, spoke of the problem of the small town woman and the small town picture theater. She made clear the fact that farm people, as a rule, can pay and pay well for good pictures, and told the picture theaters that it was up to them to make the exhibitor in the small towns show them the pictures they want by making it pay.

Mrs. Jane Stannard Johnson made a plea for better and cleaner pictures.

Mrs. Edith Dunham Foster, of the Community Motion Picture Service of Boston, said that fathers and mothers must be made to feel the necessity of separate programs for children and then the children must be made to feel that they are being given something to be desired, when they are allowed to go to see children's programs. Therefore the programs must be interesting and full of life.

Miss Marjorie Howard, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, gave the clubwomen a few don'ts, including a request for them to demand good, clear pictures, not worn-out ones, for children.

John A. Sherman, assistant to the president of the Paramount Company, was the only dissenting voice on the question of federal censorship heard at the gathering. He asked for some outside regulation and begged the clubwomen to join his own and two or three other companies in a fight for the censorship bill.

Miss Mary Newell Eaton, of the Drama League of Grand Rapids, Mich., spoke on the successful work of gaining school credits for attendance at educational film performances for students in her town, and other phases of the successful solving of the problem.

The discussion was then turned over to the audience.

Presiding at this joint meeting of the educational, the civics and the drama departments of the General Federation of Women's Clubs were Miss Helen Varick Boswell, of New York; Mrs. George Zimmerman, of Ohio, and Mrs. Charles Cartwright, of Minneapolis, Minn., chairman of the various departments.

There were representatives from all the important film companies in attendance.

A Visit to the Selig Zoo

The World's Los Angeles Representative Inspects the Animals and Studies Their Table Manners.

By G. P. Von Harleman.

THIS week we made a trip out to the Selig studios at Eastlake Park and had the pleasure of spending a good part of the afternoon with Producing Manager Thomas Nash. We had quite a little talk about our mutual friends in Chicago, and strolled around the big Zoo. Colonel Selig certainly has a magnificent lot of animals. Cages upon cages of big cats in elaborately built animal houses are there. The writer has seen many zoological gardens, both in this country and in Europe, but outside of very few—none in this country, the Bronx Park in New York City, and two or three across the pond—there certainly isn't anything like the Selig's Zoo anywhere in the world.

The Zoo is one of the show places of Los Angeles. You can see "rubber neck" cars lined up before the entrance almost any time of the day. Picnics and lodge outings are held there once or twice a week all during the summer. Sometimes as many as fifteen or twenty thousand people participate.

The Zoo covers a tremendous piece of ground, part of which is occupied by the studios of the Selig Polyscope Company. Two companies are working there at present, most of the production now being done at the large studio in Chicago.

Among the many interesting people we met on this visit was Walter Beckwith, the chief animal trainer of the Selig Zoo. Mr. Beckwith understands big cats thoroughly. He has been an animal trainer all his life and the things he does with the lions and tigers is simply remarkable. In some of the jungle pictures that have been produced of late, Mr. Beckwith has taken part and had some of the big lions veritably jump on him.

When Mr. Beckwith took us around to show his pets, it was feeding time and the cats were having their feast of horse meat. "That is the only time," said the trainer, "when you must not disturb a jungle beast, the time when he eats; even the most gentle of them will get cross and would be likely to make a pass at you. Now look at 'Teddy' here; he is generally as mild as a lamb, but get close to the bar and hear him roar. By the way, 'Teddy,' the two-year-old lion cub, dislocated my hip about two months ago when he jumped on me in a picture. The one next to him is his older brother. He sank a tooth through my skull when I was playing with him in his cage about six months ago." We could hardly believe this, but Mr. Beckwith showed us the scar where the tooth had struck, and on asking him if it hadn't almost killed him, reluctantly admitted that he was quite sick for some time but made the comment as a matter of fact that it was all in a day's game.

Another interesting incident related by Mr. Beckwith was the case of a fox terrier raising a litter of puma lions with her own puppies. Of the two litters only one puma lion and one fox terrier were alive. They were in the same cage and the closest of friends, and, said Mr. Beckwith, "you would hardly believe it, but the dog is the boss."

After making the round through all of the Polyscope plant watching the work on the stages, we said good-bye to friendly Tom Nash and left the Selig Zoo, having spent our Saturday afternoon in a most profitable and pleasant manner.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of May 28 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Blanche Sweet at the Strand.

THE Strand theater presented Blanche Sweet for the week in "The Thousand-Dollar Husband," a photoplay written for her by Margaret Turnbull and produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. In her latest film play Blanche Sweet has the role of a maid of all work in a boarding house near a college town. She falls in love with one of the college students who burns the midnight oil over a poker table. When a wealthy uncle leaves her a fortune, with the provision that she marry immediately, the waitress decides to purchase the college boy as a bridegroom.

The first of Max Figgman's one-reel comedies, Finley's studies of wild animals, a scenic of American National Parks, and a Mutt and Jeff comedy cartoon completed the picture program. The soloists were Olga Carmen, H. K. Guerro, Grace Hoffman and Emerson Williams.

Douglas Fairbanks at the Rialto.

Douglas Fairbanks returned to the screen of the Rialto as the principal attraction of the week in a breezy new Triangle photoplay, "Reggie Mixes In." Another favorite, Bessie Love, divided honors with Mr. Fairbanks, playing the role of a girl of the slums.

The story of "Reggie Mixes In" is suggested by its title. A wealthy idler of athletic tendencies, Reggie tires of the stupid routine of his own set and on a slumming expedition encounters a cabaret dancer who captivates him. In the course of his Tenderloin career he figures as a "bouncer" and a gang leader.

Topical, scenic and scientific pictures, and a Keystone comedy were also on the program. Amparita Farrar and Sara Gurovitch were the new soloists.

"His Great Triumph" at the Broadway.

Marguerite Snow and William Nigh shared stellar honors in "His Great Triumph," the feature photoplay at the Broadway theater last week. The picture was written and directed by Mr. Nigh, and gives many interesting glimpses of New York life: the Tombs, Chinatown, the Bowery, Fifth avenue, Central Park and other well-known locations being shown.

"Tammany's Tiger," a two-part comedy, was also on the bill. The Broadway News, scenics, and cartoons completed the list.

Eighty-first Street Theater Program.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four Triangle pictures were shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday De Wolf Hopper, in "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan," and a Keystone comedy formed the bill. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, H. B. Warner was the star in "The Market of Vain Desire." A Keystone comedy was another offering.

Robert E. Wilson Joins Metro-Drew Staff

ROBERT E. WILSON, the well known young juvenile actor, has been engaged by Metro to play juvenile roles in the Metro-Drew weekly comedies in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are starred. Mr. Wilson has been with the Thanhouser company for three years, where he won an enviable record in prominent roles. Mr. Wilson was born in Stonehaven, Scotland, twenty-two years ago, and came to this country with his parents when he was four years old. He spent his boyhood in Warren, Pa., and then removed to Jamestown, N. Y. He planned originally to take up a newspaper career, but after working as a reporter for six months he gave it up and went on the stage. His first engagement was with the Horne stock company, then playing at Canton, Ohio. He played a season there and another season in Erie, Pa., when he came to New York. Mr. Wilson experienced little difficulty in obtaining a motion picture engagement, for he is the type that is always in demand. He worked with Marion and Madeline Fairbanks and Sidney Bracey for nearly two years with the Thanhouser company. Mr. Wilson is extremely versatile and is an expert at riding, swimming, diving, motorcycling and other outdoor activities. He is a baseball fan and is fond of shooting.

Robert E. Wilson.

"What is a Clean Picture?"

By W. W. Hodkinson, President of Paramount Pictures Corporation.

PARAMOUNT is for policy of clean pictures. Our producers agree with us that this is the thing. We are exercising every possible control we have to bring about a condition of clean pictures—for cleaner pictures mean better pictures. What is a clean picture? It is a careless generality to state that "it all depends upon the way you look at a thing!" Nothing was ever more false. "What is vital is that it all depends upon the way the producer looks at it. It's all in the way a thing is presented. Consider the literary masterpieces of the world, novels and the drama. In the hands of one kind of an author, the subject matter would be entirely offensive. In the hands of another kind of writer it would be entirely inoffensive. It's all a question of the way a thing is done. So with motion pictures. Two entirely different actresses can give to the identical situation two entirely different interpretations. Producers of clean pictures do not fear any situation. The Paramount policy is that clean pictures can be produced without prudishness.

Which brings us to the question of censorship. A standard of morals is not a constant. What would be eliminated by a censorship board in one part of the country would be passed in another. Good taste, however, is a constant, and to produce clean pictures—that is all we must observe. It is impossible to produce a program which will be suitable for children and at the same time cater to adult persons. We might see a picture and half of us would agree that it was alright, that we were perfectly justified in calling it a clean picture. The other half would say: "I don't believe that is a good picture. I don't believe you could show it to a child without possible injurious effects." So, in saying we stand for clean pictures and only for clean pictures, we must be careful not to misrepresent. For, after all, there are clean pictures of subject matter, however, open to debate as far as an audience of children is concerned. Novels, dramas, motion pictures all reflect life. All sincere art is open to discuss all of the problems that confront any of us. Tie the hands of art and you get into hypocrisy. Now this means showing crime on the screen. Unless you eliminate all crime from pictures in order to keep them clean, you've got to eliminate all children from the audience watching those particular pictures. It is obvious that a child cannot be taken to see pictures portraying crimes that he would imitate. And, again, we get back to the way a thing is done. The difference between a producer of clean pictures and a producer of unclean ones is his way of presenting a crime. If you make a crime incidental to the action of the story and it does not glorify a criminal you are only doing what has been done in the best literature of the world. But if you glorify the crime or the criminal, you are making a sensational picture. It seems to me that is the whole story in connection with clean or unclean pictures. It is not so much a question of choice of subject matter, but of good taste in handling the subject matter before you.

NORMA TALMADGE IN NEW YORK.

Norma Talmadge, the popular Triangle star whose work in "Going Straight," the Triangle-Fine Arts drama just released, added new honors to those she had already won by her work before the camera, arrived in New York Thursday from the Pacific Coast. Accompanying her was John Emerson, the well known Triangle-Fine Arts director whose most recent work was the staging and adoption of Macbeth in which Sir Herbert Beerbom Tree and Constance Collier were seen. The director of the film star will begin work immediately at the Triangle studio at Riverdale on a new film feature in which Miss Talmadge is to be starred. That the Triangle corporation had acquired the old Reliance studio at Riverdale comes as news to many in the motion picture world and the feature which has brought the noted star and equally famous director from the Pacific Coast will be the first to be made for the Triangle there.

HAROLD CAREY WITH PARAMOUNT.

Harold Carey, associate editor of "Every Week," and former managing editor of "Technical World" is now on the staff of Paramount Pictographs. Pictures are not new to Carey. He has charge of the double page pictorial column on "Every Week," they being distinctive because of the extremely original subject matter chosen. Carey has the knack of writing witty tales and new and unexpected twists may be expected in the future on the features appearing in Paramount's "Animated Magazine on the Screen."

Berst Approves Hughes Bill

After Careful Study Head of Pathe Exchange Says It Is Only Way to Stop Obnoxious State Bills.

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has come out flat-footed for federal censorship of pictures. Mr. Berst strongly believes that some form of censorship is inevitable and that the best interest of the business demands a federal law drawn up in accordance with the views of the manufacturers, and put through with their support. "This is the only way in which obnoxious state censorship bills can be headed off," says Mr. Berst. "The fact that the federal government is passing upon films will be a powerful argument against local censorship—the most powerful that we can have."

Mr. Berst made a careful study of the Hughes bill and sent to the Hon. Dudley M. Hughes, chairman of the House Committee on Education, a letter containing the result of his analysis and pointing out a number of objectionable features in the bill. Under date of May 19th Mr. Hughes wrote Mr. Berst to the effect that many of his suggestion had been followed in the new bill. The revised bill was carefully analyzed by Mr. Berst, who, on May 23d, wrote Mr. Hughes in part as follows:

"I wish to assure you that your bill will find in our firm a very strong support. All the big concerns intend to get together and discuss this bill thoroughly, and I am confident that a resolution will be adopted for the support of the bill."

Mr. Hughes, recognizing Mr. Berst's great help in putting the bill upon a basis where it would merit the support of the manufacturers, wired Mr. Berst on the 24th as follows:

"Thanks for your letter of the 23d. Have I your permission to make this letter public? Wire answer."

Mr. Berst accordingly wired his consent to have his letter used.

When the new bill is carefully read, compared with the old one and also with Mr. Berst's first letter to Mr. Hughes, the value of the Pathe executive's suggestions and the weight they had in Washington is at once apparent.

SELZNICK OPENS CHICAGO OFFICES.

With the Eastern States fully covered through its recent deals for the distribution of Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation features, Lewis J. Selznick this week dispatched two personal representatives to Chicago to look over the middle western field and close franchises for the establishment of exchanges and branch offices in that territory.

Ben. S. Cohen, recently district manager for World Film, and Ned H. Spitzer, formerly of Bluebird, were the two representatives chosen to conduct business for the Selznick concerns in Chicago. They left New York Sunday and will make their headquarters temporarily at the Sherman House.

While in the West Messrs. Cohen and Spitzer will get in personal touch with the hundreds of exhibitors in that territory who have applied by mail and wire for the Clara Kimball Young features. As each exhibitor is signed he will receive a five-year franchise and, as a souvenir, a silver framed autograph photo of Miss Young.

MASSIVE PORTABLE LIGHTING PLANT FOR SELIG.

That the Selig Polyscope Company proposes to spare no time nor expense in securing perfect results in its Athletic Film Service, recently announced for release through the V-L-S-E., is evidenced by the purchase by that company of a massive portable lighting plant which can be shipped and installed in any hall, park or arena, in which important athletic events are conducted. This lighting will result in perfect photography whether the athletic contest takes place day or night, rain or shine. In order to secure this perfect photography, it is interesting to state that this lighting plant will produce more than 1,700,000 candle power.

IRENE HOWLEY IN "THE PURPLE LADY."

Irene Howley, who appeared in "A Yellow Streak" with Lionel Barrymore, plays opposite Ralph Herz in "The Purple Lady," the picturization of Sydney Rosenfeld's stage success which Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., is producing for the Metro program. Before playing for the Metro Pictures Corporation, Miss Howley was seen in Reliance, Biograph and Famous Players releases.

NEWS REEL for MAY

Berst Plans Fashion Film

Pathe Executive Engages Florence Rose to Manage the New Feature.

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has inaugurated a new series of pictures for the Pathe program which represents a decided departure from the ordinary and which, judging from the way they have been received by both newspapers and exhibitors, promise a marked success. Miss Florence Rose, the fashion expert, formerly editor of L'Art de la Mode, has been secured to put out a special reel of fashions twice a month, and a noteworthy list of prominent newspapers has been signed up to run a fashion article six days a week. These articles are to be written by Mrs. Radnor-Lewis, former managing editor of Harper's Bazaar, and are based upon the costumes shown in the films.

Among the papers so far signed up for this service are the Chicago Daily News, St. Paul Daily News, Omaha Daily News, Minneapolis Daily News, Cleveland Daily News, Buffalo Enquirer, Louisville Times, Baltimore American, Pittsburgh Dispatch, New York Tribune, Boston Traveler, Syracuse Post Standard and Utica Observer.

Miss Rose, the energetic and capable lady who has successfully "put over" this new idea in pictures, has had an interesting career, and one that should be an inspiration to women who have to make their own way in the world.

The Florence Rose newspaper service consists of a drawing by Winifred L. Messer, a clever fashion artist, and an article on the practical current fashions. The costumes shown, complete from head to foot, reflect the accepted styles as worn by New York's best dressed women.

The strength of the proposition from the newspaper standpoint lies in the fact that it offers a way by which double co-operation will be obtained from both exhibitor and retailer without having a word of advertising on the films. The retailer will be anxious to let his public know that he is carrying the costumes shown in the Pathe pictures, thus tying up his advertising with the fashion article. The exhibitor will be able to secure added attendance from women and girls who are universally interested in new styles. The pictures will be so attractive that men will be interested in them also. All the exhibitors with whom we have spoken have expressed themselves unqualifiedly in favor of the proposition. We confidently expect that Pathe's Florence Rose fashion pictures will be a big success for all concerned.

Paramount Program

Regular Five Part Features Supplemented by Interesting Short Subjects.

PARAMOUNT pictures released for the week of June 12 will be headed by two five-reel features from the Famous Players studios. "Silks and Satins," released on Monday, will feature Marguerite Clark, while the Thursday release will be "Destiny's Toy," in which will appear the new Famous Players star, Louise Huff.

Short reels completing this program for the week will be the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture, "The Penal Colony of Palawan," the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, "Colonel Heeza Liar and the Bandits," and the Paramount Pictures.

At Palawan Paramount audiences will have an opportunity to study the most interesting penal colony in the world and the most humane. Here men who entered Bilibid Prison in Manila and other institutions in the Philippine Archipelago as the most dangerous of criminals are made over into self-respecting citizens and learn to support themselves and their families in almost perfect freedom. At Palawan, too, Mr. Holmes leads the way for two miles up an underground river and under lofty mountains. The next of the Travel Pictures will start a tour of European cities as they were before the present war, beginning with Berlin, the imperial.

Paramount Pictures in the nineteenth release will show "The Making of a Bluejacket," "Trend of the Imagination" in Professor Munsterberg's "Testing the Mind" series; "Free Play" in the "Better Babies" department, and "Jobs You Would Not Want," showing perilous occupations. This edition will also contain a new release of the Trickets.

Colonel Heeza Liar is now being starred in a new production every three weeks in the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons. The latest cartoon is "Colonel Heeza Liar and the Bandits," in which J. R. Bray takes his hero through a new series of laugh-making adventures.

Edwin Middleton to Direct Gaumont's Three-Act Plays

THE recent announcement that the Gaumont Company would make three-reel features of the same excellence as its five-reel production has now been followed by the further statement that these productions will reach the screen through the able direction of Edwin Middleton.

Mr. Middleton came to the Gaumont Company as director of one-reel comedies. Before that he had directed such photoplays as the "Wildfire" feature with Lillian Russell and the "Rip Van Winkle" feature with Thomas Jefferson. Mr. Middleton made such an enviable reputation with his comedies, which were both clean and humorous, that he was sent to Jacksonville to head one of the Gaumont winter stock companies producing Mutual Masterpieces. One of his most prominent successes in this field was "The Haunted Manor," the five-reel feature starring Miss Iva Shepard.

Mr. Middleton's thoroughness is seen in the stipulation that he is to have exactly the same facilities which he enjoyed in making five-reel features. General Manager F. G. Bradford, wishing the Gaumont name to maintain its prestige in this field as well, readily acquiesced. He allowed Mr. Middleton to pick his players. The result is that the three-act Gaumont photodramas will have as their male lead Alexander Gaden, one of the most popular stars in this country. He has twice won the Chicago Tribune's "frame of honor," as well as leading in various contests of a similar nature in the east. Mr. Middleton has selected Miss Lucille Robinson to play opposite him. As there are occasional stories which require an artist of a quite different type, the director has secured permission to use Miss Iva Shepard whenever occasion requires. Miss Lucille Taft will also appear from time to time in these productions. Among other favorite players enlisted for Mr. Middleton's company are Henry W. Pemberton, Miss Mathilde Bering, Charles W. Travis, Albert Macklin and James Leavelle.

The formation of this three-reel company in no manner interferes with Gaumont's other activities in Mutual service. The first picture with Mr. Gaden in a star role is "The Spatulate Thumb," marked for release June 22. Miss Iva Shepard will play opposite him. Following this will be the great Robert Burns' story of New York life, "Gates of Divorce."

"HOW BRITAIN PREPARED" AT LYCEUM.

Under the title of "How Britain Prepared," pictures made under the direction of Charles Urban and officially sponsored by the British government, were given their initial showing in New York at the Lyceum theater on May 25. They are now being shown in pictures, so-called. During the two hours and more which are occupied in unfolding them, there is only one "war film," the destruction of a German blockhouse in Flanders. But they are pictures which explain what war means to a whole nation, even more, perhaps, than would scenes of actual fighting taken at the front. They tell the story of what it means to a peace-loving people and what such a people are compelled to do when their country suddenly finds itself in peril.

CHICAGO LOCAL WORKING HARD.

It Will Be Advocated at the Coming National Exposition and Convention in Chicago That One Big Event of the Kind a Year Is All That the Trade Can Stand.

THE first advertising that has been issued by the Chicago Local announcing the Sixth National Convention and Exposition of the M. P. E. L. of America, at the Coliseum, Chicago, July 10 to 18 inclusive, is in the form of an attractive card, 16 by 48 inches, in two colors. These cards have already been placed in the Illinois Central suburban trains and also in those of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul.

The members of the press and publicity committee are keeping in close touch with every exhibitor in the state of Illinois, and also with many others throughout the country. The Chicago Local is also centering interest on the increase of its own membership, and the members are working to the end so that every live exhibitor in Chicago will be an active member before the convention and exposition open.

One of the important questions that will be taken up for deliberation at the coming convention will show the importance of impressing on manufacturers and exhibitors that one exposition and convention a year is all that the trade can stand. The opinion will be advanced that it is better to have one big successful show each year, in which the manufacturers and exhibitors will work hand in hand for its pronounced success, than to have several exhibitions and conventions poorly represented and poorly attended.

The special convention committee of the Chicago Local returned to the city from New York early last week, and reported a very successful trip. All the members speak kindly of the courteous and liberal treatment received from the various interests of the industry. Many luncheons were given to the committee by the various manufacturers, and at all times the chief topic of conversation was the Sixth National Exposition and Convention in Chicago.

The members are much gratified over the liberal attitude of the various interests in the purchase of space in the Coliseum. Not only have the producers of films and the manufacturers of machines and supplies shown liberality, but they have also promised to do their utmost to make the coming national exposition and convention in Chicago the biggest and most successful of its kind in the history of the moving picture industry.

Wm. J. Sweeney is constantly on the move in the interests of the big coming affair in Chicago. He left for Omaha on Thursday, May 25, to attend the Motion Picture Men's Convention and "Movie" Ball, given under the auspices of the Omaha Screen Club and the Photoplay Managers' Association, which was held in that city on Friday, May 26. His visit was in response to an invitation requesting him to attend. It is needless to state that "Bill" will do all the boosting that is necessary among the exhibitors and other members of the trade in that section of the country, in the interests of the big Chicago event.

IMPORTANT LOCAL MEETING OF EXHIBITORS.

The officers of the local branch of the Exhibitors' League are sending out the following invitation to its members and to all exhibitors in the city:

"A meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors will be held on Monday night, June 5, at our rooms at 218 West Forty-second street, at 11 P. M. This organization has been in a most prosperous and sustaining condition, but your advice and support are essential to our business interests.

"At the meeting the following subjects will be discussed: Standee law; admission of minors without guardians; the best paying attractions at the least possible cost; the national convention at Chicago, etc.

"Some surprises await you. Be on time; do not bother about eats; a little spread will be given. Our motto: 'A Square Deal to All, With Special Privileges to None.'

"Remember, 11 P. M., Monday, June 5. All Motion Picture Exhibitors are invited, whether members of the league or not."

FAVOR FEDERAL CENSORSHIP.

Cincinnati Exhibitors Indorse Hughes Bill—Stearn Says State Board a Failure.

AS a result of action taken at a meeting held on Monday afternoon, May 22, at the Chamber of Commerce, the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is one of the first in the country to place itself officially on record as favoring Federal censorship of moving pictures. A resolution to this effect was adopted, what little opposition developed during the discussion preceding the vote melting away and the vote being made unanimous.

President Max Stearn, of Columbus, head of the Ohio organization, was the principal speaker at the meeting, which was called by F. L. Emmert, president of the Cincinnati branch, for the purpose of considering the censorship problem from all sides. President Stearn delivered a strong address, in which he pointed out that State censorship has emphatically not been a success, and that inasmuch as some form of censorship seems to be called for, that of the Federal Government seems to be least objectionable. He emphasized the fact that the better exhibitors everywhere desire only clean films, and that they do not object to censorship which aims at the elimination of the unclean. Motion pictures should be criticized carefully, he stated, in this connection, "but they should not be assailed, which is the form which censorship and criticism too often take. People who make unjust attacks on moving pictures do not realize that they are attacking what has become the fifth largest industry in the United States."

Mr. Stearn pointed out that some of the leading producers, who have millions invested in the business, have indicated that they favor Federal censorship as a relief from objectionable state and local censorship, and argued that the exhibitor might logically follow this lead, especially as it is apparent that a permanent board of unbiased experts, employed by the Government, would do better work than a less authoritative or less expert tribunal.

After ample discussion of the matter, especially in the light of recent happenings in Cincinnati and Ohio as a result of state censorship, the exhibitors took the action indicated, giving sufficient proof that they were of President Stearn's opinion on the subject of censorship. Copies of the resolution adopted were sent to the Ohio delegation in Congress, and to the Paramount, Lasky, Metro, Famous Players, World and Equitable companies, all of which have gone on record as favoring Federal censorship. The meeting was well attended, and much interest was shown by the exhibitors.

NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION AT DURHAM.

Local and nearby exhibitors are busy preparing for the semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina, which is to be held in Durham, July 19 and 20. Many of the exchanges and others doing business with the exhibitors of this state have already made arrangements for exhibition space. From the present outlook, this convention will be the most successful ever held by the exhibitors of the Tar Heel State.

CAST OF 'L'ABBE CONSTANTIN.'

"L'Abbe Constantin" is to be filmed by Director Rupert Julian, in five reels, the work of production is about to be commenced. The cast will include Julian, Elsie Jane Wilson, Louise Lovely, Douglas Gerrard, and other Universal City players. Julian has put in a great deal of work on the scenario of this well-known story, and an artistic production is anticipated.

"Civilization's Premiere"

Ince's Big Production Given Its First New York Showing on June 2d.

WIDESPREAD, in fact universal, interest has been attracted among states rights buyers and exhibitors at large by the announcement of the forthcoming production at the Criterion Theater, New York, on Friday, June 2, of Thomas H. Ince's greatest masterpiece to date, the widely heralded and advertised multiple reel cinema spectacle, "Civilization," which took a year to produce and employs the services of many thousand people. Mr. Ince and his staff, in their suite at the Astor Hotel, have been so besieged by states rights men and exhibitors at large, that it has been necessary to open an office in the quarters of the New York Motion Picture Corporation in the Longacre Building. There Adam Kessel and Charles O. Baumann have been receiving all visitors as well as the thousands of telegrams and letters from all parts of the United States and foreign countries not immediately affected by the war in behalf of Mr. Ince.

And here it might be appropriate to remark that all Mr. Ince will say avert his mammoth production, which by the way is eleven reels, is "Wait and see." There is but little question in the minds of those "in the know" that these words are happily prophetic. The New York premiere of "Civilization" bids fair to break all records, as already the advance sale of seats has been so tremendous that the house is sold out for four weeks in advance and this one week in advance of the opening date. For the "first night" of "Civilization," 1100 special invitations have been issued by Mr. Ince, his guests of honor including the most noted names in New York in financial, artistic, religious, social and literary circles.

YACHT NEIRBO GOES INTO COMMISSION.

The good ship Neirbo went into commission on Sunday, May 28, for the season of 1916. The occasion was celebrated by a voyage from New Rochelle to the summer station off the spacious home of the Belle Harbor Yacht Club. In command was Captain and Owner Charles J. O'Brien. As lay crew were many of the heads of departments and employees of the O'Brien printing establishment, in which each week is printed the Moving Picture World. At the conclusion of a most pleasant five-hour cruise the party sat down to a dinner in the clubhouse. Captain O'Brien was host. Features of the dinner that will live in the memory were steamed soft shell clams and melted butter and planked fillet mignon.

In the party that made the cruise and congratulated the captain of the Neirbo on the fine condition of his craft were Edward Jackson, Fred Forrest, Sr., Fred Forrest, Jr., Antonio Falco, Joseph Graham, John Clausen, David Perazzo, Frank Fleck, Randall M. White and George Blaisdell.

Here's good luck to the Neirbo, her hospitable skipper and her jolly crew, lay and professional!

Universal Concentrates in West

All Eastern Producing Companies Will Be Transferred to Hollywood Under General Direction of H. O. Davis.

ABANDONING the new half-million dollar studio in Leonia, N. J., but retaining the finely equipped laboratories connected with the studio and the executive offices at 1600 Broadway, the Universal Company is preparing to move all of its producing companies to Universal City in Hollywood, Cal., where they will be under the general supervision of H. O. Davis, whose systematic organization of the great western plant has eliminated unnecessary overhead expenses and made possible the production of good pictures on a sound business basis. Julius Stern, for a number of years manager of the eastern studios, is no longer connected with the Universal Company. It is reported on good authority that he will become an important factor in the L-Ko organization, which makes pictures independently for release by Universal.

The glass-covered studio being vacated is one of the largest and finest in the country. Several manufacturers are negotiating for a long time lease with present prospects favoring the closing of a contract with William Fox.

When the shift of Universal's producing forces has been completed there will be thirty-five companies at Hollywood where the equipment is more than ample for the increased activities. Director Stuart Paton and his players have left already, and others will follow as soon as pictures started in the East are finished. Among those preparing to make their homes in the west are Mary Fuller, Violet Merserau, Matt Moore, Edna Hunter, Jane Gail, Ben Wilson, King Baggot, Hobart Henley, Harry Benham and Edith Roberts.

This wholesale concentration of forces is explained by Universal officials as a move to do away with unnecessary expenditures that do not contribute to the betterment of the product. The practical benefits of Mr. Davis's regime at Hollywood are the result of a finely worked out system through which many of the running expenses have been greatly reduced and some of them cut in half. In the employment of extras, for example, Mr. Davis has shown how money has been needlessly expended, because the requirements of the various directors were met individually, whereas with the proper co-operation in a large studio, actors engaged by the day might be profitably utilized in more than an occasional scene. This is but one of the numerous advantages of an organization such as exists in Universal City. An announcement sent from the Universal executive office reads in part:

"The picture business has reached a commercial stage much more rapidly than any of the old timers imagined it would. It is now at the point where only those companies would eliminate all waste and make 'everything show on the screen' can hope to survive competition. The Universal Company was the first to take any step toward the concentrating of efforts and the consequent reduction of overhead expenses, and is therefore the first to reap the advantages of commercializing its business.

"As a result of this move will be an improvement in the entire Universal program. Thousands of dollars which have hitherto been spent on overhead expenses can now be devoted to the pictures themselves, giving the Universal product a quality which others cannot hope to keep pace with unless they concentrate as the Universal has done. Thirty-five companies will eventually be operated at one place with one overhead charge.

"It has taken much longer to achieve this stage of perfection than anyone in the company anticipated. Innumerable obstacles had to be overcome one by one, but meanwhile an organization was being perfected in all its details. Expensive equipment was added at Universal City week by week, until every department had the finest and most approved "tools" with which to do perfect work. Countless ideas have been discarded. But, after all this period of experimentation, the company has emerged with an equipment and with facilities absolutely unparalleled in the whole world of picture making."

MARGUERITE SKIRVIN IN "THE QUITTER."

Marguerite Skirvin, a brilliant and charming young artist, who has been engaged by Metro, will be seen on that program in the leading female role in "The Quitter," a five-part Metro-Rolfe wonderplay in which Lionel Barrymore is starred. Miss Skirvin has the role of a Western girl, which is entirely to her liking, as she hails from Oklahoma. There, as a young girl, she learned to ride wild horses, swim treacherous streams and do other things she is called upon to do in "The Quitter" before the camera.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Clean Pictures Are the Best Investment.

IN THE columns of the Moving Picture World for several years past there have appeared again and again articles showing the responsibility of both the producers and the exhibitors of films for the making or the exhibiting of subjects that are of a questionable or vulgar type. Great progress has been made in the elimination of such films, and all the leading manufacturers have shown a worthy spirit of uplift that is being rewarded by a preference for their product by the lovers of photoplays everywhere.

These producers are really their own censors and leave no place for the exercise of censorship by anyone outside the business. There are still producers among us who prefer stories built on the sex problem and other morally unhealthy topics, just as there are exhibitors who seize on such subjects so that they may temporarily increase their box office receipts.

Has not experience shown again and again that the clean photoplay is the best investment both for the producer and the exhibitor? Its influence is lasting and it creates a reputation that is invaluable both for the producer and the exhibitor that shows it.

This is no transient business. Its irresistible advance and its remarkable progress within a few years has proved that. And, as in every other line of human activity, the fittest will survive. If producers and exhibitors do their whole duty, there can be no reasonable claim for the censorship of moving pictures.

The following timely editorial that recently appeared in the Chicago American, under the head "Moving Picture Men Must Use Sense," should be read and inwardly digested by every film manufacturer and exhibitor:

"Just a word to you moving picture manufacturers and exhibitors.

"There is always a prejudice against new things, and that prejudice exists against some people against moving pictures, just as it existed against bicycles and automobiles when they were new to the public. Unfairness and opposition, based upon this narrow prejudice, you moving picture operators cannot overcome. Time and custom will dissipate that. Objections and restrictions founded upon any improprieties in the moving pictures themselves can be overcome, and must be overcome, by an improvement in the product.

"If you permit any of your number to produce and exhibit questionable or vulgar films, you will increase the number of those who demand censorship.

"It rests entirely with you whether there shall be an increased demand for censorship and a legitimate basis for such a demand.

"The only sensible thing for you to do is to establish your own censorship and use all your power and business influence to prevent the production and exhibition of vulgar and questionable films.

"It is up to you, gentlemen, to show your gratitude as well as your business sense by keeping the little picture theaters as clean as a new sheet of white paper."

Chicago Strike of Express Companies' Drivers.

The distribution of films in Chicago and in the territory dependent on it has been very seriously hampered for over a week, at the time of writing, by a strike of express companies' drivers in this city.

A complete tie-up of the shipments and the deliveries of films by express has created untold hardship for both exchanges and exhibitors. Among the latter those in the country, who do their booking in this city, have suffered most, while those in the city, in many cases, have had their programs disrupted because the films from the country did not arrive.

Exchanges have used all efforts to help out their customers—many of them attempting to deliver films to out-of-town points by automobile; but the relief by such means has been wholly inadequate. Outside exhibitors have, therefore, been able to secure their films only by coming into town for them, and loading them in trunks. They have returned the films in the same way.

The strikers have used violence and intimidation, and frequent clashes have taken place between them and the police. The express companies have moved a few wagons, and it is said that the police now have control; but every receiving depot in the city is piled high with undelivered goods and many perishable articles have been ruined.

The drivers have no grievance on the score of wages, their chief demands being recognition as members of the union and that eight hours shall be considered a day's work.

The city press has been mum on the strike, which happens at a most inopportune time, as the National Republican Convention is upon us, and the good name of the city as a great convention center is at stake.

W. J. Patterson, general manager of the Motion Picture-Scope Company, 565 West Washington street, this city, reports that he had an inquiry recently from the British trenches in Flanders concerning the Portoscope machine. A Canadian soldier, writing from the Belgian battlefield, stated that he had seen the company's Portoscope advertised in the Moving Picture World, and requested full information regarding it. He showed that while off duty soldiers are entertained with moving pictures, and have time to read their favorite publications. The fact that the Moving Picture World is being read on the firing line in the great world war is an evidence not only of its popularity, but also of its far-reaching circulation. Evidently this Canadian soldier had been an exhibitor before joining the ranks, and he now relieves his mind of the horrors of war by turning to the pages of the World and familiarizing himself with the progress that is being made in the business.

Schuyler Colfax, of the Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., made a brief stay in the city last week. He enjoyed his recent visit to Los Angeles hugely, and looks fit enough to take the place of Frank Gotch in his advertised "go" with Joe Stecher, the Fort Dodge wonder.

E. H. Montagu, European agent for the Selig Polyscope Company, in London, has advised the Chicago office that "The Ne'er-Do-Well" has become unusually popular in the British Isles, and that its presentation always crowds a theater. A most expensive line of publicity matter has been devoted to the big film drama, prominent among which are artistic and beautifully bound booklets giving the story of the photoplay and all the important scenes. On Friday afternoon, May 5, a private presentation was given at the Empire theater, Leicester Square, London.

I. Van Ronkle, manager of the Chicago branch office of the Bluebird Film Corporation, paid a flying trip to New York last week, where he made arrangements for an increase in his standing order. Business has increased so rapidly that the order for June far exceeds the standing order for April and May. Mr. Van Ronkle announces that he has signed contracts with the Ascher Brothers, this city, to show a Bluebird release in all the houses on that circuit, commencing Monday, May 29. The houses are the President, Oakland Square, Frolic, Lakeside, Calo, Cosmopolitan, Columbus and the Terminal.

F. A. Dempsey, a popular young Chicagoan, well known in various circles here, was recently appointed traveling salesman for George Kleine, in northern Illinois, to represent "Gloria's Romance" and the Musty Suffer comedies.

Petey Wales, of Lanark, Ill., owner of a circuit of eighteen opera houses in the northern section of the state, paid us a visit one day last week. In addition to playing road shows on his circuit, Mr. Wales shows moving pictures in all his houses, and reported excellent business. He renewed his subscription for the Moving Picture World, and said that he swears by it.

Fred S. Meyer, manager of Universal's Minneapolis office, has placed $300 on his mailing list for Reel Ammunition, issued weekly, under his direction as editor-in-chief. The front page in the issue of Monday, May 15, bears a facsimile of the check contributed by Universal to the recent exposition and convention at Minneapolis. The figures show the handsome sum of $300. The same issue, I notice, contains several brief letters from exhibitors showing their satisfaction with the pay-in-advance policy for film service. One exhibitor from Rush City, Minn., writes: "Find enclosed check to cover amount of service, in accordance with your new pay-in-advance policy, which I think is a good thing for each and every one of us." Another from the owner of the Star theater, Milton, N. Dak., states: "This new system of pay in advance for service is nothing but reasonable, and I am willing to pay in advance."

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday or Monday, May 28 and 29:

Studebaker—"Gloria's Romance," fourth chapter; "The Social Vortex" (George Kleine) and Tyrone Power and Lois Weber in "The Eye of God" (Bluebird). Beginning Monday, June 5, in addition to "Gloria's Romance," World features will be shown at this house, the Colonial-World program being taken over. The third chapter of "Gloria's Romance" was a fine drawing factor.

Fine Arts—Alfred Hamburger has retained the Vitaphone feature, "God's Country and the Woman," for another week. It made a great hit during its first week's run. Miss Charlotte Steindels orchestra, which opened Saturday, May 20, has become quite popular with patrons. Miss Steindels is a talented director, and her musical adaptations for the pictures are much appreciated. "The Merry Whirl," by the Castles, which originally was announced to open at the Ziegfeld theater on Saturday, May 27, will open at the Fine Arts on Saturday, June 3, instead.

Colonial—Charlie Chaplin in "Police" (Essanay), and Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell in "His Brother's Wife" (World). This program will end the last week of moving pictures at this theater, as on Monday, June 5, it will again become a first-class vaudeville house. "Treasure Island," adapted from Robert Louis Stevenson's romance, with the New York cast and production, will be the opening play.

Strand—Bessie Barriscale in "Sorrows of Love" (Kay-Bee). "A Trip to the Summit of Pike's Peak" (Mutual), and Bud Fisher's cartoons of Mutt and Jeff. Joseph Sheehan, the eminent operatic tenor, will be the soloist.

Orchestra Hall—Blanche Sweet in "The Thousand-Dollar Husband" (Paramount), and other pictures. Olive Kline, soprano soloist, fills out the bill.

Ziegfeld—Lillian Walker in "The Ordeal of Elizabeth" (Vitaphone), released through V-L-S-E, Inc., and other pictures.

La Salle—Fourth week of "The Little Girl Next Door" (Illinois vice film). Big business continues at this house.

Max Schwartz, manager of the Beach theater, presented "The Ne'er-Do-Well" to big business on Thursday and Friday, May 25 and 26. Special music was furnished by the Harper orchestra, under the direction of Paul S. Hirt. The Beach theater was the first, outside of the "Loop," to show the big Selig film in this city.

In the Municipal Court, Tuesday, May 23, Judge Stelk decided against Leslie Dudley Carter, son of Mrs. Leslie Carter-Payne, in his action to restrain Attorney Daniel Levy from executing an attachment for $6,075 on his mother's interest in the film, "Du Barry," produced by George Kleine in Italy. Mr. Carter testified that his mother had transferred her interest in the picture to him in consideration of a debt of $22,500 which she owed him. The court held that, as he had received her property, he could be held responsible for her debts. Attorney Levy levied the attachment for money he claimed to be due him for legal services rendered in representing Mrs. Carter in an action brought by her against George Kleine.

"The Little Girl Next Door" need not fear further interference from the City Council Judiciary Committee, as, by a vote of eight to seven, Alderman Buck's resolution directing Chief Healey to revoke the permit was placed on file. A score of clergymen, clubwomen and social workers testified to the "moral value" of the picture, and urged that restrictions be removed so that high school girls and boys might be permitted to see it. The Rev. M. P. Boynton, one of the first to favor the granting of a permit for the picture, said at the meeting of the committee: "There can be no just criticism of the film. I believe in turning the light on immoral conditions, and for that reason I believe the picture is doing good."

The Hon. Wm. Fenimore Cooper, a venerable judge of the Superior Court of Cook County, who has always proved himself a friend of the moving picture, is a candidate for reelection on June 5. Exhibitors in Chicago are supporting him strongly, and they should do so with willing hearts. It was through Judge Cooper's opinion that an injunction was issued prohibiting the City of Chicago from interfering with the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in this city. I hope he will be elected, notwithstanding charges that are being brought against him. Slides in his support will be seen on many screens in the city preceding the election.

Early Monday morning, May 22, the Dearborn theater, Dearborn and Division streets, Chicago, was raided by safe-blowers, who exploded two safes, securing $1,000 and causing about $1,000 damage to the house. The thieves took everything else of value in sight, from the office clock to the cornetist's instrument.

The National Association of Garment Manufacturers, which met in session at the Hotel La Salle, Thursday, May 25, adopted resolutions protesting against the making and exhibiting of films "assuming to show life in American factories, which pictures are untruthful and unauthentic and do not in any way represent conditions as they are in real life." One incensed official of the association said at the meeting: "These pictures are made by a lot of actors who never saw the inside of a factory. They seem to think that to satisfy the picture public they must make of every factory scene a piece of brutality. The girls are knocked around and discharged and treated in a way no American working girl would stand." It was moved and ordered that copies of the resolutions be sent to all the leading film producers in the country.

Manager Kopple of the Calo theater, 5406 North Clark street, one of the houses on the Ascher Brothers circuit, invited a committee from the Mothers' Council of the Civic Club to tea on Tuesday afternoon, May 23, at the close of the afternoon show. A special program for children had been arranged for the afternoon by Manager Kopple, and all the ladies invited are particularly interested in the children's programs which are now a feature at the Calo.

On the Pathe "Rooster-Booster" night, May 16, arranged by H. C. Holah, manager of Pathe's Chicago branch, in honor of his friend, Dan Coleman, many exhibitors attended from Aurora, Elgin and Joliet, Ill., and from South Bend and Elkhart, Ind. A contingent also came from Milwaukee, and one of the members, during the Harry Hastings show at the Columbia, in which Mr. Coleman stars, presented Dan with a cut glass decanter surmounted by a sterling silver rooster top, bearing an inscription expressing the esteem of the Milwaukee Rooster-Boosters. A live rooster was also presented Mr. Coleman, over the footlights, by a Chicago man, and the incident created quite a sensation. Mr. Coleman, after the show, was the guest of honor at the North Star Inn. Manager Holah was heartily congratulated by all on the success of the party, as he was the real Booster of the whole affair, which was devised and financed by him personally.

Charles Ridell and Frank Wesley were held on Friday, May 26, to the Grand Jury for alleged operation of a confidence game. They are charged with conducting a fake school for moving picture operators, and had at one time charge of the Logan Square Business College. It is said that they have secured about $40,000 from prospective students.

Director Robert Leonard has completed the picturization of his own story, "Ambrosia," and is now filming "Little Eve Edgerton," a comedy drama in five reels, featuring Ella Hall and Leonard, with a strong supporting cast. This is one of the film plays so excellently suited to the little girl roles in which Miss Hall excels. It will be at least three weeks before the picture is completed.

JULIUS CAESAR PRODUCTION.

Forty Thousand See Actors' Fund Production of Shakespeare's Tragedy Re-Enacted by All-Star Cast in Open-Air.

LET US extend our thanks, and bestow full credit upon those who so tirelessly labored in staging the production; and who, united, made a wondrous magnet which attracted the dollars, and attention, of the world, that, in the evening of their lives, aged and feeble actors might be made bright and comfortable.

These mere men, who have become great, are the ones, and they are today rejoicing in the good they have done.

The force behind the cast was as remarkable as the famed men who portrayed the characters and spoke the immortal words of the great poet.

First credit goes unquestionably to Raymond Wells, who directed the production from the first breaking of ground for the mighty amphitheater, through tedious night rehearsals, and to the successful but bloody climax of the tragedy.

The cast was as follows: Julius Caesar, Theodore Roberts; Octavius Caesar, Charles Gunn; Marcus Antonius, William Farnum; Cicero, Hal Wilson; Publius, C. H. Geldert; Popilius Lena, Howard Foster; Marcus Brutus, Tyrone Power; Cassius, Frank Keenan; Casca, DeWolf Hopper; Trebonius, Mark Fenton; Decius Brutus, Horace B. Carpenter; Metellus Cimber, Cecil Lionel; Cinna, T. H. Gowland; Flavius, Wilbur Highby; Marullus, Gilmore Hammond; Artemidorus, Harry W. Schumm; A Soothsayer, Carl Stockdale; Cinna, poet, Seymour Hastings; Lucillus, Tully Marshall; Titinius, T. E. Duncan; Messala, T. D. Crittenden; Young Cato, Douglas Fairbanks; Lucius, Capitola Holmes; Varro, Nicholas A. Kessler; Pindarus, George Berrengere; Calpurnia, Constance Crawley; Portia, Sarah Truax; A Barbaric Dancer, Mae Murray; Cleopatra, Grace Lord; First Citizen, Arthur Maude; Second Citizen, Ernest Shield; Third Citizen, Robert Anderson; Fourth Citizen, Clara further; Fifth Citizen, Samuel Searle; Slave to Caesar, Ralph Benzie; Slave to Antony, Robert Lawler; High Priest, M. Luiz; High Priestess, Mrs. F. A. Robinson; Son to Cleopatra, Francis Carpenter.

There are several thousand names which cannot be given. They are not even known, except to those who kept the books of the play. They are the "Extras," or those who took the parts of Centurions, Barbaric Dancers, Gladiators, Senators, Soldiers, Citizens and Foreign Pageantry. These are the ones who deserve credit for their work, their running, jumping, yelling, demonstrating, tumbling down the hillside to make the play realistic, and their work is highly appreciated by all who beheld.

Of course Wells could not be present everywhere at once, and he had an able corps of assistants who did their part in making the play a tremendous success. The list of assistant directors follows: Captain Louis R. Ball, Horace B. Carpenter, Ernest Shield, Wilbur Highby, Lionel O. Bradshaw, Carl Stockdale, T. E. Duncan, Mark Fenton, Ralph Benzie, T. D. Crittenden, Robert Anderson, Ray Cannon, Harry W. Schumm, Victor Goff, Gilmore Hammond, C. A. Homer, W. L. Brock, D. G. Wickland, W. E. Sears, B. E. Crowell, A. Allard, N. A. Kessler, Jack O'Brien, Robert Lawler, H. L. Swisher, Clara Turner, W. H. Gardner, Jr., Mrs. L. R. Ball, F. Rose, Capitola Holmes, Marjorie Riley, Mrs. Robert Lawler.

The great stage, with its various large settings, was in darkness, and the crowd was in comparative darkness, when from the towering hillside a penetrating scarlet glow cast its color on the opposite Capitoline Hill, bathing the Temple of Jupiter in a rosy hue, and the act was on. Behind the great scenes Raymond Wells had started the players on the greatest production the world has ever known. Then followed the action of the story. The light, blazing in radiant and far-reaching rays from the back hill, bathed the different scenes in harmonizing and beautifully illusive shades and lights. The glare of mid-day changed instantly to the gory terribleness of battle and strife, while another scene showed the evening in blue tinted shades of impenetrable night. The garden of Brutus was a wonderful scene, and each of the conspirators was made more dark by the tinted shadows.

The speaking of the lines was interspersed with beautiful pageants. Two hundred girls in Roman costume entered after the populace was driven away. These remained while the vast army passed in review. Mark Antony and the senators were shown, after Caesar and Calpurnia had crossed the forum, at the side, in conference. The entry of Cleopatra and the Egyptian girls was a strikingly gorgeous scene. The garden of Brutus' home was a revelation, even to the end of the conspiracy when the rising sun cast its bright colors over the scene.

Even if a thousand people edged out from uncomfortably hard seats, those who remained through the fifteen minute interval before the last act, were repaid, for, after the whole stage had been cleared of its buildings, and the crash of falling timbers told of scenery being wrecked, all was quiet, and a distant imperative whistle was heard, the heavens burst into flame and the hills for seemingly miles around gleamed with flaring torches and the armies of Antony were seen tearing down toward the headquarters of Brutus and his followers. This sight caused many ejaculations from the onlookers, for it was greater than any Fourth of July pyrotechnical display. The glaring lights outlined the army, with its armored fighters, dashing down the hill, some afoot, some on horse. Once a rider fell with his mount, and disappeared into the yawning darkness of the canyon. When riders passed close to the lights their forms hesitated a second while directly in front, then as they rode on down, great grotesque shadows in the smoky flare were cast across the heavens.

Again when Cassius stood alone in the wide foreground, and as the army touched fire to the tents on the near hillside, the messenger ran to him and told of the advance, the lean and hungry Cassius caused his own death. The blazing tents were spectacularly realistic, and the words of Antony rung in our ears "Unloose the dogs of war." Then to the terrible ending of the play when Brutus does away with himself, the scenes were fast and furious.

The only curtain on this gigantic natural stage was a veil of shadow, which rose and fell between the acts of the tragedy. This great low shadow was raised by huge electric lanterns mounted on the hilltop behind the audience. It was lowered by the pulling of a switch which turned out the strong lights.

Not only did the setting outdo anything attempted before, but the rare collection of stars and stagefolk who participated, eclipsed anything even contemplated. Each was a star, and each star did his best, and his best was the best possible.

De Wolf Hopper, who makes smiles all the time, did the part of his career as Cæsar. His impersonation of this particular person was perfect.

It was easy to say forty thousand persons saw the show, but how do you suppose this little crowd reached the great theater? That is a side story and it deserves some mention. The canyon where the event was staged lies north of Hollywood, off the main street about a mile, and up the hilly landscape reached by a single boulevard. Two streets served as leaders to this one artery, and up these went automobiles four abreast and crowds overflowing the sidewalks. Early in the afternoon the walking classes, loaded with pillows, blankets and wraps, and with a goodly supply of lunch and drink, wended their way to the gates. They entered and spent the late afternoon exploring the great amphitheater and gradually selecting their seats. From five o'clock on the autoists started their trip from all points of the compass. The parking spaces were the barren hills and lot, and ere two hours had passed the congestion was terrible.

At this, most artistic production there was one deplorable mistake, perhaps through an oversight, but anyway it was terrible. At the entrance, was a space of about an acre before the amphitheater was reached, littered with "hot dog" merchants, pop corn stands, and program sellers. During the most important scenes, these hooters yelled their goods, and perhaps five thousand persons directly on the side near the entrance, had to suffer for the short sightedness of someone in the executive committee who had let this concession. It spoiled the whole show for many. But things like this are often likely to happen, and it is only to be deplored, and taken as a wise hint for the next production, and they plan to stage another next year.

Credit is due to Raymond Wells who came forward with his idea before the Hollywood Carnival Association, which annually "pulls off" a great affair. Wells said that they would derive more benefit by putting on a gigantic production of Julius Caesar and giving the money to the Actors' Fund. He made Charles A. Cooke, who acted as director general, see his idea. So did C. C. Craig, and others. Then they all "went to it" and they certainly "put it over." Today they are planning another event for June. The architects have ideas and drawings for plans of a mammoth theater to be built for permanent annual presentations as this one. The others who aided the committee include W. W. Campbell, who did the construction, bossing as well as organizing the musical aggregation and arranging the wonderful music. There were also a dozen others who did their share, and who guarantee to do it again when called upon. Frederick C. White, formerly a moving picture writer, managed the publicity for the event locally.

MUSHROOM MOVING PICTURE SCHEMES.

Clever Games Are Being Worked to Get "Partners" With Capital.

Los Angeles is a veritable hot-bed for mushroom picture producing companies, fake schools for acting, and other promoting schemes. Now according to the "Times" a number of questionable moving picture producing companies who are accused of obtaining money wrongfully by selling partnership interests to unwary persons are at the present time being quietly investigated by the local authorities. While several persons have lost money and apparently there is an element of fraud in the transactions, the method has been worked out with such infinite pains that all violation of the letter of the law is avoided.

Following is the system as explained by a victim whose name is withheld by the authorities:

A woman advertised for a partner in a small producing company. The man who answered the advertisement received the explanation from her that she was the owner of a valuable scenario and had a successful system for selling the completed film to a chain of moving-picture houses in small cities and towns in Southern California and Arizona. Her proposition seemed attractive and she explained how great fortunes were made in producing business, calling attention to some recent film successes.

The woman, who occupied an unpretentious office, explained that she had put all her capital into the enterprise and right at the moment when she was ready to achieve success found that she did not have quite enough money to produce the film and carry the business one more step to the place where it would begin to bring in financial returns.

The man paid $1,000 for a half interest and became the traveling representative of the firm. Shortly after he began his tour of the moving-picture houses in country towns, he was informed that his partner in Los Angeles had sold his interest to a stranger, and he was called in off the road. It turned out that the second person to buy an interest was not on the inside with the alleged ring and when the two partners met and reviewed the situation, they found that all they had was the manuscript of a moving-picture play, a high-sounding firm name and a small equity in the office furniture.

Both men had given up all their available capital for their interest in the mythical producing firm and had no funds to carry on the business. During the first victim's short road trip he learned of the power of the great producing companies and saw that to compete with them was a losing game. The two partners who had been thrown together by adversity talked the situation over, concluded that they were a pair of "suckers" and gave up the office.

Before the partnership was dissolved, the men tried to find the woman, the former partner of each, but were unsuccessful. Later she was located in a new office, with a new firm name and the manuscript of another photo play. She was advertising for a partner.

The District Attorney's office investigated the case, but found that she had operated so carefully that there were no grounds upon which to issue a complaint unless further evidence of fraud is obtained. It is asserted, however, that the promoters will not be able to operate much longer before a way is found to stop them should they not heed the warnings which have been issued.

BOMBAY HAS ONLY SIX PICTURE HOUSES. Great Opportunities in the Far East for Motion Picture Enterprises, Says Los Angeles Visitor.

Successful American promoters of motion picture industries may find wonderful opportunities in India, according to Jamsedjee L. Bhumgara, a Parsee, and a successful merchant and manufacturer of Bombay, who arrived in Los Angeles this week. Mr. Bhumgara will remain several days before leaving for New York and other eastern cities on a business trip.

Mr. Bhumgara says there are only six motion picture theaters in Bombay, a city with a population of more than 1,000,000. He states also that very few good photo plays from this country are produced in India.

"The relations between the people of my country and the United States are very friendly," said Mr. Bhumgara. "Following the war there ought to be a great trade development between India and America. We also are prepared to welcome some high-class motion picture companies in Bombay."

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Little Mary Miles Minter accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Selby, arrived at Santa Barbara on Thursday last week, to begin her work at the studios of the American Film Manufacturing Company.

James Kirkwood, who directed Mary Pickford in many of her successes, is expected to direct Miss Minter in the company in which she will be starred.

Jack Livingston, Myrtle Stedman's new leading man of Morosco Photoplay Company, is heading a movement for the formation of a company of militia composed of motion picture actors. Mr. Livingston believes because of the fact that the majority of photoplayers have taken part in military plays in which they had to learn military tactics and the handling of machine guns and other arms, they would make excellent soldiers. Jack Livingston comes of a patriotic ancestry and is keen on the subject of "preparedness." His great grandfather, Phillip Livingston, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, while Robert Livingston was a member of the commission that negotiated the purchase of Louisiana from France.

Myrtle Stedman, the Morosco film star, is announced as the feature of the concert to take place at Trinity Auditorium next Sunday. Miss Stedman is a mezzo soprano of unusual attainments.

Frank Lloyd will take Vivian Martin and a company of Pallas players to Bear Valley Wednesday this week to film some scenes in Miss Martin's new picture, entitled "Mountain Laurel."

The American Women's Film Company contemplate building a studio to be located at 1339 Gordon Street, Hollywood. J. Farrell MacDonald, the managing director, and Lloyd Whitlock, the technical director, stated that the plant would compare favorably with the best studios in this locality. Miss Lucretia Del Valle is the star of the new company.

Anna Pavlowa, the dancer who played with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company last fall, will make a trip to the coast about June 1st and spend her two months' vacation in Los Angeles. She will not appear in pictures, it is stated, but will spend her time in recreation and working out ideas for the ballet production she is to stage next year.

Motion pictures were taken one night this week of ice skating at the Bristol Cafe by a company of L-Ko players, to be used with scenes in a North Pole comedy being produced by the company. The gay after-theater crowd supping in the cafe was used as a background. Billie Armstrong, Dan Russell, Reggie Morris, Carmel Meyers and Gertrude Griffith were included in the cast.

The E. & R. Jungle Film Company at Eastlake Park wants scenarios featuring the two educated chimpanzees, "Nap and Sally." Twenty-five ($25) will be paid for a good idea and the company will not hesitate to pay $100 for a well-worked out story. It will not be an easy task to write a scenario; a careful study of the chimpanzees should be made before attempting to write the story.

Sir Beerbohm Tree's film version of Shakespeare's "Macbeth," produced by D. W. Griffith and directed by John Emerson, will have its premiere at the Majestic Theater following "Civilization."

The E. & R. Jungle Film Company has just completed a one-reel animal comedy called "Fowl Play." The cast includes Walter Rogers, Eva MacKenzie, Charles Carter and "Napoleon and Sally." J. J. Franz is the director.

The latest member of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company is Miss Annette De Poe. She came to Los Angeles recently from New Orleans where she played in stock. Her first appearance was in the E. & R. Jungle release last week entitled "Hitting the High Places," a funny farce with "Nap and Sally," produced under the direction of J. J. Franz.

An unusual scene was filmed by the Kalem Company last week during the making of an installment for the "Hazard of Helen" series when Helen Gibson jumped from an aeroplane traveling at the rate of forty-five miles an hour to a freight train below. Aviator Christofferson, who had been engaged for these pictures, refused to take the chance of flying so low over the train and allowing the jump to be made at first approach, but Miss Gibson persuaded him that it would be easy. When the aeroplane swooped down over the train the aviator ran into a cross wire stretched from two telegraph poles which lined the track, almost wrecking his machine. Miss Gibson was then many feet from the height at which she was supposed to jump, but seeing the possibility of wrecking the aeroplane and not being able to fly lower, she jumped, landing on the side of the car below and falling to the sand beside the tracks. The impact of the machine against the wire broke it and pieces were brought to the studio as relics. The scenario was altered to continue the story from where Miss Gibson landed in the sand, as the aviator refused to make a retake.

Harry Millarde has just finished a joyous Kalem reel comedy featuring Ethel Teare, in which the fair Ethel is a police officer and wins the honor role class when she was sent out to arrest flirting males. Among those being brought in is Jack, who is already in love with the fair officer. They tarry long enough to marry before Ethel reports for duty at the Station House, where are sentenced several members of the Bachelor's Alliance Club who were held on the charge of flirting with an officer.

Victor Rottman, Jack MacDermott and Gus Leonard are among the bachelors in the cast.

William F. Russell and his company of American Players have spent the week past at Long Beach, where they made water scenes for a Mutual Masterpicture "The Man Who Would Not Die."

Shirlock Burton, Harry Keenan and Leonia Hutton are among the principals in the cast. Jack Prescott is co-directing with Mr. Russell.

Anna Luther, the Keystone Triangle star, has renounced comedy to return to straight dramatic work and has signed as lead with the Fox Company.

Richard Stanton will direct Miss Luther in her first picture, for the scenes of which Mr. Stanton will take his players to the Mojave desert.

Albert Russell took the Universal Company's Mason-Russell players to San Diego last week for the filming of water scenes of Billie Mason's comedy entitled "The Cannibal."

Little Mary Sunshine is back at the Balboa studio after a month's vacation in Colorado. She was the feature player in a recent Pathe Gold Rooster release bearing her name. Not four years old, the child played the lead like a veteran with Henry King opposite her. The little star will now have a company all her own at the Balboa studio under King's direction. D. F. Whitcomb will write the scenarios for little Mary.

Catherine Burke is the latest addition at the Balboa studios. Miss Burke recently arrived from New York where she has been working in pictures for some time. Her first picture will be in a Horkheimer production opposite Henry King.

On Wednesday this week after a day of work about the docks of San Francisco harbor, the Helen Holmes company under the direction of J. P. McGowan, left port for Honolulu, where they are to make exterior scenes in the production of a five reel story of the Kimberly Mines entitled "Diamond Runners." From the standpoint of production the Signal studios at present have the appearance of inactivity. In other ways, however, they are quite as busy as they have been, as the whole studio is undergoing a renovation, in many cases a reconstruction.

The street set which was used in the production of "Medicine Bend" is being torn down and in its place is being constructed a street set for the screen version of Alice McGowan's novel "Judith of the Cumberlands." In another part of the grounds a court house is being erected about which many of the important exterior scenes in the production to be staged. Orin Denny, superintendent of the laboratories, is taking advantage of the company's absence to remodel the projection room. In the cutting room, a number of labor saving devices have been installed, making for economy of time in editing film. On every hand preparations are being made to be in readiness for immediate local production as soon as the company returns.

Contributions Coming In Theater Managers Respond to the Appeal for the Actors' Fund.—Percentage Indicates Poor Business.

MARCUS LOEW, one of the largest theater owners and most successful exhibitors of motion pictures in the United States, has sent to J. Stuart Blackton, treasurer of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund, a check for $350.60, representing the percentage of the gross receipts of thirteen of the principal Loew theaters in New York and vicinity on National Motion Picture Tribute Day. The total of $350.60 is made up of 5 per cent. of the receipts of nine of Mr. Loew's vaudeville theaters, and 10 per cent. of the receipts of four of his largest motion picture theaters on Monday, May 15. On this day Mr. Loew exhibited in five of his theaters the first run of the new Charley Chaplin film, "The Floorwalker," the greatest moving picture attraction from a money standpoint on the screen today. The theater from which Mr. Loew contributed a portion of his receipts on Tribute Day included Loew's theater, New Rochelle; Loew's National theater, Loew's Seventh Avenue theater, Loew's Orpheum theater, Loew's 86th Street theater, Loew's Lincoln Square theater, Loew's Greely Square theater, Loew's Bijou theater, Loew's Fulton theater, Loew's Royal theater, Loew's theater, Newark, N. J.; and Loew's Lyric theater, Hoboken, N. J.

Lewis H. Stone

SOLDIER, cowpuncher, big game hunter, sailor, actor—that is Lewis S. Stone, popular on stage and screen, who just finished his work in the leading role in Essanay's multiple reel feature, "According to the Code." Mr. Stone will be seen in this feature, released through the V-L-S-E, early in July. Mr. Stone will be remembered in a recent Essanay screen production, "The Havoc," in which he played one of three principals with Gladys Hanson and Bryant Washburn.

Mr. Stone has had a career far more romantic than most of the parts he is called on to portray. Born in Worcester, Mass., in 1879, he was educated at Barnard College in New York City. When the Spanish war broke out he was with one of the first regiments to leave the States. He then shipped as a sailor before the mast to see the world. In his wanderings he tried cowpunching and acting for a medicine show. Later he took up acting seriously, and after a short experience with stock companies, jumped to leading man.

Marguerite Clayton plays opposite Mr. Stone in "According to the Code," while E. H. Calver, who directed the piece, and Sydney Ainsworth play the other important roles. The play was written by Charles Michelson.

Ivy Close Goes to Jacksonville

"Most Beautiful Woman in the World," Now Kalem Star, Takes up New Duties in the Southern Studio.

READERS of the Moving Picture World know that in a contest to find the most beautiful woman in the world, Ivy Close, the famous English actress was the winner of the wreath. You also remember that the contest was sponsored by The Chicago Tribune and the London Daily Mirror and that the Kalem Company has brought her over to America on a substantial salary. She is now on her way to the Southern studio of the Kalem Company, in Jacksonville, but before she sailed she permitted the readers of the Moving Picture World to meet her, through one of its representatives, in the office of Vice-President William Wright of the Kalem Company. She is indeed a very charming young woman of the typical Anglo-Saxon type with hair like ripe wheat and eyes like the blue of forget-me-nots. Miss Close, in spite of her beauty, seems not to have been spoiled a particle. She is just as simple and sincere in her sentiments as a girl. There is no posing to make an impression and no affectation in her. She must be a great artist, for she has not a touch of the professional about her.

Miss Close sat beside Vice-President Wright's desk and the World man spent a half hour talking with her there. Of course we talked about the war and the changes that it has made in English life. She speaks with a restrained, pleasing vivacity; but in the intervals when the conversation lagged for a moment, one might notice that her eyes were looking into the far-away, and there was just that lessening of the sunlight when a summer cloud passes. But the sunshine would flash back again.

Mr. Wright remarked that it took nine days for one of his cablegrams to get to its destination in England.

"Why," said Miss Close, "I sent a cable the other day and I got my answer the same day."

We suggested that the English government has taught English people a code to identify themselves and so know that such messages are safe.

"I'll tell you what it was," she replied, "they got my accent, you know. It was my accent."

Mr. Wright said, "We'll have to have you send all our English telegrams."

"Oh, but I'm losing my accent every day, you know," she replied. "Your American ways are all so catching."

"Then you like America," we ventured.

"Indeed, I do—now; but I didn't at first. I didn't have a friend here at first; but I have lots now."

Miss Close had the misfortune of missing the ship she had intended to take and caught the next, so that no one expected her and she landed as one in a strange land. One of the first things she noticed was the pleasant feeling of the bright streets in the evening. London is as dark as a poke on account of "Zepe's." There is no fear of "Zepe" here and there is freedom from many of the other cares of war, cares that get on one's nerves. Her friends on the other side are still bearing those cares and Miss Close does not forget their burdens, though free for the time herself.

This is Miss Close's first visit to America and she confesses to a slight feeling of strangeness that has not yet passed. "That is one of the reasons I am anxious to get at work before the camera," she says. "I enjoy screen work and put every bit of energy and thought that I possess to the task of pleasing the picture followers. There won't be any danger of homesickness then, for I won't have time to think of anything but my work."

DEVELOPING PARAMOUNT PUBLICITY.

The publicity department of the Paramount Pictures Corporation is putting out a series of features that are reaching the sections of Sunday newspapers beyond the confines of the regular moving picture pages. Interviews on Paramount topics with Frederick Palmer, the war correspondent; Henry Retherdahl, the naval expert; Frieda Hempel and Mme. Gadsby, stars of the Metropolitan Opera, are commanding full and half pages in the magazine sections of more than two hundred newspapers a week. This is in addition to the regular Paramount representation in the motion picture columns and pages. Edward Lyell Fox, who is directing Paramount publicity, states that a large newspaper syndicate has agreed to supply Paramount features to all its clients, regarding them as legitimate publicity, because, in each case, adjectives are restricted and the intrinsic value of the story is apparent.

"Who's Guilty?" Series Popular

Pathe Exchange Reports Unusual Demand for This Interesting Subject—Thinks Advance Booking Record Broken.

PATHE has just had the unusual experience of greatly increasing its order of positive copies on a picture three weeks after its initial release. Generally, it is found by a distributor that the original order of prints is larger than necessary, that the eye of desire has been bigger than the organ of digestion. But with the release on May 22d of the third photo-novel in the "Who's Guilty?" series, Pathe Exchange has had to instruct its Bound Brook laboratories to add seventeen copies to the standing weekly order of 100 prints on the "Who's Guilty?" pictures.

Two weeks before the release of the first of these photo-novels there was a conference between J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, and W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, which is producing the "Who's Guilty?" series. The decision was reached that 100 prints of each of the fourteen "Who's Guilty?" pictures would suffice thoroughly to cover the United States and Canada.

For once two expert film distributors did not go wrong in their estimates. Rather, they erred on the side of caution. For with the release of the first two of the "Who's Guilty?" photo novels, bookings increased to such an extent that almost every Pathe branch sent in an urgent telegram calling for at least one and sometimes as high as four additional prints, Boston added two to its quota, New York called for five additional copies, Chicago and Philadelphia for three more each.

So insistent was this demand that the prints originally destined for Canadian consumption were diverted to the Pacific Coast and a hurry order was placed in the laboratories for new Canadian copies. The increased orders mean a total of 476,000 feet of "Who's Guilty?" positive to be added to the already huge aggregate of 2,800,000 feet of positive film originally destined for the American and Canadian markets.

On May 17th, the advance bookings on "Who's Guilty?" crossed the $300,000 mark, establishing what is believed to be a new record in advance bookings with cash payment on the first four of the series. A week later these figures had climbed $68,000 higher, with thirty-two branches reporting, an average of slightly more than $2,000 a branch in increased bookings in seven days. When it is considered that advance bookings on series and serials usually fall off after the first picture is released, rather than that they should increase, this growth is deemed by Pathe to warrant the belief that "Who's Guilty?" will set the highest figure ever reached in two-reel distribution.

TRUE BOARDMAN AGAIN WITH KALEM.

True Boardman, one of the picture stars remembered since the pioneer days and more recently popular in the title role of Kalem's famous series, "Stingaree," is once more back under the Kalem banner. Boardman has already started to work before the camera at the Glendale, Cal. studios, and it will not be long before he is seen on the screen again.

The success of the "Stingaree" series, by E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles," caused a firm of Western theatrical managers to make Boardman an unusually tempting offer to return to the speaking stage for a tour through the middle west and Coast states. After appearing in a few of the early "Social Pirates" episodes, Boardman yielded to the inducements and has now returned after a most profitable season. "I found the fame of 'Stingaree' the strongest advertising I have received in my career," he declares. "In many of the cities we played 'Stingaree' was still being exhibited, but we found it more advertising than opposition."

PEARCE NOW AUDITOR FOR SELZNICK.

Charles L. Pearce, auditor of the World Film Corporation, resigned last week to become auditor of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc., the general business company of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation. Mr. Pearce, though a young man, is recognized as one of the most expert accountants in the film industry. He was a public accountant before entering the film business. He is now engaged in systematizing the home office and the various Selznick branches.

Plot of "The Fall of a Nation"

First Published Outline of the Dixon Drama of National Defense.

THE "details which have been lacking concerning the story of "The Fall of a Nation" can now be supplied. June 6 is the opening date at the Liberty theater, New York, of the Thomas Dixon sequel to "The Birth of a Nation," and of Victor Herbert's original operatic score expressly composed for it.

The play proper opens in the New York mansion of Charles Waldron, who loves Virginia Holland, but whose big ambition is to establish the rule of Imperialism in America. Miss Holland is the leader of the Suffragist-Peace group. She comes into conflict with Congressman John Vassar. His bill providing for a large American army is defeated. In the course of their political encounters, the Congressman's heart is won by the many charms of Virginia. She refuses him because he is so decisively opposed to her principles.

In league with the Imperial Confederation of Northern Europe, Charles Waldron hatches the great treason. Twenty thousand subjects of foreign powers, resident in New York, rise in the night. They capture the city from the National Guard, its sole defenders. Patriots and refugees flee to Long Island, where an American army is hastily improvised. But in the meantime a powerful fleet conveying transports has brought 150,000 invaders equipped with Krupps and all the latest death-dealing devices. After effecting a landing they whip the Americans in a three-day battle. The nation falls. Washington, Philadelphia, Boston, next Chicago and St. Louis are occupied. Waldron puts on regal uniform and is hailed viceroy of the "provinces of North America."

Virginia Holland professes loyalty to the new regime. Waldron intrusts her with organizing the Imperial Legion of Honor among American women, indicating that her high reward will be the vicereine's seat at his side or possibly an empress's crown. While touring the country on this mission, the girl secretly enrolls the oath-bound order of the Daughters of Jael. She swears the flower of American womanhood—a million girls and women—to the destruction of the foreign usurpers. Those who cannot be won over by the women are marked for certain death.

In a night like the terrible Sicilian Vespers or the dread St. Bartholomew's Day, the Daughters of Jael and their male colleagues fall upon the reveling Imperial minions. The wireless stations are taken, the forts and arsenals captured, the ships boarded, and the fast-riding American cavalry tramples down and cuts to pieces the drunken foreign soldiers opposing them. "When the sun rose on the harbor of New York the Stars and Stripes flew from every ship and fort. An army of five hundred thousand men, half of them with the best rifles in their hands and big guns lumbering in their lines, were mobilizing under General Wood to capture Boston and Norfolk."

Waldron fell in the final melee. John Vassar claimed Virginia Holland, who had atoned for her Peace-at-any-price folly by defying death to restore the sacred Union of States.

In the cast are Arthur Shirley, Lorraine Huling, Percy Standing, C. E. Geldert, Philip Gastrock, Flora MacDonald, Leila Frost, Edna May Wilson, Paul Willis, Mildred Bracken, May Geraci, Beulah Burns and many others. "The Fall of a Nation" is a prologue and three acts, or twelve reels in film parlance. Bartley Cushing was the principal stage director. William C. Thompson and John W. Boyle photographed the great spectacle.

Bumping It Down to Bayshore

The Fourth Estate, on a Visit to Ralph Ince's Studio, Finds a New Sensation in Cross-Country Bus Riding.

IN ADDITION to the representatives of the American periodicals, there will be representatives of French, English, German, Scandinavian, Russian, Danish, Chinese and Indian papers dealing with motion pictures. We read one paragraph of the prospectus of the junket conducted by Louis J. Beck, on behalf of Ralph W. Ince—"Ince of the Atlantic," or to be more precise, Vitagraph Ince, of Bayshore, L. I.—on the morning, afternoon and EVENING of May twenty-fifth.

Again quoting from Mr. Beck's composition, now translated into so many tongues, it was "a most important occasion." For corroboration see the Reform News and Dun Hey Weekly, Jewish Daily Forward, Jewish Morning Journal, Italian Evening Bulletin, the Norwegian News, Courier Des Etats-Unis, or, if none of these publications are at hand, ask Jim Milligan, of The Billboard—he knows.

As the crow flies, Bayshore is some forty odd miles from Park Row, and as Jim Milligan might say, the crow always reminds one of a sight-seeing bus with unimpressible tires, because it is so different. Jim is very strong on the reminiscent qualities of contrast; but weak on the technique of cross-country bus riding, as mastered by Harry Havens, who meets the bumps as an expert horseman meets the movements of his steed. For the benefit of less experienced travelers it may be well to note Mr. Havens' method. Placing both hands on the back of the seat in front of him and his feet squarely on the floor, he moves regularly up and down, thus avoiding half the bumps because half of the time he is in the air. Mr. Havens found the exercise so invigorating on the outward journey that he boarded the bus again for the trip home and rode blithely, far into the starry night.

With a fine regard for racial characteristics, Mr. Beck divided The Fourth Estate into two parts, those of a daring temperament being shown to a car that sometimes traveled ten miles an hour, the less reckless occupying another vehicle that steadily strengthened a rearguard position. The first halt was in the more or less picturesque suburb of East New York, where it was planned to connect with a train carrying a delinquent member of The Fourth Estate, according to reports an American.

The second stop was unpremeditated. Happy laborers had long since consumed their mid-day meal by the roadside. Mr. Havens was taking the bumps with methodical precision and others were shifting spasmodically in their seats, when far away on the crest of a hill there loomed a group of men and a motionless bus. A bearing had cracked under the strain.

Mr. Beck, fresh from a telephone conversation with Mr. Ince, explained the situation, touching lightly on a subject of constantly increasing importance. Twelve miles away "clam chowder was boiling over and spring chickens were burning to a crisp." Quickly the two bus loads became as one, the driver threw on high speed, and disregarding all warnings to slow down within town limits, maintained an even clip of fully eight miles an hour. In four hours flat, as the bus moves, if not as the crow flies, The Fourth Estate was moved from Park Row to Mr. Ince's studio.

Small, nicely appointed tables lined the sides of the room and at these tables the guests were served. Then there was music, vocal and instrumental, during the luncheon, and for subsequent entertainment, Mr. Ince's latest picture, "The Destroyers," was shown. Lucille Lee Stewart, the star of the production, assisted in welcoming The Fourth Estate. The 5.44 train to New York was unusually crowded.

FIFE PLAY FOR ANN PENNINGTON.

The play in which dainty Ann Pennington will make her debut as a Famous Players star was written by Shannon Fife, and has been selected by Famous Players as a story best suited to Miss Pennington's talent. In the Fife play the former star of the Ziegfeld Follies will have ample opportunity to demonstrate her versatility, being called upon to do everything from classic dancing to the more strenuous role of heroine in a big fire scene.

Light Breaking in South America

Native Experts Describe Situation and Point to Grand Opening for American Producers—How One American Called a Bluff—Interesting Facts and Figures.

By W. Stephen Bush.

WITH the erstwhile substantial profits from the European market dwindling away to nothing—"and the worst is yet to come," the eyes of many American producers are turning toward the sister republics of Central and South America. Very slowly with halting steps and many a disturbing doubt the American exporter has within the last year come somewhat nearer to this market which in spite of appearances to the contrary is one of the most promising in the world. The tendency not only in the film industry but in other commercial fields as well has been to leave things entirely to the commission house and never go behind its returns. Now of course the broker or the commission house is quite contented with such a posture of affairs. The whole thing gets on the plane of least resistance and the spirit of enterprise and initiative and every trace of progress and constructive work disappears. The film situation if anything is a good deal worse. From the view point of the American producer it is about as bad as it can be.

The Situation in a Nutshell.

Here is the situation in a nutshell: The film importing and renting business is in the hands of a few men. These men controlling a majority of the nineteen exchanges in South America impose their conditions upon the owners of the motion picture theaters. They themselves own quite a few theaters which in certain sections notably in Argentine makes their grip of affairs pretty well unbreakable for the present at any rate. We had our own monopolistic phases right here in the North but there is a very vital difference between the controlling group of producers that dominated the market here in 1909 and the monopolists of South America. You may say that the industry up here had then fallen under a despotism but you will fail to size up things properly if you do not add that it was a benevolent despotism; yes benevolent and intelligent too. The monopoly in the great country to the South of us is neither benevolent nor intelligent. It is wasteful, destructive, reactionary. It exploits the market ruthlessly just for the profit of today and with no thought of tomorrow. Of course a condition like that breeds cheap films. South America has long been known hereabouts as the dumping ground for the cheapest product. It has been and still is the home of the aged film. Why should the combine bother about quality when they are able to foist the cheapest stuff on the public and the exhibitor?

Why They Prefer the Cheap Stuff.

Why, indeed? A couple of years ago I was talking to an exhibitor in a large town over in Jersey when a bookish agent appeared and offered him a well-known classic film at a very reasonable price. The bookish agent talked a good deal as men of his kind will and often must but the exhibitor had no answer for him. Finally he took him into the lobby showed him the waiting crowds all pushing toward the box office and then said smilingly: "Why should I show them any thing better as long as this junk gets the money." The man reaped a short harvest, but today his theater is no more and two blocks from his former field of activities is a new modern theater using the best pictures obtainable and doing a wonderful business.

Notice the perfect parallel to conditions in the South-American market today. The renter and importer buying the cheapest stuff obtainable and getting the money for it while his patrons never see a first-class American-made picture. Not that they do not pay enough of an admission. In Buenos Aires and indeed in the whole Argentine Republic the price of admission averages about 20 cents in American money. Not a bad margin of profit. In the rest of South America the average price of admission is only a trifle below that figure. In Central America and the West Indies conditions are just about the same, though Cuba begins to take to American films as it learns more about them.

Calling a Latin Bluff.

It has been the custom of brokers buying for the South American market to decry American-made films, to feed fat the anti-Yankee prejudice in those countries, to say that conditions in the South American film market were abominably bad, that there was room only for junk and that any American trying to break into the market would only succeed in breaking himself. This story has been peddled around New York for years and many of our producers are tempted to believe it. Many, but not all. I happened to be present at a very interesting interview between a buyer for South America and the representative of one of the foremost if not the foremost producing company in this country. Our broker began the ancient Jeremiad about fearful conditions in the South American market. He was anxious to buy at six or seven cents the cream of this company's production. He was quite fluent and plausible but presently he was interrupted by the American who said in blunt fashion:

"Do you know we are tired having you folks come up here and tell us how rotten your market is. It just happens that we know to the last dollar the money your company (the great monopoly) made last year. We have had our own man down there to examine conditions. We find the people of South America are the best patrons of motion pictures of any in the world, we find that they have money and are willing to spend it, we find that they appreciate quality whenever they are allowed to get a glimpse of it. I tell you that we are going into this market with a vengeance and we are going to exploit it according to our own plans. I may add here your further enlightenment that we are reasonably sure to get more than six or seven cents a foot for our films with the most generous allowance for overhead expenses." The broker was dumbfounded. The American asked him to make application for a job whenever the big invasion was started. "We'll be able to pay you a good salary," he added with a most gratifying smile.

Natives Are Ready for Best Quality.

Now, here is the only practical attitude for the American producer who wants to go into the market and get his share. The most pleasing and not the least encouraging feature in connection with the problem is the help he will receive from the natives. Almost all the exhibitors and some of the smaller exchanges now held down by the monopoly will welcome him. He need not worry about introductions. The natives are waiting for him with the exception of course of the men who now enjoy such a delightful monopoly. Our own Cine-Mundial, the growing Spanish edition of The Moving Picture World, furnishes plenty of evidence to this effect. It has become the rallying point of the independent and the uncontrolled exchanges and of many exhibitors who are in search of quality. This means that "Cine-Mundial" is blazing the way, as it was intended it should, and that it is fulfilling its mission as the herald of the American producer in Central and South America. Only recently a film expert and exchange man from Buenos Aires called at the offices of Cine-Mundial and spoke with wonder and admiration of American-made films. He has now spent something like three months in this country studying conditions.

Best American Films Unknown.

"Your best films are never seen in South America," he said. All the films you now import into South America do not constitute fifteen per cent. The trashiest sort of stuff is the stuff that represents the American film in Buenos Aires and everywhere else in South America. As things stand today an exhibitor will not dare to advertise American films. It would queer him with his patrons. What we see of your films today is sickly sentimental stuff, infantile and imbecile and some Wild West films.

Going into the facts and figures our informant said: "If Buenos Aires alone we have 250 motion picture theaters many of them the equal of the best you have there. I do not count the 'cinemas' run in cafes. Many more are in progress of erection. There is not a village in the whole Republic which does not have its moving picture house. The monthly renting business done in Argentine amounts today to very near $200,000 in American money. In Argentine we have not only daily changes but we often change our programs on the same day. A show rarely consists of more than three reels. Our unit is half a reel and it is no unusual thing to see a five reel feature broken up into ten parts and to show five parts at one performance and then change another price of admission for the second instalment. Though practiced to some extent in other parts of South America, this method of showmanship prevails principally in the Argentine Republic.

"The daily change is the order of the day in Buenos Aires and the other big cities in Argentine, though of course there are exceptions. In Brazil matters are somewhat different. There daily changes are almost unknown, the program is changed weekly or twice and three times a week. Brazil exacts a somewhat heavy duty on films. It is regulated by weight and amounts on positives to more than five dollars a kilo, a kilo containing 420 feet of film. The total expense for importing say seven kilos is about $13.70. This of course includes freight charges, storage, etc. The tariff is about the same for other South American countries. The monthly import of film into South America calculated on last year's statistics is as follows:

	Metres
Argentine Republic	190,000
Republic of Brazil	170,000
Republic of Chile (deducting the amount of film brought in direct from Argentina, Peru and Bolivia)	30,000
Republics of Peru and Bolivia	100,000
Republic of Uruguay (nothing is imported, as all film comes in direct from Argentina, almost exclusively)
Total amount of material imported from Europe and the United States	490,000

More Facts and Figures.

"There is indeed a splendid future for the American producer in Brazil. Rental prices are very high, offsetting the high duty. The motion picture centre in Brazil is the city of Sao Paulo. The renting business in Brazil amounts to $150,000 per month in American money. Chile has bravely gotten over its recent financial difficulties and it is a great patron of the motion picture. The film centre is Lima in Peru and Buenos Aires, these cities supplying Chile, which imports but little film directly. In Chile itself Santiago is the great film centre. Motion picture houses though numerous enough are not equipped in the luxurious fashion which is found in other parts of South America. The taste of the Chileans is still somewhat crude but with better pictures a better taste no doubt will be developed and a market found for the best quality. It is difficult to form a correct estimate of the rental business in Chile, there are some small distributors in Antofagasta, Concepcion, Valparaiso and Punta Arenas whose business cannot easily be calculated. I believe however that $50,000 monthly is about right. In Peru and Bolivia the motion picture is making rapid strides and the monthly rental business amounts to about $50,000 in American money. Nowhere however has the popularity of the motion picture been more marked than in Uruguay. In Montevideo alone there are seventy motion picture theaters, the great majority of them of very high class. Splendid motion picture houses are likewise found in Minas, St. Jose, Durango, Salto and Paisandu. Uruguay gets its film supply directly from Buenos Aires. The laws of the trade marks and registration which in some of the South Americas are rather hard on foreigners are much more just and equitable in Uruguay." Our South American film man concluded his observations with this significant remark: "The better class of American motion pictures can be introduced into the South American market with very little difficulty and it is a strange thing to me that this fact has escaped observation up here." He spoke in the highest terms of Cine-Mundial.

A Good Word for "Cine-Mundial."

"You are doing great things for the American quality film," he said. "The light is beginning to dawn. Keep up the good work. Yours is a publication which ought to have the heartiest support of every American producer who wants to get into a market whose possibilities up to now seem not to have been realized. I have spoken with many of your producers and have marveled at their ignorance as to South America. Few of them know just what they are selling to South America. I tell you it will pay them to wake up and get busy."

LOUIS GREEN MANAGING BUFFALO EXCHANGE.

Louis Green, formerly road man for the World Film Corporation, and one of the most popular men up-state, is now manager of the Exclusive Features, Inc., Buffalo office. Green states that he will keep open house for all his friend exhibitors, and invites them to call on him when in Buffalo and use his office as their headquarters. He has signed up some of the leading theaters for "The Unwritten Law," the seven-part dramatization, featuring Beatriz Michelena.

HARRISH INGRAHAM WITH HORSLEY.

Harrish Ingraham, prominent in the film world as an actor and director for the past five years, has been engaged at the David Horsley studios and will be seen in an important part in support of the co-stars, Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, in a forthcoming two-reel Centaur drama.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES

THE two big firms of Waddington's, Ltd., and J. C. Williamson Films have amalgamated. The latter only recently reopened their old Sydney playhouse, the Theater Royal, as a photoplay theater, while Waddington's control a chain of picture theaters in Sydney and suburbs.

The Williamson submarine pictures finish their short season this week at the Palace Theater, which will then revert again to the spoken drama. These pictures have attracted large crowds during their fortnight's screening.

When the Triangle films were first screened in America a long program of four pictures was first given a trial, but this was soon changed to the ordinary length of a five-part drama and a two-part comedy.

In Sydney, however, just the opposite has occurred. For the first three weeks the programs at the Triangle Playhouse consisted of seven reels, which ran for a week, and as the pictures were becoming very popular, Australian Films decided to give their patrons an extra treat. So now the Triangle Playhouse opens at 11 a. m. and runs "continuous" with a seven-reel program until 6.30. Then an hour later the evening performance starts. This is composed of a Fine Arts feature, an Ince-Kay Bee attraction, one of which is a comedy-drama, while comedy relief is given in a Keystone. This, with a news gazette, gives an entertainment of three hours, and is the largest picture program ever offered to Sydney picturegoers.

All the programs under the new idea will run for a week, which is now the standard for features in Sydney.

This week's Triangle attractions are: "Between Men," a splendid Kay-Bee photoplay, one of the best yet in this studio; "The Lamb," with Douglas Fairbanks, a Fine Arts comedy-drama; "Dizzy Heights and Daring Hearts," a Keystone.

The initial attempt by an Australian company to film a successful play with the original cast was made by J. C. Williamson, Ltd., during the tour of Muriel Starr through Australia about eight months ago.

The subject chosen was "Within the Law," and the picture, produced under the direction of Monte Luke, is a success.

The story is easily adaptable for screen purposes, and though the scenario writer has left out many fine situations, the whole is well done. Muriel Starr has a good range of expression, which is seen to advantage. She is supported by Sydney Stirling, George Bryant, Boyd Irwin and Theodore Boase.

The picture, which is four reels in length, was released last week.

Since the arrival of Triangle and Fox films, with their higher prices of admission, the various newspapers seem to be waking up to the fact that there is a great future in the moving picture industry.

The Theater Magazine is the latest to announce that five pages will be given to the picture in each issue. These will contain picture reviews for exhibitors and film exchange news and will also contain information for the picture-going public.

Roscoe Arbuckle may be interested to know that he was drowned while swimming on the River Thames last month. At least the editor of the Australian Bystander says so, and concludes with an article on Roscoe's life, deploring the loss to the public.

(Perhaps the editor of the above paper was under the impression that Roscoe was swimming the Atlantic.)

Features showing in Sydney this week include: "The Straight Road," an old Famous Players production, featuring Gladys Hanson; "A Yellow Streak," one of the best Metro features yet; "Samson," a fine Fox feature with William Farnum. This play is attaining great popularity in this country. "The Moonstone" (World), "The Salamander" (Moss), "Just Out of College" (Frohman), and "The Innocence of Ruth" (Edison).

Spokes From the Hub

By Marion Howard.

WE HAVE had a Barrymore week in good earnest with Ethel in the play, "Our Mrs. McChesney," also in the films in "The Kiss of Hate"; John at three theaters in "The Red Widow" and in an earlier release, "The Dictator," and Lionel at the Bijou in "A Yellow Streak," the respective theaters playing to capacity houses. Then we have Sidney Drew, their relative, at the Park and Fenway in new Metro releases supported by his clever wife and a capable company, in which Miss Franck—our old friend, the spy of "The Battle Cry of Peace," does some splendid comedy work as a servant, particularly in a recent scream, "The Model's Cook." Whoever gave it that title was mighty bright, since the play treated of a model and a cook, who was not a model one by any means.

Miss Ethel Cunningham, formerly of the Hub, going from here to tour in "The Lion and the Mouse" and from the road to the Vitagraph studios, is the latest to enroll in the Film Club here. She writes me that she has signed to appear in the "Scarlet Runner" series and will play the hag under the direction of Wally Van. Miss Cunningham was in "The Battle Cry of Peace," and when in Marion Ohio, in April made a personal appearance at the theater and scored a success in a little speech which, by request, she gave nightly during the run. She has written some scenarios of late, one being considered by a man high up.

"The Kiss of Hate," put on at the Boston and Exeter, did not furnish much cheerfulness, being inspired by hatred all through, and persecution of a helpless race, but it had atmosphere to burn, and there was not a flaw in the acting. H. Cooper Cliffe in a part calling for no sympathy whatever easily carried off the honors. There was too much rampant murder stuff and torture business, which we do not want shown up. It does not go over well, despite the brave efforts of the players. It is the most gruesome of the Metro offerings thus far and has no mission save to show the skill of the producers and the art of acting.

Another piece of good work by "Hart of the Plains" in "The Disciple," seen by me for the first time recently, though released last October. Friends out west recommended it, and so I went out of town for the pleasure. It is old to readers, maybe, but have you seen W. S. Hart do anything better? I wish Bret Harte, the author of the book, could have seen this interpretation of the preacher who went wrong and then found his soul in time to save another's.

Do you expect me to enthuse over "The Dumb Girl of Portici"? Well, so far as little Pavlova goes all is well, but it could be cut to three reels with profit all round, as the mob scenes are too long, too often repeated, too wild-eyed—but don't they earn their money—the players! So much has been written and so well on the merits that it may seem rank heresy to offer a criticism, but why introduce dancing on clouds as a finale? Many thought it great and applauded, so there you are! To a case hardened theater goer, little Eva's ascent to Heaven is recalled, only in this case minus wings. The dancing was really fine all through, even on the sandy beach, and crowded houses were the rule owing to the personal popularity of the star in the Hub. The Universals are to be congratulated on the great work in producing so elaborate a spectacle.

"The Come-Back" seems an excellent play to introduce Harold Lockwood and dainty May Allison, as new members of the Metro family. It was put on at Keith's Boston theater to seating capacity. While the theme is quite old, the story is well worked out, particularly in the "Way Down East" scenes, with the ever present snow abounding there in season. A very proper person sitting near said she had never seen that nice young man drinking before in any play, and she had been led to believe that he was not a drinking man. I told her that Harold would not get tipsy on that stuff which sheers but not inebriates. It was new to see him in such a lively cabaret scene and placing a necklace round the throat of a naughty girl. We were glad he cut it out and made for the woods to work out his salvation, and incidentally find the girl worth while. It had a good ending, too, with a splendid close up of the pair. The fisticuff affairs brought down the house, and it was some fight—minus deadly weapons, too! George Henry made much of the stern father. The photography was up to Metro standard, and that's saying much.

On same bill was Charles Chaplin in "The Floor Walker," cleverly staged, with the escalator always in action. This was the one thing to cause genuine laughter—not hysteria, the antics being vastly amusing. Apart from that there was the usual slapstick inflections and much vulgarity like emphasizing certain portions of the anatomy for physical attacks. This is not comedy (perish the thought), but an appeal to—Heaven knows what! After all, we do not have to endure it.

"The Red Widow" in the pictures gives fine opportunity for vivid action not obtainable in the speaking version. We were glad to see Clara Zabelle in the part she created for the stage, as the Hub did not have her. If I mistake not Sophie Barnard did it here. It was also good to see how well she filmed in this picture, for when seen last she was a disappointment, for some unknown cause. John Barrymore's mannerisms fit well, but he is not a Hitchcock by any means. The titles were amusing and caused many a laugh, but to me the wedding scene was about the funniest of all, with the organist playing by mistake "Good Bye Girls, I'm Through," instead of the customary march by one Wagner. Jack Daniels' series seem to please the house and cause wholesome laughter and they never quite reach vulgarity.

Gustave Frohman is making a bid for patronage of the high class photoplays which young folks can enjoy, so he put on for the first try at the Copley theater (which he leased) "The Fairy and the Waif." Here we have Mary Miles Minter making her first bow as a picture star. Remember Lillian Russells' Wildfire—the speaking play? Remember the little stable boy and his slide down the pole, and his merriment all through? Well, this boy—Will Archie by name—plays the part of a nice little fat brother in a large family. He is tremendously clever, and the boy who plays the waif will be a big star some day. Preceding the five reels we were shown some wonderful bird pictures, a delight to all and so educational for the youngsters. The white heron, with its lovely agrettes blowing out in the strong wind in their marvellous beauty—God's handiwork—proved to be a value of the Audubon's plan to leave them where they belong. Fortunately there is a law, in this state, at least, forbidding the sale or wear of these feathers, plucked from the young birds when alive. All such reels are doing a vast amount of good and the kiddies like them and remember the lessons taught in them. We are indebted to the Hearst-Vitagraph for these and many more worth while.

"Maria Rosa," with Jerry Farrar and that admirable pair, Wallace Reid and Pedro de Cordoba, went well and most everyone I've heard discuss it seem to feel that this is the best yet for the star. The little play was first put on here at Mrs. Gale's Toy theater by amateurs, with Mr. and Mrs. Roger Noble Burnham (Eleanor Waring) playing opposite and it attracted widespread attention, with the result that playgoers in all the large cities had the pleasure of seeing it with Lou Tellegen in his first English speaking part. The atmosphere, distinctly Spanish, is a compelling feature, but the photography was what stood out as a big feature. What a trio of players we have here and how well balanced is the company, including Ernest Joy, so dependable! The Laskys have a good seller and the picture will never grow old. It will be re-issued years after the modern dramas (filmed) will be out of style, as to costumes anyhow. Even now we can tell by the hobbles skirts of last year that the reel is out of date, and don't some of them look queer! That is why the costume plays and those pictured in foreign lands will ever hold their own.

George Baldson, manager of the New England branch of the V-L-S-E, has invited the Film Club to a private view of new reels, at the studio, 67 Church street, on the evening of June 8th. Gustave Frohman has offered to give the use of the Copley theater ballroom for the coming season for the Sunday evening meetings of the club.

Burton Holmes is certainly giving some fine educational, or travel films rather, taking us into the very heart of the Philippines and close to the life of the natives of different classes. The industries are shown, like that of hemp manufacture, seventeen million dollars' worth being exported annually. In a reel about Central America I noticed a portrait of Lincoln. Another, a Vitagraph reel, to get a hand presented our navy in various evolutions, and the first picture shown was Admiral Dewey, and on the very anniversary of the Battle of Manila Bay. They are excellent as fillers between long reels in any theater.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

LIBERTY THEATER, SAN JOSE, CALIF.

Careful Study of Conditions Is Nucleus of Success of This Photoplay House—Seats 1,067 and Managed by James Beatty.

THE Liberty Theater, located on Market street, San Jose, Calif., is one of the leading houses in the Garden City, as the metropolis of the beautiful Santa Clara Valley is widely known. It is conducted by the Liberty Amusement Company, under the direct management of James Beatty, and has been a success from the date of opening, about a year and a half ago. The location is near the heart of the city and is easily reached from local and suburban electric lines, of which there are a number tapping the rich outlying districts. When this amusement company entered the field San Jose was already fairly well supplied with moving picture houses, and it was realized that to make a success of the venture offerings would have to be of the highest grade, the theater would have to be the acme of comfort and the management above reproach. That these conditions have been met, and even surpassed, is indicated by the wonderful success of the house and the position it now occupies in the community. The showing that has been made in such a brief space of time is remarkable, especially when it is considered that, previous to the opening of the theater Mr. Beatty, the manager, had always been engaged in other lines of business and the amusement field was absolutely new to him.

In speaking of the success that had been met with by the house Mr. Beatty recently said: "The success attained by the Liberty Theater I believe to be due largely to the policy adopted in the beginning of showing only the best, of advertising heavily and thus informing people of what you have to offer and of maintaining a uniform schedule of prices. Many theater managers have been compelled to learn these lessons through bitter experience, but I was unusually fortunate in this respect and had the advice of one of the leading exhibitors of the country. The advice and clear judgment of Eugene Roth, manager of the Portola Theater of San Francisco, has been of wonderful assistance to me in every branch of the business from the selection of films to advertising them and managing the house. Without this assistance the success of the house could not have been so immediate nor of such rapid growth."

The Liberty Theater occupies a lot of irregular size, running through to San Pedro street, with a depth of 192 feet. The frontage on Market street is 42 feet and this width is maintained for 75 feet, when it widens to 60 feet. The ticket booth is located in the center of the lobby, just inside the sidewalk line, and a little farther on is a candy booth, making the entrance way appear shorter than it really is. The foyer is attractively furnished with mirrors, pictures and a thick carpet on the floor, the whole giving an air of California hospitality, which is a feature of the place frequently commented upon by strangers. One is tempted to linger here for a moment, and this is exactly the effect intended, for it serves to accustom the visitor to the subdued light in the theater. From the foyer a broad stairway leads to the balcony, rest rooms, the office of the amusement company, and the operating room. Most of the seats in the theater, however, which accommodates 1,067 persons, are on the lower floor. A large space has been reserved upstairs for a children's nursery, but this has never been fitted up, the demand for such an innovation having not been as marked as was thought probable.

The heating and ventilating systems installed in the house are very satisfactory, the mechanical equipment being installed in the basement constructed beneath the stage. The operating room is splendidly equipped and is located in the balcony adjoining the office. Here are installed two late model Motiographs, purchased new this spring, a stereopticon outfit, and a film cleaner. All films are cleaned both before and after using and are delivered to the exchanges in perfect condition. A motor-generator set completes the equipment and in an adjoining room there is a well equipped workshop where minor repairs are made.

This theater represents an investment of about $100,000, but the building in which it is located is not a new one. Its unusually heavy construction made it particularly adaptable for theater purposes and the change was quite easily made. So well were the plans drawn and so skillfully was the building re-constructed that it is difficult to believe that the entire structure was not built for the use to which it is now placed. A full stage has been provided, but it is improbable that it will ever be used for anything other than moving pictures. Three changes of program are made each week, Fox and Triangle productions being prominently featured. During the first year business was about the same each month, the variation being but slight, with an average attendance of more than fifty thousand people a month. Of late there has been an increase and the management has been investigating the possibility of increasing the seating capacity. The admission price is 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children.

GREENBERG ENLARGING HIS GRAND.

Abe Greenberg, owner and manager of the Grand theater, Broadway, Camden, N. J., has recently purchased the property of Charles Foulton at 205 Broadway. Plans are now being prepared to rebuild the Grand and to make it about twice its present size. Nothing but the latest equipment will be used in the new structure, and the comfort and convenience of patrons will be given first consideration. The new Grand will have a balcony. The dimensions of the new structure are 62 by 125 feet, and the auditorium will have a seating capacity of 1,600 persons.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Splitting.

HERE'S the last group photograph of Ralph Ruffner and Ray Bagley that we shall probably have (we only had one other). It shows Bagley turning over to Ruffner the key to the advertising department of the Liberty theater, Spokane, Washington, before departing for the Liberty, Long Beach, Cal. It looked as though Ruffner and Bagley would be permanent, but Bagley's old boss decided to start in California and Ruffner says a lot when he calls him "The cleverest kid in the game." Being a big man, Ruffner is not sure merely because his former side partner is going away. He still knows he is clever, but now he has got to hustle by himself and for a starter he writes:

A little stunt that doesn't amount to much but which undoubtedly put some sunshine into some poor lives is represented by the attached. We had the Triangle release, "The Habit of Happiness," with Douglas Fairbanks on the boards, and the sermon preached therein gave me the cue to adopt the idea—of trying to bring a bit of happiness and laughter into the lives of the unemployed and the down-and-outers. We mailed 68 clippings yesterday and I know there are several in today. It would have done your heart good to see some of the old characters dig up a Smile at the door when they handed our doorman the clipping, and once inside and comfortably seated, the smiles couldn't have possibly slipped off. It is just a case of practicing what you preach.

The clipping reads:

ARE YOU HAPPY?

Douglas Fairbanks preached happiness; he taught people to laugh; he went among the unemployed and pitted smiles where formerly dwelt a frown. It would be mighty nice if there were more people like him. Now, let every unemployed man or woman who reads this present ad and a smile at our door today or tomorrow and "Doug" Fairbanks will help us make you forget your troubles. "THE HABIT OF HAPPINESS" can be acquired and it can be seen at THE LIBERTY THEATER. Come on. We'll make you laugh and we'll make you glad and it won't cost you a red cent. Ralph Ruffner, manager Liberty theater.

And do you suppose that this was run as a press story or as half page display? It was NOT. It was run in the help wanted where only those might see it who were looking for jobs. The reading stories came later, but the "plant" was straight and it was put where it would do good. That is the way to get a story that will mean more and be more than you ever could coax out of a city editor with a poor cigar and a lament that the state has gone dry. Maybe you want no "bums" in your theater, but we do not believe that Ruffner got any, either, and we do know that he has cheered a lot of heartless men. It's good advertising, the finest sort of advertising.

It Would Help.

The Calhoun theater, Minneapolis, gets out a very pretty program, a brown stock printed in deeper brown, but it does not date its days, though there are inches of room. We think it would pay. The house is in line with the Children's Matinee movement and is working it nicely.

May Change Again.

Having done about as well as can be with his present form of program, Walter H. Brooks, of the Auditorium, Costsville, Pa., contemplates changing to an eight pager. As a sample he sends in a four pager for his Children's Matinees. Here he has hit upon a nice arrangement. At the top is a two line notice of the subject, not florid but something attractive and yet conservative. Then comes the title and a short synopsis and then the line "Saturday morning, May 13th. At ten o'clock sharp." No more any matter about the date or time here. Mr. Brooks does not act in the least in accordance with the popular conception of a Y. M. C. A. theater man. He is a real manager. And for his kiddie matinees he does not load his program down with a lot of educational stuff. He starts them off with fairy stories: "Rumpelstiltskin" and "The Patchwork Girl of Oz." The rest will probably creep in later, but he does not spoil it right at the start by telling the kiddies what a nice, educational and instructive time they are going to have. And to broaden the interest the proceeds will be given the senior class of the Costsville High School. They sell the tickets, and as it means a trip to Washington for them it is probable that they sold them in bunches.

Go to It!

A fair exchange is no robbery. With "Bill" Hearst breaking into the picture game Bill ("William") Swanson is breaking into the publishing end. His third house paper is the Greeley (Colorado) Theater News, the others being in Salt Lake City and Grand Junction, Colorado. The new paper is the best printed of the three, the cuts showing up exceptionally well. J. F. Lynch is the editor and he covers two houses, the Rex and the Sterling. A smaller body type would make for a better appearance (and also increase the bills) and a little more local stuff would help. It is this that makes the paper read.

Tube Posters.

"Tube posters" will sound new to Americans, though at least three cities have them, for they are nothing more than posters in the subways, in London called the tubes. The tube posters in question are those put out by Hephworth's Publicity Department under Philip Wright Whitcomb, who turns out about as many good ideas as any one man in the picture business. The posters are interesting on this side in that they show one British angle in "Service Beyond the Films." The posters are large affairs, starting off with a war catchline, running into a paragraph suggested by the head which, in turn, blends into comment on the most recent release. There follows a schedule of places where the release will be shown in London the current week and also giving the show dates of other recent Hephworths. The scheme is not so useful over here, where the houses are generally too widely distributed, but in London it is a handy and effective equivalent for the newspaper advertisement that covers the showing of serials here. But the important point is the care with which even these plain type posters are prepared. The type is well chosen. It is clean cut, but it is a pretty face, which may not be said of all type faces by any means. Just because it is all type is no reason why it should not be all attractive, but Hephworth is one of the very few companies on either side of the water that seems always to consider the cut of the face. And by the same token here is where innumerable American exhibitors fail. They take anything the printer gives them. They do not realize that even some body faces are more attractive than others.

Some of the material can be adapted to program use. Note these:

FOR SALE—EXPERIENCE.

If you've seen good picture plays that deal with real-life problems you know more. When you have seen how strong men and women—and weak ones, too—act under various circumstances, and with what results, you have almost the equivalent of personal experience.

SPEND AN EVENING WITH YOUR BEST FRIENDS.

Friends on whom you can always rely—friends who are always clever and interesting. That's the kind of friend that you find in picture plays. From one vistaless life to another—from sad to gay, from successful to disconsolate—your picture play friends live with you on the screen. Don't be afraid to call for four they've got big blues. Come tonight, in cheerfulness and recreation.

CHOOSE THE PICTURE SHOW THAT SUITS YOU. Don't trust to luck. Make those two hours at the cinema pay you well. You can't do that if you pick the first cinema you meet. Choose your cinema as you do college or club or friends. It will pay you well. The purpose of this guide to cinemas is to let you know where to go to see the biggest and best.

These in the original are all set with the catchline in a rule panel with the rest well indented from the left-hand margin.

True to Color Scheme.

The Colonial, Camden, N. J., sticks to the colonial colors of buff and blue, though A. T. Wood writes that he knows these are not effective in printing. The trouble is that he must reverse proportions and print in blue on buff, and he cannot get quite the right shade of paper. But will touch up blue, if the ink is deep, but the reverse is not true. Even at cost of getting the colors we would suggest a change to Mr. Woodruff also writes:

We feel sure that changes could be made to advantage, but we are not printers and therefore apply to the program doctor to help us improve the sheet.

The trouble is that the man who gets these programs out is not a printer, either. He seems to have no idea of display. An early issue is worse in this respect than a later copy, but both are poor specimens of typography. In one example—the earlier—there are four eight point full face machine lines that read:

Pathe Weekly.
Pathe Photocolor.
Pathe Cartoon.
Pathe Presents.

These lines are all taken to the left hand margin. The first three are subjects, the fourth is an introduction to "The Beloved Vagabond." To some extent the house is at fault here, for the relative value of the lines should be indicated to the printer, but no real compositor would ever be guilty of such composition. But this is merely a minor fault compared to the general layout. There are times when trade mark cuts can be used to advantage, but only when they are set into the form by an artist printer. Here the Pathe, Triangle, Bluebird, V-L-S-E and Kleine-Edison marks are all used. No two of them are even approximately the same size, and they are all dumped into the form without particular effort at display. Unless trade marks can be made to increase the typographical appearance, they should be left out. It would be better not to use them than to spoil the appearance, and appearance will always be forfeited when cuts of varying sizes, shapes and designs are employed. All Triangle or all Paramount or all V-L-S-E can be used to reasonably good effect, but they do not work well in combination unless the work is well done.

We think that the Colonial would do well to completely reconstruct its inside pages. As it stands the program is run on pages three and four, three days to a page. It would be better to run the entire program on page three, using some form of marginal data, several of which have been reproduced lately. This will reduce the width of the page and permit the subjects to be given a better relative display in smaller type. Then the page two should be given an editorial head and split into two columns, to be used for house chat and comment on the releases for the week. The back page can carry the underline of the house chat if the players are listed, the house talk now being being taken to page two. If this is not done and it is desired to run three programs to the page, then it would be well to cut down the size of the page and use the South Bethlehem Orpheum layout shown in the issue dated March 4th of this year. In any case the cuts should be eliminated, and should not be given a better program form unless these are of uniform size and can be had one for each day.

The chief aim of the program is to tell the patron what is coming. If this can be done and done well in one page, the use of two merely increases the size of the display, but not its relative value.

Changed Around.

R. L. McLean, of the Capitol, Frankfort, Ky., sends in some more programs and writes:

I have just read your criticism in the issue of April 22, and thank you for it. I am enclosing two of my later efforts in which I have eliminated all advertising and in which I have incorporated some of the valuable suggestions you give us in the "World."

I am also enclosing some of my newspaper ads. The half page was in a special fashion week issue and with the half page the paper gave me the balance for readers. The ads on Clark Kimball Young in "The Yellow Passport" and Alvin Gordon in "As in a Looking Glass" were all that I used on those days, and they proved big pullers, as we played to capacity both days, and that's going some in the middle of Lent in Frankfort. I am unable to tell you of the results of the "Don Quixote" ad yet.

If every exhibitor appreciates your aid as I do you will have a hard job listing your well wishers.

Changing the form had given Mr. McLean more space for his program, and because he has this space, we would suggest that he set his titles in larger type. Using advertising around the central space made it possible to use smaller points to advantage. Now with all the space for the program announcement, he has too much white and it does not fill nicely. Unless it is too much of a job to collect for the advertisements, we would suggest that he put some of them back, as an inch or so each on the top, bottom, and sides. If this is not done, the printer should be told to use the better space now at his command. The squares should not be filled solid with type, but there should be more on those inside pages if they are not to look too lonesome. This is particularly true in the case of programs that list a single five reel feature. The top by three and a half inches is too much. The back page is given up to solid house talk.

In the advertising Mr. McLean accidentally stumbled against a new title. The copy had to be sent to the printer in a hurry and there was no chance to read proof. The attraction was "The Yellow Passport." This was played up to the printer in the right hand division mention was made of the "black hundred" and the printer played this up above the play title and apparently the title proved better than the original. Now there seems to be a chance for someone to write a play by that title. And speaking of plays, Mr. McLean gets an item out of the "Yellow Passport" that works in nicely. It runs to the effect that if you see a show and feel that you can write better scripts, it is up to you to go home and do it. It was shot at the script writers who are forever kicking that their own good plays do not sell, but it is a good line to offer those who kick at the stories they see. If they tell you that they can write better plays, let them run that they try. It will keep their minds off other troubles for a time, at any rate.

We are not very strong for the half page advertisement. We do not like half pages in which the lines run straight across the page. It is too much sweep for the eye, even in the larger sizes of type. Some lines can run clear across, but not all should. Mr. McLean has a much better form for his "two eights" in which he runs black type at the left and smaller reading at the right. It is a distinctly good surpasses anything he has before attempted. Hundreds of thousands of people have seen this great actor and form. This reproduction gives but a small portion of one of the advertisements, but it will show how the stuff is worked and also suggest a stunt for "Don Quixote."

On the Front.

The Monarch, Georgetown, Texas, recently showed "The Battle Cry of Peace," and to give it full publicity took the entire front page of the local paper. Full page advertisements are no longer unusual, but a full page of display advertising on the first page, even of a country paper, is unusual. No letter accompanies the paper.

Too Darned Generous.

The Liberty Theatre, Tacoma, is a bit too generous. A recent circular is surprising. Monday night they hold a Country Store when the prizes (announced as one hundred) are distributed by lottery. Tuesday is Ladies' Day and any escorted woman may enter free. Thursday is another lottery with money prizes, and every day the house accepts commutation tickets, ten for fifty cents, though the nominal admission is ten cents. And to see that no one is left out, each program is good for a free admission. Nothing whatever is said about the sort of show it gives. As a matter of fact it is to be presumed that the people go to the lottery and look on the films as a prize package, just as some sections require that a prize shall go with each punch board chance, but this will not save the house from trouble if the proper authorities ever see one of those circulars. Even were the lottery tickets free, the requirement that a winner shall be present in the house at the time of drawing is, in itself, "valuable" consideration, and this, in itself, constitutes the affair, a lottery, in Federal law, at any rate. This sort of thing is vicious and hurtful to the pictures as a whole.

Bull Protectors.

The "Bull Protector" is nearly a year old, and yet the Gem, Marietta, Ga., sends in the first we have seen put to picture use. The B. P. is a square of card or paper with a die cut that forms an oval about the size of the average ear, save for the bottom part, which is not cut through. The tab is labeled "Bull Protector," and in the card at hand the text urges the holder to put it over his ear when anyone says there are better pictures than are shown at that theater. Bull is cheap slang, but the cards seem to have made a hit where used.

Still There.

H. E. Weber, of Chambersburg, Pa., is still there, though it has been months since he was in last. But his latest contribution is not a very heavy one, though it is good; merely a newspaper advertisement that starts off with:

After All, the Best Moving Picture Censors are the Moving Picture Patrons Themselves. The people who pay should have the say. We know that Orpheum patrons know good photoplays, that's why we get so many good ones.

If you are bothered with idiotic censorship (and Pennsylvania will need a lot of beating in this line) the way is to put it up to the people themselves and leave it to their own good judgment.

Get it Right.

The Victoria, Philadelphia, is getting out a program that would be better were it more carefully done. When even the house manager does not know his play titles, how can he expect to interest the public, or how can he expect to hold his public's confidence when they go prepared to see "The Scandal" and find out that it really is "The Girl Scoundrel." On the same bill "By Stork's Delivery" is used instead of "By Stork Delivery." A little more pains will help a lot.

Uniform.

The Park, Middleboro, Mass., gets out a vest-pocket that needs only dated days. With one exception all titles are in uniform point and face, the printer arranges the matter nicely and it is printed in green on green with a good tint of stock to go with the ink used. We do not know how large a place Middleboro is, but it has a real city printing office at any rate. In addition to dating the days, we would suggest that the date also appear on the front page. This could appear under the ornament or replace it. It should not rise above a ten point type on this size sheet.

In Keeping.

Gordon F. Fullerton, of the Mission, Seattle, sends in an advertisement he framed up for a Selig railroad drama. In the original it is four tens, which gives ample space for the display and yet keeps so open that it is easily read. The Greater Theaters Co. runs four Correct the Patrons.

F. H. Franke, of the California, Chicago, writes in reply to our recent comment in which we suggested that he should name the starting time. He says:

Replying to your recent letter of comment on my program I wish to thank you for same; am enclosing another edition for which I invite your criticisms again. The printer made an error in not placing the days in proper rotation.

The cuts of Bushman and "The White Sister" are my own, as I could get absolutely nothing from the exchange. You note the difference between the last named two cuts and the one of the "House of Tears" which was furnished by the exchange.

The exchanges when selling you films promise you most anything, but sometimes one can't even get a slide, berald, or press matter of any kind.

I note what you say in regard to stating the starting time of the various shows. In reply, I wish to say:

If you want to go to a so-called legitimate show, you know the starting time is 2.15 at the matinee and 8.15 evenings all over the United States, I believe; at least this is the universal starting time in Chicago, and has been for over 45 years that I know. The moving picture shows start pretty much in the same way, that is about the same time, at 2 at the matinee and at 7 in the evening, so that there is little room for argument as to when these shows start.

Nevertheless, you are right that some people always move into new territory, and also that some people have never went to a show before, and for this reason the starting time should be given. I had ordered my printer to print the starting time on enclosed program, but for some reason or other he omitted it.

In connection with the above I want to say further that we have advertised the starting time of each particular show, trying to educate our patrons to come to the particular shows they might want to attend. We have done this time and again on our screen and in our programs until we were blue in the face without any result whatever.

I have been inclined to attribute the disregard of this matter to the class of our patrons, which are of the middle class.

Now I happen to go at times to one of the largest and finest moving picture theaters in the highest class of resident district. This theater furnishes an excellent and select musical program by a very good orchestra from 6.30 to 7 P. M., but to my surprise I find that the orchestra plays to empty seats and a hand full of patrons, and also that the patrons in that house do not pay any more attention to the starting time of the different shows, which all consist of big features, than they do in my house. They come and go as they please, so what are you going to do about it?

It seems to us that Mr. Franke makes out an excellent argument for the short subject program when people come and go as they please instead of trying to make the regular hours of commencement, but in any case, some persons who do not now come and who may not read the slides may appreciate the information, but we do not merely mean that he should announce that the house starts a show at a certain hour. Tell each day. For instance he has a five and a two part picture on one program. The show starts say at 7.30. A man might want to see the five reeler and not the two part comedy. How would he know when to come. But if the program stated that the comedy would be shown at stated hours and that the feature would start at other stated hours, then people might come who do not now come, and those are the ones he most wants to reach.

Mr. Franke seems to be having trouble with his cuts. One trouble is that when he gets them he has to exchange they are bad because they are of the wrong screen. Cuts are loaned or rented the exhibitor to help make business and yet the average layout of cuts is either all 50 or 60 or 110 or 120 screen. The number of companies offering both styles of screen is small indeed. If the thing is worth doing at all it is worth doing with the 110 screen. But Mr. Franke to be forced to have his own cuts made since then he pays them of the proper screen and they mean something to a patron.

From Across the Bridge.

The Lyric, Lancaster, N. H., uses "Just across the bridge" as a house slogan, apparently to overcome some handicap in location. L. W. Carroll writes that lately they gave all women patrons this receipt, nicely enveloped for taking home: "Lyric Cream—Soak a teaspoonful of gelatine in a quarter cup of cold water and dissolve in a quarter cup of boiling milk. Add one cup of sugar and juice of one lemon. Stir until dissolved, then add one cup of mashed banana. Let it stand until it begins to thicken then fold in one cup of heavy cream, beaten stiff, and the whites of one egg. Turn into a mold lined with lady fingers, chill and serve with whipped cream." We are not going to run a cook book, but this sounds good enough to pass along for the benefit of commissary managers. Mr. Carroll reports a good sale of coupon tickets on the basis of twelve, ten cent tickets for one dollar. He uses a throw-away for each day, resting the program briefly but attractively. The throwaway is most useful in the small towns, but it has its place and these are clean cut and well printed. Post cards written on the typewriter, not mimeographed, are also used for features. Probably the mailing list is small, but even where it is fairly large it pays to send a ribbon copy instead of a blotchy duplication. Mr. Carroll has the right idea.

What Wilby Did.

R. B. Wilby, of the Strand Amusement Co., Montgomery, Ala., did not like a certain film title any more than did many others, but, unlike the others, he did something about it. This is what he did:

A WARNING.

On Tuesday, May 9th, the Strand will exhibit a film upon which the title "The Crippled Hand" has been wished. It sounds, as we remarked once before, like the villain in "The Exploits of Elaine," but is instead an exceptionally delightful comedy-drama, that you will miss much by missing. You're warned.

Every little while some assinine management kills a good picture with a misleading or uninviting title. Train your patrons to go back of the title for information and it will not hurt you so much. A title means a lot to an exhibitor, but the fact seems to be news to many manufacturers.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 140.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theatre managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Tell us how you think films ought to be cared for in the operating room. Tell us what tools you think an operator should own, and what the management ought to supply.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 133.

The Roll of Honor on Question 133 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal.; George F. Deutsch, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Worcester, Mass.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; M. Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; L. Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; J. L. Arnold, Bellingham, Wash.; B. P. Warrick, Worthington, Minn.; H. G. Crose, Gary, Ind.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio, and O. J. Bean, New Bedford, Mass.

In this instance I am going to publish two replies, namely: those of Ralph W. Martin, and Worcester, Mass.

Brother Deutsch's reply was excellent but too technical to be readily understood by our readers.

Reply to Question No. 133.

By Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal.

The Question:

What is the easiest and simplest method of measuring distance from lens to screen? The rule is: "Intensity of light diminishes with the square of the distance from its source." Does this hold good in projection light?

The Answer:

There may be a great variety of easy and simple methods of measuring the distance from the lens to the screen, but the most accurate method (excepting none) is to measure directly from the aperture to the center of the screen by means of a steel tape line. This may require pushing a pole through the lens port and dropping a plumb line from its end to the floor, and then measuring from the point on the floor to the screen, and then from the top of the plumb line back to the aperture. In some cases the operation may be still more laborious. This method may not be either simple or easy, and may require repeating the measurement several times to insure accuracy, but when the accurate distance from the aperture to the center of the screen is once known it is worth all the labor spent in getting it, for it allows making very accurate lens calculations, as follows:

$b = \frac{1}{2}$ height of aperture.

$b = \frac{1}{2}$ height of screen picture desired.

Distance from aperture to screen = 100 feet.

x = Desired working c. f. of objective

Then, $\frac{x}{b} = \frac{100}{100-x}$, or $\frac{x}{b} = \frac{100}{100-x}$ = working c. f. of objective.

If, however, the exact c. f. or principal focus (F) of the objective is desired, then: $\frac{x}{100-x} = \frac{F}{100}$, or, $F = x - x^2$.

The Handbook gives a method for finding the length of the throw by using the width of the slide mat as a base line, and also the focal length of the stereo lens, and the width of the screen picture, which will give fairly accurate results, but this method is subject to considerable error on account of the short base line. Also practical rules are given in place of the above formulas, and which may not be so exact but are close enough for the lenses carried on the market.

The rule, "Intensity of light diminishes with the square of the distance from its source," would apply to any case where the concentration of the beam is left unaltered and the intercepting surface, alone, such as for instance, a screen, is moved toward and away from the Illuminant. But in the case of projection, when the screen is moved farther from the lens, and the size of the picture maintained the same, a different lens is used so as to further concentrate the beam, with the result that the total amount of light that reaches the screen remains practically constant.

Worcester's reply gives still another method which is both interesting and practical, though why not use tape and line measure direct from lens to screen, instead of making two measurements?

Reply to Question No. 133.

By Worcester, Mass.

As most operating rooms are located above the level of the screen, the easiest method of measuring the distance from lens to screen is to apply the theorem in geometry that the square of the hypotenuse of a right triangle is equal to the sum of the squares of the two legs. In this case the hypotenuse is desired. It is an easy matter to find the floor distance and the distance of the booth above the level of the screen. Multiply each by itself, add the results, and take the square root of the sum. For example, suppose the floor distance to be 100 feet and the distance of the lens above the center of the screen be 25 feet, 100×100 equals 10,000, and 25×25 gives 625. The sum is 10,625, of which the square root is 112.8 plus for the hypotenuse or throw.

The rule that intensity of light diminishes with the square of the distance from its source applies to light passing freely. The position of the crater and the action of the lens system, however, modify the law to such an extent that it is practically nullified. The only bearing it has is that as you increase the screen area you diminish the light intensity, but this is not controlled by distance, but by lens curvature. Taking the law as it reads, it does not apply.

(But they have not, either of them, set forth the really simple, practical method of doing this particular stunt—that is measuring the distance. My own way would be to take a tape line as long as I could get, and some reasonably unstretchable cord; tie the cord to the ring of the tape line and run the tape all out of its case. Now if it is a 75-foot tape, hold the 75 feet mark where the center point between the two combinations of the objective lens would be, pull the string tight, assuming that the tape won't reach to the screen, placing the cord at the center of the screen. Now tie a bit of colored string around the cord at the point where it reaches the screen, or tie a knot in it so it off at that point, and double back on the tape line. You will thus get a practically exact measurement with a minimum of trouble. The objection may be raised that the tape and the cord may stretch, and certainly it will sag some. Well, let me tell you, gentlemen, that, whereas, theoretically in the measurement should be precise, in practice the variation of even as much as six inches would make no appreciable difference if the throw was a long one, and two or three inches variation would not make much difference, even if it be a short one. It is almost a cinch you would not get it any closer, by figuring, because machine apertures will vary slightly, and cheap lenses such as are usually used for projection are notoriously inaccurate.)

Amberlux and Front Seats.

One of the advantages claimed for the Amberlux lens is that it very much improves the view of those seated in the front seats. Guy C. Dalley, Grand Theatre, Delaware, Ohio, says:

"People used to balk at going down in front before I installed the Amberlux, and it is different now. They go right down front without grumbling at all, and this feature alone has paid for the lens filter many times over. I have had the Amberlux in for three months, and am more than pleased with results."

It will be remembered that this department long ago approved of the use of the Amberlux lens. The Amberlux is really not a lens at all, but a plano ray filter which softens the glare of the light without materially diminishing its brilliance. These lenses may be had from the Picture Theatre Equipment Company, New York City, or from any large dealer. They cost $3.50 each and are worth the money.

Projection at the Garden.

The one great, big outstanding thing, from the operators and exhibitors' point of view, at the Exposition at The Madison Square Garden, was the projection of pictures in the main auditorium. The installation consists of two Powers Six D machines. The installation was made by William C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, and was in charge of the following operators: Joe Abrams, Al Polin, Sol Abrams and Abe Adelson.

The distance from the lens to screen was approximately 135 feet, and the screen was a Moon. The results, considering the tremendous difficulties under which the installation worked, were very good indeed. The amperage was variously stated from 70 to 90, but after looking at the carbons I should say 70, or pretty nearly that figure—D. C., of course. True, the picture was not an unusually large one (15 feet wide), but it was plenty large enough, and stood out with surprising brilliancy and wealth of detail, when one comes to consider there was literally a flood of light in the auditorium. Two big chandeliers, each containing hundreds of lights, blazed down, and there were great flaming arc lights, and Cooper-Hewitt studio lamps sending their glare all over the auditorium. Mr. Smith, the operators, and the equipment are all entitled to credit for the really splendid results attained under the conditions.

I noticed one thing particularly well worth attention by exhibitors and operators, viz.: The picture was only 15 feet wide, yet standing on the balcony at the opposite end of the great arena, fully 100 yards away, I could, with but slight effort, read the ordinary titles and could easily follow every detail of the film story, although my eyes are by no means as good as they once were.

From the Trenches.

Sergeant C. H. Richardson, 26th Battalion, Second Canadian, formerly operator Star theater, St. John, N. B., writes from the trenches in Flanders as follows:

You will no doubt be surprised to receive a letter from this part of the world. Although I have been in the uniform for eighteen months I am still endeavoring to keep pace with the operator's end of the business. Through the kindness of A. J. Mason, Imperial theater, St. John, I have received the World regularly since last June. My last two copies, January 10th and 22nd, arrived two days ago. I have taken them with me in the front line of the trenches. After reading will pass them along to my brother, who was also an operator before enlisting. Just now I am operator of a Ross rifle, giving continuous performances from twilight until dawn, and believe me we have some big features over here, though they come entirely unannounced. Things are progressing fairly well, however, and I hope and trust it won't be long before I shall again be back, steering the good ship Projection. Excuse this pencil scrawl, as a fellow almost has to tie himself in a knot in order to write in these comfortless dugouts.

My grandfather's name was C. H. Richardson—the C. H. standing for Calvin Howard, therefore Brother Richardson's name attracted my undivided attention, and I am going to send his letter to grandfather's surviving children—"children" is good, the youngest being about sixty-five. Yes, I too hope the brother will soon be back but, well, we have been hoping that for quite some time, and the fulfillment of the hope still seems as far off as ever.

Temporary Film Splice.

C. Patterson, Wilmerding, Pa., says:

I would like to suggest insulating tape as an excellent temporary film splicer when the film breaks in the machine. Am not in the movie business, although I have a keen interest in it from all points of view, and expect to get into the game in the near future. Have operated several makes of machines in Ireland and in this country.

The brother's scheme is to get ordinary insulating tape, and, cutting off about two feet, double it back on itself, cementing the two pieces together, face to face; then dip the whole thing in flour and rub off the surplus. This prevents the back side from sticking. Now, when the film breaks it is only necessary to clip off an inch or so of the tape, strip having separated the faces of the two sides, and stick it on the back side of the film, thus joining them.

While we thank the brother for suggesting this plan, still I cannot particularly recommend it, because I think an ordinary paper clip is better, and with the tape the average operator would, I think, use two or three inches instead of one, and thus unnecessarily ruin several pictures in the film.

Has a Cracker Box.

Guy Hill, North Yakima, Wash., sends order for the new Handbook, and says:

It is about four years since I wrote to the department, but I have been reading it all these years, nevertheless. I am the chief, with a capital C, at the Empire theater, this city. Have a regular cracker box for an operating room, it being only by 18 feet long, 18 feet wide, and a 15 foot ceiling. In that latter there is a skylight 10 feet high, which opens and closes automatically with the port fire shutters; also can be opened by hand when I need the light. It sure is some ventilating system. Am projecting a 20 foot picture at 118 feet, with a 30 foot drop, and have a keystone shape on the screen.

Yes, but you have distortion, Brother Hill, though it is not bad on the 116 foot throw and would amount to practically nothing if the picture were smaller.—Ed.) The equipment consists of two Simplex machines, one spot light, a G. E. Rectifier, and Wagner converter. The optical system of each machine is set according to the tables in the projection department, and give perfect results. Have glass in all the ports, the observation port being 14 x 18 inches. The house seats 1,300. Show Paramount program five days a week and S & C vaudeville Saturday and Sunday. Pictures ten cents; vaudeville, six acts, ten, twenty, thirty.

The picture I am sending was taken at three o'clock in the afternoon with the skylight open. You can get an idea how nice it is to work under these conditions. Of course there is a window blind over the skylight so it can be pulled across to make the room dark. You will notice by the blur on the lamphouse behind me, caused by the arc, that the machine is running. Well, if this gets in the observation I may write again some time; and I might anyway. Oh, yes, we are organized, and all three houses employ 1. A men. The scale of wages is far ahead of anything I have heard of in the east, and this is saying something, but it's true. I am using 40 amperes D. C., and a flat, white non-reflecting screen, and am getting some picture if I do say it myself.

Well, Brother Hill, you'd have to show me that picture before I would believe it—a really good 20 foot picture on a non-reflective screen with 40 amperes of current. However, I will be in the state of Washington some time next winter, and it is possible I may be able to arrange to come over to North Yakima, provided it does not entail too much additional railway fare. The Moving Picture World is going to be the "goat" on the financial end, and I will have to see first how much additional goat they would be if I include your city. That is some plant you have all right, and I would like to give it the once-over.

From Galveston.

A. E. Kirk, Galveston, Texas, writes:

It is quite some time since I had the pleasure of writing the department. You will, however, perhaps remember me as the author of the method of lining the optical system of the projector, which, together with the method for anchoring the machine table, is included in your Handbook. While I am no longer an operator, I have never missed an issue of the department from the time you first began the "Trouble Column," and it has always been a source of instruction, amusement or profit. I now design, build and operate all my own machines and effects for use in local theatricals, spectacular features of dances, balls, etc., and I would like to say right here that "perfect projection," which you so often preach, as applied to moving pictures, applies equally to the operation of spot lights and stereopticons. It is unfortunate that the average operator pays so little attention to proper handling of the spot light or stereopticon, when these machines are in reality the older brothers of the moving picture machine.

I have from time to time noticed some of the boys asking for information as to the best width of shutter blade to fit their local conditions. Several methods have been submitted to the department, the most noteworthy of which is the cutting of a portion of the metal off the side of the shutter blade, and the fitting of an extra piece of metal held with screws, so that the blade width may be adjusted to suit. The great fault with this, however, is the absolute certainty of throwing the whole shutter out of balance, which wears out bearings and tends to set up vibration in the machine. Since I made you have repeatedly said that a shutter having three blades of equal width is ideal, a method of changing the width of all the blades in an absolute equal amount without destroying the balance of the shutter as a whole has suggested itself to me. I herewith submit it on its merits.

In the illustration, A represents about the proportion of the regular equal bladed shutter. B and C are two thin shutter discs exactly alike, with the blades considerably narrower than the regular blades in A, say two-thirds or three-fifths the width of A. The actual width determined upon by the operator will depend upon his local conditions. Now, if C be placed on the top of B, with the blades exactly in line with those of B, the result will be one shutter with the narrowest blades possible to use, but if C be turned around on B, B remaining stationary, you will readily see that the width of all blades is automatically altered in equal amount.

Yes, by the anchoring and the lining methods you are duly and properly identified. I expect to be in your city and deliver a lecture on projection some time next winter. Shall hope to then have the pleasure of meeting you. As to your shutter scheme, I don't see any reason why it should not work well indeed, and it strikes me as worthy of attention by manufacturers. Something of the kind is needed, and while I have not studied this matter in all its phases, from a once-over examination it looks pretty good.

Another Opinion.

With regard to the question concerning a 60 cycle transformer (economizer, inductor, etc.) working on 133 volts, I also submitted this question to the Edison Company, and here is their reply.

If the low voltage transformer referred to is one taking 110 volts from the primary side and delivering about 40 to 50 volts on the secondary side, the only effect of its being used on 133 cycle would be that it would get slightly warm, though not to an extent that would be damaging to the instrument. The loss in efficiency as against its use on 60 cycle current would be about 5 per cent., provided the instrument was of high grade construction.

Standardizing the Optical System.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., presents the following as a proposal for standardizing the optical system.

The ideas set forth in the accompanying drawing represent a scheme for standardizing every possible detail of the optical system. The object, very evidently, is to do away with the present difficulties encountered by the use of different condenser lens combinations and different objectives. The drawing must be considered in connection with previous articles on the same subject.

No doubt these ideas are considerably ahead of the game, and are furthermore wholly dependent for practical success upon many experiments yet to be made; but, nevertheless, the idea is here presented for whatever it might be worth.

I am not going to comment on this particular proposition mainly because I don't know what to think of it myself. It is presented merely as an interesting phase of the subject, which I would recommend to the consideration of those interested in the study of the optical system of the projector. In Figure A is another adaption of the same idea, in which the meniscus aperture lens is used. Concerning this Brother Martin says:

Fig. A shows the aperture lens placed between the aperture and the objective. When placed behind the aperture as before suggested, there is difficulty in getting the crater image truly placed at the aperture, and besides this arrangement interferes with the present gate construction in many machines. In Fig. A, at least in most machines, so this idea is just given as an added suggestion to the other articles on the same subject.

The placing of a lens between aperture and objective would not, I think, be practical because of interference with the E. F. of the objective.

Arc Position.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., says:

With regard to Brother Martin's article on "Crater Position," April 8th issue, his argument is excellent and I think beyond criticism. However, lest some operator place the arc at the position of the image of the aperture as called for, and condemn the idea because result is not satisfactory, I would like to point out that it is not only necessary to put the arc at crater position, but also to put the crater at position where the arc can do its maximum work, because if either the E. F. of the condenser or the distance between the condenser and aperture are not suitable for the objective and amperage used, then it would be useless to put the arc in crater position as called for in Brother Martin's article. It should be first noted that the position of the image "at crater position," and the size thereof depend entirely on the E. F. of the condensers and their distance from the aperture. This is not affected either by the size of the picture being projected, or the E. F. of the objective, so that while it is quite true that the crater and the image of the aperture ought to be located at the same point in order to get its maximum efficiency out of the optical system, it by no means follows that we must move our arc to crater position as indicated by the condensers already in the machine. It means rather that we should change the condensers so that they will move the image to a point where the crater will project an image of itself to the aperture of a size necessary to cover the same. The following points ought to be noted, first: the size of the picture and the quality of the screen determine how much amperage is necessary or desirable; second: the diameter of the objective and its back focus determine the distance between the condensers and the aperture; third: it is the distance between the condensers and aperture, as well as the amount of amperage being used, which determines the E. F. of the condensers.

The condenser sizes given in Table I, Page 14 of the Handbook, apply in general to average amperages, but in cases of extremes the following will improve conditions, viz: for small amperages use shorter focal length condensers, and for large amperages longer focal length condensers. As an example of how amperages affect the equivalent focus of the condensers, I offer the following: We will assume the image of the crater at the aperture to be the same size in each case, therefore assuming that the small amperage requires the crater enlargement to be five times, and that the greater amperage requires the crater enlargement only four times, which means, in plain terms, that in one instance the spot will be five times the diameter of the crater, whereas in the other instance it will be only four times the diameter of the crater. In each case the distance between the condensers and the aperture equals 20 inches, this being determined by the diameter of the objective lens. Now with the crater which needs enlarging five times, the crater position must be $20 \div 5 = 4$ inches from the curved surface of the back condensers, therefore condensers must be used which will place it there. But with the crater which only needs enlarging four times, the crater position must be $20 \div 4 = 5$ inches from the curved surface of the rear condenser, which would place it about 4 inches from the flat surface of the lens. It will thus readily be seen that it will require condensers with longer focal length to place the crater position four inches from the condenser than it would to place the crater position three inches from the condenser. I quote these examples to illustrate the fact that we must adapt the crater position to the amperage we use. Another way of knowing when the crater is working at the right position is to observe the spot on the shutter, when the shutter is placed where the condenser is focused upon it, and withdrawing the crater from the condenser until the spot on the shutter clears entirely of the image of the arc, and appears evenly illuminated. If the spot at the aperture is now too small to fully cover the same, shorter focal length condensers are needed, and if too large, then longer focal length condensers are needed. Of course it is assumed that the limit of distance is being used between the condensers and the aperture. Increasing the distance between the condensing lenses themselves is equivalent to using shorter focal length condensers, and vice-versa. When a condenser is held up to the light with the eye at the point of focus the lens will appear as an even disc of light. It is the same when the crater is at the point of focus; the image of the condenser will appear evenly illuminated.

Brother Griffiths had kicked over the soup again, or at least has tried to. Now I may be wrong and he may be right, but I have, or had concluded that we ought to establish $3\frac{3}{4}$ inches as the distance of the crater from the rear lens of the condenser and make other conditions fit that one. If what Friend Griffiths says is correct, then we are going to kick that proposition over and adopt something else, but before I do that I want to know positively that Griffiths' plan is the best plan. In considering this matter there is more than one point to be looked at. In the first place there is increased loss of light when we back the crater away from the lens by even so much as one-half inch, and in the second place backing the arc away from the lens has the effect of making the light beam thicker, or wider at the point the revolving shutter cuts it. Both are important items, and entail light loss or decreased illumination. To my way of thinking this particular matter is close to the heart of the whole question of the optical system of the projector, and I would ask our optical friends to be very careful in discussing same. If I am wrong in proposing to work from a fixed distance, the sooner I know it the better, and conversely, if I am right the sooner I know it the better, and I am not going to give up on that particular point until I know positively that I am wrong. In other words you must show me on this particular proposition.

Adjusting Power's Shutter.

Seth Wiard, New Haven, Conn., says:

Enclosed find an idea of mine regarding shutter setting device for use on a Powers' Cameragraph, though doubtless it could be used on other machines. It may be installed by any competent operator, and without great expense.

Will you kindly give me your opinion of it, and if you feel so disposed give the man space in the department. In the drawing 1-1 is a collar on the front of the shutter, just large enough to allow the shutter to be turned on the shaft in adjusting; 2-2 are the slanting transverse guides, preferably seated in a collar enveloping the shaft and the shutter hub, and screwed tight to the same. C-C is the collar which travels on guides 2-2, the same being connected to the shutter by rods X-X. Collar C-C is moved over the guides by metal yoke X-X which works in a flange on collar C-C. The yoke is attached to the shaft which is actuated by the thumb screw, and which moves back and forth as it works in the screw bearing.

This device is very carefully gotten up, but I would prefer not to comment until I have seen an actual model. I might say, however, that I can see no particular advantage in such an arrangement on the Powers machine. When the shutter is once set there is no reason why it should be changed, except perhaps once in a great while when some repair is made to the mechanism. The invention is interesting, however, and for that reason is given space.

Foos Gas Engine.

During the past several years I have from time to time received a number of inquiries with regard to the Foos Electric Light Plant, which for several years has been soliciting the favor of the moving picture theatre patronage. I, therefore, concluded to make a side-trip to Springfield, Ohio, while on my swing around the circle, and inquire into the chronometer balance and cylinder escapement of this particular piece of equipment.

During my visit I made an extended trip through the factory and examined, in detail, into the methods of manufacture. Among the first things that attracted the editor's attention were the cards nailed on the walls of almost every workroom, displaying the legend, in large type, "Quality First." That is a mighty good motto for any manufacturer to adopt, and it certainly may be said to have been adopted when the company posts the legend conspicuously on the walls throughout its establishment.

The methods of manufacture of the Foos Gas Engine make for extreme accuracy. All shafts and crank bearings are ground by means of grinders which have a peripheral speed of approximately 72,000 ft. per minute. This not only assures high polish, but also a high degree of accuracy in diameters and in trueness of the circumference. It also possesses another advantage, in that the wearing parts may be hardened and then ground into their final shape. If you machine a piece of steel down into the finest possible condition and then harden it, it is more than likely to warp out of shape, at least, to some extent, in the process. The grinding method is therefore far superior to any other in making wearing surfaces which must be tempered, highly polished, and absolutely accurate.

Practically all parts of the Foos Gas Engine, both small and large, are made by the use of tools called "jigs." This insures absolute accuracy in the drilling of holes, etc., so that all parts can be made truly interchangeable, a thing which cannot be accomplished by any other possible process. Where holes are drilled and the different parts fitted by means of jigs, it simply means that you can order a new part from the factory and it will fit exactly as well as the old part did. There is no guess-work about it, and you will know that the part will fit, because it is either ground to exact diameter or is made in the same jig, and, therefore, must be not only nearly, but precisely the same.

In Fig. 1 we see the engine ordinarily sold to moving picture theaters, although the company makes a great number of different varieties or designs of outfit, and you can get one larger or smaller, direct connected or belted.

In Fig. 1 AA are flywheels of extra heavy weight and large diameter, designed especially for this class of work. These wheels, with their large diameter and substantial weight, make for steadiness in speed. B is the cylinder head, which is removable, in case it should ever be necessary to open the cylinder, simply by taking off the eight hexagon nuts. C is a spring on the rod at the top end of which is the inlet valve. D is a coil spring on the rod at the upper end of which, under the cap H, is the exhaust valve. These two valves are controlled at N by rods, as shown. These rods connect with cams which operate them, and the movement is positive.

In Fig. 2 we get a view of the ignition system (Wipe spark igniter). B and A are the two opposite polarities of the magneto circuit, and when A strikes B (which is a piece of heavy steel), the circuit is completed, but as A wipes across B and passes it, the circuit is broken, and is broken with a decided snap. The result of this arrangement is a positively timed and very "hot" spark. The amount of contact B will have with A is regulated by means of screw D, Fig. 2, which may be screwed in or out by loosening lock nut E, thus increasing or decreasing contact of A with B.

This company has been engaged in the manufacture of gas engines for 27 years, and certainly is putting out a mechanically well-made product. In this connection it may be said that the factory guarantees that the speed of the engine will not vary over 2% from no load to full load, and granting this to be the fact, most certainly the variation under normal operating conditions of the moving picture theater, would be to all purposes, nothing at all. Taking everything into consideration, from what I saw in Springfield I have no hesitation in saying that the Foos Gas Engine is a remarkable machine, and I see no reason why it will not, with ordinarily intelligent care and attention, deliver the goods. I would, therefore, recommend that managers contemplating the purchase of apparatus of this kind give the Foos outfit their very careful consideration.

The manufacturer's claim as to the relative cost of current, as compared to current supplied by a power station, is that it will result in a saving of 25 to 75 per cent, the wide variation being due to the possible variation in the price of gasoline, gas and kerosene.

The generator of a standard make may be had to deliver 60, 70 or 110 volts.

Camera Man and Director.

The relations between the camera man and the director of a picture are rarely as intimate as they should be. The production of a film in a proper and fitting manner is one that requires the closest co-operation between every factor of the working force, and the camera man and director are the two greatest factors in this production. When they do not understand one another; when they work at cross purposes, it is self-evident that the production must suffer.

The director is at the mercy of the camera man for the proper interpretation of his ideas upon the screen. Each necessarily imposes all of his own limitations upon the other and it is only through a thorough understanding and the closest co-operation that these limitations are prevented from conflicting with the perfection of their work.

There are many camera men who are jealous of allowing their director to learn what he ought to know about photography and the limitations of the camera and there are also many directors who are too prone to regard the camera man as a mere mechanical accessory, possessing little or no brains. When these conditions obtain neither can respect or have any great consideration for the ideas of the other, but when the director realizes that his camera man is a master of his craft, understands and knows what he can do with the camera and when the camera man knows and realizes that his director knows his business, has a concrete idea as to what he wishes to portray upon the screen and knows that what he wishes to portray can be photographed so as to interpret his idea to the spectator, then the camera man and the director have reached an understanding under which they should be able to produce very nearly perfect pictures.

Both camera man and director should realize that not only are they being paid a salary to produce the best of which they are capable, but they should also have a sense of the dignity of the task which they are doing. Even the production of a rough-and-tumble, slap-stick comedy has a dignity attached to its production. "Anything worth doing is worth doing well," although a trite saying, still holds a world of meaning and though well worn by long usage, is a motto which might well hang above every director's desk and in every camera man's dark room.

Too many camera men and too many directors, as well, fail to understand why they do not make a greater success, when they habitually allow any old thing to do, and perform their task just sufficiently well to enable them to "get by."

I have met many directors who seem to think the best training in stage craft and drama can be obtained from all-night poker parties and the infiltration of booze, and many camera men who keep their photographic eye in practice by sighting along the billiard cue and get the largest part of their technical training from the comic supplements of the Sunday newspapers, and yet they wonder why some camera men are called "crank turners."

Perhaps some of you boys think this is rather drastic stuff, that I slam it in too hard once in a while, but mark this—the quiet fellows who are drawing down the real figures on their pay checks on Saturday night are the boys who put brains into their business; who are "Jerry on the job" and "Johnnie on the spot" when it comes to producing the goods. What they don't know they learn some. They don't belong to the clique of those who knew too much to learn any more and they were not too proud to exhibit their ignorance when it came to a question of something they didn't know, but went and asked someone who did know, or spent the necessary time to dig it out for themselves from some text book where they could find what they needed to know.

There has been much talk recently of overcrowding the profession of camera men, thereby bringing about a general reduction in salaries. The man who knows his business does not have to worry; the man at the top will always get the top-notch salary. If you have the determination and stamina to learn and apply what you should know, you will have little occasion to worry about any reduction in your salary. One of the best indications of this is the fact that there are quite a number of camera men today who are drawing larger salaries than the directors for whom they take pictures, and although it is dangerous to prophecy, I am confident enough of the dignity and worth of the profession which bears the commonplace name of "camera man," that I do predict that more and more will come an equalization of the salaries of camera men and directors.

Not alone to the director belongs the distinction of creative ability in the production of pictures. With the raising of the standard of craftsmanship, ingenuity and knowledge required of the camera man, come greater reward when he is able to endow the director's ideas with artistic and pictorial worth.

What to Take for Educational Pictures.

Supplementary to the article "Hints to Newsfilm Cameramen" recently published in these columns a little may be said regarding what to take for Educational Pictures.

Most of the Educational Film Companies have their own cameramen who attempt to cover as far as possible the more important educational features of this country. These traveling cameramen include in their itineraries the principal views of the principal cities, and the best of the natural scenery obtainable. However there are so many important subjects everywhere that may be photographed, that are impossible for the regular cameramen to obtain, that any motion picture camera operator can obtain a ready market for film of the highest class.

For example, one of the largest and best known Educational Film Companies recently started a cameraman on a trip across the continent with instructions to take certain views in New York City before proceeding. His orders were among others to obtain a view of the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor with the sun setting behind the statue. Were it not for the fact that this particular picture was desired the cameraman might have been well on his way westward, but owing to inclement weather, and to the hazy atmosphere so prevalent in the harbor, it was necessary to wait nearly two weeks for this particular picture.

How much better would it have been for this company to send their cameraman on ahead and to advise some local photographer to just take what was wanted. The local man could be on his feet daily, with almost no expense compared to that of the regular cameraman.

There are in every fair sized city, some points of interest that make good educational subjects.

One correspondent living in the small town of Burlington, New Jersey, was quite surprised to learn that an Educational Film Company has sent a cameraman direct to this town to obtain some views of shad fishing in the Delaware river. Shad fishing in this particular spot has been going on for years and years, but the local man never appreciated the fact that this industry might make a picture worth while.

There is as much of a market for first class educational pictures as there is for the ordinary. The educational work being the best for the local photographer because there is no great hurry, no mad rush for the particular news value of the picture. Often "Newsfilm Cameramen" become excited and neglect to make some final adjustment of the camera, that often results in a spoiled picture, while the man photographing educational pictures on the other hand may take his time and get the best results obtainable.

Industries of special nature, such as the manufacture of some special article, automobiles for example, make good subjects. Natural beautiful scenery which you may see every day, but which many people may come miles to see; in fact, any subject that is of value to the public in general makes valuable material for educational pictures.

Of course, the more technical part of the Educational work, such as microscopic studies of plants and small organisms cannot be attempted by everyone, but there may be some little feature that occurs here and there which might make interesting material for a picture that someone else would like to see.

I have in mind a former professor of physics who has lately taken up moving picture work. He found that the photographing of some of his experiments in chemistry and physics made interesting subjects, and one that had a ready market. Now he is engaged in making a picture of the habits of the ordinary frog, so you see there's always a field for those who are alive to the opportunity.

Studios in Jacksonville, Florida.

The editor of this Department has been working in Southern Florida for the last few weeks and stopped in Jacksonville on his way North.

There are five companies at the present time operating in Jacksonville—Eagle, Vim, Kaleem and Gaumont. The weather is beginning to be oppressively warm and all of the companies except Eagle and Kaleem are making preparations to go North for the Summer. The Thanhouser forces left for the North the 25th of this month.

Lawrence Williams, who has been with the Thanhouser Company for several years, took this privilege to go with the Famous Players Company, taking the place of his brother, who died recently in the New Rochelle hospital.

All of the studios operating here have open-air stages with the exception of the Thanhouser Company, which has a glass studio for rainy days in addition to a large open-air studio.

The Eagle and Vim studios are the only ones who develop their negatives in Jacksonville, the others sending their stuff North to their respective headquarters for development and printing.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Musical Setting

for
"Notorious Gallagher" or "His Great Triumph."

Released May 29th by the Metro Pictures Corp'n.

Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg.

(By special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 13 T, "Me fer him" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 17 D, "When men climb on porch," is a description of action.

"Buttsy" Gallagher is a harmless product of the slums. One night the galety going on in Judge Winter's house attracts him and he crouches on the porch roof to watch where, after a time, he falls asleep. The house is burglarized, a servant is killed and the crooks escape. "Buttsy" is arrested as the murderer and finds himself suddenly famous. Women send him flowers and men argue his case. Bob Ewing takes up the case and forces Peggy, the Judge's daughter, who was hidden in the other window on the night of the murder to tell what she knows. "Buttsy" is released on probationary sentence for having committed perjury as he confessed to the murder, delighted at having so much attention. The picture closes with "Buttsy" in a series of exciting incidents that prove his sterling qualities.

This picture is full of action with many pathetic scenes. Note particularly: Shot 18/4; train effects 55 to 64; struggles and shooting from 64/4 to 71/4.

The THEME selected is "One Fleeting Hour"—Lee.

Time schedule: 75 minutes (five reels, about 5,000 feet).

WILLIAM SHEER OPENS BOOKING OFFICE.

WILLIAM SHEER, familiarly known as "Bilby" to his many friends, general casting director of Equitable, World, Paragon and the other allied concerns associated with World Film, resigned his position with that firm this week and on June 1 will open general booking offices in the premises occupied by him while connected with World and Equitable.

Mr. Sheer during his regime as casting director was instrumental in disposing of the grafting and petty larceny agent and his position was created by Arthur H. Spiegel because of the complaints against agents who, according to affidavits of extra people and supernumeraries, collected at times fifty per cent. of the wages. Since Sheer's inception in the position it is worth noting that not one complaint has reached the offices and it was with reluctance that his resignation was accepted.

Sheer's plans for the future are most ambitious. Already controlling the labors of half a dozen important players and representing a number of stars, and with the optional control of hundreds of types and people who go in for atmosphere and mob material and has, during his year with the World companies, been noted for his faithfulness to type and local color.

In company with several other well known film and theatrical men Mr. Sheer will soon open his offices at 130 West 48th street. He will make a specialty of casting completely picture play productions, ranging in his people from the leading player and star to the most obscure extra people, and from reports has already made arrangements with a number of the more important manufacturing concerns to supply considerable of their talent.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS.

THE "ENTENTE CORDIALE."

Establishing the Relationship of the Moving Picture Trade to Educationalism.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

A GOOD example comes to us from England, whereby the relationship of the moving picture trade to educationalism has been established. In the first place, they wisely acknowledge two facts: First, the moving picture was full of power and scope, and that its progressive and educational advantages must be admitted. Second, it must be remembered that it is also a commercial enterprise and that co-operation must admit that the usual legitimate business results shall accrue. Upon this basis of practical common sense, the following resolution was passed: "That this conference expresses its willingness to further the educational aspect of the moving picture, and agrees to show as often as possible pictures of an educational character, as far as a reasonable financial success will permit, the educational authorities to be kept posted as to such displays." It was further resolved that exhibitors would have pleasure in co-operating with educational authorities of all classes by arranging for exhibitions for children and young people, using films dealing with such topics as shall be of interest and value, and in cases of schools, facilities shall be given teachers to give lessons at such performances. It was further agreed that the terms for such exhibitions should be as generous as a financial undertaking could offer. While this is indeed a most worthy "Entente Cordiale" it is a splendid example of what we here call using the chart and compass to direct and regulate the course of affairs rather than an antagonism which engenders strife. It is to be hoped that in this country, as indeed everywhere this same attitude may be adopted to the advantage of all interested. At another conference held in another part of England in which it is reported that the most cordial relations were found to exist between all present, consisting of magistrates, clergymen, teachers and exhibitors, the chairman at the close of the conference remarked upon fact that a more well-balanced meeting could not be imagined. In summing up the work of the conference the chairman said: "Producers and public had not yet realized the great power possessed by the moving picture, which was having and was going to have a great effect upon the future of the people. There were not only dangers to be guarded against, but enormous advantages to be found in it, and if they could be directed in the right way, no one need fear that the country would ever suffer by it. From the above reports we are bound to admit that in England there is an apparent spirit of adjustment rather than one of contention as is too often displayed in this country, they are evidently admitting the fact that the pictures are moving the people and find it to be their duty to direct the movement rather than to combat it. Censorship must mean proper regulation, the Sunday question must mean adjustment to conditions, and the morale of all pictures must be moulded by an enlightened public sentiment; in this way every form of opposition and antagonism will be abolished and the man who opposes the progress of the picture, whether from pulpit, platform, rostrum or bench, will be as scarce as an opponent to printing. In America we seem to be a people of contrasts and extremes, in one place a minister is opposing the pictures as emissaries from the depths of evil, while in another place a minister says he believes that in ten years there will be more preaching by the pictures than by the voice, the picture will be used more than the book, the eye will be used more than the ear. One school-master is doing nothing with the picture because he wishes to wait until the phonographic description synchronizes with the picture, while in another place the school-master is saving his pupils weeks of time and much weary study by a wise and judicious use of the pictures to enlighten and help.

The picture is moving on and moving the world, and the wise are moving with it. Those who moved with it commercially have already risen from poverty and obscurity to wealth and prominence. In educational and all kindred lines those who move with it will rise more rapidly and certainly, while those who fail to take advantage of the tide will be left behind to plod their weary way alone; use and not abuse, help and not hinder, purify and not slander, lift and don't kick, overcome prejudice with enlightenment, ignorance with knowledge of the facts and circumstances, join the great army of those who are pledged to cause the picture to take its rightful place among the great forces for the good of the whole world and your own town, city, community, church or school in particular, it will then require no prophet to predict that when the picture has moved the world to a higher and better place you can remember that you helped it along and in common with numbers of others who can even now say that the experience of an educational progress was yours.

RESPONSES WARMLY FAVORABLE.

From a number of states have now come to me letters warmly favoring the plan for co-operative, economical, profit-sharing film service as outlined in my articles in this department for April 15 and 29, and May 20 and 27. Several of the writers are recognized experts whose opinions must be regarded with great deference and since those who read this page will probably be more pleased if I quote verbatim from a few of the letters received, I shall do so, reserving names and addresses for later disclosure.

From the Pacific coast comes such strong (to me it seems too strong by at least half) language as this:

I have been working incessantly on the problems of visual education for the last five years and in your Moving Picture World articles in the last three weeks it seems I have found the first gleam of intelligence in regard to the solution of the numerous and varied problems that we have to face.

He promises to send in to me some very helpful information, all of which will be gratefully received and duly credited.

Another expert in the field of visual instruction writes:

We notice with a degree of keen pleasure that your department has been opened in the World. * * * There are a dozen or more high schools and a considerable number of intermediate and elementary schools in this city and county, which have already purchased and are now using motion picture machines. * * * We shall be glad to furnish you with the names of the schools, the persons in charge of the work and any other data. We shall be glad to know of any aid we can render you in your work and we expect to receive benefits from the efforts which you are making. The work of your department will be watched with keenest interest.

The pulse of even the most callous editor could not fail to beat the faster as he reads such responses to his efforts. Such readers are the salt of the earth wherewith (to mix the figure a little) the lump must be leavened. In the present problem of organizing widely-scattered schools into co-operating circuits invaluable assistance can be rendered by those who know of others who are progressive enough to join our enterprise. I shall be delighted to receive the data referred to and any other helps. Thank you.

Now, please let all others interested send in similar helps at once. Don't wait to inquire whether I shall welcome the assistance. Indeed, I hope each of you will consider yourself a committee to spread correct information about our co-operative, economical, profit-sharing plan for film service. Do this directly by personal letters to officials and others likely to be interested. Tell them of your own prompt action. Urge them to act with equal promptness for the benefit of all.

And here is another type of response that should lift our hopes of success in this effort to organize one or more film circuits before July:

Please send us the formal contract blank and further particulars, for we should like to present the matter to the local public school superintendent, and also to two of the high school principals, various members of the board of education and the county superintendent, all of whom we know personally.

I hope the condensed form of contract printed on this page in the May 27 issue will suffice for the needs of this inquirer and of all others in cases where a favorable decision has not become practically a certainty. This enterprise is founded upon the principle of rigid economy. In order to make educational films available for use in schools everywhere at the lowest practicable rental, we must eliminate elaborate advertising and other promotion expenses usually incurred by purely commercial ventures. Our undertaking cannot afford to be loaded down at the outset with heavy charges for printing, mailing, clerk hire and all that, for, of course, the subscribers must ultimately pay all the costs.

Still another interested booster of the use of visual aids in education writes:

We have read with much interest your article in the Moving Picture World on "Pedagogical Reel-ism." It explains very well the great need and present of educational film. We are in pretty close touch with the schools of the middle states, where the question is raised—"Where can we get REAL educational film?"

It is just for the purpose of answering this very question that I am urging that all who sincerely mean to use educational films systematically should immediately unite in a wholesale purchase and rental enterprise, and in that way (absolutely the only way) secure a continuous supply of satisfactory films at minimum expense.

Finally, among the letters received are these statements also:

I believe it is not practicable to make all of the material needed, now, for it would cost thousands of dollars; but there is at present a great deal of useful material existing. * * * If all the material now existing in all of our manufacturing negatives could be properly organized, arranged into courses, and rented out irrespective of producers, it would mean that a lot of dead material would be put to use. * * * We do realize the importance of this material, and, available, however, and make it possible for a Board of Education to contract for a year's material correlated with the classroom work in a given course. I believe we can finally attain our ideal, to make visual education universal.

The writer's ideas and my own are in exact accord here. I have spoken such thoughts so many times that I was under the impression I had written them down in one of these articles. Perhaps I have failed to make the point so clearly, but that idea has been at the core of all my efforts thus far. My negotiations with film-producers have been conducted wholly upon that basis. They have consented to print for me fresh positives from their stock negatives at unusually low prices. Ample material being thus assured, it is up to you, Mr. Educationist. How soon will you make the possibility of educational film service a reality?

Is it not now most expedient and reasonable that each person genuinely interested in my proposals should first read carefully the condensed contract above referred to? Then, if you are positively inclined—as I truly hope you will be—you might properly send in a quarter for one or two copies of the full and detailed contract which will soon be in type. The metal will be held for a time so that any desired changes may be made before the final version is determined upon. The quarter mentioned above is only a suggestion, not a requirement, so also is this—namely: if you will send in dollar with ten or a dozen addresses, contracts will be mailed to each of them.

Please write me in detail any suggestions you may care to offer on any phase of the situation. HARDIN LUCAS.

CHILDREN ARE TO HAVE THEIR DAY.

Had Shakespeare lived in these days he could not have spoken of the boy "going lazily to school" as one of the seven periods of life, for today the children go to school "with tripping feet;" at any rate they will shortly be doing so if the many friends of the educational picture can carry out their numerous and well intended plans. Among the growing army of workers in both theory and practice for the better use of the children's pictures are two ladies who came to the front by conducting a well appointed booth in the recent Exposition in the Madison Square Garden, New York, where they received many interested callers and explained their objects as follows:

"In view of the fact that the insistent cry for better films for children have so far been answered by too few theaters, progressive schools and social centers, we have set ourselves the following tasks:

"To select programs of such charm and beauty that the children will eagerly seek the entertainment provided for them at special Saturday morning performances.

"To co-operate with the exhibitor in securing the support of the neighborhood for his efforts to become a factor in the upbuilding of youth.

"To awaken the mothers to an appreciation of the tremendous powers for good that the motion picture may be made to exert on the impressionable and growing mind.

"To hasten the day when the manufacturers will devote to pictures for the child the genius that will arouse enthusiasm for the noble and elevating; inspire faith in ideals and cause beauty to captivate and mould the young soul.

"Believing the child should be withdrawn from the shows arranged for mature and sophisticated audiences and that it is only with the accomplishment of the foregoing that the question of censorship may be dealt sanely, we are devoting our best efforts to this work."

To the above commendable purposes Mrs. Mary Mason Speed and Mrs. Bess Richey Dessez are now devoting their time and energies in New York City. They have also established an office at 126 West 46th street, where people of kindred minds may communicate with them. In many towns there are now organized Parent Teachers Associations having similar purposes to those outlined above, it will be well for such to come in touch with these ladies, who out of their experience may be able to give them efficient help and advice. The great question of children's pictures in addition to the school and educational pictures in general is one of wide importance and is receiving much deserved attention, doubtless by adding the above enterprise the work cannot fail to gain great momentum.

Two very interesting educational releases by the Pathe Co. are "The Ascent of Mount Rainier" in the Picturesque American series, and Beautiful Lake Chuzenji in the Picturesque Japan series. Both of these pictures are wonderful exponents of the natural beauties of their respective countries.

In addition to their great scenic beauty which makes them attractive at any time, they are by their detailed descriptions splendid lessons in geography and travel, widening the scope of the class room knowledge. Being on the same reel they form a happy contrast of national scenic beauty and have been appropriately chosen; for mountain view, natural waterfalls and sparkling cascades they are without superiors.

USE OF MOTION PICTURES IN FRENCH SCHOOLS.

Consul General A. M. Thackara, Paris, writes in "Commerce Reports" that by a presidential decree of March 25, 1916, an extra parliamentary commission was appointed, in connection with the Ministry of Public Instruction, to study means whereby the use of the motion picture may be generalized in the different branches of public education.

The appointment of this commission is the outcome of a report made on December 23, 1915, to the Chamber of Deputies by the public instruction committee of that Chamber. In laying this matter before the President, the Minister of Public Instruction said in part: "Despite the grave events of the present time, we must not neglect certain measures whose utility, although not immediate, will be realized in the future. After the war, the national school will have work laid before it more important than in the past. It will be its task to hasten and increase the intellectual and moral development of the country. To render its work more efficacious it is essential that immediate steps should be taken to seek out means of vivifying our educational methods and of utilizing all the new resources which science has placed at our disposal.

"The rational use of the motion picture can produce in all our schools most successful results. It answers the natural taste of youth for pictures, it places before the eyes the fact beside the idea, it hastens the working of the intelligence and broadens the experience."

NEW YORK CLUB WOMEN OPPOSE CENSORSHIP.

In speaking of the attitude of the women's clubs of America toward censorship and the motion picture, it may be of interest to note the tabling of a resolution presented at the fortieth convention of the New York City Federation at the Hotel Astor on Friday, May 12. The resolution, drawn up with great care, requesting federal censorship of pictures and the licensing of pictures to be sent from one state to another, and asking members of the clubs to send letters to their representatives in Washington, which was to have been sent to the capitol, was presented for adoption.

Miss Helen Varick Boswell, chairman of the Educational Committee, was immediately on the floor. "I am much opposed, and I feel sure that most of the women in the house are also opposed, to making picture censorship a matter of politics," said Miss Varick. "The motion picture industry has not been allowed time to work out its salvation as yet. The censorship of films should come from the people. It should be the business of club women to increase the demand for good films."

The resolution was tabled by a great majority.

Catalogue of Educational Pictures.

Released Between January 1, 1916, and March 30, 1916.
Compiled by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THIS list does not include the various news periodicals issued from week to week such as the Animated Weekly, the Pathe News, the Mutual Weekly, the Selig-Tribune, the Hearst-Vitagraph, etc.

Not attached to this catalogue will be found a list of films suitable for children's programs and also information regarding the addresses of the manufacturing and booking companies mentioned therein, and the locating of the different productions through their brand names.

V-L-S-E. OFFICE CHANGES.

S. E. Abel, Chicago manager of the V-L-S-E, Inc., announces that in line with that company's policy of promotion from the ranks, he has chosen Frank Redfield, broker of the Chicago office, as his assistant manager. This promotion will be received cordially by the trade, as Mr. Redfield is regarded a thorough and conscientious worker, and an asset to the industry. With the vast amount of experience he has had, extending back to the pioneer days of the film industry, it is certain he will be well fitted for assuming a position that requires such constant attention to detail.

A. B. Thibault, New York manager of the V-L-S-E, Inc., announces that two new salesmen have also been taken on at the Chicago office. They are George Berg, who will travel in Wisconsin, and C. F. Troupe, who will cover southeastern Illinois. Jess Levine, formerly of the New York branch of the World Film Corporation, is now with V-L-S-E, Inc., having been engaged by the New York office to succeed W. P. Allen. Mr. Allen has been transferred to the Syracuse branch of the V-L-S-E.

J. S. Hebrew, manager of the Philadelphia office of the V-L-S-E, Inc., announces the appointment of Nat Glasser as salesman for the Washington office, and Ernest A. Bezouska as salesman for Philadelphia. Mr. Bezouska has been connected for a short time with the New York exchange, while Mr. Glasser was manager of the Leader Theater, Washington, D. C.

UNIVERSAL CITY CLOSED TO PUBLIC.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company, recognized as one of the greatest believers in publicity to be found in the industry, has decided to dispense with its greatest "ad"—a free one, at that—consisting of showing visitors around Universal City. When it is remembered that many thousands of visitors enter the portals of the movie city annually—at 25 cents a head—that they are for the most part tourists from all parts of the globe who go back to their homes and tell about it, that a visit to the city is considered such an attraction that the great railroad lines entering Los Angeles advertise it—when these facts are remembered it is hard to believe that a concern that spends hundreds of thousands of dollars on paid advertising, of their own will, passing up such a bet!

But H. O. Davis, whom many consider the last word in production efficiency experts, and who is general manager of Universal City, cut off at one stroke this vast source of advertising and income to his company, for the simple reason that he found it interfered with studio efficiency, and anything that, in the Davis scheme of things, interferes with efficiency must go.

KOPFSTEIN WILL AGAIN HANDLE IVAN PUBLICITY.

Jacques Kopfsstein, the advertising engineer who was in charge of the publicity and advertising department of the Ivan film productions from the reorganization of that company to about six weeks ago when he resigned, has again accepted the incumbency of that office.

Vitagraph Releases

Week of June 5th Brings Many Excellent Subjects to the General Film and V-L-S-E. Programs.

ON THE General Film Program the Vitagraph releases for the week of June 5th includes "A Strange Case," "New York, Past and Present" and "She Won the Prize." "A Strange Case," a Vitagraph three-part Broadway star feature, will be released on June 10th. In this picture, Harry Morey has a wonderful chance to show his talent, as he takes a dual role. We first see him as Burnham, a great detective, and then as Lefty, the Crook. Supporting Mr. Morey are seen Ned Finley, Frank Holland, Adele Kelly and Edward Elkas. The filming was supervised by Eugene Mullin. Jane Dixon and Roma Raymond wrote the story.

"New York, Past and Present" is the title of a one-part scenic picture, in which Father Knickerbocker personally conducts a tour through his wonderful metropolis. All the familiar landmarks of the city are shown, and when they fade out, the same spot is shown as it appeared in the colonial days. The reel closes with a wonderful panoramic view of the city, taken from the pinnacle of the Woolworth Building.

"She Won the Prize" is a one-part comedy featuring Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno. After winning a prize of $1,000 in a contest, Edith Storey, as Molly, a stenographer, sets out to have a good time on the money. She goes to Lakewood, where, in a swell attire and a beautiful blonde wig, she poses as an heiress. The boss, also in Lakewood for a rest, meets Molly, and, failing to recognize her in her finery, becomes infatuated. Later he proposes and is readily accepted. Josephine Earle and Donald McBride also appear in the cast. George D. Baker and Epes Winthrop Sargent are the authors of the story, and the former also directed the action.

With V-L-S-E for Week of June 5.

In "The Destroyers," a five-part Blue Ribbon feature from the pen of James Oliver Curwood, a new star, Lucille Lee Scene from "Kernel Nutt's $100 Bill" (Vitagraph).

Stewart is introduced and featured. The story, in Curwood's powerful style, tells of a woman, Josephine McCloud, who comes to the frozen timberlands of the North, in search of a man named Peter God. Miss Stewart, as Josephine, is ably supported by Huntley Gordon, John Robertson, Richard Turner, Virginia Norden and Florence Natol. The picture was directed by Ralph Ince, and his usual attention to detail can plainly be seen.

A century note renders valuable assistance and causes a heap of trouble for Kernel Nutt, in "Kernel Nutt's $100 Bill," the latest of the Kernel Nutt series of one-reel comedies featuring Frank Daniels. Entertaining an heiress on 60c is some job. Kernel Nutt is not very confident of succeeding until he finds the big yellow back—then—well, $100 will buy a lot of things. Frank Daniels does credit to the part of Kernel Nutt and is well supported by Alice Washburn and Adele De Garde. L. Case Russell wrote the story and C. Jay Williams produced the picture.

Denton Vane

DENTON VANE of the Vitagraph players, after leaving school in Jacksonville, Fla., made a determined effort to succeed in dramatic work and his ambition seems to have been fulfilled beyond his expectations. He was several seasons in vaudeville, once with Maude Odell, and then as Vance, of the team of Vance and Rogers. He has had great experience in stock, having played long engagements at Portland, Seattle, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, and was a Pacific Coast favorite. He was also in a musical comedy, "The Rich Mr. Hoggenger," his rare singing voice being of great aid to him. He was featured once in "Brewster's Millions," and two seasons in "The Fortune Hunter." At different times he has been in the support of Ethel Barrymore, Blanche Bates and other prominent stars. With Florence Gale he made a Western tour, being cast as Mercutio in "Romeo and Juliet."

In the season he was with Miss Bates in "The Darling of the Gods" he made so good that he was chosen the next season to originate the part of the young Syrian in the first production of "Salomo."

Mr. Vane's first experience with motion pictures was with the Selig company, and then he was four months with the Kalem company, playing leads opposite Irene Boyle. He joined Vitagraph in 1914, and during that time appeared in the following notable productions, "The Silent Plea," with Edith Storey, "The Barrier of Youth," with Norma Talmadge, "The Radium Thieves," with Leah Baird, "Two Women," with Anita Stewart, "Green Stockings," with Lillian Walker, "The Island of Surprise," with William Courtenay, "The Hunted Woman," with Virginia Pearson, "The Ordeal of Elizabeth," with Lillian Walker, and "Hesper," with Lillian Walker. Added to his excellent stage appearance Mr. Vane has a most pleasing personality and is popular with players and public alike.

EDDIE LYONS AND LEE MORAN IN NEW YORK.

A new contract has just been signed in the home office at 1600 Broadway between Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, whereby these two clever comedians continue under the Nestor brand for two more years. Their contract also provides that they shall jointly direct themselves in their own single and two reel productions at Universal City, Al. Christie and the Universal having severed their connections. Mr. Lyons has not been in New York since Mr. Laemmle sent him to the coast, with the old Imp company over four years ago, and Lee Moran has never been in New York. An effort is being made at the present time to secure a leading woman for them of international prominence.

First Month of Unity Sales

A. J. Cobe Says Corporation Is on Firm Basis—Has Several Popular Productions.

IN ONE short month the Unity Sales Corporation is declared by Andrew J. Cobe, its vice-president and general manager, to have waxed from infancy into lusty manhood and is already proving itself a formidable factor in the motion picture industry.

The purchase by the firm, through negotiations conducted by Mr. Cobe, of the sensational and timely serial "The Yellow Menace" in which the eminent dramatic actor, Edwin Stevens, is starred is not the least of the notable "coups" accomplished since the birth of Unity. An aggressive and widespread advertising campaign has been inaugurated, new offices of great artistic beauty and practical efficiency established in the firm's headquarters in the new Godfrey Bldg., at 720 Seventh Ave., and plans laid for a "service system" which Mr. Cobe declares will result in the maximum of benefit for the exhibitor, exchangeman and producer. Mr. Cobe's long experience in the motion picture field and the regard and esteem in which he is held by all branches of the industry have resulted in immediate success for the new concern, and the Unity offices are fairly flooded with demands for service, and as a logical consequence the working force of the organization and its offices have been considerably enlarged.

The slogan of Unity—"The Concern with a Conscience"—is one which Mr. Cobe has ordered all his departments to live up to in every sense of the word with unflinching exactitude.

"Myself and my associates were impelled to purchase 'The Yellow Menace' said Mr. Cobe, 'because we believe it is going to be the serial of the season. It carries within its sixteen episodes a lesson of lofty patriotism and a message of preparedness, with which the air is now ringing, together with a tender and beautiful love story and thrills galore. 'The Yellow Menace' already has the endorsement of every prominent man who has seen it, and they include some of the most famous names in the country. I have seen thousands of motion pictures in the course of my connection with the industry, but I say without hesitancy that 'The Yellow Menace', which was produced, by the way, by William Steiner, is the 'best bet' so far offered the exhibitor. It is deeply gratifying to me to observe the response with which the trade has risen to the announcement of Unity's plans and I can assure our friends that Unity will always maintain as its watchword the two great underlying principles of modern business—service and co-operation first, last and always."

Unity reports also record breaking returns on the first two features released through its agency, namely, "My Country First," a feature production in six reels made by the Terriss Film Corporation, and directed and starred in by Tom Terriss; and "The Pursuing Vengeance," an intensely exciting and virile detective photodrama, based on the celebrated novel by Burton E. Stevenson, "The Boule Cabinet." This picture was produced by Martin Sabine, and has gained a vast volume of favorable comment the country over.

"Diana," a wonderfully colored and romantic picture, picturizing the romance of "The Huntress," and the life of the Gods on High Olympus, in which appear the Baroness Von Dewitz and Paul Swan, as Apollo, is still another feature put out under the Unity brand and forms a classic and beautiful addition to any program. There are many unique and beautiful lighting and color effects in Diana, in addition to a classical ballet in Isadore Duncan dances, that are bound to cause a sensation in any community where the picture is played. Many state rights buyers have already ordered duplicates and additional prints of the classic.

General Film Offerings

The Week of June 5th Has Some Good Subjects in Store.

STANDING out strong and distinctly and bristling with attractions that make up an exceptionally forceful program, General Film Service for the week June 5th-June 10th, inclusive, offers its patrons drama, comedy and travel pictures in which acknowledged stars of filmdom figure. The comedies are of the same excellence that the General Film Program has always been noted for.

A Selig three-reel comedy, "A Temperance Town" in which Otis Harlan stars, will be the first thrown on the screen Monday, June 5th. Judging from advance notices, after film inspection, "A Temperance Town" should prove the comedy hit of the week. "New York, Past and Present," a Vitagraph historical production, has a prominent place in the first day's release. It should be a decidedly entertaining picture, presenting an opportunity for comparison seldom offered. Selig-Tribune, featuring all the high spots in the important news of the world is also presented on this day, while Biograph's "The Girl Across the Way" helps mightily to strengthen the day's releases. "Otto, the Reporter," a Lubin comedy, will provide more laughter.

"Orphan Joyce," an Essanay two-part drama featuring youthful Joyce Fair, is the first release for the following day. "Midnight at the Old Mill," a Kalem comedy and a Biograph two-part drama, "The Yaku Cur," with Lionel Barrymore, Robert Harron, Kate Bruce and Walter Miller in the cast, make up the early part of the day's program. "The Stoning," an Edison production in three parts, has a post of honor on this day.

"In Cinderella's Shoes," a Kalem comedy, and Vernon Howe Bailey's "Sketch Book of Berlin" and Edison's "Love's Labor Lost" provide varied and strong attractions for Wednesday.

Lubin's "The Scapegrace," in three parts with George Routh, Adda Gleason and Evelyn Page sharing honors, will be presented Thursday, as will also Selig Tribune and a Vim comedy "One Sea Dog."

Knickerbocker heads the list on Friday, offering "The Stained Pearl" in three reels, featuring Henry King. In this sensational tale of the sea Mr. King has many opportunities to demonstrate his acknowledged ability. Another strong feature of this day will be "Juggling Justice" of the Sis Hopkins Series. These Kalem comedies always "get over" and "Juggling Justice" will be no exception. Vitagraph and Vim each supply a comedy, the former "She Won a Prize," and the latter "A Dollar Down."

A three reel Essanay production, "Fool's Gold" with Darwin Karr, Nell Crane, Patrick Calahan and Marion Murray, all film favorites, will be presented Saturday. "Two Bachelors and a Half," a Lubin comedy, will be sandwiched in between "Fool's Gold" and a Vitagraph three-part picture, "A Strange Case." Then will follow "The Treasure Train," an episode of the "Hazards of Helen" Series by Kalem. The final picture that will fade on the screen will be Selig's drama, "Going West to Make Good."

Triangle Stars on June List

Willie Collier, Jr., to Follow in His Father's Footsteps in "The Bugle Call"—"Firebrands" Coming in "Reggie Mixes."

TRIANGLE'S June releases will bring Willie Collier, Jr., to the front as a full-fledged film star. In "The Bugle Call" he plays a juvenile, of course. The story is filled with human interest and the spirit of adventure permeates every scene. The settings, lighting and photography are all excellent. In "The Bugle Call," Billy, as played by Willie Collier, Jr., is a particularly likeable lad who is brought up at an army post. He has no mother, until his father introduces a lady to Billy as his new mamma. Then the young man's troubles begin—or at least he thinks they do—and it is not until danger from troublesome Indians threatens and Billy is left to guard his heretofore disliked step-mother, that peace is restored in the family.

The Triangle-Fine Arts feature for release the first week of June presents Norma Talmadge in "Going Straight," a human interest story, melodramatic at times but ringing true throughout. The story is that of two reformed crooks, a man and a woman, who are married. They decide to forsake their old manner of living and the difficulties they experience in living down their past, provides situations that take a genuine grip on the heart. Norma Talmadge, who plays the part of Grace Remington, one of the reformed crooks, has never done anything finer than in this picture. Ralph Lewis, who enacts the role of John Remington, the other crook, is excellent and the children who have by no means an unimportant part in the story quite surpass anything they have ever done before.

Douglas Fairbanks "put over" another typical Fairbanks' success in the Triangle-Fine Arts feature, "Reggie Mixes In." The story provides an excellent vehicle for the buoyant art of the popular screen star and he surely makes the most of every opportunity it offers him. "Reggie Mixes In" serves to bring Bessie Love forward again in a particularly sympathetic role and she scores heavily in the part.

The Triangle-Ince feature for release the same week presents Bessie Barriscale in "The Sorrows of Love," an emotional drama which is featured by the excellent acting, the elaborate settings and the compelling interest of the story itself. Bessie Barriscale gives a most vivid interpretation of Sister Beatrice, who is so stirred by the tale of the outside world's wickedness, which is brought within the convent walls by a young girl, torn from the side of her lover, that she decides to go out into the world to try and better it.

Among the releases to be made during the latter part of the month are "The Innocent Magdalene" and "A Mild Girl of the Sierras," both from the Triangle-Fine Arts studio and "The Deserter" from the Triangle-Ince studio.

Bluebirds on the Wing

Pretentious Little Flock That Will Soon Be Flitting Hither and Yon.

GENERAL Manager M. H. Hoffman, of Bluebird Photography, announces several newly selected features for the program he has so successfully projected during the first half of the year, and declares that the forthcoming issues of Bluebirds will contain even better material than has been found to be so generally favored by exhibitors and public thus far in the series.

"We are going to spend the summer getting ready for the regular season," says Mr. Hoffman, "and the way we shall proceed with our preparations will bring profits to the exhibitor while he is fighting the call of summer sports and amusements. We believe that equally good films are required in summer as in the regular season, and we propose to keep our program up to standard regardless of conditions."

"June will start summer and Bluebirds will introduce its series of summer releases with four features that we are willing to have our future judged by. 'The Eye of God,' produced by the Smalleys, with Lois Weber, co-star, gives Tyrone Power the best opportunity he has had on the screen. Lois Weber is accountable for another June release, in which we introduce Mary MacLaren, a new screen star, in 'Shoes.' And Bluebird is willing to stake its reputation on this subject," said Mr. Hoffman.

Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Three Godfathers," is a third June issue on the Bluebird program, and Louise Lovely, in "Bobbie of the Ballet," completes the list for that month. Continuing Mr. Hoffman says: "Our July productions have all been arranged for but we are talking now for only three, 'Ambrosia,' 'Broken Fetters' and 'The Grasp of Greed,' with Ella Hall, Violet Mersereau and Louise Lovely, three popular Bluebird stars, in the respective releases."

"Rex Ingram has directed Violet Mersereau in 'Broken Fetters,' a feature for which Mr. Ingram also provided the story and scenario. William Garwood will be featured as Miss Mersereau's leading man, and Kittens Reicherts, a favorite child actress, will also be prominent, having the entire first reel practically to herself. Paul Panzer and Isabel Patterson will be prominent in Miss Mersereau's support."

"Robert Leonard wrote the story and scenario of 'Ambrosia,' and directed Ella Hall in the production. Harry Depp will be Miss Hall's leading man, and for a boy, still in his teens, to be designated as a leading man is but giving full credit to this clever lad. Adele Farrington, erstwhile queen of comic opera, will be the leading lady, and others in the company will be Betty Schade, Grace Marvin, Wadsworth Harris and Kingsley Benedict."

"Louise Lovely will make another regular appearance in the series as star of 'The Grasp of Greed,' a feature taken from one of H. Rider Haggard's stories, prepared for the screen by Ida May Park, arriving late in July, with Jay Belasco and Lon Chaney principals in her support, and Joseph De Grasse the director. We have every reason to believe that Bluebird exhibitors are destined to have a mighty prosperous summer," concluded Mr. Hoffman.

BRITISH NOTES

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" concludes its second run in London at the Drury Lane Theater this week, but there are two companies in the provinces with the production. For exhibitors with designs upon the great feature it has been a difficult matter to ascertain exactly who is responsible for its handling on this side and it is generally understood that "D.W.G." himself is exploiting the picture, or at least the first presentations of it. Assuming this to be the case, it has been a subject of strong comment that no provisions have been made to make the screening of the film a practicable proposition to the average exhibitor and the intimation prominently displayed that "this production will never be seen in any but the highest class stage theaters" confines the supposition that "The Birth of a Nation" is, for the exhibitor, forbidden fruit. This policy may be actuated with a natural desire to preserve the picture as a distinct and isolated production, but nevertheless to deny the man, the exhibitor, who, after all, has made such things commercial propositions, savors somewhat of affectation, if not of superficiality.

In conference at Newcastle, the Chief Constable's Association were treated to a homily on juvenile crime as affected by the war by the Lord Mayor of that city the other day. As may be expected the moving-picture came in for a good deal of attention, favorable and otherwise, and eventually a resolution was passed at the instigation of the Lord Mayor of Bristol urging the government to establish a central state censorship of films.

Mention of censorship brings to notice a curious decision of the Shaftesbury Avenue tribunal which has this week refused to sanction the Cines Company's "Life of Christ" without even viewing the production.

Henry Weirick's multiplicity of interests in the moving-picture business appear as though they will see him domiciled in Gerrard Street for some time to come. Apart from a considerable interest in the British organizations which handle the Mutual output here, the Western Import Company and associated companies, he came over from New York with the World Film Corporation's productions for disposal and three of the older Keystone-Chaplins which had not been released here. These were "Dough and Dynamite," "The Trysting Place" and "His Prehistoric Past." Lest the prospect of three consecutive Chaplins would overcome the exhibition they were immediately bound up with twenty-five more Keystone comedies, that is to say that in order to show the three Chaplins exhibitors have had to book twenty-eight subjects in all. And although the exhibitor kicked previously when the Essanay Company essayed to do half as much, the plan, Mr. Weirick's I believe, has carried admirably and to such an extent that almost every other exhibitor one meets is booked up solid on Keystone for twenty-eight weeks.

The second hustle of Messrs. Wink & Davies is even more astonishing this time in connection with Triangle pictures. Within a fortnight seven provincial branches were started for the handling of Triangle features, three in England and one each in Scotland, Ireland and Wales and a few days later first trade shows of "Peggy" and "Fatty and Mabel Adrift" were being held in each center. In Manchester, very imposing premises in the second principal thoroughfare in the city have been acquired, while at Birmingham a property owner who started to argue in legal terminology about leases and tenancy agreements was bought out of business. The London premises are next door to the present Gerrard Street offices of the Western Import Company.

Mutual Program

Schedule for the Week of June 5 Announces the First of the Mutual Star Series—Other Good Subjects.

WITH the release of "Whispering Smith" and "Soul Mates," first of the big five-act Mutual Star productions, which top Mutual offerings for the week of June 5, the new feature release policy of the Mutual Film Scene from "Whispering Smith" (Mutual).

Corporation, recently announced, gets into full swing. The new Mutual Star productions promise to set a new record in feature releases in many ways. Each will be written to match the histrionic talents and personalities of the stars. Many of the Mutual Star productions will be prepared for the screen from the latest of popular fiction stories. A staff of noted scenario men are now at work at the various studios where the productions will be filmed preparing the features for the screen.

Frederick Warde, Richard Bennett, Mary Miles Minter, Helen Holmes, Florence La Badie, William Russell and various other stars of the stage and screen will be presented as the featured players in these new Mutual Star productions. Miss Minter is now at work at the American-Mutual studios in Santa Barbara on her first feature release. Frederick Warde has begun his first feature at the Thanhouser studios. Mr. Bennett will leave for the American-Mutual studios just as soon as his theatrical engagement in New York is concluded. First of the Mutual Star productions, featuring Miss La Badie, Miss Holmes and William Russell, have been completed.

"Whispering Smith," produced under the direction of J. P. McGowan, was adapted from Frank H. Spearman's noted story of the same name.

Miss Holmes is seen in the role of Marion Sinclair, which gives her ample opportunity to bring into play her well-known emotional appeal. McGowan appears in the role of Whispering Smith, while the other important roles are in the hands of Paul C. Hurst, Leo Maloney, Thomas Lingham, Chance Ward, N. Z. Wood, Sam Appel, F. Van Norman, Walter Rogers, William Brunton and others.

The Mutual Star production featuring William Russell will be released under the title of "Soul Mates." It was produced at the American-Mutual studios. This production was especially written to match the personality of this virile young star. It was prepared under the personal direction of J. Edward Hungerford. Charlotte Burton appears in Russell's chief support. Others in the cast are Leona Hutton and Harry Keenan.

Mutual releases for this week offer a wide variety of themes and present a galaxy of popular Mutual players. Particularly interesting is the Gaumont-Mutual three-act drama of the week, which will be released June 8 under the title of "Flames of Vengeance." This production presents two feminine stars in the leading roles, something seldom witnessed in motion picture photodramas. Gertrude Robinson, a popular Mutual heroine, long identified with Mutual Masterpieces, De Luxe Edition, and Iva Shepard, the "vampire" of the Gaumont-Mutual studios, are the featured players. They are supported by a capable company of players, headed by Alexander Gaden.

Four two-reel subjects will be released by the Mutual on the same program. "Jealousy's First Wife," an unusually interesting domestic drama, featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Voughough, heads the list. It is from the American-Mutual studios and will be released June 5.

"John Brewster's Wife," from the Thanhouser-Mutual studios, for release June 6; "The Pilgrim," from the Mustang-Mutual studios, with Frank Borzage and Anna Little in the leading roles, for release June 9; and "The Lion's Nemesis," a stirring drama from the Horsley-Mutual studios, featuring Margaret Gibson and the Bostock animals, comprise the two-act offerings. The latter will be released June 10.

Mutual comedy releases for the same week present a wide range of subjects. eBeauty offerings present "Billy Van Deusen's Operation," featuring Carroll Holloway and John Sheehan, and "Thinim Stout," starring Orrol Humphrey. They will be released June 7 and 10, respectively. Falstaff offerings include "Advertisers," featuring Conrad and Oscar, for release June 5, and "Where Wives Win," released June 10. Vogue releases include "A Plane Story," to be released June 5, and "His Blow-out," for release June 11. "Jerry's Big Lark," for release June 9, is the Cub comedy, featuring George Ovey.

"Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine, "The Weekly Mutual" and "See America First" will be released on the usual days, namely, Wednesday and Sunday.

Miss Eva Unsell with Lasky

Well-Known Scenario Writer and Continuity Editor Goes West to Join Studio Staff.

MISS EVA UNSELL, well-known scenario writer and continuity editor, for a long period with the Famous Players and other companies, left New York last week for Hollywood to join the staff at the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Miss Unsell has to her credit a number of successes on the screen. The Lasky Company has been particularly fortunate with women writers for the screen who have specialized for this branch of work at the Lasky studio. Margaret Turnbull and Marian Fairfax are examples of successful photoplay writers.

Among Miss Unsell's adaptations for Famous Players were "The Man from Mexico," with John Barrymore; "One of Our Girls," with Hazel Dawn; "Wildflower," with Marguerite Clark; "The Morals of Marcus," with Marie Doro, and "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," with Paul Pickford. Miss Unsell left the Famous Players a year ago to devote herself to original photoplays, and among her recent successes are "The Warning," with Henry Kolker; "The Ransom," with Julia Dean, and "The Reapers," written expressly for John Mason. The wide variety of these subjects and their popularity with the public convinced Mr. Lasky that Miss Unsell would be a valuable addition to his company.

Miss Unsell had just opened new offices at the Candler Building, New York City, to cope with the rush of work coming to her from various eastern producers, but the offer from the Lasky Company was so tempting from every point of consideration that Miss Unsell has finally put off all other contracts to become enrolled under the Lasky banner.

GEORGE MARSHALL WINS HIS PROMOTION.

Having won his spurs as an extra man at Universal City and later as an assistant director, George Marshall has been promoted to co-director with Harry Carey to produce western stories featuring Carey, supported by Miss Olive Fuller Golden.

Marshall was for a few months, up until three years ago, assistant director to Henry McRae at the Pacific Coast studios, and was then transferred as assistant to Director Jacques Jaccard, with whom he has worked and to whom he gives credit for his advancement.

World Film Productions

Class and Variety in Pictures Made for Discriminating Patrons Will Be the Rule.

WITH the idea in mind of catering exclusively to the higher tastes of the photoplay patron at large, William A. Brady's forthcoming World Film productions demonstrate his sincerity and further the distinct personality of his original ideas. He has formed a happy blending of players of stellar magnitude, noted artists and casting of more than one star to each production, so that the casts balance in every instance, as has always characterized the Brady stage productions.

Beginning with the June 5th release of the World Film, Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell will characterize the program in "His Brother's Wife," staged by Harley Knoles and is of a distinct dramatic calibre. This will be followed on June 12th by another two-star production, "The Perils of Divorce," with Frank Sheridan, the virile actor, and Edna Wallace Hopper, the dainty stage star, playing opposite each other.

June 19th will be an extreme event on the World program when "La Boheme," with Alice Brady as "Mimi," will be released as the regular unit. This was produced by Albert Capellani and a complete description of it appears in another part of this issue.

June 26th another two-star production, "What Happened at 22," will be the regular release, featuring Frances Nelson, last seen in "Human Driftwood," and Arthur Ashley, recently featured in "The Struggle."

Following the June 26th release will come Kitty Gordon in her third World Film production, and by far the most vital one, entitled "The Crucial Test," and this feature will be followed by Clara Kimball Young on July 10th in an unusual dramatic document, "The Story of Susan," in which Miss Young finds herself admirably fitted and capably surrounded by a production of special splendor.

Another unique event in the career of World Film will occur on July 17th when Robert Warwick will make his next appearance and by far the most important, in Thomas W. Lawson's powerful tale, "Friday, the 13th," which was staged under the supervision of Mr. Brady by Emile Chautard, after which will come Holbrook Blinn in another novel visualization of a powerful story, "The Weakness of Man," and then another two-star feature with House Peters and Gail Kane in "The Velvet Paw," which is a Tourneur picture, conceived and created by Maurice Tourneur, creator of "Tribly," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The Closed Road," and other celebrated film classics.

It is Mr. Brady's intention to so blend his players as to bring the important stars into the program at least once every six weeks.

E. H. SOTHERN READY FOR THE CAMERA.

E. H. Sothern, who is now playing at the Shubert theater, New York, in Justin Huntley McCarthy's play of the period of Louis XI, "If I Were King," will begin his photodramatic career at the Brooklyn studios of the Vitagraph Company of America on June 1. Mr. Sothern comes to the motion picture camera with perhaps the most enviable theatrical record of any American actor now playing on the boards.

General Film Juvenile List

One Hundred and Sixty-five Subjects on This Roll of Distinction Approved by Board of Review.

THE General Film Company, through its Information Department, is calling exhibitors' attention to the fact that the National Board of Review (formerly the National Board of Censorship) has especially designated 165 of its pictures for its list "Selected Motion Pictures for Young People Under Sixteen Years."

This list was compiled by skilled, disinterested critics and was made up from films inspected from time to time, beginning less than a year ago, classified under the captions, "Comedy," "Humor," "Fables," "Cartoons," "Vaudeville," "Stories," "Scenic," and "Miscellaneous." Each manufacturer releasing through General Film Service is represented on this list.

General Film Company is reminding exhibitors that through it they may obtain unusually attractive, approved films, especially suitable for matinees, when children can best attend moving picture theaters.

Grace Williams

MISS GRACE WILLIAMS leaves the Edison Company after playing the lead in many of their most successful photoplays for the past three years, such as "Waifs of the Sea," "The Truth About Helen," "Faith and Fortune," etc., and known as the popular Edison "Western girl," who found such free expression on the screen. With a person that gives shape and substance to the shadows of screencraft, together with a native wholesomeness that refreshes Grace Williams may well enjoy her distinctive success.

Miss Williams is invigorating and lovely to look upon, radiant and athletic, with the true hail-fellow-well-met attitude. When one is intently absorbed in the "Girl of the West," whom Grace Williams characterizes with such convincing charm, it would be irrelevant to remember that she was born in New York City; just as it would be interesting to learn that Miss Williams gained her schooling, so to speak, in Brooklyn.

Miss Williams has embraced a broad experience on the dramatic and musical comedy stages. At the age of seventeen she made her debut with Miss Mabel Hite in "A Certain Party." Then followed a year of the much valued stock training that served to fit Miss Williams for some of the big New York productions, among which were "The Rose Maid," "Weber and Fields," and "Sweethearts."

So it was with a valuable knowledge of life and the easy confidence gained from her stage career that enabled Miss Williams to make her conquest of the screen. Her art is versatile, for her interpretations of the sturdy "Belle of the Prairies" is in striking contrast to her exquisite adventures studies.

Miss Williams has had favorable opportunities at the Edison Studio to display her abilities in sport. She is an equestrienne of exceptional merit, and a very excellent swimmer. She was also with the Reliance, Biograph and Life Photo Film Company.

SARNO REJOINS UNIVERSAL COMPANY.

Hector B. Sarno has been re-engaged by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to play with Allen J. Holubar's company, which will produce a one reel play entitled "Any Youth." Sarno was formerly a member of the Jacard company playing heavies in underworld film stories. He is a native Italian actor, with many years of experience abroad before entering pictures.

Lasky Releases for June

Fannie Ward and Victor Moore in Two Elaborate Feature Productions.

TWO elaborate feature productions will be released by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company on the Paramount Program during the month of June. They are Fannie Ward, one of the most popular women stars of the screen, in "A Gutter Magdalene," released June 1, and Victor Moore, noted for his screen characterizations of "Chimmie Fadden" in "The Clown" released June 19.

Fannie Ward's starring vehicle is the first of a series of photoplays written for the Lasky company by the well known

Scene from "The Gutter Magdalene" (Lasky).

American dramatist, Willard Mack, author of "Kick In" and other Broadway successes. As the heroine Miss Ward appears as a young woman whose sins of scarlet are washed away in the environment of Salvation Army rescue work.

"A Gutter Magdalene" essentially is one of those stories the first telling of which is most successful on the screen. It is a play of action and considerable scope within a moderate period of time duration with numberless interesting and clever characterizations. Miss Ward brings to this picture a fame as a screen star well established by reason of her Lasky successes including "The Marriage of Kitty," "The Cheat," "Tennessee's Fardner" and "For the Defense." Her supporting cast includes Jack Dean, Charles E. West, Lucien Littlefield, Gertrude Kellar and other members of the Lasky company.

"The Clown," in which Victor Moore is the star, with the support of Thomas Meighan, who is featured in this production: Florence Dagmar, Ernest Joy, Tom Forman and Gerald Ward, is a story of circus life written by Marian Fairfax and produced by William C. De Mille. Unquestionably some of the finest comedy work ever done on the screen is contained in Cecil B. De Mille's productions of Victor Moore in the two "Chimmie Fadden" photoplays, "Chimmie Fadden" and "Chimmie Fadden Out West."

The story of "The Clown" is of gripping appeal as it tells how the children's idol risks his life to save one of his little admirers and later sacrifices his career to protect the honor of another. How he tries to better himself, and how he leaves the woman he has married to protect that she may turn to the one she loves is told in a number of unusual and startling scenes.

STANTON TAKES VACATION.

After having produced the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's serial, "Graft," in forty reels, and then topping off with a two reel film play on the Corona races, and a two reel comedy with Carter De Haven featured, Director Richard Stanton has taken a vacation. He plans to spend a few days at the seashore, resting up his nerves, and then he is going into the mountains, declaring he can catch the limit of trout every day.

FIFE PLAY FOR METRO.

Simultaneously with the renewal of Mabel Taliaferro's contract with Metro, Shannon Fife has been commissioned to prepare immediately an original five-reel feature for the well-known star. Fife's play will be produced by Edwin Carewe.

Big U Program Week of June 5th

A Five Reel Red Feather and Many other Noteworthy Subjects to Be Released.

THE Universal program for the week of June 5 contains six startling features in addition to the five-reel Red Feather release, Flora Parker De Haven in "The Madcap," and the sixth two-reel episode of "The Adventures of Peg O' The Ring," in which Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are featured.

"The Madcap" will be released on June 5th followed by the Nestor comedy, "Never Again Eddie," in which Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson act as official fun-makers. Eddie and Lee returned to Universal City on Monday, May 22, after a flying trip to New York where they renewed their contract with the Universal.

On June 6 Herbert Rawlinson plays the leading role in "The Rose Colored Scarf," a Gold Seal two-reel light drama in which Mr. Rawlinson is supported by Agnes Vernon. On the same day Matt Moore and Jane Gail co-star in a delightful little Imp comedy, "His Little Story."

"Object—Matrimony," a two-reel Victory comedy, is the feature of the program of Wednesday, June 7. Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby play the leading roles and acquit themselves creditably. The situations and plot of "Object—Matrimony" are screamingly funny and almost actor proof. On the same day, just for a heaping measure of fun, in come Billie Ritchie and Eva Nelson in a one-reel L-K-O, "Billie's Waterloo," which is a regular humdinger. The day closes with Universal Animated Weekly, No. 23.

"Alias Jane Jones," a Laemmle two-reel detective drama which will be released on June 8 with Edward Hearn and Edna Maison playing the leading roles, is an exceedingly tense underworld thriller. It will be followed on the same day by "The Sea Lily," a Big U drama, with Thomas Jefferson and Zoe Bech playing the leading roles. A split reel ends the day. First Mr. Peo appears in "Breaks for the Beach," a comedy cartoon, and then followed "Pygmies of the Zoo," a Ditmars Educational, both of which are released under the Powers brand.

June 9th leads off with "The Scorpion's Sting," a Victor three-reel society melodrama. This is followed by Ben Wilson in "The Code of His Ancestors," a Rex drama in which Mr. Wilson is supported by Dorothy Phillips. The last number on the day's program is a Nestor comedy, "Twixt Love and the Iceman," in which Neal Burns and Billie Rhodes show how much good wholesome fun can be gotten out of every-day situations.

A two-reel Bison underworld drama entitled "The Cage Man," with G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson playing the leads, is released on June 10, followed by "Betrayed by the Camera," a Powers comedy.

"The Sheriff of Pine Mountain," a two-reel Rex Northwest drama featuring Ben Wilson with Dorothy Phillips, is released by the Universal on June 11 together with the Laemmle drama, "The False Gems," in which Rupert Julian, Elsie J. Wilson and D. Gerard play the leading roles. The day ends with a deliciously funny comedy, "Phony Teeth and False Friends," an L-K-O howler in which Gene Rogers, Reggie Morris and Eva Nelson disport about a dentist's agony shop.

KOLB AND DILL IN MUTUAL COMEDY.

After years of continuous success on the vaudeville stage, where they gained national fame as entertainers, Kolb and Dill, German comedians, are shortly to make their initial appearance as the co-stars of a five-act American-Mutual comedy. This production, something unique in feature releases, is now under way at the American-Mutual studios in Santa Barbara, under the direction of Director Kea Berger. It will be released by Mutual under the title of "A Million for Mary." It was written for them especially by Al Santell from Aaron Hoffman's story of the same name.

BARNEY BERNARD IN YIDDISH COMEDY.

Barney Bernard, the original Abe Potash, arrived at the Vitagraph studios Monday, May 22, and began work on a Yiddish comedy under the direction of Paul Scardon. Mr. Bernard is assisted in his first comedy by James Morrison, Miss Marion Henry, Edward Elkas and a number of others. The first of the comedies was a conception by Samuel Tauber and presents a vivid picture of Jewish life in the metropolis wherein the peculiar strains of pathos and humor peculiar to the Jewish race are cleverly interwoven. Mr. Bernard will appear to his friends in a familiar role, that of the successful but married business man with a wife who is something of a social climber.

Alice Brady in "La Boheme"

World Film Production Based on Famous Opera Will Be Shown at Forty-Eighth Street Theater, New York.

ONE more big picture is to be added to the number of important film productions which will characterize the coming summer season at Broadway theaters, and this time it is a World Film Brady-Made production with the renowned manager's daughter, Alice Brady, seen in the title role.

As announced in the Moving Picture World several months ago, Miss Brady attended a performance at the Metropolitan Opera House of Puccini's "La Boheme," and between the acts visited back stage. Cavalieri was playing the role of Mimi, and Miss Brady, during a general talk in the green room, brought up the subject of motion pictures. Cavalieri immediately spoke up and said: "Why don't you do Murgur's story in films, Miss Brady?"

Alice Brady

When Cavalieri mentioned the matter of visualizing "La Boheme," Miss Brady began thinking. When Albert Capellani, the director, was taken into council, it was definitely decided that "La Vie De Boheme" as the story is originally named, would be Miss Brady's next picture. Capellani knew well the tremendous dramatic possibilities of "La Boheme," and at once began building and assembling his production.

Coincident with the statement from the World Film offices that "La Vie De Boheme" would be visualized, came a warning from Signor Puccini, the composer, that he would consider the production of "La Boheme" an infringement on his rights and instructed his attorneys to institute restraint proceedings. Despite this, Mr. Brady proceeded with the play and it was completed last week.

Nathan Burkan, representing Puccini, informed Mr. Brady that he was about to secure an injunction against the World Film Corporation and stop the releasing of "La Boheme."

and Mr. Brady, without ever having seen the finished picture, invited Mr. Burkan and a number of the Metropolitan opera stars to witness a private showing of the picture last Saturday afternoon.

The picture was shown and to the surprise of even Mr. Brady, the attorney, the noted singers and several of the Metropolitan directors rushed over and congratulated both Mr. Brady and Miss Brady.

"The picture is too beautiful to be interfered with," said

Mr. Burkan, "and further, I shall cable Puccini that I am in favor of its being distributed; it is the most irresistible subject I have ever seen." And then and there Mr. Brady decided to put the show on Broadway, with the result that it will open at the Forty-eighth street theater on June 5.

No Injunction for Chaplin

Application Made by Sid Chaplin to Stop "Carmen" Burlesque Is Denied.

JUDGE HOTCHKISS of the Supreme Court of the state of New York on Monday, May 24, denied the application of Charlie Chaplin for an injunction to restrain the V-L-S-E and the Essanay Company from distributing the four-reel Essanay-Chaplin comedy, "Charlie Chaplin's Burlesque on 'Carmen'." In the opinion denying Chaplin's motion for injunction, which was argued originally on May 12, Judge Hotchkiss said: "Notwithstanding the earnest argument of counsel for the plaintiff, I think this motion should be denied principally for the following reasons:

"First. Plaintiff's right under paragraph three of the contract of December, 1914 (assuming such contract to have remained in force unaltered), to enjoin the production because he had not approved of the play is doubtful.

"Second. The play itself is undoubtedly the property of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, by which company plaintiff was employed, and the circumstances of plaintiff's services in connection with the creation of the play distinguishes the case from those cases which have applied the principle of an author's exclusive right of literary property.

"Third. The facts do not justify a claim that the association of plaintiff's name with the play, as produced, amounts to a fraud upon the public. A fair construction of the advertisements of the play, is not that plaintiff is the author or producer, but that he is the star or principal actor.

"Fourth. It is not claimed that so far as he is pictured in the play his part is garbled or distorted. Whatever of him is shown is a truthful representation. Whether plaintiff's contract rights reserved to him rather than to his employer the sole privilege of determining what of his pictures shall be incorporated into the play produced, is at least doubtful.

"Fifth. Whether plaintiff will suffer any damage from the production is problematical, while an injunction is certain to work loss for defendants."

This opinion, it would seem, decisively disposes of Chaplin's contest against his former employers, but it does not absolve him from further sessions with courts. As a result of the suit brought by William M. Seabury, attorney for the Essanay Company in Los Angeles, on May 18, he will have to answer to an action to recover $500,000 damages brought by the Essanay Company, as previously outlined in these columns.

CHAPLIN APPEALS.

An appeal from the decision of Supreme Court Justice Hotchkiss in the suit of Charles Chaplin, the Mutual comedian, against the V-L-S-E to restrain the release of the burlesque of "Carmen" has been filed by Nathan Burkan, counsel for Mr. Chaplin.

In carrying the case to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Chaplin asks for $100,000 damages and further demands an accounting from the V-L-S-E of the profits accruing from the release of the picture, which Chaplin alleges injured his reputation as a comedian.

RICHARD W. MCFARLAND APPOINTED ASSISTANT TREASURER OF V-L-S-E.

At the last meeting of the board of directors of the V-L-S-E, it was formally announced that Richard W. McFarland, the Lubin New York representative, had been elected to the position of assistant treasurer of the Big Four, to succeed Paul Melies, who recently resigned. Mr. McFarland brings to the office a well rounded experience, acquired in the various managerial ends of theatrical enterprises.

His initiation into motion pictures was about twenty years ago when, as a next door neighbor, he helped Mr. Lubin carry his parlor furniture into the yard. At that time Mr. Lubin used his yard as a studio, his cellar as a laboratory, and his neighbors as actors.

JACK MULHALL JOINS UNIVERSAL.

Jack Mulhall has joined the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to play juvenile roles and already has commenced work with Miss Cleo Madison's company. He is considered one of the best juvenile types before the motion picture camera and has been with the Biograph Company for over three years. Before that time he had played in stock in various parts of the country.

"Who's Guilty?"

Third and Fourth Numbers Uphold the Dignity of the New Pathe Series.

sented in a manner both entertaining and profitable. The stars who have been chosen for the series, namely, Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore, have already proved themselves sufficiently magnetic.

Number three under the title of "The Tangled Web" deals cleverly with the problem of a young woman whose guardian has with the object of pecuniary and social benefit tricked her into marriage with a man whom she does not love. Later when she discovers the true nature of the man she has married and the manner in which she has been tricked, she seeks revenge by working with her husband's enemies to bring about his financial ruin. The end of it all is that she and the man she really loves are shot dead by the husband, practically unbalanced under the stress of circumstances.

The fourth number, entitled "The Silent Shame," presents another domestic problem, that of the woman whose husband has ceased to love her. Discovering that she is in love with another man, the husband, with the aid of a dishonest lawyer, pretends to gain a divorce. When she has married the man she loves and has lived with him for some time she learns that she is still the legal wife of the other. After years have passed and she has lived in seclusion abroad, she returns to find her daughter about to be married to the man whom she has illegally married years before. An interesting number, well produced.

"The Battle of Hearts"

Exciting Fishing Village Melodrama by Fox—Masterful Hero Left Under Cloud, Wins Girl in Spite of All.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IN THE latest Fox melodrama, "The Battle of Hearts," the character of the hero, the masterful superman kind, belongs with a more recent type of story, and this character decidedly takes the development of the plot in charge. The heroine, too, is a captain of a fishing smack. Yet there are many of the good, sure-fire things in the incidents, and it will make a very acceptable offering (five reels long) for the average picture house. It is the kind of picture that people are sure to like. Oscar Apfel adapted it for the screen and directed it and his ability in putting over this kind of tale is beyond question.

At the start the hero is masterful. He is rich and the owner of a fishing fleet. The girl doesn't care for him and prefers Jo, the son of the lighthouse keeper. The hero tells her that she is his mate whether she is willing at present or not, for neither God, the devil nor man can take her from him. A storm wrecks his fleet and he has to begin again, but this doesn't take from him his determination. Now a band of smugglers is camped there and Jo falls under their influence. He steals from his poor father and gets the hero blamed for it. The excitement has been built up by gradual degrees and gets more edge to it. One night Jo puts dope in his father's coffee and the lighthouse is not started. In the dark the smugglers get a load of booty in their cave; but the heroine's ship is wrecked. The hero rescues her and in an exciting group of incidents captures the band. The climax is tense. The whole will prove an acceptable offering for all kinds of exhibitors.

"Fate's Boomerang"

Mollie King Appears as Mountain Girl in Paragon-World Film Picture Presenting Conventional Story.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

EVEN to the concluding scenes, in which an unworthy wife is killed in order that the husband may be free to marry a loyal, untutored girl of the mountains, this five-part World Film drama runs true to a familiar form. It is an average offering, lacking distinguishing marks in plot construction, but well enough produced by Frank Crane, with Mollie King giving a quite appealing characterization of Zell, the ingenuous, pretty heroine. Then there is the unflinching attraction of picturesque backgrounds photographed in a mountainous country being penetrated by a railroad.

For dramatic contrast the attention of the audience is frequently shifted from the blameless life of the young engineer in charge of building the railroad to the frivolous existence of the wife he left behind because she was unwilling to forego the pleasures of society. Most of the characterization is rather elementary and the situations are obvious, though not necessarily ineffective.

Probably the most startling incident in the picture is the death ride of the wife, who, accompanied by a detective, has gone to the mountains to secure evidence on which she may divorce her husband. The drunken driver loses control of the horse and after a wild race down a rocky road on the edge of a precipice the rig overturns and the occupants, according to the story, are killed. With this thrilling happening, handled in an entirely realistic manner, the story virtually closes, for there never is any doubt about the engineer finding a more congenial mate in the person of little Zell. In fact, the picture might be more interesting if the outcome appeared less inevitable.

Miss King possesses the youthful appearance and assumes the childish spirit desirable for a character such as she is given here. Beyond that her performance suggests little comment, for notable acting is not required. June Elvidge is always successful in suggesting the nature of the frivolous, flirtatious wife, whereas Charles Gotthold has no difficulty in portraying the sterling qualities of the engineer. With the exception of a few scenes, photography is good.

"His Trust and His Trust Fulfilled"—A Civil War Drama in Two Parts—"The Blue or the Gray," a Single Reel.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHEN Griffith made "His Trust and His Trust Fulfilled" in 1911 the two reels were released separately under the titles now bracketed for the reissue of July fourth. While not designed as an Independence Day picture, it may be classed as a seasonable offering, in that considerable powder is burned in the first reel, the occasion being an engagement between Union and Confederate troops. For about five hundred feet we have a battle spectacle of no mean proportions, in which an officer, around whose family the story centers, is killed. A faithful old slave is entrusted with the care of the officer's little daughter, and henceforth the picture is concerned with his fulfillment of the trust.

Wilfred Lucas, playing the devoted negro, gives a capital characterization of the type of slave that we like to read about in southern fiction. Life is only of value to him in so far as it is of service to the two helpless women in his charge. When the child blossoms into a young woman and there is no money to pay for her education he draws upon his own meagre savings to send her away to boarding school. Presently even this fund is exhausted and the outlook appears rather gloomy until a handsome young cousin with money comes to marry the girl and relieve the faithful slave of his responsibility. Despite the number of years which have elapsed since their production, these two reels will stand comparison, on technical points, with those of a similar nature being made today. Moreover, the acting in of the best, with Claire McDowell, Dell Henderson, Dorothy West and Harry Hyde in the cast.

"The Blue or the Gray" is another Civil War drama, but quite different in tone. Here the dramatic action, and it is very dramatic, is based on the brutality of soldiers whose passions have been released by drink. Most of the scenes are laid in a southern home where the women are imperilled by Union officers. Donald Crisp, Alfred Paget, Robert Harron, Irene Hawley and Mildred Manning are in the cast.

"Into the Primitive"

The Book of Robert Ames Bennet Vividly Visualized by Selig, with Kathryn Williams, Guy Oliver and Harry Lonsdale in the Principal Roles—Ablly Directed by T. N. Heffron.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I CAN fearlessly recommend "Into the Primitive," a five-reel production by Selig, released through V-L-S-E, Inc. May 29, as an enthralling photodrama, in which the story, acting and capable direction are all worthy of praise.

No other producer could have furnished the wild animals that appear in it and used them with equally appropriate surroundings, as has been done by the owner of the Selig Zoo. We see the big black-maned lion stalk through the forest and the underbrush not only by ones, but sometimes by droves at a time, while leopards, monkeys and other wild denizens of the African forest—not omitting crocodiles in secluded, stagnant pools—strike our vision and complete the impression of primitive wildness. And these wild creatures never appear unless there is a particular reason for it; they play their part in the development of the story just as fittingly as do the human characters, and contribute to the creation of a perfect atmosphere for the action of the story.

This atmosphere has been made still more real by the settings given the filmed story by Director Heffron. The scene showing the hut of the three castaways during the tremendous hurricane that sweeps the jungle on the East African coast, one night, is the most realistic of its kind that I have ever seen in moving pictures. The havoc wrought on the trees and on the barricade in the vicinity—brought actually before our eyes as it takes place; the torrential downpour of rain, and the vivid flashes of lightning that reveal the fury of the storm form impressions that are akin to awe.

With artful touches Director Heffron has prepared the spectator for the approaching storm. He gives us a view of an angry sky through the forest treetops, and afterward we see Jenny Leslie (Kathryn Williams), the girl castaway, walking restlessly in her sapling-netted hut, suffering from the moisture-laden, suffocating air.

Finely appropriate sea coast views that fit in well with the requirements of the story also reflect nice directing care on the part of Mr. Heffron.

The entire action of the photoplay is sustained by Kathryn Williams, Guy Oliver and Harry Lonsdale, who appear, respectively, as Jenny Leslie, an American heiress; Thomas Blake an American civil engineer, who, through a turn of fortune, has become a wanderer and a drunkard, and the Hon. Cecil Winthrop, a pseudo nobleman who turns out to be nothing more than the valet of an English duke.

Miss Williams is positively rejuvenated in the part of Jenny Leslie. Never has she appeared more charming of face or in manner. The fine scorn that she shows for Thomas Blake at first when all three are cast on a savage shore, after the shipwreck, must have hurt that worthy, but he never lets his face or manner show it. He is the boss of the castaways for their own salvation, and although the proud American heiress calls him a brute to his face, she finds out in the end that he is the gentleman and not the Hon. Cecil Winthrop, whom she had trusted.

Mr. Oliver's Thomas Blake is sturdily played. He is just overmastering enough to escape the charge of being brutal. The gradual restoration of the true manhood of the man who has been cheated of his fortune, and who, in turn, cheated himself of his character, is well drawn by Mr. Oliver.

Harry Lonsdale's Winthrop stands up well in contrast with the fine characterizations of Jenny Leslie and Thomas Blake. Excellent photography prevails throughout.

With my review it will be interesting to read the following letter, written by Robert Ames Bennet, author of the book, to William N. Selig:

"Permit me to express to you my profound gratification over your splendid production of my book, 'Into the Primitive.' The Denver V-L-S-E staff courteously gave a private run of the film for me. I went in a hypercritical mood, for I had seen the stories of other writers sadly mangled in the filming. But this five-reel picture is magnificent in every respect—acting, animals, settings, scenario and photography.

Scene from "Into the Primitive" (Selig).

"I am taking the liberty of expressing my appreciation direct to Mr. Heffron for his wonderful artistry as director, and to Miss Williams for the charm of her appearance and acting. She not only plays the part to perfection, but she looks it, because of her beauty."

"Mr. Oliver and Mr. Lonsdale are no less perfect in their roles; the animals are a delight to a nature lover like myself; the photography is wonderful—in fact, there is everything to praise about the picture and not the slightest thing to criticize."

"Committee on Credentials" Completed.

Director Harry Carey and George Marshall have concluded the production of Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Committee on Credentials," in two reels, featuring Carey, with Olive Fuller Golden opposite. Carey and Marshall are now working on a new two reel Western drama, entitled "The Hudgeon Man," with Carey featured and Miss Golden opposite. This film play provides strong action for the company of Western actors and cowboys. The story is by Harvey Gates, of the Universal City staff.

"Her Husband's Wife"

Five-Reel Melodrama of Studio and Theatrical Life, Written and Directed by Ivan Abramson.

Reviewed by Edward Weltzel.

IN PLACE of Husband read ex-Husband, and the cryptic nature of the title of Ivan Abramson's latest photoplay disappears. Taken by itself, such a title suggests French farce. Familiarity with Mr. Abramson's work, however, teaches that the writer of "Her Husband's Wife" deals only in serious dramatic material preferably that which contains plenty of popular punch. His latest photoplay has several lively goes with the Seventh Commandment, and, incidentally, hits the spectator a wallop between the eyes, when the present Mrs. James Gates is introduced to the first Mrs. James Gates and the fact is brought out that the two ladies are mother and daughter. Although floored, for the instant, by such a situation, one is bound to sit up and take notice of what follows. And the road to this dramatic knockout is not bathed in sunlight nor strewn with roses.

The action of the drama opens in Paris. The wife of a photoplay actor runs away to New York with a sculptor and leaves her six-year-old daughter with her father. Once in America, the lady throws over the French gentleman and becomes the wife of an American theatrical manager. Quickly tiring of him, Mrs. Gates has an affair with a man in her husband's employ, is found out and divorced, goes back to Paris to renew her relations with the sculptor (her first husband died shortly after she deserted him), returns to America to collect her alimony, finds that her second husband has married again, and that the new wife is her own daughter; the march of events leading up to this unusual situation not transgressing the laws of stage fiction laid down for dramas of this class. In her surprise, the mother blurts out the truth; then, retracts her statement, takes poison, and dies. Food aplenty in such a story for moral reflection—albeit, a bit strong in flavor. On its artistic side, the picture has rapidity of action, clear-cut character drawing, and holds to the main thread of its plot with gratifying constancy. A well-balanced cast has been entrusted with the acting. Sally Crute played the first Mrs. Gates and indicated the many moods of the woman, with ready skill. Mignon Anderson was an appealing figure as the daughter, and Augustus Phillips, Edward Mackey, Bradley Barker, William Bechtel, Arthur Law, Brinsley Shaw and little Kittens Reichart were always equal to the task assigned them. The author appeared in one of the minor roles.

"Reggie Mixes In," Five-Reel Fine Arts, and "The Sorrows of Love," Five-Reel Ince.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"REGGIE Mixes In" is delightfully imbued with Douglas Fairbanks, though a little less of him and a little more of Bonnie Sweet Bessie Love would give the flavor more delicacy. Not that his personality lacks interest. It is so strong and forceful that it suffers from a surfeit of those admirable qualities, admirable when they are delivered in nice proportion—his excess of enthusiasm carries its own condemnation. He is so ever-present that a story might be written for him one that he can carry on his own shoulders, one that makes every move dependent upon his strong will, physical prowess and exhaustless energy. It must portray him as irresistible and superhuman, irrespective of logic or verisimilitude. He is now so well established in favor, a veritable motion-picture artist, that he can afford to appear in plays dealing less with surface aspects of character and those more subtle which penetrate underlying motives for action.

"Reggie," as impersonated by Fairbanks, is a wealthy college athlete with a penchant for adventure in walks of life hitherto unexplored by members of his family, those of the underworld, and he sallies forth with a pickled-faced valet, who soon becomes pickled indeed, to seek whom he may devour in a dance hall much frequented by murderous toughs. He there finds a fairy-like little dancer, "perfectly straight" in spite of her crooked environment, engaged in supporting a mother of decayed gentility. Of course Reggie rescues the little dancer from all kinds of perils and mixes it with the toughs, both singly and in groups. He is now in his element, but love for the little dancer decides him to return to civilization. He secretly provides her with a fortune, a supposed inheritance, tries her love to the utmost and reappears as a Prince Charming at the end. The story is very animated, contains a large number of elements of popularity, and it should prove a money-maker for producers and exhibitors.

"The Sorrows of Love."

"The Sorrows of Love" is the story of a girl brought up in an atmosphere of rigor and emotional suppression, that of a convent who slips out into a world of ill-suppressed emotion, that of Venetian struggle between a patrician class engaged in making oppressive laws and a working class clamoring in vain for justice. There her religious training inspires her to successfully advocate honorable methods instead of violent ones for oppressed working people, while she seems to be unable to apply her fine principles to her own conduct. She deserts her lover in a fit of suspicion, informs on the working people when they seek to redress their wrongs by revolution, and brings on the death of the man she loved, whom her suspicions deeply wronged. Having accomplished swiftly far more evil than good, she retires to the protecting shelter of a nunnery to repent at leisure.

The story is far from impressive in spite of its picturesque backgrounds, intelligent treatment and the strong interpretations of Miss Barriscale and Wedgewood Nowell. Barriscale is satisfactory, but not attractive, in her unattractive role. She is artistic in conduct and costume, but she neither suits the part nor could it suit her. The play itself lacking any visible and vital motive or any modern reason for existence, the only chance to make it effective is through characterization, but characterization is not there. There is very little of interest to be revealed, hence the subtle qualities in which Miss Barriscale excels are wanting in the role to which she was assigned.

In the particular exploit chosen for "The Pursuing Vengeance," the center of mystery is concealed in a Boule cabinet, shipped from France to an American connoisseur. Howard serial is one of the publications that thrive by threatening to uncover the skeleton that is popularly supposed to be hidden in nearly every family closet. The editor of this particular disreputable sheet is a prominent society man, and his victims are members of his own set. He bribes the maid of a young woman to steal a package of compromising letters from her mistress. The lady has put this weapon in the hands of the editor by trying to find a friend, and is unable to pay the sum demanded as hush-money. Mona and Mary are called in, and a neat little plot is set in motion, by which the fangs of the "Tattler" are extracted in anything but a painless manner. The blackmailers' printing plant is made to look as if wrecked by a shot from one of the big guns at Verdun, and the proprietor is forced to evacuate the scenes of his nefarious means of livelihood.

The way in which Mona and Mary accomplish their object makes entertaining matter for the spectator and gives all good men and their wives an opportunity to rejoice at the downfall of a scoundrel. Director James W. Horne shows no abatement of his interest in the screening of the series, and Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby still do their excellent team work as the two heroines and, also, maintain their friendly rivalry in fetching frocks and frills. Frank Jonasson, Edward Olsbee and R. L. Dell play the male characters.

"A Bunch of Flivvers."

A great mystery is solved in this one-reel "Ham" comedy. For over twenty years many worthy persons have wondered in what part of the universe lay that Sargasso into which the wrecks of flivvers and sea-going taxies finally drift. The answer is simple. The Kalem company have cornered the flivver market and shipped them all to its Western studio to be used in the latest "Ham." They form a remarkable collection and one fraught with many dangers, but the intrepid Lloyd V. grasps the steering gear of each and every one and, like another Castablanco, does not desert his ship until it is blown from under him. A lively and highly amusing reel, with Bud Duncan, A. Edmondson and Norma Nichols, members of the crew.

ADAPTED from a story by Burton E. Stevenson, these five reels are well devised to arouse interest in a first rate story of crime, mystery and detective acumen; to maintain suspense up to the denouement and altogether to provide a very satisfactory hour and a quarter's entertainment. As in all mystery tales worthy of the name, author and director presuppose close attention on the part of the spectator, for an intelligent comprehension of the meaning of the swiftly moving scenes is dependent upon a clear comprehension of the characters and their varied purposes. To drop in on this picture after the first reel was underway and attempt to pick up the plot thread would be a task of no little difficulty; but carefully followed from the beginning, it is only fair to state that it is a photoplay of cumulative strength.

Naturally, the audience is given occasional suggestions of the game Crochard is playing and is allowed to draw its own conclusions about the real history of the cabinet, supposed to contain love letters which a countess is intent upon recovering; but for a complete and correct solution it is best to wait for the concluding reel. Scenes are short, the action is snappy, the continuity is good and the acting of Mr. Lewis, Jane Meredith and Henry Mortimer suffices. that are frequently found in a clever mentally alert woman. The characterization is excellent, but there is a break in it toward the middle of the story which seriously weakens the production as a whole.

Miss Farrington first appears as an actress searching for an engagement. She has written a novel which she leaves with the theatrical manager, who afterward decides to dramatize her story and let her play the leading role. This is the part of Lil Magill, the cleverest newspaper woman in her city.

The story of Lil Magill carries a strong heart interest in the opening scenes. She is beloved by the city editor, known as "Old Grouch," but for five years has been the friend of Paige, owner of the paper, whom she thinks will marry her. Paige, who has a grown daughter in California is playing fast and loose with Lil. She discovers this and decides to call him to account.

While it is perhaps true that "hell hath no fury like a woman scorned," it seemed that Lil's sudden filling up on liquor and her rush to Paige's home with a revolver in her handbag with which to kill him, was overdone. Cutting out the drinking scenes, or toning them down considerably, would hold the sympathy of the observer to better advantage. Straight dramatic handling in place of exaggerated melodrama, would have made the scenes in the Paige home much stronger. The strike feature is quite well presented, though the continuity is not maintained at all times.

The production, written by Gertrude H. Andrews and directed by Jay Hunt, is one of moderate strength.

"Pirates of the Air"

Two-Reel L-KO. Comic Number Makes Feature of a Race Between Two Aeroplanes in Midair.

THIS two-reel comic production makes an interesting feature of a race between two aeroplanes. The fact that they are suspended in a studio, with a moving background of clouds behind them, does not materially detract from the burlesque. When Alice Howell climbs in her agile way from one aeroplane to another, the scene carries very well for burlesque purposes.

The aeroplane race is the strong feature of the number. The opening scenes, taken in a country inn, contain considerable laughter, but the humor is not in the best tone. The frequent squirting of water and soup out of the mouths of waiters and customers is overdone and the kitchen scenes lack cleanliness. The plot centers about the theft of a newly invented aero-

Fatty Voss and Phil Dunham are also in the cast. The number is not as strong as some previous ones, but is better than the average comic in certain respects.

"Bobbie of the Ballet"

Louise Lovely Featured in Appealing Five-Part Melodrama for Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of the pretty ballet girl whose mother died leaving her the care of two small children is nicely suited to portrayal in film; nor could a more appropriate one have been chosen in which to exploit the charms and talents of Louise Lovely. The original story by Grant Carpenter was put in scenario shape by Ida May Park, and produced by Joseph De Grasse with a cast consisting, in addition to Miss Lovely, of Jay Belasco, Jean Hathaway, Gretchen Lederer, Gilmore Hammond, Lon Chaney, Lule Warrington and two exceptionally clever children.

There is a wholesomeness about the way in which the production has been staged, and there is never a moment when the moral balance is lost sight of. The manner in which Bobbie becomes the butt of circumstances and is tossed at last to safety in the home of the Stimmons, whose son she marries, is portrayed in a distinctly appealing way. Bobbie's struggle to evade what the children term the "doption people" and the quaint scenes in which Hook Hoover, a criminal who accidentally finds refuge in Bobbie's attic room, appears, will please old and young. The consistency with which the story works out the effective human details which have been interpolated, together with excellent photography are prime factors in making the picture one of the most enjoyable of the season. In the opening of the production there might be an objection to the number of apparently unnecessary closeups of Miss Lovely which were evidently suggested to the director by the unusual beauty of the star. And in the minds of some specta-ters an objection might arise to the use of the criminal as a benefactor. The fact that the production is developed along melodramatic lines, however, will in a measure justify the employment of an extreme situation.

"Jack."

F RANK BORZAGE has learned the happy faculty of making interesting western pictures that the public like, clean and wholesome, containing touches both of comedy and tragedy combined with simple, near-to-nature atmosphere.

"Jack," in which Borzage himself plays the title role, presents a simple tale of human hearts. It dabbles not at all with problems of a more serious nature, and the director has evidently concentrated on developing the single thread upon which hang the destinies of the characters of the play. Anna Little plays the role of a society girl who goes west with high-flown ideas concerning the homage due her from other people, especially the plain man of the west. Jack, a cowboy on the Gilmore ranch where Frances goes to visit succeeds in bringing her to her senses, a mutual affection springs up between them, and upon her return to school, Frances gives her promise to marry Jack. The remainder of the story concerns itself with a near tragedy owing to Frances suddenly changing her mind. Others of the cast are Jack Richardson, Dick La Reno and Margaret Nichols.

"Sawdust Love."

Billy Armstrong and Tommy Hayes, Mile. Ottawa, Carl Lang, Ed. Roberts and a number of others have a place in this truly amusing farce comedy which takes the form of a dream in which Simpkins and Jigger are transported to a circus heaven. Simpkins becomes the hero of the day, and the hit of the circus, and is about to take unto himself a sweetheart in the person of the circus queen, when he awakes to find it all a dream. During the course of the dream Simpkins performs some amusing acrobatic feats. The picture will be amusing to any audience, and is reasonably free from vulgarity.

"Saints and Sinners"

Peggy Hyland Scores in Her Famous Players Debut in an Adapted Henry Arthur Jones Play.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

A YOUNG woman introduced to us as "a noted English stage favorite" bids fair to become an American film favorite. Peggy Hyland, in "Saints and Sinners," from the play by Henry Arthur Jones, and the latest Famous Players release, shows marked adaptability for film work. She has intelligence and charm of personality. She shows deftness of touch in lighter moments and real strength in sterner situations.

"Saints and Sinners" is a play of English country life converted to an American locale. It is a simple story, devoid of the spectacular, but nevertheless possessing human elements that make for interest. Letty Fletcher, the daughter of a minister, through her infatuation for a man against whom she has been warned by her father, is guilty of an indiscretion—an indiscretion that is sinless but is sinister in aspect. That Letty does not fall is due to inherent force of character, the result of home teachings. The picture is wholesome in tone in spite of the villainies portrayed by the libertineous Fanshawe and by the avaricious Hoggar.

The cast is adequate. Standing out are Albert Tavner as the gentle, fatherly old minister; Estar Banks as the equally gentle spinster housekeeper, and Clarence Handysides as the banker who would employ in forcing the minister to violate his trustship of an estate the purloined evidence of what on its face was a major misstep on the part of Letty.

The exteriors are staged in picturesque spots in Florida by James Kirkwood, and the subject is splendidly photographed. "Saints and Sinners" is a good picture.

"The Thousand Dollar Husband"

A Meritorious Lasky Production in Which Blanche Sweet and Tom Forman Take the Leading Parts.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE is a good deal of genuine pathos and not a little of genuine humor in this play. The story deals with the unselfish love and devotion of a girl in an humble station of life. The object of her combined affection and devotion is a young man whose social standing is very far above her own. How the seemingly unbridgeable gulf is finally bridged by mutual esteem and love is very prettily though at times somewhat diffusely told in the development of the plot.

Blanche Sweet plays the part of the naive and unsophisticated servant girl who through an access of unexpected good fortune suddenly becomes wealthy. The young man whom she has learned to love faces disgrace and poverty brought on by his own fault when the girl comes to his rescue willing to sacrifice not only her money but her entire happiness to the salvation of the youth she loves. At first the latter accepts the sacrifice without any thought of his own obligations in the matter. Gradually, however, he begins to realize that he owes something to the girl. The latter's views and character develop with her improved opportunities and this of course aids in the drawing together of the young souls.

All the usual adjuncts and characteristics of the Lasky school of art are found in the picture. Theodore Roberts endows a subordinate part in the story with his usual power and skill. Blanche Sweet shows more cleverness than usual in the portrayal of a semi-comic character, while Tom Forman gives a most plausible rendition of a part, which needed much skill to make it acceptable to the audience.

"The Fool's Game" (Horsley).

Desert land close to Newhall, California, just outside of the beautiful San Fernando valley, will serve as the setting for a number of the scenes in the forthcoming David Horsley production, "The Fool's Game," an unusual story from the pen of Crane Wilbur, who will also be seen as the star in this picture.

"The Fool's Game" is a story which may be termed different. It appears to be the best work of Mr. Wilbur and besides providing for him an entirely new character for portrayal, it introduces Miss Gaston and Mr. Oaker in roles which they are suited for.

In the cast there are but three characters of prominence. The star and author will be seen as a multi-millionaire of about middle age, big hearted but stern indeed when he is dealing with an impostor. He falls desperately in love with a pretty face which fails to betray a life of laziness and sham affection. That part falls to Miss Gaston.

Mr. Oaker is called upon to shoulder a part which gives him unlimited opportunity for fine acting. He, too, is of the lazy calibre, and is the rival of the rich man for the hand of the woman. Work he hates, but he loves to "work" others. With the girl a scheme is launched whereby she shall marry the millionaire for a price, to soon after have her "love" melt and with her new wealth marry the lazy youth.

The scheme is successful, but before the woman can carry out her desire to overthrow the man who really loves her, she is unexpectedly surprised by her husband and defeat is handed to her. Then comes the weary hours, days and weeks on the desert with the working up of the "Fool's Game" to the great climax of the love test.

New Gold Rooster Play in Pathecolor.

Pathe announces another Gold Rooster Play in Pathecolor for release in week beginning Monday, June 19th. It's called "A Matrimonial Martyr," and features Ruth Roland, the charming star of the "Who Pays?" series, "The Red Circle" serial, the Gold Rooster play, "Comrade John," the forthcoming Gold Rooster play, "Sultana," etc. Andrew Arbuckle, the "Smiling Sam" of "Red Circle" fame; Daniel Giffether, Balboa's best character actor; Marguerite Nichols, of "Who Pays?"; "Little Mary Sunshine" popularity; Mollie McConnell, the Balboa grand dame, and R. Henry Gray are numbered in the supporting cast. "A Matrimonial Martyr" was produced by the Balboa company for Pathe.

"Hungry Hearts" (Vim).

Voes of a penniless artist whose model is an heiress, but doesn't know it, give a sprightly turn to the events which succeed each other rapidly in "Hungry Hearts," the Vim comedy release of June 15. A patron wishes to buy a full-length study of the girl on a deskable. Rather than submit her beauty to the gaze of alien eyes, the artist destroys the picture when temptation proves too strong. For this and other acts of faithfulness he wins a rich reward.

OTTO THE HERO (Lubin), May 22.—The valiant gentleman who hires a pair of thugs to help him in acting the hero, is not a novel character in the stage fiction. Jack O'Neil has followed a well blazed trail, in this one-reel comedy. The situations are always amusing, however, and D. L. Don is the right actor for the title role. George Egan, Bernard Selgel, Florence Williams and Patsy De Forest act the remaining parts.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, No. 41, 1916 (Selig), May 22.—U. S. troops camp in streets of El Paso; Flora Pageant, Vicksburg, Miss.; auto race at Sheephead Bay; Naval Reserve diving, Chicago; Glen Springs, Tex., scene of Mexican attack; parade at Navy Yard, Charleston, Mass.; Preparedness Parade, New York.

THE COST OF HIGH LIVING (Vitascope), May 22.—In this one-reel comedy, written by Joseph F. Poland, a young college chap, tries to run away from the girl picked out for him by his friends, with the usual results; he falls in love with her before he learns that she is the lady he is trying to avoid. The picture makes an entertaining offering, and is acted by Wm. Duncan, Corinne Griffith, Carmen Phillips, Edgar Keller and Anne Schaefer.

HAM'S BUSY DAY (Kalem), May 23.—In this one-reel farce Ham and Bud become inmates of a hospital and rivals for the hand of one of the nurses. The comedy is of the "rough house" order and was produced by Harry Edwards.

THE CECROPIA MOTH, AND TOM THE TAMER AND KID KELLY (Edison), May 24.—This split-reel is made up of five hundred feet of cleverly photographed educational film and a half-reel of amusing cartoon comedy.

THE BOGUS GHOST (Kalem), May 24.—Ethel Tearle has the leading role in this one-reel comedy. As a young woman in need of a job, she secures a position with a pair of fake mediums and plays ghost for them. A love affair in which the lady medium takes part and tries to capture the ghost's young man is another comedy motive. The picture is spiritedly acted and contains a number of laughs.

A BABY GRAND (Kalem), May 26.—Because a family has a baby grand in the house, that is no sign they have a grand baby. It is this milke that creates the comedy in this one-reel S. B. Hopkins, and Arthur Frank Howard Clark has turned out a laughable farce. Rose Melville's grin is as guileless as ever, and the members of the supporting company, including Henry Murdock, do the same dependable work.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE (Selig), May 25.—Judge Thomson of Chicago, acts the part of Solomon; McKinney Springs, Tex., U. S. soldiers pursue Mexican bandits; opening of concrete bridge, Sacramento, Cal.; searching Mexicans at El Paso; opening day at Brighton Beach, Cal.; American prisoners capture their guards at Deemers, Mex.; pupils of school at Morgan Park, Ill., act like soldiers.

General Film Company Presents

THE MISSING MILLIONAIRE (No. 9 of "The Social Pirates") (Kalem), May 22.—A review of this installment of the George Bronson Howard serial was printed in the issue of May 27, page 1534. Two unscrupulous stock manipulators have a millionaire confined in an asylum, while they raid one of his railroad holdings. Mona and Mary come to the rescue. Familiar material but well constructed.

PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE (Lubin), May 25.—A review of this three-part photoplay was printed in the issue of June 3, page 1710. The picture is a modern melodrama, in which a man and a woman sacrifice their happiness when they learn that the woman's husband, who they thought dead, is still alive.

THE FLIRTING BRIDE (Knickerbocker), May 26.—A comedy situation, introducing some melodrama in the last reel, is reasonably well handled in this three-part picture, reviewed in the issue June 3d. Jackie Saunders is particularly attractive in the title role.

THE TEST OF CHIVALRY (Selig), May 22.—The outstanding virtue of the leading characters in this three-reel photoplay is their lack of selfishness. None of them thinks of himself first, the women of the cast being as ready as the men to sacrifice their own happiness. The story is an earnest and skillful piece of writing by Elizabeth R. Carpenter, and has been effectively produced by Wm. Robert Daly, Fritz Brunette and Edward J. Piel play the leads, and Vivian Reed, James Bradbury, Wm. Scott, Frank Clark and Lillian Hayward complete the cast.

THE CONDEMNATION (Essanay), May 23.—A man's unreasonable jealousy forms the groundwork of this two-reel drama. The sequence of events leading up to the climax where the jealous husband is about to shoot an innocent man is well put together, the characters being of good social position. The sets are mostly handsome interiors. Nell Craig, Darwin Karr, Edmund P. Cobb and Jane Thomas comprise a quartet of efficient principals.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

BOBBIE OF THE BALLET (Bluebird), June 12.—A five-part melodrama featuring Louise Lovely. The play is clean and wholesome, treating of the struggle of a ballet girl whose mother dies leaving her with the care of two children. The manner in which circumstances toss her about is being told entertainingly. A full review of the production will be found on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, No. 73 (Gaumont), May 24.—A diversified number containing glimpses of the New York "Preparedness" parade, motor races at Sheephead Bay, Suffrage envoys in Washington and war sidelights in Europe and on the Mexican border.

PREPAREDNESS (Cub), May 26.—This is an amusing farce comedy, featuring George Ovey. Jerry, in love with the daughter of a Southern colonel, finds a troublesome rival in a policeman. In seeking to rid himself of the policeman he hitches one end of a rope to his rival's belt and the other to a wagon, thus hoisting the policeman to the top of a telegraph pole. The close of the story shows Jerry being conveyed to the police station. Very funny.

REEL LIFE, No. 4 (Gaumont), May 28.—An excellent number of the mutual Magazine in Film showing a total eclipse of the sun as seen at the Paris, France, observatory, wild life in the Florida Everglades, including the Sacred Ibis, the heron, the egret, the Diamond Back rattlesnake, the King snake and the water moccasin. The humane execution of animals by the Animal Rescue League of Boston, the operating room in the Angell Memorial Hospital at Boston, showing a couple of cases where ailing dogs are being attended, and a sixteen cats mothering young chicks and ducks are also exceedingly interesting items.

NATIONAL NUTS (Vogue), May 28.—An amusing baseball farce with Paddy McGuire, Ben Turpin and Rena Rogers in the leading roles. Jeff, a substitute pitcher, in love with the daughter of a multimillionaire, plots to ruin the chances of Strikeout Murphy, who is admired by the pretty maid. The umpire, who has been bribed by Jeff to put arsenic on the ball, confesses to the fact, and Strikeout Murphy wins in the love match.

SIY THIRTY CENTS (Vogue), May 30.—A Rube Miller comedy, done in characteristic burlesque style. The gypsy camp makes a good setting. The hero tries to get the $1 ransom money in order to procure the girl's release. A keg of dynamite plays an important part. This comes under the head of entertaining nonsense; it contains laughable spots.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, No. 38 (Gaumont), May 31.—An excellent series of scenes taken on the ascent of Pike's Peak, on the famous cog railway. This tourist trip has been pictured in films before, but is splendidly picturesque and well seen again. A half reel adject.

ESCAPADES OF ESTELLE (Gaumont), May 31.—On same reel with above. Estelle, a humble negro girl, is thrown into the water while fishing. A goat eats up her clothes while she is drying them. These animated drawings are clever and laughable.

SAWDUST LOVE (Cub), June 2.—This farce comedy, in which Billy Armstrong is featured, will be found unusually entertaining. Simpkins and his pal, in a dream, are transported to the scene of a circus where the most amusing occurrences take place. A review of the film will be found on another page of this issue.

PETERSON'S PITIFUL PLIGHT, (Falstaff), June 3.—This pictures the adventures of a young business man, who marries while up to his ears in debt. His creditors pursue him constantly and he pretends they are relatives. There are not enough plot complications in this; it is only mildly interesting as it stands.

IMA A KNUFF GETS A BITE (Beauty), June 4.—Orral Humphrey is the central figure in this comedy, which will be found very entertaining. Ima Knuff, a peculiar type of New England farmer, is scrutinized closely by his wife. One day Ima is persuaded to attend a Sunday school picnic at the beach. Here he gets into trouble over the pretty ladies who cavort in the water and on the beach in bathing suits of the briefest sort. In an escapade during which he follows the girls into the water a big crab takes a death grip on his toes. This is really very amusing. A call off the pier by Ima is taken advantage of to interpolate a short bit of cartoon work, showing what happens to him at the bottom of the sea.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE RECLAMATION (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe), May 25.—A five-part American, featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Franklin

Ritchie. The production is well made and attractive. It abounds in consistent and interesting action, and deals with the attempt of a wealthy land owner to gain control of the water rights in the arid belt in which his property lies. To avoid the ruin of their prospects the older settlers conspire to outwit the opposing side. This is done indirectly by the clever manipulating of the situation by the daughter of one of the men.

JACK (Mustang), May 26.—A two-part western drama, directed by Frank Borzage, who also plays the title role. Anna Little, playing the feminine lead, portrays intelligently the character of a society girl who comes west for a visit and looks in vain for the trifling attentions paid her by male friends in the east. Dick La Reno, Jack Richardson and Margaret Nichols are also in the cast. A full review of this interesting production will be found on another page of this issue.

THE KAFFIR'S GRATITUDE (Centaur), May 27.—A two-part production from the Horsely studios, featuring William Clifford and Margaret Gibson. The story, which treats of how a young girl journeys to Cape Colony to marry her lover and is pursued and kidnapped by a would-be suitor, is told rather too much in the narrative style to be classed with legitimate drama. There are a number of minor details to be criticised, such as the wearing of high-heeled shoes in the saddle. A splendid old lion figures in the latter part of the picture.

THE RELEASE OF DAN FORBES (American), May 29.—A two-reel subject, by Kenneth B. Clarke, featuring Wm. Stowell, Helen Rossos and Harry Von Mater. The plot is conventional to the extent that it concerns a released convict, who barely escapes being sent back for murder. The construction, however, is unusually good and some quite strong dramatic effects are obtained. The development is natural and unforced, and when the tense scenes occur they are effective. Familiar in plot material, but well handled.

THE NYMPH (Thausbourn), May 30.—A two-reel number, by Philip Loneragan, featuring Barbara Gilroy, Thos. Curran and Robert Vaughn. It is the story of an artist who finds a fisher girl bawling off the rocks. He paints her picture in the nude, after she has indignantly refused to pose for him. Later he exhibits it in the city and the girl's fiancé takes a very proper revenge, by punishing the artist and slashing the picture. Miss Gilroy is attractive in the part of the girl. This is not an especially strong subject, but tells a good running story and holds the attention well throughout.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

BOBBY BUMPS GOES FISHING (Bray Studios), June.—There is rather more of a comedy story here than one usually finds in cartoon drawings and it has been very handsomely handled by Earl Hurd. Bobby and his father are assisted in the fun-making by a dog and a cat, portrayed in a distinctly humorous guise. The reel closes with one of E. L. Ditmars' nature studies, "Our Animal Friends and Foes," showing bold fight pests do thousands of dollars' worth of damage to crops. Interesting as the scenes are, some of these giving close-ups of a black snake are too repellent for mixed audiences.

PICTOGRAPH (Paramount), June.—"The Making of a Sailor," started in an earlier issue, is continued here with intimate views of life on a battleship. In the Better Habits section, a plan is made for the right of every child to profit by a summer vacation in the country with all that it means in the way of opportunities for a first hand education. A section of considerable instructive value shows how various minor injuries may be treated.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

SIBERIA, THE VAST UNKNOWN, No. 7 (Pathe), May 15.—In this number of the Siberian series is presented an unusual scene in the rounding up of possibly 10,000 reindeer by the Eskimo herds. They are then lassoed for the purpose of clipping their ears as a mark of identity. A most remarkable and enjoyable number. On the same reel with "On the Island of Luzon."

ON THE ISLE OF LUON (Philippine Islands), May 15.—A series of interesting views of islands, beaches, and the primitive methods employed by the natives in attempting to follow out progressive ideas such as irrigating the land. On the same reel with "Siberia, the Vast Unknown, No. 7."

LUKE'S LATE LUNCHEONS (Rolin), May 22.—A laughable slapstick comedy, in which Luke handles people and things about the restaurant in which he is employed with amusing indifference. Any audience will be pleased with this film, which contains surprisingly little that is vulgar.

LEAP YEAR (Pathe), May 22.—In this animated cartoon by Rube Goldberg, an unusually unattractive feminine makes desperate attempts to trap a husband. On the same reel with "How to Bring Up a Child."

HOW TO BRING UP A CHILD (Pathe), May 22.—On the same reel with the above, this subject deals in an amusing way with the care of infants, using as illustrations wrong methods of procedure. Instructive and entertaining.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

WHO'S GUILTY, No. 3 (Arrow), May 22.—"The Tangled Web" is the title of the third of the filmed stories dealing with crimes of circumstance. The problem presented in this number questions whether or not a woman who has been tricked into a loveless marriage is justified in revenging herself. The picture has been directed by Lawrence B. McGill in a capable manner and is a thoroughly enjoyable production.

THE IRON CLAW, No. 13 (Feature), May 22.—"The Hidden Face" brings us to an interesting point in the story of "The Iron Claw" serial, where Margie Golden learns, with great joy, the identity of the Laughing Mask, while we are still left guessing, firmly believing, however, that we also have the question solved. Margery is again called upon to hide this mysterious personage, this time in her own apartment. This is an intensely interesting number.

WHO'S GUILTY, No. 4 (Arrow), May 29.—"The Silent Shame" deals with the problem of a woman whose husband has ceased to love her. Anna Nilsson plays a double role opposite Tom Moore. As mother and daughter in a play presenting a peculiar and unusual situation in which the man to whom the supposedly divorced wife has been married, later becomes engaged to the daughter, Miss Nilsson does good work. This number has been elaborately staged and will be found enjoyable.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

NEVER AGAIN, EDDIE (Nestor), June 5.—A farcical comedy, by J. Lawry, which depicts a young wife whose brother dresses up in torn tights on the flirtatious young husband. Billie Rhodes appears in boy's clothes. This makes an amusing offering. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are also in the cast.

HIS LITTLE STORY (Imp), June 6.—Matt Moore appears in this number as a tramp, who tells a sad story in a wine room to a chance visitor and a chance girl. While the story is not so definite as for man's watch and the water's money. This holds the interest closely and has a really humorous windup.

THE SEA LILY (Big U), June 8.—A pleasing sea tale, by Burton C. Law, Thomas Jefferon, Zoe Beech, Frank Newberg, Marjorie Ellison and the author appear. The keeper of the light adopts a little girl he finds floating after a wreck. The story is a pretty love story develops. The settings and plot are attractive.

THE CODE OF HIS ANCESTORS (Rex), June 9.—A pleasing subject, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips, Charles Ogle, Lols Alexander and others. The young husband surprises his wife's former lover by serving up a brace of revolvers in a soup tureen. The check feature is banded a little vaguely, but there is enough originality in the main situation to make the number a good one.

BETRAYED BY A CAMERA (Powers), June 10.—A rather pleasing little number in which some children get into a moving picture unaware. The actors are also caught shaking dice by the camera, and the manager's wife is pictured flirting with the leading man. Not much plot, but a fairly amusing number.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE SCORPION'S STING (Victor), June 9.—This three-reel number, produced by Percy Nash and presented by an English company, is melodramatic in tone, but not the intense sort of melodrama that appeals most strongly. It never rises to any great dramatic height and the settings and presentation are not particularly good. It depicts the career of an convict who seeks his soul to the devil for power and riches. The devil appears to him in person at intervals during the story. The closing scenes contain considerable action and are the strongest in the offering. As a whole, it is but mildly interesting.

AS IN A DREAM (Rex), June 4.—A three-reel subject, by L. V. Jefferson, featuring Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn, Olive Fuller Golden, Richard Sterling and others. The story is not so strong in the respects, there being considerable lack of continuity in the opening scenes. The hero is a preacher in a slum mission house. He saves the daughter of a factory owner, who is suffering from loss of memory and is about to become the victim of a wealthy young despoiler. The contrasts of wealth and poverty are well shown; the story itself is familiar in theme and only mildly entertaining.

THE CAGE MAN (Bison), June 10.—A two-reel number, by Harold E. Burr, featuring C. Raymond as a convict. Others in the cast are Hayward Mack and Roberta Wilson. The story of the convict's past is shown in a series of flashbacks, how he was successful in love over a rival, his dissipation after marriage, and the shooting of a policeman in a fit of jealous rage. He returns, after years in prison, to find his former wife married to the rival and living happily. This theme is a very old one and there is not much novelty in treatment. At the same time the offering is quite well presented.

THE MADCAP (Red Feather), June 5.—A five-reel production, based on a story by George Gibbs. It features Flora Parker De Haven in the part of a rich young girl in search of happiness. She falls in love with an artist and travels with him on foot through France, he painting portraits and she singing. This is uniformly artistic throughout and makes a strong appeal. The story is not so strong in the first three reels, but contains some good dramatic scenes in the last two reels. The love story is complicated by the intrusion of a second woman, who tries to create a scandal and almost succeeds. Slight in plot, but unusually pleasing in a pictorial way.

THE HOUSE OF MYSTERY (Universal Special), May 19.—No. 5 of the "Peg o' the Ring" series. The burning of the circus tents and the attending excitement make a good feature. Peg is carried away from danger in the box by Lund Jr. Later he falls unconscious and the box is taken by the gang to its headquarters, a mysterious building full of traps and other devices. Lund Jr. follows and reviews once more with the gang in hand-to-hand fashion. There is no plot action in this, but the incidents are quite sensational and entertaining.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 42 (Vitagraph), May 26.—Marathon race at New York; nursing bottles for dogs, Washington; Military mass, Charlestown, Mass.; same service at Navy Yard, Philadelphia; Governor Whitman kills censorship bill; Russian soldiers in Paris; U. S. Battleship Oklahoma, New York; outdoor dancing, Boston; military review, Sheepshead Bay; the Dublin riots.

World-Equitable.

FATE'S BOOMERANG (Brady) Made, May 29.—A story of the faithfulness of an uneducated mountain girl in contrast to the selfishness of a society woman, the wife of an engineer, is adequately presented in these five reels, reviewed lawfully in this issue. The picture is conventional, but not uninteresting, as acted by Mollie King, Charles Gotthold and June Elvidge.

Miscellaneous.

THE PURSUING VENGEANCE (Unity), May.—A five-part mystery picture handled by the Unity Sales Corporation. The story holds the attention and was adequately produced. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

CASEY'S SERVANTS (Reserve Photoplay), May.—One-reel farce by Johnnie and Emma Ray that is a laugh-maker. There is plot and idea in it. A longer review will be found on page 1534, issue of May 27, 1916.

CASEY, THE WHITE WING (Reserve Photoplay), May.—One-reel farce by Johnnie and Emma Ray that will amuse. A longer notice of it will be found on page 1534, issue of May 27, 1916.

CASEY'S DREAM (Reserve Photoplay), May.—Farce by Johnnie and Emma Ray. It has little plot and no real comedy idea. A longer notice will be found on page 1534, issue of May 27, 1916.

CASEY'S KIDS (Reserve Photoplay), May.—Farce by Johnnie and Emma Ray. It is a collection of slap-stick incidents with little plot behind it. There are a number of laughs in it. For a longer review see page 1534, issue of May 27, 1916.

"The Return of Eve" (Essanay).

Adam was the first leading man, but it remained for Eve to conceive the first plot and to do the directing. Since then several billions of Eves have been creating plots and doing the directing. And when the directing results disastrously, or there's static in the negative, or something else goes wrong in the scheme of things, the modern Eve blinks innocently and passes the blame to Adam—and he, poor spineless creature, takes it. Nevertheless, the great original plot remains the most absorbing of all the seven, or thirty-seven, or whatever number it is that have come after.

Therefore, in this year of revivals—Shakespearean and otherwise—it is fitting that the marvelous initial drama be revived—but in a modern guise, of course, and so it will be when Essanay presents its new five-act feature "The Return of Eve," starring Edna Mayo.

This story by Lee Wilson Dodd is one of the most truly delightful topics of which filming has ever been attempted. The plot is startling in its theme and daring in its development.

Imagine two babes living in the wilderness and attaining the age of 18 years without ever seeing their own kind. Speedily transplant these two children of nature to a New York drawing room. Hurl their honest hearts and pure minds into society's sea of shame. What happens? In their disgust they return to their Eden.

But, having tasted of the world, Eden is a dreary place. There are no cabarets, no automobiles, no pretty clothes or jewels. Both are honest, without deceit and naturally perfect. This is no fun, so they—being essentially human—return to civilization and its sins.

A powerful cast is to be selected to support Miss Mayo in this production. Arthur Berthelet, who has just completed "Sherlock Holmes," with William Gillette, will direct the new feature.

Popular Pictures Develops Business.

With the beginning of their new policy, to release one feature a week, beginning September first, the offices of the Popular Pictures Corporation have become unusually busy. There is a lively demand for franchises on the part of producers who desire to market their pictures through the Popular line of exchanges, and President Milton M. Goldsmith finds himself the center of unusual activities. The work of planning out a complete line of Exchanges that will thoroughly cover the United States and Canada is now in progress.

The first picture to be handled by this new organization will be "The House of Mirrors," which will also be the first picture owned by the Rialto Film Corp. It was directed by Marshall Parnum and is a story replete with thrilling and interesting situations. The story is by Frederick Chapin.

Five Strong Knickerbockers.

Unusually well balanced and varied is the Knickerbocker Star Features program for June, which, in addition to the five-reel feature, "Pay Dirt," already announced, includes five strong three-reel dramas.

"Shadows," a drama of modern social conditions, featuring Frank Mayo and Lillian West, tells a strong story of the lengths to which a man's hopeless passion for a girl drove him and the unfortunate victims of his fury.

"The Hidden Path," featuring Henry King, is a sensational tale of the sea, whose swift and vivid action centers about a bloodstained gem. It is scheduled for release on June 9.

"An Old Man's Folly," featuring Daniel Giffether and Marguerite Nichols, is the release of June 16. It is a story of a father who endangers his daughter's happiness by placing himself in the power of an adventurer. An unscrupulous detective gives a startling turn to the course of events.

A new Knickerbocker star will be seen for the first time in "The Ancient Blood," a remarkable drama of the Canadian Northwest. Virginia Norden has the role of a half-breed girl, who saves the life of a young Englishman, marries him, and is later introduced into high society when he inherits a title. In the strange environment she fails to hold his love, and returns to her mountains, where she finds happiness. This is the release of June 23.

Frank Mayo and Lillian West are featured in "The Master of the House," the release of June 30. This is an unusual story of a society reporter who, following a clue accidentally picked up, is brought into a remarkable chain of circumstances, which leads to an uninhabited island off the coast, in company with a young millionaire whom she has the best of reasons for believing to be a burglar. In his absence from home the burglar entertains his aunt and cousin. Remarkable double exposures are a feature of this picture.

USING SIMPLEX MACHINES.

Globe theater, Broadway and Forty-sixth street, New York, is now showing George Kleine's serial masterpiece, "Billie Burke" in "Gloria's Romance." Mr. Kleine, the man who knows, selected Simplex Machines to attain results. Go and see some projection; it is worth while.

Charles Urban of London, who brought over the feature: "How Britain Prepared," which is shown in the Lyceum theater, Forty-fifth street, uses Simplex Projectors.

Mary MacLaren, New Star in Bluebird

LOIS WEBER, whose craftsmanship has done so much for the success of Bluebird Photoplays, has accomplished a lasting benefit to the program by "discovering" Mary MacLaren, the young star who makes what is practically her first screen appearance in "Shoes," the sociological problem Bluebird has prepared for release June 26.

Miss Weber was writing the scenario of "Shoes," from the Stella Wynne Herron story in Collier's, Miss MacLaren applied for work as an extra. Impressed by her style and peculiar type of beauty, Miss Weber arranged to give her a "bit" in "Where are My Children?" which the Smalleys were at that time producing.

The more Miss Weber considered Miss MacLaren for the leading role in "Shoes," the more firmly was she convinced of the young girl's fitness. It was finally decided not alone to give Miss MacLaren the star role in "Shoes," but to further elevate her at once to stardom in the Bluebird ranks. She gave Miss Weber the name of Mary MacDonald when she applied for work, and, considering turn about fair play, Miss Weber gave her the name of Mary MacLaren when she made her a star.

"The House of Mirrors," will be Miss MacLaren's second medium in the Bluebird series, Miss Weber being now engaged in the advance preparations. Mary MacLaren is a mighty lucky young lady to have Lois Weber sponsoring her future upon the screen, for in this event Mary's future is right here, and she is a full-fledged star in the fastest time known to screen history.

Mary MacLaren.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

THRILLS IN "THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE."

Thrills run riotously through "The Secret of the Submarine," the big Mutual-American serial with the preparedness theme. Each chapter has thrills that are new to the picture-going public. In the eighth chapter, for instance, there is a retrospective view of the house that is sent tumbling over the cliff as a climax to the sixth chapter.

Almost before one has recovered breath there is a tremendously realistic collision between two trains in a tunnel. The struggle of the survivors to reach a place of safety is illustrated in the accompanying picture. The tunnel used as the location for this scene is El Canejo, midway between Ventura and Los Angeles.

Then while a gay crowd makes merry in a cafe the building is destroyed by an earthquake. Director George Sargent has "put over" this remarkable scene with a most telling vividness, every member of the big picture's cast measuring up to the tenacity of the situation. Director Sargent had arranged to have buckets of Fuller's earth and flour (representing plaster and dust) thrown on to the struggling players when the building is first swayed by the earthquake shock.

And when the clouds of earth and flour descended there was no need for acting, because the flying particles filled the eyes and lungs of the players, making their efforts to reach the open air absolutely sincere. They were all just as anxious to get out as Director Sargent was anxious to have them look anxious to get out.

They crawled madly over the fallen walls and debris. As the scene resulting was just what Director Sargent wanted he offered no apologies for taking his players by surprise, although the danger to which they had been exposed was greater than was either expected or intended. When it was found no one was injured or any worse for the tumbling walls and bricks and things, the enthusiasm of the company was unbounded.

"THE SEA LILY" (Universal).

Thomas Jefferson is rapidly endearing himself to Universal photoplay lovers for his splendidly sympathetic acting in homely roles. In "The Sea Lily," a Big U drama, he again co-stars with dainty little Zoe Bech, the Universal child actress whose wonderfully natural acting is alike the marvel of the Big U studio and to those who see her on the screen.

In making "The Sea Lily" Mr. Jefferson and company visited the San Pedro Lighthouse near Los Angeles, where permission was granted them to set up lights in the interior. The great reflector which warns ships off the coast plays an important part in the story.

The living rooms of the lighthouse keeper were turned over to the Big U players and every facility for the taking of pictures was granted the Universal forces. As a result the scenes in "The Sea Lily" are realistic in the extreme. Many long weeks passed before a storm sprang up on the coast which Mr. Jefferson deemed severe enough to take pictures of, but when it came three cameramen were on hand in the lighthouse and on the rocks below to catch the rollers as they piled up on the rocky shore.

MARC MacDERMOTT'S FIRST VITAGRAPH PICTURE UNDER WAY.

Marc MacDermott, now a recognized Vitagraph player, is making great headway in a Blue Ribbon Feature by Loula Joseph Vance, in course of production under the direction of William Humphrey. The story was especially written for MacDermott and gives that capable artist many opportunities to bring into play the talent which has won him the thousands of admirers who are always awaiting a release in which he is featured. It will be completed in time for release during the early summer.

In this latest story Mr. Vance tells of the struggle for existence of a young girl who endeavors to make a name for herself in the theatrical world. How she is assisted by a young playwright who falls in love with her gives a good idea of the life and people of "the painted world."

The cast includes such well-known Vitagraphers as Naomi Childers, Robert Whitworth, Josephine Earle, Templar Saxe, William Shea, Katharine Lewis, Jack Bulger and Emmanuel A. Turner.

"A TEMPERANCE TOWN" (Selig).

"A Temperance Town," written by Charles Hoyt, and featuring the famous comedian, Otis Harlan, will uphold the enviable standard set by the Selig Company in General Film Service when this production is released Monday, June 5th. T. N. Heffron, the director, is to be complimented upon retaining the Hoyt comedy in this film. Mr. Harlan is supported by an all-star cast, and no time or expense has been spared to present "A Temperance Town" with elaborate scenic effects and mirth-provoking action.

"A Temperance Town" should appeal to the patrons of all motion picture theaters in the United States, for the cities and towns are few, indeed, where the "Wet" and "Dry" factional campaign has not been waged. "A Temperance Town" hits off the many laughable details in connection with many of the campaigns, particularly in smaller communities. There, during the course of campaigns for and against Rum, excitement rises to a high pitch, and nothing is left undone by either side to win a victory. In the Selig feature Jonesville is the scene of the "Wet" and "Dry" campaign. There are the usual mass meetings, the customary crusades against "blind pigs," the doctor, who does a thriving business writing prescriptions, and the drugstore which flourishes through filling them. There are a number of exciting climaxes, and a love story runs through the comedy. Exhibitors will make no mistake in booking "A Temperance Town," for the action is that which can be appreciated by almost everyone.

"FOOLS' GOLD" (Essanay).

This is the story of a young wife lured by the fascination of the gaming table until she is on the brink of ruin. Nell Craig, as the dashing young woman, carries out the wife's early adventures with a swing and buoyancy that well befits the part. Later she is called upon to display more emotional work when she faces the crisis, having become so deeply involved in debt that she fears to face her husband with her losses. But she is saved from final disaster by a detective who is looking for a notorious criminal and finds it is the same man who holds the reckless wife's I. O. U's. The criminal is caught and the gambling accounts destroyed. But the young wife learns her lesson and is content thereafter to settle down to the joys of married life. Darwin Karr, as the well-to-do and stable husband, enacts his role with his customary ability, while Patrick Calhoun does clever work as the gambler crook.

"THE REDEMPTION OF DAVE DARCEY" (Blue Ribbon).

"The Redemption of Dave Darcey" is the Vitaphone Blue Ribbon Feature for Monday, June 12. This five-part picture, from the pen of Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky," depicts the difficulties encountered by a thief when he tries to go straight. James Morrison is seen as Dave Darcey, a crook, who, after accidentally shooting a rival gangster, escapes and is given a chance to reform by the owner of a steel works. When Benton, his benefactor, forgetting his affianced bride, falls in love with a woman of whom Dave is suspicious, he tries to warn Benton, but is reprimanded for his insolence.

Scene from "The Redemption of Dave Darcey" (Vitaphone).

He tracks the woman, and, learning that she is a foreign spy, plotting to destroy Benton's plant, he tries to prevent the deed. When the spy and her accomplices overpower him and escape he is caught in the ensuing explosion and later arrested as one of the plotters. Cleared of this charge, he is accused of the murder of the gangster he had shot, but when it is brought out that the man had not been killed, but only slightly wounded, Darcey is freed. After the disclosures which Dave has brought about Benton and his fiancée are happily reunited and Darcey grasps the opportunity to start life anew when a better position is offered him at the steel works. Excellent support is given Mr. Morrison by Emanuel A. Turner, Billie Phillips, Belle Bruce, Mother Maurice, Robert Gaillard and many other prominent screen artists. To Paul Scardon goes the credit for the direction of the picture.

"THE FLOWER OF NO MAN'S LAND" (Metro).

"The Flower of No Man's Land," the five-part Metro-Columbia wonderplay, in which Viola Dana, the newest Metro star, makes her debut on the Metro program, will be released June 19. This feature was written and directed by John H. Collins, who was formerly associated with Miss Dana at the Edison company. There is a strong supporting cast in "The Flower of No Man's Land," which includes Duncan McKee, the well-known English dramatic actor, Mitchell Lewis, Harry C. Brown, Fred Jones, Nellie Grant Mitchell, Eldine Steuart and Marcus Moriarty. Mitchell Lewis plays the role of a big Indian in this production, which is a similar part to that which brought him no little fame when he appeared with William Favessham in "The Squaw Man."

The production is mounted on an elaborate and pretentious scale and there are scores of big scenes. One of the interesting features is a series of scenes which were actually photographed in the Metropolitan Opera House, showing the world famous "diamond horseshoe," the dressing rooms and other interesting glimpses behind the scenes. In contrast to the scenes made around New York, are some realistic effects showing the Great American Desert, and many colorful and picturesque locations of the far West. There is a mining camp with all its familiar types, and here much of the action is staged. An old stage coach that saw service for many years in the far West is introduced into the picture and figures in a thrilling accident.

"THE SPATULATE THUMB" (Gaumont).

What is by far one of the most interesting three-act photodramas the Gaumont company has ever produced is "The Spatulate Thumb." The authors are the well-known actors and screen artists, Lionel Barrymore and Wright Huntington. Their knowledge of the silent drama has eminently fitted them for the work of photoplay writing. Their exceptionally strong story is founded upon that freak of physical nature, the "murderer's thumb." This is a short, stubby thumb, differing from the one on the individual's other hand. It is said to occur in only one person out of every one hundred thousand. It is indicative of fierce and sudden passion.

In the story of "The Spatulate Thumb" the method of identification of the real culprit in an unusual crime depends upon the clever manner in which the lawyer for the defense of an innocent man ferrets out details because of his love for the girl whose sweetheart is accused. Alexander Gaden plays the brilliant role of the young attorney. Miss Lucille Taft appears as the sweetheart of the weak young man, enacted by John Reinhard, whose one false step involves him in a net of circumstantial evidence that comes near costing him his life. The star role opposite that of Mr. Gaden is in the capable hands of Miss Iva Shepard. Carroll, who is the possessor of the spatulate thumb, is played by Henry W. Pemberton.

"The Spatulate Thumb" will be released as a three-act Mutual Picture June 22.

POLI CIRCUIT BOOKS ALL IVAN PLAYS.

R. H. Miller, who supervises the booking of motion pictures in the Poli houses has contracted with the various Ivan Exchanges to play all Ivan features in the circuit of theaters owned by Mr. Poli.

"SHOES" (Bluebird).

There is a new screen star projected in this Bluebird, and Mary McDonald, who has previously been referred to in conjunction with "Shoes," takes on a new name—Mary McLaren—for her entry into the list of regular Bluebird stars. Miss McLaren is a "genuine find," according to Bluebird's publicity promoter, and until the professional critics have had opportunity to controvert the assertion so let it stand.

Lois Weber, who prepared the scenario of "Shoes" from the story by Stella Wynne Herron, published in Collier's, discovered Miss McLaren and gave her a "bit" in "Where Are My Children?" When Miss Weber approached her work of producing "Shoes" Miss McLaren so perfectly fitted the role that the part might, in fact, have been written with the frail and demure girl in mind.

"Shoes" depicts with gripping intensity three vital weeks in the life of a shop girl—the half-slave, under-paid pawn of commerce. At home her mother takes in washing to support two smaller children—and a lazy, good for nothing, novel reading, "can rushing" father; a male too lazy to even look for work, in the mortal dread that he might find it. For every dollar that the shop-girl and her mother can earn there is pressing need—the rent is to be paid, the butcher and baker demand cash, and father simply must have money for tobacco and beer!

What matters if the shop-girl's shoes are worn to tatters, that pasteboard soles are required to keep her feet from picking up splinters from the rough floor behind the counter where she stands? There is need for every penny at home; and so, after three weeks of promises that she may take $3 from the unopened pay-envelope she lays each Saturday night in her mother's lap and buy a pair of shoes—the girl gets them. When she comes home with the shoes on her feet her mother follows the downcast eyes of her oldest child to where their steady gaze falls pitifully upon the new shoes—and then the girl throws herself in her mother's lap. The tears of these two stricken women mingle in a flood of understanding and unspoken forgiveness—and the sins of the child are washed away.

There is a greater sociological lesson in "Shoes," according to the Bluebird publicity service, than there is in "Where Are My Children?"—for in "Shoes" the problem is approached before the fact instead of afterward; because in "Shoes" the problem of the masses and not the classes is revealed. And in dealing with its subject Miss Weber has surpassed herself in craftsmanship, turning out a picture that strikes the heart broadside and overwhelmingly instead of with the muted "punch" of most encounters with problems.

KING BAGGOT IN "HALF A ROGUE" (Universal).

The accompanying scene shows King Baggot, with hat and arms extended, making a speech to the now picture-wise inhabitants of Savannah, Georgia. The scene of which the still was taken is a part of "Half a Rogue," the five-reel Red Feather-Universal photoplay in which Mr. Baggot takes the role of a playwright who returns from New York to his home town to run for mayor.

The playwright is seen making a speech to a crowd of five thousand and striving to overcome the evil effects a slanderous statement, published in the local paper, has had upon his candidacy.

In order to get the crowd Baggot advertised in the local newspapers that he would publicly thank the citizens of the town for their courtesy to the Universal company during their visit to Savannah. The newspapers ran long stories about the photoplayer's life and adventures and as a result a dense crowd packed the heart of the city when Baggot got up on a platform to speak.

Scattered through the crowd were a number of moving picture cameramen, the Universal "regulars," of course, being close up to King Baggot. The scene when incorporated in "Half a Rogue" shows Baggot apparently making a political speech. "Half a Rogue" was released on May 22 with Edna Hunter and Clara Beyers, supporting Mr. Baggot. The story of the play was originally published in novel form by Harold

Scene from "Half a Rogue" (Universal)

MacGrath, and will also appear in a forthcoming number of "The Black Cat Magazine" in short story form. The play's popularity among exhibitors has been instantaneous.

"FARMER AL FALFA'S TENTLESS CIRCUS" (Paramount-Bray).

Big tops of the Barnum and Bailey days never held such enchantment for the small boy who crawled under the tent to see Buffalo Bill or carried water for the elephants to get a glimpse at the three-ring show, as do ten audiences are offered in "Farmer Al Falfa's Tentless Circus," a future release of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons.

When Farmer Al Falfa, Paul Terry's hero of the Paramount-Bray short reels, decides on a circus of his own out on the farm it rivals any yet staged under canvas. In the opening scene a poster is seen on the screen announcing the coming of the circus. Farmer Al Falfa, catching a glimpse of the placard, decides at once to arrange a show of his own.

Returning to the farm, Al Falfa decides to make his pig play the part of the bare-back rider's horse while he takes the part of the circus performer. They dash off at top speed, Al Falfa performing strange and wonderful acrobatic feats on the animal's back, while the pig is dashing around at top notch speed. An added thrill is injected into the picture by the mule, who engages Al Falfa in a kicking match of which the venerable farmer gets decidedly the worst.

"THE EVIL THEREOF" (Famous Players).

"The Evil Thereof," a powerful photoplay with a great moral lesson, written by Channing Pollock and Remond Wolf, is the Famous Players release on the Paramount program for June 5th. Frank Losee, whose remarkable performances in Famous Players productions, notably in the role of Josh Whitcomb in that company's adaptation of Denham Thompson's celebrated "The Old Homestead," won him international distinction, is featured in the leading role, with Grace Valentine, Crauford Kent and others of equal prominence in important parts.

The scene opens with a gay party presided over by a wealthy broker—the role assumed by Mr. Losee. As favors the women each receive one hundred dollar bills, which are accepted with a nonchalance that tells plainly in what slight esteem these bills are held by the recipients.

Then the history of these one hundred dollar bills is traced—the suffering and misery, the heart-ache and the poverty which have resulted from the ruthless manner in which they have been wrested from the poor, the innocent and the helpless.

Robert Vignola, who directed "The Evil Thereof," has done remarkable work in obtaining complete realism, particularly in those scenes which show the broker's final dinner and the interior of the barber-shop. The production, both in theme and in treatment, is an exceptional one and is sure to create unusual interest because of the great moral lesson which is embodied in this thrilling and pathetic story.

LUCILLE LEE STEWART IN FIRST PICTURE.

The first picture in which Lucille Lee Stewart appears for the Vitagraph Company of America is entitled "The Destroyers," and is from the novel "Peter God," by James Oliver Curwood. The production is scheduled for release on June 5th as a Blue Ribbon Feature. Miss Stewart plays the leading role in the drama and those who have seen the film proclaim her to be all which Ralph Ince, who directed the picture, prophesied her to be. Although this is Miss Stewart's first picture for the Vitagraph Company, having played minor parts before, she has instilled a naturalness and sweetness into the role that will help make it a production worthy of the director.

MARIE DORO ON HER SECOND LASKY PICTURE.

One of the most successful feature play productions of several months is Marie Doro in the Lasky production, "The Heart of Nora Flynn." This popular star, who is now under the Lasky management for a long period, has started work under the direction of William C. De Mille on her second production for the Lasky Company written specially for her by Marian Fairfax. Miss Doro will practically have an all-star cast in her support.

EXTENDS "NE'ER DO WELL" ENGAGEMENT.

So enthusiastic was the audience that attended the opening week of "The Ne'er Do Well" at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, that an extension of "The Ne'er Do Well" has been arranged by Mr. Shea. Mr. Shea advises that this big production has gone far beyond all expectations in drawing power, and what is better still, his patrons showed unmistakable signs of being well pleased.

A CORRECTION.

Through an error F. W. Miller was given credit on the film for the authorship of Vitagraph's three-part Broadway Star Feature, "The Accusing Voice," which was released on Saturday, May 13. In reality the story comes from the pen of Ross D. Whytock, who has written many other Vitagraph successes.

KERRIGAN COMPANY IN MOUNTAINS.

After having spent twelve days in the Guyanaca mountains, about seventy miles east of San Diego filming scenes for the big feature photoplay, "The Silent Battle," the J. Warren Kerrigan company, working under the direction of Jack Conway, has returned to Universal City. On this trip the company encountered not only rain storms, but also snow in the high mountain peaks, and more than once the members, including Miss Lois Wilson and Harry Carter, had fun with snowballs. Conway reports some very successful photography, as splendid locations were found for the film play.

M. RENE PRIEUR GETS RAY COMEDIES.

Mr. Prieur of London and Paris was a pleased attendant at the initial presentation of the Johnny and Emma Ray Comedies at the Broadway theater last Monday, May 15. Immediately after the showing Mr. Prieur went direct to the offices of C. Lang Cobb, Jr., manager of sales and publicity of the reserve Photoplay Company, and insisted upon a three-year contract to represent Ray Comedies in Europe and Australia. After a masterful presentation of facts regarding the enormous business accomplished for Mr. Cobb on his Ramo Features, the general manager of sales agreed to appoint Mr. Prieur once more his European representative—only this time for Ray Comedies.

EVART OVERTON IN VITAGRAPH'S LATEST CUREWOOD STORY.

Ewart Overton, whose work in "The Ordeal of Elizabeth" caused so much pleasing comment, is now working under the direction of Eugene Mullin in this part dramatic story by James Oliver Curwood. Overton will be seen in a role especially suited to his distinctive type. Adele Kelly, Edward Elkas and Denton Vane are the other Vitagraph favorites who appear in the cast. Charmine Mayfield, recently appointed a member of the Vitagraph Stock Company, also makes her bow in this picture.

"THE GUIDE" (Mutual Star.)

After ten days spent in shooting exteriors on "The Rim of the World" on Little Bear Lake, fifteen miles up in the mountains from San Bernardino, Calif., William Russell and his company of players appearing with him in "The Guide," a forthcoming Mutual Star Production in five acts, have returned to the Santa Barbara studios to put the finishing touches to the piece. The trip occupied nearly ten days and a number of exceptionally interesting scenes were obtained. "The Guide," as the name implies, is a romance of the great North Woods, in which tragedy and love go hand in hand. William Russell, in the leading role, appears as a guide, whose unusual literary abilities are but seldom associated with one of his calling. Charlotte Burton, as the daughter of a publisher, essays the chief supporting role. Others in the cast are Jack Prescott, who also acted as co-director with Russell, Harry Keenan and various others of equal note.

The story of the piece deals with Russell, in the role of Garry Murdock, a noted guide and trapper who, between seasons, devotes himself to writing poetry. John Condon, a publisher, has his summer home deep in the woods where Murdock lives and hunts. With the publisher lives his daughter Mable, who is engaged to Meynard Randall, a wealthy New Yorker, whose god is money and who is backing her father in his business. Mable lacks faith in him. Murdock, under an assumed name, sends his poems to the publisher and in time they are published and make a fortune for both. Murdock, after many adventures, marries Mabel and Randall disappears. Considerable of the villainy of the piece is furnished by Pierre, a half-breed, portrayed by Jack Prescott.

WAR AND PEACE IN MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 74.

Preparations for war and memories of war vie with the arts of peace in Mutual Weekly No. 74. An echo of a past generation is the screen presentation of the confederate veterans' reunion at Birmingham Ala. Vincent Astor is seen in the war aeroplane he has given to the New York Naval Militia. At Sheshhead Bay, N. Y., ten thousand national guardsmen are shown in war games. It is to this meeting that Victor Carlstrom flew from Newport News, breaking the American record for distance. The Mutual Weekly also shows him as he starts his flight for Washington. Charlestown, Mass., sends pictures of the launching of a new naval supply ship. A new kite type war balloon is tested before the motion picture camera at Cleveland, O., before U. S. government officers and attaches from the embassies of several European powers. Work little heard of is what the women of the border are doing for the sick and wounded in the Mexican campaign. The Mutual Weekly in this issue shows Mrs. Frederick Funston, wife of the commanding general, with women of Fort Sam Houston at work at sewing machines as exemplars of American Red Cross preparedness.

The closer binding of the ties between this country and Canada are shown in the removal of restrictions upon automobiles crossing from one country to the other. Sacramento, Cal., celebrates the completion of a million-dollar causeway connecting the east and west banks of the river, and Los Angeles, Cal., celebrates "Olive Day" by giving away thousands of gallons of the ripe fruit. The Wellesley college girls have their annual war canoe race; and at Medford, Mass., there is a back-to-nature revel of classic dancers.

EDNA GOODRICH FILM FINISHED FOR MOROSCO.

The initial Edna Goodrich photoplay to be released by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., on the Paramount Program has been finished at the West Coast studios. "The Making of Maddalena" is the title of the next Morosco offering and will be released June 8th.

As a play this subject by Mary and Samuel Lewis has met with big success throughout the country having starred Mary Emerson in the original title role. In preparing the story for the screen the Morosco company gave its producing staff full sway in the matter of financial outlay in order that the best results obtainable may be secured. Early reports from the coast indicate that the photoplay offers another excellent subject for the Paramount Program, not only because of the fact that it is understood to present the best work of the star and an exceptional cast, but on account of the capable and elaborate manner in which it has been staged. As an instance of the care with which each feature of the photoplay has been treated might be mentioned the fact that Miss Goodrich spent three weeks and over three thousand feet of film in tests working for the perfection of her make-up. Great artistry was required to simulate the Italian type of beauty in contour, eye shading and character shadows of the face before the beautiful star was satisfied with the result. In staging the big dramatic scenes of the play musicians were on hand to bring out the best efforts of the artists. Directed by Frank Lloyd, with the assistance of Waldo Walker, "The Making of Maddalena" is expected to score another triumph for its producers. Included in the cast are such able players as Forrest Stanley, Howard Davies, John Burton, Mary Mersch, Juan de la Cruz and Collin Chase while the photography has been entrusted to James Van Trees whose novel effects in Morosco pictures are creating no little attention.

Simultaneous with the completion of "The Making of Maddalena" another Morosco company has commenced work on Mme. Rita Jolivet's vehicle, "An International Marriage," by George Broadhurst. This is expected to be Mr. Broadhurst's initial subject for the Paramount Program as a result of his recent affiliation with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and is planned for release in July.

KALEM'S "LOTUS WOMAN" ON JUNE 28TH.

As a result of Kalem's desire that exhibitors in all sections of the country should have an opportunity to view "The Lotus Woman" before booking, June 28th has been set as the release date instead of June 20th, as stated in last week's trade papers. "The Lotus Woman," which features Alice Hollister, the original screen vampire, supported by Harry Millarde, will be released by General Film and prints of the subject are being shipped to the exchanges for the pre-release showings.

In explaining the plan a Kalem official declared, "The policy of 'showing the goods' worked so well with 'The Social Pirates' that we are following it wherever possible. It is in order that exhibitors even in distant sections of the country may 'see before they buy' that we have set the release date back. "The Lotus Woman" may be secured in the regular program service of the General Film Company without extra rental, but even under those conditions we feel that the day is past when a theater owner can be asked to book a 'pig in a bag.' We want exhibitors to see this five-act feature and judge of its merits themselves."

Feature or Program?

Boston Exchange Men are Warmly Discussing the Future of the Show Business—

Are the People Going to Ask for Big Features or Will They Prefer, for the Most Part, the Diversity Offered by the Program?

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—There is a friendly controversy going on at present among the film exchange men in this territory as to which are going to triumph in the long run, the big feature photoplay productions or the short one and two reel film subjects and the exhibitors are watching for the outcome with much interest. So far honors are about even but the exhibitors have profited by the arguments hurled back and forth.

One exchange man, who specializes in two and three-reel subjects, claims the big productions are overdue and that many small houses are going "over their heads" trying to make a front.

"The moving picture business is a five and ten-cent business first, last and always," he said one day last week.

"There is hardly a story that is now being told in the multiple reel feature that cannot be told with greater force and convincing power in one and two reels. Yet the tremendous cost of five, six or more reels, is freely indulged in. And be cost of features with its attendant search for effects and rapidly depleting supply of scenic material is getting greater and greater."

This man's opinion is not shared by the great majority of those who handle the multiple reel features who claim that the huge photoplays have lifted the motion picture business out of the realm of the commonplace and paved the way for its wonderful development. They assert the future of the trade rests in maintaining the high standards that have been set by the artists and capitalists who have put years of study in what has come to be recognized as one of the greatest industries of modern times.

Meanwhile the controversy goes on and the exhibitor says "I need them both."

Frank H. Vine Gets Loving Cup.

Boston, Mass.—Frank H. Vine, New England manager of the International Film Service, one of the ten branch managers presented with a loving cup by William Randolph Hearst for the records of all previous serial bookings with the "Mysteries of Myra," is being congratulated by exhibitors and his other friends in this territory for his achievement. "Beaming" Frank with his usual modesty has accepted the felicitations and says he hopes to even better with the split reel comedies he is handling in New England for the International in addition to the American army in Mexico reel, which he claims is going big.

Mrs. Carter Signs the Contract.

Boston, Mass.—It is reported that contracts have been signed by Mrs. Katherine Carter and Gustave Frohman, in her new association with the Gustave Frohman Photoplay Exchange in Boston, placing the distribution and management of all educational subjects under his immediate care.

Mrs. Carter's intimate knowledge of educational films and her reputation among school and church interests are expected to be a big boom not only to her department but the patrons of the department as well.

"Canada's Fighting Forces" Draws.

Boston, Mass.—"Canada's Fighting Forces," the Canadian government official films, are playing at the Tremont Temple in Boston and drawing large houses twice daily. Sergt. Fred Wells, the veteran newspaper man and correspondent, who was wounded during the fighting in Europe, is lecturing with the films.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Joseph McGuire, Special Correspondent, 611 Erie County Bank Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

J. M. Gorchof Will Represent Fox.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—May 24.—Several changes in the positions at the Buffalo film exchanges were a feature here this week.

J. M. Gorchof, whose picture appears herewith, has been appointed representative of the Fox Film in the Buffalo territory as far east as Syracuse. "The new million dollar Annette Kellerman production will receive my attention," said Mr. Gorchof.

Mr. Gorchof at one time managed the Victoria theater at Lafayette, Ind. He has had ten years' experience in the show and film business in Chicago and other cities and enjoys the friendship of many exhibitors in this territory.

"Please mention, if you wish, that I was the first to suggest the formation of the Buffalo Screen Club," said Mr. Gorchof. "After I solicited some of the local film men on the subject, they quickly offered their co-operation."

He was formerly Mutual road representative in this territory.

J. R. Levy to Manage Local World Film.

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. R. Levy has been appointed manager of the local branch of the World Film Corporation, succeeding J. L. Mulhauser.

Details of Mr. Levy's appointment will be given later.

V. H. Bendell Succeeds Frank Leonard.

Buffalo, N. Y.—V. H. Bendell, formerly special representative of the Essanay Company in Chicago, is now located at the Buffalo branch of the General Film. He succeeds Frank Leonard, who handled the Mary Page pictures. Mr. Leonard has been appointed road representative of the World Film in the Buffalo territory.

Louis Green Heads Exclusive Office.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Louis Green has resigned as the World's road representative here and has been appointed manager of the Buffalo branch of the Exclusive Features, Inc., with offices in the Chapin block.

E. Auger Visits Local Mutual.

Buffalo, N. Y.—E. Auger, special representative of the Mutual Film, visited G. H. Christoffers, manager of the Buffalo branch of this company, this week. Mr. Auger recently completed a three-months' trip through the Central West.

"Business was satisfactory in the various points I covered," said Mr. Auger. "Of course, some of the film companies are complaining that their business is being cut up and divided among the various exchanges. All our patrons are enthusing over the Chapin series, his 'Floor Walker' picture being a great success."

The Edisionia Closed.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Edisionia, a five-cent moving picture theater, has been closed. At one time this house, which is located in a good, residential district, was a money-maker. The building of two palatial theaters not far from the Edisionia, however, naturally cut in on the patronage of this smaller house, of which Tracey & Walsh were the proprietors.

Elmer S. Davis Back at Elmwood.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Elmer S. Davis, former manager of the Elmwood moving picture theater, Buffalo, has assumed that position again. This is a high-class house in one of Buffalo's best residential districts. Mr. Davis features the Paramount service and has a nine-piece orchestra. He reports a satisfactory patronage.

A New Corporation.

Buffalo, N. Y.—For the purpose of doing a general theater and hotel business, the General Hotels Company of Buffalo was recently incorporated with a capital of $500,000. The directors are: S. B. Nye and W. W. Sears of Buffalo and Frederick W. Rockwell of Albany.

Buffalo Times Service Making New Features.

The Buffalo Times Film Service is preparing a series of feature pictures, with Helen Green and Earle Metcalfe as stars. Seventy-five leading newspapers and many smaller ones are printing the features of this company, whose studios are at 423 Classon avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Park Theater to Open.

South Dayton, N. Y.—D. D. Bacon will open the Park theater, South Dayton, N. Y., some time this month. The house will cost upwards of $50,000 and will have a large stage, six dressing rooms, a fine ventilating system, a pool room for the use of patrons and other features.

NEWARK, N. J., LETTER. Reorganization at Universal.

Newark, N. J.—Lee Gainsborg, manager of the local branch of the Universal Film, at 286 Market street, has effected an entire reorganization at his office.

S. E. Fried has been named as new road man, and has brought in some very fine accounts. In addition, Mr. Gainsborg has appointed Mr. Fried assistant manager.

In line with its policy of betterment and expansion, the Universal has installed a special poster department, and George Nocke, an experienced poster man, has been placed at the head.

Even the office force has been changed, as Miss Mildred Piken, formerly at the Royal Feature Film, is the new stenographer at the Universal. Miss Piken is always ready with a smile to greet the arrivals at the exchange.

Harry Weiner is another new face at the Universal office.

Metropolitan Theater Opened.

Newark, N. J.—The Metropolitan theater, Charlton and Montgomery streets, is now showing pictures. The house is now under the management of Samuel Ross. The projection is in charge of Jack Goid, chief operator.

World Film Going Well.

Newark, N. J.—Leo F. Levinson, manager of the Newark branch of the World Film, 59-60 Strand Theater Bldg., reports tremendous demands for Brady-Made-World pictures. Among the theaters to recently book the new productions are Empire theater, New Brunswick; Royal theater, Perth Amboy; Ampere theater, Ampere; Lincoln theater, Bloomfield; Colonial theater, West Hoboken; Selwyn, Newark; and Fox's Carlton, Newark. Since May 15 when Equitable pictures were discontinued, and all pictures already released placed on a wild-cat basis, it seems that exhibitors all over the country are taking advantage of the opportunity.

Revokes Orpheum License

License Committee of Bayonne's Common Council Votes to Suspend License of E. A. Schiller Who Is Showing "Damaged Goods."

By Jacob J. Katter, Special Correspondent, 51 Strand Theater Bldg., Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J.—What is regarded in many circles of Newark as a most high-handed proceeding took place Wednesday when Chief of Police Long caused the arrest of Emanuel A. Schiller of Bayonne, exhibitor of the photoplay, "Damaged Goods," playing at the Orpheum theater. At a meeting of the license committee of the Common Council, the members of the committee unanimously voted to suspend the license of the theater for a period of three weeks covering the time of the lease obtained by Mr. Schiller. The serving, however, of the formal notice of the suspension of the license was withheld until the aldermen can obtain some legal advice on the matter.

At the time of this writing, the Orpheum was still running the photoplay, and Mr. N. R. Greathouse, who had the state rights on the film, informed the Newark correspondent of the Moving Picture World that he expected to exhibit the picture till the expiration of his lease.

The meeting of the license committee Wednesday evening was held for the sole purpose of considering the Orpheum case. But at the conclusion of the meeting counsel for Mr. Schiller denounced the procedure, saying that only one side of the case had been heard, and that the committee given them a little more time, they would have produced several prominent men in the community to testify to the morality and goodness of the film.

Four of the members of the committee testified that they had seen the picture and had adjudged it immoral and indecent. The decision to revoke the license was

New Philadelphia House

Stanley Amusement Company Buys Ground on Southeast Corner of Nineteenth and Market Streets on Which It Will Build a Splendid Picture Theater—Will Seat 3,000 Persons and Will Cost a Half Million Dollars.

Special to the Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Word has been received in local moving picture circles that the Stanley Amusement Company have concluded negotiations for the acquisition of a large plot of ground at the southwest corner of Nineteenth and Market streets. A model moving picture theater will be erected on this spot at an estimated cost of $500,000. The building will be of fireproof construction and will occupy an area of 100 by 135 feet, and will have a seating capacity of 3,000 people.

The site of the new theater is directly opposite the Nineteenth street subway station, thus making it extremely handy for residents of West Philadelphia and other points. The work of construction will be rushed forward with all possible speed and it is thought that the theater will be ready for occupancy on or about the first of the year. The Stanley company, with headquarters in the Palace Theater Bldg., 1214 Market street are proprietors of the Stanley theater, Sixteenth and Market streets, Philadelphia's leading moving picture theater.

NEW THEATER IN LANCASTER. George M. Krupa Building a 2000 Seat House.

Lancaster, Pa.—George M. Krupa, proprietor of the Hippodrome theater, Lancaster, Pa., is now having construction started at that place, which, when completed, will be the largest and most beautiful in that section of Pennsylvania. The new house will be fitted with luxurious interior and seating capacity of 2,000 persons. The work of construction is progressing rapidly and Mr. Krupa declared that he expects to be open by the 4th of July. Practically all of the equipment to be used in the new theater has been purchased from the Calehuff Supply Company, 301 Race street, and includes several projecting machines, a screen and other such paraphernalia.

ACCIDENT TO BUILDERS. Balcony Ceiling Collapses and Injures Workmen.

Reading, Pa.—A most deplorable accident recently occurred during the remodeling of the Palace theater, on Penn street between Sixth and Seventh streets, Reading, Pa., recently taken over by Carr & Schad. The balcony ceiling collapsed while a force of plaster was at work resulting in the death of one man and the serious injury of three others. Attorney for Messrs. Carr & Schad advances as a reason for the accident the fact that a metal ceiling was stripped off and the plaster was being supplied when the supporting beams gave way under the extra weight. The coroner is investigating.

Palace Theater Leased.

Norristown, Pa.—F. J. Sablosky, operators of the Grand opera house, the Garrick and other moving picture theaters in Norristown, Pa., have recently leased the Palace theater, Main and Mill streets, from Frank Leichhammer. The same character shows will be exhibited at this theater as have popularized other theaters conducted by the Messrs. Sablosky and it is expected that the patronage of this theater will steadily increase under the new management.

John Smith Improving Liberty Theater.

Tacony, Pa.—John Smith, proprietor of the Liberty theater, Tacony, and well known in local moving picture circles, has recently made many improvements to his theater, including the installation of considerable new equipment. Mr. Smith, who has the reputation of being an expert on projection, purchased a new Super-Edison machine from the Calehuff Supply Company. This machine is the most expensive on the market and has obtained a wonderful reputation by the clear manner in which it projects pictures upon the screen.

Visitors to Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Many out of town visitors recently paid their respects to Philadelphia and the local moving picture supply houses, and report accomplishing considerable business along this line. Numbered among the visitors were I. H. Trout, proprietor of Murphy's opera house, Front Royal, Va.; Mrs. Reeves, the Resse theater, Harrington, Del.; William Hunt, well known exhibitor of Wildwood, N. J., and many other exhibitors.

Theater on North Broad Sold.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The moving picture theater, 171 North Broad street, lot 60 by 135 feet, has been purchased by Nell L. Carodisky from Rosario Magazil, for a nominal consideration, subject to a mortgage of $14,000.

Decker & Harper Take Local Theater.

Waynesboro, Pa.—Messrs. Decker & Harper, exhibitors of this vicinity, have assumed charge of one of Waynesboro's leading moving picture theaters and have purchased considerable new equipment from the Swanb Film Service, 1327 Vine street, including a new 616 projecting machine.

unanimous, however. The action was taken at the instance of Chief Long, who pronounced the picture as "unclean, unwholesome and immoral." The witnesses called by the chief were Police Lieutenant Harris and Quinn, Dr. Richard G. Tunison, owner and manager of the Lyric theater, 211 Market street, and Jules Gerstle, manager of the Strand theater, 120 Market street. The picture exhibitor was represented by Arthur F. Egner and the owner of the picture, Mr. N. R. Greathouse, by W. D. Salter of Bayonne.

It developed during the hearing that the licensing inspectors employed by the License Department had investigated the picture and had found nothing immoral in it. They were not called to testify.

Mr. Salter, speaking for Mr. Greathouse, said that he had offered to show the picture to Chief Long prior to its public exhibition, but the chief had rejected his offer. He then read testimonials from prominent men testifying to the good work done by the picture.

The two exhibitors, Dr. Tunison and Mr. Gerstle, both said that although they had had an opportunity to book the production, they had refused to show it at their playhouses.

Representing the owners of the theater, Saul Cohn said that in this case his client was the goat. He could see no reason why the license of the Orpheum should be revoked permanently in view of the fact that the theater owner had absolutely no connection with the picture.

The case will be tried this week in the offices of the vice-chancellor.

Advertising Bill Passes

District of Columbia Bill Curtailing Extravagant Statements in Local Advertising Passes House and Senate—Will Doubtless Be Signed Before This Is Read—Provisions of the Measure and Penalties for Infraction.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 633 Tenth St. N. E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There will soon be placed upon the statute books of the District of Columbia a law that will tend to curb the use of extravagant statements in advertising where there is intent to defraud the public. The Johnson bill, concerning which from time to time reports have been printed in this column, has been adopted by the House of Representatives and the Senate and has gone to President Wilson, who will no doubt sign his signature upon it before the Moving Picture World reaches its readers.

Under its provisions "it is unlawful for any person, firm, association, corporation or advertising agency in the District of Columbia, directly or indirectly, to display or exhibit to the public in any way, whether by handbill, placard, poster, picture, film, or otherwise; to insert or cause to be inserted in any newspaper, magazine, or other publication printed in the District of Columbia; or to issue, exhibit, or in any way distribute or disseminate to the public; or to deliver, exhibit, mail, or send by any person, firm, association, corporation, any false, untrue, or misleading statement, representation or advertisement with intent to sell, barter, or exchange any goods, wares, or merchandise, or to induce any person or persons to purchase or in any way invest in or accept as collateral security any share of stock, note," etc.

There is also a provision striking at similar advertising where the advertiser seeks to induce the employment of his services by another. This may have its effect upon any attempt to operate a "school for photographers," should some of those we read about attempt to obtain a footing in the District of Columbia.

Fines of up to $500, imprisonment for not to exceed six months, or both fines and imprisonment in the discretion of the court, are provided for violations.

There is no need for exhibitors to become panic-stricken because there is so strict a law upon the statute books, as its provisions strike only at those who would defraud the public to an extent that is noticeable. In other words, a mistake in light of a mistake would not carry prosecution—it must be a willful fraud.

PATHE TAKES TWO LOCAL MEN. Manager C. W. Bunn and Assistant H. E. Friedman Go to Chicago.

Washington, D. C.—Local filmdom may lose two of its best known and best liked film men, for Clarence W. Bunn, manager of the local branch of the Pathe Company, and Henry E. Friedman, his assistant here, go to Chicago in similar capacities with respect to the office in that city of Pathe, Inc.

Clarence W. Bunn.

Mr. Bunn came to Washington from the Boston office of the company from which he is now departing his connection with the company for the past year and a half. His appointment as manager of the Chicago office of Pathe comes as a distinct promotion, for that is the second largest office of the company in the United States.

During his short stay here he has made a host of friends, all of whom regret that he is to leave the city. "In a way," said Mr. Bunn to the World correspondent, "I dislike leaving Washington. It is a very beautiful city and a most delightful one in which to live, and I am just beginning to get nicely acquainted with the exhibitors and film men in this territory. But the inducement to go to Chicago is such that I do not feel like refusing it. My home is near Chicago, while that of Mr. Friedman is in the city itself, so there are two big inducements for me to move westward. Then in addition to these there is a further inducement offered by the fact that I am an older man, and that this section, having lived in and traveled through the territory prior to coming east, and it will prove much easier for me than any other part of the country.

I started in the film business with the World Film Corporation and, of course, am sorry to leave it, but I believe my prospects are much better in this larger office.

It is to be remembered that on April 1st, Mr. Bunn sprung a surprise on his friends in this territory by slipping off to Chicago and marrying Miss Mable Larsen, when everybody thought him to be a confirmed bachelor. This in all probability is what started his thoughts again toward the west.

H. E. Friedman.

Friedman broke into the film game right here in Washington about a year ago and since that time has been traveling through North Carolina and Virginia. He is enthusiastic over the business and has done much to even up conditions in the territory to which he has been assigned. He was of considerable aid to the exhibitors in North Carolina when they set about to organize their league and he has always been very prominent at the conventions which have followed.

In his position as assistant manager of the Chicago Pathe office his future is also better assured. The Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World can recommend "Friend Henry" to the exhibitors in the Chicago territory as a good fellow, one who always sticks to a pal, and who will meet you half way in any reasonable demand. The boys in this locality are truly sorry to see him go and wish both he and Mr. Bunn every possible success in their future activity.

J. Frank Brown with Masterpiece Film.

Washington, D. C.—J. Frank Brown, formerly member of the corporation which markets Metro productions in this territory, is back in Washington preparatory to travelling through Maryland, Delaware and Virginia for the Masterpiece Film Attractions Company. In addition to the states named, Mr. Brown will also look after the bookings in the District of Columbia. He is to market "Neptune's Daughter," "The Spoilers," "Cabrila" and "Somewhere in France."

Toward the King Row.

A checkerboard move is being made by one of the local exchanges for the Mutual, of 418 Ninth street, northwest, is to occupy the quarters now tenanted by the Washington Film exchange, which markets the Universal program, at 419-421 Ninth street. The latter goes to a building in the next block adjoining the office of the Fox. Both companies will be doing business in their new homes within a very few days.

Washington Expects Perfect Exchange Building

Local Exchange Managers Are Looking Forward to Having a Most Up-to-Date Home For Distributing Offices.

Washington, D. C.—This city is to have one of the finest film exchange buildings in the United States if the plans of Macdonald Macneil, architects in the United Trust Bldg., materialize, and everything points to their success at the present time. It is understood that already several of the exchanges now located in various parts of the city have signed leases or have signed an intention of securing space in the building.

The Washington Film Exchange Building is to be modern in every particular and the trimmings of each floor and wall will be of reinforced concrete construction. The front is to be very attractive in golden tapestry brick ornamented with white matt-glazed terra cotta. The floors and the trimmings of each of the offices are to be of hardwood, while all of the walls will be plastered and ornamented. Attractive electric fixtures and modern plumbing fixtures will be installed throughout.

At the front of the building there will be a modern electric passenger lift, while at the rear there will be installed a separate freight elevator. Each tenant is to have the use of fireproof vaults that are to be built in.

General Exhibition Room and Library.

In the basement there will be an exhibition room and a library. It is contemplated that the exhibition room will be equipped with fifty opera chairs and a large picture screen and a stage. It is to have a paneled ceiling and hardwood floor. The library will also have a hardwood floor and suitable shelving for the filing of books, magazines, trade papers, etc., and will contain a library table and comfortable chairs for the convenience of readers.

Each tenant will have joint use of the exhibition room and library and will also have a large locker space located in the basement.

All of the public corridors will have terrazzo floors and marble base. The stairs will be of ornamental iron with slate treads, except the first floor which will have marble treads. On the first floor space is to be provided for private telephone exchange and telegraph office. On the roof there will be a roof garden, a recreation room and separate retiring rooms with toilet facilities, for male and female employees.

Heat, water, elevator service, janitor and charwomen will be furnished at all reasonable prices. Each office will be divided, and usually a prospective tenant desire an entire floor, the central partition will be removed and, in the event of one desiring more than a single floor, arrangements will be made for private stairs connecting them. It is said that subject to promptly obtaining leases, occupancy can be given on or about December 15, 1916.

Will Fill a Need.

Washington has long been in need of a building of this type, one that is really fireproof, new and convenient and to fit the needs of the rapidly growing business. It has been in the minds of a number of people for some time, but this is the first real announcement of intentions. The building will be located somewhere in the vicinity of Ninth street, where there are a number of motion picture theaters, and will be easily accessible from all parts of the city. With all of the principal film exchanges under one roof it will be of considerable advantage to visiting exhibitors from other cities who may not care to chase all over town in order to be able to visit perhaps a half dozen exchanges. The movement is a commendable one and will probably receive the earnest consideration of a number of concerns who have long wanted for something of this type.

Sidney B. Lust's Business Extends.

Washington, D. C.—Sidney B. Lust, who operates the United Film Service Company in this territory, has extended his activities to the post which he not only carries a line of accessories, but is in a position to do poster mounting. He is now utilizing the entire upper floor of the building at 902 E street, northwest, for this purpose and he has installed an outfit which he claims will enable him to give prompt service. C. J. Dexter, who formerly did this work for Lust, is in exchanges, having his place of business at 414 Ninth street, northwest, is no longer in the field.

Change Affecting Local World Film.

The North Carolina territory of the World Film Corporation, formerly looked after by the Washington office, will hereafter be controlled, according to reports by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, having headquarters in Asheville, N. C. It is said that this organization has closed for the World service in ten or eleven of the Southern states. The service will hereafter be from the Atlanta office of the World Film. The S. A. Lynch Enterprises control a large number of theaters throughout the South, and are being interested in other connections.

Manager Thompson Badly Burned.

D. J. Thompson, manager of the Chelsea theater, a colored house on M street, near Nineteenth street, northwest, is in one of the hospitals badly burned, as a result of a fire in the theater operating room, which burned out the front of the house and destroyed a large number of films. It seems that when the operator saw that there was danger of a fire, he ran to the booth. Mr. Thompson quickly went up into the room and did his best to put the fire out. As a result he was badly burned about the head, face, hands and arms and his mouth was very badly burned. He deserves great credit for the pluck that he showed. It will be several weeks before he can again be on the job. The machines, however, are in good condition and were also damaged.

F. B. Watne Gets Loving Cup.

Fritz B. Watne, manager of the Washington branch of the International Film Service, has been made the recipient of a loving cup, one of the ten offered by the company to the branch exchange managers as a testimonial of their success in handling first-run bookings for its serial, "The Mysteries of Myra."

BALTIMORE NEWS LETTER.

By J. M. Shellman, Special Correspondent
1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore Md.

Another Pearce and Scheck Theater.

BALTIMORE, Md.—It was announced by Nat Keene, manager of Pearce and Scheck's Victoria theater, 415 East Baltimore street, that plans are now under way for the erection soon of a large theater in the 190 block of South Broadway, consisting of 10 lots, near the Leader theater, another one of their interests. At the time the Hippodrome theater was opened, in which they now have large interests, the plans were made for the building of a theater on this location. The pressure of business in regard to this enterprise, however, forced them to postpone the project.

Pictures at Casino.

Baltimore, Md.—Another surprise in the building line is the announcement that the old Casino building, which is located on East North avenue near Charles street, is shortly to be remodeled for use as a large moving picture theater. An ordinance will shortly be introduced in the City Council asking for permission to proceed with the enterprise. Architects are now preparing plans for the remodeling of the structure into a theater.

Theater for South Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—An offer of $8,500 was made to the city on May 17th, through John B. A. Whetle, counsel for the Parkway Theater Company, for the construction of a public school building, Light and Poultry streets.

The object of the Parkway Theater Company in acquiring the property is to erect a $150,000 moving picture theater on the site, and the offer was made providing the city will authorize the erection of a theater. It was also stipulated in the offer that the sale would carry with it the transfer of an irredeemable ground rent of $217, now being paid by the city. The Board of Estimates, to which the offer was made, stated that it did not think the sale would be in the interest of the city, and that the passage of the ordinance, but would not guarantee the transfer of the ground rent.

Altoona's Strand Opens

Handsome New Quarter-of-a-Million Dollar Theater Was Formally Opened Monday, May 29—Owned by the Silverman Brothers—Seats 1,500 Persons—A Fine Organ and Details of Its Construction.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

ALTOONA, PA.—The handsome new Strand theater, Altoona's $250,000 motion picture palace, was formally opened on Monday, May 29, in a brilliant and very auspicious manner. The Strand is a model of architectural beauty. This house had been in the course of construction for the past ten months and embodied the results of much study and the extended experience of the owners, Silverman Bros., pioneer exhibitors of Altoona. Neither time nor expense was spared in carrying out the plan.

All the latest and best ideas in theater building for the most effective presentation of photoplays have been incorporated in the new Strand. It is a brick and steel fireproof structure of imposing exterior. One of its many beautiful decorative features is the lobby, which is finished in the rare marine broccadilla marble. The interior is equally striking and luxurious in its furnishing and equipment. The seating capacity of the house is 1,500, which number it accommodates comfortably. A Hope-Jones organ was installed at a cost of $10,000, and this is augmented by an orchestra of able musicians. The projection equipment consists of two Simplex machines, supplied by the Feature Film & Calcium Light Co. of Pittsburgh. Triangle and Paramount pictures are shown with a change of program three times a week.

The Pitt Begins Summer Films.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Pitt theater, Penn avenue and Seventh streets, inaugurated its summer season of high-class photoplays on May 29, with the showing of the Cline film spectacle, "Ramona," beginning a two weeks' run. Manager Smith has presented the picture as a mammoth opera, using three massive stage sets, 50 singers, dancers and instrumentalists. The symphony orchestra of 30 has been augmented by a Mexican band. The price of admission has again been raised to 25 cents and 50 cents matinees and 25 cents to $1 evenings. The Pitt is being brightened up with lavish floral displays and other decorations while the auditorium, cooled by a new ice air system, is one of the most comfortable to be found anywhere.

OPENING OF THE ORPHEUM.

Mark Browarsky's Splendid New Theater in Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The new Orpheum theater at Forbes street and Murray avenue, in the Squirrel Hill district, was thrown open to the public on Saturday, May 27. Mark Browarsky is the owner of the Orpheum, which is a very handsome addition

New Crescent Opens.

Baltimore, Md.—The New Crescent theater, 1509 Lafayette avenue, opened its doors to the public on Monday, May 22, in gala array after having been entirely renovated. The management has planned to show its patrons only the big productions.

S. M. Buckman Managing the Peabody.

Baltimore, Md.—The Peabody theater 11 East North avenue, is now under the management of S. M. Buckman. It was stated at the Peabody on Wednesday, May 24th, that Mr. Buckman has been managing this theater since May 1st.

Baltimore, Md.—The Gordon air dome, located at the foot of the Baltimore street, is now open to the public. A high class program has been arranged for its patrons by the management.

W. A. Kay Joins Unicorn.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—W. A. Kay, a well known road man formerly with the Independent Film exchange in Pittsburgh, has joined the forces of the Unicorn Film, 125 Fourth street, and is now managing it. Mr. Kay has established a large circle of friends among the exhibitors during his two years in this territory. He will look after a new and striking program, particularly, of which class of films this service releases 21 reels weekly, chiefly one and two reels in length.

Travelogues at the R. & C. Theaters.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—All of the Rowland & Clark theaters, including the Regent, the Strand, the Oakland, the Belmar, the Bellevue and the Arsenal, Pittsburgh, are showing with much success the new weekly travelogue features just inaugurated by the Metro. Unusual interest is displayed by the patrons of the Rowland & Clark houses in these pictures, which are considered a new and striking departure in their treatment of animal and bird life, aside from their portrayal of scenic splendor.

May Bar All Young Children.

Erie, Pa.—A movement has been undertaken by the city officials of Erie, Pa., to have children under 12 years of age barred from motion picture theaters. An ordinance to this effect is being considered, it is said.

Favors Sunday Shows

Cleveland Congregational Minister Comes Out in Favor of Sabbath Picture Shows—Says They Might Be Doing a Work That Changed Social Conditions Prevent the Average Church Doing.

By Hubert Persons, Special Correspondent, Standard Theater Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—The movement planned by the Federated Churches to force Cleveland moving picture theaters to close on Sunday in observance of a state law, seems to have been utterly forgotten. Instead, now comes Rev. Dwight J. Bradley, Congregational minister, declaring he is not only opposed to any movement to close picture theaters on Sunday, but will champion his own Sunday night congregations and urge other pastors to do the same, if the picture theaters will run what he calls "inspirational" films. His suggestion was made in a letter to Charles J. Goepfert of the Melba and Homestead theaters, asking him to suggest a means of improving picture programs.

In reply Rev. Bradley declared churches should help and not criticize the picture theaters. "Sunday night," Rev. Bradley's letter said, "the moving picture houses could run an especially inspirational film, for example, 'The Christian,' which I see is coming to the Melba house. If it were possible to make some such selection for every Sunday night, you would be doing the work which a changed social condition has made almost impossible for the average church to do any longer."

"Personally I should be glad to put my influence behind the support of such a move and in some definite way. All churches could get together and call on the theater manager and say to him:

"We'll close our churches on Sunday nights and urge our combined congregations to attend your program, provided you will bring us a score of the most inspirational film, not necessarily definitely religious; but one that will breed high ideals, and let one of us ministers take ten or fifteen minutes of the time in outlining the main ideals of the film. If it is shown, to help the people get the big punch in it."

Rev. Bradley's suggestion is likely to be worked out on the West Side in the near future.

BIDDING FOR FEATURES.

Proposal to Have League Members Bond Themselves Against It.

Cleveland, O.—S. F. Deutsch of the Sun theater gave members of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League some food for thought at a recent meeting when he suggested that members should be required to put up a substantial cash bond, binding themselves not to outbid each other for photoplay attractions. No action was taken on the suggestion, but it created a mild sensation in the meeting.

BRABANT FILM GROWS.

Company Asks to Increase Capital Stock to $500,000.

Cleveland, O.—The Brabant Film Corporation, 3608 Euclid avenue, has just filed an application with the secretary of state to increase its capital stock from $35,000 to $500,000. Captain H. H. B. Holland, who is president and general manager of the company, has closed contracts with T. Hayes Hunter of New York, to be director general of the company and has also purchased Hunter's rights in a patented method of production which experts believe will greatly reduce the cost of producing pictures by eliminating costly and elaborate stage settings.

He has also signed contracts with Arthur Mordland and William H. Cavanaugh, to play male leads in Brabant productions.

Work on a ten-reel feature on the scale of "The Birth of a Nation," is, it is said, to be commenced at once by the Brabant company. The picture will be produced at Norfolk, Va. This site was selected because the scenario is based on the dramatic Civil War battle between the Monitor and the Merrimack, which occurred near Norfolk.

The company will produce other features in Cleveland in a studio soon to be built on one of several pieces of land on which options are held. George G. Kimbrey, wealthy real estate and insurance man, is to be treasurer of the company. He will also be a director with Captain Holland, Mr. Hunter and Morrison and Cavanaugh.

The film made by the Hunter method was recently privately screened before newspaper men at the Metropolitan theater and was favorably commented on by the photographic editors of both the Leader and Plain Dealer. It is declared to be a real asset to the new company which appears to be getting under way in good shape.

Luck Favors Genius.

Cleveland, O.—Louis Becht, proprietor of the Mall theater, Superior avenue, is a thirty-third degree baseball fan, and one of the founders of the Cleveland Rooters' Club. Because of this fondness for the national sport, he installed a score board above the entrance to his theater.

Then he encountered a problem. To use a step ladder to mark the scores would interfere with the entrance and exit and bring down the wrath of the city building commissioner. To mark the board without a ladder seemed out of the question, until Becht saw George Montgomery of Texas, passing by the theater. Montgomery, seven feet tall, and six inches tall in his stockings. The score board is just eight feet above the sidewalk.

Montgomery was engaged as official scorer and now he draws crowds to the Mall as he appears daily in a natty linen suit and calmly chalks up the scores as the plays are made.

Picture Playhouse Suit in Cleveland.

Cleveland, O.—One angle of the troubles of the Picture Play House Film Company, which went into the hands of a receiver in the New York courts, May 12, has gotten into the United States District Court here. Frank R. Appleton, Jr., the New York receiver, has just filed a petition asking Federal Judge Clarke to enjoin the Cleveland Municipal court bailiff from executing a sale of the bankrupt company's property at the Columbia Bldg. The property consisting of films and office furniture, was levied on in a suit filed by F. M. Sultzbaugh and J. E. Bates. Bates was formerly manager of the Cleveland office of the company.

The Federal Court suit was filed through Attorneys White, Johnson, Cannon and Neff.

Governor Willis Settles Controversy.

Cleveland, O.—Governor Willis has ended the controversy between Maude Murray Miller of the Ohio Censor Board and the Cleveland exhibitors in which Mrs. Miller has accused the Cleveland men of persistent efforts to cause her removal from office.

In a recent letter to Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Governor Willis declared that no such effort had been made by the Cleveland men within his knowledge. The exhibitors had appealed to him in order to put an end to the statements made by Mrs. Miller in addresses and in letters.

The Alhambra Children's Shows.

Cleveland, O.—Jack Greenbaum, manager of the Alhambra theater, is continuing his special Saturday programs for children. He deplores a dearth of good pictures suitable for children and predicts a new company which is to produce such films will succeed.

Cincinnati's Open Sunday

Mayor Puchta Believes in Clean Picture Shows on Sabbath in His City and Has No Intention of Forcing Them to Close.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Special Correspondent, 610 First Nat. Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—Local exhibitors breathe a bit easier since the question of whether the ancient statute regarding theatrical performances on Sunday has been placed squarely before Mayor Puchta, and decided in their favor. It will be recalled that the Supreme Court of the United States, in its recent decision in question is in full force and effect and that, moreover, it applies to moving picture performances, making them illegal on Sunday. Certain religious organizations in Cincinnati, who favor the Puritan Sabbath, called the mayor's attention to this statute and the decision construing it a few days ago and asked him to take action to close up Cincinnati picture houses on Sunday. He stated definitely, however, that there was nothing objectionable in clean picture shows on Sunday or on any other day, and that he had no intention of forcing them to close. As a matter of fact, the old statute in question is a dead letter in virtually every city of the state, remaining merely as a weapon in the hands of advocates of Sunday closing in the smallest towns and villages. The attitude of the mayor indicates that as yet Cincinnati will not join these.

Former Censor on Censoring.

Cincinnati, O.—The steadily increasing interest taken in moving pictures by civic women, as well as a refreshing view of the censorship problem, were shown in an address by Miss Helen Dwyer of New York, before the Julia Ward Howe club, of Cincinnati, recently. Miss Dwyer, who is well known as a former censor herself, pointed out that there are at least two sides to the subject, and that the only safe criterion is the opinion of the general public and not of isolated individuals of narrow view. The need for pictures especially suited to children under sixteen was suggested as one of the great needs of the industry. Manager C. E. Holton of the V-L-S-E exchange, was a speaker at the meeting, outlining briefly the evolution of the moving picture and pointing out the immense improvement which has been seen in a comparatively short time, with the inference that still further improvement may be looked for.

FOX MANAGER PLEADS GUILTY.

Fined $100 and Costs for Disregarding Orders of Censors.

Cincinnati, O.—The trial of A. M. Muller, Cincinnati manager of the Fox Film Corporation, for the charge of failing to see that eliminations from "The Eternal Sapho," ordered by the Ohio Board of Censors, were made before the film was shown in Cincinnati, resulted in a plea of guilty and a fine of $100 and costs. The film man. The case was presented in the Cincinnati Municipal Court, being the first of the kind tried in Cincinnati, or, as far as known, elsewhere in Ohio, and the court stated that the heavy fine imposed was due to his desire to see that the State Board of Censors was duly supported. Manager I. Libson, who was taken from his home at midnight on account of the excessive zeal of the prosecution, which desired to obtain possession of the film through him, was dismissed, as it was apparent that he was in no way to blame for the fact that the picture had not been cut to meet the views of the censors. Mr. Muller's attorney informed the court that the entire trouble arose out of a misunderstanding over the telephone, certain parts of the film being ordered eliminated through the efforts of local people.

Keith's on Summer Schedule.

Cincinnati, O.—F. Keith's theater is now on its summer schedule, with prices reduced to ten cents, and three performances a day of a combined program of vaudeville and moving pictures. About one hour of pictures is shown, and the most part of news matter and comedies, precedes each vaudeville performance and seems to please the houses immensely. At the summer schedule makes Keith's virtually a picture house, every theater in the city which is open is now in that category; and all of the downtown houses are open, making it a clean sweep for the film shows.

F. N. Tynes to Build Theater.

Portsmouth, O.—A handsome new picture theater is being planned for Portsmouth, O., by Architect C. C. Taylor, of Cincinnati. F. N. Tynes is the owner. The house will seat 700 people, and will be much the finest in Portsmouth, in many respects. It is to be built during the summer, and is to be ready for the opening of the fall season.

Family Theater Makes Hit.

Cincinnati, O.—The running of the installments of "Gloria's Romance," the small Kleine serial featuring Billie Burke, in conjunction with the Triangle program at the Family theater, has made a pronounced hit with patrons of that popular Vine street house, the result being crowds at every performance. The first installment of the film met with success equal to that of the Triangle release of "Peggy," which also featured Miss Burke, and this has naturally helped the succeeding installments, which are being shown regularly.

DETROIT NEWS ITEMS.

Battle Creek, Mich.—The officers of the Rex Theater Company, operating the Rex theater, in Battle Creek, are: Glen A. Cross, president; Mable L. Cross, vice-president; and Harvey E. Lipp, secretary and treasurer. The authorized capital stock of the company is $1,000. Mr. Lipp and Mr. Cross control practically all of the stock.

Owosso, Mich.—Fred Patterson plans to remodel his building at 113 West Main street, converting the structure into a moving picture theater.

Flint, Mich.—The Lyric theater, on Saginaw street, Flint, is being extensively remodelled.

Deckerville, Mich.—Plans have been completed for a moving picture theater to be erected for Mr. Wiley Bent at Deckerville. It will be 25 by 66 feet in size, and will seat about 300. It will be started at once and completed in August.

Detroit, Mich.—Contracts will be let early in June for the new capital, Grand Boulevard and Chene street. Wildner & Elsen are the architects. Bids have been in for some time.

Detroit, Mich.—The Parkview theater, Parkview and Kercheval avenues, closed on Sunday, May 21. C. M. Orth, lessee, is devoting his entire time to the promotion of a large new house on the opposite corner, which will seat around 1,500 and cost $100,000.

DETROIT, MICH.—On May 23 Alderman James Vernor introduced an amendment into the common council of Detroit (exhibitors please read). The amendment requires the adoption of a code of rules for the inspection of all kinds of shows including picture theaters in the city of Detroit. It also provides for a code governing the heating and ventilating and general sanitary conditions of the shows and for the regular inspection of them. If they perfectly conform a certificate shall be issued to them:

"An after the issuance of such certificate, no change or alteration shall be made in such building, hall, show house or play house without application having been first made to such department and officer and a certificate of approval of such change or alteration be had from each of the departments and offices above mentioned.

It shall be the duty of any proprietor, lessee or manager to make application to the Board of Building Inspectors, Building Commission, the Board of Fire Commissioners, the Public Lightening Commission, the Fire Marshal and the Board of Health for an inspection of the building, play house, show house, or hall with reference to the condition of strength and safety, heating, ventilation and sanitation thereof for the purpose of which designed and for the speedy access of persons therein in case of sudden alarm or danger, and to furnish such respective departments and officers with a sketch or diagram showing the floor plan of such building, with exits, seating capacity and such other information as may be demanded by such departments or officers.

"Sec. 2. This ordinance shall take immediate effect."

"GLORIA" A BANGING SUCCESS. Amusement of Majestic Had Fought Shy of Serials, But Succeeded in New Triangle Local Office.

Detroit, Mich.—That serials can be shown successfully at the highest grade of motion picture theaters is being demonstrated at the Majestic theater, Detroit, where Miss Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance" is being run. The business at all performances the first week was tremendous—breaking all previous attendance records—even the matinee performance drew capacity crowds. That the best people are going to the Majestic to see the serial is proven by the fact that the number of motor cars which line up each time for four and five times that of other shows. "We have always been opposed to serials for the Majestic," said Manager M. W. McGee. "But we made an exception in the case of 'Gloria's Romance,' principally because of Miss Burke being in the case—and because we knew that George Kline would make it an exceptionally good serial. And we are not disappointed. Our patrons are thoroughly enjoy it, and we know that practically all of them will come back for the remaining chapters."

New Triangle Local Office.

Detroit, Mich.—The Triangle Film Corporation—Detroit branch—has moved to its new location, 73 Broadway, where it occupies an entire floor. Manager George Shuman has exceedingly busy when the World representative dropped in there on Thursday, May 25. From what could be seen then, the new Triangle offices will be well equipped and exist in the country. The location is central and convenient to all car lines. L. W. Foster continues with the Triangle as special representative through the entire state.

Detroit Joys in Big Conventions.

Although the much-looked-for warm spell has arrived, it will not materially interfere with the motion picture industry in Detroit, fortunate in having thousands of transients every day, due to its being a summer resort city and known for its many conventions. At the present time the Railway Trainmen—some 5,000 men and women—are in Detroit holding their convention—and they will be here until the middle of June. During the month of June there are some fifty conventions—more—so that everything in Detroit—all of which will bring from 500 to 5,000 people to Detroit. July and August are also variously busy convention months. The many teamship companies from almost every part of the great lakes unload thousands of passengers every day at Detroit—the motor car industry bringing thousands of tourists to Detroit during the summer—so that everything considered, prospects look exceedingly bright for the moving picture theaters even during the hot spell.

Jacob Smith Invites You.

If you are not a regular subscriber to the Moving Picture World, send your dollars at once to our Detroit office, 503 Free Press building, in charge of Jacob Smith. Also send new items about your theater to the same address. The local owner or manager can afford to do without the trade's great paper, which costs approximately six cents per week.

Delinquent in Payment for Licenses.

According to State Fire Marshal John T. Finch, there are about 100 moving picture theaters in Michigan who have neglected to comply with the law which requires a license fee of $10. Notices have been mailed demanding immediate remittance. Those who fail to pay will be ordered to close their houses, and local fire chiefs will be instructed to cut the wires leading to their theaters.

To Mr. and Mrs. Kent, a Girl.

Detroit, Mich.—Best wishes and tons of congratulations to James O. Kent, manager of the Electric Film Corporation, in Detroit, who is once again a happy "papa." A bouncing baby girl—Sylvia Marie—was born to Mrs. Kent on May 11. Kalamazoo, Mich.—F. Addison Pelley, lessee of the Majestic in Kalamazoo, Mich., has installed a handsome new stage setting and new drops; a new lighting system, new interior decorations and in a name of the work has materially improved the appearance of his house.

Detroit Briefs.

The Universal Film Company, the Blue Bird Company and the Michigan Metro Film Corporation are located indefinitely at 183 East Jefferson avenue, just a block east of the form of the city.

Harry I. Garson, of the Broadway-Strand theater, is devoting a lot of time these days in laying his plans for the forthcoming season. He has the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, in which he is heavily interested in the Michigan distributing company Mr. Garson is getting letters and telegrams almost daily from Michigan exhibitors asking for the exhibiting rights in their respective localities.

Need a Box Office Phone

Louisville Exhibitor Points Out How Telephone in the Box Office Will Pay—Pictures Conditions and Shows Why It is a Real Necessity Even in Houses
That Distribute Hand Bills with the Daily Program.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—According to one of the leading exhibitors, there is a man who has no personal interest in boosting the telephone business, every theater should have a telephone, merely as a business-getting proposition and a matter of service to patrons. He stated that it was unable to see how a theater could be so penny-wise-and-pound-foolish as not to have one 'phone installed, or both 'phones if it happens to be in a city where there is more than one telephone company.

The cost in the first place is small—$3 or $4 per month—which represents thirty or forty admissions. In many cases the outskirt houses, which use re-run pictures, are severely handicapped by a feeling among their patrons that they will see pictures they have already seen if they attend the suburban house.

In a measure this condition has been relieved by passing weekly handbills in the neighborhood, but the handbill is often lost or misplaced, and an entire family will go down town rather than walk several blocks to the neighborhood theater. One outskirt house features telephone service, and requests its patrons to call up and get information concerning plays and players. The box office girl handles the calls, gives the number of reels in the photoplay feature, the producing company, and the star entered. She also tells what comedies or other material may be on the bill. One of the downtown houses has both 'phones, and reports that they pay for themselves every month through the volume of business that comes into the theater following calls to find out what program is on, or what time certain shows will start. One exhibitor figures that if he breaks even on the actual business done over the 'phone he is bound to be ahead in the personal service and the service to patrons.

MANY AIRDOMES OPEN.

Summer Season Sets Park Theaters in Race.

Louisville, Ky.—The final opening of real summer weather has brought a lot of the old airdomes to life, and those which have not opened are making preparation to get into the game as quickly as possible. Business with the parks has started somewhat better, also, but, according to the leading exhibitors, the downtown moving picture theaters are not suffering any from the airdomes or parks. The Hilltop Amusement Co., which some time ago took over the Crescent airdome, in Crescent Hill, a few blocks from the theater, has arranged to open the airdome under the management of Herbert Nadell. The Broadway, Westonian and Woodland domes will also be open inside of a few days, and the Baxter and Preston have been open on warm nights for several weeks. There have been some changes in the management of the domes, however, as bad weather last season caused a number of the original owners to lose money.

Alf Oldham Back.

Alf Oldham, former manager of the Woodland airdome, who went to St. Louis, Mo., about a year ago to manage a picture theater there, has returned to Louisville and will be active in the management of the Woodland garden open air theater this summer. Mr. Oldham made a big success of the venture during its first season.

Stewart Cayce Will Write Publicity.

Louisville, Ky.—Stewart Cayce, of the Walnut Street theater, will hereafter be publicity agent for the theaters operated by the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, including the Rex, Alamo and Walnut, as well as several outskirt houses. Bob Rodgers, of the Louisville Herald, who has been handling the publicity campaign, has been forced to resign because of his exacting duties on the morning paper. Mr. Cayce has had a great deal of experience along this line, and at one time was at the head of the photoplay writing classes of the Louisville Y. M. C. A.

Cherokee Amusement Trading Stamps.

Louisville, Ky.—The Cherokee Amusement Co., operators of the Cherokee theater, in the Highlands, is giving away cards with every ten-cent admission, except on Saturday and Sundays. These cards may be redeemed for silverware in much the same way as trading stamps, and are redeemable by the Davis Advertising Co., of New York. That the idea is popular is shown by the fact that everyone is asking for the cards, 50 of which are good for a teaspoon and 300 for a table knife. This form of premium is inexpensive, and entirely inside of all lottery laws.

The Alamo's Own Local Weekly.

Louisville, Ky.—The Alamo theater, since installing a new management, has arranged to take pictures each week of local happenings of interest, and has planned to run a regular local weekly film. Some excellent material was obtained on Saturday evening, May 20, when the big plant of the Coopersage Company burned to the ground. This first was one of the most spectacular seen in Louisville for years, and burned most of the following Sunday.

Louisville Notes.

The Rex theater of Louisville is playing the Pavlova pictures to a fair audience at an admission price of 25 cents. This theater has done a far better business this season, as remodelled with its name changed from the Novelty to the Rex.

Manager George Hackett of the Sun theater, recently let a contract for repainting and decorating the building inside and out, and when the work is completed will have a very attractive suburban house.

A number of theaters in this district have contracted for the new serial, "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," including the Empire, Crystal, Norman, Hilltop, Sun, Gem, Frankfort, Lyric, New Albany and Kerrigan, New Albany.

M. Wentzel, owner of the Norman theater, has again contracted for Universal service. Mr. Wentzel is one of the successful, solid, old line picture men of the city.

Simon Switow of the Switow Amusement Co., had had the Crystal theater done over inside and out and has made several improvements in the building.

The Sanders Amusement Company has taken out a building permit for several minor alterations on its airdome at 2434 West Broadway, which will be opened in a few days.

The Macaulay Theater Company, the oldest legitimate house in the Louisville district, has filed articles of incorporation, listing a capital stock of $2,120. The incorporators holding the entire issue are Annie A. Macaulay, Mary L. Smith, Rachel M. Bigelow and Albert A. Bigelow. The debt limit is placed at $10,000.

The Idlehour Amusement Company, with a capital stock of $1,800, divided into 180 shares, has filed articles of incorporation. The company proposes to conduct moving picture theaters and is authorized to incur an indebtedness not to exceed the capital stock. The incorporators are Floyd Whitehead, Henry T. Kraft and F. L. Wilhoit.

L. J. Dittmar, head of the Majestic Amusement Company, returned from a business trip to New York City recently.

Kentucky Notes.

Sardis, Ky.—The Sardis opera house has installed a private lighting plant and will no longer be forced to depend upon erratic local central station service.

Irvine, Ky.—J. Ernest Stivers of Lexington, Ky. is arranging to open a new airdome at Irvine with a seating capacity of 800. Irvine is one of the rapidly growing oil towns of the state.

Louisville, Ky.—F. Bennett and Harry Conley have taken the management of the Stafford theater. Maynard Brothers effected a satisfactory settlement with their creditors, and the bankruptcy petition was withdrawn.

TENNESSEE NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

Summer Films at Strand.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Strand theater, Bellevue and Linden avenues, will be operated during the summer months in connection with Lanier's Theatre Garden, according to announcement made recently by Arthur Lane, who will be in personal charge of the attractive little theater. Mr. Lane has retained management of the Orpheum theater, and his connection with the Strand will be for the summer only. Mr. Lane has announced that he will display photoplays de luxe at the Strand, and that the Strand will feature features along with the daily change of pictures. First run pictures only will be shown and a special matinee will be arranged for children on Saturdays.

Tennessee Notes of Interest.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Crescent Amusement Company has been receiving bids on the new $100,000 Majestic theater, and contracts for erecting the building will probably be let inside of a few days.

The Knickerbocker theater of Nashville has received many favorable comments on the efficiency of its high grade orchestra. This orchestra is under the leadership of B. B. Reisinger.

The Majestic Amusement Company of Memphis, Tenn., raised prices to ten and twenty cents at New Majestic No. 2, during the showing of "Undine."

The Alamo, Nashville, Tenn., recently exhibited the fifth episode of "The Mysteries of Myra," which is going very well with the playhouse.

ST. LOUIS NEWS LETTER.

A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent, 236 Vanol Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

Russell Airdome Leased to Skouras.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Spyros Skouras, manager of the Lafayette theater, Lafayette and Jefferson avenues, has leased the Russell airdome on Russell avenue, just east of Jefferson, four blocks away from the theater, to run the playhouse program during the hot months. The cold and rainy season last year almost put the out-door shows out of business, but the Russell is in an excellent location, and when it was not actually pouring down rain, always had a crowded audience. Mr. Skouras has decorated the place, which was already a handsome airdome, with Grecian statues, and brilliant lights, and has planted one hundred and twenty trees, symmetrically arranged, to add to the beauty of the garden. An excellent orchestra furnishes the music for the entertainment, which is of pictures exclusively, usually a new feature every day, with a comedy and travel and new pictures. The Russell seats about 2,000 persons, and the admission is ten cents.

War Benefit at Pageant.

St. Louis, Mo.—A. E. Morelock, manager of the Pageant theatre, 5815 Delmar St., gave a showing on May 22 of films of war scenes in France, for the benefit of the American fund for the French wounded. The moving picture exhibition began at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and after an hour and a half of the pictures, a dinner was served at a popular west end restaurant. After the dinner a dance was given, which wound up the entertainment. The proceeds will go to the support of the rural hospitals throughout France.

Business Notes.

Ambrose Abrams, special representative of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., visited the St. Louis branch under the charge of S. J. Bakers, during the week of May 15. Mr. Abrams found trade conditions good in all the districts he visited, and was especially pleased to hear that the St. Louis office had won the prize for the largest proportionate amount of business done during the month of April.

General Exchange Manager Berger of the International Film Company paid a hurried call on E. W. Dustin, local manager of the International, in the Plaza Hotel, 3300 Olive street, on May 20. Mr. Berger found trade prosperous in the Mississippi Valley. The International, although a new organization, has exceeded all expectations in recent bookings in this territory.

Tom Leonard to Travel for Universal.

Tom Leonard has just recently been appointed Universal traveling salesman. Mr. Leonard is an old time exhibitor, having been in the game since his infancy. He is personally acquainted with nearly all the exhibitors in the territory, and should have nice easy sledding in placing Universal contracts.

Illinois Theater Changes.

Moline, Ill.—The Grand theater on Fifteenth street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, is closed. Lee Woodyatt, manager, blamed lack of business.

Richmond, Ill.—Robert Gibb has purchased the motion picture theaters here and at Wilmet.

Oregon, Ill.—Paul Black has sold the Star theater here to Mr. and Mrs. Miles Cutler of Rockford.

Rock Falls, Ill.—A. E. Berlin, Jr., manager of the Lyric theater here, will erect a 40x100 motion picture theater, seating 500.

Charleston, Ill.—C. D. Mitchell has abandoned his plan to erect an opera house on Sixth street and announces that he will construct a one-story motion picture theater on the same site.

Harvard, Ill.—Alrich & Scott, who have sold the Photodrome at Richmond, will now devote all their time to the Palace theater here.

Rock Falls, Ill.—Mr. and Mrs. William Boston, who will open a new air dome here within a few weeks, will call it "The Rock airdome."

Ottawa, Ill.—The Gaiety theater will be used for moving pictures, Frank Thielan of the Ottawa Orpheum having leased it for five years for road shows.

Quincy, Ill.—Edward C. Brosi has purchased the Bijou theater here and is remodeling it. He will re-open with a free show.

Oak Park, Ill.—Manager John G. Hodgson of the Oak Park theater has smashed the rule not to run serials and is going to run George Kleine's "Gloria's Romance."

The Real Censor Spirit

Oak Hill, Ill., Censors Tell Just What They Want—Would Be Fine for a Finishing School for Young Ladies, but Do Full Grown, Healthy Minded American Communities Want Anything at All Like It?

By Frank H. Madison, Special Correspondent, 6749 Emerald Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OAK PARK, ILL.—The West Suburban Committee for Better Moving Pictures, after a partial survey of photoplay houses in the city, still feels that its program is not so idealistic, but that it may be approximated in time at least by the wise and happy co-operation of the public and the management of the moving picture houses.

In its report the committee spoke of the attitude of the exhibitors in feeling that helpful pictures were money-losing propositions. "The committee feels that it is due," said the report, "both to the fact that the moving picture management does not understand or properly interpret the real wishes of the public and that the public does not clearly understand the desire of the moving picture management. That is, that the moving picture management thinks that a certain boost in the demand for pictures will induce the public to desire of the part of the community for more of that kind, which he will soon find to be untrue in Oak Park; and, that the average man having attended an entertainment where this kind of film was the exception and not the rule had his ideals shattered; and, as he thinks, the morals of his small children twisted, and so comes to attend the motion picture theater at all either alone or with his family. The committee also believes that the public and the moving picture management can, and should be brought together and be made to understand each other, for the mutual profit of both; and has addressed itself to that task."

Principles Evolved.

As a result of its experience, correspondence, study, discussion and deliberation, the committee is ready to make the following recommendation of principles to govern the choosing and presentation of films in Oak Park:

Pictures to Be Eliminated Entirely.

(A) On the Social Evil Grounds: 1. Those dealing with sex scenes which arouse unwholesome curiosity and stir the imagination. 2. Those depicting triangular and intricate problems of married life. 3. Those in which characters appear in scanty clothing displaying their persons suggestively or unnaturally, either in jest or in earnest. 4. Those in which characters take undue liberties with one another's person. 5. Those where the actors by wanton acts, leers, winks, glances, signs, etc., suggest improprieties. 6. Those showing scenes of the "underworld," its inhabitants, resorts and life. 7. Those showing the indiscreet "love" making. 8. Those where the sanctity of the marriage relation is belittled.

(B) On the Ground of Unlawful Acts: 1. Those portraying murder, criminal assaults, lynching, etc. 2. Those seriously depicting resistance to and the circumvention of duties of the police and officers of the law. 3. Those showing mobs and individuals taking the law into their own hands.

(C) On the Ground of Amusements: 1. Those depicting promiscuous dancing of extreme types either in cabaret or on stage. 2. Those showing the use of wit with undue emphasis scenes and other games of chance.

(D) On the Ground of Personal Habits or Customs: 1. Those showing the common use of the social glass in home, hotel, club, etc. 2. Those showing the hero or heroine resorts to the use of the cigarette. 3. Where details of worship and religious rites are depicted.

Cut to a Flash or Show Only as Incidental to Plot.

1. Those depicting death or other gruesome scenes. 2. Those where weapons for defense are used with deadly or apparently fatal results. 3. Those showing love scenes of too demonstrative a nature. 4. Those representing any form of cruelty to human beings, animals, insects, etc. 5. Those where it would be necessary to show insane or feeble-minded persons. 6. Those where "western life" with its saloons, bars, etc., are depicted. 7. Those in which the weakness of class or race are over-emphasized. 8. Those portraying gambling, cheating, etc., and only when moral is very evident.

Pictures to Be Encouraged.

1. Clean, high-class pictures depicting action, adventure, excitement and thrill in unimagined ways. 2. Scenes of pure home life and displays of affection among the members of the family circle. 3. Those where the things which imperil the home and the family are shown, as such. 4. Great historical and epoch-making events in the world's history. 5. Travel pictures. 6. Clean comedy and cartoons. 7. Educational films, even those having to do with sex, and effects of sex perversion (when shown to adults only).

Ways and Means.

1. Establish a frank understanding between the moving picture home management and those who are to work for these objectives. 2. Begin and continue a campaign of education in the community to attain these objectives.

(A) By talks before all the various clubs, societies and organizations, especially those where parents may be met.

1. Urge the management of the moving picture programs on basis of foregoing prior to parents giving permission to children to see them. 2. To urge parents to personally accompany children to see films more frequently. 3. Urge parents to speak promptly to the management of moving picture houses when they find objectionable features in films. 4. Urge all patrons to speak encouragingly and commendably to management of moving picture houses when films are worthy. 5. Urge appointment of a permanent committee by every organization interested and that the chairman of that committee be automatically a member of a general community committee for the accomplishment of the purpose to be attained.

(B) By issuance of literature.

(C) By the use of the press. Encourage and promote safe and sane legislation to help accomplish these objectives.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

New Incorporations.

Springfield, Ill.—Secretary of State Stevenson has issued charters to the following:

Foreign Features Film Company, 25 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago; $2,500; to exhibit motion pictures and other amusements featuring B. B. Silver, E. O. Blackburn and North Storms.

Terminal Theater Company, Chicago; incorporators: Nathan Ascher, Max Ascher, Lewis F. Jacobson.

Bunch of Bitter Enemies

Indianapolis Exchange Managers All Live Hustlers—They Like Each Other and They Have to Respect Each Other; But Contracts Come Hard When Competition Is Awake—Some of the Best of 'Em.

Special to Moving Picture World from the Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Efficiency experts and those who love to see the hustler in his native haunts, not to mention moving picture producers who are tickled to death by a real live branch manager, any of them would find a world of pleasure if he travelled just once around the branch offices and agencies in Indianapolis. If there ever was a bunch of live hustlers, struggling "bitter enemies" gathered together in one town Indianapolis has that reputation among her branch agents.

It can safely be said that each and every fellow knows the business from A to Z. It can further be said that they have to know the business thoroughly or they don't stay here where they make it a point to know it all.

Manager Miller.

For instance, there is Manager Miller over at the Mutual. The Mutual is just now handling the feature stuff from three of the biggest theaters in the city, not to mention any number of the more than eighty smaller houses in this, the biggest motion picture house city in the country, for it is a fact that Indianapolis has more moving picture theaters, considering the population of the city, than any other big city in the country. Miller is a regular booster. His ability to boost is the secret of his success. Miller managed to put the Chaplin stuff in three theaters downtown on the same day when the Mutual opened with the new Chaplin series. It is the first time one picture has ever been shown simultaneously in three theaters in the city. Of course it was Chaplin, but then—well, it must be handed to Miller.

Manager Hurst.

Over at the Pathe there is Hurst, and he comes across with some good stuff relative to claims for work in his department.

"I see where the boys over in St. Louis are boasting that they are releasing seventy times with one copy of the 'Iron Claw.' Here, within a radius of less than 100 miles—our territory—I am releasing that serial at a rate of seventy-five and eighty showings, and with only one copy. St. Louis is good, but, without boasting a bit, we're better."

Manager Jameson.

The Famous Players has its live one in Jameson. He's a regular hustler, with something to hustle with, for the Famous Players' reels are just about the top notch in the distribution in Indianapolis and the immediate neighborhood. Then there is G. N. Montgomery of the World Film Corporation, a newcomer in Indianapolis, but going some. And so on down the line. They are a good bunch of live men.

FILM MEN BOTHERED.

Arrested on Sunday Show Charges But Not Prosecuted.

Princeton, Ind.—Princeton is having its Sunday show troubles. Jean Barrett and William Lightner, owners, were arrested and charged with operating their houses on Sunday. After much wrangling the cases were set for trial in a justice court and a police chief instructed to get a jury. After the jury was obtained the state refused to introduce any evidence and the justice of the peace finally instructed the jury to find for the defendants. This was done, resulting in acquittal of the defendants. It clearly shows, but it did not make up for the time, expense and general trouble caused the picture men.

The moving picture men are charging that politics figured extensively in the case, and this is no doubt true. This year, a campaign year throughout the state, and a year in which both political parties are seeking public favor by hook or crook, may cause the moving picture men some burdens. The moving picture house in Indiana is near and dear to the public, and it is the public that votes. Thus the moving picture men may look out for a dose of some kind of political medicine.

FRED BOWER'S PRETTY HOME.

Recently Opened Theater Pleases Covington's Patrons.

Covington, Ind.—Fred Bower, popular moving picture theater manager, has opened his new house, the Lyric, and has been accorded fine patronage by Covingtonians. Bower is entitled to all he gets, because the Lyric is a beautifully appointed theater. While not a large theater as large theaters are known in larger cities, there is ample seating capacity and no pains have been spared on the decorative effects. The finishing has been done throughout in soft colors and one feels like walking into a beautifully appointed home instead of a theater when one enters. A "homey" theater has always been one of the Bower strong points.

True Censorship Begins at Home

Says an Iowa Preacher, "A Man Trying to Run a Clean Show Has a Hard Time While Some of You Church People Hunt Live Films."

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

BURLINGTON, IA.—Rev. A. R. Forsythe is an evangelist who has praised the moving picture show in a revival meeting. "A man would be a fool," he said, "to believe that the motion picture is not here to stay, and that they cannot be of great educational value. And when we wanted to hold Passion week service in a downtown church the door was locked to us, while the owner of a picture house showed enough Christianity to let us have our service in his auditorium. Now, I want you to get that way down in your gizzard. It's a good thing to know something about the people about you."

"At the same time a man who is trying to run clean, decent pictures has a hard time trying to pay expenses while some of your church people are hunting around for a place where you can find low and vile films."

Show Near College Wanted.

AMES, IA.—A proposed ordinance to bar moving picture theaters from the 4th ward, in which is located the Iowa State College, has caused a great deal of agitation here. One result is that a petition has been prepared containing the signatures of 2,000 persons, including many members of the college faculty. This petition asked that the ordinance be rescinded. Manager Joe Gerbracht of the Twentieth Century theater has been making arrangements to open a theater within a block of the college campus.

Grand Rapids, Wis.—The Daily theater has been leased for a year by John T. Stark, proprietor of the Ideal theater and the Palace Theater Company.

will be produced by the Barker-Swan Film Company, of Peoria, Ill.

Laemmle Film Wins Suit.

Davenport, Ia.—The Laemmle Film service came out victoriously in a suit brought against it by the McCullough Realty Company for $250, alleged rent. The court ruled that the real estate company knew that when the Laemmle company signed a lease, an ordinance was being drafted by the city council, which would compel all film exchanges to have offices and supply rooming, one-story buildings. He also said the Realty company was aware of the nature of the Laemmle company's business although it was classed as dealing in theater supplies. Therefore, the film company could not be held to the terms of the lease.

Fire Rules and Shows with Vaudeville.

LINCOLN, NEB.—The City council contemplates the passage of an ordinance distinguishing between dramatic theaters and moving picture houses. Two moving picture houses have been advertising vaudeville and it is said by city officials that these theaters are not equipped with asbestos curtains nor is the stage wiring done in accordance with the best safety requirements. It is at such houses as these that the legislation will be aimed.

Rialto Film Lays Cornerstone.

Omaha, Neb.—A crowd of 2,000 persons witnessed the laying of the cornerstone of the new studio of the Rialto Film Company, at the town site of Ralston, near Omaha. Mayor Bragg of Ralston presided and the principal address was given by President Schaefer of the Rialto companies. The crowd was filmed and pictures also were made of the fancy dancing of Hildegard Lachmann, "The Rialto Girl," and Doris Secord. Miss Lachmann also broke a bottle of wine over the cornerstone. President Schaefer announced that 500 men would be put at work on the construction of the studio.

Praise for Pictures.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Rev. A. H. Thompson, pastor of the First Methodist Church, declared he believed the influence of the photoplay was more for good than for evil. He pointed out they had proved a specially efficient counter attraction to the saloon.

Local Theater Changes.

Lemon, S. D.—Oscar Husa, of Bangor, Wis., and Lew Pein have formed a company to operate moving picture theater in the Husa building, on Main street.

Fargo, N. D.—Edward Nelson and Mrs. Ida Erickson have purchased the Strand theater from Christ Wilhelmson for $15,000. Abel Erickson, who will be manager for the new owners, announces that nothing but moving pictures will be shown.

Langdon, N. D.—Langdon is without a moving picture theater until the building under construction is completed. The opera house is not in good condition.

Powers Lake, N. D.—Edward Mortensen has been making plans to engage in the moving picture business.

Dakota Items.

Langdon, N. D.—The Electric theater was destroyed by fire. The building was owned by W. F. Winter. Some equipment was saved, but most of it was badly damaged.

Church's Ferry, N. D.—Editor Delameter of the Knox Advocate has purchased the moving picture theater from Cecil G. Gessner.

Endorlin, N. D.—The Grand theater has installed its own lighting plant.

To Frolic for the Fund

At Minneapolis, Twin City Screen Club Will Help Actors' Fund by a Party—Friday, June 9, Will be the Time and Some Central Theater, at 11 P. M., Will be the Place—Committees Appointed to Have Charge of the Matter.

By PERRY S. Williams, Special Correspondent, Address Minneapolis Tribune.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Friday, June 9, 11 p. m., has been set aside by a very large person in Minneapolis engaged directly or indirectly in the moving picture business as the time for him to "do his bit" to aid the Actors' Fund of America. The date was set by the Twin City Screen Club when it was learned the time for the receipt of donations for the fund had been extended to June 15. At a large meeting in its quarters on the tenth floor of the Radisson hotel the club voted unanimously to help out the fund and the midnight entertainment at some theater centrally located was hit on as the best medium through which to work. The following individuals and committees were appointed to carry out the scheme:

Chairman—Fred S. Meyer. Stage manager—William Koening. Entertainment committee—Prosper Schwie, L. C. Calvert, James Keough, William F. Koch, Harry Billings and Andy Campion. Publicity committee—Carlton W. Miles, Frederick C. Moore, Leslie Murray and Thomas J. Hamlin. Ticket committee—Gilbert Tyler, S. B. Sampson, Thomas Gleason and D. O. Hoyer. Program committee—E. A. Westcott, D. C. McClellan, E. G. Marohn, L. B. Blumberg and T. E. Mortensen.

Benjamin Goldman was made head of a committee which will draw up a new constitution and by-laws.

The membership of the Screen Club already has grown to one hundred and fifteen and a rather lengthy list of applicants is waiting for the word which will make them members. The club is considering the purchase of a piano and pool table. It is planned to have a ladies' night in the near future. The working out of the details for an entertainment to be left to a committee headed by Ben Drumm.

C. C. Knapp Heads General Film Exchange.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Charles C. Knapp, for the past two and a half years representative for the local exchange of the General Film, has been made manager of the branch here, succeeding J. T. Van Meter, who, it is thought, will be sent to take over the management of the Winnipeg exchange.

General Western Manager F. C. Alken is responsible for the shift in the local management. Mr. Alken came here from Chicago to announce the change. Mr. Knapp should meet with success in his new capacity since he is well acquainted with moving picture men throughout the territory and has covered practically every foot of ground in the district served by the Minneapolis exchange.

Adolph Eisner, of Chicago, who is in charge of the film department of the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association, has been in Minneapolis for the past few days and his name is being mentioned in connection with a place on the General Film Company's staff.

May Close Sabbath Shows.

Granite Falls, Minn.—This city may be without Sunday moving picture shows. Petitions asking for the Sabbath closing are being circulated.

The New Grand Theater Opens.

Lancaster, Wis.—Taft Brothers report a capacity house at the first program in their new 200-capacity house, the New Grand theater.

Will Build in Dillon.

Dillon, Mont.—This city is to have a new picture house, according to the announcement of W. B. Hartwig, manager of the Pastime theater. The necessary preliminary moves have now been made and construction will start shortly.

Idle Hour Sold.

Eureka, S. D.—A. M. Berg, cashier of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank here, has enlarged his business connections by taking over the Idle Hour theater with F. L. Sutherland.

Gives Bond to Keep Out Children.

Minneapolis, Minn.—James Keough, manager of the Strand theater in Minneapolis, has just returned from a trip to Chicago, where he succeeded in making a solid two weeks' booking of "Where Are My Children?" for the Central control film. The booking has been passed for exhibition purposes in Minneapolis, provided no one under 18 years of age is permitted at any of the showings. The permit issued to Mr. Keough by the board of censors contains a restrictive clause which binds him to an agreement to keep out the youngsters in return for the privilege of showing the film at the Strand. Mr. Keough is elated over his contract for the film.

The New Aster Open.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ruben and Finkelstein have opened a new moving picture house, the Aster, Sixth street and Hennepin avenue. Clara Kimball Young in "The Peak of Life" started the Aster on its career.

Ed. Hinz Back in the Cozy.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ed Hinz again has obtained control of the Cozy theater. Hinz has been a prominent exhibitor here for a number of years.

Theater Changes Hereabouts.

Racine, Wis.—Earl Beilner has resigned as manager of the Strand theater here. No successor has been chosen.

Stevens Point, Wis.—New theaters are under way at Marinette and Stevens Point, Wis. In the former place Ascher Brothers of Chicago are putting up a new structure which they will occupy in September. At Stevens Point W. E. Kingsbury, with other men of that city, whose names are withheld, is interested in a theater being built in the Kingsbury building.

Ipswich, S. D.—John Pesava has bought the Columbia theater here from C. B. Reeves, who is leaving the theatrical business to devote his time to his insurance business. Pesava sold a theater at Brown's Valley, Minn.

Mondovi, Wis. is to be invaded by R. C. Hadden, already a moving picture theater owner at Rhinelander, Wis. Mr. Bennett will retain his Rhinelander property. He was in Minneapolis a few days ago and announced he would use General and Hadden's services in his new venture.

Washburn, Wis.—The seating capacity of the Gem will be doubled, according to an announcement made by W. F. Smith, manager. He has signed a year's contract for all Chaplin releases at the Gem.

Sleepy Eye, Minn.—Mr. D. Walton has disposed of the Gem and is looking for a new location. He formerly managed the Harry Hines in Minneapolis.

Erskine, Minn.—Ness and Chandler have taken over the theater.

Ada, Minn.—New theaters are to be built here by Claude Wensel, and at Faulkton, S. D.

Mandan, N. D.—Rex Sanders has opened the Rex theater.

Threat of Censorship Aids Formation of Motion Picture Protective Association of Louisiana—Meeting Held at Triangle Theater—Ernst Boehringer Chosen President and Pat Brennon Secretary—Finance Committee Appointed.

By George Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Protection in the broadest sense of the word, protection from the fraudulent and irresponsible "fly-by-night exhibitor," and protection from censorship, which arises as a bugaboo at the State Capitol, Baton Rouge, where the legislators are in session, was sought by exhibitors and exchange men alike at two important meetings in New Orleans on Monday of this week.

The first meeting was called to order at eleven o'clock in the Triangle Theater Building, with Manager Ernst Boehringer as host to more than a score of Louisiana exhibitors and a sprinkling of New Orleans exchange men.

After some discussion as to ways and means for fighting the censorship menace, there was formed the Motion Picture Protective Association of Louisiana, with Ernst Boehringer, of the Columbia Amusement Company, president, and Pat Brennon, of the Iberville theater, secretary. The finance committee was elected as follows:

William H. Hannon, Nola Film company; Mr. Jacobs, the Prytania theater; Mr. Marks, the Cadiz theater; R. King

Watchword Is Preparedness.

Rumors that a censorship bill was about to be brought before the legislators in session at Baton Rouge precipitated the meeting in the Triangle theater. Last year there were four separate and distinct censorship measures introduced at the capital. Last year the exhibitors were not organized. Still in all, not one of the four bills were passed. This year the watchword of Louisiana exhibitors is preparedness. They believe they won't be so lucky now, and that anything accomplished to kill the censorship mania must come from organization and co-operative measures.

A regular assessment will be made on exhibitors and exchanges, the amount to be determined by the seriousness of the situation. It was brought out at the meeting that right now that the moving picture men are fighting a rumor rather than an actual situation, the situation becomes acute, it was declared that the Motion Picture Board of Trade stood back of the newly-formed Louisiana association, and would send men and money if necessary.

employees, or by the act of a third person, by theft, fire, or other casualty, will refuse to lease films to the offender until full payment for the damaged films has been made.

Article Five. Failure, refusal or neglect to return films to the exchange promptly, if shown to be for unfair and fraudulent purposes, shall call for the same penalties as in Article Three.

Article Six. Failure, refusal or neglect to carry out his contract with the exchange and ships back the films with a C. O. D. attached, the same penalties shall be invoked.

Article Seven. The association formed by this agreement shall be known as the Associated Film Exchange Managers.

Article Eight. Upon the happening of any of these abuses, due notice shall be given to the secretary of the Association, who shall communicate it to the exchanges a part of the agreement.

Article Nine. A secretary or agent shall be chosen by the association, whose duties are set forth in Article Eight of this agreement.

LITTLE COLONEL IN BIRMINGHAM, GEORGIA.

Henry Walthall Spends a Few Days in Home Town During Confederate Reunion.

By A. M. Beatty, Special Correspondent, 43 Conchill Ave., Atlanta.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Henry B. Walthall, who played the part of the "Little Colonel" in "The Birth of a Nation," was in Birmingham, his home town, this week to spend his vacation mingling with the Confederate veterans of the sixties, who were holding their reunion.

The way the young ladies took on over the "Little Colonel" in the lobby of the Tutwiler Hotel was positively painful to the young chaps in their teens who had to stand by and look on.

Every time Mr. Walthall would start to leave the lobby the girls would make a rush for him and surround him, and clasp their hands and give voice to little feminine exclamations of admiration.

"I just want to shake hands with you, Mr. Walthall," they would say. "I saw you in 'The Birth of a Nation,' and you were—oh, so grand."

Then Mr. Walthall would stop and shake hands all around and make another dive for the revolving doors, but there was nothing doing. It wasn't every day in the year that these southern girls had the opportunity of feasting their eyes upon a real flesh and blood actor who typified in their youthful fancy the bravery and the chivalry of the South, and they would propose to let him get away from them.

Nor were the girls the only ones who showered Mr. Walthall with compliments. The veterans, who had seen "The Birth of a Nation" picture, a doctor slapped him on the back and wrung his hand, and told him with shining eyes how they were taken back to the days of their youth, and to the scene of civil war, when they saw him leap over the breastworks and charge the Yankees with the Stars and Bars wrapped around him. And they told him it made their hair stand on end and made them rise up and yell themselves hoarse when they saw the Ku Klux riding down that white road like a whirlwind, because many of these same veterans had been one of these Ku Klux clans, away back yonder.

New Company Asks Charter.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Southern World Film Company, soon to have offices in Atlanta, filed application for a charter in the superior court Saturday morning. The company will manufacture and lease moving picture films.

The new film concern will be capitalized at $100,000, with privilege to decrease to $50,000. J. W. Hannon, R. O. Holton and D. B. Thornton are the incorporators.

New Exchange Association's Charter

Objects and the Agreement of Eight Local Distributors to Protect Their Mutual Interests.

New Orleans, La.—Eight exchange managers of New Orleans, who banded themselves into the Associated Film Exchange Managers of New Orleans in order to discourage unfair, illegitimate and fraudulent practices prevalent among a certain class of exhibitors have had a second meeting. The eight exchanges represented, and who became charter members of the association were: General, Mutual, V-L-S-E, Paramount, Metro, Kleine-Edison, Pathe and Universal.

These managers were selected to serve: R. King, V-L-S-E, president; K. A. Bugbee, Metro, treasurer; H. F. Wilkes, secretary.

The executive board will consist of the officers mentioned and in addition: H. F. Ragland, Kleine-Edison; Raoul Junet, Pathe; A. G. Shear, Universal-Consolidated; and S. J. Stephens, Mutual.

Dues will be six dollars a month, five of which goes to the association's attorney; and the meetings will be weekly or oftener if necessary. The Association of Film Managers of New Orleans is a revival of the old Film Trade Club, with the exception that the association is patterned for serious matters rather than for social purposes. Extracts from their charter are as follows:

Extracts from the Charter.

WHEREAS, Unfair, illegitimate and fraudulent practices have been and are being indulged in and perpetrated by certain moving picture exhibitors to the detriment of the undersigned, and others engaged in the business of exhibiting moving picture films, which practices are now seriously restraining the trade, and the business of the undersigned, and all legitimate, honest exhibitors of moving pictures;

WHEREAS, The following violations have been reported:

1. The rules of the film exchange that exhibitors must pay for film service either before the delivery of films or not later than the expiration of the current week has been violated.

2. That fraudulent practices have grown up whereby certain exhibitors in this territory, by false pretenses issue and pass worthless checks upon the exchange.

3. Refers to sub-leasing without authority of the exchange.)

4. Refers to destruction of films through faulty projectors, and loss of films by fire, theft or other casualty.)

5. Failure of exhibitors to return the films to the exchange promptly.

6. After booking or leasing film under contract, the exhibitor or lessee sometimes fails, neglects or refuses to accept delivery, in violation of the contract, the exchange or lessor, being in law and in honor bound to hold such films in their respective offices for the exclusive use of the exhibitor or lessee, with whom the exchange or lessor has contracted.

7. Refers to exhibitors who book film at a stipulated price, and ship them back with a C. O. D. ticket attached.)

Now, therefore, because of these abuses, etc., the undersigned by these presents have agreed and stipulated as follows:

The Agreement.

Article One. Failure of an exhibitor to pay up in full for rental from one exchange bars him from doing business with any other exchange a member of the agreement.

Article Two. Passing of a bad check carries the same penalty, until full restitution has been made. In case of a repetition, the exchanges will not lease any film to him for a period of six months commencing from the date of the offense, unless the exchanges mutually agree to waive the provision for good causes shown.

Article Three. Sub-leasing without authority. The same penalties are provided as in Article Two.

Article Four. In case of loss or destruction of films either in whole or in part, and while in the possession of the exhibitor, whether such loss is caused by the act of the exhibitor or his agent, and

Atlanta, Ga.—Miss Sara Kelley, who is employed at the Georgia Chamber of Commerce, left Atlanta Tuesday afternoon for New York, where she will begin work with the Famous Players company. Miss Kelley was offered a position in the moving pictures by Director Frederick Thompson, who was impressed with her beauty. The friends of Miss Kelley in Atlanta expect her to be highly successful as a member of the screen world.

Film Benefit at the Grand.

Atlanta, Ga.—For the benefit work in the slums of Atlanta the Friend Rescue Mission of Decatur street conducted at the Grand theater Sunday an exhibit of moving pictures. A select and appropriate showing of features were donated by the different film exchanges in Atlanta.

There was no admission charge, but a free-will contribution was taken at the door, which will be devoted to this worthy cause.

Fulton county has purchased a motion picture machine for the Battle Hill Tuberculosis Sanitarium, located on the outskirts of Atlanta, and frequent picture shows will be staged in the auditorium to help the officials solve the problem of keeping the patients amused and contented.

Incidentally the Fulton county health department is to use the machine to stage picture shows in the negro sections of the city to teach tuberculosis preventive measures and at the same time to show the negroes what is being done at the sanitarium for the members of their race.

IN KANSAS CITY.

The General's Hospitable Projection Room.

The General Film Company's offices are getting to be a gathering place for exhibitors. Formerly that exchange used its projection room on Tuesdays only. Now, it is in constant operation. P. O. Proctor, manager of that office, is elated over the great showing being made by the Chaplin released. "Police" is not only making a great deal of business in the outside territory, but it recently established a record for the consecutive run of a Chaplin comedy, when the Wonderland booked it for seven consecutive days.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., Gathering With Iron Claw.

Thirty-eight houses in Kansas City are now showing "The Iron Claw," a record which C. S. Edwards, Jr., local manager of the Pathe exchange, feels confident, is the best made in this city on any serial ever presented. Not only is the extraordinary showing made in the city proper, but the out-of-town houses showing this picture are extremely enthusiastic regarding it. Three copies of the serial are booked up sold for six weeks, which indicates the success of the picture.

J. W. Hicks Promoted.

John W. Hicks, for the past two months office assistant of the Kansas City branch of the General Film Company, is now acting as assistant manager of the Oklahoma City quarters. Recent action of the home office put this branch under the control of the Kansas City office, making P. O. Proctor manager of both places. Mr. Hicks, therefore, is the head of the Oklahoma City branch, being under the direction of Mr. Proctor, who is in Kansas City. This is the second advancement for Mr. Hicks in the two months. In March, when H. L. Orear resigned to go to Cincinnati, his place as office assistant was filled by the new Oklahoma City executive, A. T. Brown. For some time past has had charge of the general office in that city, resigned to go to Dallas, Texas.

State Has Its Own Projection Room for Viewing by the Censors—At Topeka and Lost in Depths of Roomy Public Building—Exchanges Wondering Whether State Will Prove Efficient at Re-routing Film After Approval.

Special to Moving Picture World

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Local exchanges have just received advice that the new projection room at Topeka, established by the Kansas State Board of Censorship, is now open and that all pictures will be reviewed by the board. This room was really ready some time ago, but after preparing it, it was found that the law of this state as to the re-routing of moving pictures was of a character as to make useless the special room fitted out. The state, in its letter to the exchanges, announced that it would re-route the pictures, after approving the same, as per direction of the exchanges. This would seem to be some consolation to the companies, but it really is not. Heretofore all pictures have been forwarded to Topeka, where, under the direction of some local exhibitor they have been shown to the board. For this work, the exhibitor took care of the films, and shipped them according to the advice of the board, getting a fee of 50 cents per reel. He was held responsible for the same, and in this way satisfactory arrangements regarding the disposition of the film were always in view. Now, with the state handling the film, and charging no fee for exhibiting, it is a question with the exchanges whether or not they can depend on the state to route their pictures after a review. To this end, and to insure safety, it will practically be necessary to continue the employment of some persons to take care of this matter. Time alone will tell whether or not the route the censors will be of value to the exchanges.

Much complaint has been made regarding the so-called projection room. Expressing it mildly, one Kansas exhibitor has said that "it will take a guide to get to that room and a couple to get back, with an even chance of starving while attempting the feat." Although this exaggerated the position of the quarters, it is true that it is a rather secluded corner of the State edifice. Whether or not the room will be a success remains to be seen.

SCREEN CLUB COMING.

Organization Will Soon Be Complete. Stag Dinner.

Kansas City, Mo.—The much-needed Screen Club of Kansas City will soon become a reality. Under the direction of P. C. Mills, E. R. Pearson and J. H. Gilday, over a hundred local exhibitors recently sent out with a view of getting the opinion of interested parties regarding the organization of such a body. It is the plan of the committee to have a stag dinner at which the organization can be perfected and put on a permanent basis. Present plans contemplate all members of the industry in the body, also representatives of the trade papers. Kansas City has not had anything like this for some time, and it is the belief of those starting the organization that such an association would fill a much-needed want. It is very probable that the 10th of June will see the Screen Club of Kansas City on its feet demanding recognition from the country at large.

Fire at the Tenth Street.

Kansas City, Mo.—Fire which originated from electric wires in the orchestra pit, according to firemen, did extensive damage to the pipe organ of the Tenth Street theater in Topeka Sunday night. Much of the interior wall finishing of the theater was ruined, and a piano, an electric player-piano, the stage and incidental property were burned. The damage was reported at $2,000 to the building and $1,000 to the contents. The building was owned by the Standard Amusement Company of this city, which also operates the Willits World theater.

F. T. Scott Back Once More.

Kansas City, Mo.—F. T. Scott, manager of the Apollo theater, 327 Troost avenue, is back at work after an absence of over a month, during which time he was laid up. The first night he returned was the occasion of the first suburban showing of the Chaplin comedy, "Carmen," and so hard did Mr. Scott labor handling the great crowd that he was laid up for an additional period. However, a week's rest-up, spent in the adjoining Clay county, put him back in shape, and he is now on the job each night. The Apollo will soon get into its Open-Air theater, at Thirty-first and Troost avenue. The place, which has a seating capacity of 2,000, is now undergoing a siege of cleaning and repairing, and as soon as the weather permits, it will be thrown open.

A Youthful Exhibitor.

Kansas City, Mo.—The local film industry claims the honor of having in its midst one of the youngest, if not the youngest exchange manager in the United States. This youthful exhibitor is A. A. Chatkin, local executive of the United Film Service. Although but 22 years old, Mr. Chatkin is a veteran at the game, having worked at it for the past seven years. He started in at Buffalo, N. Y., as a shipping clerk gradually working upward past the position as booker, traveler, etc., to that of manager of an office, which place he has been filling since last September. During his tenure here the business has made an increase of two hundred per cent, which is a mighty fair little average for a twenty-two-year-old youth to maintain.

A. A. Chatkin.

George Bowles Feels Proud.

Kansas City, Mo.—George Bowles, publicity man of the Universal Film & Supply Company, is feeling very elated as the result of recent inquiries regarding the local "Universal Weekly," of which he is not only the editor-in-chief, copy-reader, reporter and office boy, but also the originator.

Dale Theater Sold.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Dale theater, 24th and Troost Ave., Kansas City, has been sold by R. W. Cropper to William Richardson. This is one of the smallest houses in Kansas City and has had a rather varied career. In conjunction with the theater, a large air dome is put in use in the warmer weather.

Ted L. Morse Road Man for World Film.

Kansas City—A new traveler with the World Film out of the Kansas City branch is Ted L. Morse, who for some time past has been with the General. Mr. Morse gets the position left vacant by the advancement of J. A. Stout, now connected with the Salt Lake City office of the World Film. Richard Robertson, local manager, although regretting to part with Mr. Stout, is exceedingly pleased with the newest member of his force, and predicts that some records along the line of selling films be made.

New Word Film Deal

S. A. Lynch Enterprises Take Over World Film Corporation in Eleven Southern States—Territory Extends from Richmond, Va., to El Paso, Texas—R. H. Logan, Recently of the Dallas Office of Paramount, Is Manager.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Special Correspondent, 618 Comal St., Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—There was quite a little stir in film circles in Dallas during the week of May 15-20 when it was announced that the S. A. Lynch Enterprises had taken over the World Film Corporation in the eleven Southern states. This will give them the territory from Richmond, Va., to El Paso, Tex., and from the Kansas line to the Gulf, with offices at Atlanta, Ga., New Orleans, La., and Dallas, Tex., which will be known as the Southern World Film Corporation. R. H. Logan, recently manager of the Dallas Paramount office, was put in charge, succeeding Max Graff. The Paramount office at Dallas is noted for the excellent manner in which it is run, and in which Mr. Logan takes much pride, and he says he expects to have the World office running it a close second within the 30 to 40 days, and will make the World Productions just as much in demand in this territory.

R. W. Lynch, of Asheville, N. C., will succeed Mr. Logan as manager of the Paramount offices at Dallas.

Tent Shows Affect Picture Show Business.

Dallas, Texas.—An overflow of tent shows throughout west Texas has very materially affected the picture show business. It seems to have been one thing after another to kill the business for the last six weeks. Recently there have been more revivals, protracted meetings and tent shows than were ever known in that section of the state. But exhibitors say they had rather have 'em in a bunch than have 'em strung out all summer.

San Antonio Has Unique Park.

San Antonio, Texas.—Something new in the way of a summer amusement is being tried out at San Antonio, and it bids fair to be good. Brox Brothers, owners of the Petticiere theater at San Antonio, have opened a different kind of amusement attraction. It is a park located down town from which it derives its name—"Denton Park." An admission of 10 cents is charged, which entitles the patron to see two separate shows which are going on all the time. At one you see the first-class features, and at the other a mixed program. There are some 200 refreshment tables where soft drinks are served, and from which you can watch and enjoy the pictures. A dancing pavilion is furnished for the dancers, and a 20-piece band furnishes the music. There are also several other light amusements.

This park is the first of its kind to be opened in San Antonio, and it is being watched with interest, for if it goes well there will probably be several others opened owing to the fact that the warm season will soon be upon the residents of the city, and outdoor amusements have the preference.

Roof Garden at San Antonio.

San Antonio, Texas.—The Soledad Roof Garden was opened at San Antonio May 22 with pictures and dancing by Jack Burke. This garden was the first of the year under the management of W. J. Lytle. Mr. Burke, the present manager, has been manager of the Grand Opera House at San Antonio for years.

Blue Bird Theater in Oak Cliff.

Dallas, Texas.—Oak Cliff, a suburb of Dallas, boasts of one of the prettiest houses. It is known as the Blue Bird theater, and is located on Tyler street near Jefferson. The house will seat 600. The front is of lost concrete work, which makes a very handsome appearance. An $8,000 Fotoplayer, a Minusa Gold Fibre screen, two 1916 Motiographs and one transferer have been installed. B. D. Malone is the manager of the house.

Golden Oaks, Dallas, Changes Management.

Dallas, Texas.—The Golden Oaks theater, recently built in Dallas, has changed management, B. D. Malone having succeeded J. Copley. The front of the theater has been remodeled as well as an $8,000 Fotoplayer being installed.

Now a Monthly Journal.

Dallas, Tex.—The Motion Picture Journal, published in Dallas, and which is of great interest to film men all over the South, has decided in future to issue monthly journals instead of weekly, as it has been doing since November, 1915. Previous to that time it was a weekly. C. A. Walker, its able editor, is one of the strong individuals in the Southwest.

Plues Goes to Little Rock.

Dallas, Texas.—A. W. Plues of Dallas has gone to Little Rock to open an office for the Exclusive Feature Film. He will handle five-reelers and other subjects. Mr. Plues recently handled Kalem's Social Pirates.

Macbeth Resigns.

Dallas, Texas.—W. M. Macbeth, formerly secretary and treasurer of the Western Automatic Music Company, has resigned and is now with the United Music Company, handling Fotoplayers.

Dallas Screen Show.

Dallas, Texas.—The Dallas Screen Club is planning big things. They intend to give a monster film and vaudeville show at the Majestic June 4.

Visitors to Dallas.

San Angelo, Texas.—The Commissioners have purchased a motion picture machine and will install same at the State Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Carlsbad to entertain and amuse the inmates.

Fort Worth, Tex.—R. A. Healy of the Realty theater was a recent visitor to Dallas.

Sherman, Tex.—Jim B. Wilson of the Gem and Jewel visited Dallas week of May 15-20.

Deer, La.—Fred Johnson was a visitor to Dallas recently and purchased a 1916 Motiograph from the H. K. Barnett Film & Supply Company.

Denison, Tex.—Frank Mamola of the Quaker visited Dallas recently.

Shulps, Tex.—J. C. Barnes of the New Mission theater was in Dallas week of May 15-20, making some changes in his bookings and looking over several new series propositions.

Wolfe City, Texas.—A. W. (Jack) Lilly, who recently purchased the Sunset and Busby theaters, was in Dallas May 14 arranging bookings for these houses. Mr. Lilly is one of the oldest exhibitors in the state, owning both the Hippodrome and Queen at Commerce, Texas.

Enid, Okla.—M. A. Blackburn opened up his new show May 1.

Uvalde, Texas.—C. W. Holley, who runs the Electric Palace Airdome, was a recent visitor in Dallas.

Bonham, Texas.—Ben Halsei of the Queen was in Dallas recently and booked "Eternal City" for a special showing.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

Field Carmichael Promoted.

DENVER, COLO.—One of Denver's old-exchange managers in point of service and one of the best liked left this city last week when Field Carmichael of the Fox company went to Los Angeles to take charge of the office of the same film concern there. The transfer is a big advancement for Carmichael and this is the only consolation his many friends among the exhibitors and exchange men here have in his going.

W. S. Rand of Triangle and other of his friends, among them S. L. Baxter, owner of the Isis theater, and their wives accompanied Carmichael and his wife to the train, and as the couple boarded the choicest they were showered with rice much after the fashion of newlyweds. The porters and other train attaches were liberally "tipped" and instructed to take good care of the couple, and the bridegroom. Although the Carmichaels have been married seven years they were probably more embarrassed than they were on their wedding day and they undoubtedly had much explaining to do on their trip to the West Coast.

Albert W. Eden Succeeds Carmichael.

Albert W. Eden, former road man for the Fox Film, has been named successor to Carmichael in the Denver territory. He arrived here several days before the departure of Carmichael and was made acquainted with local conditions by the retiring manager. Harry Lenhardt, western manager, came to Denver direct from New York to oversee the change. He will remain in the city for a week.

H. B. Fish to Manage United Exchange.

Another change in the management of a Denver film exchange was announced this week. H. Bradley Fish, former exhibitor and manager of the United Exchange, has been named manager of the United Film Service. He succeeds I. D. Purdy, who has become associated with the Universal Film company as a special representative.

Changes at Universal Office.

W. P. Morgan, the new manager of the Universal Film exchange in Denver, announced a number of changes in his office force this week. Harry Quinn, formerly with the Universal at Salt Lake, has been made the chief booker in the Denver office with Barney Ross, later of the Triangle, as his assistant. Art Waters has been placed in charge of the shipping room.

In addition to these changes L. D. Purdy, former manager of the United, has been engaged to act as special traveling representative in the Denver and Salt Lake territories.

L. Goldstein Opens Unicorn Office.

The new Unicorn exchange has been opened and is now doing business under the management of Louis Goldstein, former manager of the Universal here. Irving Ehrensmat, has been made booking clerk and Sam Weitz is in charge of the shipping department.

Pending the time that the Unicorn service is ready to open its San Francisco office Carl Stern will work on the road for Unicorn out of the Denver office. Stern was formerly manager of the Bluebird exchange here. He will be in charge of the Frisco office for Unicorn when it is opened.

Brief Notes.

Denver, Colo.—Frank Frewen has sold the Seventeenth Avenue theater to A. B. Barnard, who will continue to operate it as a moving picture house.

Castle Rock, Colo.—Hackett Brothers of Castle Rock have started work on a new moving picture theater. They expect to open July 1.

Colorado Springs, Colo.—The Pike theater at Colorado Springs will be enlarged this summer to accommodate 1,200 people.

IN CALIFORNIA.

To Open Airdome.

Calistoga, Calif.—H. D. Hubbard, of Hubbard's photo play house, will open a large airdome on June 14th with "Carmen" featuring Geraldine Farrar. Spanish settings will be used. The orchestra will furnish music and the opening will be made a noteworthy event.

Here and There in San Francisco.

A fire broke out one afternoon recently in the operating room of the Elite theater on Market street, but the damage was confined to the film, "The Naked Truth."

Edward H. Kemp has disposed of a Motograph traveling outfit to be taken to Camp Curry in the Yosemite valley for the summer season.

Porter & Seymour, who are opening a moving picture theater at Twenty-eighth and Church streets, have installed two simplex machines and a Wagner converter purchased from the Breck Photo Play Supply Company.

T. L. Haynes, of the Atlas Educational Film, is enjoying a vacation in the San Joaquin Valley and is close looking out for business while away.

The Tivoli theater has booked the first release of the Juvenile Film Company, controlled here by the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc.

The Washington Square theater in the North Beach district has gone over to the big feature policy and has advanced its price of admission to 10 cents.

O. V. Tragarshoff, of the Union Film & Supply Co., is making a business trip to Los Angeles.

G. A. Metcalfe has shipped a Powers Cameragraph No. 6-A to J. V. Houston, who conducts a chain of theaters around Klamath Falls, Ore.

The Palmer theater, at Twenty-fourth and Castro streets, has been purchased by Ford & Myers, who also conduct the Acme.

Northern California Items.

Healdsburg, Calif.—A moving picture house to cost about $50,000 is to be erected here by Charles E. Naylor.

Stockton, Calif.—A Caille electrically operated ticket selling machine has been installed at the Colonial theater.

Porterville, Calif.—A pipe organ costing about $5,000 is to be installed in the new Monache theater.

Huge San Francisco House

Newly Incorporated Market Street Realty Company to Build a Theater with 3,240 Seating Capacity and at an Expense of Almost Two Million Dollars—Company has Bought Other Houses.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif.—The Market Street Realty Company, recently incorporated with a capital stock of $3,000,000 by Mark L. Gerstle, Leo J. Clayburgh, J. J. Jacob, Charles Schlesinger, Herbert Rothschild, J. M. Rothschild and Albert Dernham is having plans completed for a moving picture house at Fourth and Market streets to have seating capacity of 3,240 and to be the very finest in the entire country. This theater will represent an investment of $1,750,000, and construction work will be commenced as soon as plans can be assembled. This company has just purchased the Portola theater and the Market Street theater, a little further up Market street, more popularly known as "The House of Movies," a house conducted for years under the management of Hallahan & Getz. The purchase price of these two houses is approximately $225,000, making the deal one of the largest in amusement circles in years.

These important transactions, coupled with the erection of the huge new house, places the Market Street Realty Company in a commanding position in the downtown section and all of its affairs will be under the direct management of Eugene H. Roth, who has made such a successful record in the Portola theater. The noticeable improvement in the Market Street theater has been the installation of a fine orchestra of eleven pieces and other changes will be made from time to time. The program is being selected from the V-L-S-E, Triangle and Mutual releases, and all new Chaplin pictures will be shown. When the new theater is in operation Mr. Roth will have control of three houses, with a combined seating capacity of about 5,600, and will thus be in a position to secure a pick of programs enjoyed by but few in the business.

ACTORS' FUND SCREEN BALL. Exhibitors' Entertainment a Delightful Event—Film Stars Present.

San Francisco, Calif.—The entertainment and ball for the raising of funds for the Actors' Home was held on the evening of May 13th in the Exposition Auditorium and was a delightful event, although attendance was disappointing. Mark M. Leichter, who has devoted much of his time of late to arrangements for this event, and who has virtually made it the financial end of the fair, is still uncertain in regard to the total receipts as exhibitors having tickets for sale have not rendered a full accounting. While several of the houses were in attendance the crowd was lighter than was expected. The date set was rather late, as the vacation season is now setting in, and in addition the exhibitors were spending so much of their time in the censorship fight that they did not give the benefit as much attention as they would have under ordinary circumstances.

Mr. M. M. Leichter, Jr., chairman of the executive committee, was unable to be on hand, but sent a personal representative in Supervisor Charles A. Nelson, who led the grand march with Miss Anna King, "The Paramount Girl." Miss Bosworth was present from Los Angeles and Sessue Hayakawa was also in attendance. Preceding the dancing there was a concert by the Municipal Band, some songs by Bertha D'Aubigny, the "Poppy Ballet," by Abbie Tilsley, songs by Monte Austin and Miss Mabel Brookover, a drill by the California Guard and the introduction of moving picture stars by Sid Grauman. Many prizes were distributed, including annual passes from the Pacific Coast Baseball League, the Imperial theater, the Empress theater and the Tivoli theater.

In addition to Mayor James Rolph, Jr., those who served on the executive committee were Morris Meyerfeld, Sid Grauman, Alex A. Beyfuss, J. A. Partington, Claude Langley, Eugene Roth, Sam Harris, Joseph Levin, Ralph Pincus, M. J. Getz, Geo. David, Homer Curran, J. J. Cluxton, Sam Levin, Sam Gordon, Thos. O'Day, N. K. Nerzow, Mark A. Laaky, S. Oppenheimer, William J. Citron, Ralph Clark, Louis Reichert, R. Quive, H. H. Hicks, K. K. Stout, N. L. Markowitz, H. V. Oviatt, R. S. Simpson, H. W. Stubbins and Sam Loverich. The finance committee consisted of Herman Wobber, chairman, Mark M. Leichter, Irving Ackerman and Louis R. Levy.

Lincoln Theater Changes Hands.

San Francisco, Calif.—Sam Gordon has disposed of the Lincoln theater, 335 Sixth avenue, to Atkisson & Godfrey, who have taken possession of the house. Mr. Atkisson formerly conducted the Majestic at Concord, Calif., while Mr. Godfrey has the Grand at Vacaville, Calif. Both are very well and favorably known in the moving picture field, having been in the business for several years.

Exchange Manager on Eastern Trip.

San Francisco, Calif.—Herman Wobber, who has charge of the Progressive company's interests, with headquarters here, left for New York last night. The California Fund ball, to be absent for five or six weeks.

Sol Lesser Home Again.

San Francisco, Calif.—Sol L. Lesser, head of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., and manager of the Star Distributors, Inc., has returned from a stay of several months in New York. He recently purchased the rights in this state to "Where Are My Children?" and is preparing an active campaign on this feature, with some of the finest lobby displays ever seen here.

Metro District Manager Covering Territory.

San Francisco, Calif.—Mr. J. Unger, manager of the far Western exchanges of the Metro, with headquarters here, left recently for the Northwest and will visit all of the branch exchanges in this territory before returning. The relocation of this concern have proved a great success in the magnificent new Rialto theater here and much new business is coming in as a result.

California-Made Carbons Shipped East.

San Francisco, Calif.—The fact that California-made carbons are commencing to become a factor in the supply business is indicated by the fact that G. A. Metcalfe has shipped several in small quantities to points in the Middle West from the plant at Richmond, a suburb of San Francisco. The local plant is not a large one, but is being operated night and day.

Mike Rosenberg Returns to Coast.

San Francisco, Calif.—Mike Rosenberg, who has been conducting a film business at Washington, D. C., during the past year, has turned over his eastern office to Leon Netter, formerly with the All Star Feature Distributors of this city, and was a recent visitor here on his way to Seattle, his former home.

Censor Meets Exhibitor

Chairman of Censor Board Attends Meeting of Exhibitors—Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association Luncheon Scene of Lively Debate—Question of Standards and Instructions to Viewers Discussed.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Ore., Special Correspondent.

PORTLAND, Oregon.—F. T. Richards, recently appointed chairman of the censor board, was the guest of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association at its luncheon May 18. Mr. Richards' purpose in attending the exhibitors' meeting was to explain what he considered the co-operative attitude of the censor board towards the exhibitors and to state the manner in which he intended to conduct censorship of motion pictures during his term as chairman. His revelations of his views on censorship and what he considered co-operation greatly surprised the exhibitors present, but the meeting was nevertheless pleasantly concluded.

Before the questioning commenced Mr. Richards stated his plan of censorship was to co-operate with the exhibitors to get cleaner pictures. He stated it would be his policy to take from the theaters any so-called legislative powers which they now have by adopting a basis from which to work. He stated he thought his plan would do away with the complaint that some scenes were too tame, or in one theater that were barred in another. The exhibitors gathered from his remarks that this would be accomplished by means of instructions to the viewers.

This was the surprisingly inconsistent part of Mr. Richards' revelations. The exhibitors complained that all recent unpleasantness with the board was due to the fact that certain viewers state they were acting under instructions in cutting gambling and fight scenes. Mr. Richards denied such instructions had ever been given and the film men settled back in their seats with a more serene feeling. But when cross-questioned he admitted that he had on his desk a list of censorship standards and instructions to viewers which included the two complained of by exhibitors and may more than once. Instructions were soon to be put to the board for adoption and that thereafter they should govern the viewers' actions. Then the serene feeling left the exhibitors as he asked how, in the case of those that the two alleged instructions relating to gambling and fight scenes had already caused so much complaint, he could expect his list of added instructions and standards would make the situation more pleasant. Mr. Richards failed to give a coherent reply. He admitted when questioned that a person possessing the qualifications of a juror would not necessarily make a good moving picture censor. He stated that he thought if a federal censorship bill were passed it would do away with local censorship and made the assertion that the majority of the people in Portland favored censorship.

After the meeting closed Mr. Richards journeyed to the City Hall still feeling that his plan of giving written instructions to viewers would make the situation censorship sky notwithstanding the forecast at the meeting that such a plan would have the opposite effect.

Out of town visitors at the luncheon were L. M. Wilson, road manager for General Roy Madden, road manager for Mutual, and George Bligh, of Salem, Oregon.

Best Month's Business This Year.

Portland, Oregon.—This statement was made by Edwin James of the Majestic and crowded houses have evidenced the fact that the straitened 15-cent picture houses in Portland have been holding their own notwithstanding the fact that two combination vaudeville and picture houses opened at 10 and 15 cents. The new picture theater district within the past few months. The Sunset closed recently, the reason, it is said on Film

Row, was that the high rent made the venture unprofitable, although the house could attract business.

New House for Butte.

Seattle, Wash.—Jensen and Von Herberg, of the Greater Theaters Company, operating the Coliseum and other theaters here and the Columbia in Portland, have purchased one of the prominent corner lots in Butte, Montana, and will immediately begin the construction of a $200,000 theater. The building will be modeled after the Liberty and will have a seating capacity of 1,600, making it a third larger than any theater now in Butte. It is expected to have the house completed in October.

Exchanges Support Organization.

Portland, Oregon.—The Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association is receiving hearty support from exchanges and manufacturers. Recent letters received by the officers of the association indicate that exchanges in Seattle as well as Portland are with the local men and that eastern and California manufacturers have voiced a desire to co-operate with them.

From Southern Oregon.

Portland, Oregon.—Road men returning from the southern part of the state report that the picture business there at a standstill. In Roseburg, where a price war has been waged for some time, all the houses have gone to 10 cents, the former price, the attempt to raise to 15 cents having been unsuccessful.

At Eugene the Rex and Savoy have entered into an agreement with the Eugene theater whereby neither of the first named houses will show vaudeville, if the Eugene will not show pictures. Except for this and one or two other instances the exhibitors in the towns south of Portland have no working agreement among themselves and the keen competition has resulted in a standstill of business.

Heard on Portland's Film Row.

F. M. Simonton, Standard Feature Film Company, will handle E. & R. Jungle films in this territory. Francis J. Hawkins came from California to close the contract.

W. A. Van Sooy, cameraman for Pathe, recently returned from Boise, Idaho, where he photographed the Arrow Rock dam. The new film, "The Van Sooy," reports a new air-dome being constructed at Boise.

R. C. Bacon has sold the Columbia theater at Clatskanie, Oregon, to C. L. Conyers, who runs the People's at the same place.

C. H. Code returned to Portland recently after a successful trip through Oregon, Washington and Idaho booking "E. M. George."

M. L. Loy, formerly booker for Metro, will handle publicity for the Portland Amusement Company.

A. A. Coby, formerly operator at the American, Dayton, Way, has opened the Star at Condon, Oregon.

The Pastime at The Dalles, Oregon, has closed. An automobile contest was the last straw, reports say.

A. Mosler has secured the Mutual theater, Portland, from C. E. Boone, who will open the theater at Gearhart-by-the-Sea.

Emress Conlon, former manager of the Empress, Portland, has gone to Spokane as manager of the Ackerman & Harris house there.

SPOKANE'S MIDNIGHT SHOW.

Manager Ralph Ruffner Again Comes to the Front with Original Stunt.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—"Stay up late and be a devil in the yard" was the slogan used by Manager Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty theater in inviting the Spokane moving picture public to attend the first of his midnight matinees. It opened at 11 p. m. Thursday, May 18, with an attendance of more than 1,100 fans in their seats and scores were turned away. The matinee closed in time for all persons to catch the "owl cars" (the last cars which leave the city at 12:30 a. m.) for home. Users were nightshirts and nightcaps. He will run the matinees Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights of each week. The production for the initial of these night picture shows was "The White of Life" and all patrons were provided with confetti, noise making articles, rattles and serpentine.

Al Onkin Promoted.

Spokane, Wash.—Al Onkin, who recently opened the Strand theater, Spokane, as the Spokane home of the Pacific photo-ville circuit and the home of the Bluebird films here has been promoted to manager of the Seattle house of the company. Additionally that he will be booking manager for the circuit which runs pictures as well as vaudeville acts.

Geo. Blakeslee Succeeds Al Onkin.

George Blakeslee, who was for ten years manager of the former Empress theater and later the Hippodrome theater, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Onkin as manager of the Strand. The appointment is effective at once. Mr. Onkin reports that Hobart Bosworth in "The Great Train Robbery" was a good drawing card for the theater.

Larger Pathe Quarters.

P. L. Carroll, manager of the Pathe exchange in Spokane, has arranged for larger quarters at 10 N. Washington street, Spokane, and moving his offices there where a vault will be built in which to keep films. He reports the change was necessitated by increased business.

Nelson-Foster Marriage.

Spokane, Wash.—J. F. Nelson, assistant manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company exchange in Spokane, was married recently to Mrs. Estelle Foster of the Sillman hotel and congratulations continue to flood his desk as well as various appropriate cards.

SALT LAKE NEWS LETTER.

By H. W. Pickering, Special Correspondent, Address Deseret News, Salt Lake City.

H. E. Ellison Becomes Secretary of Swanson Circuit.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—Following close on the announcement of the change in management of the Swanson theaters in Salt Lake—the American, Rex and Liberty—came the further announcement from W. H. Swanson that Homer E. Ellison would become secretary of the Swanson circuit of theaters with general supervision over the western enterprises of that concern.

Mr. Ellison came to Salt Lake from Denver to manage the Paramount-Empress theater when that house was opened last February. He had been manager of the Princess theater in Denver for some time. He is now the largest and most important ever held by him. He entered upon his work last Wednesday.

Prominent People Praise Picture.

WINNIPEG, MAN.—No other film ever shown in Winnipeg has been the means of bringing forward so distinguished a body of sponsors, both local and otherwise, as the ten-reel production, "Britain Prepared," made under the supervision of the British Government, and shown for an entire week at the Walker theater, at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.

On the opening night Sir Douglas Cameron, Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, and Hon. T. C. Norris, Premier of the province, delivered addresses at the theater in connection with the showing of the film, praising the pictures and sounding a call for recruits, to a house filled to capacity. On Tuesday evening Mayor Waugh took the platform, while the speaker on the following night was Chief Justice Mathers.

Manitoba's Censor Representative.

Winnipeg, Man.—The name of the man chosen to represent Manitoba on the new inter-provincial censor board has finally been announced. J. W. Horn, at present a member of the Winnipeg city board, will continue to perform the censorial duties on the new board, which takes over the administration of these matters on June 1.

New Policy at Orpheum.

Vancouver, B. C.—Manager James Pilling of the Orpheum theater, who has been running two five-reel features per week, will hereafter use only one picture of this length per week, taking a Mutual Masterpicture for the first three evenings. For the latter half he will use programs of shorter Mutual subjects. The Mutual exchange, which has heretofore brought in only one long feature per week, will after June 26 have two each week. Heavy bookings are reported on Chaplin's "The Floorwalker."

To Enlarge Winnipeg's Lyceum.

Winnipeg, Man.—Although the Lyceum already ranks as the largest moving picture theater in Winnipeg, it has been decided to make alterations which will give this house approximately double the seating capacity of any other. J. D. Atchison, architect, is now preparing plans for a large addition. The house will be carried through to Smith street, and the exits will all be on that side, while the Portage avenue side will be used for the entrance only. Work will be started almost immediately, and rushed to completion.

S. B. Taube Thinking of Old Friends.

Vancouver, B. C.—The World man recently received a letter from S. B. Taube, formerly in charge of the Universal office here, and now co-manager of the Montreal headquarters of the big U. Mr. Taube wished to be remembered to all British Columbia friends, and says the boy is growing fast.

Local Briefs.

Victoria, B. C.—Many improvements have been made in the Royal Victoria theater since it was taken over on May 1 by the Dominion Theater Company, and the interior of this magnificent house now presents a much finer appearance than formerly.

Calgary, Alberta.—A patriotic entertainment was given recently at the Princess theater here, in aid of the band of the 82nd Battalion and the Veterans' Club.

Exhibitors' Protective Association Petitions for Relief from Rule Governing Apprentices Term of Service for Operators — Want War Tax on Children's Tickets Eliminated—Sale of Tax Tickets.

By W. M. Gladish, Special Correspondent, 1263 Gerrard St. E. Toronto, Can.

TORONTO, Ontario.—Because of many enlistments of moving picture operators in Ontario, exhibitors are finding it difficult to maintain a complete staff of theater employees. So a deputation representing the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario waited on R. C. Newman of the moving picture branch of the provincial treasurer's department, Toronto, on Monday, May 22d, to ask for a modification of the regulations governing the registration of operators.

Ask Change in Operators' License Rule.

The exhibitors asked for a change in the rule which requires an operator to serve as an apprentice for one year before he is licensed by the department. The statement was made that the number of qualified operators and graduating apprentices at the present time is not sufficient for the needs of all theaters and that if more men are so secured in the near future some theaters may have to close. Officers of the exhibitors' association said that a number of returned soldiers had been trained to work as operators, but that they were unable to start their duties because they had not been apprentices for a year.

Mr. Newman promised to lay the matter before provincial Treasurer McGarry for immediate consideration.

Ask No Tax on Children's Tickets.

The same deputation also waited upon Mr. White, solicitor of the Ontario treasury department, to suggest that the amusement tax on children's tickets to moving picture theaters be eliminated. The exhibitors felt that the war tax on children's tickets was undoubtedly keeping many youngsters from the shows and that the difference in revenue to the picture houses out of all proportion to the war tax which would accrue from the sale of children's admission tickets. This matter will also be considered by the government, the delegation was told.

Want Tax Tickets Sold Through Exhibitors.

The exhibitors also recommended that the war tax tickets be sold to the various houses through exchanges or through authorized moving picture men of each center, rather than by division court clerks and other officials as proposed. Nearly all exchanges are already selling war tax coupons in wholesale quantities, but the manner of distribution in outside cities has not yet been definitely settled. This is another subject which the government can deal and the authorities will probably do so, it was announced by Mr. White.

LEON BRICK WILL RUN REGENT. Company's Officers Announced—Interesting Notes About Construction.

Toronto, Ontario.—Further details in connection with the opening of the new Regent theater, Toronto, have been made public. The president of the company which will operate the house, stands August S. J. Ruddy, the wealthy head of a local bill-posting firm, and the vice president is J. P. Bickell, of Toronto, a broker. Included on the board of directors are W. J. Sheppard, a director of the Royal Bank of Canada; James Tudhope and N. L. Nathanson.

Leon Brick, formerly manager of the Garden theater, Toronto, and a resident of Buffalo, has been mentioned as the probable manager of the new picture house, which is rapidly nearing completion.

The work of designing the interior of the theater was entrusted to Thomas W. Lamb, architect, whose features of construction will be a mezzanine floor, on which will be found lounge rooms for both men and women, and there will be only one balcony, which will have a color gradient. It is the aim to give the entire house a clublike appearance. An unusual feature for a Toronto theater will be found in a large pipe organ for use in addition to a carefully chosen symphony orchestra. The Regent will seat 1,600 people.

W. F. Barrett Is Mutual Road Man.

Toronto, Ontario.—Announcement is made here that W. F. Barrett, formerly Winnipeg manager for the Universal, has been appointed special traveling representative in Canada for the Mutual Film. He will cover the whole of the Dominion.

P. E. Doyle Joins V-L-S-E.

Patrick E. Doyle, formerly with the Fox branch at Toronto, has joined the staff of the V-L-S-E in Montreal, the office of which has been moved from No. 204 to 138 St. Catherine street west. Larger premises have been obtained at the latter address.

W. H. Davidson Back from Capital.

W. H. Davidson, special representative of the Canadian Universal, recently returned to Toronto from Ottawa. He reports that three Ottawa theaters, the National, Casino and Regent, are returning to the program style of film entertainment and that the Universal brand would be seen at each house. The moving picture business in Canada's capital is in fine shape, he found.

Redesigning Regent Theater.

Toronto, Ontario.—Announcement is made that Thomas W. Lamb of New York has been engaged to design the front and interior of the new Regent theater, Toronto, formerly the Majestic, home of melodrama. Mr. Lamb was the designer of the Rialto, New York, and the Orpheum and Fenway theaters, Boston. A feature of the new fittings will be the club-like quarters on the mezzanine floor for both men and women. The theater will have a large pipe organ—something new for Toronto. The house, when reconstructed with only one balcony instead of the old two, will seat 1,600 people. It is planned to open the theater on August 5 next.

Some Interesting Notes.

Toronto, Ontario.—Roadmen working out from Toronto have had several unique experiences lately. Mr. J. Buck of the Universal traveling staff, dropped off at Rodney and West Lorne, Ontario, the other day to find that the small local theater in each place had not been visited by a film representative for five years. Both places are villages located near Lindsay, Ontario.

A representative of the Universal company has ascertained that the Home theater, Sandwich, Ontario, has been taken over by Mr. J. White, sheriff of the town. The house has a seating accommodation of 1,000 people. When the sheriff as the manager of the theater, it is expected that the Home will become a popular house.

The Ball Brothers, who have been conducting the Royal theater at Perth, Ontario, for a long time, have opened a new house in Lanark, Ontario, which they have called the "Lanark Royal."

The pawnbroker in vain awaits the return of Jabba, and later seeks the advice of his friend Cohen. Cohen's daughter, Ethel, is greatly admired by Robin, an insurance agent who has been seeking to sell a policy to the old pawnbroker. After being continually chased away from the house by Cohen, Robin takes the matter

In his own hands by eloping with Ethel and by surreptitiously making out a fire insurance policy on the spot. When the first pawnbroker arrives at Cohen's store he is surprised to find Pokes inside again pawing over the goods. When the second pawnbroker running inside tells Cohen of the scheme, and they decide to spring a trap on Jabbs when he enters, Cohen demands that Jabbs show him money with which to purchase the violin, and the moment he displays the roll of "long green" both pawnbrokers try to overpower him. Pokes and Ethel are left alone. Cohen is wringing his hands and bemoaning his hard lot, when Ethel and Robin appear and tell of their marriage. When the old man sees the policy his tears are turned to smiles, and he quickly forgives the elopers and decides that after all, fire insurance is not a bad idea.

THE SCHEMERS (June 11).—Plump was a young man. His thoughts were of love, of life of his spring, for it was to bring him a fortune. Hunt, his rival, thought otherwise. Else the object of their affections, was undecided, and so the story opens.

First she bestowed her favors on Plump, then on Hunt. The spring on Plump's face is known to possess valuable mineral qualities and a larger offer is made to Plump to sell. He leaves for the city to escort the financier to his property. When the old man sees Hunt persuades the fickle Elsie to marry him.

Accompanied by his pretty stenographer, the promoter arrives at the home of Plump, who learns of his rival's wedding. However, the blow is softened by the little stenographer's sympathy. Plump is determined to ruin Hunt. Hunt plans to ruin the spring and runs off to it. Arrived at the spring, Plump is on the point of accepting the offer, when the geographer discovers that it is an oil well and wishes to Plump to double his price. This he does, and once more virtue triumphs over villainy.

THE LAND LUBBERS (June 2).—Piaid Jabbs, a retired sea captain, being accustomed to the motion of his ship to lull him to sleep, finds it impossible to rest ashore. He therefore designs a special structure which he has built into his house and which operated by levers gives the same effect as the motion of a ship at sea. When he goes to bed in his sleep in the rocking room with the lever at the point which operates the effect of a calm sea, Pokes, the neighbor, comes in and while making love to Ethel, the Captain's daughter, accidentally releases the lever which controls the effect of the hurricane motion. He went pitching and tossing about the house until Captain Jabbs to be hurled out of his bunk and in a rage he discharges Pokes.

Later, Pokes is induced to attend a correspondence school for burglars and is subjected to the various tests for courage and endurance which are called for by the curriculum of the school. Having successfully passed these tests, two of the hand lead Pokes out for some practical instruction in the art of entering and robbing houses. Pokes is routed from the first house which he attempts to burglarize, and the conspirators then lead him to the home of Capt. Jabbs for a second lesson. Pokes learns that the house which he is to rob is the home of his sweetheart, he tries to induce the conspirators to select another house and failing in this, he flatters refuses to follow their orders. However, terrified by their threats of punishment, he decides to follow the instructions. Pokes musters sufficient courage to climb in through the window of the house leading to the room where the conspirators are. The other two conspirators not trusting Pokes, decide to follow him and enter the room after him.

While in the room in which the levers are located, Capt. Jabbs is entertaining some friends and for their benefit decides to demonstrate the wonderful possibilities of the rocking room. Pokes and the burglars are dismayed at the violent motion of the room when the Captain demonstrates the machine. When the excitement reaches the professor's boy to whom the Captain is demonstrating the levers accidentally breaks the machinery causing the machinery controlling the room to run amuck and Pokes and his fellow villains are left to their fate while being rolled and round in the now rapidly revolving room.

NESTOR

NEVER AGAIN, EDDIE (June 5).—The cast: The Wife (Billie Rhodes); Harry (Eddie Lums); Wife's Brother (L. Moran).

Billie is waiting for her husband, who has gone to the lodge. She is growing very impatient. Meanwhile bubby is having a great time. He has met some of the Gaiety Theater bunch and invites one to have a little supper with him. Just as things are going along, the brother-in-law comes in.

The next morning, Billie finds a woman's glove, and, as Eddie can make no satisfactory explanation, she decides to leave him and go to mother. When he returns home that night he finds her gone, and he is very blue, but decides that he will not move around here, so goes to the city.

Lee had concocted a plan, and at his suggestion, Billie dresses as a man while he makes up as a woman. When they meet at the same cafe at which Eddie is. Before long Eddie is flirting with Lee and Lee goes to his table. Then Billie starts shortly up the stairs and a general chase follows. Eddie manages to elude the crowd and returns home only a short time later. He has Lee in the house, and she tells him that she cannot get along without him.

About this time Billie comes in dressed in her own clothes, and as Eddie has been trying to keep her from the bedroom in which he has Lee hidden, Eddie goes into the bedroom trying to persuade Lee to leave. The lady starts making love to him and laughs at him. Meanwhile, Billie dresses again as a man, and as Eddie brings Lee from the bedroom, she confronts him. They finally take off their makeup and Eddie says, "Never Again."

TWIXT LOVE AND THE ICEMAN (June 9).—The cast: The Widow (Stella Adams); Her Daughter (Billie Rhodes); Hogan (Neal Burns); Harry (Eddie Lums); The Icelander (H. Rattenberry). Story by W. H. Rattenmeyer. Produced by Horace Davy.

Billie is the widow, and her only daughter are well known in the village. The widow is noted for her culinary ability, and has several suitor who desire to marry her. One of them is the Icelander, and Harry the butcher. Hogan's partner on the ice wagon, Jimmie is very much attracted by the widow, and she is attracted while Hogan is courting in the house, Jimmie and Billie use the time to good advantage. Harry and Hogan, meeting at the house several times, become jealous of each other. Hogan, thinking to have a better chance, arranges to leave earlier in the morning, and when Harry comes to see him, he is gone. Hogan determines to put his rival out of the running by "hook or crook."

Harry decides to buy a select roast for the next day, as she is having company. Harry delivers the package of meat to the delivery boy, who carries it to the house. Hogan has learned of the order being in, and, stopping at a butcher shop, buys a bunch of old scrap meat, and carries it to the house, and puts it for a dog. As he and Jimmie go down the street on the ice wagon, they see the butcher's delivery wagon, and Hogan manages to substitute the package of old meat for the meat sent to the widow. He and Jimmie get down without the deception being found out, and the kitchen maid, who is carrying the meat, is almost faints. She angrily takes the meat to Harry and "bawls" him out. Harry denies seeing the package, and Jimmie, in an argument appeals to the delivery boy and the clerk. The widow leaves the shop saying she will never patronize his store again.

The next morning, Hogan is receiving royaally by the widow, and finds he has things his way. The widow and Hogan places the engagement ring on her finger. As he and the widow come out to the street, they discover Jimmie and Billie lovelocking in the house. Hogan is angry, and Jimmie out, and the widow sends Billie into the house. Jimmie becomes angry and threatens to go out on Hogan's head. Hogan tells him to chase him over the greater part of the city. Jimmie is finally caught. Harry joins the crowd, and Hogan takes the widow to his home. The next day Hogan loses out, the butcher is taken into the widow's good graces, and poor Hogan's ring is left in the ice box for him to find at his next call.

POWERS

IT CAN'T BE TRUE (June 1).—The cast: The Tenant (Ernie Shields); The Landlord (Harry Todd); Landlady (Margaret Joslin); The Tenant's Sister (L. Moran). Written and produced by Craig Hutchinson.

Ernie hadn't paid his rent for five years, and the landlord had been waiting for him, but this didn't deter him from cooking ham and eggs over the gas jet and also making eyes at the landlord's daughter. He might have gotten away with this claim, but the landlord had the nose of a Siberian mast hound, and one unlucky morning he smelled Ernie's breakfast right through the roof.

On top of this he caught Ernie talking to his daughter. This was the last straw and he decided Ernie must go. He laid out the furniture putting him out, however, they put all his furniture out and left him without even a chair.

How stony-hearted landlords are often fooled, how landladies make unfortunate mistakes, and how it never pays to change your attitude toward people simply because you think they have money was never better illustrated than in this picture. Ernie had no money, but he had some unexpected "mazzins," and landlady got a terrible shock. The only one who got any thing, was the landlady's daughter, who, as a result, and his last received a painful black eye.

BIG U

THE SEA LILY (June 8).—The cast: Light House Keeper (Thomas Jefferson); Little Mary (Zoe Bech); Dan (Burton C. Law); Little Edgar (George Nichols); The Mayor (Frank Newburg); Mary Willis (Marjorie Elliott). Scenario by Calder Johnston. Produced by George Nichols.

On a lonely island, several miles from shore, lived a lighthouse keeper and his assistant, Dan. The loneliness of his life prematurely aged the little girl, and even during the monotonous routine of caring for the lights, he observed a storm breaking, and throughout the night the keeper and his assistant kept a watchful eye. With the dawn, the storm broke. Through his marine glasses the keeper scanned the shore in search of wrecked vessels. Close to the island he discovered a few spears thrown roughly together drifting inward with the tide.

Stratching to the shore he discovered a tiny form lashed to the raft. Wading out, he found a little girl half unconscious. Dan, his assistant, hurried to the shore. When the girl awoke, the child asked, the younger man noticed a bottle dropped from the raft. Picking this up, he discovered the contents of the bottle. After breaking the bottle he found this consisted of some letters and a will identifying the child. The little girl was taken to the light house and Dan took care of her. The girl's name was Little Mary. She and the old keeper soon became good companions, and as the years went on, he was no longer lonely.

During the day time, she played upon the sands and rocks, making toys of the sea weed and the many sea-colored shells. Near the island there lived a family of fisher-folk, and with them a boy a few years older than the little girl. One evening, when Edgar, the boy, a pet of the old light house keeper since his babyhood, and he and little Mary soon became close friends. When he went away to school, and finally to college.

During all of this time, Dan laid his plans to go and win Mary, and thus gain control of the lighthouse. When Edgar returns from school and renews his boyhood love affair with Mary, Dan decides to put him out of the way. One day, when the mayor is on the island, Dan suddenly attacks him. Dan is thrown into the sea and Edgar returns to the island. During the summer months, the girl grows up. Dan had continuously carried with him, dropped from his pocket and thus Edgar discovered that the girl was his sister.

Soon after they married and went away to make their home in a distant city. The old keeper died. When Edgar returned from school, he found his father had died, and he preferred to remain at his post. The story closes as the old man makes his way up the lighthouse, the lights, as he has done throughout the years, and returns to the living room to sit in loneliness before the empty hearth.

BILLY'S WATERLOO (June 7).—The cast: Billy (Billy Ritchie); Father (Gene Rogers); Mother (L. Moran).

Sweet sixteen was in love with Billy, but her father objects to him as he had other intentions for his little girl. She, however, insisted on her choice. Bill made his usual call and father met him at the door and unconsciously told her father that she was his daughter to understand that Bill was no more to be allowed the hospitality of his roof. Father forbade her to see him, and she returned to the house and also to note the thickness of a wall separating his affinity from Bill's apartment.

Bill, in an effort to see his girl, slipped from a trapeze and slid gracefully through a wall into the adjoining apartment where he saw just in the act of embracing his affiance. Bill was so shocked by the fact that as father, in his busy exit, left his hat behind. So Bill, in possession of the hat, marched in to see his girl, and she, in turn, saw her daughter on him unless he was allowed to marry his daughter. Father had to agree, but hardly did he secure the possession of the title before he changed his mind and again told sweet sixteen that Bill was not to be allowed entrance to his apartment. He then wrote mother her report to Bill on the sly and Bill calls father to account for his changeableness and urges that he be punished. Bill then appears after a little argument with the fast father agrees.

Everything was moving nicely until the minister accidentally stepped on Bill's foot and demanded the removal of a beautiful silk hat which Billy was very proud of. Bill resented the minister's rudeness and demanded satisfaction, and so took him to his gymnasium, and was going to trim him, but the minister, in his youth, had been thoroughly trained in the manly art of self defence and turned the tables on Bill. He thrashed Bill all over the apartment house, out in the street, and strenuously did they fight that they caved in floors and landed in the basement which was full of water.

PHONY TEETH AND FALSE FRIENDS (June 11).—The cast: Father (Gene Rogers); The Dentist (Reggie Morris); The Apprentice (Bill Bevan).

It was all on account of the dentist's apprentice. Reg started him on an errand, but he was like the proverbial messenger boy. He loitered on his way and started to flirt with a girl. Gene had to find out and was spending it in the park with a lady friend. It was not Gene's fault that he sat on a bench, found a box of candy and started to eat a little of it. But the box was a precious one to Bill for Reg had started him on his way to his sweet heart with the candy and Bill had no sufficient funds to buy another box so he forthwith put Gene in shape for the dentist by knocking a few of his molars out.

In the meantime Reg had telephoned to his girl and found that the messenger had not arrived, so he started out to look for Gene. He hurried home to his little daughter for consolation, and she immediately sends him to her dentist sweetheart for repairs. Now Reg was away when father arrived, and he again fell into the hands of the apprentice, who set to work on father in a very unprofessional way, so that when father got out he was ripe for the hospital. When he arrived home, and was told by his fond daughter that the dentist had called up and would be over soon, father was sure he would be able to get sufficient revenge.

When the real dentist arrived, father worked on him, but to his sorrow he found that he had almost killed the wrong man. Together they all hasten to the dentist's parlor, only to find that the apprentice had been working on some poor man and left his own girl to hang on his nose while he carried on a flirtation with a pretty maid who had visited the office. The patient's life was saved, but the apprentice will bother no one anymore, for he went to his doom in a seventy-foot lake.

GOLD SEAL.

THE ROSE COLORED SCARF (Two Parts—June 6).—The cast: Roger Darrell (Herbert Rawlinson); Sylvia Carrington (Agnes Vernon); Frank Carrington (William Camfield). Scenario by Ben Cohn. Produced by William Worthington.

Roger Darrell, a chauffeur for the wealthy Frank Carrington, is a perfect servant. Courteous at all times, he only spoke when spoken to, and Sylvia Carrington, the daughter of the rich man, frequently found cause for resentment because of this fact. Sylvia had taken quite an interest in Darrell in an impersonal way. One day Sylvia is being taken to a drive by Darrell, she reprimands him for not knowing she is hungry. Darrell then suggests that he will take her to a nearby restaurant. Sylvia tells him that she has never entered a restaurant alone and asks him to take dinner with her. Darrell consents, and the moment Darrell removes his cap and gloves he is transformed from the perfect employee to a perfect gentleman. During the dinner Sylvia's interest has grown, and as the two start to leave the inn Darrell helps her on with her coat. She thanks him for being so good to her and her nearness makes Darrell forget himself and he stoops and kisses her. The drive home is a silent one, and as Sylvia leaves Darrell shows his repentance and he tells her that he shall leave her service.

That evening Sylvia acquaints her father with the news that she is going to be married to Roger Darrell. Carrington tells her that he will talk the matter over with Darrell. Darrell then tells of Darrell bawling kissed her and when the father says he will send for Darrell, Sylvia states that the young man does not know of the marriage arrangements, as he has not spoken to her about it, but intends leaving their service. Carrington sends for Darrell. Sylvia pleads with her father to remain in the room and to hear their conversation and finally persuades him to allow her to remain in the adjoining alcove. She is wearing a rose-colored scarf and as she draws behind the curtains the scarf slips from her shoulders and falls to the floor.

Darrell comes into the room and after a short conversation with Carrington suggests that his gentlemanly bearing, Carrington then asks the young man whether his attitude will be one of business or friendship and Darrell tells him that they can leave the business question out of the discussion. The father then states that he will not stand in the way of any young people if he can support her in the manner to which she has been accustomed. Sylvia, in her hiding place, is elated over the way Darrell is conducting himself.

Darrell studies deeply what Carrington has said, and then frankly informs him that he cannot support the girl in the way she has been raised. Sylvia springs up and with blazing eyes confronts Darrell. Then she starts out of the room. As soon as she leaves Darrell's face shows the effect of his confession and he tells her that he will wait for her to lie; that he really loves the girl and states why he made the statement, knowing that she would hear it. Darrell leaves, and as he starts out of the door finds a fragment of the rose-colored scarf, which has become torn off. He puts this in his pocket.

Carrington is a man of common sense. He tells Sylvia of Darrell's confession, and Sylvia, happy, begs her father to allow Carrington to tell her that it is too late, that pride will stand between them, and Darrell leaves their service that night. Two months later Darrell calls at a lawyer's office in response to a startling request. There he is informed that from her estate of a former relation he is given the sum of $50,000. Before leaving the lawyer asks him if he will now set out in quest of that which most desires, and Darrell tells him that there most desires. The lawyer shows he is disappointed at the answer. With the passing of time Darrell reaches the station which heritage had always been his, and still he carries the fragment of the rose-colored scarf to remind him of what might have been.

A certain table at the well-known inn has become dear to Sylvia as a memory during this time. Although it is a long time since she dined at this same inn frequently, Fate has kept the two apart. As Darrell is leaving one day he comes face to face with Sylvia and the repetition of their last meeting comes to his mind. Darrell tells her that he must talk to her and when she tries to pass he forcibly detains her. He tells her that he has waited for two years to say one thing to her and Sylvia laughs at this explanation and unthinkingly tells him that he told the lawyer he had nothing at heart for which he wished. She catches herself, but too late. Darrell realizes that his unexpected inheritance has come from. She confesses that her father told her the truth about his statements and that she had divided her fortune with him in the hope that he would seek her out, being able to give her the things she had been used to. Their misunderstanding are past and regardless of the public place in which they are Darrell takes her happily in his arms.

THE CAGE MAN (Two parts—June 10).—The cast: 341 (C. Raymond Nye); The Girl (Roberta Wilson); The Doctor (Hayward Mack). Scenario and production by Jacques Jaccard.

Pacing up and down his narrow cell, 341 was interrupted by the arrival of one of the guards. The warden had received papers from the governor permitting 341 to go out on probation. He notified the guard of this, and requested that 341 be brought to his office before leaving. 341 had long often dreamed of the freedom often brooded over the circumstances which had sent him to prison, and planned over and over again how to turn revenge upon those who he believed had sent him up.

With the change from the prison uniform to civilian clothes 341, too, became a man. He goes into the warden's office, and is given what possessions he had when he was placed behind the walls. Arriving at his home, he enters a room and immediately plans the execution of his long hoped for vengeance. His mind reverts to the days of the past in which he and his chum, a young doctor, both sought to win the same girl.

341 was the lucky sultor, and his cave man ways won the girl. Possession dulled the desire, however, and 341 became a heavy drinker, leaving his wife alone the greater part of the time. The young doctor took his defeat more to heart and for a long time did not even see the girl. 341 goes from bad to worse, and spends all of his time drinking and gambling. The doctor sees the wife neglected and is unable to resist bestowing upon her his sympathy. 341 finds the two together one day and angrily warns the doctor away.

A child is born to the couple. The father, half drunk in a gambling house, refuses to go home. The doctor learns of the wife's condition, and goes to the house himself. Through his efforts the wife is pulled through the ordeal, while 341 remains in the hospital. On the break of day, the party breaks up and 341 arrives home to find his wife and the doctor alone. He tells his wife of his defeat and the relation between the two, and, pulling a gun, threatens to send them to a place where they can carry on their love making undisturbed. The butler, hearing the discussion, calls the police, who arrive on the scene just as 341 starts to shoot the doctor. In the struggle one of the policemen is shot and falls to the floor. It is for this crime that 341 was sent to the pen.

Brooding upon and magnifying his imaginary wrongs, 341 secures a loaded revolver and determines to be revenged. He spends many days in his search, and is invariably followed and hunted by officers who know he is a paroled convict. He begins to feel the effect of the constant tension, but finally locates his wife and the doctor. He watches them through a lighted window and sees the little child who he bids her parents good night and hears the little one ask its mother where her daddy is. The mother tells the child that her real daddy is in heaven and the little one goes to bed. A reaction sets in, and 341 realizes that the woman is now happier than he could ever have hoped to make her. Thoughts of vengeance are forgotten, and he desires to get back to prison.

He sneaks in the window and kisses the child without awakening her. As he comes from the grounds, he is suddenly halted by a bunch of cops, and the resentment against the police which he has felt since they hounded him, comes to the surface. He attacks them with fury, and before being overpowered, succeeds in putting several of them on the lookout. A few days later the warden is called to receive another "guest" and discovers his old friend 341, who says he has come back home to stay.

RED FEATHER.

THE MADCAP (Five Parts—June 5).—The cast: Hermia Chalonner (Flora Parker De Haven); Olga Tcherny (Vera Barib); John Markham (Richard Sterling). Scenario by Leonora Ainsworth. Produced by William Dowling.

Hermia Chalonner, nicknamed the Madcap, has become so satisfied with luxury that she seeks happiness in danger and excitement. Her friend, Countess Olga Tcherny, introduces her to John Markham, a portrait painter. Although he interests Hermia, she is piqued at his treatment of her. Markham goes to a remote island to paint. Hermia, who has a country estate on the mainland, goes aeroplaning and purposely lands on the island. She finds the machine in landing, and Markham, who meets her, tells her that no boat will stop for the island for three days. Olga and others arrive. Meanwhile her aeroplane has been fixed and Hermia flies home. Markham afterwards spends a week-end at Hermia's home. Hidden from sight in a high-backed chair, Hermia overhears Markham tell Olga he starts for Normandy on the morrow. Later Olga tells Hermia she thinks she will take a trip to Normandy, and Olga, who has become rather jealous of Hermia, is surprised and displeased when Hermia tells her that she will accompany her.

John Markham goes to Normandy, attired in vagabond clothes, and travels as an itinerant "lightning artist." Hermia is speeding to Trouville, where Olga is staying, and meets with an accident to her auto. She meets Markham and learns what he is doing. She longs with her whole heart to leave her world of sham and become a vagabond also. He finally consents to allow her to accompany him.

She purchases a costume and determines to earn her living. She is known as Yvonne Deschamps. Markham passes as Philaid, a lightning portrait artist. They meet in love with Hermia, proposes to her in the rose garden at Valley, but she laughs and conceals her love for him. In the meantime Olga has made inquiries and is suspicious of Markham and Markham may have met and are together, so she starts an investigation. Markham and Hermia join a musical and performers and go to the Alencon Pete. While Markham is sketching the villagers at the show and Hermia is playing her instrument outside the tent she sees Olga in the distance, tells Markham and disappears. She knows her reputation will be destroyed if Olga sees her, so she flees and insists on investigating everything. Although Olga causes much suspense, she doesn't discover Hermia, but is still suspicious and gets her chauffeur to act a spy.

Hermia and Markham, fearful of discovery, leave that night and discover the chauffeur following them. Markham tells him about his business. Then they struggle on through the forest until, exhausted, they discover a hunting lodge. No one seems to be around, so they take possession. The next morning Olga is seen by Hermia and Markham coming toward the lodge. Markham tells Hermia to climb the ladder to the attic and escape through the window. As she enters and, finding Markham, looks around, but can find no trace of Hermia until she notices the mud on the ladder and realizes that Hermia is in the attic. She then starts to talk to Markham, inventing tales of the days they have spent together and how they were married. He is too astounded to reply at first and as he is

Bing's Home Entertainer

Here's a little machine, simple in its construction, and easy of operation, for which there is a place in every home.

It projects motion picture film as perfectly in the home as is possible in the average theatre.

Light is provided by a baby arc, supplied with current from the ordinary electric line socket, controlled through a special rheostat.

The baby arc develops 800 candle power, with about six amperes of current. The rheostat supplied is suitable for 110, 150 or 220 volts.

Pictures projected are about 6 x 8 feet in size and splendid results are possible with a throw up to twenty-five feet.

Standard size film is used, making every film package in the country a constant source of supply for subjects. Reel boxes are of 1,000 feet capacity.

Set up and ready for use, the machine measures 31 inches long, 31 inches high, and 10 inches broad. The lamphouse is 10 by 6. Weight of machine, complete with arc and rheostat is 24 pounds. Packed for shipment, the weight is 55 pounds.

about to do so she fires her gun out of the window. Fearing something awful has happened, Hermia raises the trap door and comes down. Olga is now triumphant. Hermia tells her she has brought down the game and to while for the dogs. She tells Olga that she loves Markham and that Markham loves her. When Olga has left Markham takes Hermia in his arms. She is furious at him, and tells him she will shoot him. He tells her that she has killed Olga, that she has killed him and that now their vagabondia is spoiled, they must part.

Their next meeting is in New York at the home of Mrs. Higgins in society. Olga who is giving a party. Private theatricals are to be the feature of the evening. As Hermia enters she tells her she has seen her like the play, as she wrote it herself. Later Hermia has tried to find the play is a story based on her husband's adventures. Olga spreads the gossip and questions Markham. He tells her the whole truth and how innocent of wrong Hermia is. Mrs. Hammond is furious at Olga's taking advantage of her hospitality and assures Markham that she will see that the story is denied and that Olga is ostracized from her circle of friends. Markham finds out that Olga is at home and spends weeks trying to find her, all to no avail. Finally, one day he receives a package containing nothing but a key. He recognizes the key as being like the one Hermia wore on her vagabond costume. The postmark is Valley and he knows it is a silent message from her, and that she is waiting for him in the rose garden. He hurries with all speed to Valley and there finds Hermia in the rose garden where he first met her of his love.

OBJECT—MATRIMONY (Two Parts—June 7).—The cast: George White (Harry Myers); Molly (Rosemary Theby); Aunt Julia (Jennie Nelson); Hitchem (Jerold Haveren). Written by Paul West.

George White, a young clerk, is discharged for continually being late. Molly, his sweetheart, rings him up and tells him to get a job. He gets to buy the engagement ring. George groans as he receives this message, and registers that he cannot buy the ring unless he has a job. We next see him at a "newsstand looking over advertisements in the "Help Wanted" column. At last he sees the following advertisement: "Wanted, a young, single, handsome man, attractive to the ladies, for position of great trust. Salary $150.00 weekly. Apply I. Hitchem, Broker, Suite No. 3345-3346, Bazar Building."

Outside of the office there is a line of applicants of various types. After a while, George's turn comes, and he is allowed to enter the office. Hitchem sits to be seated and as George sees a lot of women's photographs piled up on Hitchem's desk, he says: "I thought this was a broker's office. What are the answers?" "So it is. I'm a marriage broker," George starts to leave, but Hitchem detains him and tells him that all he has to do to meet a lot of women and pose as a handsome husband.

He has to propose to each applicant for a husband and sign a "consentment ring" on the finger of each. Among those to whom George becomes engaged are Julia Cuta, a middle aged spinster; Mrs. Kiddley, who has no children. In each case the wedding day is set for some future date.

Now we see Molly place a photograph of George on her bureau. She writes afterwards to her aunt, Julia Cuta, pays her a call, and announces that she has come to the city to be married, having accepted of a husband from an advertisement in a matrimonial paper, Julia, happening to see George's picture on the bureau table, says: "That's his picture. I'm Molly laughs, and maintains that it is impossible, as it is the picture of her fiancé. After the departure of her Aunt Julia, the maid announces her Aunt Susan from Railway. Whereupon Mrs. Kiddley and her brood of children enter the parlor. Mrs. Kiddley tells Molly that she has come to town to be married. One of the kids sees George's picture and exclaims: "Look, mamma, here's a picture of our new parlor." Molly again declares this to be impossible, as it is the picture of her fiancé. Just as Mrs. Kiddley leaves George arrives. He is given a warm welcome, and everything seems to be going on satisfactorily until George pulls out one of the Hitchem's stock engagement rings and shows it to his fiancé. Molly is struck by the resemblance of the ring to those worn by her two aunts. She is about to denounce him, but makes up her mind to remain silent for the present.

After George has left, she picks up a copy of the matrimonial paper left there by her Aunt Julia. In this she sees an advertisement inserted by Hitchem to furnish a lady with a handsome husband. Thereupon, she goes to Hitchem's office, and is ushered into the reception room. George scarcely looks at Molly as he draws her towards him in order to kiss her, but she pulls away from him and raises her veil. He recognizes her and falls back dumfounded.

After mutual explanations, all is forgiven and George embraces Molly, but their troubles are not over yet. Mrs. Kiddley, by her children, and Julia come arrive at Hitchen's private office. In order to avoid meeting them, George locks the door of the reception room and he and Molly escape by another door. However, they encounter a lot of other women candidates who make a rush for George, and it is with great difficulty that they finally make their escape from the building. Out of revenge, all the women rush into Hitchen's office and nearly murder him. After their escape, George and Molly hunt up a clergyman and have the matrimonial knot securely tied.

THE SCORPION'S STING (Three Parts—June 9).—Moran Masters serves his prison term and is released. He meets an old sea-faring acquaintance just returned from a voyage with a pocket full of money, and is taken by him to a low opium den run by a disreputable Chinaman. Here his evil genius appears to him and suggests that he should possess a hint of his companion's earnings.

Masters declares that he would sell his soul for wealth, and the evil spirit shows him an easy way. To accomplish his purpose he does not stop short of murder, and with the connivance of the Chinaman he is regarded as the body and subsequently adds to his ill-gotten gains by gambling with the frequenters of the Place, against whom he has no lack of the Devil. With this beginning he starts a systematic career of fraud and deception, and some time later we find him managing director of a swindling company, a member of an exclusive club, and to all appearances a respectable member of society.

Here we see him despoiling the widow and the orphan, on terms of friendship with the ultra-respectable, and secretly living a life of licentious depravity. His fancy is attracted by the charms of Peggy Lofting, daughter of the Bishop of Lowden, and he is soon received by them as a welcome guest, though he is regarded with unveiled suspicion by Peg's fiancé, Gerald Charlairs, a young curate, who, through the influence of the Bishop, is appointed to a fashionable West End church. Masters determines to rid himself of one whom he regards as a dangerous rival. To this end he contrives to do much to prejudice his hopes of advancement for he carries out the duties of his curacy with more zeal than discretion. He loses his fashionable audience with such vigor that he is requested to transfer his services elsewhere. He finds more congenial work in the East End.

To discredit him in the eyes of the Bishop and his daughter, Masters employs the services of a woman to whom he has promised marriage. Arranging that he should be discovered in a position which, to anyone credulous, might be construed as compromising, he succeeds in breaking off the engagement. An announcement in the papers of the forthcoming engagement of Masters to the daughter of the Bishop of Lowden convinces the cast-off mistress that he has no intention of carrying out his compact. She goes to his home with murder on her heart, but Masters meets her in the grounds. There is a violent struggle, and for a second time his hands are stained with blood. He rejoins his guests, but the woman's injuries are not immediately fatal. When the reception is at its height she staggers in and declares that she has murdered before she falls to the ground in a dying condition. The guests attempt to seize Masters, but, breaking away from them, he escapes in a motor car. As he flees through the country his evil spirit appears at his side and Masters realizes that the time has come for him to pay the price of his worldly success. He loses control of the machine, which crashes over a steep bank and he is crushed beneath its ruins.

his own comes to him. The Pages notice his abstraction and start to cajole him for not getting married. He tells them that he has never found the right girl. The setting later Craig is invited to a party given by the Pages. One of the attractions of the event is a fortune teller. Craig being the only bachelor present, is the first to have his fortune told, and he is told in four days hence at the hour of four there will be a woman in distress at a place where many people are eating, and he is told him to go to the aid of this woman. Craig is skeptical and makes light of the event to those present.

Four days pass. In spite of his determination to think nothing of the fortune telling, he continually recalls to Craig's mind the hour of four approaches he gets more and more restless and Page watches his growing uneasiness with a lurking smile. At last Craig can stand it no longer and, looking around to see that no one observes him, he sneaks out. He wanders into the tea room described and at one of the front tables he finds a woman having trouble with one of the waiters. Her helplessness appeals to him, and he offers her assistance. The waiter recognizes Craig and the matter is straightened out. He tells the girl to pretend she knows him, in order to avoid any difficulties about the two sit down to a little dinner. She tells him that she is a stranger in town and intends to visit some friends. Her party, containing the address of her friends, has been stolen and she has no idea where they live. The only clue she has is that they moved to a suburb near her home. She tells him their name is Page, and he immediately tells her that Page is his business partner. The set out for the Page home, and on their way Craig, who has become deeply smitten with the girl, proposes to her. She tells him to wait awhile yet.

They arrive at the Page home and are greeted by Mrs. Page. The girl, seeing how well Craig is thought of, determines that it would not be such a bad idea and agrees to Craig's proposal. When Mrs. Page returns to the room she sees the two exchanging themselves, and she embraces and smiles happily. Joan and Mrs. Page retire from the room and Joan shows Mrs. Page a note which she is stating that she must not fail to go to a certain restaurant on Thursday and get into an altercation with the waiter at exactly four o'clock. Joan demands an explanation of the note. Page has arrived meanwhile and Craig tells him of his romantic finding of the girl of his choice. Joan begins to see her and Mrs. Page decide that it will never do for Craig to find out the deception. Some time later Mrs. Page tells a note to friend as follows: "The fortune telling scheme worked fine. They will make an ideal couple. Desia Page."

ALIAS JANE JONES (Two Parts—June 8).—The cast: Alice (Dorothy Phillips); Frank Lyman (William Mong); Eddie Sloan (Ray Hanford); Mrs. Lyman (Margaret Whistler); Bessie, their child (Georgia French); Sunshine, an invalid (Helen Bailey); David, her brother (Edward Herd). Written by William Mong. Produced by William Mong.

Frank Lyman in private life is known as a loving husband and devoted father; in reality he is a notorious crook, and is known as "Gentleman George." He has associated with him for a long time did all his work alone, but when he made the acquaintance of a girl known as Jane Jones, he found two jobs together. Gentleman George pretended to the girl that he was a single man, and had often given her reason to believe that he was loved by her. One day Jane sees Frank and a woman and a child come out of a swell mansion. She warns that the woman is his wife and the little one their child.

Jane returns to her room in a rage and makes preparations to leave. She writes Gentleman George a long and scolding letter for his faithlessness to his wife and accuses him of double dealing in trying to win her affections. She packs up her belongings and, making a pile of the implements of her trade, leaves them on the table, with her note. George comes to see her, but she leaves him, making an effort to make the girl continue as his partner.

Eddie Sloan, who is in no accomplice of the two, and an honest man, is introduced into the in at the moment. In the struggle Jane has cut George's face with a knife and he is shaking her when Eddie comes to her aid. In his purpose, Eddie is anxious to beat up George for his treatment of the girl, and while he and the girl are arguing, George, in a hint and tries to shoot the girl. Through Eddie's interference the bullet goes wild.

Gentleman George's wife has called at the same apartment to see Alice-maker, and for she and her friend start out they hear the shot. When the door is opened Mrs. Lyman thinks she sees her husband, but her companion persuades her that she was mistaken. A short time later she decides to return and see if it was possible for her husband to have been in the room. The crooks hear her and Jane, recognizing her as George's wife, hides George in a closet before admitting the woman. Unable to find her husband, Mrs. Lyman leaves. Jane and Edie leave George after telling him they hope never to see him again.

Jane and Eddie come to California, and Jane makes the acquaintance of Miss Hoke, who is known as "Sunshine," and her brother David. Sunshine is an inviolate and takes a great liking to Jane. David has fallen in love with Jane. Eddie is still with Jane, and the whole city is disturbed by numbers racketeers, the "Chas. Oles," which the police are unable to trace. David declares his love for Jane, but she tells him that their paths lie wide apart. Gentleman George is stopping at the hotel and is recognized by Eddie one day in spite of his changed appearance. Eddie tells Jane of his arrival, and through a ruse she gets into his room. She starts to search the place, but before finishing, is interrupted by the return of George. He realizes some one has been in his room and makes a search. Jane hides in a trunk, and thinking George will not search again, she tries to get away in a dresser. George hears the noise and returns in time to catch her. He draws a gun on Jane and threatens her with it. She dares him to turn her over to the officers and displays a miscellaneous assortment of burglary tools which she had concealed under her son. George laughs at her collection and in contrast shows her a set of the latest things in the burglary line. Jane tells him that she is preparing a robbery and finally persuades him to help her. At the opportune moment, she gives Eddie a signal and rushing in overpowers George.

The morning papers are full of the capture of a notorious burglar, Gentleman George, and the lavish in the waist of the well-known detective, Miss Jane Jones, who had been trying to capture the criminal for a long while. David and his sister read the paper and orders him to find the girl and bring her to receive congratulations. David is successful in locating Jane, and tells her of the capture of his sister. Before allowing Sunshine to congratulate Jane, David suggests that she have a few minutes' secluded talk with the girl, and then, with a smiling address to him, they return their happiness is evident, for the girl detective is soon to become the wife of David.

THE FALSE GEMS (June 11).—The cast: Angus Leroux (Rupert Julian); Mrs. Leroux (Elsie Janey); Her maid (Gladys George); Fred Von Twiller (Douglas Gerard). Written by E. J. Clawson. Produced by Rupert Julian.

Angus Leroux and his wife have a happy little home. Leroux is one of the bookkeepers on commercial house, and frequently undertakes to finish his work at the office, brings his books home to work upon them. Mrs. Leroux has one inordinate fondness for jewelry. In their household lives also Michael Henning, her father, a cynical old man. The Lerouxes have a friend in the person of Fred Von Twiller. Exhausted by the day's work, he would frequently insist on Von Twiller taking his wife out at night in order to give her a little pleasure.

Sometimes Leroux feels inclined to blame his wife for her fondness for jewels, but when she tells him how and where she gets them, and that it is her only weakness, he is inclined to let her feed her vanity. One evening as Von Twiller and Mrs. Leroux are watching the opera, Leroux decides to get rid of the jewelry and to cure her of her weakness. He accordingly takes the jewels to a pawnbroker and remarks that for small things they are worth much. The jeweler makes a close examination, and tells him that fifty thousand dollars would be very low price for the gems. Leroux returns home, and at once suspicion begins its insidious work. The more he thinks of the matter, the more the suspicion grows, and he has fully made up his mind that Von Twiller, who is very wealthy, has given his wife the jewels. Sooner or later, however, he goes to his wife's bedroom and awaits her return.

Mrs. Leroux and Von Twiller return after a happy evening, and Leroux, placing the revolver in his coat pocket, comes into the room. She begins to accuse him. Von Twiller is thunderstruck. Old Michael looks on the scene with his cynical smile. Mrs. Leroux goes to the jewel box and finds the necklace is missing. Leroux is working himself up to a point for which he would always repent, when old Michael pushes the trio aside and grabs up the box. He tells Leroux that the jewels were genuine; that he had saved up and bought them for his daughter to play with. He told her the jewels were pure, knowing that if the real value were known that more than likely they would be sold and the money spent. Leroux begins to sob. Von Twiller slips out

JIM SLOCUM NO. 46393 (Two Parts—June 2) The cast: Jim Slocum (Kings Baggot); Kittle, Jim's wife (Doris Hunter); Dr. Turner (Chas. Oles); Mrs. Turner (Norma Winslow); Mrs. Cassidy (Nellie Slatery). Written by Robert F. Hall. Produced by Robert F. Hall. Jim Slocum is a taxicab chauffeur. His baby is taken ill, and on his returning from his day's work, he makes his wife, who is sitting alone while he watches through the long silent hours of the night to save the worn-out mother. The next day, while off duty, Jim drives home to see how the baby is getting along. And another chauffeur removes a tire from his car. Jim returns to the taxicab stand, and owing to his prolonged vigil the night before, he falls asleep on his cab.

The starter discharges him, accusing him of drunkenness, and when he goes to get his wages, the starter tells him there is nothing coming to him, as the missing tire put him back $25. On his return home, the doctor tells him that the baby's condition is serious, and urges that a specialist, Dr. Turner, be called into consultation. Jim calls on Dr. Turner, who is about to take the case, without enacting his customary fee, when a rich man is ushered in and persuades him to attend one of his children without delay. Jim is dumfounded, and tries to prevent the doctor from leaving him in the lurch. The doctor loses his temper and pushes him aside.

It turns out that there is nothing the matter with the rich man's child, except that it has eaten too much. After the doctor has returned home, finds that his baby has died, and that the heart-broken mother has had repeated fainting spells from grief. Leaving the wife in the care of Mrs. Cassidy, he goes out resolved to seek revenge. Meanwhile, Mrs. Turner, as the doctor is detained on an important case, has arranged for a nurse to attend a fashionable reception, instructing Carter, the colored chauffeur, to return with the car about midnight.

Shortly before midnight, Jim, with his face partly masked by a handkerchief, enters the house of Dr. Turner. He comes into the library through a side window. The doctor is examining some trinkets on a dresser, the doctor's little boy crawls out of bed and tries to hold him up with a toy gun. Jim toy gun humors the boy. Then he put him back to bed, and waves him goodby after assuring him that he won't take anything from him. On leaving the reception, Mrs. Turner slips as she is about to enter her car, and the colored chauffeur, Carter, catches her as she falls backwards into his arms. Carter, who has been drinking, flatters himself that he has made a conquest and, when Mrs. Turner alights at her home, he follows her upstairs.

Jim, who is on his way to make his escape, hears them coming, dodges into the library, and hides behind a screen. Mrs. Turner enters the library, turns on the light, and tells Carter he can go. Carter, however, advances towards her, and catches her in his arms, and tries to kiss her. Jim throws the screen aside, knocks the negro down, and beats him to a finish. Mrs. Turner has fallen in a faint on the floor, and a man who has been awakened by the rumper, rushes in to look after her. Jim takes Carter by the collar, drags him downstairs, throws him into the street, and makes his escape just as Dr. Turner arrives.

The doctor enters the library and hears from his wife of Carter's disgraceful behavior. The next morning Jim's chauffeur button is picked up in the Turner household. Mrs. Turner suggests that the button may lead to the discovery of the gallant but who came to her rescue.

The doctor investigates, and ascertains Jim's name and address. Then he induces Jim to call at his house. When he shows him the button, Jim thinks he is caught, and looks about for a way to escape. But the doctor allays his fear. Jim breaks down and confesses that he is on the verge of starvation and that his wife, even now may be dying from lack of nourishment. The doctor gets Jim to act as his chauffeur, and they drive to the temple. After examining Kittle, the doctor tells Jim that a good rest will restore her to health. She is taken to the hospital under the doctor's charge. A month later, Kittle is convalescent. Jim has a job as the doctor's chauffeur, and makes a good out of the position. He rents a cottage near the doctor's house, and tells her that it is to be their home, provided for them by Dr. Turner. Shortly afterward they move into their new home.

who would destroy it, and thus endanger the inheritance of Peg. All his attempts to escape from the cellar are fruitless.

Having Lund safe, Marcus then turns his attention to Peg, and stops the panel from sliding any further into the water. Peg is reassured again at finding the water growing no deeper, but all of her fears return when she discovers the evil face of Marcus looking at her through the semi-darkness. Marcus pulls her to safety, and as Peg demands of him what he intends to do with her, he sneeringly turns away as though he would leave her to her fate. She takes the opportunity, however, to slip away from him, and fortuitously in his favor her, to make an escape from the cellar.

In the meantime, Mrs. Lund, utterly unconcerned of the fact that Marcus had been so near her, returns to her home, and is informed that Marcus had been there, and was then on his way to the counterfeiter's den. She is so shocked, but can think of no way to intercept him. She does not dare return, for her husband, having learned of the burning of his circus tent, and the failure of his agents to procure Philip's letter, has returned to the circus himself to protect his property and arrange for its continuance in the road. She fears to show her hand in the counterfeiting game through running into her husband.

Dr. Lund's appearance at the circus encourages the discouraged performers, to whom the loss of the tent is the loss of an entire season's work. His willingness to continue makes everyone happy except Philip, who is well high distracted over the disappearance of Peg. In the midst of the general rejoicing, however, Peg rushes into the tent, and informs them of Dr. Lund, Jerr's, desperate situation in the counterfeiter's den. A number of the performers join her in going back to his assistance. They arrive at the headquarters of the gang, and are stealthily approaching it, when the faithful horse of twelve arrests her. A strange inheritance lays its irresistible hand upon her. Her frail body is torn by the most piercing shrieks, and all their strategy to surprise the gang goes for nothing. The rescuers are overpowered before they can reach Dr. Lund, and are put to flight. Peg is captured and is shrieking back into the cellar, as the episode ends.

THE LION MENESIS (Two Parts—June 10).—The cast: Margaret Grey (Margaret Gibson); Capt. Carlyle (William Clifford); Major Grey (Frederick Montague); Karma (Al. Garcia).

In punishment for a mortal crime, the soul of an Egyptian Prince has been reincarnated in the body of Monte, an African lion, and as the cycle of time passes, the beast ever seeks release to the soul of man. Sin has not been eliminated from the world, and extreme evil resides in the heart of the Indian Rajah. There is but one influence which this wicked Prince fears and that is the influence of the lion Monte which is now a member of his menagerie.

Major Grey, an English army officer, is stationed at the military post in the district over which the Rajah rules. The major's daughter, Margaret, has just been betrothed to Capt. Carlyle, a young officer in the major's command. The Rajah conceives a wild hatred for Margaret and being possessed of a weird hypnotic power, he proceeds to exercise it on the young girl to further his purpose. The young captain is mystified at Margaret's growing indifference towards him and her apparent interest in the Rajah, not being aware that his sweetheart's will and mind are now under the control of the Prince.

At an embassy feast the Rajah, by silent command, compels the girl to meet him in the gardens. The captain jealously follows them, witnesses Margaret about to yield to the Prince's advances and promptly challenges him to combat. The guests interfere and a tragedy is averted. Margaret's father believes the captain to be a villainous man, and thus the breach between the young couple is widened.

Irritated by the apparent animosity of the lion Monte towards him, the Rajah orders the beast killed, but the animal's keeper, who has become greatly attached to the lion, cannot induce himself to carry out the order. To avoid his master's displeasure sets the lion free in the desert. The Rajah utilizes his power over Margaret's mind to order her to meet him at a meeting, whereupon he proceeds to forcibly carry her off. A guard, who has witnessed the event, reports the occurrence to Capt. Carlyle.

The young captain, with a small detachment of his company, proceeds to the Rajah's palace to demand the girl's return. The Rajah, however, from the reported events he now suspects the Prince's undue influence over his sweetheart. A servant of the Rajah, who has been secretly gained, informs the captain of the secret retreat to which the Rajah takes his favorites

JERRY'S BIG LARK (June 9).—The cast: Jerry (George Overy); first cowboy (George George); father (Louis Fitzroy); mother (Janet Julian); daughter (Clair Alexander); second cowboy (Harry Jackson); lion (Tommy Lincoln); butler (Tommy Hayes). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Jerry and the daughter of a well-to-do family are very much in love with each other, but the father objects to Jerry's attentions. Jerry's persistence causes the old man to take his family for an automobile tour, but before doing so he has an encounter with Jerry. The family starts away, but the girl is in tears. Jerry, who is not to be outwitted, leaps on the rear of the automobile. Some distance out in the country they are halted by a motion picture company which is working, the director having asked the motorists to stop so as not to interfere with the scene.

A number of genuine cowboys have been engaged to pose in the picture which is being produced. Jerry peers out from his place of concealment to see what is going on, and when several policemen appear he immediately becomes frightened, fearing that his old enemies are after him. They are only motion picture cops, but Jerry does not know that. He runs off and hides. He witnesses a scene wherein a cowboy is choking a girl in tears. Jerry, in a dramatic way, the girl screaming for help. Not realizing that that is only for the camera, Jerry goes hurriedly to the girl's aid. Jerry is handed roughly by the cowboys and the father. Jerry's plight, is elated and rewards the cowboys for their good work.

After the family starts away, leaving Jerry behind, a bright idea occurs to him. His sweetheart's family are to give a reception in the near future, and Jerry has a way to win to which he signs the father's name. The note is an invitation to the cowboys to attend the reception. The cowboys, when they are waiting that day, as the father wishes to surprise his guests. The night of the reception arrives, the guests are all assembled, and the cowboys, following instructions, ride into the house and proceed to shoot things up, the guests fleeing in alarm in a moment.

The cowboys proceed to make merry with the liquid refreshments. The contents of the punch-bowl being too weak for their taste, they permit the girl's horse to drink the punch, after and mother seek refuge under a bed, and are kept prisoners by one of the horses who proceeds to feed upon the mattress. Jerry's sweetheart is as much frightened as the other guests, but Jerry finds and reassures her. Appropriating one of the cowboy's horses, he mounts it and, with the girl behind him, rides off, too late for the irate father, who has been rescued by the police, to prevent the elopement.

MUTUAL MASTERPIECE

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY (Thausenhour—Five Parts—June 1).—The cast: The Girl (Gladya Hulette); Her Sweetheart (Frankie Crane); Her Girl (H. Gladya); Her Cook (Yale Beller); His Wife (Kathryn Adams).

The story opens with the broker, who, as the head of the company, is a very successful man, turns on investments, suddenly disappears. Another "get-rich-quick" bubble had exploded. The man was ordinarily a very successful man, but for the men had imposed on a gullible public and made off with their money to live in ease in some distant country.

But there was a different story. The man had been the victim of a scheming couple. He was turned over to two strangers, who had come to him to cover their tracks and take the blame for their misdeeds. The escape of the broker had been accomplished in a clever manner. The man's daughter, the detective, was by talking to them, he left the table of a dinner party given at his home and from that time no trace of him was seen.

To help the needy ones who had suffered by the apparent mismanagement of her father, the girl turned over all her assets to the creditors and withdrew to earn her livelihood by working in a dressmaking establishment. Among those who attended the creditor's meeting were some criminals and they selected as their next victim a young man who had lost a few thousand in the crash. He was a very sympathetic with the unfortunate and seemed "easy."

To help his immediate sympathy, the woman simulated an attempted suicide. After the young fellow had rescued her, she told him that her husband's meagre earnings had been wiped out by the crash and that they had nothing left. The young man escorted her home and said he would help them to a new start in life.

While the woman and "Vaucher" were out in the latter's automobile chance intervened to upset the plans of the conspirators. The girl, who had retired after the flight of her father, was attracted by the machine. Despite the fact that the woman made sure to inform the young fellow who the plot was, he, by chance, was attracted to her. To destroy this interest, the scheming woman tried a novel plan. She had the employer of the young woman out motor in the most expensive coupe, arranged for the young man to see her, and insinuate that the worst possible conclusion was the only way to explain the sudden acquisition of wealth. This trick proved useless for the lover investigated and found that she was merely acting. Various attempts to injure the girl and put her out of the way were tried but all to no avail. Feeling convinced that she was being persecuted for an unknown motive the young fellow decided to do a little investigating.

As a last resort the swindlers had their book-keeper, who had only been a short time in their employ but had earned their confidence, write a letter to the girl purporting to come from her father asking her to meet him. The girl kept her appointment and found the man and woman waiting for her. Instead of the man she expected with bodily injury unless she withdrew and they reminded her of how they had disposed of her father. Then they became boisterous and the man of their victim and recalled the details of the plot that had eliminated the father.

Their talk suddenly ceased when they saw their book-keeper followed by the young man and a policeman entered the room. While the crooks gazed at the book-keeper who had betrayed them, the old man smiled, removed his wig and glasses and introduced himself as the fugitive broker. He had determined to disclose the real truth and, with the aid of the police, had installed a dictaphone, listened to what was said and arranged for their arrest. In the face of this testimony the swindlers were speechless and were silently escorted to prison to await trial.

BEAUTY

IMA KNUTT GETS A BITE (June 4).—The cast: Ima Knuutt (Lila Kay) and Lila Kay (Dixie Stuart); Mrs. Banks (Gladys Kingsbury); Reverend Jack Meddiesome (John Gough); Mother-in-law (Lila Kay); and the Sunday School picnic for a day at the sea side. Ima, much against his will, is forced to join them. However, proper to the occasion, Ima, along with him a large flask of his favorite brand. Ima thinks he is going to have rather a slow time, but as he arrives, he finds that Ima covers so many fascinations that it is only with difficulty that Ima and mother-in-law can drag Ima away from the sea. Ima is placed on the pier with a rented rod and line to occupy himself with the harmless pursuit of fishing.

Ima finds things rather slow as he is surrounded by nothing but old fogies who seem to catch all the fish while he none. He finds a congenial spirit who, for a share of the contents of his bottle, first explains to him that it is necessary to have bait on his hook to catch fish and then spins such a wonderful yarn of deep sea fishing that Ima is persuaded to hire a boat and put out to sea, accompanied by his friend.

They arrive at a spot in the ocean where his friend informs him they are bound to have success. They fortify themselves for a battle with the denizens of the deep. Much to Ima's astonishment he really gets a bite, and a big one. The fight between the fish and Ima is one-sided, the fish winning and pulling him overboard, upsetting the boat. Ima sinks to the bottom of the ocean and all the diving men his past time in all their horror come to him as his breath leaves his body. He reaches the bottom and obtains a new lease of life when he finds himself pursued by the horrible monsters of the deep.

He is rescued eventually by a mermaid, who leads him to her couch and horses. Ima arrives at the surface in the sea shell coach drawn by sea horses and is dragged from the water by mother-in-law and Lila Kay, with the aid of the guard have seen the accident and have come to his rescue.

low and they are attracted to each other. A valuable necklace disappears while Dorothy is talking to Vallon. She is chagrined, but the hostess decides not to follow it up, as it would put suspicion on "Vaucher."

Dorothy meets Vallon later and they become much interested in each other, although she is warned by Gale not to enter into a relationship with a client. The man senses her business and arranges with his confederates to get her out of the way. He comes out as a jewelry and enters a taxi. She enters another one standing near, and is seized and bound and carried to the crook's rendezvous, where she is held in a hiding place until after the contemplated robbery.

Imprisoned in a windowless room, she is confronted by Vallon, who is really a detective, he a thief. She spurs him, and he, in a maulin condition, presents her with the necklace he stole and attempts to force her to his desire. Gale is worried at Dorothy's failure to return and waits at the office while the crooks are pulling the job. An electric bell tells him of tampering with the vault, and, with his men, he hurries to the store. The thieves are captured. Dorothy's revolver found, a confession forced, and Gale goes to her rescue in time to save her from Vallon and earn her love.

PETERSON'S PITIFUL FLIGHT (June 3).—The cast: Peterson (Bert Delaney); His Wife (Gladys Leslie); Peterson's Former Sweetheart (Lila Kay).

High-life and the sweet charms of femininity are expensive as Peterson ultimately learns. His path through life is fairly paved with crooks—including a woman. After having promised the latter to marry her, to get rid of her importunity, he falls in love with his new bookkeeper, Rosemary. He insists on taking her out to lunch and on these journeys has much ado to avoid encountering his creditors. To get rid of them temporarily he convinces them that Rosemary is a millionairess and that after marrying her, he will repay them with compound interest. Then he makes her propose to him and she accepts him.

A fortnight after the wedding, Peterson and Rosemary are in the hands of his creditors. Then things begin to happen. His creditors begin invading his home, at first singly, then in twos, then in threes, and finally he manages to introduce them as uncles and granduncles and has the "pleasure" of beholding his wife accord them a grand reception and embrace and kiss her "relations." When they leave, Rosemary requests them to come again and soon.

His creditors, moreover, find his home and his time, his discarded sweetheart serves him with a summons, while a sheriff stands guard at his home with a warrant in his pocket. He is placed under arrest, but the sheriff consents to go with him to give him a chance to take leave of his wife. He introduces the sheriff as a business friend of his with whom he must start out on a business trip without delay. They have hardly left the house when they are encountered by numerous other sheriffs, each one flashing a warrant for Peterson's arrest. Each claims him as his own and higher and higher they climb between them. Finally they decide to fight it out among themselves.

The noise of the scuffle attracts Rosemary's attention who immediately hastens to her husband's assistance. At her sight Peterson decides to make his escape, and the sheriff—irrespective of consequence. Pulling Rosemary after him he makes a dash for liberty. He discovers that his business blarney is not the easiest thing in the world. Whichever way he turns he encounters sheriffs and creditors. At last when he is in imminent danger of being captured, he takes an auto by means of it breaks through the cordon of his pursuers. They escape and begin life anew. Peterson is given a severe lecture to which he listens penitently, vowing never to accumulate another past.

ADVERTISEMENTS (June 5).—The cast: Oscar (Claude Cooper); Conrad (Frank E. McNish); (7) Meta Drinkwitz (Lena Edmund).

There were two restaurants on the block, and the proprietors thought they were rivals. The facts of the restaurant and the street did its business, and in all probability the sheriff would have had them by now had it not happened that Oscar and Conrad came around. As soon as the two pairs noted conditions they became advertising experts. A toss of the coin sent them to the Bilkirk restaurant, and arrangements were quickly made.

Conrad became a sandwich man, while Oscar posed as a "passerby," who went into raptures over the bill of fare and the method of the place sold food "like father used to eat." When a crowd collected Oscar found it easy to lead a procession into the restaurant, and business began to boom. The rival food artist was more unhappy than ever, and his desire for revenge induced him to listen to the plea of a beautiful maiden who had a scheme to win away the trade.

The maiden was installed at a stove in the show window, and made flaps in public. She won away the fickle crowd, and the boss of the pals informed them he would dispense with their services unless she could produce the drawing power of the girl across the street. They tried several schemes without result, and then Conrad, who was the owner of the business rivalry. She confided to him that HIS boss had offered her $150 if she would quit, which led Conrad to tell HER boss he had tried to bribe him (Conrad), and he proposed that they accept the offers and get married on the money. The girl gladly agreed, for she was getting tired of the catastrophes. The flaps blew up, and there was much excitement. The patrons were somewhat "battered," but not badly, and Conrad, who was the boss triumphantly for a ministers, while the wicked Oscar repented of his crime, because he had endangered the life of the woman his friend had loved.

The day she retired the Girl gave a farewell flapjack demonstration, and Conrad, from his sandwich spot across the way, was horrified when Oscar told him he had put "gunpowder in her baking powder." Conrad fought with his old pal, Old you ever see two sandwich men, burdened with their boards, fight? It is funny.) He then ran into the restaurant, but was unable to prevent the catastrophes. The flaps blew up, and there was much excitement. The patrons were somewhat "battered," but not badly, and Conrad, who was the boss triumphantly for a ministers, while the wicked Oscar repented of his crime, because he had endangered the life of the woman his friend had loved.

WHERE WIVES WIN (June 10).—The cast: Mother (Carey L. Hastings); Father (Joe Phillips); Daughter (Reenie Farrington); Her Sweetheart (John Heck); Cowboy (Gene Moore, Jr.).

If one does manual work all day, it is rather hard on the feet to be compelled to dance at night. This was what the young mechanic thought when he called upon his "best girl," and she immediately began making the records for their duty, while she instructed her fiancé in some fancy steps. The young man sighed, for his cornea were protruding, and he envied his prospective father-in-law, the slightly individual sneaked out, presumably headed for a nearby saloon where he could sit down and rest. His wife, however, was not to be so easily established, but the barkeeper told her the man she wanted was not there. (Diplomat, that barkeeper.) Then she went to the next person, but was headed off. She returned home in tears, declaring she had been shamefully treated, and telling: "He wouldn't treat me that way out West, where women have more fun."

All this time the suitor had been dancing and dancing, but he had reached his limit. He collapsed upon the sofa, and his lady felt sorry for him. She said she would go in the kitchen and help her mother, and while she was away the young man told her of his dreams he was transported out West, and there he found that the wife's words were true. He saw the family of the following day at the dance hall, where she was the queen of the evening. His father-in-law-to-be was also there, but his wife took him out at the point of a revolver, held him home, tied him to a tree, and explained that she intended to have some target practice. The young man interferred, was chased up a tree, shot, and fell down again. Then he awoke.

His tumble from the sofa brought the women in from the kitchen, and just as they held him to his feet his father-in-law-elect strolled in. Husband and wife had an argument, and wife founced off to the kitchen. The man, "peevish," and told his story to the younger chap, who replied: "Cheer up! Think what might have happened had she been up. And when he told his dream the husband admitted that matters might have been worse.

THANHOUSER

JOHN BREWSTER'S WIFE (Two Parts—June 6).—The cast: John Brewster (Ernest Howard); his wife (Ethyle Cooke); baby (Estimate Oakland); maid (Mary Loring Hastings).

"This place is stifling me. It's killing me!" Elizabeth's long pent-up feelings burst forth in a torrent of angry rebellion. And her husband, John Brewster, looked with scorn at the excited little woman. But Elizabeth had come from the city and who had given up her stage ambitions to marry Brewster, rebelled under the narrow conventions of her husband's home town. So, when she received a card from the manager of her old company, saying that they were playing the big city theatre, the old longing for the freedom and kind-heartedness her old friends shared within her. She rebelled against her husband's harsh criticism of "her people" and left.

However, a baby's liped request can often soften the fiercest pride, and John Brewster finally went to the city to bring his little daughter's mother back to her. But there he found Fred, who had always been infatuated with Elizabeth. Elizabeth had just scorned him and told him that she was going to go in for a career, she was going "straight." But John Brewster's strict upbringing made him suspicious of Fred. When Fred told him his wife's room he denounced them both without giving her a chance to explain. Elizabeth decided to live up to his opinion and was prevented. Fred was arrested for forgery a few moments after John left, and Elizabeth, trembling with the thought of her husband's return to the "edge" came back by her little hall bedroom, and there she found a note from her husband. John had been killed in a road wreck which his wife might have been killed in had she been visiting relatives, as he had told the neighbors she was. He wished that she had happened. For she preferred that his daughter should have no mother at all than one such as she was. And he told Elizabeth that he was going to take advantage of the wreck and report her dead, unidentified, for he believed that his daughter would be happier loving the memory of a good mother than possessing an evil one.

Baby's birthday arrived, and she insisted on having her mother's picture at the party table. When a stir of wind blew in at the door, Elizabeth whisked out one of the candles, the baby exclaimed that perhaps her "Angel Mother" had come back and dressed her. When Elizabeth told the baby's mother, she came back with Fred, who had escaped from prison. Fred had come to her for help to enable him to get home to his new America. She consented to try to get money for him from her husband.

When the baby went to sleep Elizabeth entered the home she left a year ago. But her hope was blasted as John faced her, as stern and unrelenting as ever, and told her that the dead could not come back. When Elizabeth told him with him, he allowed her to go and just look at the baby, and she could not summon enough courage to ask him for the money. She told Fred bitterly that it was no use. And then they went along by her husband's bank. Fred pointed to it and said that there was plenty of money in it. And the woman told him that for she remembered the old combination of the main vault. The baby, as if she had felt her mother's presence in her dream, called her father and asked for her "Mamma." The father walked over to the window to hide his emotion and the two sat there working at the door of the bank across the way.

When John Brewster appeared before his wife and Fred as they were working at the combination of the safe, she laughed at him, he pointed at them, and told him that it was a useless weapon, because if he shot the townspeople could know that he was a wife murderer. Fred, who was a thief, in partnership with a thief—and how about his child's name then? John Brewster knew he could do nothing. But when he left Elizabeth turned and pointed her revolver at Fred and would not allow him to rob the bank for fear the blame would be placed on Brewster, and she did not want her baby's father to be called a thief.

The next day she lingered in town to get one last look at her baby, and she held the little girl in her arms and gave her the two last kisses her father and then went away. When John Brewster read the letter, in which Elizabeth told him that his accusations had been false, and that she had never done anything which made her unfit to be the child's mother, he turned to the eager baby and told her that they would go and find her mother. So the two went out together, hand in hand, to find the mother.

GAUMONT

SEE AMERICA FIRST, No. 38 (May 31).—This release takes the spectators to the most renowned spots on the continent. Travelers from all over the world have made it a stopping point. Transcontinental tours always include this popular Colorado stop in their itinerary. The mighty mountain is 14,142 feet high, and is undoubtedly the best advertised spot and the best known peak in the United States. Those who have actually seen the mountain will have their pleasant trip recalled to them, while to the millions of those who upon Pike's Peak is only the subject of encyclopedias and writers, the views from the mountain will bring the reality of the mountain to the eye. The hostility is pictured, and the ride up the mountain side on the cog railway that has made the trip a pleasure journey instead of a hard work, is shown puffing its way skyward. The view that unfolds themselves to the eye from the top of the peak beggars description.

"The Great Gats' Escapes," "Goat," another of Harry Palmer's funny cartoon comics, occupies several hundred feet of this popular release.

FLAMES OF VENGEANCE (Three Parts—June 8).—The cast: Linton (Sydney Mason); Millicent (Iva Shepherd); her father (Charles H. Baring); her father (Charles W. Travis); Deyne (John Reinhard); Ethel, daughter of Millicent and Deyne (Rena Rodgers); Robinson McClure, a factory employee (John Macklin); Dora, his daughter (Birsha Shepard); Bobbie, her sweetheart (Albert Miller); and the secretary to Linton (James Levering). Written by Paul M. Bryan. Directed by Edwin Middleton.

Millicent, the daughter of a wealthy father and mother, breaks her engagement with Deyne through foolish jealousy. In pique, she becomes the fiancée of young Robinson McClure, a plain-minded fellow who sincerely loves her. Preparations for the marriage culminate in a pre-wedding reception. Deyne, who has been invited to be an usher at the wedding.

The sight of her former sweetheart re-awakens Millicent's love for him, and Linton, coming upon these two enemies, declares her to be in Deyne's arms. He leaves the house, incensed, after telling Millicent's parents of her unfaithfulness. Her father turns her from her home in his anger.

Twenty years elapse. Millicent's husband has died and she is left in straitened circumstances with her daughter, Ethel, a girl of nineteen. Linton has been highly successful and is the owner of a big mill. He is a confirmed woman-hater. Trouble arises at the factory over improvements and Linton takes a firm stand against his employees. Ethel answers an advertisement from the office of the factory for a new stenographer and is accepted. Linton, not knowing who she is, becomes strongly attracted to her, and in time, promises marriage.

Affairs at the mill come to a climax when Dora, the daughter of McClure, suffers a breakdown, following an accident. She finally dies. Her father, feeling that Linton is responsible for the girl's death, vows vengeance. With other conspirators, he abducts Linton. Ethel hears of the plot and is an old friend of the included place chosen for his imprisonment, riding on top the locomotive. Discovered by the conspirators, she is locked in an old building with Linton, and the place is set on fire. The pair make a spectacular escape from the building. The final reconciliation of Linton, Ethel and Millicent is the climax to the story.

DORIAN'S DIVORCE (Five Parts—Rolle Photographs, Inc.).—The cast: Dorian (Lionel Barrymore); his wife, Florence (Grace Valentine); The Sanders (Edgar L. Javens); Edith (Holding (Lindsay Hall); Henry Morgan (William Lyster); Captain Ross (L. R. Wolheim); Puck (Buckley Starkey). Directed by A. C. Lund.

Dorian, a broker, who has lost most of his money in Wall street, and his wife, Florence, dissatisfied with her lot, wants a divorce. Out of his great love for her, Dorian agrees to allow her to have it. While the papers are being prepared Sanders, Florence's god-father, tries to dissuade her from this. She has misappropriated funds belonging to Florence. He fears an exposure, since she is getting a divorce, and may demand an accounting. Doria promises to do what he can to protect Sanders.

They go to Dorian's hunting lodge, where Florence agrees to meet Dorian with her lawyer. Sanders Sanders weakens and tells Florence of the missing funds. She turns upon him in a violent temper. A maid hears them quarrelling and when afterwards she is hurrying into the room she finds Sanders dead with a bullet wound in his temple. She tells Dorian that Florence has killed Sanders. In his devotion to his wife, Dorian takes the blame for the crime. Then he escapes in an automobile.

Down the road Dorian encounters a highwayman who holds him up, takes his money, and the machine, and leaves his outfit with the bewildered broker. Further along the road the automobile goes over a steep bank and the car is burned. The body of the highwayman is charred beyond recognition, and every one thinks it is Dorian.

Dorian, penniless, wanders to the water front in New York, intending to take a ship to Europe. There he learns that Henry Morgan, a fellow broker, who was instrumental in getting Florence dissatisfied with her lot, has bought his old yacht, the Sea Gull, and is arranging for a smuggling expedition. Morgan has lost nearly all his money, and in desperation, has taken a contract to smuggle Chinese into this country for a thousand dollars. Dorian succeeds in getting a job aboard the yacht as a stoker.

The yacht puts to sea, and when some distance from land, sees another vessel, from which the Chinese are taken aboard. As the yacht nears New York, Dorian, after many thrilling incidents, gains control of the wireless

FORT MYERS, FLORIDA

May 11th, 1916.

Dear Old Moving Picture World:-
Just a line to say to you that I am still among the living, and while you may have heard nothing from me in several years, I have EVERY COPY of the World since its inception on my files.

I have noted through its columns all the different men and things that have come into prominence since we of the "Old School" first launched our "Store Shows" back in 1906, but I might add that I have continuously been in the business ever since, and am now working under the title of "THE SOUTH'S OLDEST EXHIBITOR."

The World has been of more value to me than any other agency in keeping fully posted as to the different developments of the industry.

I am beginning the construction of a modern theatre, 40x100 feet, seating approximately 500, and for pictures alone; will have same open about Sept. 1st.

If you have a map of the United States handy, just look way down in the lower part of Florida, and see the location where one exhibitor has done business continuously since Sept. 1st, 1906, and is likely to be doing the same thing as long as he is doing anything.

With best wishes to you, and the World,
I am your friend, apparatus, and notifies the Federal authorities of the smuggling scheme. A revenue cutter meets the yacht and the captain and crew are arrested. The captain names Morgan as the man higher up.

Meanwhile Morgan has been pressing his suit with Florence, who, believing her husband dead, has agreed to marry Morgan. Instead, he urges her to come to him without a ceremony. Florence then spurns him, and realizing his true nature turns her thoughts to Dorian. Then the government agents call to arrest Morgan, and at the same time she learns that her husband is alive. Florence sends for Dorian, welcomes him home, and together they tear up the papers for the proposed divorce, which she has kept in her possession.

E. & R. JUNGLE FILM CORP.
SOME DETECTIVE—Lary Lukins and Pat Perkins are in a fix with Widow. Lary's nickname doesn't appeal to the lady in question as she is of a decidedly industrious character. Lary is his objective but his objective to ferret out clues is lost upon the widow. She prefers the fat, but frugal, Perkins, who runs the delicatessen store.

Nap and Sallie, the chimps, are Italian street vendors. One afternoon, they get into a scuffle and run off, leaving the contents of their baskets scattered over the pavement. Lary happens along. He tries to solve the mystery of the treasure but finally stops his deductions when he finds over a necklace which he finds among the contents of one of the trays. He decides to forget the mystery in the case and bear his trophy to the fair widow.

Meanwhile the chimps have made a raid on the delicatessen to the terror of the customers, the widow, and Pat Perkins. Lary comes up but is scorned alike by the widow and Perkins. That evening Lary endeavors to take the necklace to his love but is foisted with a cigar before the delicatessen with the necklace hanging from his pocket. Fat thinks Lary has been robbed and the delicatessen takes possession of the necklace after a squabble. He then hurries off with the jewelry, determining to bear Lary to the widow with it and return home. As he sits brooding, he decides upon a scheme which he carries out with the aid of Nap and Sallie.

Nap steals a pair of Fat's shoes as he dreams of the widow. Sallie enters the widow's room, by stealth, and steals the necklace which the widow has put away in a chest. Nap and Sallie meet in the old barn behind the widow's house and the necklace changes hands. Sallie returns to Lary but he takes the necklace and, with Fat's shoes on his feet, returns to Fat's bedroom where he stuffs the necklace in one of the shoes.

The next morning the loss of the necklace is discovered. The widow is in despair but Lary promises to recover it for her. He goes to a paraphernalia, and he and the chimps succeed in locating the criminal. The widow refuses to bear Lary's cost and the detective and his heart turns to the clever detective who has recovered her necklace for her.

HAUNTED.—The Newlyweds are given the use of a friend's bungalow for their honeymoon. With suitcases bearing the inevitable "Just Married" labels, they arrive at their destination to begin their honeymoon. But the place is full of bliss. But Fate sends Montgomery, a stranded actor, striding down the railroad tracks with his partners, Nap and Sallie the chimps, and he and the Newlyweds are drawn together by a queer coincidence.

Montgomery is seen by a circus man who covets the chimps, and the actor is forced to sell his partners. The circus man sends the chimps in an express wagon to the station to be shipped away but the express man is more interested in his book "Pity the Laboring Man" than in his charges, and the box with the monkeys in falls to the pavement before the which shelters the Newlyweds. Nap and Sallie emerge from the broken box and take refuge in the nearest house they find—which happens to be the attic of the Newlyweds' bungalow.

Then commences a reign of terror. Mrs. Newlyweds thinks that her husband is perfect except for his smoking, and he thinks that she is perfect except for her excessive eating so that when his pipe and her lunch van, which each blames the other and a quarrel is the result. As a matter of fact, the chimps have made a raid from the attic and even at the time of the quarrel, Nap is smoking peacefully behind the hall rack and Sallie is enjoying a lunch in the attic.

Finally mysteriously opened doors, laundry baskets that sway to and fro, a syphon that sprays them in the face as they open the kitchen door and the realistic soft footfalls of other persons, are lead the couple to the conviction that the house is haunted.

They decide to stay in the house until the house has been mysteriously fired by the stolen cigar which Nap has left on Mrs. Newlyweds' bureau on the rack in the hall. The two rush to pack their suitcases. But Mrs. Newlyweds' umbrella persists in dancing about the room, carried by some unseen thing, and they flee into Mrs. Newweds' room to find her sitting down waving aloft upon the arms of what is apparently an apparition with its head hidden in the white cloth.

Mrs. Newlyweds faints at the continued horrors, and Mr. Newlyweds is at his wit's ends. But the horror comes in the shape of the man and the careless delivery man. The circus man has waited in vain for the chimps at the station and has found the driver, compelling him to drive him back over the road he has just traveled in order to try and find some clue to the missing animals.

They ring at the Newweds' huznaw and Mr. Newwede, in fright, drops his wife on the floor and she revives. They both rush to the door and upon hearing of the loss of the chimps, give an explanation of the uncanny happenings of the past several hours. The chimps are located in the attic and everybody is happy.

FATES BOOMERANG (Peerless—Five Parts—May 20)—The cast: Zell (Mollie King); George Castleman (Charles Goldthold); Mildred Castleman (June Elvidge); Arnold Morgan (Jack Goldsmith). Directed by H. Crane.

George Castleman, an engineer, succeeds in saving the assistance of a friend abroad in the West. He hurries home to tell the good news to Mildred, his wife. As usual she is at the bridge club or other place of amusement, but being so full of his good luck he phones her to come home at once. However, she continues to play her game of bridge for another hour. An hour later she enters with excuses to George, who allows her kisses to make it all right.

He eagerly tells her the news and she is delighted, but when he talks of her going with him, she says: "Sure, you do not expect me to go with you?" He laughingly explains that it is not for a few months, but for years. He is a big railroad, but she persists in her refusal to go with him. He makes arrangements for the trip, and goes off alone to face the wilderness of the West. He is crying in his ears, "When you want to see me, you can easily come home."

George reaches the West and the building of the road begins in earnest, but it is slow work in the mountainous country. One day Dan Holden, a native of the country, tells him of the mountains, with his little grandchild Zell, sees in the distance the railroad crew breaking through the forest. As they draw nearer and nearer, day by day, both are fascinated by the work, never before having seen such tracks or steady shovels. Zell is attracted to George and he somewhat to her. However, he explains to her that he is married, but she persists in seeing him, if only to cheer him up. One day, while returning from watching the men at work, old Mr. Holden falls and seriously injures himself. George carries him to his hut but the injury is too much for the aged man to survive and he dies two days later.

Lonesome, Zell shares her lonesomeness with that of the engineer. Months later, strange are the happenings in the little mountain hut and also in the beautiful home in the city. Zell is a real little mother, being called the little mother of the hills, and George is bending over, seeking to tell her how he has with true love and happiness. On the other hand, Mildred has met a man named Morgan, a rich society man, who has designs upon her and urges her to bring divorce proceedings against her husband.

Leaving the city to get evidence against George, Morgan and Mildred arrive at the little village, leaving in a coach for George's hut. The driver, a half-witted chump, drives carelessly around a curve, drove his wagon and occupants over the edge of a cliff, losing his life in the crash as killing both. The news was a terrible shock to George, but after directing his men to give the three unfortunate a decent burial and to bury the driver, he could afford, he was at liberty to consider Zell's love for him in a different light with the result that after marrying the girl, he returns to the hills, he continues his work content at last that his wife and babe are worthy of his sacrifice.

INTERNATIONAL FILM SERVICE.

MYSTERIES OF MYRA (Sixth—Episodes—Two Parts—May 20)—Realizing the strange transformation that has taken place in Myra, whereby she now possesses the spirit of the Grand Master, Dr. Alden is greatly troubled, and tries to convince Mrs. Maynard that this is true. She is very sceptical and refuses to place any confidence in Alden's claim, even though she realizes that Myra is not herself.

Alone in her boudoir Myra is acting very strangely. She comes out to her room and hides them, after which she phones her bank in order to ascertain the amount of her money. She balances, she is satisfied, and goes to her room with the intention of drawing her money, but as she opens the door, Varney and Alden arrive. Alden asks for Mrs. Maynard, and is ushered in. Arthur Varney is embarrassed by Myra's behavior. Contrary to her usual way, she is more than equal to him. She enters the room where Mrs. Maynard and Alden are seated, Myra suddenly announces that she and Varney are engaged to be married. Dr. Alden, realizing that it is not Myra herself speaking, departs for his laboratory. Alone once more Myra announces to Varney that she is not Myra, but the Grand Master in the body of Myra, and instructs him to get the body of the Black Master from the lodge and to carry it to a certain deserted house in the nearby gorge. She then departs for the bank, where she withdraws her money.

Constitutional agents in the Black Order. The Grand Master has suddenly appeared in the Council Chamber, something that he has never done before. He has been frightened, but he has not been with a sort of nervous courage. He has commanded the members to clear out from the lodge. Once outside the lodge, by Varney, who explains to them the strange phenomena which has happened. Alden, arriving at his laboratory, is disturbed by the appearance of a well-known clairvoyant, who says he has a message for the clairvoyant, who says he has a message for the clairvoyant. At this point the Grand Master, in whose body he is, spirit of Myra, telephones to the doctor for assistance. Strictly enough, at this very moment the medium commands Alden to answer the phone. It is Myra speaking in the form of the Grand Master asking for help. Before the message is completed the connection is broken, this resulting from the fact that the members have returned to the lodge and have made their former leader a prisoner. In Alden's laboratory the medium informs him that the spirit of Alden's dead friend colleague is telling him to go to the house in the gorge quickly. Alden departs. Having secretly banded and gagged the body of the Grand Master, the members are now taking him to this very place.

Myra is not left the bank, and, driving some distance into the country in the neighborhood of the gorge, sends her chauffeur back and starts out on foot. She goes to a deserted house, where she finds the body of the Grand Master, who possesses her spirit. Myra, now the personification of the Grand Master, tells him he possesses her spirit and that she will restore the respective spirits to their proper bodies, but the medium first hypnotizes her and herself. Varney is outside the house and reports to Myra that, should she desire it, he can release the flood gates of the dam and let the water stream which will cause the house to be washed away. She returns and proceeds to hypnotize the Master and herself. At this point the Master arrives. The Master speaks to him from the lips of Myra: "If you kill my body her's will never awake."

She then hypnotizes herself and the Master, and after a time the two astral bodies return to their proper individuals. Alden is in the sweet girl, while the body of the Black Master now contains his despicable soul. Alden remembers his promise not to kill the Master and rushes to the restored Myra. In the meantime the crafty Master withdraws and gives Varney the promise of a reward. The water bursts forth from the dam and the torrential stream descends with such force that the entire house away. The Master escapes safely, while Myra and Alden are swept down stream. After a long struggle Alden is finally successful and succeeds in bringing the girl he loves safely to the shore.

UNITY SALES CORP.

THE PURSUING VENGEANCE (Five Parts—May 1)—The cast: (Mimi (June Elvidge); Mimi (June Meredith); Godfrey (Henry Moritz); Lester (Henry Carlin); Countess (Simon (Gordon)); (William (Frederic); (Fred (Fred. Andersen); Drouet (Alfred Hesse); (Morrill (Emile (Morrill); (Morrill (Margaret Forrester); Landlady (Margaret Woodburn); Landlord (Frederick Rogers). Produced by Max Sabine.

The Countess Simone, whose jewels are famous, is selected for the first victim of the band. Vantino, a noted connoisseur, as purchased in Paris a wonderfully perfect Boile cabinet. It is brought to his home in New York carrying with it Death. For Vantino, while examining it, is mysteriously slain, the only marks upon him being two livid stains on the back of his neck.

One after another investigators of the cabinet are slain in an equally unfathomable way. There appears to be no solution of the puzzle till Jack Godfrey, "Red" reporter, tackles the circumstances. Godfrey, armed with steel gloves, undertakes to discover the murderer in the Boile cabinet. In the meantime, Crochard, the international crook, who has used the cabinet as a hiding place for part of his booty, burrows to America, together with Mimi, his accomplice, and others of his kind.

Through a skilful ruse he retains access to the death-cabinet which has been found. Finally the police have seized it and placed it in a cell at "Headquarters." Disguised as the detective who has followed him across the Atlantic, Crochard exercises his cunning and his wit and makes a laughing stock of the man set on his trail. The climax is startling.

G-E

Fans

Yes—G-E Fans are a big feature on hot days as far as box office receipts go. The cool house is the big house.

When buying Fans look for those with the G-E monogram in the center; there is over twenty years' experience in Fan Building behind it. Insist on G-E Fans—those that will be just as good five or six years hence as they are to-day—the quiet-running fans that need no more attention than oiling once a year.

STATE RIGHTS NOW SELLING

THIS is one big opportunity for State Rights buyers. A great big smashing Broadway success—now offered for a genuine clean-up in a few remaining unsold states. A wonderfully daring play, done in a great, big daring way—sensational yet dignified, dealing plainly with the premeditated destruction of the unborn. Pronounced "Humanity's most powerful weapon against insidious crime." A marvelous production with a brilliant cast, headed by

TYRONE POWER

This super-picture created a sensation on Broadway. It was endorsed by Press and Public, and warmly recommended by Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, Superior Paulist Father John J. Hughes, the Rev. Thos. A. Daly and many other prominent clergymen, educators, physicians and others. Produced by

LOIS WEBER and PHILLIPS SMALLEY

It ranks highest among recent moving picture productions. State Rights are going fast. Territory already sold includes California, Arizona, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, Arkansas, District of Columbia, Ohio, Washington, Illinois, Maryland, New Jersey, Delaware and Virginia. Wise buyers will speak quick. All communications given immediate attention in the order of their receipt. Direct all communications to the STATE RIGHTS DEPARTMENT of the

REEL AMMUNITION

UNIVERSAL

Vol. I WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 1916 Nos. 5-6

AN APOLOGY

To our many exhibitors who attended the Powers Theatre Wednesday afternoon, at 2:00 P. M., to review the first episode of "Peg o' the Ring," the Universal all-star serial, the undersigned offers a humble apology for the numerous stops which were necessitated during the first reel. We feel mighty bad over it, even now after it is past, and beg the pardon of one and all who were compelled to look at a blank screen. For the injustice to all parties concerned, we wish to state these numerous stops were in no way caused through the fault of the films. Mr. Van Duzee, the general manager of the exposition, can explain very readily the why and wherefores. Again we apologize and offer our regrets.

Editor-in-Chief

Everybody is having a good thr at the Armory. The wise ones h booked Peg o' the Ring.

Richardson Says:

50 Ampere Wagner White Light Converter Equipment as installed in Theatre Booth

"The very foundation of the projection of pictures, either moving or otherwise, is light."

What kind of light are you using? Good films will never fill empty seats if they are badly projected. We want every theatre manager, owner, and operator to know what the WHITE LIGHT CONVERTER has done for others, and what it can do for them.

Protect Your Audience

From a purely business viewpoint, you can make no better investment than to equip your theatre with J-M Fire Extinguishers.

It is sight evidence to your audience that you are using the best to protect them and their sense of safety is the best "call again" invitation you can use. It works right back to the box office.

When you choose a fire extinguisher be sure it includes all the features listed below.

Be sure it's a

J-M FIRE EXTINGUISHER

the most efficient fire fighter you can install.

Read This Feature List

1. A few seconds' easy pumping creates sufficient pressure to empty the contents.
2. Sealed at nozzle, which gives sight evidence that extinguisher is ready for instant action.
3. Carries a steady stream reaching 30 feet.
4. A non-conducting liquid that will extinguish film, electrical, gasoline or oil fires. Harmless to curtains, skin or fabric.

Labeled by the Underwriters' Laboratories and included in the list of approved fire appliances issued by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Install a J-M Extinguisher at accessible points ready for instant action.

Be sure to use J-M Liquid when you recharge your fire extinguisher. It is the only positive assurance of retaining the original efficiency of the J-M Fire Extinguisher. It is non-deteriorating. Sold in one quart cans.

J. H. Genter Co., Inc., Newburgh, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:—We want a seamless Mirroroid screen, silver flesh, 15 x 18 feet, the same dimensions as furnished us on your Order 4281 on APRIL 16, 1913. Please ship at once via Wells-Fargo C. O. D., giving us the usual 10% discount for cash. WE WANT TO STATE THAT WE ARE ONLY DOING WHAT WE HAVE TOLD AGENTS FOR OTHER SCREENS WHO HAVE TRIED TO INTEREST US, THAT WHEN WE BOUGHT ANOTHER IT SURE WOULD BE A MIRROROID.

Yours truly,
V. H. OXLEY.

Mr. Exhibitor, read the above! Note the dates! GET BUSY! Write or wire for samples of Mirroroid, the perfect screen, the screen used and endorsed by 9500 exhibitors the world over. Also the U. S. Government schools, colleges and institutions. Mirroroid is not a paint brush screen but is a metallized glass preparation coated on canvas by the largest coating machine known. Made in 3 colors—silver white, silver flesh, pale gold; 2 finishes—ROUGH OR MATTE.

THE CHALMERS

Publishing Co.

The third and latest edition of this valuable work has just come from the presses.

It is bigger, better, and more helpful than have been either of its predecessors by the same able author.

In daily touch with practical operators throughout the country by reason of his connection with THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in which his PROJECTION DEPARTMENT is featured, Mr. Richardson is especially well qualified to deal with the problems which are constantly confronting the motion picture mechanics upon whose skill the industry depends so largely for its healthy growth.

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK is a carefully prepared guide to perfect projection.

It is an invaluable help to every single individual in the trade who has to do with the mechanical handling of motion picture film.

There are more than 400 Pages of Text and the illustrations—of which there are many—have been especially devised for this particular publication.

My Dream Has Come True

Years ago when the motion picture industry was a teething infant—

I dreamed about a factory where the supreme degree of film quality was the paramount issue.

I dreamed about a studio, completely appointed, where perfect illumination secured maximum light values.

I dreamed about the combination of such a factory with such a studio, so that one could completely serve the motion picture trade.

I dreamed about an organization of film experts, men trained to the minute; scientifically managed—a capable, experienced, thinking unit, operated to efficiently and sufficiently serve.

We have such a factory, the new home of perfect developing and printing.

We have such a studio, and it will soon be available to you at reasonable rental rates.

We will operate our studio in conjunction with our factory, thus securing the highest degree of efficiency.

We have the ideal organization—actively and completely at your service.

With guaranteed film quality and adequate studio facilities, we have everything to offer you. And, everything we have to offer is properly priced and honestly delivered.

Why Eve Ate the Apple!

When Eve plucked the fruit of the tree of knowledge, it wasn't because she particularly fancied the apple. She was driven by a soul consuming curiosity.

When the new born babe first reaches out for the moon, it is governed by the same primal instinct.

Curiosity was the fundamental law of life that impelled the first fish to flip its fins until it could soar the air and walk the land.

Its restless, irresistible demand drove man to explore the ends of the earth, to read the mysteries of the sky and sea and land. It has held him from the cradle to his last sleep, when he wonders of the mysteries beyond. It is responsible for science, for art, for civilization itself.

It is this appeal to the same fundamental element in human nature that swept the world off its feet when Conan Doyle's famous detective stories appeared.

William Gillette added to the fascination of Sherlock Holmes by creating a being that feels, that acts, that lives. Through his genius in dramatic art Essanay has produced a photoplay that throbs with the fire of action, that enthalls, as the mysteries of its plot unfold. It bears the stamp of the fundamental that carries universal appeal.

Sherlock Holmes, with William Gillette, is released in seven acts through V. L. S. E.

A Smashing Success Everywhere!

Unusual in theme—unusual and original in production—unusually strong in cast and written around the most unusual atmosphere ever used in a serial—that of the circus ring, the big top, the sawdust arena—fascinating to young and old alike—

"Peg O' The Ring"

is today the biggest and most successful serial ever produced. Produced on a scale more lavish than any other serial—filled with the genuine thrills of circus life, love and adventure—some daring—staged in under the canvas—presenting the highest class performers in real and regular circus acts—together with the most popular serial stars of the day—

The World DORSEY EXP ON THE REGULAR UNIVER

An Achievement for Exhibitors that Surpasses All

A Quarter of a Million Dollar
Attraction that Means 14
Weeks of Capacity Houses

PUTTING such a costly feature production extraordinary as the Famous DORSEY EXPEDITION PICTURES on the regular UNIVERSAL PROGRAM (at not one cent extra cost to regular Universal Program users), sets an entirely new and wonderful precedent in moving picture history.

Had any other film concern in the world presented such a colossal attraction as the famous DORSEY EXPEDITION PICTURES, they would yowl their heads off in advertising—hire a few extra press agents, boost it to the skies, and then ask exorbitant prices for the feature.

To be honest with you, any film concern would be justified in doing exactly what we describe, for no matter what price Exhibitors paid for the famous DORSEY Pictures, both Exhibitor and patrons would be getting their full money's worth.

THE fact that instead of booking this quarter-of-a-million dollar feature outside of the Universal Program, at advanced prices, the Universal places this magnificent Box Office attraction ON THE REGULAR UNIVERSAL PROGRAM, should at once and for all time, convince every living Exhibitor that the UNIVERSAL PROGRAM offers more genuine money-making attractions than ALL OTHER PROGRAMS now on the market COMBINED. If you are not using the Universal Program make every effort to secure it. This big feature can be booked by any Exhibitor at rates which he can get from any Universal Exchange.

L-KO'S

The Latest and Greatest

ALICE HOWELL

in

"Pirates of The Air"

The comedy films supreme! That's the verdict of the fans. L-KO'S do not depend upon some alleged funny man's idea of clowning for their popularity. Funny and ridiculous situations are provided. Props that cost a fortune are placed at the disposal of the best comedy directors in the world.

Alice Howell has made a reputation for herself—found favor with the fans because not only is her every move a scream—but she has nerve and wit and cleverness that enable her to do stunts that would scare the average acrobatic comedian.

"Pirates of the Air" is PIE for Alice. She is in her element and in the centre of the stage where the fans want to see her all the time.

Up in the air on an airship—dropping from one aeroplane to another in midair; dropping bombs on the police patrol—sailing through space with an umbrella for a parachute—these are a few of the incidents that will pack your house and send your patrons away happy.

Don't forget the special paper ready for this great comedy. Don't forget to boost it for all you are worth. It will make one grand feature for a special comedy night. Don't forget that Alice Howell is featured and that this is a most extraordinary comedy. Wire or write for booking today.

P. S.—Don't forget that this is released on the regular Universal Program.

"The Three Godfathers"

The most wonderful outdoors picture ever produced from the great Saturday Evening Post story by Peter B. Kyne. With a remarkably strong cast including

Harry D. Carey & Stella Razeto

Directed By Ed J. Le Saint.

GEORGE Horace Lorimer, noted editor of the Saturday Evening Post, says: "The Three Godfathers," by Peter B. Kyne, is one of the strongest, most human stories that ever appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

That's why it was adapted for the screen and produced as a BLUEBIRD Photoplay. The power of this appealing play leads you through every human emotion. It is a living expression of an unusual episode of human life.

It is a BLUEBIRD—it must be good.

BROADENING THE GAP

A photoplay is a combination of story, direction, acting and photography.

A perfect photoplay is a delicate synchronization—blending together—of these ingredients.

Sometimes in the telling of a good story photography is slighted; sometimes the acting fails to reach the heights of the direction.

Far and wide one producing firm has gained an enviable reputation for the sureness with which it builds together the delicate structure called a photoplay.

Lasky photoplays have been termed the "highest standard of photographic drama." The guarantee of Lasky on a photoplay is as consistently sound as the mechanical perfection of a time-piece marked, "Swiss movement."

Those responsible for Lasky leadership are not simply satisfied to lead, —the effort is to broaden the gap.

Chapter 4 A Whirlwind Production!

Beginning June 12th, these big Chapter Four scenes of "The Secret of the Submarine" will be shown—the plot of the spies in the bomb maker's house—the capture of Cleo and her imprisonment—Chatterton's struggle to save her—the destruction of the mysterious house and unknown fate of all inside.

ICIAL FEATURE

ROUNDS!

"The Secret of the Submarine" is full of furious action—amazes with its stupendous surprises—swiftly runs the whole gamut of Intense Dramatic Situations, Desperate and Deadly Struggles, Sensational Thrills and Sudden Changes. Enormous attendances are following this serial—stampeded theatres at the showing of every chapter! There's the continuous effort of Lieut. Hope, Cleo, Mahlin, Olga and Morton to win the "secret"—all backed by powerful but conflicting influences. There's the intrigue constantly developing, the double mystery, the succession of smashing sensations that make the big crowds cheer!!

American Film Company, Inc., presents

Directed by George
Sargent

The Film Novel of the Hour!

In Chapter Four the rapid fire of electrifying adventures fairly staggers the onlooker! Brilliant photography and great settings bring out with a big "punch" the bitter clash of the foreign spies and the Americans—climaxed with a tremendous bomb explosion! Thomas Chatterton and Juanita Hansen act with remarkable power—triumph constantly—show wonderful realism. These are supreme film scenes.

Powell's Novelization
In Over 1000
Newspapers

Think of the enormous interest created by over one thousand newspapers now publishing serially E. Alexander Powell's great novelization of "The Secret of the Submarine"! Millions of people, reading the story, want to see the motion pictures. Powell's narrative is intensely interesting, bristles with exciting descriptions and thrilling adventures. Here are some of the leading newspapers running "The Secret of the Submarine":
New York World, Philadelphia Inquirer, Baltimore American, Buffalo Courier, Pittsburgh Gazette Times, San Francisco Chronicle, Los Angeles Record, Indianapolis Star, Milwaukee Journal, Cleveland Leader, Dallas Journal, Omaha Bee

And 1,000 Others

Big Profits for Exhibitors!

"The Secret of the Submarine" means tremendous crowds at your theatre—continuous capacity—an over-worked cash drawer, with good money pouring in constantly. Every chapter is a tenstrike. There are fifteen two-act chapters in all—fifteen weeks of big business, of real money-making. This great serial is the motion picture triumph produced by men who made fortunes with "The Diamond From The Sky" and "The Girl and the Game"! Act today. Book this winner. Wire your reservation now—no obligation involved. Make the big crowds come!

"Her Loving Relations"

ONE-PART COMEDY, RELEASED MONDAY, JUNE 12th

"Dorothy Rich" has money—and relatives. To find out whether her relatives are attracted by her wealth or whether they love her for her own sake, she resorts to a little experiment.

Maybe "blood is thicker than water;" then again maybe "money talks." Who knows—unless he has seen this delightful comedy?

MARY ANDERSON as DOROTHY RICH is supported by Anne Schaefer, George Kunkel and George Lawrence.

"Harold, the Nurse Girl"

ONE-PART COMEDY, RELEASED FRIDAY, JUNE 16th

When Mrs. Henry Peck left her hubby at home to take care of the baby while she went to the theatre, she didn't realize that there was such a creature as a male baby nurse to tempt overworked husbands from their duty.

Harold, the nurse girl, takes care of the baby for Mr. Peck, but if Peck had known then what he knows before the reel is over, Harold would never have appeared again.

Now While You're Thinking About Summer Business—

Are you making doubly sure that your theatre will be just as popular in the hot months as it was in the cool?

By far the best way—the way which will be building solidly for the Fall—and which will bring the money returns you want this Summer—is to pick out the calibre of pictures you know your patrons want and like, and THEN BOOK THEM.

Besides having a wide array of well balanced, well known, well selected plays and players from which you can book on the open market, each V-L-S-E feature you take is priced according to its box office value TO YOU.

Just look over the list of dynamically-charged, interest-compelling pictures on our continuously consistent program. Check off the ones that you know will appeal to your patrons. Get in touch with the nearest Big Four Exchange, and get the price on these features, based on their drawing power, for YOUR theatre.

What safer, saner, more result-producing policy can you follow for Summer business or for all-the-year-round business?

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY OF

HER HUSBAND'S WIFE

AN IVAN PRODUCTION

WRITTEN AND DIRECTED BY IVAN ABRAMSON

EDWARD WEITZEL IN
THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD (June 10th)

Familiarity with Mr. Abramson's work teaches that the writer of "Her Husband's Wife" deals only in serious dramatic material, preferably that which contains plenty of popular punch. His latest photoplay has several lively goes with the Seventh Commandment, and, incidentally, hits the spectator a wallop between the eyes, when the present Mrs. James Gates is introduced to the first Mrs. James Gates, and the fact is brought out that the two ladies are mother and daughter. Although floored, for the instant, by such a situation, one is bound to sit up and take notice by what follows. And the road to this dramatic knockout is not hatched in sunlight and strewn with roses.

Food aplenty in such a story for moral reflection . . . On its artistic side, the picture has rapidity of action, clear-cut character drawing, and holds to the main thread of its plot with gratifying constancy. A well-balanced cast has been intrusted with the acting.

OSCAR COOPER IN MOTION PICTURE NEWS (June 10th)

This is an straight-out sex drama handled in Ivan Abramson's direct, frank and generally logical manner. Mr. Abramson is absolutely remorseless in his punishment of brutality, lust, dissipation and faithlessness. He succeeds also in making the action of his picture move at top speed, holding the interest throughout.

He has provided a thoroughly effective ending, wherein a vampire . . . is confronted with the fact that her own daughter married the man whom the vampire had divorced.

Mr. Abramson's direct methods also lead him to show the vampire in various stages . . . from the time when she posed in the altogether for her first lover . . . until she is lying dead . . . The scenes are nothing if not frank.

A cast headed by Sally Crute, as the vampire; Mignon Anderson, as the daughter, and Augustus Phillips as the chief husband, interprets the story, under Mr. Abramson's direction, and give uniformly good performances.

The settings, photography and lighting are fully up to the standard of other Ivan productions.

Facts and Comments

AN ESTEEMED contemporary speaks of the "impenetrable silence" maintained for a long time by the advocates of censorship within the ranks of the industry. If that admirable silence had been continued but a little longer the Smith-Ilughes Bill might never have emerged from the committee which had it in its keeping.

AGAIN we commend to exhibitors throughout the country the splendid and highly constructive work done by the Ohio exhibitors under the leadership of Charles Megown of Cleveland. The Ohio exhibitors have succeeded in enlisting the co-operation of the women in their fight against legalized censorship. Women, well-intentioned and justly solicitous for the welfare of the child, have been used by designing politicians who are for censorship only because censorship means a fat job and glorious opportunity for "graft." Women are disposed to be fair and have often arrayed themselves on the side of the fanatics and politicians merely because they had never studied the other side. When properly informed their innate sense of fair play has generally led them to see the folly of legalized censorship.

A WELL-KNOWN British film man writes to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD to let its readers know of the great evils of overproduction and over-importation in Great Britain. "Unless," he writes, "the releases are greatly reduced in England I can assure you the market will get into a deplorable condition before very long. As it is one can only book a picture in September and October, not before. The showman is getting pictures at his own price."

* * *

FILM men, meaning exhibitors as well as producers, are watching with great interest the many recent attempts to put ten and twelve reel pictures into the market in direct competition with the so-called legitimate attractions. Does the future of the motion picture lie along these lines? Does the production of huge lengths hold out the biggest profits both for producer and exhibitor? Many film men believe that these monster films are altogether exceptional and in the nature of things always must be. In no field is overproduction more fatal than in this field. These huge productions depend primarily, if not exclusively, upon the big theaters. Have we enough such theaters to absorb a quantity of these ten and twelve reels?

WE NOTICE, not without alarm, the return of the Wild West drama with B'Gosh trimmings. Subtitles are appearing, couched in the supposed frontier dialect. We have noticed the recurrence of such old-timers as "Thar" and "Gal" and "Hoss." Is it time to prepare for the worst? Maybe the "Sheriff" and the "Half-breed" and the "Outlaw" are lurking in ambush. Let's make our protest right now.

* * *

FROM time to time THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is urged to say something hard about the many imitators it has. While we appreciate the good will of our correspondents we cannot get ourselves to share in their fervent indignation. Only the successful publication is imitated, the failures are unnoticed, unwept, unhonored and unused.

THE Governor of Maryland has announced the appointment of the motion picture censors. Two of them are busy politicians and the third, a woman, is the relative of a prominent political appointee. The Maryland press seems to think that the appointees will be too busy to give much of their time to the censoring of motion pictures. Says the Baltimore "News": "Such selections for the work (of censoring motion pictures) can be commended only upon the ground that a good many persons believe there is a lot of nonsense about the law and perhaps the less done under it the better for all concerned." The press of Maryland evidently views censorship as a species of folly. Rumor has it that the one man who expected to become a censor and who was responsible for the passage of the law has been left out in the cold. He is spending much of his time in studying examples of the irony of fate. May we suggest Dante's Purgatory as edifying and perhaps consoling literature on the subject?

An Eclipse of the Screen

By W. STEPHEN BUSH.

IT IS a common observation among theatergoers and critics that there has not been a theatrical season in years offering such splendid and high-grade entertainment as is now enjoyed by the patrons of the speaking-stage in this city. There is wonderful variety, consisting of farce, of comedy, of drama, of Shakespearian classics, of problem plays, of musical productions and in small spots even of tolerable vaudeville. It cannot truthfully be said that the screen is paralleling this success just now. This uniform high quality on the speaking stage may be but a passing phenomenon and the eclipse of the motion picture may be but temporary. There is an awful temptation to moralize and to draw lessons, but we will resist it for the present at any rate. My present intention is rather to draw a happy inference from one of the most successful of the plays on the New York stage even at the risk of advertising that play without regard for the feelings of the advertising department. It's a case where the end must justify the means.

Now then, have you seen the play "Justice"? I will not describe it in detail; for my purpose it is enough to tell you that the play shows the utter folly and inhumanity of making a mental torture chamber out of a modern prison. The keystone of the play, the one scene on which its success depends, passes without a single spoken word. It portrays the rapid overturning of reason as a result of solitary confinement. It only lasts about five or six minutes, and we are hurried through the different stages, ranging from the prisoner's futile efforts to remain calm and self-possessed to the complete breaking up of his mental self-control. It is a wonderful exhibition, not of pantomime, but of the art of expression which scorns the use of words. I only wished some of the so-called high-brows who define motion picture acting as pantomime had been sitting alongside of me. There was soul behind this acting of the tortured prisoner. Compared to such histrionic skill of the highest order the pantomime is mere physical exercise. This brings up to the question of who the actor is. The answer is fraught with significance. It's a man who has done good work both for the speaking and the silent stage—John Barrymore. Great as are this man's natural gifts I doubt whether he could have done justice to the strongest scene in the play without his camera experience.

There is such a thing as screen drama, and it is drama in its strictest definition. It does seem, however, that the screen drama is not as yet fully developed, that it requires the services of the best and most gifted of minds, that it stands in need of specialization and that its rules and requirements and its rewards and its penalties are different from those of the speaking stage and wholly in a class by themselves.

Just at present we are passing through a peculiar period. All of us from the smallest exhibitor to the biggest producer feel that the artistic element in our industry is capable of far greater development than it has yet attained. I remember that the public in 1911 and in 1912 was ready for high-class efforts on the screen long before the producers and exhibitors themselves realized the fact. The public is always on the alert for the best, and the feeling that bigger things remain to be done in the realm of the screen drama is strong, however ill defined it may appear.

One of the most successful producers has said that we seem to have come to a standstill. There is a lot of revamping of old things, there is the ancient melodramatic material hashed up in new ways, but vim and originality, daring and the right kind of sensationalism are today conspicuously absent from the screen. Whatever the men in the other arts may do in the way of making a pillow out of their laurels there is no such relaxation possible in the motion picture art. It needs the sweat of the genius no less than the sweat of the brow.

The Chicago Convention

By W. STEPHEN BUSH.

WHEREVER exhibitors meet the prediction is freely made that the coming national convention of the League will by far exceed any other ever held in point of numbers. No convention has ever aroused even a tithe of the interest displayed in the Chicago event. Many and varied are the factors which contribute to this result.

In the first place the spirit of organization has had an extraordinary revival in the exhibiting ranks. No one who has been without personal experience can even faintly understand the difficulty of getting exhibitors to unite and to act in a spirit of intelligent co-operation. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has surely tried to do its proper share to promote a strong exhibitors' organization. The present revival of the organizing spirit no doubt is in some measure at least due to the constant urgings in these columns.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD believes in exhibitors' organizations simply because, in its opinion, such organizations are helpful to the entire industry. They promote a spirit of individual and collective responsibility. They make or ought to make for better standards in taste and in ethics, for greater freedom of choice and for greater strength in fighting the enemies of the motion picture. Exhibitors' organizations can do wonders in opposing the wrong sort of men in their ranks, in insisting on better and more progressive methods of showmanship and in stimulating every kind of constructive endeavor. Next to the efforts of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD in keeping the light of organization bright and steady the most potent factor in reviving the spirit of organization has been the success which has attended organization. In more than one city organization has saved exhibitors from losses and from the black shadow of defeat. The question of a living price of admission has been solved both to the satisfaction of the exhibitor and the public.

The greatest and most compelling cause of the new spirit of organization, however, lies in the fact that our industry is undergoing profound changes and in consequence of these changes the exhibitors will find themselves obliged to meet new conditions and to rely far more than in the past upon their own initiative and upon their own abilities. In this country the exhibitor has never been called into the councils of the industry. There has not been, as in England and France, a film parliament in which the exhibitor has ever found adequate representation. Intuitively the exhibitors feel that they will be able to meet new conditions much better when united and animated by a common purpose. There are many difficult problems for the exhibitor to meet and he feels that he will be better able to meet them after he is thoroughly organized on a national basis. There is a good deal being said about a "Bureau of Information, Advice and Assistance" which is to be established by the organized exhibitor with headquarters in New York City.

We hope that the convention which will meet in Chicago on July 11th will not only be attended by a large and thoroughly representative gathering, but that its work will be productive of much practical good; that it will be both constructive and progressive, and above all things that it will aid to a sound self-sustaining financial basis.

Story Scarcity

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON.

REMARKABLE interview is that given by Jesse L. Lasky to a reporter of the New York Sun last week.

A great weakness in motion picture production is freely disclosed, though many other producers have been shy about letting the truth be known, and there is a ring of sincerity about Mr. Lasky's utterances, clearly manifest throughout his argument, which entitles them to serious consideration. He is the first of the big producers to lay the present situation bare without the slightest attempt at disguise or concealment, and the only one to penetrate the Achilles Heel of the business at one shot.

After deploring our recent lack of progress in a new and beautiful art, he attempts to get at the cause. He can not find that it lays in a dearth of good screen interpreters. He lauds both those who have grown up in the art and those who have come to it with reputations established in a sister art. I am in strong accord with him, if his general meaning is that actors and actresses are not only responding splendidly to their opportunities, but that they often carry mediocre plays on their shoulders to a measure of success.

He speaks in high terms of men engaged in the scientific departments and appears to feel no uneasiness over the progress being made by scenic artists and art directors. He finds that directors are improving, are striving and doing their best with the material given them to visualize, and, after summing up, after eliminating those not responsible for this dull period in the new art, he asks, "Why is it not advancing? The answer is in Shakespeare's famous line," thereupon quoting it, "The play's the thing."

The Immortal Bard had a way of solving complicated problems in a manner so simple that we have come to quote him freely on many subjects without examining the depth of thought behind his plain statements. The play for him was a medium, just as the pictured story is a medium, and it requires no ability to fall in love with a medium of expressing something, especially when that medium is in itself fascinating as an art of expression. When genius has something to express through moving pictures, or through a stage play, the story itself ranks first, not its interpreters, not those who direct its movement.

"I'll have these players play something." "I'll have grounds more relative than this," says Shakespeare through the Prince of Denmark, following with "The play's the thing," the instrument through which he intends to entrap the conscience of a king. No one more profoundly realized that the player can only improve in measure to his opportunity. "What would he do had he the motive and the cue for passion that I have?" No one more profoundly realized that the player would do a thousand times better with a vital story than with a tragedy of Euripides, "What is Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba?"

Where are our vital stories for the screen, not the outworn "Hecubas" we are patching up and reflecting, but those suited to the new medium, to the place where we dwell, to the time in which we are living? "Our dramatists," says Mr. Lasky plainly, "novelists, scenarioists, are not delivering real plays, living, breathing, human-interest stories worthy of the name." They are, he declares, rarely worth the effort made to present them on the screen, an effort nobly made in many instances by capable interpreters and capable directors.

Mr. Lasky continues with a fearless statement:

"Therefore, I say the motion picture dramatic art is at a standstill as far as real progress is concerned on account of the poorly constructed, quickly conceived stories it is receiving from the majority of writers who are writing for the screen. If the motion picture drama is to progress and strengthen the marvelous hold it already has on the affections of the public as a form of amusement it will need better stories, far better stories than it has been receiving of late. The situation is critical."

The better class of exhibitors is in accord; the public is in accord—wherein lies the remedy? Mr. Lasky does not mince words in saying that the need for better plays is paramount. It is above all other considerations as regard to importance. As to how this need should be met I can only speak from the point of view of one who has written a large number of stories for the screen and without a dissenting voice among other authors I have met in our organizations and in private life.

The modern, up-to-date, working scenario, not a synopsis, but a complete expression of the author's idea through interpretive action, revelation and pictorial effect, a plan so well devised and well revised as to enable the director to put it into working with system and economy on short notice calls for creative talent quite as high as that shown in the novel, or in the stage drama, and a craftsmanship so peculiar that it seems to discourage the very ones who are best equipped by nature and experience to master its difficulties. On the other hand, from authors not equipped by nature and experience to apply creative and constructive imagination to the scenario, producers may well look in vain for any improvement on what has been done.

By Mr. Lasky's own process of elimination we can not look for great improvement except through the author who has mastered the new craft, and he must be a veritable artist besides. From him must come the spiritual element of thought and passion, an awakening of new moods, or a stirring of fresh and vigorous train of ideas. He must be familiar enough with the routine of expert composition to know where he can most effectively begin his story, how he can prepare for a continuous adventure so as to give character to principals without losing interest, how to arouse curiosity so as to sustain attention during explanatory and preparatory scenes, how to hold expectation with gradually increasing intensity, how to avoid what is devoid of verisimilitude, how to write a logical brief from beginning to end, and how to end with consistency and yet with some form of compensation which shall satisfy a mixed audience.

The producer is asking something of an author.

Not weeks, but months, are required to write a fine scenario. And while the author has carefully in mind all that makes for strength of structure and clarity of exposition, he must remember that his medium is one of picture effect. He must open a golden door to new and delightful fields at which the imagination has hitherto knocked in vain and reveal them through fascinating sweetness of suggestion. He must originate new problems and answer them himself in a plausible and convincing manner. To mirror man in his infinite variety, to understand the relation of Beauty and Truth, to grasp the ethical effect of art upon culture, to stir a mixed audience with views of a pulsing human heart, a tormented human brain requires genius.

Women Oppose Censorship

Go on Record Against All Kinds of Political Meddling With Pictures—Ask for Children's Subjects.

By Betty Shannon.

AT THE closing meeting of its ten-day session in New York City last Thursday, the General Federation of Women's Clubs went on record as opposed to legal censorship and instituted a definite course of constructive action for the coming two years which will mean much for motion pictures for children. At this meeting, Miss Helen Varick Boswell, chairman of the Educational Department of the General Federation, read the report of the work of her own and the Civics and Drama divisions of the Federation during the session in behalf of the picture situation. The acceptance of her report on the part of the large body of 2,500 delegates from every section of the country and the thousands of visiting clubwomen gave the backing of the federated organizations to the sentiment expressed. Now, politicians will find no plea for Federal Censorship or of State Censorship in the statement that the mothers of the country want either. The mothers themselves, through their clubs, have expressed their disapproval of the political domination of picture control.

After the big motion picture conference held jointly by the Educational, Civics and Drama Committees on Saturday afternoon, May 27, at which Mary Gray Peck spoke for the women, John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, spoke for the producer and Orrin G. Cocks for the National Board of Review, the work of the committees was concentrated in daily smaller conferences. Mrs. Dexter Thurber of Bristol, R. I., a woman who has successfully worked out children's material in Providence, was appointed chairman of these meetings by Mrs. Charles W. Cartwright of Minneapolis, Minn., chairman of the Drama Department.

Women from many states came to discuss the making of a demand for better films, and especially a demand for children's films. On Wednesday a committee composed of Mrs. Thurber, Miss Genevieve Cline of Cleveland, O., Miss Louise Connolly, the educational expert of the Newark, N. J., Public Library; Miss Helen Duey of the Woman's Home Companion, and Miss Harriet Vittum of Chicago, Ill., were appointed to make a survey of the field for which they presented to the General Federation. The following report, which is the one given by Miss Boswell at the closing meeting of the session, is that survey:

Daily consultations under the direction of the departments of Civics, Education and a sub-committee on the Drama resulted in a most comprehensive survey of the motion picture situation from a national standpoint. A symposium of opinions has been gathered, not from theory, but from the actual experience of the field, and the best means of constructive methods. These findings developed that too much emphasis has been placed upon the evil side of motion pictures and demonstrated the necessity for a positive, constructive policy to minimize the harm and emphasize the good.

The consensus of opinion was that the motion picture must be recognized for the present as a commercial amusement rather than an educational or philanthropic medium.

That a reason for a national demand for better conditions is evident. That this demand is based upon the peculiar danger to the adolescent of a large percentage of the films as they are being shown upon the screen.

That believing in the strength of concerted action and co-operation as opposed to antagonism, there is a great opportunity for a better understanding between the club women of the country and the motion picture producers as to the immediate needs of the boys and girls.

That a workable plan of procedure now in operation in many communities involves a special committee of the boys and girls; that this plan is being extended to include the family program.

That exhibitors and exchanges through local groups working with their local exhibitors play new games involving the support of every club woman in the community.

That the development of the plan on a national scope necessitates a central committee to work directly with the producers.

In compliance with the suggestion in the above report that a permanent committee be appointed by the Federation to co-operate directly with motion picture producers in this movement whereby clubwomen hope to secure the sort of films they want their children to see, Mrs. Josiah Evans Cowles of California, the incoming president of the Federation, and her board of directors appointed Mrs. Charles W. Cartwright of the Drama Department, Miss Helen Varick Boswell of the Educational Department, Mrs. George Zimmerman of the Civics Department, Miss Louise Connolly and Mrs. Dexter Thurber as a special committee on motion pictures from the General Federation to make a close and scientific view of the picture industry from every angle for the next two years and to bring the work of the women's clubs and the producers of motion pictures together.

Further evidence of the intense interest directed toward the motion picture by the large body of women is given in the resolution adopted by the board, which is known as resolution five, it being the fifth in all the number of important actions taken by the board. The resolution follows:

Inasmuch as the motion picture has become a potent and seemingly important factor in our national life, commercially, educationally and morally, and in accordance with the recommendations of our General Federation Program adopted by this convention, be it resolved that the General Federation of Women's Clubs undertake a country-wide survey of motion picture entertainment and that it ask club women to form local committees among themselves to make constructive criticism of motion picture entertainment; also be it resolved that the Board of Review of the Federation of Women's Clubs appoint a committee to co-operate with manufacturers of films to secure a higher moral standard of general productions and a larger supply of proper and appropriate films for children.

Although in its fifth resolution, the General Federation of Women's Clubs asks for local censorship boards, the word "censorship" in this case means constructive endeavor rather than destructive. It means practically the word "review," the leaders of the women's clubs being unanimous in their belief that better pictures can only be secured through an encouragement backed by box office receipts when good pictures are shown.

Perhaps the hottest and most keenly debated question which came up before the entire convention was that of motion pictures. Not only were motion picture conferences left to the regular meetings devoted only to them. A discussion which lasted for several hours followed the talk of Dr. Cranston Brenton, president of the National Board of Review, at the big Civics conference at the Hotel Astor on Monday afternoon, May 29.

Dr. Brenton expressed his great belief in the motion picture as educational, moral and entertainment power, and sketched the growth of the industry. He asked the women to realize their own responsibility in determining what the demand for motion pictures shall be. He told the history of the national board. He gave a history of the rise of this present unrest and demand for censorship, which comes from a desire to protect the adolescent child, and expressed his disapproval of legal censorship.

Dr. Brenton's views of censorship controlled by the state or nation roused a great storm of discussion from women all over the country, proving, eventually, that the majority of women do not favor this method of expressing public approval or disapproval of pictures.

On Tuesday at noon at the press luncheon given at the McAlpin Hotel, Bainbridge Colby appeared on the program. The Motion Picture Board of Trade entertained at one table.

On Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the upper drill room of the Seventh Regiment Armory, Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree's first motion picture, "Macbeth," was shown following a talk by Frank Lascelles, Pageantry Master of the Durbar in India, on "Pageantry." Sir Herbert himself appeared after the picture was shown.

On Thursday morning at 7 o'clock in the armory, Mr. Lascelles and Miss Helen Varick Boswell announced the organization of a national society for patrons of the motion pictures called "The Photoplay League," to which every one is asked to subscribe. The offices will be found in the Ritz Carlton Hotel in New York City.

The final meeting devoted to the motion picture art, was held on Saturday morning, June 3, at the Astor. Mrs. Charles W. Cartwright presided and had read again the report of the survey committee, which was given at the last meeting of the General Federation. The report was taken up clause by clause by various speakers.

The most illuminating talk, perhaps, was that given by Miss Louise Connolly of Newark, N. J., herself an expert on adolescent psychology, in explanation of the clause that the national demand for better pictures is based upon the peculiar danger to the adolescent child of a large percentage of the films now being displayed upon the screen.

Miss Connolly suggested that almost nothing is known by adults about the adolescent mind, the girls and boys of the years between eleven or twelve and eighteen being very well able to keep the real workings of their minds from those who attempt to pry into them.

"Up to ten or twelve years of age, the child pays little attention to adults or to the adult world in which he is eventually to live," said Miss Connolly. "With the beginning of adolescence they begin to notice the actions of adults, but they do not understand the 'whys,' the causal relations of things. They do not understand the world which is going to be theirs. They work up the relations between things slowly. In reading, they have to dig hard to learn these things. But a work of art, such as a motion picture play, suddenly puts things into their true relation before their eyes. The child is suddenly given a system. It is necessary for the child to focus all of its attention through its eyes on the screen. It is receiving many impressions through only one sense—that of sight. Therefore, the photoplay must be violently dramatic."

During the two years before the next biennial meeting of the Federation Miss Connolly will go deeply into the subject of the photoplay and the adolescent child.

Mrs. Dexter Thurber, Miss Genevieve Cline of Cleveland, Miss Helen Ducey, Mr. Frank Lascelles, Mrs. Dessez and Mrs. Edith Dunham Foster of Boston appeared on the program.

"We feel that the Federation has made possible the following out of a plan which will make a great change for the better in motion pictures," said Mrs. Cartwright, chairman of the new committee at the close of the meeting Saturday. "There should be a well defined division, we feel, between motion pictures as a purely educational force, to be used in connection with the schools, and motion pictures as an amusement. We choose to focus our attention on them as an amusement. There is no doubt that they are the most tremendous entertaining power of the present generation. We feel that, since the children of the nation are being so perceptibly drawn to the picture and since their lives are being so surely affected by what they see, it is most important that they see things which will make them better citizens. That is why the mothers of the nation are so tremendously interested in the pictures."

"The producers who have kindly co-operated with us during the convention have made it clear that they are willing to give us what we will create a demand for. We want to get the women of the nation, not so much put their ban on the poor pictures as to put their seal of approval and concentrate their efforts on the good ones."

Miss Boswell and Mrs. Zimmerman, also on the new committee, were of the opinion that so new an art as the pictures needs time to reach its proper level.

Mrs. Thurber is especially interested in the children's program, and Miss Connolly will work along special lines of child psychology.

Colby Talks to Clubwomen

Lawyer Appeals for Their Support Against All Forms of Legalized Censorship.

BAINBRIDGE COLBY, who as the representative of William R. Hearst, has delivered telling arguments at Congressional and legislative censorship hearings, talked to 300 members of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at a luncheon in the Hotel McAlpin on the afternoon of Memorial Day. Mr. Colby's subject was "Film Censorship." The speaker brought with him his best brand of wit—doubly effective by reason of its simplicity, directness and clarity. He described the beginnings of censorship and told in forceful manner why it should not be extended to the motion picture. At the close of his speech, which was heartily applauded, he was thanked by Mrs. Thomas J. Vivian, the toastmistress, who also called attention to the fact that the floral table decorations were provided by the Motion Picture Board of Trade.

The luncheon was given by the local biennial press bureau to the press department of the General Federation. As guests of honor were Mrs. Grace Julian Clarke of Indianapolis, chairman of the national press department, and her associate chairman of the forty-nine State Federations.

"We recognize the fact that your attitude on the censorship question is based upon what you think is right," said Mr. Colby to his distinguished auditors. "We recognize that it is formed, that it will be formed, from such reflection and information as you can get. We are anxious to have the moral, the practical, the political, the personal reinforcement of your confidence and your support in positions that we deem to be right."

"This idea of censorship presents two very important aspects. One is the legal, the other the artistic. There are some remedies that are more injurious than the things said to be redressed by the remedies. Let me illustrate just what I mean. Some months ago a brokerage firm was convicted of a crime against the penal laws. The Supreme Court of the United States has just rendered a decision setting aside the conviction because the officers of the law allowed their zeal to outrun their discretion. While it was right to seize records and utilize them in the conviction the constitution said the methods used by the officers of the law constituted a greater crime and menace to society than did the original crime."

"I cheerfully and frankly admit that there are some pictures shown on the screen that are a disgrace to our civilization, but the way to cure them is to score the evil. Ninety-nine per cent. of the business, however, is clean."

"I sincerely trust that I have said enough to kindle your interest, to turn your minds into serious channels on this subject," said Mr. Colby at the end of a twenty-minute address. "There are statutes in every state against indecencies or immoralities tending to corrupt morals. There has been but one complaint against a motion picture film in this city, and that was followed by prompt indictment and conviction. Anything you see that shocks your sense of right or decency or propriety you can bring to the attention of the prosecuting officer and it becomes his duty to investigate. Then the process is set in motion whereby no guilty man can escape. Let us see that the law against indecency and impropriety is exercised."

Maryland Censors Appointed

Governor Harrison's Choice Do Not Receive Popular Endorsement—Law Becomes Operative June 28.

GOVERNOR Harrison of Maryland has at last broken the suspense in regard to the appointments for the three members for the Motion Picture Censor Board. The names of the people who have been slated to fill the positions were given out on Monday night, May 29. The term of office is three years and the salary of each member of the board is $2,400 a year.

The following are the members of the board which became operative on June 28: William F. Stone, former Collector of the Port, who is a Republican leader in Baltimore. He will be the minority representative on the board. Mrs. Thomas P. Harrison of Baltimore, who is a sister-in-law of Attorney General Albert C. Ritchie. She will be classed as a Democrat. Charles E. Harper of Salisbury, and formerly Mayor of that town. He is also a Democrat.

While it is known that Mrs. Harrison's name was slated for this post several weeks ago, the Governor had a long list of names before him of those who wished to be named for the positions. Mr. Stone's appointment was a big surprise to all and in an editorial the Baltimore News says in part:

"The News would commend Mr. William F. Stone's selection for a good many positions of trust and importance. He is quite an efficient man. * * * But up to the present moment nothing Mr. Stone has done or left undone would suggest he was either fitted by training, experience and study or by natural predilection to be a censor of moving pictures. 'Somebody' said in the course of the discussion of the censorship bill that properly to perform the duty would require all of a man's time. * * * If the duties of the position have not been misrepresented, we stand ready to wager, * * * that neither he nor his confrere from Salisbury is going to do the amount of censoring the law anticipates shall be done."

"Such selections for the work can be commended, therefore, only upon the ground that a good many persons believe there is a lot of nonsense about the law and perhaps the less done under it the better for all concerned."

EDISON REISSUES.

A number of reissues of pictures that made highly favorable impressions when they first were shown will be released by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., through the General Film Company, during June. They will be released at the rate of two each week, a three-reel drama each Tuesday and a single-reel or two split-reel subjects each Wednesday. Notable among the Edison June releases are "The Stoning" and "The Southerners," plays that made such decided hits when first released that repeated requests for reissues have been made.

The schedule of reissues for June is as follows: Tuesday, June 6, "The Stoning," drama, 3,000 feet; Wednesday, June 7, "Love's Labor Lost," cartoon, and "Camping With the Blackfeet," scenic; Tuesday, June 13, "The Man in the Street," drama, 3,000 feet; Wednesday, June 14, "The Charge of the Light Brigade," 1,000 feet; Tuesday, June 20, "Out of the Ruins" drama, 3,000 feet; Wednesday, June 21, "The Pic Piper of Hamelin," juvenile, 1,000 feet; Tuesday, June 27, "The Southerners," drama, 3,000 feet.

IMPERSONATED FORD STERLING—"PINCHED."

A man who represented himself to be Ford Sterling, the well known Triangle player, was arrested in Charlotte, N. C., on the complaint of several merchants who had lent the man money on his representations and then became suspicious of him. The man finally admitted that his name was Richard Sterling and he was not the popular screen favorite who, at the time the stranger was collecting on the strength of his name, was working daily in the studio at Los Angeles.

Censors Get Setback

Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas Reverses Ruling as "Arbitrary and Oppressive."

FOLLOWING closely upon the order of the highest courts of Pennsylvania prohibiting the lower courts from overruling the decisions of the State Board of Censors, unless such decisions were clearly an abuse of discretion—in other words, unless these decisions were such that which no reasonable man could concur—the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas, No. 4 last week handed down a ruling reversing the action of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors in demanding a series of eliminations in the Lubin-V-L-S-E feature, "Dollars and the Woman."

The opinion is regarded in film circles generally as a most important victory not only for the Lubin and V-L-S-E companies, but for moving picture interests as a whole, because it offers the first hope of any restraint upon the actions of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, since the ruling of the Supreme Court, giving them seemingly unlimited power, went into effect. Ever since that decision was handed down, the interests of the film industry in Pennsylvania have been hopelessly submerged under the high-handed oppression and apparently unchecked domination of the state censors.

As bad as conditions were prior to the bestowal of this added power upon the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, they immediately partook of a despotism as imperious as that of any which it is possible to conceive; for, by the ruling of the Supreme Court, the film interests were seemingly completely deprived of obtaining any justice from the lower courts, if there was any room for belief that such justice might agree with the findings of the censors. This meant that whether the lower courts agreed with the findings or whether they didn't, if they had reason to think that some sane member of the community might find reason in the action of the Board of Censors, they were powerless to alter that action. Pictures were slashed right and left, and there began in the state a perfect orgy of censorship from which, by reason of the conditions imposed by the higher courts, there seemed no relief for the moving picture manufacturer.

In the decision, which is a sweeping condemnation of the censors and a most complete vindication of this production, the court holds that the board "abused its discretion and acted arbitrarily and oppressively." The opinion of the court in full, which is important as a precedent in other appeals of like nature, follows:

The Lubin Manufacturing Company has prepared for the purpose of sale and public exhibition, by means of the cinematograph, a series of pictures presenting the scenes of the feature, "Dollars and the Woman." In obedience to the act of May 15, 1915, P. L. 534, these pictures were submitted for censorship to the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors. Upon examination of the same, the board disapproved of them by two members of the board resulted in the board disapproved conditionally. The condition on which this approval is predicated is that certain scenes and certain so-called subtitles explanatory of the progress of the plot of the play shall be cut out and that certain other subtitles suggested by the censors shall be introduced on the films that contain the pictures. Unless that condition is complied with, the whole series is condemned as tending to corrupt morals, and is therefore obscene or corrupt morals. The matter comes before the court upon the appeal of the manufacturer from this action of the censors.

Except in certain cases, where the law has been referred to, it is the duty of the Board of Censors to examine all moving picture films, reels or stereoscopic views intended to be exhibited or used in this state and to disapprove such films if they are obscene, indecent or immoral and such as tend in the judgment of the board to corrupt morals. They are required to set forth in their records the ground of disapproval, and to exhibit in their records the grounds of disapproval. It is unlawful to display, exhibit, or use any motion picture film or reel which has not been approved by the board.

The Court's jurisdiction in such matters rests on the grant by Section 20 of the act of May 15, 1915, to the board of censors, and the board of censors and be aggrieved by the order of that body of the right of appeal from the decision of the Board to the Court of Common Pleas of the proper county.

It was settled by the decision of the Supreme Court in the matter of the Appeal of the Franklin Film Manufacturing Company, not yet reported, that the board of censors has no authority to reverse the order of the correction of those films made by the Board of Censors as they may be arbitrary or oppressive. The Court may reverse the action of the Censors when they find evidence of an abuse of the discretion vested in them by law but not merely because it differs with their views upon questions of taste or even because it regards the objections raised by the "censors to the pictures disapproved as 'minute and far fetched' or without merit." The proper ground of inquiry in this case is whether or not the censors in insisting on changes in the appellant's cinematograph representation of "Dollars and the Woman" have abused the discretion and authority.

Discretion is meant the power to discriminate and determine what, under existing circumstances, is right and proper. The lawful exercise of discretion involves a fair consideration of the facts and the application of the particular question to the disposition of which is to be applied. It excludes not only the play of fancy or caprice, but also servile adherence to precedent and to general opinion.

At the hearing of the appeal every possible effort was made to reach a solution of the question it involves by means of the ordinary methods of proof. These, however, were inadequate, and in order to comprehend the matter before them, the members of the court, with the consent of both parties to the controversy, personally viewed, at the factory of the appellant, an exhibition of the pictures upon which the Censors had passed. This enabled the court to know the opinion of the Supreme Court, per Von Moschizsker, J., in the case above mentioned. The argument of the play reproduced in this series of pictures is given in the appendix in its application for their examination by the Censors in the following words:

"Description."
Madge Hillyer borrows $250 from Crewe, a former lover, in order that her husband may proceed West to sell a snuffing device. His plans fail and he becomes poorer in a hotel. A paid by Crewe. When Hillyer returns home successful and rich, he covers this, he decides to leave her. But they become reconciled through baby love and explanation of Crewe's true relations.

This summary outlines the story of the play in the most general manner and fails to give an adequate or just idea of the plot or the method of its treatment, or is relevant to the question of degree explanatory of the criticisms of the board. It may not be amiss to observe in passing that in the opinion of the Court, an inspection of these pictures cannot convince any unbiased mind of the purity of the underlying motive of the story that they illustrate and satisfy that the tender pathos of the plot absolutely precludes the impressions and suggestions imputed by the Censors to the features that they have condemned.

The requirements imposed by the Censors as a condition precedent to their approval of the appellant's pictures are expressed by them as follows:

- No. 1. A—Eliminate subtitle "Soon it must be enough for three."
- No. 2. A—Eliminate scene showing thief cutting handbag from woman's arm. This means that view of shirts, etc., is to be entirely removed.
- No. 3. B—Eliminate subtitle "Myself."
- No. 4. C—Eliminate subtitle "Could you not leave me even my memories?"
- No. 5. D—Eliminate subtitle "Only a beast could think I mean such a thing."
- No. 6. E—Eliminate subtitle "I'll never forgive your insult."
- No. 7. F—Eliminate subtitle "Shame."
- No. 8. G—Eliminate subtitle "Telephone the Mother's Hospital for an ambulance."
- No. 9. H—Insert subtitle to indicate reason for woman's fall to floor as not approaching maternity.
- No. 10. A—Eliminate all views of Crewe's baby and of baby in hospital, also as they come from hospital, in street car and in home.
- No. 11. I—Eliminate telegram "You have a twelve pound boy, etc."
- No. 12—Insert subtitle when baby appears in this reel in moving arms to indicate its high birth.
- No. 13. A—Eliminate subtitle "Men of Crewe's type don't spend money on a woman unless—"
- No. 14. B—Eliminate subtitle "Unless she pays."

The appellant is willing to comply with the wishes of the Board as embodied in the second requirement above set forth. So far as the appeal relates thereto, it is withdrawn.

The reasons advanced by the Censors in support of the remaining criticisms of the pictures are as follows:

- (a) That some of the pictures "exhibit the process of human reproduction."
- (b) That others "exhibit the processes of a lying-in hospital."
- (c) That "the wife is shown for the distance of 1,000 feet in a state of pregnancy."
- (d) That the wife is shown in travail.
- (e) That certain subtitles indicate that the woman is in a pregnant condition.
- (f) That certain subtitles indicate that an improper proposal has been made to her.
- (g) That the pictures "break down every barrier that exists between boys and girls."
- (h) That they "show the private relationships of a family."
- (i) That the accusation that the wife's hospital bills were paid by an outsider suggests illegitimacy.

With respect to reasons (a), (b), (c), (d), (g) and (h) it suffices to say that none of these objections in the sense in which they are pressed have any foundation whatever in fact. The other objections relate to scenes or details which are immaterial to the question as to the Court to have no immoral bearing or corrupting effect.

Although this was specifically denied from the witness stand by one of the censors, a careful study of the testimony adduced by a personal view of the pictures under discussion has convinced the court that in condemning the features whose elimination from the films has been directed the Board acted on the theory that all references to such matters as motherhood, birth or the sex relations between man and woman are necessarily productive of lewd and evil thoughts, and that any reference to "things not usually spoken of with great freedom" is debasing and will probably conduce to immorality. Such a proposition is, of course, altogether too broad. Its adoption as the basis of a hard and fast rule of condemnation is manifestly unreasonable and absurd.

It is established to the satisfaction of the court that the elimination the Censors have ordered in this case the Board palpably erred. Upon the whole evidence before it the Court is of the opinion (and so finding the question) that the Board abused its discretion and acted arbitrarily and oppressively. For this reason, the appeal (so far as it has not been withdrawn) is sustained, and the order of disapproval of the moving picture films above-mentioned for default of compliance with any of its requirements except the second is reversed.

E. W. SWEIGERT, BRIDEGROOM.

E. W. Sweigert, Exchange Manager of the International Film Service, Inc., at Philadelphia, dropped into the main office on Saturday and announced his forthcoming marriage to Miss Marjorie E. Hall, also of the Quaker City. June 7th is the date set for Mr. Sweigert's benedictine debut.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

CENSORSHIP TO FORE IN CHICAGO.

It Will Be One of the Most Important Subjects Discussed at Coming Convention—Notable Picture Stars to Be at the Exposition.

THE National Convention of the M. P. E. L. of America, held in Chicago, 1912, at the La Salle Hotel, was attended by 300 delegates. At the coming National Exposition and Convention, to be held at the Coliseum from July 10 to 18, it is expected over 1,000 exhibitors will be present. Some of these will come from far-off Australia and the Philippines, and also from Alaska.

A daily program will be the rule at the exposition at the Coliseum and many special events have been arranged for, including the appearance of notable moving picture stars. The names of several of these will create a sensation when they are announced.

The exposition committee announces that space is selling fast and that the Coliseum will present a magnificent appearance on the opening night, July 12. The date of the opening of the national exposition must not be confounded with the date of the opening of the national convention; the latter opens July 10 and the former on July 12.

Censorship will be one of the most important subjects discussed at the coming convention. Already this theme has been debated at meetings of exhibitors all over the country, and a resolution embodying the consensus of opinion of the exhibitors of the United States and Canada cannot fail, after its passage, to have great weight with the people generally.

Harry Hyman, an active member of the press, entertainment and exposition committee, recently attended the Elks' States Convention at Danville, Ill., and he did some good work on the side while there in the interest of the coming exposition and convention. He visited the owners of the Central theater, the Fisher, Lyric, Habit, Colonial, Olympic and Majestic, and presented each with a handsome colored slide, with the request that it be shown on their screens up until the time of the convention and exposition. These slides are being distributed throughout the entire country, and exhibitors everywhere are requested to show them and aid in advertising the big event.

The Chicago hotels are already preparing to handle a great number of visitors during the period of the exposition and convention. Sam Spedon, Vitagraph's popular representative, will be in charge of the official special convention train from New York. It is reported Mr. Spedon will have his hands full in taking care of the reservations. It is his intention to pick up as many exhibitors on the way as is possible, and, if conditions warrant it, he will put on another section to take care of the overflow.

KEYSTONE EXHIBITORS ELECT OFFICERS.

Also Further Arrangements for Annual State Convention and Exposition, Beginning June 26.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, Inc., held its election of officers and directors for the ensuing year at its regular meeting June 1 in the League headquarters, Penn avenue and Ninth street, Pittsburgh. The meeting was well attended and many matters of importance were taken up, including the rounding out of plans for the coming Pennsylvania State Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in this city. The retiring president, G. W. Sahner, acted as chairman.

The result of the election was: President, A. J. Barthell; vice president, Fred N. Smith; secretary, James Delves; treasurer, I. W. Shearer; board of directors, I. W. Shearer, James Delves, A. J. Barthell, Frederick J. Herrington, G. W. Sahner, Sol Oppenheimer, Christ Vollmer, Henry Polk and Oliver McKe. The yearly report of the treasurer was submitted, and the figures showed the financial affairs of the League to be in satisfactory shape.

The local committee on arrangements, of which G. W.

Sahner is chairman, for the annual state convention and exposition, to be held in the Moose Temple, Pittsburgh, on June 26, 27 and 28, reported all details being rapidly completed, and that indications are it will be the largest and most successful gathering in the history of the organization. Secretary Delves stated that nearly all of the exhibit space, comprising about 6,000 feet, has already been contracted for. He read letters from Cleveland, Youngstown, Wheeling, and other cities in neighboring states, assuring him of delegations to the convention from those sections.

As a special feature of the gathering the League has taken advantage of the Moving Picture World's tour of F. H. Richardson to have him speak here on the last day of the convention, June 28, on the subject of projection. Negotiations are under way with the manufacturers and the Motion Picture Board of Trade for several leading stars to be present at the convention. On June 11 National President Herrington and Secretary Delves expect to leave for New York City, where they will remain about a week, and expect to attend the luncheon to be given by the Board of Trade at Delmonico's June 16.

IOWA EXHIBITORS MEET.

Children's Matinee Endorsed—Officers Elected and Delegates Chosen for Chicago Convention.

SPECIAL matinees, one afternoon a week, for children were endorsed at the fourth annual convention of League of Motion Picture Exhibitors, held at the Auditorium, Des Moines, Ia., May 23-24. In working out the plan in Des Moines the members of the Des Moines Screen Club will co-operate with the mothers' clubs in selecting programs. Mrs. A. W. Brett and Mrs. Hewitt of Des Moines appeared before the meeting to urge these special shows.

A. H. Blank of the Garden theater of Des Moines was elected president of the league. Other officers chosen were: First Vice-president, W. D. Ingledue, Marshalltown; second vice-president, H. De Baggio, Colfax; secretary-treasurer, J. C. Collins, Des Moines; executive committee, A. Frankel, Casino theater, Des Moines; J. H. Heffner, Mason City, and A. J. Diebold.

Retiring President Diebold was elected national vice-president from Iowa.

Delegates to the national convention in July at Chicago will be Abe Frankel of Des Moines, Fred Yount of Dubuque, W. D. Ingledue of Marshalltown, Thomas A. Brown of Iowa City, J. E. Bryant of Waterloo, J. M. Heffner of Mason City, N. J. Cook of Walcott, F. B. Lemon of Newton and S. E. Greenbaum of Davenport.

The social feature of the convention was the ball given at the Auditorium by the Des Moines Screen Club.

CHANGES IN THE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE.

The Theater Managers and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of St. Louis has again established headquarters at Room 312, Benoist Building, the offices that were used when the organization was first effected. The meetings were held at the Majestic Theater at Tenth and Franklin avenues for a few months, but it was decided that the Benoist Building was a better location, and the headquarters were moved back there. Things are flourishing with the association, and a much larger attendance is reported at the meetings.

At a recent election an entirely new board of officers were installed. John Gentner, one of the original movers for an exhibitors' league, and the first president of the body, is again its executive. D. T. Williams, of the Ashland theater, is financial secretary. Joe Mogler, of the Mogler theater and airdrome at Ninth and Bremen avenue is treasurer. All of the old officers are on the executive board, harmony prevails, and much good is being done for the up building of the organization.

BROOKLYN EXHIBITORS MEET.

Lee A. Ochs Indorsed for Presidency of the National Organization.

THE Associated Exhibitors of Brooklyn held an important meeting on the night of Thursday, June 1, in its usual gathering place, the Triangle theater. The meeting, which was presided over by President M. J. Manheimer, was exceptionally well attended. One of the invited guests was State President Lee A. Ochs, who issued the charter to the organization. A committee was appointed to take up the question of the high prices for electricity with the Public Service Commission. The following men were elected as delegates to the National Convention at Chicago: M. J. Manheimer, Benjamin Title, Louis Levine and William Brandt.

Upon Mr. Title's motion it was unanimously resolved to indorse the candidacy of Lee A. Ochs for National President. Mr. Ochs was heartily commended by several speakers, who called attention to the great services he had rendered to the cause of organization in the city and state of New York.

Two committees were appointed with power to take up certain grievances with two large film corporations.

A number of committees reported on the co-operative plan of purchasing material and booking. A considerable amount of money will be saved by the co-operative purchase plan.

Horsley Productions

Two Noteworthy Subjects Scheduled for the Week of June 24.

A PLAY within a play, highly dramatic, yet with sufficient comedy running through it to satisfy the most fastidious, produced by a capable and well-balanced cast headed by the eminent star, Crane Wilbur, will be notable among the Horsley-Mutual releases for the week of June 24, as a five-reel Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, is "The Wasted Years."

Mr. Wilbur, who is also the author of this play, is seen in an entirely different role than in previous Horsley productions, in the character of an aged being, which gives him ample scope for the utilization of his dramatic talent. Such is his character as he watches the play of "Youth," to look back over the years he has wasted.

On the other hand he is also seen as a young and innocent country youth who falls heir to considerable wealth and casting aside the simple and quiet life of the village of his boyhood, enters a life of romance and adventure to fall victim to a woman of the world.

Mac Gaston, who has been seen in numerous productions from the Horsley studios, is once more the leading feminine support of Mr. Wilbur, and it is said that in the role of a dainty "flower" of the country, she has added more laurels to her name.

Jessie Burnett, a new addition to the Wilbur company shoulders the character of the "worldly woman" and John Oaker, the dashing young juvenile, departs from his usual line to work opposite Miss Burnett, as one of the chief tools to be instrumental in the downfall of the youth.

Three youngsters are also in the supporting cast, they being Thelma Salter, Thelma Burns and George Harris. Little Miss Salter is one of the best known child actresses of the silent drama and her work in "The Wasted Years" is said to be excellent.

Others who are prominent throughout the five reels are Joseph Hazelton, who has established a reputation for his character acting, and M. D. Moran, who is familiar to theatergoers. Many elaborate scenes are included in this drama which was staged under the direction of Robert B. Broadwell. June 22 is the release date.

"Jerry's Elopement," a one-reel Cub Comedy, starring George Ovey in his famous character of Jerry, will be the second Horsley production released by Mutual the same week.

Director Milton H. Fahrney has provided Ovey with a rather different vehicle in this release, many of the very laughable situations being new to the screen. For the first time in many moons Jerry at last comes out on top, but only after traveling a very rocky road.

The entire strength of the Cub Comedy supports Mr. Ovey, the greater amount of the action falling to Miss Claire Alexander, George George, Louis FitzRoy and Janet Sully. Others in the cast are Jefferson Osborne, Ray Lincoln, Robert Kenyon, Joseph NonMeter, Harry Jackson and Arthur Mund.

The wind-up of Horsley-Mutuals for the last week of June is a thrilling and picturesque Centaur feature, "A Siren of the Jungle," from the pen of Theodosia Harris and is an excellent vehicle for the co-stars, Margaret Gibson and William Clifford.

According to advance word this is the best picture in which the famous Bostock animals have been utilized, and work is said to be spectacular.

Miss Gibson portrays a rather different role than heretofore and the same is said of Mr. Clifford. The supporting cast is a strong one with such well-known players as Fredrick Montague, Harris Ingraham and Claude Lampman. Director Charles Swickard supervised the filming of the production.

What is a Picture Machine

According to the High Court of the United States Customs Department It's a "Lens Mounting and Frame."

THE status of moving picture machines was fixed June 1 when the United States Court of Customs Appeals reached the conclusion that, in the absence of any specific provision in the law for such articles, they became dutiable at 25 per cent. under paragraph 94 as "frames and mountings for projection lenses."

While the American Express Company appeared as the protestant of record, it was understood that the actual importers were Pathe Freres, of this city and Paris, the merchandise in controversy being described on the invoices as "Patheoscopes." Collector Malone held that the machines were dutiable at 30 per cent. as "frames for optical instruments." This view was not approved by the Board of General Appraisers, which reversed the Collector and ordered the "movies" admitted at the 25 per cent. rate. The Government then appealed to the court.

The importers, in addition to the claim under the projection lenses' paragraph, raised the point that the articles might come under the manufactured metal article provision calling for a custom tax of 20 per cent., but neither the board nor the court considered this claim.

Ella Hall a Bluebird

FOR a long time Ella Hall has been appearing in all sorts of roles and whether she has been a little boy, a blushing bride, a tiny girl or just a hoydenish ingenue, she has increased her following with her every appearance on the screen. Since the Bluebird program was introduced the first of the year, Miss Hall has been steadily enhancing her value not alone to her employers, but to herself—and now she has reached the coveted place of screen stardom which she so justly merits.

In "Secret Love," she actually divided the honors with Helen Ware, who was the star. Miss Hall's role gained such prominence in the criticisms of the early Bluebird, not alone from the trade press, but from critics of the daily papers wherever the feature was shown, that General Manager M. H. Hoffman decided that it would be well to build a new star with the new series of features. So it was in "The Crippled Hand" she was given a half-taste of stardom, dividing the honors with Bob Leonard.

Now comes the announcement that she will take her place as a lone star on the Bluebird program, with regular appearances in pieces suited to her style. In "Ambrosia," to be released July 10, Miss Hall will have a role that is sure to bring her into immediate popularity with devotees of Bluebirds, and arrangements have been made for other plays that will further increase her vogue with the public.

Ella Hall.

"That Universal Program"

A Red Feather Five Reel Drama is the Big Feature of Week of June 12—Other Good Numbers.

THE outstanding feature of the Universal program for the week of June 12 is the five-reel Red Feather photoplay "What Love Can Do," in which Adele Farrington plays the principal role, that of a successful author who is determined to live her life as she sees fit regardless of the conventions of society. On the same day, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson cavort about in the Nestor comedy, "Their Awful Predicament."

On Tuesday, June 13, J. Warren Kerrigan is the feature in the Gold Seal three-reel mountain drama, "The Melody of Love," in which Nell Shipman also appears. The Imp comedy, "Her Wonderful Secret" with Harry Benham and Edith Roberts is released on the same day.

"How Stars Are Made," a two-reel L-KO comedy leads off the program on June 14 with Alice Howard and Ray Griffith supplying the fun. Number 24 of the Universal Animated Weekly is followed by Cleo Madison in the Rex drama, "When the Wolf Howls," in which she is supported by William Mong.

On June 15 the feature of the day will be the Laemmle two-reel society drama, "Her Soul's Song," with Emory Johnstone and Dorothy Davenport in the principal roles. "Betty's Hobo," a comedy drama in which Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson, and the child actress, Zoe Beech, is also released on the same day together with a Powers split reel which includes "Professor Wiseguy's Trip to the Moon," a comic cartoon and "Little Journeys in Scenic Japan," an educational travel novelty.

Hobart Henley and Irene Hunt co-star in "The Devil's Image," a two-reel Imp society drama, on June 16, and on the same day's program Albert MacQuarrie will be seen in the Victor comedy, "The Golden Boot," followed by Neal Burns, Betty Compson and Ethel Lynn in the Nestor comedy, "Almost a Widow."

Daredevil Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill have worked for several weeks past in a sensational railroad thriller "A Railroad Bandit," which will be released on June 17 under the Bison brand. On the same day Gale Henry and William Franey furnish the fun in a Joker comedy entitled, "Love Quarantined."

Ben Wilson is featured in "The Finer Metal," a two-reel domestic drama which will be released under the Rex brand on June 18. Dorothy Phillips plays opposite Mr. Wilson. Two comedies are released on the same day, "A Romance at Random," and "A College Boomerang," a Laemmle comedy with Rupert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson in the cast, and "A College Boomerang," an Imp comedy in which Harry Benham and Edith Roberts play the principal roles.

During the week of June 12 the seventh episode of "The Adventures of Peg O' the Ring," with Francis Ford and Crace Cunard furnishing the excitement, will be released. Announcement is also made that King Baggot will appear in "The Man from Nowhere," a five-reel Red Feather feature, on June 19 and Val Paul, Myrtle Gonzalez and Fred Church in another five-reel Red Feather, "It Happened in Honolulu" on June 26.

Lasky's Summer Program

Numerous Stars Will Be Extremely Busy on Big Productions at Los Angeles Studio.

THE studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company at Hollywood, Calif., will hum with activity this summer, as the big producing firm is entering on a period of unusually interesting accomplishments. Well known stars of the stage and screen will appear in forthcoming productions from the Lasky studio on the Paramount Program. Coincident comes the announcement that Miss Fannie Ward has placed her name to a new contract for a period of two years. Few artists who have forsaken the stage for the screen have won such success in the new medium as that which has fallen to Miss Ward. Recently in New York she had the unique experience of attending a meeting of the Theater Club in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor as the principal guest and watching with an audience of 2,500 women gathered from all over the United States a screen presentation of her photoplay, "The Cheat."

Scene from "The Gutter Magdalene" (Lasky).

Miss Ward is the star in the photoplay, "The Gutter Magdalene," which will be shown for the first time in June. The Lasky company also will present during the summer months elaborate feature plays in which Victor Moore, Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid and Blanche Sweet will appear as the stars.

Victor Moore's production is entitled, "The Clown," and was written for him by Marion Fairfax and produced by William C. DeMille. Miss Ridgely and Mr. Reid, who were co-stars in "The Golden Chance," "The Love Mask" and other photoplays, will appear in "The Selfish Woman," by Hector Turnbull, and Blanche Sweet will be the star in "The Dupe," by the same author.

Recently additions at the Lasky studio were completed making it, it is said, one of the finest equipped photoplay establishments in the world.

SELIG'S TOM MIX SERIES STARTS JULY 8.

The Tom Mix series of Western comedies will start in General Film regular service with "Some Duel," to be released Saturday, July 8. A Tom Mix comedy will be released every Saturday thereafter. These comedies are of the highest standard in every respect, carry logical plots and are crowded with daring action, such as only Tom Mix and Victoria Ford can supply. They will put the punch into any picture program.

THE VIKING FILM COMPANY.

One of the recent producing organizations is named the Viking Film Company, Inc. It is capitalized at $100,000 with a New York state charter and has offices on the tenth floor of the Candler Building. The new company proposes to make the better class of subjects and expects to have its first picture completed by the middle of June.

DeGRASSE HAS NEW FIVE-REELER.

"By Fate's Decree" is the title of a five-reel feature film play, written by Stuart Paton, one of the Universal City directors, which is being picturized by Director Joseph De Grasse. The featured leads will be played by Dorothy Phillips and Lon Chaney, with a strong supporting cast of the Universal stock company.

STAR THEATER, DENISON, TEXAS.

L. M. Ridout's House Strong in Popular Favor—Uses Style K Wurlitzer Organ—Seats 600.

DENISON, Texas, can boast of an up-to-date photoplay house in the Star. It is constructed of steel, concrete, brick and other fire-resisting material, and has a seating capacity of 600. L. M. Ridout, the proprietor and manager of the Star, did not see how many chairs he could get in a certain given space, but placed each row of seats at a respectable distance from the other, and the result is that no difficulty is experienced on the part of those seated to let a newcomer get past to a vacant seat. This is one of the many features to be found in the Star. Another is the beautiful rest rooms for women and the commodious smoking rooms for men. These are tastily and appropriately furnished. There are a number of boxes, which can be used as party boxes.

The operating room at the Star would be a credit to a large motion picture theater in a big city. It is spacious, well equipped, and is constructed of reinforced concrete. The steel doors and windows of this section of the theater automatically shut when the fusible cords which hold them open melt when the temperature increases over a certain degree. In this case it can readily be seen that should a fire occur it would be confined to the operating room. There is a large vent flue which leads from the operating room to the roof of the theater, and this carries off all the heat and odors which may be generated by the projection apparatus.

The interior of the Star is artistically decorated in red, gold and cream, and neutralized colors. Ventilation is obtained by twelve ventilators situated in the ceiling and by a draught panel with a big suction fan in it which is located near the floor. The auditorium is plentifully supplied with large exits with doors which open automatically. Should the management at any time desire to put on road shows it could easily do so, for the Star is equipped with a stage large enough to accommodate any size road production. It is also supplied with a half dozen sets of scenery, electrical effects, and a number of dressing rooms.

Mr. Ridout is always studying the wants and desires of his big patronage, and as a result of his conscientiousness he is meeting with very big success. Each show is made up of high-class, clean subjects, and the music is furnished by a style K Wurlitzer piano with pipe organ and orchestra attachments. The Star is known as "The Home of Good Motion Pictures."

"I do not believe a man can be a successful exhibitor without its assistance," says Mr. Ridout in speaking in complimentary terms of the Moving Picture World; "it is interesting and instructive."

MAJESTIC THEATER, EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL.

Nearly seven years ago H. G. Redmon, who is now the proprietor of the beautiful Majestic theater, East St. Louis, Ill., opened in that city a rather small moving picture theater known as the Lyric. He made a careful study of the exhibition business from the start, and from time to time as his patronage increased and as the industry in general became more fixed in public opinion, Mr. Redmon made the necessary changes in the Lyric in order to bring it up-to-date for that time. Finally, through the giving of good entertainment, the patronage of the old Lyric became so large that Mr. Redmon opened the Majestic and disposed of his first theater.

The Majestic has a seating capacity of 1,500 persons. It is a pretty structure, and has all the comforts and conveniences of some of the bigger theaters in bigger cities. The Majestic is exclusively a feature house, and shows Paramount and Triangle productions. The theater is opened at 9 a. m. and shows are given until 11 p. m. A seven-piece orchestra is used. The Paramount program is shown on

Majestic Theater, East St. Louis, Ill.

Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of each week, while Triangle pictures make up the program for Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The weekly advertising bill of the Majestic is quite heavy, and this department is in charge of John Choate, an experienced advertising man.

NEW STRAND, TRINIDAD, COLO.

Recently there was opened in Trinidad, Colo., the New Strand theater, by Jack Nash. As the illustration accompanying this story shows, the exterior is tastefully decorated in Gothic design. To the left of the entrance is the spacious and well appointed office of the manager. The interior is artistically decorated in red and gold. The draperies and carpets are of a beautiful red hue.

The New Strand has a seating capacity close on to 600. One hundred of these are opera chairs located in the loges where smoking is permitted. Mr. Nash, who is thoroughly familiar with practically all branches of the industry, spared neither time nor expense in giving the population of Trinidad a moving picture theater of which to be proud. That he has succeeded in this is evidenced by the large number of complimentary remarks that he is constantly receiving from his patrons and his many friends in and out of the trade. His constantly big patronage has repaid him many times for the lavish expenditure in erecting such an attractive and comfortable photoplay palace. There is an atmosphere of the conservatory pervading the auditorium, for Mr. Nash, who is a lover of flowers, has used a large number of artificial, cut and pot flowers in the decorative scheme. This adds considerably to the happy and homelike appearance of the interior.

REX THEATER, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Leichter and Selleck Take Over Photoplay House—Remodel It Thoroughly—Original Advertising Methods Give Structure Distinctive Character.

THE Rex theater, Polk and Washington streets, San Francisco, Cal., offers a splendid illustration of what can be accomplished with a small house in these days of large theaters and long programs when the business is given intelligent attention. This theater is located in the heart of the Nob Hill section, surrounded by splendid apartment houses and private homes, just past the busiest part of the Polk street business district. It is not without competition, for within a half a dozen blocks there are fully as many moving picture houses, several of larger capacity than the Rex, though none are more advantageously located.

This theater was taken over by Mark M. Leichter and Harry Selleck early in 1916, and since then has been renovated throughout and presents a greatly improved appearance over the old house. The building it occupies is of frame construction, but the house is very comfortable, with ample ventilation, and the decorations are neat and cheery. It has a seating capacity of 400 and is regarded as being one of the safest houses of its kind in the city, there being seven exits, making it possible to empty it on very short notice should occasion arise.

When the new owners took over this theater it was at once apparent that to be successful it would be necessary to adopt methods different from those followed by most exhibitors. But little transient business could be expected and the neighborhood clientele was of a class that had been the despair of many exhibitors. It was early decided that high-grade feature attractions were all that would be acceptable and the program, which is changed three times a week, is made up largely of Metro, World and Fox offerings, with the Hearst-Vitaphone News Pictorial. Music is furnished by a recently installed player-piano and this is being made quite a feature of the house.

From the beginning Messrs. Leichter & Selleck have endeavored to be original, and, small as it is, this house has taken on a distinctive character that has made it well known far beyond the boundaries of the Polk street district, and it is this distinctive feature that makes it of special interest.

One of the first steps taken by this enterprising firm was the selection of a trade mark, which has since been registered, this consisting of a monogram made up of the letters L and S and called the sign of quality, service and refinement in photoplays. All of the slides shown in the Rex theater are uniform in character and each feature the trade mark and the announcement that Leichter & Selleck present such and such a production. Every bit of advertising matter, and a great deal of it is used, bears the trade mark, until the sign has become widely known.

This concern is a strong believer in the use of a mailing list, and mails five hundred advance programs a week to patrons who have signified their desire to receive such advance notices. Some of the advertising sent out is very appropriate and illustrates the thought that is bestowed upon this end of the business. When "The Yellow Passport" was booked the program which was printed on yellow paper and forwarded to patrons protruded mysteriously from a slit in a neat Rex theater folder. Neat signs in the lobby call attention to coming attractions and in many ways visitors to the Rex theater are kept in close touch with what has been booked for their enjoyment. Recently a large party of San Francisco society leaders visited Truckee, Cal., to take part in winter sports, and moving pictures were taken of their activities. These pictures were shown shortly afterward at this house and the theater was filled with wealthy patrons. Business has increased more than thirty per cent. since the first of the year and frequently all who desire to come cannot be accommodated.

Mark M. Leichter, under whose able management the business is being conducted, has been connected with the moving picture business for many years, having conducted theaters in New York City before coming to San Francisco. It is the plan of himself and those associated with him to branch out in the local business field in the near future.

The projection equipment in the Rex theater consists of two Motographs, operated by Walter Bunge, and every effort is made to secure perfect projection. Matinees are given daily from half past one to five o'clock, and on Sundays the shows are continuous. On week days the evening performance commences at half past six. The admission price is 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children.

PILOSI'S THEATER, OLD FORGE, PA.

Since It Was Established, Three Years Ago, This Photoplay House Has Been Doing Good Business—Uses Wurlitzer Organ—Seats 500 and Managed by Louis Pilosi.

ONE of the well-conducted photoplay houses in northeastern Pennsylvania is Pilosi's theater at Old Forge.

It is owned by Nicholas Pilosi and managed by his son, Louis. This house recently celebrated its third anniversary, and it played to exceedingly good business during the celebration period, for a special program for each day was selected for the occasion. The theater is advertised as the "Home of Reel Photographs."

There are 500 comfortable seats in the Pilosi palace, and there is plenty of room between each of the rows. The structure is built of fireproof material and is fitted with all modern equipments. The projection room is large and is equipped with two machines. Music is furnished by a Wurlitzer organ, and an automatic ticket selling machine is used.

The foyer is spacious, and the lobby floor is of tile. There are six double exit doors conveniently arranged so that the auditorium can be emptied in a very short space of time should the emergency arise. The interior, as well as the lobby, is artistically decorated in harmonious colors.

The management says that the structure represents an expenditure of $26,000. Although the Pilosi is primarily dedicated to the exploitation of high-class motion pictures, there is a stage large enough to hold a goodly side road production. There are a number of dressing rooms and a variety of scenery, should the management ever decide to entertain a proposition from a vaudeville or "legitimate" show.

The theater is situated right in the heart of the town, at the corner of Main and Grace streets. The exterior is well illuminated, and can be seen for a considerable distance in either direction. The theater is advertised extensively, and on one side of the building is a big billboard which can accommodate five six-sheet posters. Louis Pilosi is demonstrating his ability as an exhibitor in the administration of the "Home of Reel Photographs."

MCINTOSH TAKES OVER CRYSTAL.

William McIntosh has recently purchased the Crystal theater at 212 E. Fourth street, Waterloo, Ia., of Nichols Webber. He will take possession of it on June 1. Mr. McIntosh was for many years associated with Mr. Webber in the operation of the Crystal and Princess Theaters in Waterloo, and disposed of his interests in these houses about a year ago to open a picture theater in Waverly, Ia. The Crystal will be closed for two weeks for repairs. Mr. Webber is devoting his entire time to the Princess.

OBSERVATIONS BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

IT HAS been said in some quarters that the motion picture people have been remarkably conservative in their department following the veto of the Christman-Wheeler censorship bill by Governor Whitman at Albany. Evidently people expressing this opinion expected to see receipt of the news of victory followed by a jubilation demonstration garnished with the tooting of horns, booming of cannon and waving of the emblem of American liberty. Perhaps some of them expected to hear speeches and read columns of commendable notices in the moving picture press on Governor Whitman's action. But the veto was not accepted by the moving picture people with any undue display of enthusiasm. Nevertheless, they are not mindful that in killing the bill the Governor did his duty in an intelligent, impartial and fearless manner.

The result of this great fight was received with mingled satisfaction and pity. Satisfied that the Governor, in his presentation of the veto, confirmed what the moving picture interests have so often claimed, namely: That the people behind censorship methods are so satiated with self-motives and a desire to injure the moving picture business—if not crush it—that they are blind to the rights and privileges of all who do not agree with them. Pity for these so-called reformers and the members of both branches of the legislature who passed for them a bill which, upon its face, was defeated by its own viciousness—so deficient in common sense and justice that the Governor would not enter into a discussion of the constitutionality of censorship. The viciousness was imposition of an unnecessary and excessive tax and the deprival of the right of appeal to the picture people while giving that right to the opposition. The most silly part of the fight made by the supporters of the bill before the Governor was a statement that it was not their intention to have either of these provisions become a law in the light construed by the Governor, but if he would sign the bill the objectionable features could be eliminated at the next session of the legislature. Governor Whitman, in his presentation, told these people that the practical answer to their statement was that the moving picture would be put to a wasteful and unnecessary expense of the greater part of a million dollars before an amendment could be made. The so-called reformers would deliberately pass a bill to execute a man and then apologize for it with an amendment. No, the moving picture people did not become hysterically jubilant when the Governor gave his decision, nor have the sponsors of the bill been heard from in any way. They have been whipped into a profound silence by one of Governor Whitman's closing comments: "I have found such fundamental objections to the form of this bill, and the procedure under it, that the necessity for censorship has been eliminated as a factor in its consideration."

Of course, some people will be disposed to discount comments coming from journals devoted to moving picture interests on the framers and supporters of the bill referred to. Many of them may attribute comment in part to a spirit of partiality. For years the moving picture people have complained of the indisposition of the public press to "come out flat-footed" on subjects affecting the picture interests at times when they should really do so, especially when the constitutionality of censorship is before the public. It is with much gratification, therefore, that an editorial of the New York Press is quoted:

"So clumsily was the movie censor bill drawn that Governor Whitman vetoed it, as he remarked, without considering at all the fundamental question of whether there should be censorship. It was a poor workman who framed the provision that appeal might be taken when a film was passed by the board, but that none could be taken when a film was ordered suppressed!"

The quotation may in part help relieve the picture organs of a charge of bias in commenting on what happened in Albany. Our thanks go to the Press. But the part of the editorial to which it is desired to call special attention is as follows:

"The 'movies' may be left safely in their present status. If there is any producer foolish enough to put out anything beyond the bounds of decency he will find quick enough punishment in the fact that the 99 per cent. of 'movie' houses which are family resorts will not book his releases."

How about it, Mr. Movie Man, who is scrambling to get under the wing of Federal Censorship? This editorial comment comes from a disinterested source, and entirely unsolicited. Compare it with a quotation from the text of the majority report on the Smith-Hughes censorship bill now pending at Washington and see which is the most logical and truthful:

"The vicious picture brings the larger return to exhibitor and producer, because it gets the money of the regular customer and the sensation seeker also."

What aggravates those who are sincere in the welfare of a clean, wholesome, progressive and standardized motion picture industry is that the first quotation is from a disinterested source, while the majority committee on the Smith-Hughes bill claims the latter quotation is furnished by a brief supplied to the committee by four of the moving picture companies that produced ninety per cent. of the motion pictures in the United States, so that others who are admittedly exerting every effort to put the picture on the highest plane of perfection and are endeavoring to persuade all manufacturers to do likewise, find the guns of their own camp trained upon them. To the ordinary observer the situation is a peculiar one, to say the least.

A man who has been in the moving picture business since its infancy, and who is still very prominent in it, expressed himself frankly on the situation: "I can understand," said he, "that if we must have official censorship, a federal form of regulation is preferable to a multitude of graft-seeking bodies created by every state, city and hamlet throughout the country; but an overwhelming majority of the legitimate and law-abiding producers have been unalterably opposed to official censorship in any form. That was the platform upon which the manufacturers declared themselves united, until recently a few of them decided to put themselves publicly on record as favoring federal censorship as the least of the evils. This was their privilege and none disputed their justification for thus placing themselves upon record if they wished to do so. But by what method of reasoning do these people who claim to favor anything that would improve the welfare of the industry, both with respect to the public and the industry itself, gratify their action in becoming auxiliary to the Smith-Hughes majority and supply it with ammunition (poor as it may be) to fight the manufacturers who remain loyal in the battle to preserve what they deem are their constitutional rights? I am not the only one to suspect that there is an ulterior and selfish motive in their operations. What it is I have not been able to even conjecture. Some people with whom I have discussed the subject are inclined to believe that federal law will ultimately put out of business companies that will not be able to spare the time, labor or expense to comply with the requirements of the law, if it is enacted. Some say it will be a death rap to the five per cent. of manufacturers who could not weather the law because they could not stand a censoring. There is absolutely no reason why the legitimate manufacturers should surrender their constitutional rights to get rid of this defying five per cent. The minority report on the Smith-Hughes bill points to the way by which the guerrillas can be squelched when it says: 'Every censor proper exercise of the local police power supplemented by the amendment to the federal code already suggested,' which means that the United States Penal Code be amended to include motion picture films in the list of objects barred from interstate transportation. And there is still another weapon that can be effectively used to eliminate the obnoxious five per cent. Each municipality has the power to revoke the license of an exhibitor who shows immoral pictures and the screws can be put on any exhibitor who rents or buys and exhibits such pictures, which must ultimately drive the makers of these pictures out of the market. The authorities, the reformers and the exhibitors have a duty to perform in this matter and there is no reason why they should not attend to it and not saddle the responsibility upon the country at an enormous and unnecessary expense to those who are innocent in the matter. The exhibitor cannot claim exemption. He knows better than anyone else what kind of pictures his patrons want. He cannot claim exemption on the ground of inability to personally censor a picture. Such inability, when a question of morality is involved, disqualifies him as an exhibitor. He stands in the same position and must accept the same responsibilities as managers of regular theaters."

EASTER SCENES AT THE VATICAN.

The Eternal City has been under much excitement during the recent Easter week services because of the presence of certain enterprising American moving picture operators busily "filming" the Holy Week services in St. Peter's.

For the time being the war was forgotten, every one was interested in the great innovation of what some called "sacrilège" by the American "invasion" of what has hitherto been sacred ground. There can be no doubt that from the professional viewpoint the Holy Week services in St. Peter's offers one of the grandest spectacles it seems possible to film, the reproduction of these scenes will attract crowds in all parts of the world. Not only will devout Catholics rejoice in being able to see that which they could never hope their eyes might be able to see, but others irrespective of creed will want to see that which they have heard is one of the most impressive scenes in Christendom.

Papal processions and the recent Popes have been seen in films but pictures of the most holy services taken within the most sacred edifice of the Catholic world have always caused a natural hesitation. The question of any profanity was speedily settled in that still pictures had always been permitted and a quick succession of them could not possibly be considered objectionable. Another advancing lay in the fact that the picture was considerably curtailed the income at St. Peter's and the translation into Italian dollars of pictures of so great a demand could not be treated with indifference. It was further thought that the pictures could be of great value in keeping the faithful in all parts of the world in visible communication with the center of their faith and at the same time give others a chance to see that greatest service which made St. Peter's famous. Therefore under the Supervision of Cardinal Merry Del Val this famous set of pictures was secured and no doubt will be well used.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

The American University in Washington, D. C., is co-operating with the Bureau of Commercial Economics in their plan to spread the educational possibilities of the moving picture by giving a series of lectures in the Hall of History on Saturday afternoons. This series is intended especially for teachers and senior scholars in high schools, and other adults who can be interested therein to the extent of using the knowledge so obtained in advancing teaching through means of the pictures. It should be further noted that these lectures are part of the extension work of the university and no admission fee is charged. Government films will be shown which cover very largely the scenic beauties and geographical wonders of the United States, in addition the government has prepared with great care and cost a collection of films of the different tribes of Indians in their native habitat in order that the Indian life and manners which are rapidly passing away may be preserved for posterity.

A Baptist Church convention in Philadelphia has recently praised the value of the moving picture. It is interesting to note and record that churches are now as a class looking more at the good in the picture rather than the bad, and to praise more than to blame; this means that by forcing the better side, greater benefits will accrue. An Indiana clergyman has recently gone on record as saying that the pictures are preaching some of the greatest of sermons and that their use should be encouraged, and that a proper use of them on Sundays should be provided. He was further of the opinion that opposition came rather from tradition than knowledge or experience.

* * *

The Boston, Mass., high schools are on record as having tried the aid of the moving pictures with such satisfactory results that a plan for their more permanent use is under way.

DORSEY EXPEDITION PICTURES.

Through an arrangement with Joseph S. Klotz, of 110 West 40th street, the Universal has acquired one of the most unusual and valuable pictures which the camera has yet produced. It is the Dr. Dorsey Expedition, one of the most interesting and novel ever undertaken, and also one of the most valuable, for its cost alone amounted to a quarter of a million dollars. The Universal will release this subject in split reels, one every week, under the Powers brand. The demand for educational and scenic pictures has been increasing rapidly, and it is in line with this demand that the Universal has authorized an expenditure which might otherwise seem excessive, in order to command this unexampled feature of foreign travel in uninfrequent spots of the earth's surface for the millions of interested people who see the Universal program every week.

The expedition covered the greater portion of India, Japan, China, Mongolia, Ceylon, Persia, and takes the spectator into places very seldom visited even by the most adventurous of tourists, and shows spectacles never before seen by Western eyes. Some of them were taken at the risk of instant death had the presence of the cameraman been suspected. Long experience of travel, and years of study, acquainted Dr. Dorsey with exactly what he wanted to see, and Yankee perseverance, ingenuity and daring accomplished the rest. The result is one of the most remarkable films ever presented to an audience, and the Universal feels fully justified in paying so high a price for such an interesting, instructive, remarkable and awe-inspiring human document.

Dr. George A. Dorsey, Ph. D., the man to whom the Universal is indebted for the Dorsey expedition, is probably as well fitted as any other American to realize the salient points in foreign lands which would be interesting and instructive to the American people for photographic purposes.

"THE CRISIS" STIRS VICKSBURG.

Vicksburg, Miss., has the picture craze in most aggravated form since the arrival of the Selig company of players who are appearing in spectacular scenes for "The Crisis," the drama from the book by Winston Churchill and being filmed by the Selig Company. All the stars have been interviewed time and again, and almost the entire population turned out to witness the battle scenes which were taken in the National Park cemetery.

The entire Mississippi National Guard, including officers and regimental bands, are congregated in this city. One thousand militiamen "clinched" in the battle.

JOYCE FAIR IN A THREE-REELER.

So successful have been the recent two-reel Essanay releases featuring little Joyce Fair, the 11-year-old star, that George K. Spoor, president of that company, has decided to give her a wider range of opportunity. Under the new plan she is now working in a three-reel production, "A Little Volunteer," a story of a "little mother" who has several small sisters and brothers under her care.

"THE GAME WARDEN."

Director Henry McRae is filming a two-reel melodrama, entitled, "The Game Warden," written by Noble Johnson. The featured leads are taken by Marie Walcamp, Lee Hill and L. C. Shumway. McRae recently has completed a two-reel railroad story, entitled, "The Battle of the Black Rock Short Line."

FORTHCOMING AMERICANS.

Among the forthcoming American productions is "Dust," a five-reel feature under the direction of Edward Sloman from a scenario by Julian L. LaMothe. Winnifred Greenwood, Franklyn Ritchie, Harry Von Meter, Louise Lester and Nell Franzen are the principal members of the cast. Release is scheduled for the latter part of June.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Personal Service.

APPARENTLY many who read this department do not realize that it is our desire to give the fullest possible service, and that a self addressed envelope enclosed with the material submitted will bring a carbon of the matter that may not get into print for several weeks, permitting the earlier adjustment of the new program or other matter. If you want to make your program better, set right after it and keep the printer worried until he gives you what you want. A few exhibitors have availed themselves of this service with decided benefit to their advertising. All are welcome to ask, and no fee of any sort is required or desired. It is not to be expected that the exhibitor shall also be a printing expert, and not many house managers can curse the man of types in his own language, but if you need help, it is at your command.

A Chinese Box.

The Arcade theater, Tientsin, sends in some of the work done for The Black Box, which sounds like a back number attraction over here, but is brand new in China. One of the pieces is a bill in Chinese. This is printed on native paper, scarcely stronger than tissue, and so thin that it was necessary in mounting it for reproduction to paste the mount and not the paper itself. This appeals to the Chinese trade, but the houses (there are two, the Arcade and the Pekin Pavilion) depend more on the European patronage. The management writes:

I beg to enclose herewith some of the advertising matter I issued for our two theaters, "The Arcade" and the "Peking Pavilion," for the last episode of the Universal Serial, "Black Box." In addition to the bills, I sent out 420 letters, hand written as per enclosed sample, and delivered them in a chit book through our own messengers. The result, nearly half of the people to whom the letters were sent noted in the chit book the number of seats they wanted to be reserved. Practically every seat in the theater was booked during the day. Those who came to the theater in the evening without booking their seats could only get standing room. I took last night $300.

I am indebted to the "Advertising for Exhibitors" department of the World for these as well as many other stunts I use in my advertising matter. I read the "Advertising for Exhibitors" and Mr. Richardson's "Projection Department" every week regularly and am very much indebted to you both.

A chit is a note and the chit book the receipt book showing delivery of the communication. The letters were written in ink on the regular letter head of the house and reads:

We beg to inform you that we will screen this evening the fifteenth, very last, episode of the serial film, Black Box.

To you who have watched the development of the story on our screen, this, the very last episode, in which Sanford Quest solves the mystery of the Black Box and unmasks Professor Ashleigh, will be very interesting. Should you decide to honor our theater with your presence, we will be pleased to reserve seats for you.

In addition to this and the Chinese bill there were three pieces in English, two small bills about five by nine and one about twice the size. All three lay emphasis upon the fact that this is the concluding episode and advertise also a Chaplin and a Ham and Bud story.

These are printed on unusually good white paper, one small bill carrying a Chaplin cut and the larger two stock cuts of the black box as well. The film ran for three days, ending on Sunday. The same material is used for both houses, with a change of name and date.

The Arcade advertising is always interesting, and they seem to hold their ground and expand where others find the going too hard. Good and intelligent advertising backed by sound management seems to be the reason.

McCormick, the Prophet.

Long months ago, when S. Barrett McCormick was a Denver newspaper man, he did a lot to pave the way for something better than the five-cent shows which was then about all that Denver would pay for pictures. He coaxed the first house to work over to the ten-cent price and he hammered home great truths. Then he went away and now he is back in Denver running the only fifteen-cent house in town. He writes:

Please pardon the informal salutation, but I almost feel a personal friendship as a result of our editorial acquaintance back in the dark ages of the photoplay. First permit me to express a somewhat tardy appreciation of your many kind remarks about my work and assure you that both Moving Picture World and Sargent's columns have been and are the Koran to me. That applies to the photoplay writing end as well as my interest in exhibition, for the first story I wrote and sold was with the help of "Technique of the Photoplay," and it has always been beside the "mill" when the process of continuity phenomenon was taking place—and there have been several that I am not ashamed of, for instance, "The Disciple" and Inco-Triangle production, which Mr. Harrison of the World was kind enough to say set the standard for the Triangle program.

But back to Denver conditions. It will no doubt interest you to know that Denver is now high and dry (particularly dry) on the ten-cent map—that is all except the Princess, which is a fifteen-cent house. I am sure that price has nothing to do with it when you give them the show and we do for Denver. Our clientele would bring tears of delight from the most rabid screen idealist, for it is the most exclusive class in the city, and we always feel slighted if the dress suits and evening gowns are not among the crowd—and you know the dress suit is not an over-developed product of the great West. Perhaps you will recall running a clipping from my column in the "Times" anticipating the day when a liveried starter would open the auto doors of society before a "picture show." Well, he does at ours—for every Friday afternoon is society matinee, and let me assure you that the affair is always "covered" by our society reporter and photographer and the list and photos of those present are published in the papers. Our music is quite an attraction, our conductor, Signor Savallo, being quite a lion in musical and social circles. The orchestra whose symphony concerts are always a big feature of the musical season. Enclosed is an announcement used to inaugurate our Society Screen Afternoons.

An enclosing proofs of several newspaper advertisements that will no doubt appeal to you as effective display. The effect was secured, you will of course know, by double exposure line and half tone work. We do little sensational or stunt stuff in our advertising, sticking close to clean, refined copy, but occasionally use a stunt such as the enclosed five-column story on "The Race," paid for by the various automobile and accessory firms mentioned in the story. Aside from giving us five columns in each of the daily papers, the principal value is that it netted several hundred dollars of additional revenue to the newspaper—and the surest way to an editor's heart is through the editorial stomach—and you know.

Mr. McCormick's compliment is nicely turned, for in the sixteenth sura of the Koran it is written: "We have sent down unto thee the book of the Koran for an explanation of everything necessary," and in the forty-first sura: "It is certainly a book of infinite value," which is precisely what this paper is to the motion picture business.

The newspaper advertisements are particularly good, illustration being superimposed upon the hand lettered text. It is expensive, but it stands out from the others on a page.

The society matinee is played up heavily. An engraved card that really is printed from copper annotations in the entertainments. It will stand comparison with any invitation card received. The following day the papers carry a list of the society folk present and a cut layout of some of the patrons. One issue to hand gives eleven inches double column, including a seven-inch cut, and plays up the "Row party" as a substitute for box parties, apparently some hostess taking an entire row for her guests instead of a box. Now that Mr. McCormick has found his way home again, we hope he visits frequently.

Making Myra Known.

The Crystal, Little Rock, Ark., is now using a house program and gets up a readable and newsy little issue, taking only a page for the program and giving the rest to chat. It is intimate and friendly, and so it will make and keep friends. On one page is an invitation to use an office place of desired size. The May issue is given to "The Mysteries of Myra" and the advertising booklet prepared by the International is used as an insert. It is about the cleverest thing in this line that has been given out yet, something that will be kept long after the series has been shown and passed along. Here is a good paragraph:

Did you ever wonder why The Crystal flashed no advertising slides on the screen, except those of our coming pictures? We know it is appreciated, because so many have remarked about it. You come to The Crystal to be amused, not to read advertisements. When one buys a newspaper or magazine, it is optional whether one reads the ads. When one goes to a theater where advertising slides are shown, you will either read them or close your eyes. Are we right? We hear you say aye.

They also use some good display advertising for coming films. They are snappy and telling, and do the house real good. Jack Huggens is the program editor, and he knows what he is doing. Perhaps he'll send you a copy if you send a return cover. It makes a good model to follow if you can write in the proper vein.

Cuts to Suit.

The other day we were talking things over with Harry Reichenbach, of the World Films, about the cut problem and he pointed out that his department offered not only a fine and a coarse screen, but that it would arrange to supply any special screen on request. Mr. Reichenbach is an old time press man, trained in the Broadway school, and naturally he does things well because he knows how.

A Remembrancer.

The Remembrancer is what the Dreamland, Galena, Ill., says its monthly program is. It is a little four-pager nicely printed in black on the right sort of yellow. On the front is printed:

Take me Home or put me in Your Pocket

For Every Day Remembrance
During the Month of May, 1916.

The program lies on the second page, with house talk on the third. It would be a better arrangement to put the program on the third page and the other on the second. The house talk is nicely done. It reads:

OUR

Paramount and Metro Pictures.

DREAMLAND is in the picture business, seriously and earnestly and extensively, also exclusively, because we believe there is no higher form of dramatic art than is shown in photo-plays.

DREAMLAND has gained knowledge of the public taste, of popular requirements in the picture business. We will devote that knowledge to further service to our many patrons.

DREAMLAND is interested in the business and also in the people that visit us, and both shall have personal attention. DREAMLAND believes in better pictures, greater pictures, of finer quality and higher purpose and we strive strenuously to secure them. We hope and believe that we shall meet with gratifying success.

THE LITTLE THEATRE.

The "our" in the heading is double the size of the lines above and below. Perhaps a competitive exhibitor is a newcomer to the town, but the house wisely does not mention competition. It attends to its own business.

Miss Spurr Starts Up.

Miss Spurr, of the Royal-Grand, Marion, Ind., used to run two house organs at one time—the only house we recall that ever regularly ran a double issue. Then she dropped down, but has revived the idea in a new Vol. I, No. 1 of Films and Footlights. This is sixteen pages and cover, pages 4½ by 7, a white sixteen and tint cover with a two-color specially drawn cover design. Only the back page is given to foreign advertising and that only to one house. There are stories of or about each of the features for the week, news, gossip and house talk of the usual Spurr sort, which always has been a very good sort. Miss Spurr offers a new idea in the suggestion that a special morning performance will be given for parties of one hundred or more; this in addition to the usual suggestion of theater parties at the regular showings. It sounds like a rather formidable idea to make up a party of one hundred, but one hundred admissions will do the trick and hiring the theater will be impressive and not at all costly. Think it over for your own use and then thank Miss Spurr. About the only suggestion that can be offered is that the tabloid program be doled up a bit with fancy type faces and then placed on the right hand page facing the editorial. That is the natural place for it.

A Chameleon Program.

J. E. Cooney, press man for the Webster Avenue, New Haven, Conn., sends in samples of his house program, using the same white stock of uniform size each week, but varying the color of the ink to gain contrast. He writes that they have just turned their balcony into a series of loges seating eight persons and reached by a separate stairway. As this is a 700 neighborhood house in a good locality, those boxes should appeal to many who might not care to attend and take a chance on the unreserved seats. The prices are $2 for parties of four, $2.50 for six and $3 for eight. These may be reserved in advance by mail or phone and as they use a thoroughly good program they can build up this box trade and in doing so help the downstairs business as well. The ten cent man will take pride in the box patronage just as the "diamond horseshoe" is an asset to the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. The program is nicely arranged with the days dated and set into the margin. The top of the second page is taken for some strong house talk and the back page is given to news items of the players that are more newsworthy than the usual "....." has a new eighteen cylinder Dash car" style of stuff. There is nothing startling about the four pager but it is a nicely arranged, hard-working little program that has class and carries conviction without seriously threatening the bankroll. Here is some program talk from one issue that will help others:

YOUR HOME THEATER

The word "HOME" ever since this old world of ours began has ever had a deep and truly wonderful meaning. A small word as words go, but small and simple as it is, it stands for more than any other in the whole English language, countless joys and pleasures, fond recollections and the place where our happiest hours have been passed. We want you to try and obtain somewhat similar feelings for this, YOUR "HOME" THEATER. For you it has been built and we wish you to look upon it as a "HOME" to which you can of an evening come and pass an hour or two of good wholesome enjoyment after the trials of the day are over. We believe that there is no section of our city that can boast of a more beautiful house to come to or one where a more enjoyable evening could be spent. The Management is contemplating additions to the interior which will render it even more cozy and homelike to you and at the same time increase your enjoyment.

A Paste-Up.

Here is an advertising frame from the Park theater, Middleboro, Mass., for The Strange Case of Mary Page, made up of illustrations from this paper and The Ladies World. It will attract more attention than any lithograph possibly could, and studying the ingenuity with which the frame is made will clinch the title and the attraction more firmly than the straight paper. It takes a little more time than merely tacking a borrowed three sheet on a board, but it will pay for the trouble taken.

Has an Organ.

The Brown Opera House, Salinas, Cal., now plays on its own organ, a neat four pager. The first issue looks well, but the editor needs to make certain that he uses all of a story. The last story on the second page is shy the climax and leaves readers wondering what the editor saw in the stuff. It should grow into a smart little sheet if they keep the promise of the first issue, though.

Plugging for Peg.

Nat G. Rothstein, of the Universal Publicity Bureau, has turned out an unusually good booklet for "Peg o' the Ring." This circus feature lends itself well to vivid cuts and posters and gives opportunity for unusual press stunts. His own suggestions constitute an entire campaign, but the live wire can supplement this with stunts of his own, small circus reproductions in store windows, utilizing the various "character" dolls, a tent dressing for the lobby, with a saw-dust floor for Peg days, and anything in that line that will suggest the circus, from clowns to calliopes. Some of the stunts suggested in the booklet should be carefully considered. The advice that the sidewalk in front of the theater be sawdusted for a couple of blocks should be submitted to the authorities or you may run counter to a local ordinance, but there are many helpful stunts given that are within reach of all theatrical purses.

Wants Suggestions.

R. N. Smith, of the Mission, Amarillo, Texas, writes that he has been in the business for three years and is now located in Amarillo. He sends in a program for comment on its typographical format. This is a colored cover on the Hennegan style with the middle pages given to the program. The days are dated and the copy is well prepared, but the printer has set the stuff to fit the space instead of setting it to look well in the space, which Mr. Smith seems to know, since he specially asks for information about the type. The dates are in twenty-four point a blacker and sometimes larger letter than the titles. This is not necessary. It is necessary to get the day and date in close touch with the title, but an eight or ten point date is as large as is necessary. Here it is permitted to overshadow the subject, and it must be remembered that the title is more important than the day since it is the title that must first interest before the day becomes important. The printer takes his copy and sets it with the general rules in mind of having the important lines at the top. The date is the top line so he puts that up, as can be seen in this cut.

The Arcadia, Philadelphia, shows sketches of three landmarks and explains "One block from Broad street station. One block from Subway. Near City Hall." Even a stranger can get a pretty good idea of the location from that. But the man who picks out the program stock has no eye for color. Better a plain white than a mournful tint. A man will not read a sick looking advertisement. He won't want to keep it by him, and some manila stock is impossible when tinted.

Swinging on Vion.

We like the way Joe Vion does most things, but the last issue to hand shows some back page clips taken from one of those newspaper departments where you send a return envelope to find out where you may obtain the things described. Even two expositions in succession does not excuse the thrilling news that a nice picnic lunch basket is "a seven sided box ten inches in diameter, with a canopy shaped top; the whole being done in figured satin." Most photoplay patrons will continue to be more interested in the old, reliable shoe box, and the space is thrown away.

A Good Model.

Mrs. A. R. Woodruff, of the Colonial, Camden, N. J., sends in a new form of her program which gives another wrinkle in marginal data. The program, as has been said, is in the colonial color, blue and buff, but Mrs. Woodruff very courteously had a white press proof pulled of the form. The cut shows the front page and the two inside pages, and suggests a cover that can be copied with profit. The back page carries underline and gossip.

All There.

No studying to find out where this program comes from. It reads that "The Management of the Square Town Electric theater, Brooklyn, Michigan" presents its feature program "for the month of May, 1916," and then goes on to give the Tuesday features by date and time. They get it all down as it should be done, and do it on a mailing folder that travels for a one cent stamp. It is a three fold card sealed with a paper clip and the display is nicely done; nothing elaborate, but neat and orderly.

Well Done.

The New Mission theater, San Francisco, announces its opening by means of an invitation good for two for the opening performance. The card is not engraved, but it is done in type in excellent imitation of engraving and well printed, so that it takes more than a second look on the part of the average recipient to be even reasonably certain. It is one of the type script faces which is more legible and more up to date than the once prevalent Old English. The envelope card is printed up to match and the general effect is more than merely good.

Via C. B.

A friend in Council Bluffs sends in a clipping from an Ohio paper offering a prize to the first person guessing the identity of the "Laughing Mask" before the tenth episode. The idea is not wholly new, but the phrasing is so direct as to merit approval. It merely announces:

The first person guessing who The Laughing Mask is before the tenth episode of The Iron Claw, will receive a free ticket good for three months. "Season ticket" would be more definite than "free ticket," but the announcement is free from the rules and regulations that too often tie up these simple contests.

It will be noted, too, that the ten point descriptive matter is leaded out to fill the space. It should be eight point, which will pull the lines in and permit the separation of the lines of greater importance by white space. That issue Lasky line in the Thursday show should be made uniform with the Monday Pallas line, if, indeed, it is absolutely necessary that these various "presents" lines should run. It should be possible to call it a Paramount, or a Lasky instead of the elaborate "presents" which was started by a certain manager merely to prevent his own and his brother's attractions from becoming confounded with his third brother's second rate productions of their discarded plays. There should be at least six and preferably at least twelve points of space above and below a title line and if the rest of the matter crowds the title, some of it should be cut out. A letter space between each line of the shorter titles, such as "Madame X," would help to get a better display and such a title as "He Fell in Love With His Wife," should be given two lines where producers inflict such an awkward length. Printers are prone to even spacing if not checked. This is the greater part of the fault of this program. It is not a very good copy, you must, if possible, mark the relative value of the lines and then see that the printer renders these values. Picture Theater Advertising will help a lot in marking for the printer and talking to him afterward.

Another Independent.

The Photoplay World is the title of a small sixteen-pager published at Tiffin, Ohio, independent of the houses but giving the programs of all the theaters. Evidently its major revenue is derived from the trade advertising and they seem to be working for second class entry. It is well edited and should grow in size with age.

Service Beyond the Films.

The Chicago branch of the V-L-S-E has inaugurated a publicity department under the direction of Gordon Laurence. He'll be going some to keep up with Tom North's aggregation and L. J. Scott. The recently valuable aid given patrons of V-L-S-E is by no means the least factor in their success.

But He Did.

Tom North has dug up another funny one. The Society theater, somewhere or other, had a lobby pennant for "That Shall Not Corvet." Evidently someone did, for a reward is offered for the apprehension of the thief. Another stunt he tells of in a late issue of V-L-S-E Pals is a Chaplin contest by the Rex, Seattle. It was worked with one of the local papers, with front page stories for five days and the judging took place in the public square after a ballyhoo parade, all of which advertised a two week run of Carmen at that house.

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

A New Technique.

VERY shortly a third edition of Technique of the Photoplay will come from the press. This is not a reprint of the second edition, but is practically a new work under the old title, though the chapters on Copyright, Study, Stolen Stories and Censorship are but slightly changed in order to bring them down to date. For the rest, the arrangement of the book differs materially from the old and the total number of chapters is now seventy-two, not counting an appendix containing the unasked questions, a glossary and reproductions of various script forms. This more ample chaptering permits each factor of form to be treated in greater detail and by making each chapter in itself the book is practically self-indexing, though a simple scheme of cross reference has been provided. The total number of words is more than double that of the second edition, but the selection of a smaller, but entirely legible type-face will permit the volume to be given something less than four hundred pages (380 plus 8 to be exact).

The exact date of issue is largely dependent upon the delivery of the paper, but it should be ready some time in June or July. The price will be announced later. It will be greater in price than the second edition, but not materially so.

Work on this third edition was begun in August of last year and something like three months of actual eight hour working days has been spent on the first and second drafts.

Revision.

Just lately we saw a sneaky letter in which a revision bureau advised a patron that they could fix up and probably sell her two reel story. She had seven scenes for the two reels. Evidently she needed to be revised, but even seven dollars worth of work would scarcely pay.

One revision-agent scheme is pretty evidently selling through the friends of its employees the stories sent in to them. It is not yet possible to give the name of this concern, but it is not unlikely that in time the company will be run down. As the stories are offered through outsiders, it is difficult to connect the offender with the company. This is more of a sales bureau than a revision scheme, but it suggests that what one has done others may do.

Vary It.

Waste paper is now worth $20 a ton and the price is going up. One excellent way to add to this supply of paper waste is to write something along the lines of a current success. Take Miss Pickford in Poor Little Peppina, for an example. We do not know but we are willing to bet that Famous Players get three or four stories a day, at least, with the heroine in trousers as a temporary boy because Miss Pickford did so well in the Italian part. And probably about the last thing that Famous Players wants to do just now is to offer another story along the same lines. The man who gets the money is he who is first to write a Peppina story or an "Island of....." story, not the man who comes in three weeks after the first release with another just like it.

Doing It Wrong.

We have a correspondent who is certain that if he could see the script someone else wrote for a five reel story, he could do one himself. He has been told that it will not help, but he nurses the idea that he cannot work unless he has a fetish and so he does not sell. This is partly because his ideas are seldom worth the five reel footage. He does not realize what a big idea he must have to go five reels. He seems to be guided by some of those companies that are now making their old two and three reel bits into five padded reels, and he does not even supply the padding.

Fiction Work.

From the number of letters that have come in lately asking for books on short story writing, it is evident that there is an increasing interest in short fiction. The photoplay market is poor at the moment, but we do not believe that fiction writing as a side line will help much toward making both ends meet. In the first place, though it is all story telling, the technique is so entirely different, in photoplay you must preserve the continuity of time. In fiction you can start where you please and go back and, indeed, it is often a good plan to start your story in the middle and go back to the beginning in the second paragraph.

But the most important difference is that in fiction you must sell on style. This is almost the first requisite, for a good style will cover up a deficiency of plot. In photoplay plot is essential for there is no chance to cover its lack with style, and herein lies the great difference, but style is developed only through long practise and it is far more difficult to sell a story on style than to sell a photoplay on idea. The idea will not carry the story. It may carry a photoplay sale.

Generally the student will find that photoplay writing hurts literary style to some extent since the short scenes make for a choppy and broken development of the story when the same plan of development is followed in story writing. Those who can write both fiction and photoplay are doubly armed, but it must not be supposed that proficiency in photoplay will argue for a ready sale in fiction. Virtually a new start and an entirely fresh succession of heart breaks must be the price of success. It would be better to stick to photoplay and hope for the early coming of the day when manufacturers will buy and pay decent prices for outside stuff.

Here's a Chance.

E. J. Montague, of the Vitagraph script department, writes that he is at present with the Bay Shore Studio where Ralph Ince, John Robertson and Frank Currier are working. Most of the scripts are purchased through the home office, but this Ince section is willing to consider one reel comedies, three reels and features. They can be addressed to Bay Shore, Long Island, N. Y.

Relationships.

Keep your relationships simple and clear. An editor, reading in a hurry, has no time to stop and figure things out, yet one recent story reads, "also he is softened by his son, by his first wife, marrying his second wife's daughter by her first husband." It is all simple enough, but it sounds too complicated, and the editor is apt to throw it out.

Fifty-Fifty.

Split your play fifty-fifty. The director wants stuff that will show in effective picture. Give it to him. You want to write a real plot. Do that. Have the real plot the stuff that shows in the effective pictures and you and the director will both be pleased.

Consistent.

A man writes that he had a drama turned down by three producing managers so he sent it to a photoplay company. They turned it down, and he seems to think that this argues stupidity. We should see the point. Probably the play is a poor one in spite of the author's opinion of it. Certainly the authorities seem to be united.

Halfway True.

When you do not sell it is possible that you do not sell because your story is not good enough. Not all authors will agree with that suggestion, but it is true. But sometimes it is merely because you do not tell your story clearly enough to let others see that it is as good as you know it to be. See if that is not the trouble. It is one of these two, as a rule, but it is as likely to be one as the other.

When you write your synopsis, knowing all about the story, you make mental allowance for many things that should be set down on the paper, and you do not realize that the omission has been made because each time you read it you supply the missing facts. The editor does not read with your knowledge. He sees only what is on the paper.

Imagination.

The author without imagination is like the fisherman without bait. He can work as long as he wants but he'll never catch anything.

Keep On.

If you cannot write a story, write something. Perhaps some day you can change it into a story.

THE THIRD EDITION

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service those sending four cents stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both, for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 141.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What do you understand by a carbon filament lamp? By a metallic filament lamp? By a Mazda lamp?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 134.

I have divided the Roll of Honor on Question 134 into two sections. The first section is comprised of those who took cognizance of the fact that double braided rubber covered insulation is required for conduit. The rest of the replies were correct except for that one thing.

Section 1. Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas, who quoted the National Code verbatim; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; L. Fagenhardt, Westport, Md., and G. A. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.

Section 2. Comprises W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; F. P. Eall, Palestine, Texas; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; E. P. Warrick, Worthington, Minn., and George P. Cusang, Elizabeth, N. J.

Brother Nosti has covered the matter quite completely and in good form, therefore his reply is selected for publication.

Reply to Question No. 134.

By Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla.

The Question:

What wire insulations may and may not be used in conduit? Why are stranded wires usually used in conduit instead of solid? Where must conduit be used and where may open wiring be permitted?

The Answer:

Wires for conduit must have an approved rubber insulation, double braided for twin, twisted pair or multiple conductor cables, and for all single conductor cables of No. 6 B. & S. gauge, or larger. Provided special permission first be secured from the electrical department of the city, slow burning insulation may be used in permanently dry locations where excessive temperatures are present. Stranded wires are used for the larger sizes of wire in conduits, because there is less liability of damage to the insulation in pulling them through the conduit; they are more easily pulled through than are the solid wires. It would be almost impossible to pull solid wires No. 6 or larger in size into the ordinary conduit system, at least without serious injury to the insulation.

Conduit must be used in operating room work and in all theater wiring, including the stage; also where the wires cross floor timbers in cellars or elsewhere where they might be exposed to injury. Open wiring is sometimes used in mills and places where looks are not considered, but even this practice is being gradually discontinued in favor of the conduit system of wiring.

Two Men Answer.

Some time ago I printed a little puzzle about a white figure in a film not scorching, whereas darker portions of the film did, inviting our readers to tell why. Up to date only two men have been able to solve that particular puzzle: one being J. B. Middleton, Portland, Ore., and the other either Brother La Grow, Brother Martin, or Brother Griffiths. I have forgotten which and I do not seem to locate the letter. Friend Middleton's answer is as follows:

With regard to your puzzle page 797, April 29th issue, the answer is that the light is let through the white portions, which do not absorb nearly so great an amount of the rays, and hence do not get as hot as do the dark portions, therefore the dark portions will always scorch or burn before the white ones. You can very easily prove this by binding a pair of clean cover glasses like a slide and inserting them in your stereopticon, using an amperage from 25 to 30. These cover glasses will stand almost indefinitely without getting unduly warm, but a slide with dark emulsion on it will usually crack within one minute. As a rule, as you have no doubt noticed, more slides crack on the emulsion side than on the cover side, this by reason of the fact that the light is stopped by the dark emulsion and heats up the glass foundation much more quickly than it does the cover glass.

Right you are, Brother Middleton. It was a very simple thing, and I had supposed there were many operators who could answer it, but it seems not.

It's a Humdinger.

J. L. Arnold, Bellingham, Washington, says:

I wish to let you know there is one more who appreciates the work you are doing for the operator, and the efforts you are putting forth to raise him above the level of a common laborer. Of course there are those who won't study, or even read—the men who already "know it all," but their tribe is decreasing, praise be! Compliments on the new Handbook! It's a humdinger as far as I have gone into it, and is couched in such clear, understandable language that any one with a lick of sense ought to comprehend it. I have been working on the questions for some time, and sure have learned a lot about rectifiers during the past month, more in fact than in all my three years experience, and it is all due to the questions.

During my next winter's trip in the West, Brother Arnold, I shall probably make the trip from Seattle to Vancouver, and if the Bellingham men wish it possibly I can arrange to stop one day in your city and deliver a lecture on projection.

Very Bad.

J. J. Van Dersari, Dawson, N. M., encloses four dollars for the Handbook and forty cents for the questions, and says:

I have been busy trying to get the "light ghost" out of the field of my pictures, but don't seem to have much success. However, I will wait until the "Bible" comes, and then if I cannot dope it out myself it's going to be put up to Dad Richardson. I am for not only good but excellent projection. Although I don't like the idea, I am compelled to project a 20 foot picture at a 54 foot throw, using an objective one inch in diameter, with shaded corners as a result. That is not all, however, for when I first began to use this Power's Six A, now over a year ago, the travel ghost was terrible. I made a shutter similar to the one you had a design of in a recent issue of the department; also I cut off some of the lens tube, reversed the focusing barrel and placed the stereo bracket under the magazine thumb screw, placing the shutter less than one-fourth of an inch from the driving gear, with result that Mr. Travel Ghost has not shown up since.

It strikes me you have done about everything that could be done under this condition. A 20 foot picture at 54 feet is simply awful. It's very, very bad, and I doubt if the definition of your picture is good all over. What's the idea, anyway? Seems to me that you might much better reduce the width of that picture by at least 4 feet. You would get a more brilliant picture, and a far, far better projection in every way. If you get a shutter with a main blade wide enough to down the travel ghost under your present conditions, you certainly have got to speed your machine up pretty fast or have a terrific flicker.

Editor or Fish.

Recently the editor had an "experience"; also his "better half" had one, too. We went up to Liberty, 125 miles northwest. Left there on a nasty, foggy morning, and negotiated fifty miles varying from punk to good mountain roads, in a drizzle, which at Tuxedo, 60 miles from New York, changed to a rain. On the front of the motorcycle was a big suitcase, and on the rear the frau. Can you imagine us going 60 miles through a downpour at (whisper—keep it from the cops) 35 to 40 miles an hour, with water coming down, and when the tires struck it also "going up"? It was an experience all right, but we enjoyed it all the same, and were none the worse for the drizzling, though the editor tried to get the frau to run him through the clothes ringer when we got home.

All Forwarded.

There were a great many applications for the position of operator at the Y. M. C. A. near Philadelphia. They have all been forwarded to the manager without comment.

ends being already scraped, and placing the new reel on the spindle, and splitting the bottom reel on the run, the same may be done with a little practice and care. Did this stunt myself for quite a while, and know of two other operators who have done it successfully. However, I can make a change in six seconds, according to a stop watch, from the time the picture leaves the screen until the new reel is on, with less danger and no film to the I. A. on account of no local here; also might not be able to get in. I can send in examination and apply for membership in the I. A. while in this town? Also should I leave here could I get a position in a union town? What is the amount of dues and fees?

No, I am not going to put you more than to say that while the stunt you describe could be pulled off all right, still it would be very dangerous, and would not be tolerated in any large city. I have been in Mineral Wells, and remember the little town and its hotels quite well, although it was almost ten years ago. I believe you are within the jurisdiction of the Fort Worth local, and would suggest that you dress L. Friedman, secretary, Local Union 330, P. O. Box 543, Fort Worth, Texas. No, you could not work in a union town without being a member, if the local controlled the situation. Cannot tell you the dues or initiation fee, as that varies with the locality.

Trolley Conductor Operators.

R. W. Middlecamp, Allentown, Pa., writes:

I enclose a piece of film amputated from a five reel Mutual feature. The subject was, at the time I used it, about fifteen days old. By inspecting the sample you will see that some operators would, or ought to make good trolley conductors, as they certainly can handle the punch to a hard bolted fizzle. (How about pugilists? Ed.) By using 2,000 foot reels, at least this particular outrage would be reduced to a minimum. Another thing in favor of the 2,000 foot reel is that many operators splice two reels together into one 2,000 footer, taking them apart again, of course, before shipping away. Every time this is done from two to six inches of film are wasted, which, in course of time, amounts to considerable. Just the other day I received a five day Mutual five reel feature. Fifteen feet from the end of each reel one of the trolley conductor crank twisters had started his punch working, and the film was punched clear to the end. I was forced to take off fifteen feet of film from each reel, which spoiled their ending.

The brother's letter is a little bit mixed, but what he is driving at is plain enough. He favors 2,000 foot reels, and is opposed to the punch marks. The sample he sent is 5 1/2 inches in length and in it are eleven round punch holes all evidently made by one operator. Eight pictures are ruined. If that operator could be identified he ought to be promptly disciplined. I am enclosing the following letter to the president of the Mutual Film Corporation.

President Mutual Film Corporation,
71 West 23d St., N. Y. City.

Dear Sir:

Attached hereto find a sample of film which was cut out of one of your features by an operator. You will observe that in this 5 1/2 inch sample there are eleven punch marks. This evil is a rapidly growing one which ought to be checked. I would suggest to you that the only practical way to check it is to incorporate into your multiple reel features some change-over sign which the operator can readily recognize and then instruct your exchanges to watch closely and charge up against the theatre every foot of film ruined in this way.

The flashing of these marks on the screen is very bad indeed, and, moreover, operators who take pride in their work promptly cut off the piece of film containing them, so that in the course of time the ends of multiple reels are practically ruined.

I would suggest also that the punching of films by the manufacturers for the purpose of identification ought to be stopped. Many operators excuse the practice of punching change-over signs into the film by citing the fact that the manufacturer or exchange inserts punch marks, some times as many as four or five in each reel of film.

Trusting you will give this matter the attention it deserves, I am,

Very truly yours,

F. H. Richardson.

Amusement Trade Body.

Touro Gucksmann, New Orleans, La., writes:

Enclosed find clipping from this morning's (April 26th) New Orleans American, announcing your proposed future visit to this city. I would like to know of operators in this city, and the fact that Local 293 has formed an Amusement Trade Body with the following: musicians, bill posters and stage employees. We find we get better results in signing up contracts by this plan.

A Trade Body of this kind in a city the size of New Orleans is just plain, common sense. In any important city which contains organizations of electricians, operators, bill posters, musicians, and stage employees ought to have a theatrical trade council. San Francisco and New York city each have one, it has worked extremely well. I believe it will do the same in New Orleans, or in any other city where it is tried and run properly.

A Presentation.

During the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America's Exposition at Madison Square Garden, Miss Anita Stewart was called to the stage and was by Local Union 306, M. P. M. O., New York City, presented with a beautifully-engraved resolution of thanks, and a magnificent cluster of American Beauty roses.

The presentation was made by the editor, assisted by President Crennan, Secretary Fred Stoffregen, Al. Mackler, business agent, and Brothers Hollender, Gluck and Edwards.

At the last annual ball given by Local Union 306, Miss Stewart had promised to honor the local by her presence, and although the night was stormy and utterly miserable, Miss Stewart literally got up out of slumber to make her promise good. Under these circumstances Local Union 306 thought, and thought rightly, too, it would be eminently proper that some fitting acknowledgement be made, and this sentiment crystallized into the presentation as before set forth. In closing the remarks preceding the presentation Editor Richardson said: "These roses, Miss Stewart, will fade, but the feeling of kindly regard and esteem in which you are held by the eight hundred members of Local Union 306 will never fade. The thought of your kindness and loyalty to your pledged word will remain a pleasant memory, and your shadow form upon the screen will always meet a warm smile of welcome from the boys who man the machines in the six hundred Greater New York City theaters."

From a Manager.

On the night of May 6th, as has already been noted, I, at a banquet, addressed Local Union 384, Hoboken, N. J. Now comes C. G. Hayes, manager U. S. Gardens, Newark, N. J., with the following letter.

I was one of those fortunate enough to be in attendance at the banquet of Local Union No. 384, Saturday evening, May 6th, and I think congratulations for your masterly address are in order. I remained until the last word was spoken at 4 a. m., and felt your address well repaid me for the time spent, even at that late, or early, hour. I trust that your mission to the work in this direction will bear fruit, and that I will again have the pleasure of meeting you personally at some future time.

It is gratifying to know that, although I speak pretty plainly to managers concerning some of their errors, still as a general proposition they are broad minded enough to realize the fact that my criticism is wholly and entirely for their own good, as well as the good of the moving picture industry. I appreciate the kindness of Manager Hayes in sending this letter of appreciation. There were not as many managers present as I would have liked to have seen, although at that there was a goodly number. So anxious am I to do all the good possible that I make this offer here and now: At any time the Hudson County Exhibitors' League wishes me to address its members, and will undertake the contract of getting out a good attendance, I will be very glad indeed to give the lectures necessary to do it. These lectures are given for the good of the industry, and for the good of theater managers and operators. I am neither a film producer, a manufacturer, or a supply dealer. I have no axe of any kind whatsoever to grind and only seek to do the greatest possible amount of good in improving the methods of projection of the moving picture.

Pleasure and Benefit.

A. C. Michel, New York City, encloses money for the second set of questions, and says:

I would very much like to tell you of the pleasure and benefit I derive from reading and studying the department. This, however, I am unable to do because of the fact that my working vocabulary is some several short of the requisite number of adjectives and synonyms necessary; also I haven't the time because it would require several weeks of continuous pen pushing to do the job in the way I would like to do it. The book let costs 25 cents; I am sending thirteen two cent stamps because I don't want to spoil the color scheme. You will, however, please donate the extra penny to the Society of "Expert Projectionists" opposed to the projection department, and all other methods of increasing projection knowledge—do doubt they need it.

All of which speaks for itself. I would gladly donate the extra penny but I don't know where the headquarters of this particular organization reside, unless it is in a certain city noted for wind and big feet. If J. M., of that classic village claims the penny he can have it without argument.

It is a rule of this department that no apparatus will be recommended editorially until the value of such appliances has been demonstrated to its editor.

One of the greatest examples of industry has been brought to the notice of the Editor in the person of Conrad H. Thiele, 437 West 41st street, New York City, who has given us some photographs of his home made "3 in 1" camera as he calls it because he can use it for the triple purpose of taking, printing and projecting. He showed some really excellent strips of film which he had taken with his home made box.

There is no reason that any young would-be camera man with a little ingenuity and mechanical ability cannot do as well for himself.

In the old days, when the Patents' Company controlled the camera situation and it was impossible to buy a camera under any pretext, there were many thousands of feet of independent film manufacturers' negatives turned out from cameras constructed from projection heads.

In this case Mr. Thiele used an old Powers No. 5 head with an inside shutter which he modified by cutting it down to one blade.

In making such a camera it is necessary to purchase a photographic lens for taking the pictures, as a projecting lens is not suitable, although the focusing mount may be used by fixing the photographic objective in a tube the same size as the barrel of the projecting lens and slipping it in place in the mount.

The retorts or film magazines may be made from a good quality of a reel in a take up magazine on a projection machine.

The spring belt connects the take up retort with the take up pulley on the machine head and the slippage of the belt compensates for the increasing sized roll, the same as the slippage of the friction clutch on a projection machine take up.

Usually a motion picture camera has a short crank and takes eight pictures per turn, but although the amateur mechanic can provide a two to one reduction gear for the crank if he sees fit, it is not absolutely necessary, and if he is an old machine operator, he can easily sense the correct turning time without preliminary practice with a short crank.

The accompanying illustrations show the camera open and closed, the young constructor and a short section of film which he made with it.

A tube containing a magnifying glass extends from the back of the gate to the rear of the camera and permits of focusing on the film without opening the camera.

When taking, this focusing orifice is closed by a brass flap which turns to one side flat against the back of the camera on a screw through a hole in its edge.

When printing from the negative with this camera the positive stock is placed in the retort and a rack for holding the negative is fastened to the top of the camera. Directly above the feed sprocket in the camera case is a velvet lined slot which admits the negative and below the take up sprocket is another out of which the negative is fed as fast as printed.

When in use as a camera these slots are closed with pieces of brass much the same as the focusing orifice at the back.

When printing the lens is removed and a printing light placed in front of the camera at a distance gauged by the density of the negative which may be inspected during the printing through the focusing tube at the back. If possible, for the printing a small detachable handle should be made to fit on the end of a sprocket spindle or upon one of the shafts which, like the shutter, revolves once for each picture or frame, as it is termed, so that the mechanism can be more easily operated at the slower speed required for printing. It is best to adopt a uniform speed of turning for printing and to vary the exposure as required by the different negative densities by adjusting the distance of the printing light.

In printing, the negative and positive are threaded together in contact, emulsion to emulsion, taking care to make a slightly larger loop in the positive than in the negative, as the larger radius of curve described by the positive film requires a longer arc to subtend it. If this is not done, the negative film must buckle slightly to accommodate itself within the loop of positive and give imperfect contact and a tendency to crawl.

A crawl is a shifting of the relation of frame and the perforations causing unsteadiness and misframing.

When used as a projector, the screws which hold the head in the camera are loosened and it is replaced in position on a projecting machine stand.

Putting the Move in the Movies.

The Saturday Evening Post for May 13th carries an article under this title which will be well worth the investment of five cents for a copy for every camera man to read.

While there is not much said about the technical side of the work in motion picture studios, the article is nevertheless of great importance on account of the excellent way in which it presents the scientific management and factory efficiency as applied to the running of the studio: ideas which have been advocated by this department for application in both the studio and the factory end and which are daily coming into greater and greater account in the management of up-to-date studios.

cigar box wood but it is much better to obtain some thin close-grained wood from a cabinet maker.

The film is wound up into the take up magazine by a spring belt. A spindle in the center of the magazine box is arranged with a grooved pulley on the exterior of the retort and a longitudinal slot or groove in the spindle on the interior engages a key or peg which projects into the center of the film spool and prevents the film spool from rotating on the spindle, or the film spool may be keyed on the spindle the same as

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Musical Setting for "The Lights of New York."

Released May 29 by the V-L-S-E, Inc.—Suggestions Prepared by S. M. Berg.

(By special arrangement with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance, 3½ T "Poppy Brown" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 20 D "Hawk calls on dancing master" is a description of action.

Hawk Chovinski, a sneak thief, holds up Yolande Cowles and her father as they are coming home from the opera one night and the shock kills the father. Hawk makes such a small haul that he decides to become a society gentleman and ply his trade. His step-sister, Poppy, lives with him, but his brutality causes her to run away. After much suffering her lover Skelly takes her to Martin Dale, wealthy settlement worker and admirer of Yolande, who provides her with work. Hawk, posing as a Baron, dorks his way into high society and meets Yolande, who does not recognize him. He wins her affections and her promise to marry him. On the wedding day his real identity is revealed and he is imprisoned. Yolande then accepts the true love of Martin, while Skelly and Poppy are happily married.

A considerable amount of action is at a popular restaurant showing the guests dancing. Great care must be taken in following the dancers' tempo.

The THEME selected is "Little Song"—d'Ambréolo.

Time schedule: 71 minutes (45 reels—about 4,700 feet).

Time.	Subtitles or Descriptive Cues.	Music.
0	D Opening.	Little Song—d'Ambréolo. (Allegretto moderato) (THEME) †Agitato No. 1.

Insulting the Patrons. An Incident in a Theater.

By S. M. Berg.

ON a well-known thoroughfare a few nights ago, I noticed a crowd gathering in front of a small theater. Being curious to learn the cause of the disturbance, I joined the throng. The doorman and a patron were having a heated argument over a ticket and it seemed that a fight would ensue. A man who held authority came upon the scene and inquired the cause of the trouble. In a few brief words he satisfied the patron that the doorman was wrong and asked him why he dared insult his patrons. He then made it clear that, right or wrong, the patron must always be right. The next time the doorman took the liberty of insulting a patron he would lose his job. Impressed by this remark, I felt that this exhibitor gives careful attention to details, which tends to make an audience satisfied.

I entered the theater. It was a clean, orderly house, capacity about eight hundred, with comfortable chairs, uniformed ushers, no posts to obstruct the view; in fact, a model house as far as appearances go. The projection appeared to be good, and the house was well filled. I found a seat in the second row, and naturally my attention was directed to the music. I saw a young man, the pianist, struggling through a waltz in D, but, to be frank, it sounded like L. The picture, which was a scenic, finally ended and the music stopped, much to my relief. A few slides announced the coming attractions—then the feature was thrown on the screen.

In the meantime, two young women took seats in the front row. Evidently they were the pianist's friends, for the three began an animated conversation. The feature was well under way when a young man with a violin case came down the aisle and jumped over the railing. He greeted the pianist and the young ladies and then leisurely opened his violin case. He looked up at the feature a minute and then decided that he was there to play.

He called the pianist's attention from his friends and had him strike A a few times so he could tune up. He then hurriedly searched through the music books and came up with a piece of music which he placed on the stand. The picture had been running now about ten minutes when the orchestra (?) started a late fox-trot. Without looking at the picture, the violinist sawed through the number, even falling to observe the expression marks. Each strain played with equal force and the whole, being entirely out of harmony with the picture, was most distressing.

Where was the manager all this time? Probably in the box office, counting receipts and wondering why business was not better. Perhaps he was helping his porter paste up posters for the next day's show.

The violinist and pianist segued into Traumerl. The next scene was an Indian war dance, but the violinist ignored the change. Evidently he was determined to play Schumann's masterpiece to the end, as he continued playing during the scene where the Indians went on the warpath. Attempting to turn the music, the pianist let it slip and fell to the floor. He attempted to "fake" an accompaniment, but without success. Poor Schumann's Traumerl came to an abrupt end. The violinist laid down his fiddle and sat back to rest a while (he needed it) and enjoy the picture.

I saw and heard enough, and walked out. As I reached the door, the same gentleman who had reprimanded the doorman remarked, "Good evening," and I answered "Good night."

Debating with myself a moment, I wondered whether or not I should point out to the manager that he was insulting his patrons by tolerating such inferior musical interpretations. I realized that "discretion is the better part of valor" and left the house.

All the glaringness and indifference of the musicians escaped the watchful eye of the manager. The doorman was severely reprimanded when he argued with a patron over the validity of a ticket, but the orchestra, who were offending hundreds every week, escaped. Evidently the manager paid all attention to the front of the house, as most managers do.

If more exhibitors would watch the back of the house with the vigilance they do the box-office and front of the house, there would be fewer complaints about poor business.

A successful musical interpretation is as necessary to a picture as good projection.

How many managers tolerate for an instant a film that jumps, flickers, or goes out of focus?

They pay careful attention that their patrons' eyes do not suffer. They read the trade magazines, always endeavoring to select the best pictures and best service.

Their machines receive careful attention. They are oiled regularly and when a part becomes worn, it is replaced with a new part at once. No expense is spared on the quality of their films or projection. They consider their patrons' intelligence when it comes to features and projection, but forget the discord and noise that comes from the orchestra which offends their patience, ears and intelligence. Their money is going out every week for rent and salaries—how money spent on such an orchestra as I have just described is money thrown away.

Intelligence enters into the success of any undertaking, but many managers neglect one of the most important features of a moving picture theater—the music.

Whether a pianist, an organ or an orchestra, the musical setting at all times should be in keeping with the atmosphere of the picture and never for an instant be permitted to interrupt the picture, any more than it is permitted to jump all over the score.

There is always room for improvement and development in music the same as anything else.

There are many different ways of playing a picture well and it behooves every manager to see that his musician or musicians study the work and develop a style and method that meets with the approval of the most discriminating patrons.

It can be done and is eventually bound to be recognized by the public. The manager should always recognize a musician's ability and pay him accordingly. Good things come high, and this is certainly true of good music.

Most audiences demand good music the same as they do good pictures. Until the music in picture theaters is seriously reckoned with, many houses throughout the country will suffer from poor business. It has been proved that good pictures and good music are money makers and the sooner the manager realizes this, the better for himself and the long suffering public.

"Ramona" Titles an Innovation

Clune Company Makes Distinct Artistic Advance with Its Leaders Superimposed on Still and Moving Backgrounds.

NEW ideas in the making of pictures are not so frequent that we can afford to pass without comment the titling of "Ramona," the first production of the W. H. Clune Film Company. There can hardly be question that the manner of presentation of the titles in this subject adds to the charm of the picture as a whole, that the leaders serve materially to decrease the illusion-destroying powers of these necessary evils. For evils in large measure titles undoubtedly are—and what good director does not go to lengths in his efforts to avoid their use, to so clarify his action as to reduce to a minimum the number that may be required intelligibly to tell the story.

Less of fruitful thought has been given to the making of titles than perhaps any other department of picture-making. The greatest producers of the day—just as an illustration—continue to tint their titles in the same bath as that which carries the scene that follows it. On the heels of a scene in straight black and white will be a leader in inconspicuously contrasting tint—a glaring signal to the millions of picturewise that what comes next is to be a moonlight situation or one of sunlight or one of lamplight. It is a jolt, a piece of inartistry that is as frequent as it is inexcusable. It would seem to be a case of thousands of dollars for the director but not even tens of dollars for the laboratory. Ask a producer the why and the wherefore and he will blandly inform you that it is a matter of convenience to tint the title at the same time the film for the ensuing scene is dipped; that leaders at best are a nuisance to be got over in the easiest way.

The leaders in "Ramona" mark a distinct advance. They make for artistry, for notable progress. Briefly, they are printed upon film that carries under or near the lettering matter of atmospheric value, that which holds the spectator in the illusory grip of the particular scene about to be enacted. Lloyd Brown, general manager of the Clune company is credited with the idea. It seems that Mr. Brown in the course of his work decided he wanted something distinctive in the way of titles. With that absence of competition that marks the development of all the schemes that hatch in his mind, he quietly ordered an adobe hut built as a background. Then Enrico Vallejo, the Clune company photographer, was asked why he could not use the hut in obtaining double exposure effects. Mr. Vallejo saw the point.

Mr. Brown's original intention was to have two or three characteristic backgrounds for his leaders, these to run through the subject. For example, he chose a frame of eucalyptus logs tied with leather thongs for the direct quotations from Mrs. Jackson's book. For the "Romana" prologue, with its pronounced Spanish and Indian flavor, Mr. Brown chose the "dobe" wall, showing first the window and again the doorway, double exposing the title over these. Then he discovered he must escape the peril of monotony, so he chose other typical backgrounds, such as a Mission Indian blanket or the pair of horses' heads.

"When Mr. Brown's noodle gets to work," as one of his associates declared in speaking of the subject of "Ramona" titles, "it is rapid and fecund. He soon had the idea of a moving background. Hence you see the birds moving about on the branches or the Indian running through the flaming embers of the village of Temecula behind lettering." The idea of the titles according to Mr. Brown's explanation, was like Topsy—"it just growed." One of the striking leaders is printed in white on a mountainide, while the camera is shut down so as to bring the hills into silhouette, while the narrowed light has clearly brought out the clouds above. Another, during the sheep-shearing period, reveals thousands of sheep, moving like waves behind and to the side of the leader.

These are but a few instances of the many that enter into the making of the picture. That the innovation will be grasped by other producers is to be expected—and for that matter to be hoped for. Some have already declared their intention to "grab" the idea. One or two have attempted titles seemingly suggested by those in "Ramona," but apparently they have failed to realize that the chief virtue in the Clune title is its simplicity—the presence of the natural, the absence of the artificial.

LITTLE AUDREY BERRY VISITS OLD FRIENDS.

Little Audrey Berry, who will be remembered as one of the most popular child artists in motion pictures, was a visitor at the Vitagraph Flatbush studios, during the week and renewed her acquaintance with the various stars with whom she worked while a member of the stock company. The photoplay star was compelled to forego the lure of picture posing, for the time being, in order to pursue her studies which took up all her time.

"I am coming back to pictures some day," replied the little lady to a question as to what she intended doing when her education was finished, "and I do hope the Vitagraph company will give me another chance to meet my many friends through the medium of their pictures."

Miss Berry's most important pictures under the Vitagraph banner includes "The Jarr Family Series," in which she played Emma Jarr; "Mr. Santa Claus," "A Close Call," "The Crime of Cain" and "The Arrival of Josie."

WESTERN STORY FOR KERRIGAN.

F. McGrew Willis of the scenario department at Universal City, is at work on a new story for J. Warren Kerrigan, which is entitled "The Beckoning Trail," and in which the popular star plays the role of a dissolute young New Yorker, who goes to a Western mining camp where, during the train of events, he develops into a real man. The picture is offered as a splendid opportunity to display his gift of unusual strength, putting half a dozen Western huskies hors de combat in short order.

JACCARD TO FILM SERIES.

Under the main title of "Dollars and Sense," Director Jacques Jaccard will film a series of one-reel underworld photoplays, most of which will be written by himself. The first one will be entitled "Men and Women," work on which has been commenced. Jaccard's company will consist of G. Raymond Nye, playing the featured lead, with Miss Roberta Wilson, Miss Peggy Coudray and Si Clegg. Jaccard recently has finished a five-reel underworld film play entitled "It makes a Difference."

FEATURING THE DESERT.

Desert land close to Newhall, Calif., just outside of the beautiful San Fernando Valley, will serve as a setting for a number of the scenes in the forthcoming Horsley-Mutual production, "The Fool's Game," an unusual story from the pen of Crane Wilbur, who will also be seen as the star in this picture.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Look at the Bright Side Once in a While.

ONE gets tired of writing and reading, week in and week out, about moving pictures with a long face and in serious vein. We take ourselves and our business too seriously. We laugh too little and are prone to look on the shady instead of the bright side of things. We need a tonic that will bring a little of the sunshine of optimism our way.

To have our minds constantly filled by the bogey of censorship will make us forget that the future of the moving picture cannot be permanently injured by it or any other agency. The character of the moving picture, like our own, is purified and shaped by hard knocks, bravely borne and triumphantly overcome. Its future is closely interwoven with our own, and it will become more increasingly serviceable to mankind if our best intelligence guides it.

How often do we miss observing the good that the moving picture accomplishes? A bright instance of this beneficent observation is furnished by the editor of the Brookfield (Mo.) Argus, whose discovery is preserved in print by the following editorial that recently appeared in the Chicago News, under the head, "Movies and Matrimony": "There be grumpy folk who allege that the cure is worse than the disease when told that the film shows are cutting into the business of the saloons and are keeping people away from cabaret performances and tango teas, but even these congenial malcontents should say a word of praise for the 'movies' when they read the latest verdict in favor of those great modern entertainers. The motion pictures encourage matrimony!"

"This interesting discovery has just been made by the Brookfield (Mo.) Argus, which alleges that the film drama has reduced the high cost of courtship. Courtship having been made cheaper, one may assume, without spraining a logical sequence, that matrimony will become more popular."

"The Argus man recalls that in the days of his youth it cost Philander to give his best girl an evening's treat $3 for theater tickets, $2 for a carriage and a breathless sum for supper. All that is now changed. The enamored youth of today drops around in the evening, takes the girl to a picture show—20 cents—invests a nickel in popcorn and 20 cents more in ice cream soda at the corner drug store. Then Cupid, with a full heart and a full tummy, is entirely satisfied. The frugal lover has merely to repeat this formula ad lib. until the fatal question is popped and 'they live happily ever after.'"

"So far so good. If the 'movies' encourage matrimony, more power to them! But one of the almost invariable results of matrimony among our best people is children, and far too many 'movie' shows hang out that dreadful placard, 'No Children Admitted.' As the sponsors of families the 'movies' must consider the most important factors in families—the little people. Not only must they encourage the whoring of families, but they must conserve the families whom founded."

"Gloria's Romance" in the South.

M. E. Smith, superintendent of George Kleine's branch offices throughout the country, recently made a flying trip through the South, in the interests of "Gloria's Romance" and the Kleine-Edison features. He stopped over in Dallas, Houston and New Orleans and reports that the picture business is very prosperous throughout that section of country. "Gloria's Romance" is now being run in the Halcyon theaters in Dallas, Waco, Houston and Galveston, and good business is reported from all of them.

In New Orleans the Billie Burke novel was booked by Jake Miller in his Empire theater for a run of twenty weeks, each chapter being run for a week. The opening date was Sunday, June 4. The Empire is a high class theater and is patronized by the best people in the Crescent City.

Mr. Miller has the exclusive showing of Ivan productions in New Orleans, and also the state rights in Louisiana to "The Unwritten Law" (California), so that, in addition to "Gloria's Romance," his program will offer selections from these makes. The admissions at the Empire are 10 and 20 cents.

Mr. Miller is a liberal advertiser, and after booking "Gloria's Romance," he immediately decided on a personal publicity campaign for that moving picture novel, in addition to the prominent publicity given it in New Orleans by George Kleine.

Mr. Smith found business conditions of all kinds very good in the South, due to the largest cotton crop known in many years.

Chicago Film Briefs.

George Kleine arrived in the city Saturday, May 27, and returned to New York by the Twentieth Century on Tuesday, May 30. He was busily occupied during his stay and, when seen, expressed himself as being gratified with the great success of "Gloria's Romance."

I received a card invitation, by mail, last week to attend the opening of the American Theater, in Salt Lake City, on Wednesday evening, May 31. The card came from my old friend, William H. Swanson, who owns it and a circuit of theaters that stretches through Colorado, Utah and Montana. The card was gotten up especially to invite all the nobles of El Kalah Temple, A. O. N. M. S., in Salt Lake City, with the assurance that after the show it would give Mr. Swanson "great pleasure to meet all the nobles of this oasis informally on the hot sands of the theater lobby." Here's to the great success of the American Theater!

Harry Weiss, formerly manager of Metro's Chicago branch, has joined the forces of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., as associate manager of the Chicago branch. Manager I. Van Ronkle informs me that during the two weeks that Mr. Weiss has been in the office he has increased the business in a way that is highly satisfactory.

Judge Wm. Fenimore Cooper, who is up for re-election as judge of the Superior Court in this city, on June 5, has filed two suits in the Circuit Court, each for $200,000 damages, against Wm. Randolph Hearst and his publications for certain charges published against him. Judge Cooper has been a big friend of moving pictures, and has the hearty support of the entire trade in the city. In addition to slides recommending his re-election, the exhibitors and the trade have flooded the city with one-sheet posters, which bear the following request to voters: "The 'movies' of Chicago ask you to re-elect William Fenimore Cooper." He sustained our legal rights denied us by powerful opposition; re-elect him and encourage judges who are fearless in administering the law."

L. Wm. O'Connell, who has been actively associated in the auditing department of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. for a year, left Chicago Saturday, June 3, for a special trip of investigation which will embrace the entire Pacific Coast. It is his intention to call upon all the film producers in that territory, and make a comprehensive report covering the situation for his company. Mr. O'Connell will return to Chicago about October 1.

Miss Eugenie Besserer, Matt. Snyder, Cecil Holland, Leo Pierson and George Fawcett return to Chicago on Monday, May 29, after appearing in the scenes taken for "The Crisis" at Vicksburg, Miss. Miss Eyton, who had never visited New York City, took advantage of the opportunity to pay the metropolis a brief visit, to which she proceeded direct from Vicksburg to take in the sights before returning to Los Angeles.

Miss Besserer and Matt. Snyder, when seen by me, were enthused over the hospitality shown the Selig players in Vicksburg. Several very enjoyable social functions were given in their honor. Among these was one given by Harris Dickson, the famous author, whose "Ole Reliable" stories have scored such a hit in the Saturday Evening Post. Mr. Dickson threw open the doors of his mansion and entertained Director Colin Campbell and the Selig players to a real southern dinner. He also conducted the Selig players over the National Park in Vicksburg, pointing out all the points of interest and making them memorable by his explanations.

Matt. Snyder, now 82 years of age, and veteran of the Confederate army, who participated in the defense of Vicksburg over 50 years ago, was given a farewell party by his fellow players at the Vicksburg Hotel before leaving for Chicago on his way to the Los Angeles studios.

Miss Eugenie Besserer gave me a glowing description of the scene in Vicksburg one evening, when one of the big war scenes was being taken. This magnificent spectacle, unfortunately, could not be included in the pictures taken by the camera. It was in the evening when the shades were falling, and fully 10,000 people—men, women and children of Vicksburg and its environs—occupied every vantage point as far as the eye could reach. "It was an inspiring sight, and it shall always remain with me," said Miss Besserer.

The production of "The Prince Chap" will soon begin at Selig's Chicago studios. An all-star cast has been engaged, and Marshall Neilan will be the director. Scenes for this production will also be filmed in New York City and in Los Angeles.

A film producing company, known as the "Pleasure Producers," has been formed in Twin Falls, Idaho. James L. Tayv, of Twin Falls, is business manager and assistant director; Wm. Rogers, director, and V. J. Ament, cameraman. Wm. Rogers is author of several successful photoplays and of a drama, "Root of the Desert," which was played about a year ago in Twin Falls by local talent.

The cast of the first production has been selected from residents of Twin Falls. It will be a semi-western photoplay, featuring Shoshone Falls and other local scenic points.

It is the intention of the company to work into their photoplays types of southern Idaho homes, ranches, irrigation projects, the sage bush desert, Snake River canyon (with its wonderful falls and power plants), and also Boise City (the capital of Idaho), and the lakes, woodland and mountain scenery of northern Idaho.

In its plans, the company is working with a view to give a beneficial advertising campaign of the entire state, including its scenic, civic and industrial features.

"Cousin Jim," a photodrama written and acted exclusively by members of Chicago's elite, was given its premier at the Strand theater, 743 Washington street, on Friday evening, June 2. Grand opera prices ranging from $2 to $5 ruled at the opening presentation, the proceeds of which will be devoted to various charitable enterprises. The authors of "Cousin Jim" are John T. McCutcheon, famous cartoonist of the Chicago Tribune; Kenneth S. Goodman and C. W. Hitchcock, all prominent in Chicago and North Shore society circles. Only in the directing and technical departments was this society drama a professional production. It was staged by the Van Dee Producing Co. of Chicago, and the photography and laboratory work was done by the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. The latter company in securing the special sets in the interiors of prominent homes and leading clubs in the city and of the Blackstone Hotel, used its own special portable artificial lighting equipment. Waterson R. Rothacker, president of this company, is of the opinion that this is the first time that a feature picture has been made complete without using anything but special studio sets and special studio lighting.

H. A. Gundling, manager of the Bryn Mawr theater, this city, has leased the Wilson Avenue theater for the summer months. It is his intention to introduce big film features at this popular vaudeville house during the summer months. The opening attraction on Monday, May 5, will be "The Unwritten Law," which made a big hit at the Ziegfeld recently, being held over for a second week on account of the great interest it created. Mr. Gundling will attend to the booking.

An Associated Press dispatch from Pittsburgh states that a moving picture played an important part recently in the defense submitted by a telephone company in the Common Pleas Court. The telephone company was sued for heavy damages by a Mrs. Freda Garletz, who alleged that both of her hands and her back had been permanently injured after picking up a live wire of the telephone company.

After she had filed suit against the company a detective agency rented the house in the rear of her home, and installed a camera in one of the windows. The film exhibited in court showed Mrs. Garletz feeding her chickens, throwing corn over a high fence and lifting heavy boards and piling them up. In addition, the film showed other feats that required considerable strength.

Lou-Tellegen, who is an accomplished actor, will also star in these pictures.

Victor Eubank, Essanay's popular publicity manager, was out on an auto spin with his friend, Frank S. Johns, who represents a Cleveland lithographing firm, on Saturday, May 27, when the machine skidded and ran into a tree, on 1 North Side, near Fullerton avenue. Both men were thrown from the auto with great force, but luckily missed the tree and instant death. They were conveyed to the Alexian Brothers' Hospital, nearby, where it was found that Mr. Eubank had his left leg broken and his face badly cut, but not seriously. Mr. Johns did not fare as well. His spine was seriously injured, and at the time of writing (nearly a week afterwards) his condition is still considered grave. Mr. Eubank is improving fast and expects to be at his desk at 13333 Argyle street at an early date—but broken legs take time to mend. I heartily congratulate my friend, Eubank, that he was so fortunate, and regret deeply that Mr. Johns, whom I have met, did not come out as safely.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the week ending Sunday or Monday, June 4 and 5:

Studebaker—"Gloria's Romance," fifth chapter; "The Gathering Storm" (George Kleine), Charles Chaplin in "Police" (Essanay) and Alice Brady in "La vie de Boh" (World). The fourth chapter of "Gloria's Romance" was even more popular than those preceding it, it is reported.

Fine Arts—Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle in "The Whirl of Life" (Cort Film Corporation), showing the popular "Castle Glide."

Siegfied—"The Bondman" (Fox) with William Farnum, from Hall Caine's story of that name.

Strand—Lillian Gish in "An Innocent Magdalene" (Fine Arts), the Casino Club players in the society film "Cousin Jim" (Van Dee Producing Co.), and Mut and Jeff cartoons.

Orchestra Hall—Fannie Ward in "The Tuter Magdalene" (Lasky), and vocal solos.

La Salle—Fifth week of "The Little Girl Next Door" (Illinois vice film).

ETHEL DENIES "VAUDE" RUMOR.

A quick exchange of wires between New York and Los Angeles last week brought a speedy and emphatic denial from Ethel Teare of the story appearing in a Chicago vaudeville publication declaring that she was contemplating a return to headline honors in vaudeville. The story continued to the effect that Miss Teare was to be starred in a tabloid revue which would start a tour bringing it to Broadway with the opening of the Fall season.

TWENTY-FOUR FILM ACTORS IN WRECK.

American Woman Film Company Director and Actors Seriously Injured When Big Truck Plunges Into Gully.

A GIANT motor truck in the service of the American Woman Film Company, while returning from location at Chatsworth Park, near this city, plunged headlong into a twenty-foot gully on a mountain roadway on Wednesday, May 23, injuring twenty-four persons and severely shaking up the rest of the party. Two were so severely injured they may die. The accident was caused by the presence in the road of a rock half submerged in the clay-like dirt. The front wheel on the outside of the truck hit the rock and jumped over it, throwing the steering mechanism out of the driver's control. The truck toppled over the edge.

The company was under the direction of J. Farrell MacDonald. The players were in costume for "Saul of Tarsus." The men in the party started rescuing those pinned beneath the vehicle. Word was rushed to Los Angeles by telephone, and speed officers, ambulances and police wagons were summoned. Before assistance arrived the men had rescued everyone from the debris and were administering first aid to the sufferers.

Assistant Director McDonough had a leg broken in two places and several other injuries. Mrs. Imregard Schoone-maker was perhaps the most badly injured. Others hurt were: Mrs. K. Bernard, who was found to have a broken hip and to be internally injured; Miss Virginia Driscoll, Fred Madden, A. W. Drago, Kenneth McRae, Albano Luiz, Dorothy Dean, J. E. Ellsworth, Katherine Wallace, Golda Madden, Jann Bell, Phila O'Neil, Helen Gordon, Marie James, Mrs. M. J. White, John McDonough, May Adam, F. J. Robinson, Charles Adams, Florence Dowdell, Mrs. Charles Adams, Miss Resa Bullock and Miss Peggy Hart. T. E. Dickerson, driver of the truck, was not blamed. The responsibility has not been placed, as the evidence showed conclusively it was purely accidental.

This is the most serious accident that has been experienced by so large a number of film players in the history of picture-making on the coast.

"JULIUS CAESAR" TO BE SHOWN AGAIN

Actors' Fund to Repeat Shakespearean Drama in Majestic Theater for Thousands Who Failed to See Open Air Presentation.

Owing to the repeated demands of the public for a repetition of "Julius Caesar," the California Committee of the Actors' Fund of America has decided to give the play once more with the same remarkable cast. The play will be indoors instead of underneath the stars, as it was given in Hollywood. The cast will be the same except for two minor changes, and the principals are already working to make this performance equal the first one.

D. W. Griffith, who is now working on his greatest master production, "The Mother and the Law," of which little is known, and Mack Sennett, maker of Keystone comedies, who control the Majestic Theater, agreed to donate their house for the one night, Monday, June 5, delaying the regular weekly opening one day.

As a means of selling more seats at a higher price the committee arranged with the Hotel Alexandria to hold a public dinner and dance to sell seats at auction. Present were stars who took part, as well as many famous persons in stage and studio life. The seats were from $1 to $2.50, while boxes are $25. It was expected that the house will be sold out before the first day's sale closes.

Balboa Celebrates Birthday.

Three years ago, May 23, 1913, when studios were not so thick and large, H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer started work at the little studio formerly occupied by the Edison western company in Long Beach. There was a little stage, a small office in a bungalow, and lots of open ground. Today that bungalow has been razed, the stage is covered by a huge property room, and all the open space is bearing the weight of stages, cutting rooms, laboratory, storage rooms, garage, offices, and other buildings. There are 250 employees in place of about a dozen. Instead of occupying one corner the plant covers the four corners of the intersecting streets, and it is rapidly growing. Now there are six large companies at work. E. D. Horkheimer recently passed over the news that two more would be put on during the summer.

President H. M. Horkheimer says the success of Balboa has been attained only by perseverance and hard work. The loyal standpaters who have been there from the first are Norman Manning, business manager; Robert Brotherton, cameraman and chief of the laboratory; William Beckway, chief cameraman; John Wyse, stage manager, and Miss May Brotherton, head of the cutting and assembly departments.

In view of the fact that Balboa stock is not for sale, and has not been offered for sale, and that it has grown from almost nothing to the big factor it is in the film business today, and that it has no regular permanent releasing firm attached to it, the success is unusual.

Films to Teach Cleanliness.

Proving that visual education in the shape of moving pictures is far superior and more effective than lectures or printed matter, County Health Officer J. L. Pomeroy has filed with the Board of Supervisors the request for a moving picture outfit. He asks for $5,000. New York, Chicago and other eastern communities have equipped their health departments with means for showing the residents of these places the necessity for control of disease, improvements in sanitation and hygiene, according to the statement of Health Officer Pomeroy.

Film Stars in Unique Stunts at Ascot Races.

The main event of the show given at the Ascot Speedway for the benefit of the Actors' Fund, Tuesday this week, was the automobile fashion show.

Judgment as to which of the cars and drivers presented the best appearance was left to the audience with the result that Priscilla Dean, of the Vogue Films, Inc., driving a beautifully decorated roadster was awarded the first prize; Dorothy Dalton, the Ince star, second, and Myrtle Gonzalez, of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., the third.

Following the decision of the multitude of judges, Miss Dean was presented with a beautifully designed cup, presented by the Pals Club. Miss Dalton received a handsome trophy, donated by the Ventura Refining Company.

Second in importance was the ten-mile race for the championship of the motion picture studios of Los Angeles, which was won by Arthur Hansen of the Ince studios, with Wm. Russell of the American a close second.

Charlie Murray was the master of ceremonies. There was much comedy in the "junk race," for a Charles Murray trophy. This was won by the Keystone Cops.

The complete list of entries and events on the program was as follows:

First event—Five-mile motorcycle race, six entries; mile a minute to qualify.

Second event—One-mile exhibition for juvenile track record.

Third event—The automobile fashion show, with the following entrants:

Mabel Normand, Mabel Normand Feature Film Company; Edna Goodrich, Morosco; Priscilla Dean, Kalem; Lillian Pavcock, Universal; Ruth Stonehouse, Universal; Anita King, Lasky; Louise Lovely, Universal; Helen Gibson, Kalem; Dorothy Dalton, Thos. Ince Features; Virginia Rappe, L-Ko; Francisca Billington, Universal; Mrs. Crane Willard, Horley; Helen Jerome Eddy, American Woman Film Co.; Mary Anderson, Vitagraph; Gale Henry, Universal; Myrtle Stedman, Morosco; Julia Herron, Thos. Ince Features; Oliver Golden, Universal; Billie DeSosa, Universal; Viola Smith, Universal; Verna Moore, Universal; Maude Egan, Universal; Cleo Madison, Universal; Virginia Dorr, Horley; Constance Johnson, Lasky; Myrtle Gonzales, Universal; Rena Rogers, Vogue; Ethel Ullman, Thos. Ince Features; Baby Zoo (five years old), Universal.

Fourth event—Two-mile junk race, Charles Murray trophy.

Keystone Cops, L-Ko Cops, Carter De Haven and Pat Rooney, Universal.

Fifth event—Bicycle challenge race; the Masked Marvels, Keystone; McGuire and Turpin, Vogue. For the comedy championship.

Sixth event—Two-mile challenge auto race; Frank Goode, Fine Arts; Andy Anderson, Keystone.

Seventh event—Ten-mile championship, Barney Oldfield trophy; William Russell, American Film Company; Arthur Houson, Thomas H. Ince; "Dutch" Megers, Keystone, Keystone special; Louis L. Cody, Mabel Normand studio; Phil Goodfriend, Vitagraph.

Opposes Mayor on Film Commissioner Question.

Despite Mayor Sebastian's announcement that he would make no appointment to the new office of film commissioner on the ground that Los Angeles needs no censorship of motion pictures, the civil service commission has ordered examination for the office continued and completed.

The written examination for the film commissionership, which will pay a salary of $175, already has been held. The oral examination for the forty-eight candidates will be called for the latter part of next week.

The examination for police detectives, called for June 5, has been postponed by the civil service commission until July 5.

"Gloria's Romance" Heads the Bill at Pantages.

The advent this week of Billie Burke in George Kleine's serial, "Gloria's Romance," as the headliner at Pantages, makes a new departure in the policy of this popular vaudeville house.

Heretofore Mr. Pantages has never played anything on his program which could be billed above his vaudeville acts. He has run a number of serial pictures and feature films, but no one before has been advertised as the exclusive headliner of the program.

There are very few stars before the public who are more universally popular than Billie Burke, and her sweet and winsome personality transfers to the screen in most attractive fashion, and the producers of "Gloria's Romance" have not overlooked any opportunity to make use of it. The serial will be shown in Pantages' Spokane and Tacoma houses at the same time it is running here.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

The fifteen-thousand-dollar St. James Methodist Episcopal Church, now under construction, is to be equipped with a projection machine and a complete outfit for putting on educational and biblical pictures. Several other churches are trying to secure moving picture machines for such purposes.

So far Los Angeles seems to have got along without even one bothersome censor.

William J. Fahey, proprietor of the Joyland Theater in Long Beach, has taken a lease on a theater which is being constructed in his city at a cost of $15,000. The new house will be at 30 Pine avenue and will be modern and up to the minute. It is to be called The Paramount Theater, and will be opened in about three months.

Writers at the American have organized an informal club. The first dinner has been held in Santa Barbara with over a dozen present. The pen pushers and scenarioists who enjoyed the feast were Editor in Chief William Pigott, "Pop" Hoadley, one of the veterans; William Parker, author of the submarine serial now being made by the Flying "A"; Al Santell, Harold Hoadley, Donald W. Rayburn, John Wall, E. H. Gooden, Julian L. Lamothe, A. W. Coldewey, George Wight and Carl Coolidge.

R. S. Sturgeon at the Vitagraph is finishing the big detective story that he has been working on for some weeks. One set he used represented a courtroom. In the audience he had several hundred extras yelling and protesting. In this scene George Holt, the heavy, runs through the crowd and jumps from the window. In the picture he did a real leap from the fourth story of the real court house, into a fireman's net, and was uninjured.

Clem Pope, manager of the publicity department of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company, has invested in a natty red racer.

Ollie Kirkby, one of Kalem's social buccaneers, is in the hospital suffering from an injury sustained in picture-making.

A skating rink in Long Beach was the scene this week of a jolly party when the Balboa gave one of its regular monthly skates for the employees.

Art Acord, who is known in Mutual films as a great cowboy, was slightly injured last week when he was pitched from a bucking broncho.

Tom Chatterton, who is featured in the submarine serial for the Flying A, last week came to town to see old friends, do a few stunts, and incidentally drop into the World office and leave his subscription for a year. He says he likes the American and Santa Barbara, but it is good to see the old faces.

William Dowling, ex-Universal director-actor, has arrived at the American studios and has started work.

Kalem has rented a ranch for James W. Horne, who is starting work on the first installment of the new serial he is making with Marin Sais.

Hal Lloyd, who is creating quite a character in Lonesome Luke in Rolin-Pathe comedies, together with Director Hal Roach, cameraman Jim Crosby and Harry Pollard went to Tia Juana again this week to get additional scenes for the comedy which they made there last month.

Cecil B. De Mille has returned to the Lasky studio in Hollywood after a trip to New York and return via the Mexican border. He dropped off in the south to look over locations for a coming Paramount picture.

Ruth Stonehouse, who was injured while making scenes for a big five reel circus picture when she jumped from a trapeze to a horse's back, is out of the hospital and is hard at work on a new picture in which she plays a leading part.

This week the Lasky company burned a small village for the newest Wallace Reid-Cleo Ridgely picture. The town was specially built for this purpose on the Lasky ranch. About 500 persons took part in the fire scenes at night. Ranchers from miles around stayed up all night to see the film actors doing their stunts.

Here's a note that shows how the folks of the American up at Santa Barbara are progressing: Fortune has dealt a royal hand during the last month to the members of Carl Le Viness Company of the American Film Company, presenting them with four baby girls. The fathers are Mr. Le Viness, William Parker, Abe Monlan and Al Vosburgh.

George Kleine has opened an exchange in the loft of the Knickerbocker Building on South Olive street, where the Billie Burke serial, "Gloria's Romance," will be distributed to the southland exhibitors.

All of the pictorial exhibit made at the great motion picture exposition recently in New York has been returned to the Chamber of Commerce and may be seen by the people of Los Angeles and vicinity at any time. The film division will be shown every morning beginning at 10 o'clock. Seeing this picture is the same as visiting nearly a dozen of the leading film studios of this vicinity. Another moving picture is "The Wining of the Peach." The scene is laid in Tulare County. The pictures are free, as are the lectures and concerts that fill every half-hour period of the day.

The work on the photoplay feature, "Saul of Tarsus," will be resumed this week by the American Woman Film Co. Although J. Farrell McDonald, the director, has not entirely recovered from the effects of the automobile accident in which he and a number of the members of the company were injured Wednesday last week, still the work will be carried on in his absence, the directing being temporarily in the hands of P. Z. Hartigan. All the persons injured in the accident are now reported out of danger.

Carried to the bottom of the ocean when he became ensnared in the body of an automobile which he drove from the end of the municipal pier at Santa Monica one day this week during the taking of a moving picture James Keating, an actor employed at a local studio, narrowly escaped drowning.

With four other men in the machine, Keating boldly drove into the sea. Failing to appear with the others after the plunge, the life guards rushed to his aid and brought him to the surface in an unconscious condition. Emergency treatment at a hospital quickly resuscitated him.

More than a dozen stage and film favorites gathered at a banquet given by Miss Marian Strauch in honor of Douglas Fairbanks prior to his departure for New York.

The banquet was held in the beautiful supper club room at Hotel Alexandria. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks, Mr. and Mrs. De Wolf Hopper, Mr. and Mrs. Dustin Farnum, Mr. and Mrs. William Farnum, Mrs. J. Lasky, Miss Marie Doro, Mr. Elliott Dexter, Mr. Robert Milton, Mr. W. D. Taylor, Mr. Benjamin Ziedman, Mrs. Lew Jefferey and the hostess, Miss Marian Strauch.

The Selig Zoo will be the scene of a big benefit entertainment on June 4.

Enid Markey of the Ince forces will go to New York and appear in the prologue of "Civilization," at the Criterion theater.

Thomas H. Ince this week became the namesake of a full blooded Sioux Indian baby born at Inceville. The infant is to be christened Thomas H. Ince Thunder Bull, and is the son of Chief Charlie Thunder Bull and Mrs. Nancy Thunder Bull, both of whom have appeared in several Ince-Triangle dramas to date.

The child is the first Sioux Indian to be born in California, this tribe having just come from the North Dakota reservation to take part in Ince moving pictures.

San Francisco's famous Barbary Coast is being duplicated at Culver City this week for some scenes in a current Ince-Triangle drama in which H. F. W. W. is appearing as star, under the direction of Charles Giblyn.

The story was written by J. G. Hawks and several hundred persons are appearing in the mob scenes.

Five Triangle exhibitors of San Francisco and its suburbs were among the visitors this week at Thomas H. Ince's new plant at Culver City.

They are H. C. Smith of the Marquee theater, in Palo Alto; W. Nasser of the Palace theater, San Francisco; George Roy of the Burlingame Photoplay theater, in Burlingame, and E. R. Freidburg of the Lyceum theater, San Francisco, and W. E. Corey of Corey and Fairland theaters, San Francisco.

Norma Talmadge of the Fine Arts, with her director, John Emerson, his assistant, Erich Von Stroheim, and his cameraman, have departed for the New York studios where they will start immediately the production of a new five-reel Triangle drama. Miss Talmadge will play the star role, which was written for her by Anita Loose.

The Fine Arts players were accompanied to the train by a number of their friends and studio associates, which included Mae Marsh, the Gish Sisters, Robert Barron, Mary Alden, Co-Directors C. M. and S. A. Franklin, Millard Webb, Bernard McConville, Chester Withey, W. S. Hart of Inceville and Miss Talmadge's two younger sisters, Constance and Natalie. The Fine Arts star found her drawing room crowded with choice flowers, candies and literature, and as the train pulled out of the Santa Fe station, the Fine Arts studio folks gave three cheers and a tiger for the departing party.

Lois Weber returned this week to Universal City after a month's rest from her strenuous labors at the film city. Miss Weber spent most of her vacation in New York, where she was entertained by President Carl Laemmle and Vice-President and General Manager E. J. O. Davis of the Universal Company and other officials of the motion picture concerns.

Eugene B. Lewis, who recently came to the Pacific Coast from New York, has been made the head of the scenario department at Universal City.

Mr. Lewis is an old newspaper man who drifted into the motion picture field several years before he became associated with the "Big U" organization. He was connected with the Biograph Company, for which concern he wrote a number of notable photoplay stories of recent production.

Melies Offers New Comedies

Series of High Class Subjects from Vim Studios for Release on General Film Program.

FEATURE comedies in the regular service of the General Film Company form the subject of an interesting announcement issued this week by Melies Manufacturing Company, releasing Vim Comedies and Knickerbocker Star Features. Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby, one of the most popular comedy teams on the screen, will appear each week in a high-class refined single reel comedy directed by Mr. Myers. It is probable that the first picture will be released late in June. Wednesday of each week will be the regular release date.

Mr. Myers has already completed eight productions, five of which have been screened in New York for the private view of a number of film notabilities, including exchange managers and prominent exhibitors. "Housekeeping," the first release, presents the Newlyweds in their Harlem flat, which is barren of furniture. It will be followed by "Spring Cleaning," "The Connecting Bath," "Will a Woman Tell?" and "Hubby's Relatives," in this order.

A strong appeal to the public is expected from the nature of these comedies, because of their refinement and unique manner of production. In the five pictures already screened the comedy depends entirely upon quick perception of the funny side of human foibles. There is not the slightest suggestion of vulgarity, even in "The Connecting Bath," whose title is capable of a risqué interpretation. So far Mr. Myers has smoked only one cigarette, entirely for the purpose of introducing a very funny bit of business; and there is absolutely no drinking or rough handling of women.

The many interior sets are all designed by Mr. Myers, who is a pupil of the celebrated Josef Urban. Included among those already seen are several sets which are bound to win enthusiastic comments upon their striking originality and effectiveness. Black-and-white effects are boldly used.

Harry Keepers, one of the most highly endorsed cameramen in the business, is responsible for the excellent photography which has introduced the unusual "shoots" into the five pictures above mentioned. It is his practise, upon returning to a scene after a cut, to present an entirely different view of the room. This, in combination with frequent close-ups, greatly enhances the interest of the scenes.

The scenarios for these releases have been carefully selected by a committee comprising Louis Burstein, managing director; Mr. Myers and Bert Tracey, scenario editor. They include the work of several of the best-known writers of refined comedy.

Strand Theater Books "Tess"

Broadway's Big Theater Presents Famous Plays—Mary Pickford Masterpiece During Week of June 4.

THE unprecedented screen career of "Tess of the Storm Country," considered by thousands of exhibitors and fans to be the best motion picture in which the Famous Players Film Company ever presented Mary Pickford, is to have another chapter of unusual interest added to its amazing record of international success because of the action of the Strand Theater in New York in booking this quaintly humorous and pathetic photoplay for the week of June 4.

The presentation at the Strand Theater of this great epic of the screen, often enthusiastically described as the best five-reel picture ever produced, is in the nature of a revival similar to the return of stage plays that have had unusual popularity, as the production was first released by the Famous Players in March, 1914. It has never been shown at the Strand before, however, for the reason that this theater was not yet in existence at the time of the release of "Tess."

After creating a veritable sensation in the United States "Tess" went to England, where it repeated its American triumph, as it did in all the countries of Europe and Australia. In the latter country its presentation resulted in the collection of twenty-one thousand Australian pennies, with which an enormous loving cup was purchased and sent from Sydney to New York at a tribute to the art and charm of the gifted Mary. It is said that more prints of this feature have been distributed by the Famous Players than any other two photoplays of equal length.

Kalem Plans Busy Summer

Hot Weather Will Mean Increase Instead of Lessening Activity at Coast and Florida Studios.

THE coming of the summer months, which are usually marked by a let-up in activity at picture studios, will on the contrary mean unusual activity at all the Kalem plants. Of importance in the announcement of the company's plans for the hot-weather months is the news that the Jacksonville studios will continue operations throughout the summer.

Five companies of players are now at work in the Kalem studios at Jacksonville and Glendale and Hollywood, California. The new Ivy Close Comedy company is scheduled to start work this week at the Jacksonville studio.

Four companies will continue the regular output undiminished through the warm months at the Pacific Coast studios. The completion of extensive construction work enlarging the producing facilities at the Glendale studio shows the promising plans for this studio, as does the recent addition of True Boardman, famous as "Stingaree" to the playing forces. Director Horne is nearing the closing episodes of "The Social Pirates," Kalem's big series success, featuring Marin Sais and Ollie Kirby, and July will find the company at work on a spectacular new series of which announcement will be made soon.

The studio-station on the Salt Lake Railway where the "Hazards of Helen" are produced is another producing plant undergoing the enlarging process rather than the expected hot-weather let-up of most studios. Two comedy companies at the Hollywood studio, the Ham and Bud and the Ethel Teare forces, complete the Kalem roster on the coast. The recent appointment of Harry Millarde, the feature producer, to direct the Ethel Teare company is an indication of the strong backing being given these subjects.

Kalem's releases through the General Film Company will continue to include six reels a week throughout the summer months. In addition June also finds "The Lotus Woman," a five reel feature, on the regular program series.

PALLAS STAGES NEW FARNUM SUBJECT.

After a short vacation upon the completion of "David Garrick," Dustin Farnum has returned to the Pallas Pictures studios in Los Angeles and has commenced work on his next vehicle, "The Parson of Panamint." This subject has been taken from the story by Peter B. Kyne which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and gives an exact account of conditions in the mushroom mining towns of Nevada forty years ago.

It is understood that "The Parson of Panamint" will prove the biggest production yet undertaken by Pallas Pictures. Among the more elaborate sets now being built is a replica of a complete mining town on the spot in the desert where a boom-days mining town formerly stood. This will be the most pretentious set ever erected by the Pallas organization, which, judging from those used in "The Gentleman from Indiana," will necessitate an enormous expenditure. William D. Taylor, who is directing the new film, is experiencing no little trouble in securing the exact types for the minor parts.

Paramount Program

Regular Features for June 19 Will Be Reinforced by the Usual Pictographs and Travel Films.

PARAMOUNT Pictures for the week of June 19 will be headed by the usual two five-reel features, the releases being the Lasky production, "The Clown" starring Victor Moore, which will be shown on Monday, and "Susie Snowflake," the initial screen vehicle of Ann Pennington, diminutive star of the Ziegfeld Follies. The latter will be a Thursday release.

Single reels on the same program for this week will be the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Picture "Imperial Berlin," the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, "Bobby Bumps' Fly Swatter" and the weekly Pictographs.

With this release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures Mr. Holmes will make his first stop in a film tour through the most interesting part of Europe as they were before they had borne the brunt of the fierce fighting of the present war. Europe's most celebrated tourist-goals will be shown to Paramount audiences in this series as they were before the present struggle began, the first point of interest visited being Berlin the Imperial. Through this journey Mr. Holmes proveys his attitude of strictest neutrality so that his "Easy-Chair" travellers may view the beauties of the country through which he passes with unbiased appreciation.

Swatting the fly forms the theme of the latest of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons by Earl Hurd. As demonstrated by Bobby on the screen, fighting the fly is the most interesting of summer sports.

In the Paramount Pictographs for this week will be seen "Keeping Time" in the "Testing the Mind" series of Professor Hugo Munsterberg; how to dress and undress the baby in "Better Babies"; "Training a Lion"; "Preparing Fruit, New Ways" and "How to Fall."

Snared by the Halter

"Bill" Barry Gives Up Single Blessedness in Apartment where "Gas Administered" Sign Hangs in the Window.

"BILL" BARRY has "went and done it!" At the fashionable hour of high noon Thursday, May 25, he left the ranks of the happy bachelors in which he has carried a flaming banner for years and became a benedict. All of this by way of saying that William Leslie Barry and Miss Nan Jacobson were united in the bonds of holy matrimony Thursday at noon by the Rev. Maitland Bartlett, pastor of the Beck Memorial Church, New York City, at the pastor's apartments on East Fifteenth street.

"Bill" had been threatening to do the trick for a long time. It probably is a matter of only truth but no significance that in one window of the apartment house in which the wedding ceremony was performed there hangs a sign "Gas Administered."

Mr. Barry, until a few weeks ago, was advertising manager of the Nicholas Power Co. At the present time he is associated with the Monroe Press and is continuing his association with motion picture people by soliciting printing from them. Miss Jacobson left home and mother in Montclair, N. J.

The wedding was a quiet one, being attended only by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Powell, and A. MacArthur and W. P. Milligan, all of whom are close personal friends of the contracting parties. Mr. Powell provided the wedding automobile which was gaily bedecked with bridal flowers and white satin ribbon. MacArthur and Milligan whistled the "Bachelor's Dirge" in lieu of a wedding march. Mr. Powell was host at an elaborate wedding luncheon served at the Prince George Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Barry have taken a house in Bayside, L. I., and already have a little flivver running around.

SELZNICK CLOSING DEALS.

Lewis J. Selznick's two representatives, Ben S. Cohen and Ned H. Spitzer, made such rapid progress in negotiating for the distribution of the future Clara Kimball Young features in Chicago and throughout the middle west that Mr. Selznick has already followed them to the Windy City to close several big deals that had started. Messrs. Cohen and Spitzer had only been in Chicago a week when affairs took such definite form as to require Mr. Selznick's immediate presence to complete the negotiations.

It is understood Mr. Selznick has formed a partnership with big western exchange men similar to those he formed in Philadelphia, Detroit and Boston.

Mutual Program

Thirty-two Reels of Satisfying Pictures on the List for Week of June 12.

THIRTY-TWO reels, including two Mutual Masterpieces, De Luxe Edition, featuring Crane Wilbur and Winnifred Greenwood, comprise Mutual releases for the week of June 12. First of the Masterpieces, De Luxe Edition, "The Inner Struggle," starring Miss Greenwood supported by Franklin Ritchie and Roy Stewart, will be released June 12. "The Wasted Years," Crane Wilbur's starring vehicle follows on June 15. In addition to these five act features, Mutual releases for the week are composed of a number of short length features, including a three reel drama, four two reel subjects, a number of single reel comedies and the three popular Mutual feature releases—The Mutual Weekly, Reel Life, The Mutual Film Magazine and See America First.

The self sacrifice of a young physician, portrayed by Franklin Ritchie, who quits the girl he loves to minister to the stricken lepers in a colony far out in the Pacific, furnished the basic theme of "The Inner Struggle," in which Miss Greenwood stars. This Masterpiece, De Luxe Edition, was written for Miss Greenwood by Julian Louise Lamothe and screened under the personal direction of Edward Sloman. It is a straight drama, powerful in its action and its great punch is a mental one.

"The Wasted Years," second of the Mutual Masterpieces, De Luxe Edition, of the week, in which Crane Wilbur is starred, finds this popular player essaying a role seldom witnessed on a motion picture screen. It is a psychological drama, in which the follies of a man's early life are brought back to him with bitter memories in the years which follow. Mr. Wilbur's supporting cast includes Mac Gaston, John Oaker and Thelma Salter, popular child actress recently engaged by the Horsley-Mutual studios.

The three reel drama of the week will be released June 15, under the title of "The Window of Dreams." This is a Thanhouser production in which Grace De Carlton and Bert Delaney have the principal roles.

Mutual two reel subjects for the week present a host of popular players. First of these short length features, "Circumstantial Evidence," in which the chief parts are played by Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne, will be released June 12. "Brothers Equal" is the two act Thanhouser production of the same week with Barbara Gilroy in the lead, supported by a capable company of players. It will be released June 13.

William Stowell and Helen Rosson are the featured players in "The Sheriff of Plumias," a powerful story of the cow country, which will go to the public June 16, under the Mustang brand. "The Star of India," a gripping drama of the Orient, featuring Margaret Gibson and the Bostock animals, is the Centaur contribution of the week. It is scheduled for release June 17.

Mutual laughmakers for the week of June 12, offer a number of novel stories and bring into play various of the popular Mutual mirthmakers. "Real Estators," starring Claude Cooper and Frank E. McNish and "Doughnuts," first of the new comedies featuring Riley Chamberlin in his popular role of "Conductor No. 786," are the Falstaff offerings. The former will be released June 12 and the latter June 17.

The Vogue comedies include "Love, Burglars and the Bulldog," with Rube Miller for release June 13 and "Delinquent Bridegrooms," starring Ben Turpin, which will go to the public on June 18.

"Beauty" releases present Carol Halloway and Johnny Sheehan in "Billy Van Deusen's Eggs-spen-sive Adventure," for release June 14, and "Pedigrees, Pups and Pussies," with Orrol Humphrey, for release June 18.

"Jerry, and the Moonshiners," starring George Ovey, is the Cub offering for June 16.

Louis A. Buettner

Progressive Exhibitor of Cohoes, N. Y., Who Will Be a Delegate to the Chicago Convention.

A SPLENDID type of the modern progressive exhibitor is Louis A. Buettner of Cohoes, N. Y., joint owner with Louis J. Shearer of the Cohoes Opera House and the Majestic theater. Mr. Buettner is the president of the organized exhibitors of Troy, N.Y., and the foremost champion of organization in the capitol district. The strong and growing organizations of exhibitors in Albany and Schenectady are largely due to his efforts. His demonstrated the practical uses of organization when, in the county of Rensselaer, he restored prosperity to his fellow exhibitors.

Louis A. Buettner.

Mr. Buettner has learned the art of exhibition through years of experience. The houses under his control are models in every way and the prosperity they enjoy is but a result of Mr. Buettner's intensive showmanship. Previous to coming to Cohoes Mr. Buettner had owned and operated amusement enterprises and moving picture theaters in Gloversville, Amsterdam, Utica, N. Y., and Kane, Pa. Mr. Buettner is in his early thirties and full of energy and ambition. He will be heard from in the future.

FRED. ("BING") THOMSON RETURNS TO VITAGRAPH.

Fred ("Bing") Thomson has been engaged by the Vitagraph Company of America as director for E. H. Sothern, who has begun work at the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn on three photo-dramatic productions.

Thomson was selected out of a large number of possible candidates for the work of directing Mr. Sothern. He is known as one of the most artistic and forceful directors now engaged in the production of screen drama.

Thomson began his career as a motion picture director with the Vitagraph Company several years ago after a long experience in the theater. Since that time, he has been with several other concerns.

Dixon Will Have Studio

Producer of "The Fall of a Nation" Preparing for More Big Subjects.

SPECULATION as to the future of the Dixon Studios and Laboratories, Sunset Boulevard and Western Avenue, Hollywood, Cal., has been set at rest by Thomas Dixon on the eve of the production at the Liberty theater, New York, Tuesday, June 6th, of his mighty ep-pareddness spectacle, "The Fall of a Nation." Mr. Dixon is so well satisfied with the results of his collaboration with Victor Herbert that he has decided to devote the new plant exclusively to the production of big operatic spectacles. He announces that Bartley Cushing, his assistant in the staging of "The Fall of a Nation," and the managing director of the production department at Hollywood, is now preparing plans for a new spectacular feature along entirely novel lines. The making of small features is not contemplated at this studio.

Dixon Studios and Laboratories, Hollywood, Cal.

It is interesting to note that the filming of "The Fall of a Nation" had been going on for several weeks when ground was broken in October for the Dixon Studios. Construction of the plant and continued production were carried on simultaneously. It was not until January 15th of this year that the last nail was driven in the studio where "The Fall of a Nation" was completed and where its successor will soon be begun.

The plot on which the plant is situated was formerly an orange grove. Part of the grove still remains as a screen for the Sunset Boulevard side of the studio. Overlooking this grove are the mechanical departments and dressing rooms. Adjoining the latter are the stages, one a glass enclosed affair and the other open but equipped with improved diffusing curtains. The rear of the lot is reserved for exterior scenes. A replica of old Mulberry Bend, New York, was constructed there for "The Fall of a Nation."

Towering above the mechanical departments is the chalet top, in which there is room for four complete paint frames. Along the Western Avenue side are the executive offices, leading down to the laboratories. This latter department is said to be one of the most complete in any motion picture studio. In charge is William C. Thompson, chief photographer, a graduate of Columbia University, and a member of the American Chemical Society and other organizations of chemists. Under his direction the capacity of the laboratories is 500,000 feet of film weekly. Here as many prints of "The Fall of a Nation" as may be required can be turned out as rapidly as desired.

GERALDINE FARRAR LEAVES FOR CALIFORNIA.

With the long winter season of grand opera and concert at an end, Geraldine Farrar, looking her very happiest started last Monday with her husband, Lou Tellegen, on that long deferred honeymoon trip to the land of motion pictures at Hollywood, California.

Mr. and Mrs. Lou Tellegen were passengers on board the 20th Century Limited attached to which was a private car for the star and her suite. Miss Farrar's drawing room was embanked upon roses.

A summer devoted to the motion picture camera is no novelty for the prima donna as she had the unusual experience a year ago of making three big productions at the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company at Hollywood, California, including a filmed version of the opera "Carmen" all within a period of nine weeks.

Famous Players to Star Donald Brian

DONALD BRIAN, celebrated comedian and matinee idol, and left wing of the inimitable "Donald and Julia and Jo" trio, in the current stage success, "Sybil," is to be starred by the Famous Players in a modern smuggling story which will be released on the Paramount Program within the next few weeks.

Mr. Brian is one of the best known and most popular figures on the stage today, his clever work in "Sybil" during the current season adding to the laurels which he has gathered in "The Siren," "The Dollar Princess" and "The Merry Widow," in the last of which he created his first great success. However, before entering musical comedy Mr. Brian played a number of important roles in straight comedies among which was "The Man From Mexico."

The role which he will play for the Famous Players is that of a wealthy young American who revolts at our tariff restrictions and decides to bring a handsome necklace into this country without the formality of mentioning the fact to the customs officials. He is married and he loves his darling wife, of course, but he cannot resist the temptation to practice a little harmless deception upon her. Alas for the lady's peace of mind, the deception includes an actress and an imitation necklace which is a perfect replica of the exquisite affair which he purchased for his spouse.

The result is a general scrambling of wives, actresses, customs officials and detectives in which our would-be smuggler and his friends have a very painful experience. It is a swiftly moving comedy of action that is ideally suited to Mr. Brian. Work on the production has already begun under the direction of Sidney Olcott who has many excellent Famous Players productions to his credit.

This is not Mr. Brian's first appearance before the camera as he has already been starred on the Paramount Program by Lasky.

MORE V-L-S-E PROMOTIONS.

Last week marked many important changes in the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., whose policy it is to elevate from the ranks, the most important of which was the promotion of F. F. Hartich, Assistant Manager of the New York Exchange to the management of the Syracuse Branch Exchange. Mr. Hartich's elevation will be received cordially by his host of friends who have followed his career with the V-L-S-E since he joined that organization less than a year ago. It is being looked upon as a striking illustration of success attained by intelligently directed effort, persistent application and studiousness. It is especially noteworthy because of Mr. Hartich's short period of association with the industry.

In the Cleveland exchange, A. M. Holah, salesman, has been promoted to the position of Assistant Manager. Mr. Holah goes to the new position particularly well qualified by reason of his experience in sales promotion work, and intensive development. Mr. Holah, who has been covering part of Ohio, has turned his territory over to James Surrill, a new salesman.

Frank D. Stanton, manager of the Franklin Park theater, Boston, Mass., has left that position to become associated with the Boston branch as salesman. He will work in Massachusetts territory exclusively. This Boston appointment will enable George Balsdon, manager, to visit his territory frequently, which he finds essential. Assistant Manager Reardon will take care of office details during these trips.

Donald Brian.

Vitagraphs for Week of June 12

General Film and V-L-S-E. Will Issue a Number of Excellent Subjects from Eastern and Western Studios of the Big Company.

Released by General Film.

"ASHES," a Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature, is a sympathetic drama, produced by Vitagraph Western Branch, which is bound to please. In it are seen Corinne Griffith, Jack Mower and Anne Schaefer. "Ashes" tells the story of a man whose life is embittered, when his wife, Miriam, whom he loves better than life itself, dies while giving birth to a child. He curses the innocent babe as a murderer and leaves the house of sorrow to wander aimlessly. William E. Wing wrote the story and the production was supervised by William Wolbert.

"Her Loving Relations," is another subject from the Hollywood studios. This is a one-part comedy featuring Mary Anderson. Anne Schaefer, George Kunkel and George Lawrence are seen in Miss Anderson's support. Dave Smith produced the picture from the scenario by William E. Wing.

In "Harold the Nurse Girl" William Dangman is seen as Harold, a nurse girl—that is, he has an established business, which consists mainly of minding babes at so much down and so much an hour, according to the disposition and lung power of the infant. When Henry Peck entrusts him with his infant, he little dreams what trouble is in store for him. Florence Natol, George O'Donnell, Richard Turner and Harry Mayo are also seen in this comedy. The scenario is by Edward J. Montague and Frank Currier had charge of the direction.

Released by V-L-S-E.

Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon Feature for the week of June 12, is one worthy of the talents of its star, James Morrison.

Scene from "The Redemption of David Darcy" (Vitagraph).

"The Redemption of David Darcy" is an appealing story of the struggles of a crook to reform. Morrison has the title role, a crook and gangster. Morrison is given excellent support by Emmanuel A. Turner, Belle Bruce, Billie Billings, Mary Maurice, Robert Gailford and Gordon Gray. The scenario comes from the pen of Charles T. Dazey, author of

"In Old Kentucky," and its filming was supervised by Paul Scardon.

After enjoying himself immensely in Mexico with a beautiful senorita, Frank Daniels, as Kernel Nutt in Mexico, "wakes up to find himself embracing his wife in his little flat. Wife" "laces" it out to him, but try as he will, he cannot fall asleep again and regain his pleasant dreams. Alice Washburn as Nutt's wife and Adele De Garde as the senorita, assist Mr. Daniels in separating the audience from many hearty laughs. Frank Koch, Jr., wrote the story while C. Jay Williams directed the picture.

Roy Hauck

AS a youth of many and varied attainments, first on the stage and more recently on the screen, Roy Hauck, aged fifteen years, has an enviable record. He comes by his accomplishments naturally. On his mother's side he is connected with a number of prominent actors and actresses, among them Bessie McCoy (Mrs. Richard Harding Davis), whereas the other branch of the family included Minnie Hauck, an important figure in grand opera for many years.

Having reached the age of seven, Roy made his first professional appearance at the Hippodrome and for about one year thereafter continued in stage productions, which he abandoned to play juvenile leads in Thanhouser pictures. The list of photoplays in which he has proved his ability in prominent roles, includes "Guilty or Not Guilty," "Her Big Brother," "Bobby's Plot," "The Tin Soldier and the Doll," "A Gentleman for a Day," "The Million Dollar Mystery," all Thanhouser productions; also the Arrow Corporation's "Right Off the Bat" and George Kleine's "Gloria's Romance," starring Billie Burke.

Roy Hauck.

Weighing only one hundred pounds and measuring five feet, three inches, Roy scarcely looks like a boy of fifteen, although his training has developed a versatility that might be envied by a mature man. He can drive any kind of a machine, ride or drive a horse and is an expert at swimming, high diving, boxing and acrobatic and fancy dancing. For the past two years he has been his own business manager and handled his contracts. At the close of a busy day Roy is accustomed to indulge a taste for music, for he is something of a pianist with a repertory that runs all the way from grand opera to ragtime.

WELCOME DINNER TO ALICE JOYCE.

For a welcome back to the screen Miss Alice Joyce was the honor guest at a dinner given at the Strand Roof Garden, Sunday evening, June 4. This dinner was attended by the other principals in the cast of the big spectacle, "The Battle Cry of War," which is being produced by J. Stuart Blackton of Vitagraph, among them being Joseph Kilgour, Harry Morey, Dorothy Kelly, James Morrison, Naomi Childers, Templer Saxe, Walter McGrail and Edward Elkas, as well as Director William P. S. Earle. Miss Joyce has just reappeared in the ranks of her motion picture friends after an absence of a year and a half and has begun work on the big feature picture at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn.

MISS CRAWLEY WRITES SCENARIOS.

Miss Constance Crawley, popular star of American-Mutual releases and favorite of the speaking stage, is now actively engaged, in addition to her screen work, in the writing of scenarios for the American-Mutual studios. Her first effort in this line will be released shortly in two acts under the title of "Fear." It is an interesting story dealing with cowardice and fear, the action of which is centered in a typical border cow town.

Chester Beecroft With American-Mutual

Opens New York Office to Negotiate with Big Stars, Authors and Directors—Also Will Handle Foreign Business and Direct Advertising Campaign of Chaplin and Mutual Serials.

THAT the American Film Company intends to maintain leadership in the way of all productions is evidenced by the opening last week of a New York office, in which prominent players and well-known writers of fiction, drama and scenario will be gathered to the fold of the "Flying A." Chester Beecroft, whose experience and whose achievements in various branches of the business amply qualify him for the important duties of the position, has been chosen to manage the new office. Already he has taken up his duties in Rooms 1627 and 1628 of the Masonic building, 71 West Twenty-third street.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American, has wisely determined to continue his policy of personal supervision, so that when he and his associates decided to confine the future activities of the company to the biggest and most desirable attractions that can possibly be procured the necessity of a metropolitan office became apparent.

James Kirkwood, director, and Mary Miles Minter, star, have already been engaged for American productions, and negotiations are now under way with two of the most famous female picture stars in the world as well as with three great dramatic stars who will be presented in the play or plays with which they are most closely identified in the minds of theatergoers. The guiding idea in this new departure will be the careful study of the real demand of the generality of picture audiences and the development of the artistic and technical phases of the motion picture along lines most conducive to the permanent success of the industry.

A frequent cause of failure of individual productions which have had the advantage of a great star or a great play has been the weakness of the connecting links. A great star needs equally great directing, and a great play or story is frequently ruined by incompetent "scenarioizing." Granted these major requirements have been fully met, there is still the peril of improper technical and scenic preparation, hopeless camera men, bad laboratory work, and last, but not least, unskillful advertising.

To guard against the operation of any such faults in the productions of the American, Mr. Hutchinson has instructed Mr. Beecroft to contract with the greatest actors, with the authors of current works of fiction and drama for their most striking successes, and original stories to be written for star players, experienced scenario writers who have had literary training to put such creations into "working" form for the studio, master directors of the Kirkwood class, crack camera men, etc.

When John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, advanced the policy of that distributing organization to its new point of commanding efficiency by limiting its releases to brilliant and pretentious big star or big photoplay productions, each capable of creating its own individual business and profit for the exhibitor without depending at all upon any other Mutual releases, the American was the first company to see the wisdom of the plan and put it in instant operation.

That the American is in earnest in its determination to produce only the "ultra" in motion pictures and is properly equipped to do so will be apparent to all when it is recalled that it was Mr. Freuler who conceived the idea and worked out the details of the contract whereby Charlie Chaplin is now receiving $10,000 a week, plus $150,000 bonus. Mr. Freuler is one of the principal stockholders in the American and is vitally interested in its progress, so that it becomes reasonable to expect that the Chaplin standard will be closely followed.

Mr. Beecroft will also handle the export department, as far as sales and contracts are concerned, of the American, Lone Star Company (Charlie Chaplin), North American ("Diamond from the Sky," etc.), "Damaged Goods" and some others, and special advertising on the newly-acquired stars and the series of pictures in which they will appear.

GAUMONT COMPANIES NOW AT FLUSHING.

When the Comanche of the Clyde line reached New York Sunday, June 4, it carried the Gaumont players who had come from the winter studios at Jacksonville, Fla., to spend the summer at the American headquarters of the Gaumont company at Flushing, N. Y. Here are located both the studios and the laboratories of the United States branch of the world-wide Societe des Etablissements Gaumont.

George E. Middleton

ACCORDING to statements which General Manager Alexander Byruss of the California concern has just given to the press, the actual directing brain behind the firm's producing activities belongs to George E. Middleton, producing manager, of whom the picture world has heretofore never heard a word.

The feature of the announcement lies in the fact that Middleton is not a new acquisition to the business amply qualified to the California people, but has been quietly working in the background ever since the corporation's inception. He has never associated his name with his work, however, and it is only those most intimately connected with the California corporation that have so much as suspected his existence as a film director.

Among the greatest of the productions with which the recent announcement credits Middleton are "Salome Jane," "Mignon," "Salvation Nell" and "The Unwritten Law." It is to be noted that it is in these same productions that Beatriz Michelena has made her outstanding screen success. Middleton has just completed the film adaptation from C. N. and A. M. Williamson's "The Woman Who Dared," in which Miss Michelena is playing the stellar role. It is under his immediate direction that Otis Skinner will appear in the film dramatization of "Kismet."

In commenting upon his announcement and the reasons for so long withholding it from the public Mr. Byruss said: "Although Mr. Middleton's work has been of the most artistic and powerful calibre from the first and we have never had the smallest doubt about his continued success, all mention of his directing responsibility has been withheld at his own request.

"It has been the policy of our corporation always to let results speak for themselves and to make no claims without substantiating evidence. Mr. Middleton believed that this should apply to himself as well as the affairs with which he was so intimately connected. Although he had been a close student of all things dramatic and had penetratingly studied picture requisites, he wished that he might work in the background until he had proven his capabilities beyond all possibility of question."

ANOTHER PHOTOPLAY PAPER.

Add to the list of photoplay papers the Kinema News published at Tokio by S. Isono and edited by Y. Matsushita. The first issue is dated March 20th, and consists of twenty four pages well illustrated with half tones and gelatine prints interleaved. It is printed entirely in Japanese characters save where the ideograph fails to represent required words, when the names or titles are set in English type. This gives a rather peculiar effect where an occasional word falls in the body of an article. This paper maintains no Japanese editor, the literary quality of the magazine may not be passed upon, but it is interesting to note that the growth of the business in Japan makes possible the issuance of a paper of such pretension and typographical quality.

EDWARD BRENNAN IN METRO SUBJECT.

Edward Brennan, one of the foremost leading men in the country, who has appeared in many Metro wonder-plays, will next be seen on the screen in "The Quitter," the Metro-Rolfe release for July 10, in which Lionel Barrymore is starred. In this production Mr. Brennan proves his apparently unending versatility, playing the role of a rugged mining man, in which he is called upon to participate in many strong dramatic situations. Mr. Brennan was featured with Grace Elliston in "Black Fear," a Metro wonderplay, and had a similar role in "The Woman Pays," with Valli Valli.

No Price Too Great

World Film Spending Ten Thousand Dollars to Improve Quality of Stories.

By William A. Brady.

ONE of the prominent New York dailies recently published an editorial in which it condemned the motion picture industry in general for the lack of appreciation of those who supply the written material. In cold words, they decried the unwillingness of film producers to encourage writers by reason of the fact that a limit had been set on the price of material.

"So much for so much, has been the slogan with newspapers and magazines for the past century. A reporter gets a given amount for so many columns. A short story writer gets so much for a three thousand word tale. A cartoonist gets so much for each of his cartoons, unless he is permanently employed—yet the fact that producers of film plays set a standard price for a standard article, is unjust.

"There is no limit to the price we will pay for good, logical, dramatic material. If a writer is important and brings us a big story, he can almost command his own price. If a writer of unknown quality can bring us a written tale that will attract unusual attention and make an unusual picture, he can get far more for his product than he can for a like amount of work in any other field in the world.

"We pay for material, any sum commensurate with the importance of the writer, bigness of the story, unconventionality of the plots and promise of the scenario. A John Smith is as welcome to us as Sir James M. Barrie—all we want is the finished product.

"There is no field in the world where a reputation counts for less than in motion picture making.

"An author, in order to attract attention, must lay before us a finished work. If it is unfinished we must, in order to produce it, put a professional writer to work, have it revised and scenes, situations and climaxes injected, all of which, when the film is produced, go to the credit of the original writer.

"But, to my mind, at least so far as World Film is concerned, there is no limit to the price we will pay for original material. We court the finest stories from the World's greatest authors, and in our scurrying for new and picturesque material have finally prevailed upon Thomas W. Lawson to allow us to convert his thrilling financial story to films.

"Our production of Murgur's 'La Vie de Bohème' and the contemplated early production of many more fiction classics best illustrates our seriousness in wanting only the best.

"We are advertising at an expense of ten thousand dollars for new writers, new idea creators, new plot architects—all because we want to get away from the hackneyed, tiring 'two men and a woman' ideas.

"Last week a noted playwright, one of whose plays created a furore on Broadway this season, wanted to do business with us. He wanted to write six scenarios a year. We would have liked to engage him but he demanded one thousand dollars in advance, before even submitting his synopsis. We had to decline his services. But an hour later we paid an unknown writer five hundred dollars for a finished scenario, which on the face of it, proved original and attractive.

"We recently bought one scene from an author to insert into the story of another writer and paid almost as much for the scene as is sometimes paid for an entire story. The author of the play, when it is screened, will get full credit for that scene.

"There is no standard price for World Film. We are in the market for the product of the best authors, for which we will pay the highest prices. We are just as much in the market for original matter from obscure writers. We invite newspapermen to send us ideas and stories. We want new and better material—there is no limit—a good story to start with, is half the battle won.

"We have stellar players of every imaginable type and we want material that will permit of them displaying the versatility they are supposed to possess. We do not want stories bordering on the forbidden topics of conversation. We do not want vampire stories. We do not want to put on the screen, to show the people of the world, anything we would not broach as a subject during a drawing room chat.

"Subjects unfit to be spoken of in polite circles are certainly not fit to offer millions of people of every thinking class. We want clean, original, dramatic material—and will pay amply for it. Those who write for the morbid, the pervert, and the low thinking can save their postage."

Studio for Clara Kimball Young

Selznick Leases Big Tract Near Flushing—Construction to Begin Immediately.

AFTER scouring the environs of New York for a likely site for the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation studio and printing plant, Lewis J. Selznick, president, and Miss Young, star and vice president of the company, decided this week on a section of land in the vicinity of Flushing, L. I. A long-term lease was signed for five acres of meadow and woodland on the shore of Flushing Bay. The work of constructing the studio and adjoining plant will begin at once.

The architectural plans for the studio were drawn to meet the ideas of Miss Young and her director general, Albert Capellen. These call for a studio floor space 100 by 150 feet. The walls and roof will be completely glassed and the front end of the studio, facing on the bay, will be so constructed as to be thrown wide open, permitting sets to be erected within the studio showing a natural sky background and glimpses of the shore and bay.

One of the biggest architectural gardeners in the East has been engaged to plan the grounds around the studio and along the shore front. There will be several kinds of formal gardens for exterior scenes and an artificial lake and waterfall.

Among the innovations planned for the studio itself is a specially constructed flooring that will be impervious to shock and free from vibration. With the new flooring the heaviest sort of construction work may be carried on close to a camera in operation without affecting the film.

Another feature will be the two revolving stages, on each of which four interiors of ordinary size or two big sets can be erected and "shot" without moving the position of the camera and lights. This device has been proved a tremendous saving in time.

The dressing room accommodations planned are unusually commodious. Miss Young practically drew the dressing room specifications herself, being determined to avoid, both for herself and the members of the company, the many inconveniences she has suffered in other studios. It is hoped to have the studio completed by the end of the summer. For her first production, a picturization of Robert W. Chambers' famous novel, "The Common Law," Miss Young will lease a studio in New York.

Omaha "Movie" Ball a Success

Three Thousand Persons Present—Affair Reflects Credit on Omaha Screen Club and Photoplay Managers' Association.

WILLIAM J. SWEENEY, who attended the "movie" ball given at the Auditorium, Omaha, Thursday, May 25, reports the event was a big success. The affair was under the auspices of the Omaha Screen Club and of the Photoplay Managers' Association.

About 3,000 persons were present. The grand march was led by Bryant Washburn, of Essanay, and Miss Dolores Cassinelli, of the Emerald Motion Picture Company, who were followed by Richard C. Travers and Miss Caroline Winters, of the Emerald. These photoplayers accompanied Mr. Sweeney on the train to Omaha, and there were, besides, Lee Moran and Eddie Lyons, of Nestor-Universal, and Franklin Farnham, of Universal, who were on their way to the Coast and stopped over to attend the ball.

Mr. Sweeney took advantage of his visit to boost the coming Chicago National Convention and Exposition, and was given hearty assurances from many Nebraska exhibitors that they would attend.

The officers of the Omaha Screen Club are F. A. Van Husen, Jr., president; S. H. Goldberg, vice president; C. W. Taylor, second vice president; J. E. Kirk, secretary, and Iake Schlank, treasurer. The officers of the Photoplay Managers' Association are S. H. Goldberg, president; W. O. Jensen, treasurer, and H. B. Watts, secretary.

FITZMAURICE FINISHES "ARMS AND THE WOMAN."

George Fitzmaurice of Astra, Pathe producer, has completed work on "Arms and the Woman" and is now engaged on "The Romantic Journey," an original five-reel feature by George Brackett Seitz and Ouida Bergerre, for the Pathe program.

William Courtney is the star and the cast is made up of well-known Broadway actors, among whom are Alice Dovey, now playing in "Very Good Eddie"; Macey Harlan and others.

Tefft Johnson a Manufacturer

Former Vitagraph Player and Director Will Issue Weekly Stories of Childhood Doings.

THE Tefft Johnson Film Corporation announces the completion of three single-reel stories. These will be ready for public showing within a fortnight. They will be the forerunners of regular weekly releases designed especially for children's programs, but not without interest for grown-ups. The subjects are all to be produced by Tefft

Johnson, who also will be seen in them. Mr. Johnson was for seven years a player and director for the Vitagraph. He was for two years with On the stage Mr. Johnson was for twelve years with David Belasco, for three years of that period playing with Mrs. Leslie Carter's company. Mr. Johnson's ability as an actor and as a director is too well known to the trade and to picturegoers to require any extended comment here.

The subjects completed by the Johnson company are "Sonny Boy at the Bat," "Sonny Boy at the Dog Show" and "Sonny Boy in His School Days." Featured in these are young Willie Johnson, who is said to be no kin of the director. Mr. Johnson will be seen as Daddy Dear, while Mabel Kelly will portray Mother Dear. Toto, a trained water spaniel, also will figure much in these stories of boyhood, the portrayal of the incidents in a youngster's life that will be recognized by all males, large as well as small. The stories will run in length from 850 to 1,000 feet and will be sold on a state's right basis.

The officers of the company are Tefft Johnson, president; Charles Abrams, secretary; Joseph A. Schuchert, of Buffalo, vice-president and treasurer. The permanent studios will be in New Jersey.

MARGUERITE SNOW JOINS IVAN.

Marguerite Snow, after completing a year with the Metro organization, has joined the Ivan Film Productions. It is said an especially attractive offer won Miss Snow to the Ivan ranks. Her first role under the Ivan banner will be "The Faded Flower," which was written especially to feature her by Ivan Abramson, the author of the many Ivan successes. An especially strong cast is being assembled to support Miss Snow.

Horsley Studios Busy

Last Half of May Sees Many Subjects Completed and New Ones Begun.

INCREASED activities were noticeable at the David Horsley studios during the last half of the month of May, there having been completed nine reels of film, constituting six pictures and work was started on three new subjects.

Director Milton H. Fahnrey and his Cub Comedy company finished three pictures, starring vehicles for George Ovey; the two dramatic companies completed three photoplays, one of which is said to be the best work of Crane Wilbur, star and author. The co-stars, Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, will be filmed in two Centaur features, in which the Bostock animals also take a prominent part.

"The Fool's Game," a drama of the two-reel length, from the pen of Crane Wilbur, who is also the star of the production, is a story believed to be new to the screen. Mr. Wilbur portrays the part of a multi-millionaire and falls desperately in love with one who returns a sham affection, but who is, in reality, devoted to a youth of her same set. Mae Gaston and John Oaker make up the supporting cast, and although there are but three principals the eternal triangle does not exist in this offering. Robert B. Broadwell handled the direction.

Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, co-starring in the latest work of Francis Worcester Doughty, are cast in ideal parts. "The Star of India" is the title of the play and is a two-reel subject in which the Bostock animals are used in large numbers. Many of the scenes present an excellent idea of life in the jungle, introducing lions, leopards and elephants. Hand to hand combats with the beasts and a furious jungle fire add to the massiveness of the production. Director Charles Swickard supervised the filming of this Centaur feature.

The three offerings of the Cub Comedy company, all from the inventive mind of Director Milton H. Fahnrey, are of the same high standard as has marked past productions of this brand. George Ovey is the star in each, and large and capable companies assist the popular funmaker, chiefly among the casts being Claire Alexander, dainty ingenue; Louis FitzRoy, George George, Janet Sully, Jefferson Osborne and other Cub favorites.

"Jerry and the Moonshiners" is the first of the trio to be released, Jerry's attempt to pass counterfeit money landing him on a rocky road from the start. "Jerry's Elopement" is one long laugh from start to finish, George Ovey taking all sorts of abuse before he finally overthrows the obstacles which stand in the way of a happy marriage. The last, "Jerry's Big Haul," gives Mr. Ovey even larger scope for clean and wholesome comedy, the three pictures, in fact, being among the very best from this group of David Horsley players.

"JAX" WELCOMES IVY CLOSE.

Ivy Close, Kalem's latest star, arrived at Jacksonville last week on the Clyde liner Comanche being met by a large delegation that included many members of other companies in "Jax" in addition to the Kalem forces. Jacksonville's newspapers also combined in extending a welcome that left the famous English stage star and beauty a very much flustered person.

"I hated to leave New York," she laughed, "But Jacksonville has been so wonderful that I have forgotten all my regrets. To be perfectly happy now the only thing I need is the word to start work."

BEBAN THE FRIEND RELIABLE.

When Thomas H. Ince was forced to delay his departure for New York to arrange the necessary details of preparation for his massive production of "Civilization," his first thought was to seek some one to leave Los Angeles for New York in his place—some one who would truly represent him. He sought no further than his closest friend, George Beban.

The latter agreed, in spite of the fact it necessitated his breaking his promise to his beloved Friars to accompany them on their tour.

A CORRECTION.

William E. Wing is the author of "Miss Adventure," Vitagraph's three-part Broadway Star Feature, released Saturday, May 20. Through an error another person was given credit for the authorship on the film.

Featuring Stars in Short Subjects

Policy of General Film Service Brings Approbation from Exhibitors—Program for Week of June 12.

A RECENT advertisement of the General Film Company in The Moving Picture World calling attention to the fact that more than thirty stars appeared in General Film Service program during the week May 29-June 3 emphasized the predominating policy of General Film Service of presenting stars in one, two and three-reel dramas and comedies as well as in five-reel features. This policy undoubtedly is receiving the cordial support of exhibitors, and the significant remark made recently by William N. Selig that "Since the General Film Company had emphasized that policy, the Selig Polyscope business through the General Film Company had trebled," is convincing evidence that the manufacturers releasing through the General Film are profiting by this policy. George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, is another who is enthusiastic over the policy of featuring big stars in short-length subjects. He again recently announced that Essanay's biggest stars will be seen in one, two and three-reel releases.

With the advent of hot weather, during which exhibitors say it is more difficult to hold the attention of patrons to so-called features, unless they are exceptionally interesting, the General Film Service program of short pictures, and of great variety, and made distinctive by noted stars, should appeal. General Film Service for the week June 12-18 inclusive bristles with the names of famous film artists.

Kate Claxton's greatest success, "The Two Orphans," pictured by Selig, will be the first release of the week. The Selig company has been calling attention to the unusual cast featured in this reissue. It includes Kathlyn Williams, Myrtle Stedman, T. J. Carrigan, Lillian Leighton, Adrienne Kroell, Charles Clary, Winnifred Greenwood and William Stowell. Stress has been laid on "beautiful scenic effects, gorgeous costumes, and the strictly all-star cast." Tears occasioned by the pathos in "The Two Orphans" will be quickly dried and forgotten when the next picture, a Vitagraph comedy, "Her Loving Relations," is thrown on the screen. Then the Selig-Tribune will flash pictorially the important news of the world. Biograph's reissue of "The Spirit Awakened," featuring Blanche Sweet and made more interesting perhaps by having been directed by D. W. Griffith, will be presented. Then, just to send everybody home in good humor, Lubin's comedy, "Otto the Cobbler," will be shown.

Essanay's "Putting It Over," a comedy in two parts, featuring Marguerite Clayton and Bryant Washburn, will be first on Tuesday's program. This will be followed by Kalem's "The Alaskan Mouse Hound," a single-reel comedy, which will precede "The Avenger," in two parts, by Lubin, in which L. C. Shumway is featured. Then will follow one of Edison's exceptionally strong reissues, "The Man in the Street," in which Marc MacDermott and Duncan McRae share titular honors.

"The Bachelor's Alliance," a Kalem one-part comedy, is the first subject for Wednesday. It is followed by Essanay's "Animated Nook of Florida" and a short scenic production, "The Charge of the Light Brigade," an Edison single-reel reissued drama, featuring that widely-known favorite, Ben Wilson, will then be shown. The program for the day will close with Biograph's "Liberty Bells," a three-part comedy, in which Dorothy Gish and young Jack Pickford furnish the fun.

Lubin offers "The Sons of the Sea," a drama in three parts, which leads Thursday's program. Lucy Payton is featured in this, a guarantee in itself that the picture is well acted. The Selig-Tribune is one of the strongest features of this day's releases, and "Hungry Hearts," a Vim comedy in one part, will close the day.

Marguerite Nichols and Daniel Giffether share honors in "An Old Man's Folly," a Knickerbocker Star Feature three-part drama, on Friday's program, and will be followed by one of the Sis Hopkins series, "The Stenographer's Strategy." Then "Harold, the Nurse Girl," a Vitagraph comedy, and "The Raid," a Vim comedy, each one reel, will be screened.

Another instance of where Essanay's big stars are featured in short reels will be seen in the first release Saturday in "The Promise Land," in three parts, featuring the Essanay artists, Marguerite Clayton and Bryant Washburn. Lubin will provide a one-part comedy, "Hubby Puts One Over," which will precede "Ashes," a Vitagraph three-act drama in which Corinne Griffith and Jack Mower are featured. The thrill of the day's releases will probably be emphasized by Kalem's "A Race Through the Air," an episode of the Hazards of Helen. Saturday's program will close with Selig's "The Cowpuncher's Peril," featuring Tom Mix.

Sunday the General Film Service innovation, a five-reel feature, will be presented in "Pay Dirt," produced by Lubin, featuring Henry King. This is a drama having to do with the western gold fields, and is said to be exceptionally fascinating in plot and presented in a superb manner by Mr. King and supporting company.

Kirkwood Joins American

Freuler Secures Old Time Director for Mary Miles Minter Mutual Productions.

JAMES KIRKWOOD, one of the ablest of photoplay directors, has signed a long term contract with the American Film Company, Inc. He leaves immediately for the American studios in Santa Barbara, Cal., where he will begin the direction of a series of feature photoplays starring Mary Miles Minter. The contract negotiations were conducted by President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mr. Kirkwood's experience includes the production of some of the most notable features in the history of photoplay manufacture in America. He began directing seven years ago, after a long and successful career on the speaking stage, his entrance into the picture field being due to D. W. Griffith and Henry Salter, when they were working at the old Biograph studios.

As a director for the Biograph, Mr. Kirkwood put out the picture versions of a number of the Klaw and Erlanger productions, principal among them "Classmates," in which Blanche Sweet and Henry Walthall were starred. Mr. Kirkwood directed ten pictures for the Famous Players, featuring Mary Pickford, and playing important roles in these productions, among them "The Eagle's Mate," "Behind the Scenes," "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" and "Rags." He also directed "The Gangsters of New York," a highly successful feature production made at the Reliance studios and released by the Mutual Film Corporation. As a director for the Reliance, Mr. Kirkwood in one year made two one-reel pictures a week which is something of a record in high pressure direction.

Mr. Kirkwood, as a director, places great emphasis on the importance of the scenario, and he expresses it as his conviction that while the public is tired of stunts, it never will tire of the motion picture's interpretation of real human experience. He holds the motion picture to be a fundamental form of art expression, with the future as definitely assured as the future of sculptor, painting music and the drama. "There seems to be a good deal of talk lately," said Mr. Kirkwood, "concerning the scarcity of motion picture stories and a great deal written about it in the papers. Now, as far as I know, they always have been scarce, and to the best of my belief they always will be scarce. Trained writers are now taking up the work of writing photoplays, but even with more of them doing so, good stories will be scarce. Good stories are scarce in magazines, in books and in plays, so why shouldn't they be in motion pictures, where they must have all the qualities which make them desirable as stories for type publication and the special quality for visualization?"

"I believe that the most desirable sort of play today is modern and American, whether a swift moving drama with strong human characterizations, or a comedy devoid of extravagance, its incidents growing out of the foibles of human nature, rather than produced by one of the characters smiting another with what is commonly called a slap-stick."

BOARD OF REVIEW PASSES "CIVILIZATION."

The National Board of Review passed unanimously Thomas H. Ince's cinema spectacle after a review of the production of "Civilization." The board reached its verdict without comment before the members left their seats.

Projection Sharp of the Moving Picture World Goes New England by "Gas Wagon"—Sees Waterbury First.

WATERBURY, Connecticut, is what we may term, in the vernacular of the street, "A live river." Not only are there fifteen picture theaters in that city, but a considerable number of these houses are managed by men who are real, sure enough theater managers—men who have a comprehensive understanding of the "picture game" and who study their business. The houses are open on Sunday, and the theaters have the hearty co-operation of the pulpit of the city. In fact the ministers, themselves, have not only admitted, but frankly said that the Sunday pictures have done much to produce orderliness among the workmen of the city on the sabbath.

The school teachers of Waterbury are much interested in moving pictures. Recently one of Waterbury's teachers remarked that her pupils acquired more information on the early history of this country through viewing the Columbus film than they had been able to absorb from their books.

Waterbury is essentially a manufacturing town. At present the army of the unemployed is conspicuous by its absence, which means that times in Waterbury are good, and the moving picture theaters are prospering.

Taking, for example, the Strand theater on East Main St., one of S. Z. Poli's theaters (he has three in Waterbury), the house seats, on the main floor and balcony 2,300. The auditorium is spacious, and while the decorations are not particularly sumptuous they are very pleasing. The house, viewed from the back, is really very pretty indeed. The music is supplied by a Choralcelo Organ, which is said to have cost the mere trifle of $10,000. The action of the organ is entirely electrical. I am not going to personally vouch for the $10,000 cost of it, but it certainly cost a good round sum of money. The projection equipment is rather poorly located, in that the angle of projection is tolerably steep, though there has been decided improvement made in that respect. The operating room formerly was (as usual) located immediately under the ceiling at the highest point it was possible to attain in a very high gallery. It has since been moved to the front of the balcony, which secures several degrees improvement in the angle of projection, and at the same time gives plenty of room between the lens and screen, viz., 78% ft. The ventilation of the room is none the better. There should be an intake duct running to the open air and the fan speeded up to its normal; also a proper hood at the exhaust would help. It is not to be expected that an operator can produce the best results when working under conditions which are, to say the least, particularly in the summer, decidedly uncomfortable. The projection equipment consists of two Power's 6A's.

Now don't get the idea from the foregoing that I was not pleased with The Strand. The Strand is a corking good theater, and its manager, Jean Belasco, is what we commonly term a good scout, although he doesn't like me any more, because he took me, together with Charles E. Gradwell, over to the very most swiftest cafe in Waterbury for lunch, and what happened to his bank roll would be a shame to tell.

Another of Mr. Poli's houses, The Garden, is located almost directly across the street from the Strand. It is managed by Peter Murphy, who, besides having the glory (and work) of being secretary of the operators' local is now (new honors suddenly acquired) manager of the house. Directly across the street from the Strand is the Bird's air dome, which does an excellent business when the people patronize it, but during most of the front part of the present season the Rain-God has put the kibosh on the box office, and put it on right too.

Down street from the Strand is the Princess, a five hundred seat house, and in the other direction the Bijou, a 350 seat house, and by the way, there is a little joke that goes with the Bijou, which is now closed to be remodeled, prior to being reopened under a new management. The late manager says he knows there was a lot of money in the picture business, because he himself had put in a lot. Not far away is the Scenic, seating 800, managed by J. H. Nichols, who bears the reputation of being a regular feller. Mr. Nichols not only bears the reputation of being a theater manager par excellence, but also he has been tried by his fellow exhibitors and operators and found guilty of being one of the boys.

Taking it up one side and down the other the writer is of the opinion there are any number of very much worse places than the charming little city (population 100,000) of Waterbury, Connecticut.

Changes in Metro Subsidiary

Yorke Film Corporation New Sponsor for Lockwood-Allison Subjects—Henry Otto to Direct.

A METRO company of players, headed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison, are now mixing much business with some pleasure at the Thousand Islands, where they have gone to make the exterior scenes for their next production, "One Cylinder Sam." Heretofore they have appeared on the Metro program under the auspices of the Quality Pictures Corporation, but in the future the Lockwood-Allison features will be released by the Yorke Film Corporation, a newly-organized producing company. Fred J. Balshofer is president of the Metro-Yorke company.

Several of the prominent members of the Lockwood-Allison company are with them in the north, including Lester Cuneo, the well-known heavy leading man. Beginning with "One Cylinder Sam," and in the future, Henry Otto, a newcomer to the Metro forces, will direct Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison. He was formerly with the American company and later with the Universal, and is considered one of the ablest directors in the country. His features are invariably highly artistic, as is evidenced in such productions as "Undine," a recent Universal release.

Upon their return from the Thousand Islands the Lockwood-Allison players will complete the interior scenes for "One Cylinder Sam." Then they will go to California, where they will probably be located permanently. "The Masked Rider," which Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison have just completed, will be released on the Metro program June 12.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of June 4 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Tess of the Storm Country" at the Strand.

MARY PICKFORD in the Famous Players' screen drama, "Tess of the Storm Country," a "repeat" of what is perhaps Miss Pickford's greatest success, was the leading feature at the Strand theater for the week of June 4. German war pictures, a Max Figgman comedy ("His Birthday Gift"), Strand Topical Review, a "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon comedy and the third issue of the Goldberg film cartoons were also shown.

The soloists were Grace Hoffman, Bruce Weyman, George Scott and Florence Hoffman.

"Macbeth" at the Rialto.

The Triangle-Fine Arts film production of "Macbeth," with Sir Henry in the title role and the Countess Constance Collier as Lady Macbeth, was the attraction at the Rialto, the usual travelogues and scientific studies in film form and vocal and instrumental solos being omitted. An ambitious orchestral setting was the only music heard.

"A Gutter Magdalene" at the Broadway.

At the Broadway theater, Fannie Ward was the star in the Jesse L. Lasky-Paramount production, "A Gutter Magdalene," written for her by Clinton H. Stagg from the story by Willard Mack. In this photoplay the spectator's interest is sustained throughout. It abounds in situations of great intensity, its theme portraying a woman's triumph and redemption. The usual weekly news, scenic and educational studies; cartoons and comedies round out the program.

Eighty-First Street Theater Program.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four new Triangle features were shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Norma Talmadge was seen in "Going Straight." A new Triangle Keystone comedy supplied the lighter portion of the bill. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday "Buster" Collier in "The Bugle Call," and the latest Keystone comedy formed the picture part of the program.

E. FORREST TAYLOR JOINS KALEM.

E. Forrest Taylor, prominent on both the stage and screen, is the latest player to be added to the Kalem forces at work on "The Social Partners." He is appearing in leading male roles opposite Marian Sais and Ollie Kirkby.

Frank Jonasson, also of the Glendale company, and E. Forrest Taylor were both for years members of Willard Mack's famous producing stock company at Salt Lake City. Later Mr. Taylor formed his own repertoire company, touring with Clara Kimball Young as his leading woman. Catherine Courie and Brandon Tynan are other stars with whom Mr. Taylor has appeared. After being featured in "The Deep Purple" he last year left the stage to accept a feature screen offer.

Seligs for June and July

Fine List of Subjects Announced Featuring Several Prime Favorites.

CONTINUING his policy of utilizing his best stars and best stories for regular program service, William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, announces another list of unusual picture plays for the final two weeks of June and the first week in July. These dramas will be released in regular service of the General Film Company.

"The Reprisal," released Monday, June 19, features such popular stars as Fritz Brunette, Jack Pickford, Guy Oliver and others. "The Reprisal" is the story of the South and of the vengeance of a woman. Miss Brunette and Jack Pickford are afforded many opportunities for versatile work and the plot is strictly an out-of-the-ordinary one.

"Taking a Chance," released Saturday, June 24, presents Tom Mix, the cowboy star in an unusual western story which affords him many opportunities to exploit his habardous feats.

On Monday, June 26, "The Sacrifice" will be released. This gripping drama is particularly timely, containing as it does a strong plea for preparedness. There are some wonderful battle scenes presented. Eugenie Besserer enacts the leading role and is supported by Harry Mestayer and Guy Oliver.

"The Return," one of William E. Wing's best motion picture stories, is booked for release through General Film Company's regular service on Monday, July 3d. Kathryn Williams is featured and is splendidly supported by Guy Oliver, Wellington Platter, Harry Lonsdale, Sidney Smith, Vivian Reed and others. There are a number of elaborate sets. Those who have viewed advanced showing of the drama state that Kathryn Williams is given the best role of her triumphant career.

On Saturday, July 8, the Tom Mix series of Western comedies begin. A Tom Mix one-reel comedy will be released through General Film Service every Saturday thereafter until further notice.

NEW MUTUAL MANAGER IN BOSTON.

J. L. Roth has been appointed manager of the Mutual's Boston office to succeed J. C. Butler, who resigned to enter a new field. Mr. Roth has been a salesman in the Boston office for the past year. His promotion came as a result of a visit to Boston of Hunter Bennett, sales manager of the corporation.

Mr. Roth has been an exhibitor for several years, and prior to his connection with the Mutual was manager of the Park theater, Boston. W. H. Patten will continue as assistant manager. The sales staff consists of W. V. Hart, R. E. Riddick, F. G. Snodgrass and R. Pinkham. H. Hirsch is serial representative, R. F. Borroto is manager of the Bangor, Me., office, which is subsidiary to the Boston office.

HENRY REIMERS DEAD.

Henry Reimers, 43 years of age, died at the Bellevue Hospital, Tuesday, May 30th, 1916. His body was shipped to his brother in Chicago for burial. Reimers was with the Selig Polyscope Co. for eighteen years holding the position as general superintendent of laboratories. He was known as the father of cameramen, being the first man to use a motion picture camera and establish a laboratory in this country.

Reimers was not only the first cameraman, but one of the very best. He made several tours of the world, and everyone proved successful financially. He held the last position with the Diamond Feature Film Co., 1547 Broadway, New York City, for which company he photographed some of the best features that were ever produced. Communications can be addressed to his brother, Fred Reimers, 520 Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

UNIVERSALITES FOLLOW COURSE OF EMPIRE.

H. O. Davis, general manager of Universal City, who has for several weeks been in New York City, departed for the West on Sunday, June 4. Preceding him to Los Angeles, as the result of the adoption of the concentration policy by the Universal, were Jane Gail, Matt Moore, William Welsh and Joe Gerrard. On Saturday, June 10, Ben Wilson, Hobart Henley, William Barwood, Irene Hunt, Howard Crampton, Edith Roberts and Mrs. Roberts will also depart.

Women Indorse Open Booking

Chicago's Political Equality League Declares Scheme Gives Exhibitors Chance to Avoid Improper Films.

AS the result of a city-wide campaign in Chicago to expose exhibitors who persist in showing immoral moving pictures and thereby to force manufacturers to produce cleaner and better film plays, the Women's Political Equality League of that city has just issued a report giving the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., first place in the list of producers working toward that end. In the report, recently compiled by Mrs. Guy Blanchard, chairman of the Motion Picture Investigation Committee, following a canvass of every theater, large and small, in the greater city, the V-L-S-E is shown first in the percentage of good, clean plays produced.

With a view to ascertaining the cause of this situation in the hope that the solution would lead the way to better pictures in general, the members of the league instituted a second inquiry. As a result of this inquiry the open-booking policy of the Big Four, which permits individual exhibitors to select those pictures best suited to their clientele, was declared to be the dominating influence responsible for V-L-S-E's good showing. It was pointed out in the report that the oldest and largest exhibitors in the city were those who lead the list striving for cleaner pictures. This is taken as conclusive proof that progressive exhibitors throughout the country are harkening to the public demand for film plays that can be shown alike to children and grown-ups.

The investigation of the League had its inception last November. Under the direction of Mrs. Blanchard the city was divided into districts and a competent woman placed in charge of each. Each district manager was in turn provided with a corps of assistants, who were detailed to visit the forty-five theaters in her respective district. From November 25 to April 10, 1,755 visits were made and 4,563 reels of film inspected. The investigators were provided with blanks for a complete report of the film plays and the houses in which they were shown.

Many investigators, appending comments to their reports, told of encountering frequent assertions of exhibitors that they were unable to play clean features at all times because it was impossible for them to select them. They had to take what they could get, owing to contracts for long periods which they had signed up with various exchanges. A meeting was called to discuss the matter. M. A. Coyne, proprietor of the Newberry and Vision theaters, one of the oldest exhibitors in Chicago, surprised the gathering by the declaration that the excuse of exhibitors that they had to take anything sent them would not hold—that there is one organization, the V-L-S-E, which permits exhibitors to select the features they desire and see them before playing them.

The members of the League then heartily indorsed the open booking policy of the V-L-S-E as the one manner in which to cleanse moving pictures.

WAR FILMS BOOKED 100 DAYS AT LOEW'S.

Samuel Cummins, of 1476 Broadway, New York, has closed the biggest individual war film booking contract by signing up the latest and what is considered absolutely the most sensational German war films ever shown in this country known as "Germany's Battles at Verdun" under the auspices of the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung.

The representatives of the Loew offices immediately upon seeing this picture booked it for 100 days—three sets of prints. They are to have the first run in their houses. This picture is in four reels, being cut down from seven and contains nothing but action. The titles are in English and in German and are up to the very last minute of the war.

R. R. NEHLS IN NEW YORK.

R. R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Company, has been in New York for the past week or more looking after the interests of his firm.

"POP" ROCK CONVALESCING.

"Pop" Rock, known to the trade as the daddy of the Vitagraph Company, has about recovered from a slight indisposition that sent him to bed for a few days. "Pop" has practically retired from active participation in the Vitagraph Company and is enjoying himself at his beautiful country home at Oyster Bay, L. I. His son, John Rock, whose home is in Chicago, is here looking after business and is accompanied by his wife. They expect to return on Saturday.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES

A NEW picture theater, the King's Cross, was opened this week in Darlinghurst, a near suburb of Sydney. The new show has comfortable seating accommodation for 2,000 people, and is well fitted up, while exterior and interior decorations are tastefully carried out.

The management, Waddington's Ltd., are showing Paramount features, the opening attraction being the Lasky feature "The Secret Orchard," with Blanche Sweet.

"The Birth of a Nation" begins its season at the Theater Royal under the management of J. C. Williamson Ltd. next Saturday, the 25th instant. A special orchestra of twenty-five performers has been engaged, and will render the appropriate musical score. The prices of admission are the largest ever charged for picture entertainment in Australia, ranging from one shilling (25 cents) to six shillings ($1.50), the latter price being for reserved seats.

The first Universal feature was released this week. This was the four-part comedy drama "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," with Marie Tempest in the leading role.

The picture is not up to the standard of other brands of features shown in Sydney recently, but big things are expected from Universal in the near future. The next release is "Scandal," to be followed by "Business is Business," "Just Jim" and others.

The Fraser Film Company hold exclusive Australian rights for Broadway Universal Features, Red Feather Photoplays, and Bluebird Productions.

The present Triangle program consists of the seven-part Kay-Bee subject "Peggy" featuring Billie Burke; "Jordan is a Hard Road," with Frank Campeau; and a one-part Keystone entitled "Fido's Fate."

The Triangle Playhouse, which seats 1,600 persons, has been packed nightly with this program, which is an illustration of the growing popularity of Triangles.

Australasian Films Ltd. announce that the next program will be headed by the Kay-Bee production "The Disciple," starring William S. Hart, supported by "His Picture in the Papers," a Fine Arts comedy-drama with Douglas Fairbanks in the leading role, while a Keystone comedy will also be on the bill. The press has given very fine reviews of the last two double programs, and it is expected that the new one will be received even more favorably.

The George Willoughby Photograph Co. has finished its second production "The Woman in the Case," and is now engaged on another five-reeler "A Pearl of Great Price," from an original scenario by Randolph Bedford, a prominent Australian writer. Much of the action in this story takes place in the South Seas.

Current screenings include "The Christian," an eight-part adaption of Hall Caine's famous novel, by the London company. Derwent Hall Caine, son of the author, and Elizabeth Risdon have leading roles.

"Pennington's Choice," a splendid Metro feature, starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Though these two stars are not quite as popular here as in America, they nevertheless have a large following, which assures the success of any picture in which they appear.

"The Secret Orchard," the Lasky production. This subject is likely to prove more popular than others from this studio, being a much deeper play, in addition to being dramatically stronger.

"The Master of the House," an Equitable five-reeler, of average entertaining qualities.

TOM S. IMRIE

Sidney, N. S. W., Australia, April 19, 1916.

RUSSELL SMITH WITH TRIANGLE.

Russell E. Smith, the well-known writer of feature film stories, has just been added to the staff of the Triangle-Ince Scenario Department and has already started work on a new feature in which it is more than likely Douglas Fairbanks will be starred.

Exchange Man Stern is Producing Pioneer

WOULD a chap that manufactured film in 1905 be considered something of a pioneer in a business that is itself little over one decade old? Well, back in 1905, —eleven years ago, which is an age, in this business!—Herman Stern was making moving pictures with Fred S. Balshofer. Why he didn't stick to film making isn't told, but it must have been Stern's loss as Balshofer and everybody else making moving pictures at that time are in the "magnate" class today. Laemmle, Lubin, Powers, Kessel, Selig— but why make Mr. Stern feel bad?

Stern strayed into the producing of advertising films in 1910, making him somewhat of a pioneer in that field also. He showed these films at, among other theaters the Prospect Hall, Brooklyn. Then he became assistant manager of Prospect Hall, staying there three years. Then he went with the Universal 23rd street exchange in New York City. There he has just won the first competitive sales prize offered by the management of that exchange to hustling representatives, aforesaid prize consisting of a gold watch box suitably inscribed. Perhaps that compensates for missing on the "magnate" distinction. Anyway, Stern's forte seems to lie in getting more business for his exchange than most of the other representatives, and there may be money after all in following the line of least resistance. Time and his growing strength with the exhibitors will tell, in Herman Stern's case.

Herman Stern.

FOOTE AND DEXTER WITH MOROSCO.

Courtenay Foote and Elliott Dexter have been engaged by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and are now at work at its West Coast studios. Mr. Foote is known as a leading man of more than ordinary talent and has a large following among patrons of the photoplay in this country. With Bosworth, Inc., he appeared with great success in "Hypocrites" as Gabriel, the monk who carved the statue of "Truth." In "Captain Courtesy" he portrayed the heavy character opposite Dustin Farnum, while in several of the Elsie Janis photoplays he also appeared to advantage as leading man for the famous comedienne.

Elliott Dexter is another actor of accomplishment and has a large following both as a screen and stage player. On the speaking stage he has appeared in many successes during his ten years in this field. On the screen he has portrayed important roles before Paramount patrons. Both Courtenay Foote and Elliott Dexter will appear for the first time under the Morosco management in "An International Marriage," now being produced with Rita Jolivet in the stellar role. This photoplay is planned for release on the Paramount Program early in July and is the initial George Broadhurst play to be adapted to the screen.

Negotiations are pending whereby the General Film Company will secure a theater in Times Square, New York, for the week of June 18 to exhibit the new Knickerbocker Star Feature production, "Pay Dirt," in five reels. The deal was closed early this week.

This latest strategic move of the General Film Company must be credited to President George Kleine, who conceived the idea of establishing a criterion whereby eastern exhibitors may ascertain the strength of the features released on the General program.

"Pay Dirt" is a story of the gold fields, adapted from a drama which had a successful run a few years ago. Henry King, the star, has a strong following in the east, and it is expected the success of his latest production on Broadway will inaugurate a standing policy whereby General Film features will be frequently exhibited for a week's run in a leading New York theater.

"For Idea Only"

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

COMMENTING upon a recent story a manufacturer remarks "I would gladly pay a thousand dollars for the working manuscript of a good feature. The trouble is that I never can find them. Practically all of our purchased ideas must be reconstructed." We will accept his statement, but let us also look into the matter. First of all, a little admission: Suppose that we split with him fifty-fifty and agree that he would be willing to give five hundred dollars for a good working script. That means one hundred dollars a reel for a five reel subject. The idea in proper action is worth that much. As a matter of fact it is cheap at that price.

But what really happens?

The good idea comes in, perhaps not in the manner the editor approves of. The idea is liked. The editor writes the author that they like the idea but that the script must be entirely reconstructed. For this reason they can offer him merely the nominal price of forty or fifty dollars. Suppose that the offer is accepted. A staff man is put on the job and spends perhaps forty dollars worth of time making a working script. For ninety dollars the studio has a five hundred dollar idea. It has saved four hundred and ten dollars.

But has it?

In the first place the script is not as good as the author's crude continuity. It has been taken and debased. All originality of thought in the development of the action has been edited out. The story has been robbed of a certain charm of individuality and has been reduced to the dead sameness of all the other ideas this studio has offered. It is much the same as the story the staff man reconstructed the week before. It is very like the idea he will "fix up" next week. The little flashes of fancy that are the expression of individualism in the author are thrown aside. Perhaps the reconstructor has not even looked at the continuity. Some men even brag that they never read continuities. In place of this novel bit of business or that new twist, which the reconstructor does not see or cannot appreciate, we get the same old recourse to diaphraming, to close-ups, to dissolves, to hackneyed light effects. It has come to the point where a five reel story without hampering trick work would be a positive novelty. All of the special tricks have their uses, but in an effort to gain semblance of novelty, they are overworked.

As a result, the idea that might have been new if the author's ideas had been followed out, has become as stale as any studio-made idea. The imagination that was the sole excuse for the purchase of the story has been thrown away. It is no longer a story by John Jones, it is the same old stuff that Sam Smith always writes.

This confirms the manufacturer in his belief that it is no use trying to buy on the outside. What is the use of paying Smith a salary to reconstruct stories that are no better than the stories Smith can write himself? The practice merely represents the additional payment to the author for which absolutely no return is had. In a way the manufacturer cannot be blamed for the stand he takes. He is to blame that he puts the fate of his entire business enterprise so completely into the hands of incompetent persons who, for their own sakes, cannot afford to encourage the free lance. They want to hold their own jobs. They must maintain the fiction that all scripts must be reconstructed by the staff. They must make certain their own positions, and this works two ways. They cannot encourage the free lance author with decent payments or the script room would cost so much that salaries would be cut, and if they encouraged the free lances to the point where the right sort of men went to work and learned the technical side of the business there would be a reduction in the staff anyway.

All the manufacturer knows or sees is that his editorial staff is "saving" him money. The average cost of his features is well under two hundred dollars whereas he knows others who pay five hundred and a thousand dollars. It must be a good staff. Perhaps he even goes through the bunch of submissions and finds that there is little worth while. He cannot know that the best ideas go to the men who pay the best and who give the author the most courteous treatment. He does not know that the "idea only" policy is keeping from the work men who can and will give good work for a fair price.

Even where the editor and his staff are honest in their belief that they are serving their employer's best interest for competition does not change. Good intention is no excuse for ineptness. Many editors are utterly unable to visualize scripts. They can see nothing that is really new. Here is a story like one that pleased when Biograph made it. They purchase that. Here is another that was a hit with a Lubin trade mark. They buy that. Here is a third story that is better than either of the others, but the idea is so new that the editor never heard of one like it. Back it goes to the author. It may be marked "Not in our line." In reality it is too original. It contains a new thought. The editor cannot realize the idea or its value.

Sometimes the editor does see the value of a new plot and yet purchases nothing because the director will not take it. The director is unable to comprehend anything that is out of the ordinary. He declares that it will not make a good story, and it will not—in his hands—because of his inability to grasp the thought. He is too unintelligent to think. He can only copy. At that, he can only copy badly. And the man he works for backs up his director because, since the earliest day of the director there has been the tradition that a director cannot make a good story from a script he does not like. This is perfectly true, but why not get directors whose mental capacity permits them to grasp the ideas of others? If the manufacturer has a pair of shoes that pinch his feet, he gets another pair. If he has a director who cramps his stories, who wedges all productions into the narrow compass of his own mind the manufacturer cuts down the ideas to suit the mental capacity. He never thinks of getting a broader gauge director just as he got a larger pair of shoes, though he would never dream of having a couple of his toes amputated to make his feet fit smaller shoes.

There is only one way to get good stories in proper variety. Get an editor who really knows stories. Get a story man; not a dramatic man, because he is buying stories and not plays. But not all story men are well qualified. Get men who can see good in the work of others. Permit them to pay reasonable prices for good stories. Let them encourage the promising writers just as the editors of 1910 developed the present stars. Cut out the idea of paying only for the plot suggestion. Favor those who can give individuality to their development, and then, if the director cannot follow the author's thought, get merely who can. There must be such men. If there are not, they can be trained. They are not broken down stock company directors, they are more likely to be authors, but they can be had and trained, and they and they only, can bring novelty to a business that sadly needs it.

RUBINSTEIN RE-ENTERS PRODUCING FIELD.

Leon J. Rubenstein ("Ruby"), the Thanouser publicity director, has resigned his position, with two weeks notice. It has long been rumored that Ruby would make this move, yet his resignation caused no mild surprise.

Rubinstein has been at New Rochelle for almost two years, since Edwin Thanouser returned from Europe. He engineered Mr. Thanouser's re-introduction to the industry and then started a series of spectacular publicity stunts. His advertising won quick recognition by its originality, and his knack of playing to the theater man produced results. While at the helm in New Rochelle he made a specialty of stunt work, and in the past year he gathered in a number of scoops. Florence La Badie will no doubt be sorrier of all to see him go, for Ruby was particularly successful in securing publicity for her.

Before taking up his work at Thanousers', he was in the producing business as head of the Ruby Twimble Studio, which he built. When the time came he sold out, which later transpired to be wisdom on his part. Now he will practically resume where he left off, but declines to give any details of his plans except that he will show the trade an entirely new style of production. Rubinstein leaves New Rochelle with the best wishes of the company and the board of directors.

VON KLEIN OUT OF HORSLEY STUDIO.

Bert H. Von Klein, since last October the general manager of the David Horsley motion picture studios, has severed connections with that institution. David Horsley, sole owner and director-general of the studios, has elevated John Jasper, formerly the purchasing agent at the plant, to the position made vacant by Mr. Von Klein.

In discontinuing, Mr. Von Klein stated that he had not made up his mind for the future but that he was negotiating for a similar position with one of southern California's film concerns. Mr. Von Klein vacated his office at the close of business, Saturday, May 27.

"How Britain Prepared" Draws Well.

Al Lichtman Declares Many Film Men Could Not See Possibilities of Picture Now at the Lyceum.

"SUCCESS!" exclaimed Al Lichtman, general manager of the Patriot Film Corporation, which controls the rights for the United States of "How Britain Prepared," the official British film now being shown at the Lyceum theater, New York. "Success! Well, if turning them away by the hundreds every night and a chorus of enthusiastic praise from the entire New York press isn't a success, then I do not know what the word means."

"We have got a 'winner' for sure," he continued; "although one after another film man turned it down and it would have been lost to America had not a group of serious business men been invited to take a last look at it before Charles Urban—under whose direction the pictures were made by authority of the British Government—took it back to London disgusted with his reception by 'the trade' here."

"So these gentlemen just snapped it up," went on Mr. Lichtman. "In a day or two they formed a $100,000 syndicate to finance the pictures. The Patriot Film Corporation was born and the patriotically demonstrative houses that have been greeting 'How Britain Prepared,' at the Lyceum, are the result."

"And some people thought that the 'war film' had seen its day," was remarked.

"This is not a war film," retorted Mr. Lichtman. "This is a Preparedness-for-War film—something totally different. That's one of the elements of its success. It shows us exactly what we Americans must do if a war cloud should threaten our tranquillity. And, indeed, as the Evening Sun critic said, in that respect, it is 'calculated to stir the spirit even of a pacifist.' As for Urban's wonderful films showing Admiral Jellicoe's great North Sea Fleet on guard and in action—something to which recent events have given an increased importance—such an authority as Commander Crank of the United States Navy said to me that they are simply incomparable."

"And now that you have this big success," Mr. Lichtman was asked, "what are you going to do with it?"

"A pertinent question. Answer: Although we have had many offers for rights, including the largest legitimate theater circuits, we propose sending out 'How Britain Prepared' ourselves, as a big road attraction. We intend choosing the best theaters in every city, but we will always give preference to the big first class moving picture houses with good orchestras. You may be sure we will play fair with everybody. The gentlemen behind the enterprise would not stand for anything else."

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS' LAST STORY IN PICTURE.

"Somewhere in France," the last story from the pen of the late Richard Harding Davis, is now being arranged for filming at the Triangle-Ince studio. The story is a particularly virile one and it promises to be one of the film sensations of the year. As now being written, it is likely that Louise Glaum, the well-known Triangle star, will be seen in the featured part.

CUB COMEDY COMPANY CELEBRATES.

A celebration in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the Cub Comedy Company and the successful completion of half a hundred pictures in as many weeks was held at the David Horsley studios, Los Angeles, Saturday night, May 27, the guest of honor being Director Milton H. Fahrney. The big stage at the north end of the plant was transformed into a huge ballroom, and when the festivities started fully three hundred persons were present, the assemblage being composed of the entire working force of the studio as well as many prominent lights of the film colony of southern California.

David Horsley, sole owner, and director-general of the studios, planned the event, in recognition of the faithful services of Mr. Fahrney and his associates. Sharing the glory of the occasion with Mr. Fahrney were five members of the Cub Comedy Company who made up the cast of the first picture, a year ago. This honor fell to George Ovey, star of the company; Louis FitzRoy, assistant to Mr. Fahrney; Janet Sully, Jefferson Osborne and Ross Fisher, the cameraman who turned the crank throughout the entire five thousand scenes or more used in making the fifty productions.

One of the surprises of the evening was the appearance of the Cub Company band, consisting of twelve pieces, under the leadership of George Ovey. It was the first public appearance of this aggregation and they made an excellent showing from the start.

A program made up of talent from the celebrating company occupied a good portion of the evening, it being so arranged that it alternated with the dances, thereby making the activities continuous. At midnight the grand march took place, the procession being headed by Mr. and Mrs. Fahrney, followed by the Cub band and then the company.

ACORD SERIOUSLY INJURED.

It was entirely an accident, and not because the horse proved capable of unseating Art Acord, that he was badly hurt during the filming of a scene for a Mustang picture entitled "Sandy, Reformer," at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Inc., recently.

The Mustang company was on location—in one of the densely wooded valleys of the Santa Ynez Mountains. Acord's part called for him to ride down a steep slope among boulders and through thick underbrush. At one of the most perilous points, the horse lost its footing and fell sideways down the incline. Feeling the horse going, Acord attempted to spring off on the upside. One of his spurs caught in a worn cinch, and he was dragged after the rolling, pitching, struggling horse. Before the animal could regain its feet, it had rolled over the rider inflicting severe internal injuries.

"THE PRIMA DONNA'S HUSBAND."

The Triumph Film Corporation has secured the Lyceum Theater for a trade showing of "The Prima Donna's Husband," Monday, June 12th at 10.30 a. m. This is said to be an exceptionally strong photoplay, directed by Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden, with Holbrook Blinn heading a cast that includes Clara Whipple and Kathryn Browne Decker.

BRITISH NOTES

JOHAN D. TIPPETT, the managing director of the British "Universal" Company—the Trans-Atlantic—promises to become an inveterate exhibitor. The week has seen his second venture in London in screen presentations with "The Dumb Girl of Portici" at the Philharmonic Hall and incidentally in a style calculated to command the attention of the aristocracy. The first day's proceeds of the exhibitions of the Pavlova film were in aid of war charities and considering the ultra-selectness of the audiences—it was I believe Queen Alexandra's first visit to a public cinema entertainment—and such delightful little impositions as cigarettes at ten-shillings each, the results were most gratifying.

"Are we going to master the Kinema and direct it into useful channels or are we going to allow it to master us?" is a question that has been exacting much thought and discussion from a few perplexed prelates of the Established Church. Says one, "it is worse than useless, it is foolish and shortsighted, to rail against the pictures. They are the outstanding social fact of our time and it is for us to make the best of them, which we have hitherto been very far from doing. Especially do we wish to see the cinematograph used in schools. It is now being pressed upon the Imperial College at Delhi for acceptance by the Indian Government for use in all public schools and it has been suggested that in England and America, schools might combine by using a common building and so not incur great expense. Picture-house proprietors would probably welcome cooperation to this end."

The concluding observation is for once accurate and coming from the one-time most formidable opponents of the motion-picture is, to say the least, interesting. But the experiences of many exhibitors with designs upon the educational development of the cinematograph have not been happy ones. Instead of cooperation from the authorities, ecclesiastical or educational, dissenting cranks have frustrated many praiseworthy propositions and I have known cases where special facilities arranged for school children to see educational films have been actually resisted through the domination of the text-book fads. It is unnecessary to wade through Plutarch or Gibbons to find that war is as great a revolutionary factor to mind as body so it is not surprising that this along with other old cherished prejudices should have gone to the wall. The educational authorities might do much to encourage the idea. In one Northern city they have made a laudable start by permitting 25,000 school-children to see the "Britain Prepared" series of war-films. The children attended the exhibitor's hall at nine in the morning, accompanied by their tutors, and were clear before the ordinary performances. The local education authorities arranged the collection of the kiddies "twopences" and, it is most gratifying to observe, not a single parent amongst the 25,000 refusing the wherewithal of admission to his offspring or voiced any objection to the innovation.

The time of writing is the second week of the administration of the Amusements Tax and there is no gainsaying that its imposition last week, coming simultaneous with a spell of brilliant weather, an hour's extra daylight, and the ratification of the general conscription bill for all men of military fitness, was conducive to anything but good business. The country and suburban showmen appear to have been hit hardest through the new taxation but this week conditions are more promising all round.

The first Kerrigan serial was unspooled to the trade in London last week. Two of the villains in different episodes of "Terence O'Rourke" have been furnished with Teutonic attributes for the more palatable assimilation of the British film fan. There is no point upon which Trans-Atlantic publicity scores offener than upon these little touches of topicality.

A journalistic friend who was amongst a privileged few invited to see a recent War Office acquisition from the official camera-men at the front gives a vivid account of a wonderful film of the St. Eloi battle. He states that the military authorities think it the most realistic war-film yet issued, particularly because it shows close views of concentrated artillery fire and a Fokker biplane in flames. The film will be shown to the trade here in London in the course of a day or two and will be released for exhibition next month.

Mr. Geo. H. Smith of the Vitagraph Co. returned to the London office from his American tour on the eve of the release of his company's big subject "The Battle Cry of Peace."

At a meeting the other day of the London County Council theatrical sub-committee one member described the principle of compelling Sunday kinemas to devote part of their proceeds to charitable funds as one of blackmail and suggested that along the same system of reasoning the L. C. C. tram cars should give their quota of Sunday fares!

Octavia Handworth Returns

Old-time Favorite Comes Back in Important Role in "Who's Guilty?"

IT ALWAYS is a pleasure to welcome the return of old friends. This is particularly true in the world of the theater, where "here today—gone tomorrow" seems so inevitably the rule. And so it is with unusual delight that the host of admirers who so long have followed the career of Octavia Handworth on stage and screen note her reappearance in the silent drama.

Miss Handworth was some years ago the first star of the American company which the famous house of Pathe established. Under the guiding hand of her husband, an extremely popular and capable director, Miss Handworth climbed slowly but steadily into the dizzy eminence of stardom. Then she went to Europe, to appear there for several years in pictures and on the stage.

Upon her recent return to the United States she was engaged in "Globbled up," which might better describe the process—by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Company, which is producing the "Who's Guilty?" series for Pathe. So that really Miss Handworth has but returned to her first love in the motion picture field.

To those who see her for the first time as the scheming housekeeper in "Sowing the Wind," one of the "Who's Guilty?" series, it will seem as if Miss Handworth has eluded her part, as if she were, if anything, too convincing in a difficult and rather unsympathetic role. But those who have made the previous acquaintanceship of this clever young woman will realize that with her return to pictures she merely has set a new mark of dramatic attainment.

The average "adventuress"—we mean the stage type of adventuress—is usually dark, with solemn, sullen eyes that seem to brood as if over darkest Egypt's past. Yet Miss Handworth is a true blonde. Nor is there aught in her eyes when they are not conscious of the camera's work, of anything save kindness and good humor. Also an "adventuress" is supposed to be a wicked woman of fixed and daring purpose; Miss Handworth rather gives the impression of subtle cunning and masterful design.

All true "adventuress" types are—or they say should be—a dominating force. In this, at any rate, Miss Handworth fills the prescribed defines, except that she carries domination to the point of regalness. For regal she is, rather than masterful; dominant rather than dominating.

Under the careful direction of Lawrence B. McGill, who staged "Sowing the Wind," all of the cleverness of this unusually clever woman is brought to the fore. She sincerely has her work been done that, at the conclusion of the "Who's Guilty?" series, President Shallenberger of the Arrow Company plans to present Miss Handworth in a stellar role in a feature drama now being written for her.

"The Destroyers"

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE V-L-S-E released on June 5 "The Destroyers" the five-part Vitaphone Blue Ribbon in which Lucille Lee Stewart makes her debut as a leading player. The subject, the script for which was written by James Oliver Curwood, was produced by Ralph Ince. Mr. Ince has made no effort to make his story depend on one player; in fact, there are five upon whom the interest centers. The opportunities given Miss Stewart in this picture are hardly sufficient to afford an adequate index as to her capabilities as a leading player. The sideration. If Miss Clayton is new to World Film audiences, she may be recalled for her excellent work in numerous Lubin photoplays; Mr. Blackwell is, of course, well known to all picture patrons, whereas Mr. McAllister has proven himself to be an effective actor on the screen as on the stage. In point of prestige, also, suitability in the present instance, the featured players were a happy selection.

From the popular viewpoint, if not always from the more exacting one of logical art, "His Brother's Wife" is a promising offering in that it contains certain unflinching elements of appeal. There is Helen Barton, the wife, ready to sacrifice herself for her husband, stricken with tuberculosis after his financial ruin; there is the husband's dashing, young brother, who magnanimously foregoes a tempting affair with the sorely perplexed wife, and when it is desirable to strike a domestic note calculated to arouse a sympathetic response in the audience, there is a pretty child, an innocent victim of the tragedy threatening the parents.

That the author did not always avoid the appearance of convenient arrangement in the progress of the plot is true, and at times the director permitted scenes not essential to the action, such as those of an Apache dance and a spirited race on snow-covered ice; but in the main the story advances with commendable directness. First, we meet the Burtons in the time of their prosperity, suddenly ended by the disastrous fire started by a discharged employee; then we meet the brother, role of Josephine McCloud is a more or less sombre one. Miss Stewart so well occupies herself, however, as to awaken interest in her future work.

"The Destroyers" is a good picture. Its opening is in the north woods, snow-covered. The status of the principal characters at the end of the first reel is in doubt. It is at this point that the story reverts to its chronological beginning, and for more than three reels there is unfolded the story within the story, the explanation as to why the uncommunicative hermit lives in solitude and as to why the young woman is so far from the surroundings to which plainly she is accustomed. It is a dramatic recital and holds throughout. When the tale fades back into the present the result is a strong situation and it is capably handled.

Huntley Gordon has the role of McCloud and later of Peter God, the municipal reformer who, on account of his activities, is "framed up" by a defeated candidate for the mayoralty. As the result of a struggle in which two persons are killed he goes to the woods, away from civilization, believing himself a murderer and hunted by the police. John Robertson is Lawler, the politician, who succeeds in destroying the reputation of the man who exposed his crookedness. Virginia Norden is Coralie De Gar, the willing instrument of Lawler. It is an excellent cast.

The opening of the story is effective. Over the snow-covered trails speed the six dogs and their sled with its human freight. They are seen from near and from far. The staging of the fort, with its log buildings, is realistic. The illusion of the woods is well sustained throughout the picture.

"His Brother's Wife"

Premio-World Film Drama Presenting Three Players of Marked Ability in an Adequate Story.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE three players at the points of the triangle in this five-part drama—Ethel Clayton, Paul McAllister and Carlyle Blackwell—comprise as strong a combination as any producer need desire. It would not be fair to either the author of the story or to the director, Harley Knoles, to state that the actors are the making of the picture, but surely they do their share, and each has a drawing power worthy of con-who, having gained a fortune on an Australian ranch, visits New York, and next we follow the events dependent upon his chance encounter with Helen. When the action shifts to Saranac Lake there are opportunities for beautiful scenes and convincing bits of drama. The separation of husband and wife, as the result of an unjust suspicion, is not improbable, according to photoplay standards, and the reconciliation on the night that Helen scores as an actress in a stellar role is within reason.

"The Code of the Hills"

Lubin Western Studio Produces Three-Part Subject Containing Good Situations.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Lubin Company released on June 1 "The Code of the Hills," a three-part subject treating of life in a primitive community and also in the city. The story is written by Minard Wilson and is directed by Melvin Mayo. Mr. Mayo would have added materially to the illusion of his picture had he seen fit in staging it to have incorporated backgrounds containing mountains or even hills. So far as this writer observed, there was not present the faintest suggestion of these.

Lucy Payton plays the dual role of mother and daughter. Bird Hopkins is the lawyer who on vacation meets and marries the former. The union is an unhappy one, and the mother returns to her home. A daughter is born and the mother dies. The father is unaware of the existence of the newcomer. In later years the daughter goes to the home of the lawyer, now a judge, to kill him in revenge for his having sentenced to prison a man who had been the child's protector as he had also been the unsuccessful suitor for the hand of the mother.

The daughter, unaware of the identity of her father, stands beside the painting of her mother in the judge's study and with pistol in hand. It is a situation of dramatic power. The design of Nan to kill the judge is aborted by the intervention of the actual murderer, the brother of the man sentenced, who has come to the judge to confess. The story told by the visitor unites father and daughter and steps are taken to free the one in prison. As the crime for which he had been sentenced was the shooting of a man who had insulted the daughter of the judge the code of the hills is accepted by the latter, there is no further prosecution, and all ends happily.

"The Code of the Hills" will make an acceptable three-part subject.

"The Three Godfathers"

Six-Part Bluebird Photoplay Presents Story of Strong Appeal by Peter B. Kyne.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE exceptionally human character of this story allows of its extension over six reels of film without becoming tiresome. The regeneration of three crooks through the enforced adoption of a lone infant born on the desert and left to their care by a dying mother, forms the main theme of Peter B. Kyne's story, cleverly adapted to the screen by Harvey Gates. Director E. J. LeSaint with Stella Haseto and Harry Carey in the leading roles, and George Berrell, Frank Lanning, Joe Rickson and Hart Hoxie in the supporting cast, has made the production one of the welcome sort that the exhibitor may show with impunity before any audience.

The introduction of the main theme of the story has been done in a most satisfactory manner. We are thoroughly well acquainted with Iuby Merrill of the western dance hall, Bob Scene from "The Three Godfathers" (Bluebird).

Sangster, the cowpuncher from nowhere, and the three strangers, who, it transpires, knew Bob in the Yuma "den" when he was "doin' time for smugglin' horses," before the safe-breaking episode and the flight into the desert. Bob Sangster, trying to make a stake with which to return and marry Iuby, takes a last chance on a crooked game, flings the girl from him to safety, refusing to "lay down at the pinch," and rushes through the bullet-swept street with the horses at the signal from the other three. The dark street scene at this juncture of the story presents a remarkable spectacle, excited action under the cloak of night, with indistinct forms hurrying from the saloon, and guns flashing fire as the strangers make a getaway with their loot. The scenes on the desert where the men do their best with the new-born babe will be found both pathetic and amusing, and sometimes singularly gruesome. The double exposure work representing the spirits of the two older men who died on the desert that the babe might be brought to safety by the younger man, driving a couple of burros toward the tottering last one, are very effective.

June 19 is the date set for the release of this excellent feature.

"The Lotus Woman"

Five-Reel Kalem Release Containing Many Picturesque Scenes—Alice Hollister in a Vampire Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE line in George R. Sims' "Ostler Joe" descriptive of the lady "who lured men's souls to the shore of sin by the light of her wanton eyes" applies equally as well to Juana, the Lotus Woman. This lady vampire is a native of South America, and was reared in rigorous seclusion by her haughty old father, Don Roberto, until the arrival of a dashing rebel chief at the hacienda. Whereupon she is found the next evening in the garden by her sire clasped in the arms of the rebel gentleman, Lopez by name. When Don Roberto voices his disapproval he is shot down by Lopez, and the couple is next seen in camp, with Lopez in command of a conquering army. Jerry Mandeville, an American soldier of fortune, disappointed in a love affair at home, joins the rebel, and the Lotus Woman tries her fascination on him. She is repulsed and vows vengeance. Mandeville's successful rival next appears on the scene, and Juana makes a quick conquest of him. The way is thus opened for Mandeville to prove himself the better man and win his lady love as the final picture is thrown upon the screen. The path leading to this proper consummation of the tale is a bloody one, however, and strewn with the bodies of Lopez, the Lotus Woman and the faithless American. During a perfect whirlwind of strictly melodramatic action, the rebel chief is killed by Don Roberto just as he is about to finish Juana, the American is shot while trying to escape a squad of soldiers, and Juana performs "the happy dispatch" by the aid of her own stiletto. An embarrassment of riches in the way of plot makes the story somewhat slow in getting under way, but the exposition once over, events move forward at a rapid and compelling pace. Judged from its own viewpoint, "The Lotus Woman" is a photoplay of merit. Like all plays of its class, the characters are dominated by the melodramatic exigencies of the situations, but have been outlined with a steady hand. The atmosphere of Latin America is sustained in the locations and accessories throughout the five reels.

Alice Hollister's performance of Juana is consistent, admirable in expression and physically attractive, although she does not attempt to make this last quality unduly prominent. A vampire who depends upon her mental appeal to entice her victims is a novelty in this day and age. Harry Millarde, who had charge of the production, is quietly effective as Mandeville, and Arthur Albertson, John E. Macklin, James B. Ross and Fayre Cusack give an excellent account of the other important characters.

"Bogus Ghost" Was by Gardner.

Through an error in the announcements concerning "The Bogus Ghost," a single-reel Ethel Teara comedy, released by Kalem, May 24, the authorship was credited to S. A. Van Pelt. The story was from the pen of Louis B. Gardner.

"Civilization"

A Most Powerful and Compelling Film Spectacle Contrasting the Apparent Peace of Civilization with the Grim Reality of War.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

AS A SPECTACLE "Civilization" is an undoubted success. The spectacular has been rather emphasized on the screen these last few months. Exacting standards have been set, but even judged by these exacting standards Mr. Ince's production bears the severest test. It is altogether probable that the spectacular element in this feature will assure its popularity and its commercial success, and if there were no other criterions this review must end right here. An attempt has been made, however, to produce an allegory and to convey a great idea. Whatever criticism is attempted here will confine itself entirely to that aspect of the production. Mr. Ince has endeavored to use the artistic and psychological power of the screen, and his laudable and ambitious efforts in this direction call for a just but sympathetic analysis.

Of all mediums of expression, of all forms of literature, none is more difficult than allegory. In all the literature of the world, ancient and modern, the successful allegories may be counted on the fingers of one hand. The use of the supernatural requires little less than genius. In "Civilization" the most daring use is made of the supernatural. Mr. Ince takes us to "The Borderland" which he informs us "flows" between Earth and Eternity. What we see there is by no means clear, though it is weird and picturesque. In this "borderland" we meet the figure of Jesus. The inventor of a submarine, "Count Ferdinand," has refused to fire a torpedo at a peaceful passenger ship, and though he was the commander of the U-boat, he preferred to kill most of the crew and blow up the boat to executing the orders of his inhuman king. He is drowned and his soul is presently found wandering in the "borderland." Jesus meets him and addresses him as "Count Ferdinand." He praises the Count for the service he has rendered to humanity and announces that He will reap upon earth in the form and shape of the Count and preach peace.

Before this strange transformation takes place the Count is led to a spot in the "borderland" which is palpably copied from the Dante film and is told that "Here abides Immortal Hate chained to herself." The Count seems much impressed and then disappears from the story except as to his outward and visible form. Before the audience reaches this remarkable scene it has been profoundly impressed by the horrors of war. The early scenes of war, the terrible contrast between the apparent peace of civilization and the grim presence and reality of war, have been portrayed with a realism and an art rarely surpassed in film history. No stronger appeal on behalf of suffering humanity has ever been made in words or in pictures.

Toward the end of the picture, when we have supped our fill of horrors, a new series of horrors is shown, strong, artistic, realistic, overwhelmingly powerful but withal anti-climactic. The titles with negligible exceptions are good, but there are altogether too many of them, and the long narrative which introduces the pictures is apt to become tedious. The picture, except in the purely allegorical attempts, is clear and powerful enough to tell its own story and unnecessary titles only interrupt.

With all its confusion of ideas the feature has a compelling interest, which could have been greatly enhanced with the right sort of music. In spots the music was suitable enough, in other places it was altogether out of place. The success of the music depends entirely on a skillful use of crescendo and diminuendo. The composer, it seems to me, has overlooked most of his opportunities.

The acting surely was not up to the height of Mr. Ince's "great argument." Herschell Mayall was an impossible King of Wredpryd and strutted most of the time. Howard Hickman had a most unenviable part as Count Ferdinand and did the best he could. Miss Enid Markey as Kathryn Haldemann may eventually develop into a good actress. There were moments when she encouraged such a belief, and of her ambition and her conscientious effort there can be no doubt. She, too, had an almost possible part and never seemed quite clear just what to do with it. George Fisher acquitted himself well in the extremely delicate and difficult part of Jesus.

The pantomime preceding the film at its first showing at the Criterion on the night of Friday, June 2, was exceedingly well done and deserved the rich applause it received. The audience was extremely lavish in its demonstrations, as may be judged from the fact that the quotation of one of the ten commandments brought forth a storm of applause.

At the end of the performance Mr. Ince came upon the stage in response to the noisy demands of his friends. He was evidently much moved by the favorable reception and made his most ambitious effort and made a short speech acknowledging his gratitude.

"The Spider and the Fly"

Robert Mantell and Genevieve Hamper in Well Acted Melodrama by the Fox Company—Five Reels.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE spider in this picture, "The Spider and the Fly," is played by Genevieve Hamper. It is a five-reel offering full of the old-fashioned melodrama's high lights and deep shadows. The spider, after wrecking the lives of several men, among them a gentleman who loved her too well, played by Robert Mantell, is converted and becomes a slum worker, but is too late to save the poor, broken gentleman.

The juvenile parts are taken by Claire Whitney and Walter Miller, two guileless young folks who see only enough evil in the world to come through their trials and tribulations safely. Stewart Holmes plays the chief helper of the "Spider." In the early scenes there is a most charming child, one of those kiddies, it seems to me, who are earnest and sincere and who can be played upon even to tears of sympathy as sweetly as a piano.

One notices the Fox skillful workmanship in the picture abundantly. There is a wonderfully effective use of close-up scenes that pick out the faces where the drama values are highest for the instant. There are sets and backgrounds that are unobtrusively perfect. The quality of the story well, as an offering, depend on the taste of the audience—it is the old-fashioned melodrama, nothing more or less, but well acted (for the most part) and well produced. It is not a picture that those who are asking for substantial offerings would seek, nor would those who want pictures significant of real life care much for it.

"Gloria's Romance"

Chapters IV and V Arouse the Keen Interest of the Spectator in Gloria's Preference for Freneau and in the Web That Is Being Spun Around Him.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I WAS not mistaken in foretelling in my review of Chapters II and III of "Gloria's Romance" that the indications pointed to increased action and keener interest in the chapters soon to follow.

Chapters IV and V cannot fail to stir spectators into the belief that the story is very much worth while, notwithstanding the luke-warmness that may have been created by the first three chapters because of their simple reasonableness and tameness of action, necessitated by the avowed purpose of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes to write a moving picture novel that would show life as it is reasonably lived.

It is pertinent here to submit the opinion that it might have been better, in the first filmed novel of this type, had Chapters I, II and III been all included in the first release. It seems to me that if this plan had been followed the disappointment of many who were not prepared for a story of this type would have become hearty interest and support. It now appears evident, after viewing Chapters IV and V, that interest henceforth will be cumulative and that the new type of film novel—instead of unfolding its greatest thrill in the opening chapters and then gradually dwindling into monotony and weariness until the close—will continue to exercise greater influence as it proceeds. I expect to see finer opportunities for acting on the part of the principals and of all the other important characters and to witness a denouement that will be worthy and satisfying.

Chapter IV is headed "The Social Vortex." Here Freneau, the gentleman adventurer who plays havoc among the hearts of women, renews his attentions to Gloria, and through her girlish cunning succeeds in being a guest at her coming-out party, notwithstanding that her aunt Hortensia had blue-penciled his name on the list. He had made his peace with her over his failure to recognize her at the opera by paying her the artful compliment, "You've grown so wonderfully beautiful that I didn't know you," and while her father slept in his chair during the first act he had conducted a wireless conversation with her by means of his and of her opera glass and taken her off to the refreshment room, where he fully reinstated himself in her favor.

There is a fine touch of comedy in this scene (or scenes), in which Miss Billie Burke's Gloria is a girlish, radiant creature, who throws social decorum to the winds at the dictates of her heart and makes of her doting old millionaire father a stern keeper, who fumes over his powerlessness to keep her in her cage.

The scene in the Stafford mansion showing the initiation of Gloria as a debutante is animated and picturesque, and Miss Billie Burke is the star toward which all eyes are directed. Gloria refuses to give her opening dance to any of the young gallants who press her for the favor, and finally selects her old Dad for that honor, but his heart trouble soon makes logs of his feet and he resigns to another. Freneau is her favorite, and the jealous Dr. Joyce registers in his mind that Gloria dances with him just a bit too often and makes it his duty to have a talk with him and threaten him.

Chapter V, "The Gathering Storm," introduces a new character, Gideon Trask, who promises to interfere more effectively with the plans of the wily Freneau than does either Gloria's father or Dr. Joyce. A sight of this stranger by Freneau recalls a chapter out of his reckless past life, but that is soon forgotten, and we see him sleighing with Gloria the following day behind her new ponies. Billie Burke handles the ribbons like a prize winner at a swiftness of a horse show and looks stunning in her winter garb. On the trip, at the inn, where they stop for a cup of tea that is never drunk, so far as the pictures show, Freneau holds Gloria to her promise of marriage, made five years before, and the unsuspecting girl accepts him.

This scene is very well acted. Freneau's proposal is made in a most original way, the dominating impression being cold, intellectual forcefulness, with an artificial show of deep sentiment. Billie Burke's Gloria is just what we would expect on this occasion. She listens to his words in silence, looking at him all the time out of eyes filled with a trustful tenderness—and their lips meet in the first kiss.

Pneumonia seizes Gloria as the result of the sleigh ride, and the old foggy family doctor is called in. He comes near putting an end to the story right here, but Dr. Joyce comes to the rescue, the old foggy fires himself, and our heroine is spared to encounter whatever joys or ills the future may have in store for her.

"The Evil Thereof"

Unpleasant But Powerful Famous Players Subject Is Well Made and Well Acted.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Famous Players released on June 5 "The Evil Thereof," a five-part adaptation of the drama by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf. It is a "morality drama"; an unpleasant subject is treated in a powerful way. The object of the story is to show the widely divergent uses to which money may be put. There is shown the contrast in which the spend-thrift showers money on those who share his orgies and the scant consideration he bestows upon the wife of a laborer fatally injured by his machine. The picture is directed by Robert G. Vignola in the Famous Players style.

Two characters stand out in the story. Frank Losee is seen in the role of the wealthy man who is in business not because he needs the money, but because he believes it to be expedient to get away from the possibility of the charge of being one of the "idle rich"; the broker is altogether despicable, a libertine without a saving grace unless it be the lavish manner in which he throws money, hundred-dollar bills, to his women friends. Grace Valentine is a manicurist who is seduced by the broker and, disowned by her father, afterward has no interest in life; her subjugation is complete; there is nothing for her to do but heed the "beck and call" of the broker. It is a strangely contrasting pair. The two roles are splendidly played. The smooth villainy of the one is matched by the deep despair of the other.

The story is a succession of tragedies—of the soul and also of blood. The culmination is near the close of the banquet where the broker entertains seven of his friends, or associates if you will. The brooding manicurist, repentant, rebellious, overcome by shame, plunges the carving knife into the breast of the host.

"The Evil Thereof" is realism—gilded brutality. The story grips.

MABEL TALIAFERRO IN "GOD'S HALF ACRE."

Mabel Taliaferro, the famous stage and screen favorite, has signed an engagement with Metro-Rolle to appear in at least eleven more five-part productions. The first of this number, "God's Half Acre," is now in production, and will be released the middle of July. Edwin Carewe, who has been directing Miss Taliaferro, and who appeared with her in "The Snowbird," her last feature on the Metro program, will direct all the Taliaferro productions.

CLIFFORD ELEFT WILL DIRECT "MUGGINS."

Clifford Eleft has been selected to film "Muggins," a one reel comedy drama in which Gretchen Lederer will play the lead, with N. Myles opposite, and supported by Adele Farrington and little Elizabeth Jaynes. The filming of this picture play will require at least another week.

"Chip's Carmen"

Children Appear in Juvenile Film Corporation Burlesque on Famous Charlie Chaplin Picture.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

HERE is a burlesque on a burlesque depending somewhat, though not entirely, on the supposition that prospective audiences have viewed the original. To thoroughly appreciate Charlie Chaplin's comedy version of "Carmen" it is wise to see one of the serious productions first; likewise the meaning of these two reels, made by the Juvenile Film Corporation, under the direction of James A. Fitz-Patrick, will be grasped more completely if the incidents in the famous Essanay burlesque are recalled. An exhibitor who has shown the Chaplin picture would not go far wrong in booking "Chip's Carmen," while the impression left by the original is still fresh, especially if the taste of children, or that of adults with a childish sense of humor, is being considered.

The spirit of this picture is ingeniously youthful and therein lies most of its charm. It is very much as though a party of clever youngsters had been inspired to adjourn to the back yard and spend the afternoon playing "Carmen," having secured an assortment of costumes from their elders. Indeed, something of this idea is carried out in the introduction of Joseph Chip Monahan, the juvenile imitator of Chaplin. His mind filled with memories of the "Carmen" burlesque, he returns home and wanders out into the fields with his goat. Presently he falls asleep and the scene dissolves into a fantastic distortion of the picture just witnessed.

In the dream, Chip Monahan becomes Bon Doze, who is fascinated by the wiles of a nine-year-old Carmen, cleverly presented by Chip's sister, Janethel Monahan. Then all of the lad's playmates enter into the action as bandits, terrors, or just plain spectators of Bon Doze's heroic encounter with the bull. The scenes are brightly acted by the children, among them Dolores Mitrovich, a dancer of rare grace.

"The Gutter Magdalene"

A Lasky Feature with Many Admirable Points Featuring Fannie Ward in the Leading Part.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

DESPITE its absurd and ill-fitting title, this production may be ranked as a thoroughly successful Lasky feature. In its clever seizure of profound psychological moments, in its portraiture of phases in underworld life, in its inspirational devotion to perfect details, this feature stands in the first rank. I must qualify the statement right here in order to give the exhibitor the right perspective: Fannie Ward is not at her best. She starts well as the victim of the young gambler's flashy deceit, but her conversion and her entrance into the Salvation Army was far from convincing. Conversion implies a triumph of sincerity, a welling up of the spiritual nature, a change of soul. There was indeed a splendid opportunity for the display of high histrionic gifts and there was much in Miss Ward's past performances to encourage the belief that she would meet the highest expectations. As a matter of fact, she never got further than looking unnaturally demure. With this qualification the highest praise is none too high for the merits of the film. Jack Dean, Billy Elmer, James Neill, Gertrude Keller and Robert Bradbury made a most satisfactory cast. The story is a strictly modern one, and the settings as well as the atmosphere lend great force and interest to the production. The pictures and scenes of low life while never in the least offensive are startlingly true to life. The whole situation is handled with extraordinary skill. The feature, I am pleased to add, is remarkably free from padding.

"His Great Triumph"

William Nigh Gives Vivid Portrayal of Underworld Character in Columbia-Metro Drama.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

FOR about two-thirds of its five-reel course, "His Great Triumph" holds true to a tense story of an unusual nature; but after that, after the climax in the life of Buttsy Gallagher has been reached and passed, there is considerably less to engage the attention. Had the plot been allowed to run its natural length, it is probable that we should have had a three instead of a five-reel picture, and the impression left by William Nigh's complete portrayal of a pathetic weakling would have been stronger in consequence.

Although Marguerite Snow is given a prominent place in the cast, this is essentially Mr. Nigh's picture. His is the character that stands out in unchallenged prominence, attracts sympathy and justifies the story. Buttsy is a mental and physical incompetent, possessing a craving for the pleasant things in life without even the ability to maintain the respect of his associates in the slums. Abused by everyone with whom he comes in contact, his one pleasure in life is gained by skulking around the homes of the wealthy, where the lights and the luxury awaken dreams in his unbalanced mind. This accounts for his presence at the mansion of Judge Winters when a man is shot by burglars, who escapes leaving Buttsy in a compromising position, although the Judge's daughter and a fortune-hunting count know that he is blameless. Thus far there has been nothing extraordinary; but with the progress of the trial the nature of Buttsy is revealed in a quite unprecedented light. When it comes to a choice between the electric chair and a return to the old life of misery, the defective chooses the chair and urges his guilt for fear that the luxury of death may be denied him.

It is here and in scenes immediately following that the story reaches a logical climax, the effect of which is lessened by the last reels, designed to show the ultimate good fortune of Buttsy—a man destined by nature for misfortune. The direction of the picture indicates care and the acting of Miss Snow, Robert Eliot, Julius D. Cowles and others suffices.

"The Window of Dreams"

Three-Reel Thousander Presenting a Simple Story Artistically Treated.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

MORE of an impression than a drama, a production in which we are scarcely conscious of the number of its parts, which, by the way, are three, a simple theme clearly outlined and not overburdened by detail other than that which has a direct bearing on the story is what constitutes this perfectly natural and deeply pathetic picture.

Agnes C. Johnson is responsible for the scenario which was directed by Howard C. Mitchell with a cast consisting of Grace De Carlton, Bert Delaney, Clifford Gray, Betty Lawson and Carey L. Hastings. The production teaches a valuable lesson to the overauspicious wife and sweetheart by showing the untold sorrow which the jealous disposition is capable of causing to all concerned. In the instance presented in the picture a mere trifle is the cause of a terrible tragedy. A lover late for his appointment with his sweetheart because he is engrossed in leaving at her home a canary which he names "Joy," suggesting that she can always keep it in its cage so that it will never escape from her, meets his death a few minutes later through the pettishness of the sweetheart, who, absorbed in her fancied grievance, allows him to wander on a hillside that is about to be blasted. In attempting all too late to make him understand his danger she herself is made a victim of life.

The remainder of the story shows the invalid observing from her window the domestic life of a newly-married couple who have come to live next door. At the moment when their bark strikes the breakers she is able from her superior knowledge and the part played by circumstances to smooth their path and be of use in a financial crisis.

Grace De Carlton is to be especially commended for her intelligent work in this production.

Triangle Shows Two Subjects

"An Innocent Magdalene," Fine Arts, an Unusually Fine Picture—"The Dividend," from Ince Studio, Shows Structural Weakness.

By Louis Reeves Harrison

"An Innocent Magdalene."

AS sweet and dignified as its main characterization, ideal in conception, well designed and artistic in execution, "An Innocent Magdalene," by Roy Somerville, is more than an enchanting story—it is a valuable contribution to the support of the moving picture business. The new art would drag along through a sickly youth if nourished only by the general run of makeshifts and plagiarisms. Bright hopes of its future and vigor of present existence depend for sustenance upon such occasional splashes of true artistry, as "An Innocent Magdalene," true and shining gems among a lot of lustreless paste imitations.

The story starts off with an exquisite characterization. It makes us well acquainted with a tender-hearted little Southern girl placed in small-town environment and brought up in strict seclusion by an egotistical father, an aristocratic gentleman of the old school, at odds with progress as well as with his unperturbed neighbors. He represents the fast-decaying idea that distinguished ancestry must dominate present merit. Pride of family is all he has to sustain an assumption of superiority that lacks other reason for existence. Unable to meet conditions as he finds them, lacking in both mental breadth and gracious tact, the soured old pretender lives in a state of semi-retirement and obsessive respectability and attempts to keep his daughter from soiling contact with ordinary people, very much to their general amusement and occasional derision. This characterization presents some interesting contrasts and is so decidedly American that it gives atmosphere to the play.

The girl is inspired by the better part of her father's pride. She carries herself with a fine deportment that results more from purity and elevation of mind than from over-estimation of herself. The characterization is complex, is that of a human being rather than of an ideal, and Lillian Gish presents it so clearly that the impersonation may justly be called the best she has ever done. Pure, sweet and grave, the Southern girl falls in love with a handsome stranger, and he boldly asks the father for her hand in marriage. He is turned out of doors. The lovers are married without parental consent, and the old aristocrat writes his daughter's name in the Bible among dead members of his family.

The young wife is not hurt by discovering that her husband is a man of light morality, a gambler in peril of arrest, for she inspires him to change of occupation, though too late to save him from arrest. She is not broken down when he is sentenced to a year's imprisonment. She exhibits great courage when a woman out of her husband's past appears as his first wife, but she gives up her home and goes back to her father because she is with child. He rejects her as a soiled thing. Small-town society turns upon her the finger of scorn. The church points to her as an example. She finds refuge in a negro cabin and gives birth to a child, but the strain of sustained ignominy proves too much for her fortitude after she has served her divine mission, and her mind begins to weaken. She is finally saved from self-destruction by her husband, who finds an impostor in her place on his return from prison, and the cruel scolding of her father is bitterly punished. The whole story moves with clarity and vigor through its scenes, but there is no forced effort to rouse and sustain attention,

Interest grows constantly and naturally out of fine development of a beautiful character.

"The Dividend."

A play of social criticism with a strong theme, "The Dividend," a five-reel Ince subject written by C. Gardner Sullivan, is admirably handled and interpreted with skill, William H. Thompson carrying off the honors as a hard old capitalist who judges everything in the world, everybody, including his own son, and even himself by one standard of valuation, that which affects his property interests. Outside of this marked characterization, one not intended to attract sympathy, there is lacking some form of compensation for the almost continuous injustice done by the father to his weakening son and to those wage earners who earn his dividends. But the play's chief weakness lies in the fact that a wholly unexpected and unconvincing fit of repentance is forced upon the old capitalist in order that he may be punished by the spectacle of his dying, decadent son.

Such abrupt conversions are jarring in the extreme. Dickens took the pains to lead his hard old characters through fear to a change of sentiment and conduct, and there are plenty of facts and motives through which the transformation can be made plausible. That of the old capitalist at the last moment, for no very apparent reason, reminds one of the hard-hearted parents in conventional comedy, when they suddenly turn from their original intention to oppose the happiness of a young couple and say "God bless you, my children," after all. That a playwright so capable as Gardner Sullivan should base his conclusion on such unsafe grounds indicates that he is going at too high a speed, trying to do too much in a very limited time.

"The Man from Nowhere"

Five-Reel Red Feather Offering Features King Baggot as Falsely Imprisoned Convict Who Wins Pardon.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN construction and general story-value this is one of the best of Red Feather releases. The author, William H. Clifford, and director, Henry Otto, have wrought a harmonious production which gets up an unusual amount of interest. Even one of those unknichted wretches (watch your step, F. P. A!) who profess to find it difficult to concentrate on moving pictures ought to enjoy this.

King Baggot is featured in the leading role. The first reel introduces him as a young man just returning to his Virginia home, where he is welcomed by his sister, Betty. In a few short, graphic scenes is shown the tragedy which sends him to prison, convicted of shooting his sister, who had been lured away by the real villain of the piece.

His years of imprisonment; the saving of a prison outbreak; the friendly interest of the governor's daughter, and then his release by the warden to show up a card sharp at an evening entertainment, all make good, well-handled incidents.

The production is particularly strong in plot and original situations. It succeeds in making improbable incidents probable, avoids obvious, hackneyed scenes and blends humor and drama entertainingly. There is no conscious striving for effect on the part of the very capable cast, and this helps strengthen the effects achieved.

In the cast beside Mr. Baggot are Joseph Granby, Helen Marten, Frank Smith, Joseph Gerard, Johnnie Walker and others.

Director Lloyd Carleton has finished a two-reel drama, entitled "The Days of the Missions," featuring Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson. This photoplay deals with the early drama in California, and carries a heart interest theme throughout. He is preparing to begin the production of a new picture next week, the title of which has not been announced. The leads will be played by Miss Davenport and Johnson.

"The Committee on Credentials"

Three-Reel Western Number, Based on Story by Peter B. Kyne, Proves a Sensational Success.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MANY moving picture performers have risked life and limb in falls over cliffs in order to provide sensations for the screen, but it is doubtful if anyone ever made a wilder plunge than the one accomplished by Joe Rickson at the close of this Bison release. He plays the part of a squatter who shoots up a town in a fit of drunken rage, brought on by unreasoning jealousy. He escapes, under the fire of many guns, in a small rig, and is thrown over the cliff in this vehicle. Few performers would care to imitate this feat.

Scene from "The Committee on Credentials" (Universal).

The story, based on a tale by Peter B. Kyne, is a strong one, both in general atmosphere and presentation. Harry Carey has the part of Ballarat Bob, a gambler. Rickson plays the squatter and Olive Fuller Golden the wife.

The first two reels are a trifle slow in action, but provide a good psychological preparation for the action when it comes. The events of the last reel are fast and furious. Clem, the squatter, insists on playing the roulette wheel in spite of the gambler's remonstrances. The latter, knowing the needs of his wife and child, takes Clem's savings to her.

Clem conceives the idea that the gambler is a rival in his wife's affections. He shoots first an old prospector and then Bob. This arouses the camp and there is a free-for-all gun fight, winding up with the tragedy as told.

"Myra" a Big Hit Everywhere.

Last week the Princess theater, Chicago, was the scene of a pre-showing of three episodes of "The Mysteries of Myra." More than nine hundred people, film magnates, exhibitors, newspaper and trade paper representatives attended. J. K. Burger, manager of International Film Service exchanges, who stated this great performance, states that this is the largest audience ever gathered to view a pre-showing. "The Exhibitors" states Mr. Burger "are tremendously pleased with the 'Myra' series. At the finish the entire audience gave us continued applause. All trade paper people say our exhibition is the largest ever held, and that it makes history for Chicago."

A similar pre-showing of "The Mysteries of Myra" was given at the New York theater roof on Tuesday, May 23, at 10:30 o'clock in the morning. Twenty-six hundred invitations were issued to this performance.

The "Myra" series from its initial release has been a continued triumph of photoplay production and merchandising. The story becomes more intense and vivid as episode follows episode, and successful exhibitors fortunate enough to secure a booking are daily writing the International to tell of the unprecedented business done with this great feature series. The huge success of the New York and Chicago performances augurs well for the remaining episodes of "Myra."

Park Theater, Boston, Gets "Brady-Mades."

Through an arrangement entered into early this week by Will A. Brady of World Film and Thomas D. Soriero, manager of the Park theater, Boston, the forthcoming "Brady-Made" pictures on the World program will be housed in that theater. The deal was consummated by Mr. Soriero during a short visit to New York. The Park theater, Boston, located on Washington street, near Boylston, is one of the most important houses in the New England territory devoted to film presentation and for the past two years a varied program, but beginning July 3 with Alice Brady in "La Vie De Boheme" the place will play World Film production exclusively.

Ivan Exchange Owners to Convene.

The great success enjoyed by the Ivan productions and the enthusiasm with which they are greeted throughout the country has caused the owners of franchises as distributors of this brand to desire more features along similar lines. With a view of increasing the output, the exchange owners from all over the country are coming to New York, where the executive and production departments of the Ivan Company are located.

Among those already in New York are: William Hershberg, president of the General Feature Film Company of Chicago; Mayer Silverman, of the Liberty Film Renting Company of Pittsburgh; Harry A. Samwick of the Merit Film Corporation of New York; E. W. Lynch of the E. W. Lynch Enterprises of Boston, and H. Schwalbe of The Electric Theater Supply Company of Philadelphia.

Among those who are en route to New York and who have signified their intention of being present are: C. D. Struble of The Monarch Feature Film Company of Kansas City, Mo.; A. T. Lambson of the Reelplay Feature Service of Seattle, Wash.; H. L. Charnas of The Standard Film Service of Duluth; J. F. Cubberly of The Zenith Feature Film Company of Duluth; L. J. Santikos of the Central Feature Film Company of Waco, Tex., and A. M. Graham of The Queen City Feature Service of Birmingham, Ala.

Variety Prepares Series.

What was merely regarded as an interesting experiment by President Louis B. Rosenbush of the Variety Films Corporation turned out to be a conclusive demonstration of the desire and ability of motion picture patrons to furnish acceptable scenarios for a series of productions to form a sequel to the five-part feature, "Should a Baby Die?" which is being distributed by this company. A cash prize was offered by exhibitors in conjunction with Variety, for the best suggestion, and adequately advertised prior to the showing of the picture, did not fail to draw interested patrons to a number of houses.

The overwhelming evidence of the popularity of such a contest, which at the same time might mark a new departure in picture production, prompted President Rosenbush to secure an additional force for the handling of scenarios by movie fans, who found the requisite inspiration in "Should a Baby Die?" for the unfolding of their hitherto hidden talents.

George Seligman was put in charge of the entire contest department of Variety Films Corporation, and has already begun active work on the production of a "series of picturizations for and by film fans."

Good Bluebird Features Coming.

General Manager M. H. Hoffman has arranged a series of summer-month releases which will keep public interest in Bluebird photoplays at high tide. The first of these releases is to be fulfilled—and thus far the Bluebird people have always furnished features that lived up to their announcements. Exhibitors may, therefore, expect during the summer a series of releases that will maintain an even standard, and keep their clientele in line for the further good things the regular season will afford.

Among the attractions for July will be four plays that Mr. Hoffman believes will create an unusually good impression, introducing three of Bluebird's pretty girl stars and showing Warren Kerrigan, the matinee idol, in what is considered to be the best work he has done for the screen. Violet Mersereau will be seen as the star of "Broken Fetters"; Ella Hall makes her second appearance as a Bluebird star in "Ambrosia," and Louise Lovell is seen in her regular order as the star of "The Grasp of Greed." Kerrigan's vehicle, this time, is "The Silent Battle," and there will be Lois Wilson in his support to add a charm of feminine loveliness to the situations.

Standard News Film Has Unique Subject.

Miss Nan Hathaway, the famous English emotional actress now in this country, assumes the leading role in the spectacular photoplay production, "The Fate of Liberty," which the Standard Newsfilm will release on American flag day, June 14. The publishers of this new production describe it as a "drama of 'Americanism.'" They state that it will be unique in that actual and not fictitious events in the great world war will be shown as they apply to this country; a new device has been used to combine two "actualities." In the scenes showing the destruction of New York monster aircraft now in use by the warring nations will be shown in the skyline and also the uses of the different kinds of aircraft in attempting the annihilation of the American metropolis. Private showings of this somewhat "different" photoplay will be held in New York this week.

Much Interest in "Who's Guilty?" Contests.

Several live exhibitors out west have found in the Pathe series "Who's Guilty?" produced by Arrow Film Corporation, opportunities for unique and profitable public relations. They do not often exist. J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has recently received three letters, one from an exhibitor in Milwaukee, another from St. Louis and still another from Seattle, which show that without collusion or any outside suggestion each exhibitor had hit upon the same idea of intensifying public interest in the series.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL, No. 10 (Essanay), May 24.—Preparedness is one of the subjects cartooned by Wallace A. Carlson in this number of his comic pictorial. The artist's clever drawing is shown in other timely topics. Half of the reel contains a western scene.

THE BATTLER (Vitagraph), May 26.—Hughie Mack has the title role in this one-reel comedy by C. Graham Baker and Lawrence Semon, and knocks out a bunch of fighters, with the aid of a newly-invented gas bomb. The picture is a good comic offering. Ed. Dunn, Billy Barker, Claire McCormick, Danny Hayes and Doc Donohue are members of the cast.

THE CAPTURE OF RED STANLEY (No. 81 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), May 27.—Helen, the operator at Lone Point, performs a new stunt in this installment of her adventures. As usual she risks life and limb as though high-priced leading ladies of skill and daring could be replaced without loss of time and at little expense. The story grades up to the average "Hazard."

A FIVE THOUSAND DOLLAR ELOPEMENT (Selig), May 27.—Two crooks attempt to steal five thousand dollars from the father of Tom's sweetheart, and find that they have carried off the young lady as well. Tom is mixed up in the affair, but manages to win the girl. An interesting one-reel western drama. Tom Mix, Victoria Forde, Joe Ryan, Sid Jordan and Chet Ryan are the familiar names on the program.

FRILBY FRILLED (Lubin), May 29.—Edwin McKim directs this broad farce or burlesque, as its name implies, on Frilby. Davy Don is Svangaric, the "bry," who gathers his singular power from surrounding sizzling electric cocktails and inhaling "juice" from dynamos. The show goes to smash when the engineer, bribed by Frilby's lover, shuts off the power. The picture contains absurdities that will move to mirth.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, No. 43, 1916 (Selig), May 29.—National Guard Tournament at Sheephead Bay, L. I.; classic dancing, Boston; running race, New York; leopard fight in a arena in wholehearted canoe races, Auburndale, Mass.; largest dams in the world, Elephant Butte, N. M.; Vincent Astor's first flight in aeroplane, Marblehead, Mass.; dog show, Belmont Park, L. I.; aeroplane race, Sheephead Bay, L. I.

THE RICH IDLER (Vitagraph), May 29.—Joseph F. Poland has written a bright one-reel comedy-drama and filled it with the wholesome incident and character that so many plain folk find to their taste. It is a homely little romance, but the poor girl marries the rich young man, and all ends happily. Mary Anderson and Webster Campbell are youthful and sincere as the lovers. Director, Dave Smith.

A BUNCH OF FLIVVERS (Kalem), May 30.—A review of this "Ham" comedy was printed in the issue of June 10, page 1901. The reel is well stocked with fun.

THE FABLE OF THE WILLING COLLEGIAN WHO WANTED TO GET A FOOTHOLD (Essanay), May 31.—The subject of this one-reel fable is one that George Ade has treated with great familiarity. George loves to take a good-natured fling at the young man starting out in life with a profound belief in the efficacy of his nice new diploma, and the lanky humorist has not lost any of the fun of the matter by sticking close to the truth.

A SMOKEY ADVENTURE (Kalem), May 31.—The efforts of a cigar salesman to get his goods indorsed by a millionaire is the original theme of this one-reel comedy. The gentleman's wife has to come to his aid, and Ethel Tarr is her usual whole-hearted favorite. The picture has been adroitly directed by Harry Millarde. Victor Rottman, Gus Leonard and Myrta Sterling complete the quartet of leading actors.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, No. 44, 1916 (Selig), June 1.—President Wilson attends wedding of Dr. Cary T. Grayson and Miss Alice Gordon, New York, Col. House and Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo among the guests; Bay Shore, L. I., one hundred ton house loaded on scow; dress parade at West Point; celebration in honor of Drake, Kentfield, Cal.; Gov. McCall visits training ship, Boston; with the U. S. Troops in Mexico; buying horses and mules for the Allies, San Francisco.

SIS, THE DETECTIVE (Kalem), June 2.—The scenes in this one-reel "Sis" shift from the Hopkins farm to the city, and the lady of the pipe-tails has many amusing adventures as a detective. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of June 3, page 1709.

THE SPIKED SWITCH (No. 82 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), June 3.—Edward W. Matlack, the old reliable writer of "Helen," is the author of this one-reel drama. He has supplied the necessary sensation and led up to it in an interesting manner. Helen Gibson risks her neck in the same reassuring fashion as in the preceding reels. G. A. Williams, Pearl Anibus and Pearl S. Pembroke are members of the cast.

PICKLES AND DIAMONDS (Lubin), June 3.—This single reel comedy is based on the desire of Adolph Pfefferkornitzel, one-time pickle magnate, to recoup his declining fortunes by marrying his daughter into wealth. The young man selected as the goat is also ambitious to make an alliance, as he, himself, is without funds and assumes the pickler's daughter has them. The picture is photographed at Atlantic City and carries the atmosphere of the big shore resort. It contains a few laughs.

HICKS IN NIGHTMARELAND (Edison), May 31.—Two subjects are given in this number of The Animated Grouch Chaser, "Hicks in Nightmareland" and "Cook vs. Chef." The "Hicks" cartoon is particularly amusing. "A Trip Through Uganda, British South Africa," is on the same reel.

THE SCHEMERS (Vim) June 1.—Plump and Runt are rivals for the hand of a fickle young woman and Plump is the loser. Not satisfied with winning the lady, Runt turns villain and tries to ruin the wealthy but always virtuous Plump. The way in which the fat person is rewarded by fate is highly edifying. It is also a pleasure to state that the reel has the traditional virtue of being equipped with frequent and well-developed laughs.

THE LANCE LUBBERS (Vim), June 2.—The familiar but none the less effective device, the revolving statement, is the big comic bit of this one-reel farce. Pokes and Jabbs are the leading funmakers, and the finish is rapid of movement and prodigal of laughs.

THE LONELIES (Vitagraph), June 2.—Lillian Walker and Evert Overton form the happy pair in this bright one-reel comedy. Wm. Shea and a serious-minded little monkey are two more worthy members of the cast. The story is a reflection of certain phases of city life and is both entertaining and amusing.

CROOKED TRAILS (Selig), June 3.—A Tom Mix production in which the author plays the "lead" and the entire cast does riding "stunts" of a hair-raising character. Victoria Forde, Pat Christman, Sid Jordan and Joe Ryan all show how well they can stick to the saddle of a flying broncho.

THE SCHEMERS (Essanay), May 27.—Joseph A. Reach is the author of this three-reel comedy and has written a snappy and amusing photoplay. Two college youths, whose poor school records turn their friends against them, are forced to shift for themselves. They become stock brokers and win a fortune on the market with every flip. They also win a wife apiece. Their display of high finance is more laughable than impressive and the complications are cleverly handled. John Junior, Harry Dunkinson, Elizabeth Burbridge, Frances Raymond and Josephine Sylvester form a speedy cast.

THE PRIMAL INSTINCT (Vitagraph), May 27.—Mrs. Owen Bronson has hit upon a novel plot for this three-reel screen drama. The theme is well worth the telling and belongs to the class of drama that is built upon character and not upon theatrical situations. Leah Baird portrays the heroine skillfully, and Don, Cameron, Jack Ellis, Lella Blow, Van Dyke Brooks are satisfactory in the other important roles. Director, Van Dyke Brooks.

UNMASKING A RASCAL (No. 10 of "The Social Pirates") (Kalem), May 29.—An attempt to defraud a young girl out of her fortune is neatly stopped by Mona and Mary in this installment of the George Bronson Howard serial. A review of the picture was printed on Page 1709 of the June 3 issue.

THE HARE AND THE TORTOISE (Selig), May 29.—In writing this three-reel photoplay, Wm. Anthony McGuire has maintained the directness and simplicity of plot to be found in an Aesop fable. The hare and the tortoise of the picture are two brothers, and their progress in life is a repetition of the famous race in which steady plodding won. The love interest dominates the theme, one brother being the possessor of all the virtues, and the other endowed with every vice. The scenes are varied and interesting, and Harry Mestayer, Edward J. Piel, Harry Lonsdale, Fritz Brunette, Lillian Hayward, Edith Johnson and Wm. Scott keep the acting at a high level. Wm. Robert Daly directed the picture.

THE SONG IN THE DARK (Essanay), May 30.—This two-reel release, with Richard C. Travers, Gladys Holmes, Bryant Washburn and John Cosmar in the cast, has a blind heroine and a generous share of sentiment. The earnest acting of the principals gives the picture an air of reality.

THE FINAL PAYMENT (Lubin), May 30.—This two-part subject can hardly be described as original in conception or convincing in its working out. Too many coincidences rob it of plausibility. In the first part L. C. Shumway, Helen Edry, Velma Whitman and Melvin Mayo.

THE WOMAN IN BLACK (Biograph), May 31.—A five-part adaptation of a play presented on the stage by Klaw and Erlanger. The picture makes first rate melodrama, capably acted by Lionel Barrymore, Millicent Evans, Alan Hale and others. A review appeared in the issue of May 27.

THE CODE OF THE HILLS (Lubin), June 1.—A three-part subject containing good situations. A review will be found in this week's issue.

HELEN OF THE CHORUS (Edison), May 30.—Although the heroine of this three-reel photoplay becomes one of those familiar screen characters, a member of the chorus, the incidents surrounding this situation are novel. They are also of decided dramatic value. A fireman is the hero of the story and performs a gallant rescue for the big scene. William Adlam Lathrop wrote the scenario and George Ridgwell was the director. Sally Crute has the title role and Herbert Prior plays the fireman.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE THREE GODFATHERS, June 19.—An excellent six-part feature with Stella Razeto and Harry Carey in the leading roles. A full review of this production which is an adaptation of the magazine story by Peter B. Kyne, will be found on another page of this issue. The adaptation was made by Harold Gates, and directed by E. J. LeSaint, with a splendid supporting cast. The story treats of the regeneration of three crooks through the finding and enforced adoption of a newborn babe on the desert.

THE BATTLE OF HEARTS, May 21.—A fishing village melodrama that is pleasing and exciting. It is freshly interesting, yet has the old-time sure fire quality that makes it easily commendable as an offering for the average house. A longer review will be found on another page of this issue.

THE SPIDER AND THE FLY, May 28.—A five-reel melodrama with Robert Mantell and Genevieve Hammer. Well acted for the most part and beautifully put on, this picture, though an old-style kind of story, should prove a safe guess for the average theater. A longer review will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE COME-BACK (Quality-Metro), April 24.—While the plot in this five-part picture is rather slight, most of the scenes, very well staged and acted, with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the leading roles, are interesting. Much of the action is laid in a lumber camp in the winter, where a young man who has led a dissipated life in New York develops a many character. For a photoplay using such familiar material, "The Come-Back" is surprisingly good. Subtitles are written in a pleasing vein.

THE SNOWBIRD (Rolle-Metro), May 8.—Released in six reels instead of the customary five, "The Snowbird," written by Mary Rider and directed by Edwin Carewe, affords an excellent opportunity for the wholly delightful Mabel Taliaferro, also for Mr. Carwe, who plays the chief character in her support. Miss Taliaferro depicts a pampered society girl, who, to save her father from financial ruin, journeys to the Canadian wilderness in search of papers needed to make good his title to valuable property. In the wilds she meets a dominating man and the result is according to precedent. There are scenes of dramatic strength and others of picturesque quality.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 74 (Gaumont), May 31.—A launching at Charleston, opening of a new causeway, drills, celebrations, classic dances and other comebacks pictured in this entertaining number.

THE COMET'S COMEBACK (Boutury), May 31.—This is one of the most original ideas that has been put in comedy for many a day. Many of the scenes have been taken by a rapid camera, representing what takes place after the passing of a certain comet when the world slows up. No finer analysis of motion from the movements of people striking the street in the rough-and-tumble of a fight could be imagined than is seen in this picture, which is exuberantly funny.

NAILING ON THE LID (Vogue), June 4.—A moderately amusing farce comedy in which a man's love of money leads him to submit to being placed in a coffin to verify a report that he has been murdered by an employee of a crooked politician, who is anxious to get this particular employee out of the way to prevent his telling tales out of school.

ADVERTISEMENTS (Faust), June 5.—A nonsense number, with a knockabout finish. Two rival restaurants employ sign carriers and a girl to hank pancees in the window. Oscar and the girl fall in love and disrupt the rivalry, or rather bring it to a head. This has numerous amusing moments and is pleasingly presented.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 39 (Montgomery, Ala.), June 7.—This number gives some excellent views of Montgomery, Ala., and surroundings, including the home of Jefferson Davis, scenes on the Alabama and Tallapoosa rivers, and various other points of historic and scenic interest. On the same reel with "Escapades of Estelle."

ESCAPADES OF ESTELLE (Gaumont), June 7.—A cartoon number from the pen of Harry Palmer giving a continuation of the colored woman Estelle's remarkable adventures. This time she places rather too much faith in the sayings of a phrenologist who tells her that the first man she meets after leaving his office is to be her husband. Very amusing.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE TRAIL OF THE THIEF (American), June 1.—A three-reel number, by J. Edward Hungerford, featuring Winifred Greenwood, Edward Coken and George Field. The girl and hero are in service as detectives, their quarry is a gentleman thief. The opening action is slightly mechanical, picturing the thief in a necktie, but the picture. Later the action comes up well. The abduction of the girl and her timely rescue while being assailed by the villain are handled in an intensely melodramatic way. The number is not particularly new, but works up good suspense and holds interest well.

A MAN'S FRIEND (Mustang), June 2.—A two-reel number, by Hal Coughlin, featuring Nita Davis, Lawrence Bayton, Robert Hannum and Art Accord. The dog and a baby do much to monopolize the attention; the dog is very clever and performs some really notable stunts. The story, which is Western in setting, gets a strong national development. The opening scenes, showing the unhappy wife and her worthless husband, are close to life. The events of the second reel are exciting and will have wide appeal, particularly to children.

CLOUDS IN SUNSHINE VALLEY (Centaur), June 3.—A fine two-reel story of the "dry" country, where water for irrigation purposes is the basis of warfare. Wm. Clifford and Margaret Gibson play the leading roles. Carr, owner of the irrigation ditch, makes an unjust raise in rates in order to force the settlers to sell. There is a battle fought between the two sides, in which the girls' father and others are killed. The atmosphere is excellent and the photoplays bright and pleasing. The situations contain a good deal of natural drama and are well handled.

WHISPERING SMITH (Mutual Masterpicture De Luxe—Signal), June 5.—A five-part production featuring Helen Holmes and J. P. McGowan. The scenario from which the film was made is an adaptation of a novel by Frank H. Spearman, and the material which it affords for a stirring picture is abundant. The situation, under which the story centers in an attempt to stop the looting of wrecked freight trains. The foreman of the wrecking gang is discovered to be the ring-leader among the looters, and the detective sent out on the job being a former convict wife, and a former convict of town, a circumstance which eventually ends in the murder of the detective's brother, and the return of the detective to avenge his blood. The final conquering of the gang is accomplished with the installation of a new superintendent, and the persuasion of the foreman to join his wife again and ride straight.

JOHN BREWSTER'S WIFE (Thanhouser), June 6.—A two-part production featuring Ernest Howard and Ethyle Cooke, with pretty Edna May Oakland, a tiny tot of possibly five years, attracting as much attention as the older players. The story on which this picture is based is not an exceptionally well balanced one, and in spite of careful work on the part of the director and players does not ring quite true. A second wife whose early death has left her husband with unhappy results.

THE FLAMES OF VENGEANCE (Gaumont), June 8.—A three-part melodrama of the old school featuring Gertrude Robinson with Iva Shepard, supported by a capable supporting cast. Judging the production from a purely melodramatic standpoint it is well produced and entertaining. It treats of how a woman on the eve of her marriage is discovered with a former lover, is cast out by her fiancé and marries the other man. Later her daughter becomes an employee of the man her mother had intended marrying, falls in love with him and saves him from death at the hands of the workers in his mill. He then forgoes his intention of treating her as her mother has treated him, discovering that he is really in love with the girl.

SOUL MATES (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe), June 8.—A five-part production from the American studios featuring William Russell, Charlotte Burton and other well-known American players. The story treats of an unhappy domestic situation brought about through the actions of an unfaithful wife. In some respects the picture is artistic, but too much has been shown of scenes that are extremely suggestive.

THE WINDOW OF DREAMS (Thanhouser), June 15.—This three-part production is one of rare artistic treatment. The theme is simple, and concerns in the first place a tragedy cast through a young woman's jealous disposition, who her lover is killed and she becomes a cripple for life, and in the second place her opportunity to avert a domestic rupture between a newly married couple whose life she is able to observe from her window. A full review of this excellent production will be found on another page of this issue.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

BURTON HOLMES TRAVELOGUES (Paramount), June.—"Visiting the Sultan of Zulu in Jolo" is the title of this issue of the travel pictures being made by Burton Holmes. The explorer and his party enter Jolo, said to be the smallest of fortified cities, are entertained by the Sultan and have an opportunity to study the life of the Moros at close range. An interesting number in a valuable travel series.

FARMER ALFALFA'S TENTLESS CIRCUS (Paramount), June.—Paul Terry is responsible for this spirited comedy drawing bearing the stamp of the Bray Studios. It is certain to amuse; but the more important subject on the reel is reserved for the second part, entitled "Mimi, a Study in the Mentality of a Chimpanzee." Here we have close views of the animal disposition of the chimpanzee, who has become a cripple for life, and in the second place her opportunity to avert a domestic rupture between a newly married couple whose life she is able to observe from her window. A full review of this excellent production will be found on another page of this issue.

PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), June.—Some extraordinarily fine pictures of a motorboat being tossed about in the rapids of Snake River, Idaho, are included in a well varied number of Paramount Pictographs. The Better Babies department, always carefully edited, treats of the benefits of outdoor exercise for children, whereas an unusual subject with an effective comic touch, shows the meaning of various signs used by tramps. William Wadsworth impersonating the tramp.

THE BUGLE CALL (Kay-Bee), June 4.—A story of military life, with Willie Collier, Jr., in the leading role. Sure to be popular with women and children all over the land.

GOING STRAIGHT (Fine Arts), June 4.—An old story of a reformed crook's temptation, but well played and fairly interesting.

REGGIE MIXES IN (Fine Arts), June 11.—A comedy melodrama with Douglas Fairbanks in a role well suited to his general interpretation of character and athletic ability. Full of adventure and movement.

THE SORROWS OF LOVE (Ince), June 11.—A tragedy of love resulting from the weak character of a nun who twice broke her vows. Its principal merit lies in picturesque backgrounds and artistic treatment.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

TWIXT LOVE AND THE ICEMAN (Nestor), June 9.—A farce-comedy, by W. H. Barker, featuring Billie Rhodes, Stella Adams, Ned Burne and Harry Rottenberry. The jealous lover substitutes spoiled meat for the widow, in order to queer the butcher. But the trick is discovered and trouble follows. A pleasing little number, with some very fair character work in it.

THEIR AWFUL PREDICAMENT (Nestor), June 12.—A comedy number, by W. H. Barker, featuring Billie Rhodes, Stella Adams, Ned Burne and Lee Moran. A stolen necklace brings confusion to the house party, the thief being one of the guests. The girl is arrested, but later cleared. Rather conventional in plot, but has amusing moments.

WHEN THE WOLF HOWLS (Rex), June 14.—Cleo Madison and Wm. V. Mang appear in this story of an artist who wins success with starvation starving him and his wife in the face. The wife is about to commit suicide when he makes good. The tone of this is a little depressing, but it is strongly handled and achieves a happy ending.

AN ANGEL UNAWARES (Imp), June 13.—A pretty little romance, by Wm. Addison, featuring Edith Roberts and Harry Benham. There is a touch of novelty in the situation in which the hero finds the girl trying to get a dinner for her father's visitor without killing her pet rooster. The plot is not strong, but it proves entertaining and enjoyable.

ALMOST A WIDOW (Nestor), June 16.—A comedy number which revives an old favorite situation. The young husband misses his steamer and sits in a card game. The steamer is reported sunk and he returns with a big story of his personal bravery, later it develops that the steamer did not sink at all. This is amusing in spite of its familiarity and is presented by a pleasing cast, including Neal Burns, Betty Compton and others.

THE GOLDEN BOOT (Victor), June 16.—The angry housewife throws an old boot at an unwelcome tramp. It contains a fortune in money, hidden there by her miserly husband. The tramp's experience would have been more amusing if not handled with such a strong touch of burlesque. A fair subject.

LOVE QUARANTINED (Joker), June 17.—Gale Henry, Wm. Francy, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti appear in this comic number, by Allen Curtis. Dr. Killen, in love with the girl, has her quarantined for smallpox. He also has to get the girl's father's consent, and she consents to the marriage. This is a characteristic number, with some funny spots in it.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

JIM SLOCUM, No. 46593 (Imp), June 2.—A two-reel number, featuring King Baggot and Edna Hunter. This tells a story that is entertaining and gets hold of the sympathies. There is good suspense in the opening scenes, where the taxi driver loses his job and then makes a losing fight to save the life of his child. He plans to have revenge on the doctor who refused his child's case in favor of another. But his career as a burglar never matures, as he saves the doctor's wife from danger instead of robbing the house. The closing scenes are happy ones. Well-constructed and entertaining.

THE ROSE COLORED SCAIF (Gold Seal), June 6.—A two-reel number, by Eleanor M. Ingram, featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Agnes Vernon, who are getting some splendid results in polite comedy. The pictures the love affair of a wealthy young girl and the financially embarrassed young man who acts as her chauffeur. The situations are very entertaining and the number is handled in a very attractive way. The offering is a good example of the better type of love story.

OBJECT MATRIMONY (Victor), June 7.—A two-reel number, by Paul West, featuring Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby. The engaged young man, out of a job, employs himself as a professional husband-to-be at a matrimonial agency. He has some very funny experiences. There is considerable vulgarity in some of the situations, but it is of the comparatively harmless sort and carries enough genuine humor to make it excusable. His girl learns what his occupation is and soon puts an end to it. A laughable burlesque offering.

ALIAS JANE JONES (Rex), June 8.—A two-reel cork story, by Wm. V. Mang, who appears with Edna Mason, Roy Hanford and others. This follows the operations of two male and one female crooks. The latter hides in a trunk and is discovered by George Hanford. She turns out to be a detective and hands him over to justice. This has no great dramatic moments, but the element of surprise at the close is pleasing. It makes a fairly strong offering.

PHONEY TEETH AND FALSE FRIENDS (L-KO), June 11.—A knockabout number, featuring Reggie Morris as a young dentist. His assistant creates trouble by mistreating the girl's father in the dental chair. Some characteristic chase and slapstick scenes follow, the assistant finally falling into the lake from a high bridge. This has humorous moments and is a characteristic number.

WHAT LOVE CAN DO (Red Feather), June 12.—A five-reel offering by Gertrude H. Andrews, featuring Adele Farrington as a newspaper woman of years and experience. She presents a well-drawn character in the opening scenes. Later the plot takes on a melodramatic tinge, and the scenes in which the scorned woman fills up on liquor and goes to Paigle's home for an accounting are not quite so convincing. The break in this particular character tends to weaken the production as a whole. The atmosphere of the newspaper office is good and the strike scenes, while lacking any particular continuity, are well staged. A near-tragedy results at the close, but the happy ending is achieved. A fair offering.

THE MELODY OF LOVE (Gold Seal), June 13.—A three-reel number, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan as a young Irishman who pursues the open road. He stops at a mountain cabin, where he falls in love with the daughter of an old man known as Hardpan. He discovers gold in a creek and the cabin and falls, together with rivalry over the girl, leads to trouble. The construction is not very strong at times, which causes the action to move slowly. The scenic effects are perhaps the strongest feature of the production, these being very attractive. The offering is one of about average strength.

HER SOUL'S SONG (Laemmle), June 15.—A two-reel number, by Calder Johnson, featuring Dorothy Davidson and Emory Johnson. The story is that of a young opera singer who marries a young man and loses her voice when the baby is born. She dislikes the child, but later returns to it when it is ill; she regains both her voice and her happiness. The story is a good one and is given a fine presentation. The ornamented title and subtitles are decidedly artistic and the two principals are pleasing. The baby also shares the honors, being uncommonly attractive.

THE DEVIL'S IMAGE (Imp), June 16.—A two-reel number, featuring Hobart Henley, Irene Hunt and Curtis Benton. In the story the young husband dreams that he has become a dope fiend. Hobart Henley does some very creditable work in this repelling part. Such a picture, though a little unpleasant to the average observer, should have a powerful effect on the mind of anyone tampering with drugs. Such efforts are not usually particularly commendable, but this one carries a good plot and is sincerely and forcibly handled. It should prove a valuable sermon of the screen in these days when drug addiction is so common.

A RAILROAD BANDIT (Bison), June 17.—A splendid two-reel Western number, by Wright Roberts, featuring Lee Hill, Marie Walcamp, L. C. Shumway and others. A bandit organization, a box of gold bullion and some decidedly attractive Western mountain scenic effects are among the ingredients. The action is good and some stirring studies of one kind and another are performed. The photography is unusually good.

HIS BROTHER'S WIFE (Premo), June 5.—Very well acted by Ethel Clayton, Paul McAllister and Carlyle Blackwell, this five-part drama makes an interesting offering, carefully directed and properly staged. A review appears on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

CHIP'S CARMEN (Juvenile), June.—A two-reel burlesque on Charlie Chaplin's burlesque of "Carmen," brightly acted by a company of children, headed by Joseph Chip Monahan. The picture is likely to appeal to the youthful members of an audience. A review may be found on another page.

"LOTUS WOMAN" IN REGULAR SERVICE.

In order to definitely remove doubts apparent in the minds of some exhibitors Kalem wishes to make emphatic announcement that "The Lotus Woman," the coming five-reel feature, will be released in the regular program service of the General Film Company.

Exhibitors may thus book "The Lotus Woman," which features Alice Hollister, the original vampire of the photoplay, without extra charge. Advance showings of this picture are now being given to exhibitors at all General Film Company offices.

MYSTERY ABOUNDS IN LATEST BLUE RIBBON.

"The Man Behind the Curtain," Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon Feature for June 19, is an excellent photoplay of the type that holds the breathless attention and admiration of the audience from start to finish. It is in five parts and comes from the pen of Minnie Krakauer.

Lillian Walker, who is featured in this picture, portrays the role of Edna Hall, a beautiful young girl, who, after marrying Harry Leland (Ewart Overton) in the country, is horrified at being brought to live in a house which holds terrible connections tions for her. In her mind's eye she sees once more the body of Mr. Stanhope as she has found it in this house months before. Then she recalls how the curtains had parted while she stood as if transfixed and a man (William Dunn) had stepped forth and told her that things looked very bad for her and she had better escape. Frightened at the apparent hopelessness of convincing a jury of her innocence, she had taken his advice and gone into hiding. Next day, in the papers, she read that a female accomplice of a dangerous band was suspected of the murder, but she was afraid to refute the statement. Then she had married Leland, Mrs. Stanhope's son by a former marriage, and he had brought her back to be tortured by the accusation which hung over her. She finally meets the man who had stepped from the curtains on that day, and, with clever manipulation, she manages to prove his guilt. She now returns to her husband, able once more to look him in the eye with sincerity.

Miss Walker's lovable personality is plainly evident throughout the picture. Templer Saxe and John Costello round out a capable cast. The picture was directed by Cortland J. Van Deusen.

AT THE PENAL COLONY OF PALAWAN.

Before his return to Europe for an extended journey through the countries of the Old World, Burton Holmes takes his serene admirers to one more beauty spot among the distant islands of the Philippines.

Unusual in scenic and photographic features and unique in human interest is this Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Picture, "At the Penal Colony of Palawan and Up the Underground River," the final release in the Philippine cruise. For two miles up the dark, winding river which penetrates into the heart of the Island of Palawan, film audiences will travel—part of the time under its verdant mountains. Through the glass bottom of Mr. Holmes' boat are seen the marvelous submarine forests of coral and sea plants and their inhabitants. This scenery, however, is only incidental to the main journey to the Penal Colony.

In the Bilibid prison of Manila Mr. Holmes showed the regeneration and rebuilding of Filipino manhood in its highest development. Inmates of Bilibid who have passed beyond its walls through their own merit are sent to Palawan, where through the humanity of Uncle Sam they are permitted to live lives of comparative freedom, each having his own home, in which he is surrounded by his family, and his own farm.

Palawan is the last step of the convict in the Philippines toward freedom. Here Uncle Sam's officials live unharmed without locks or bolts on their houses and prisoners are not even confined in a stockade. This release is unique in its interesting views and descriptions of two remarkable places.

ABRAMSON WRITING SCENARIO FOR NEXT IVAN PLAY.

Having finished "Her Husband's Wife," the newest Ivan feature, Director General Ivan Abramson is working on the scenario for his next production, which will be put into work within the next two weeks. The theme for the new Ivan production will treat of an evil in modern society life and will present the facts as only Mr. Abramson can illustrate them. As yet no title has been decided on for this play, but the working name of the story is "The Faded Flower."

"THE TWO ORPHANS" (Selig).

Probably the most pretentious cast of characters ever appearing in a picture play released in regular service is that presented in "The Two Orphans," a Selig Diamond Special. This will be released through the regular service of General Film Co. on Monday, June 12th. This play marks a new era in film production, for it presents a strictly all-star cast, including Kathlyn Williams, Winnifred Greenwood, T. J. Carigan, Myrtle Stedman, Charles Clary, Adrienne Kroell, Lillian Leighton and others. The mere announcement of these stars should be enough to crowd any motion picture theater.

Scene from "The Two Orphans" (Selig).

The Selig revival of "The Two Orphans" is taken from the world-famous play of Kate Claxton. The production abounds in wonderful scenic effects gorgeous costumes and talented acting by a noteworthy company of stars. The Selig Company is certainly to be commended for its consistent policy to raise the standard of regular motion picture programs and to introduce real-for-sure feature films in regular film service. The Kate Claxton version of "The Two Orphans" is the best version and one that should appeal to those who remember the wonderful success attained by this actress in the play.

"FRIDAY, THE 13TH" (Paragon).

"Friday, the 13th," the novel which stirred Wall Street, and State Street in Boston, to its very depths, and by far the most talked-of novel dealing with the intricacies of the Stock Exchange, from the prolific pen of that master financier, Thomas W. Lawson, will be Robert Warwick's next photoplay vehicle, in which this celebrated actor will play the role of Robert Brownley, whom on account of his phenomenal success on the Stock Exchange, became known as "the Napoleon of Wall Street." It is a role eminently befitting such a sterling actor as Mr. Warwick, who was, by the way, Mr. Lawson's personal choice for the part.

Scene from "Friday, the 13th" (World).

When William A. Brady announced his intention of producing for the World Film program the biggest stories ever written, and that these would be produced under his personal supervision, in their proper atmosphere and with all their details most accurately and minutely carried out, "Tom" Lawson, who has for many years been one of Mr. Brady's staunchest friends, suggested the filming of his story of the Stock Exchange. Details were discussed and it was decided to film this story which thrilled financiers of this country as they had never been thrilled before. Robert Warwick and his director, Emile Chautard, made a trip to Boston, where they obtained the details of importance with Mr. Lawson, such as the characters, the scenes and the sets which would be required to give the story its proper staging. Through Mr. Lawson's influence the World Film was able to secure from the brokerage firm of Flegg & Stox, the privilege of taking the Stock Exchange scenes in their office. The Astor was also used one Sunday morning for the pit scenes, which attracted thousands of pedestrians to the scene.

As a whole, this is by far one of the most satisfying productions in which Mr. Warwick has ever been seen. Director Chautard spared neither pains, time nor money in producing the picture according to Mr. Lawson's own ideas, and when Mr. Brady saw the finished picture, he said that he could place his stamp on it with the utmost satisfaction that it would please all beyond description, and Mr. Brady is known for his ability to pick the material that will take the country by storm. "Friday, the 13th" will be the regular release on "the World Film program for July 17.

GOOD REPORTS ON GLORIA'S ROMANCE.

No matter how inclement the weather, Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance" is proving such a box office magnet the country over that capacity business is being done by nearly every house playing the picture. Below are just a few reports from different Kleine exchange managers selected at random from a long list of similar reports:

B. T. Hardcastle, manager of the Kleine office in Atlanta, says: "The Piedmont opened Monday in a drizzling rain which continued throughout the day and night, but played to full houses all day long. It was the only house in the city doing any business, most of the others not having at any time more than a handful of people. The following day it cleared up in the afternoon, but a hard rain throughout the morning and noon hours and an overcast sky frightened the people against coming out. However, at night the Piedmont was jammed, and every one went away delighted with the production they had witnessed."

Foster Moore, of the Kleine branch office in New York, writes under date of May 25: "F. G. Hall, proprietor of the Hall Circuit in New Jersey, states that the Billie Burke in 'Gloria's Romance' business at his Hoboken U. S. Photoplay theater was an absolute turnaway for the three days, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, though Tuesday night there was a heavy rain. At his Palace theater in East Orange, where he charges 25 cents admission, his opening Monday night was to capacity, and on Tuesday night, in a rainstorm, the house record was broken."

Charles M. Thail, of the Minneapolis Kleine exchange, reports: "The New Princess theater in St. Paul opened the third chapter of "Gloria's Romance" last Monday to over 8,000 paid admissions and the New Palace theater in Minneapolis is showing to hold-out business right along."

THE TRIANGLE KIDDIES.

The other day a brand new moving picture on which the producers had spent much time and money was shown for the first time. The reviewers spoke in glowing terms of the picture and then came a sort of criticism to their criticism, took occasion to speak of the work of the Triangle Kiddies. There are five of these interesting youngsters in all. In some pictures only one or two will appear, but in many of the pictures all five are used and what's more, picture goers have come to look forward to the laughing, tumbling, frolicking children in the pictures and when they don't all appear, the admirer of this one or that one is certain to voice his or her disappointment.

The children have appeared in such well known pictures as "Let Katy Do It"—the five grew to seven in that picture, by the way—"The Children of the House," "Going Straight" and scores of others. Not that the children care or that it is likely they will ever be called anything but just "Triangle Kiddies." It might be mentioned that their names are George Stone, Violet Radcliffe, Carmen de Rue, Francis Carpenter and Ninon Povirol. Now watch for them and see if you don't fall in love with every last one of 'em. If it matters in the least, it might be added that the eldest is eight.

ROLIN FORCES MAKING BIG BURLESQUE.

The Rolin Film Co., makers of Pathe's Lonesome Luke comedies, put special effort and a large sum of money on a burlesque of "Julius Caesar," which it is making. To show the magnitude of this one-reel production the company has utilized among its hundreds of extras the several hundred pretty dancing girls who took part in the Actors' Fund presentation of the great Shakespearean tragedy which was enacted on May 19 in Hollywood. The whole studio is being utilized in one gigantic set for this production.

"HEEZA LIAR OUTWITS MEXICAN BANDITS" (Paramount-Bray).

Having failed to capture the elusive Villa in his first sortie into the heart of Mexico, Heeza Liar returns to the border to confer with Scott and Funston. Hearing that Pershing has been surrounded and is in danger of annihilation, the entire force of American troops goes to his rescue, leaving the Colonel to defend two miles of border single-handed, in "Colonel Heeza Liar and the Bandits," a coming release of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons.

Plotting of the Mexicans to make a raid the following night is disclosed to Heeza Liar and he quickly collects all of the phonographs for miles around, places them at intervals along the border, thoroughly concealed, and puts into each one a record prepared long before for just such an emergency. At the psychological moment the Colonel turns on the switch and a vast battery of machines begins to shoot off records of artillery and infantry in action, frightening the bandits away in a mad flight.

Distribution follows fast at the Colonel's heels, however. He is captured by the bandits and tied to a cactus, then left to starve in the desert. An eagle rescues him as food for her young, but in aeroplaning to the eagle's nest, Heeza Liar is able to locate the bandit's headquarters. Later he makes his escape with the aid of an unruly mule, stolen from the bandit camp, then delivers his information at headquarters and gets his reward.

"THE ADVENTURES OF PEG O' THE RING" (Universal).

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are back on the coast after their flying trip to New York, and work on the latest episodes of the Universal Special Feature, "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," is progressing rapidly. The seventh episode of the serial is set for release during the week of June 12.

Other Universal serials have been great box office successes, but "Peg o' the Ring" promises to surpass all records. The mere fact that Miss Cunard and Ford will play the principal roles alone assures the success of the feature, but, in addition, seventeen hitherto untried stunts will be worked into the circus serial.

These hair-raising episodes were suggested to Mr. Ford and Miss Cunard by veterans of the sawdust ring from real life happenings. Since the serial was started hundreds of circus people have written to the Universal stars offering suggestions, and many of these will be adopted. In addition, when Miss Cunard was in New York, she conferred at Madison Square Garden with representatives of a big internationally known circus regarding special circus stunts for the picture. Startling developments can be expected before "Peg o' the Ring" is finished.

UNIQUE STUNT BY WHARTONS.

Ordinarily in studio work Cooper-Hewitt violet ray lights are used overhead and on the sides of the "set"—the lights themselves do not show in the picture, the rays being reflected downward upon actors and settings.

The seventh episode of "The Mysteries of Myra," however, afforded opportunity for a distinct novelty in photoplay craft, and the Wharton brothers were quick to make the most of it. In this episode the Black Master's spirit enters the Maynard home and materializes under a red light—red light being conducive to materialization and violet light antagonistic. After materializing, the spirit of the Black Master attempts to turn on the gas in Myra's room and in so doing throws a flood of violet rays full upon himself and dematerializes in great agony.

In producing these scenes a set of Cooper-Hewitt lights are shown both before and after installation. During the action

Howard Estabrook turns the current on and off several times for the benefit of the camera, and the effect is both novel and startling. All this is shown in the seventh episode of this remarkable feature series.

Experts who have viewed a pre-showing of this part of the picture state that the scenes in which the Cooper-Hewitts are used are entirely new to the screen and that they have never before seen anything like the photographic effects attained.

"THE PROMISE LAND" (Essanay).

This three-act photoplay has a story fully as strong as many five-act photoplays and tells it in a straightforward manner that is sure to appeal to any group of spectators. Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton appear for the first time together in this piece. Both have been with Essanay since their first experience in pictures, but never had been cast together until this time. "The Promise Land" is but the first of several pictures in which they will perform, so well do they appear as opposites. With Mr. Washburn and Miss Clayton, two stars of international reputation, in the leading roles, this play offers an example of President George K. Spoor's plan of putting his best players in short-reel productions. Edmund F. Cobb and Harry Dunkinson, each of leading-man caliber, top the supporting cast. The story is one of small-town sweethearts, the boy a drug clerk with ambitions. As he goes away to study medicine a young traveling salesman wins the girl. Some years afterward the drug clerk is a surgeon of recognized ability at a city hospital. The girl, deserted by her husband, becomes a nurse to support her child. It so happens that when the victim of a railroad wreck is brought in the new surgeon gets the case and the nurse is sent to help him in the operating room. They recognize each other and then identify the victim as the former traveling man and the nurse's husband. They strive to save him, but in vain. The surgeon shows the girl that the promise land is the little home town rather than the city of which they dreamed, and they return together.

ESSANAY GETTING SCENICS.

The scenic beauties of Canada from Nova Scotia to British Columbia and from the Georgian Bay country to the Yukon will be filmed by several squads of Essanay camera men during the summer months.

Great preparations are being made for the Yukon pictures. Animal life in this great north country will be given as much attention as scenic, and the camera staff has orders to get a series which will show how polar bears live, regardless of the difficulties. So thorough will be the canvass of this country for appropriate scenery and animal studies that the party is not expected to return until late in August or even in September. All scenics will be released in split reels with the Animated Noct cartoons by Wallace Carlson and other 500-foot productions.

PARAMOUNT "SHELL PLATE" WEEKLY.

The Paramount Pictures Corporation issues its "shell plate" weekly. The page contains all sorts of matter—"shorts" and "longs," pictures of stars and scenes in each of the two weekly Paramount releases. This page, in proof form, goes to every exhibitor and to the newspaper in his town or small city. Circular letters have told the exhibitor the advantages of the proposition—that if his newspaper receives shell plate, it will be more likely to print publicity for his pictures than if it has to set up the story. Shell plate does away with composition charges, and the editors of this class of newspaper using Paramount Publicity have welcomed the new page.

"A RAILROAD BANDIT" (Universal).

It is nothing new nowadays for the Universal to engage a train consisting of an engine and fifteen or twenty box cars or a dozen passenger coaches. The Southern Pacific, Santa Fe, Union Pacific, Oregon Short Line and other western railroads have even turned over local passenger and freight stations to the picture people from Big U town. In fact, the relations between one great trans-continental line and the Universal are very close. This company, the Santa Fe, recognizing that Scene from "A Railroad Bandit" (Bison).

Universal City is one of the coast's greatest attractions to Eastern tourists, has issued special folders describing the city and urging tourists to visit it as one of the greatest sights in California.

In "A Railroad Bandit," a two-ree! Bison railroad drama featuring Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill, a western railroad turned over an engine and train crew and a dozen coaches to the Universal merely for the privilege of having the name of their line in Universal moving pictures. There is no doubt that Universal pictures receive a tremendous circulation in all parts of the world, and the advertising departments of many railroad companies have come to realize that it is a paying proposition to have the name of their road roll across the cinema screen painted on their coaches.

WALTHALL IN "THE LITTLE MUSKETEER."

Picture patrons familiar with Henry B. Walthall's rich interpretation of Southern character leads may await with expectancy his newest production on which Essanay has just begun construction.

"The Little Musketeer," to be filmed in five acts, gives Mr. Walthall the opportunity necessary for the display of his unique ability, and the chance to offer a powerful portrayal of a part which requires just such acting as his to be successful. A cast composed of many stage stars will support him. Antoinette Walker, famed for her parts in Belasco productions, principally with David Warfield, will take the feminine lead. Director J. Charles Hayden will handle the new piece. One thousand infantrymen and several hundred horsemen to take guerrilla foraging parties, will be utilized. Exteriors will be taken at Camp Logan, the artillery and rifle range of the Illinois National Guard.

"The Little Musketeer" is a drama of Civil war times, without bringing the war topic directly into it. It was written by Charles Mortimer Peck especially for Mr. Walthall, and the latter takes the double role of two brothers. Both love the same girl. A murder is committed and each believes the other is guilty and attempts to shield him. The climax is in keeping with the rest of the story, a strong point reached after numerous intense situations.

WOMEN FOR LEADING ROLES.

Something new in motion picture dramas—two women essaying the principal roles—is presented in "Flames of Vengeance," a three-act Gaumont-Mutual production. Miss Gertrude Robinson and Miss Iva Shepard are the principals, the former in the role of a young girl and the latter as the "vampire." Teamed together in this production, these young women give an exceptionally stirring interpretation of the difficult roles assigned them. The success of the two women in the leading roles has prompted the Gaumont-Mutual studios to prepare several other dramas for them in which they will appear as the principals.

"BROKEN FETTERS" (Bluebird).

New York and the Orient provide scenes and settings for "Broken Fetters," the Bluebird for July 3, in which Violet Mercereau makes her regular appearance as a star in that popular series. Rex Ingram has directed the production, going to China for the early scenes and locating the final action in New York's Chinatown and upper Fifth avenue. By clever artifice the Oriental atmosphere has been pleasantly infused, and as there is always a mysterious interest in Chinatowns, in whatever city they are located, the element of novelty will provide a strong appeal to the fancy of the populace. Considerable success has been attained in providing sensations, and there is an element of excitement to accelerate the interest and speed the concluding incident to an emotional climax. Kittens Reicherts plays, in the first act, the role which Miss Mercereau, as a grown up, carries through the four remaining reels. Wm. Garwood is featured as Miss Mercereau's leading man, and Paul Panzer and Isabel Patterson have been assigned to important roles in developing the interesting plot.

FROHMAN COMPANY TO SCREEN "JAFFERY."

"Jaffery," William J. Locke's most popular novel, is to be screened by the Frohman Amusement Corporation. As the author of "The Beloved Vagabond," more than from any of his other writings, Locke has been associated in the public mind in the past. Yet this new book, "Jaffery," has already outsold "The Beloved Vagabond" and will certainly retain at least equal place in the hearts of his many admirers. The story lends itself to very beautiful dramatic treatment, and forms in essence a pictured play that might, with only the loss of scenic variation, be quite as effective on the stage.

For the name part the author's own friend, whom he had in mind in writing the book, has been engaged. This is C. Aubrey Smith, the English actor who played with Marie Doro in the play from another Locke book, "The Morals of Marcus." Mr. Smith has done some strong picture work before, notably in "The Builder of Bridges" and "John Gladys's Honour."

Others in the cast have been chosen with as much care, the familiar names including Eleanor Woodruff, Eric Blind, Florence Deshon, Doris Sawyer, Paul Doucet and Stanley Dark.

HOLMES TO TOUR CANADIAN ROCKIES.

Burton Holmes, the celebrated traveller and lecturer, whose journeys are shared by screen audiences each week in the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, has left for a trip through the Canadian Rockies. Through the land of Evangeline Mr. Holmes will travel during peach-blossom time, later going to Newfoundland and for a visit to the historic shrine of St. Anne de Beauséjour. The journey, which will cover all of Canada, will be made in the car of the late Lord Strathcona, and Mr. Holmes will be entertained by Lord Shaunnessy. He has also been invited to be the guest of the Duke of Connaught during his Canadian visit.

MARGUERITE CLARK STAR OF "SILKS AND SATINS."

Marguerite Clark makes her next screen appearance in the Famous Players production, "Silks and Satins," which is released on the Paramount Program June 12. The play is an unusual one, opening in the present and then reverting to the Napoleonic era as the story of the romance of the great-grandmother of the little bride is related to her and furnishes her with the solution of her own grave problems.

J. Searle Dawley, who directed "Silks and Satins," has gathered an exceptional cast about Miss Clark, including Vernon Scene from "Silks and Satins" (Famous Players).

Steel, Clarence Handysides, Thomas Holding, W. A. Williams, and Fayette Perry. Some of the most elaborate settings ever erected in the Famous Players studio were built for this production, among them a three-story interior of the De Saken Chateau, and another interior view of the chateau which was over one hundred feet in depth. The picture is a delightful blending of the present and the past, in which Miss Clark plays both diminutive heroines in her inimitable way.

"THE SHERIFF OF PLUMAS" (Mustang).

Because her rare type of beauty fitted exactly the heroine of William Pilette's stirring story of the West, "The Sheriff of Plumas," Helene Rosson was especially selected by Director Warren Ellsworth to portray this role in the picturization of this popular story by the Mustang-Mutual studios. Her appearance in this production will mark Miss Rosson's first effort as the heroine of a short-length feature in many months.

Scene from "The Sheriff of Plumas" (Mustang).

William Stowell and Harry McCabe, the latter a newcomer to Mustang-Mutual releases, appear at the head of a capable company supporting Miss Rosson. "The Sheriff of Plumas," which was put into scenario form by Karl Coolidge, is an unusually appealing story of the Far West, replete with stirring situations and presenting an exceptionally novel domestic situation.

RALPH HERZ IN METRO'S "THE PURPLE LADY."

"The Purple Lady," a five-part Metro-kulfe production in which Ralph Herz is starred and Irene Howley is featured, will be released on the Metro program June 26. This Metro feature will serve to introduce Mr. Herz to the silent drama. He has had a long and successful career on the speaking stage, and is perhaps best known for his work in "The Soul Kiss," "Madame Sherry," "Dr. De Luxe," and recently in "Ruggles of Red Gap." He is truly an international artist as he was born in Paris, has German relatives, was educated in England and is now a naturalized American citizen. He came to America with Mrs. Patrick Campbell, playing with that star in "The Joy of Living," "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" and "Aunt Jeannie."

Scene from "The Purple Lady" (Metro).

Miss Howley is another stage favorite who won added fame on the screen. She was last seen on the Metro program in "A Yellow Streak" with Lionel Barrymore, which was pronounced one of the best features produced last year. She was known for several years on the vaudeville stage as "The Manhattan Girl." There is a strong supporting cast in "The Purple Lady," which includes Alan Hale, Howard Truesdell, George Fauncefote, Guido Colucci, Gretchen Hartman, Mrs. William Bechtel, Cora Williams and other well-known stage and screen artists.

"The Purple Lady" is a picturization of the play of the same name by Sydney Rosenfeld, which enjoyed a successful run on Broadway.

RUTH ROLAND STARRED IN PATHE'S "A MATRIMONIAL MARTYR."

In Ruth Roland and Andrew Arbuckle, the two players featured in "A Matrimonial Martyr," the five-part Gold Rooster play made by Balboa and treated to the exquisite process of Pathcolor in the Pathe company's Paris laboratories, we see that rarity of screen art—actors physically and temperamentally in accord with their parts.

In the double role of Erma Desmond and Mrs. Hugo Stanley, Ruth Roland is happy. The play calls for her happiness only as Erma Desmond; but Ruth's volatile temperament reveals happily in her interpretation of the irascible, waspish termagant, Mrs. Hugo Stanley; for her chameleon feelings conduce to making each part more real for contrast with the other.

Miss Roland first won the admiration of countless screen enthusiasts by her consistent playing in the now famous "Who Pays?" series, released by Pathe about a year ago. A native daughter of California, which has produced so many favorites of the stage and screen, Miss Roland has been before the public since she was four years old.

After finishing her education in Hollywood, she had considerable stock experience and wound up in vaudeville before going into pictures. She joined the Balboa forces about a year and a half ago and rose rapidly. Only recently she made a great success in "The Red Circle" serial and in the Gold Rooster play, "Comrade John," wherein she co-starred with William Elliott.

"LA VIE DE BOHEME" (World).

"La Vie De Boheme," in which Alice Brady, the charming World Film star will make her appearance late in June, received its directorial patronage at the hands of Albert Capellani, the famous French producer, creator of "Les Misérables,"

Scene from "La Vie De Boheme" (World).

"Camille" and at one time the foremost operatic director of the French capital.

For the making of this exceptional subject, Mr. Capellani did not rely on his own knowledge of Murgur's story, but called into conference a number of his friends among the Metropolitan Opera House singers and directors, and they were asked to look at such of the film as had been completed and suggest for forthcoming scenes, with the result that a most artistic atmospheric production is seen.

As an opera, under the name of "La Boheme," Murgur's story has become a classic of the music world. The tale itself, torn with the heart yearnings is of the young girl, "Mimi," who, as a baby is left at the "Motherless Home," later taken from there by an inn keeper and given a place as domestic. She is assaulted by a drunken inmate and rescued by a Bohemian musician. She leaves the inn and takes up flower-making and meets her destiny in Rudolph, the scion of a notable family—honorable withal and loving as a true spirit.

Alice Brady as "Mimi" responds to the high tense, tempo called for by the story. Her sublime sorrow, her majestic manner of flitting from gloom to joy and her death-bed request for "a muff to warm my hands" sees the film dissolve itself and leave the auditor struggling to hold back the tears.

In addition to Miss Brady, Paul Capellani, Zena Keefe and a specially selected cast of players, have important parts. The scenic environment is perfect, the detail and atmosphere carries out the general effect, and as it was aptly described by one of the Metropolitan Opera House singers, "La Vie De Boheme" is a symphony of art.

"La Vie De Boheme" is in five acts and will be released as "Brady-Made" June 19 on the regular World program.

John Junior, Essanay juvenile leading man, has another comedy part in "The Schemers," a forthcoming three-act comedy-drama.

INTERNATIONAL ANIMATED CARTOONS.

"A Quiet Day in the Country" by the famous F. Opper, and George Herriman's "Krazy Kat at Looney Park" are the new International animated cartoons booked for release June 5. These split-reel comedies grow better every release and the late offerings are quite the best yet turned out by the well-known cartoonists. With vastly improved situations and action both comedies are riots of laughter from title to finish.

Scene from "Krazy Kat at Looney Park" (International).

Krazy Kat's trip on the roller coaster is a scream and Cousin Willie in pursuit of the pig are just about the funniest objects we have seen in animated cartoons. Opper and Herriman seem to have hit upon a style of navigation for these characters that classes with the "Chaplin Shuffle" in its palmiest days. Watching these pictures on the screen it is hard to believe that they are not actual living beings, but only children of the artist's imagination, taking on life and expression at the whim of the originator.

CHANGE IN A GAUMONT TITLE.

After announcing as its photoplay for June 22 "The Spatulate Thumb," the Gaumont company has decided to change the name to "The Criminal's Thumb." This is the three-act drama which had its ending changed by vote of the women of the Gaumont stock companies. The authors, Lionel Barrymore and Wright Huntington, wrote that the heroine was to marry the young attorney who secured the acquittal of the weak young man with whom she had been in love when the story opened. Miss Iva Shepard, Miss Gertrude Robinson, Miss Gertrude Mc-Coy, Miss Lucille Taft and Miss Mathilde Baring were a unit in declaring the heroine would stick to the man to whom she had first given her love. The story was then changed to get it in tune with the feminine psychology of the Gaumont actresses.

NOVELTY NOTES FOR JUNE.

"Novelty Notes" for June contains an exhaustive special article, entitled "Percentage Pictures," which is important to all who are interested in the future careers of Anita Stewart, Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin and their probable effects on the motion picture industry. "Novelty Notes" is mailed to exhibitors only; but any of our readers may obtain a copy of the June issue if they will send their names and addresses to "Novelty Notes," 115 East Twenty-third street, New York.

UNITY MARKETS SERIAL ON UNIQUE PLAN.

"The Yellow Menace," the sixteen-episode serial starring Edwin Stevens, the famous dramatic artist, which is being distributed through the Unity Sales Corporation, is the first serial ever to be sold on a State's right basis, according to Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity.

Mr. Cobe reports that the entire country has been practically sold on "The Yellow Menace," within a week of the announcement of its acquisition by the Unity concern. The extreme timeliness of the subject has no doubt a great deal to do with this, as orators in the House of Representatives and presidential candidates are at the present moment striving to arouse the country to a sense of its danger from across the Pacific.

NEW KNICKERBOCKER-VIM BULLETIN.

Two bulletins in one is the result of a novel method adopted by the Melies Manufacturing Company in its latest issue of the house organ advertising Knickerbocker Star Features and Vim Comedies. The new bulletin is a saddle-stitched booklet of twelve pages and covers the Knickerbocker and Vim advertising matter occupying opposite halves of the publication and meeting in the middle, upside down to each other. Thus the information the exhibitor requires is provided in a form that obviates confusion and is handily preserved in a binder supplied for the purpose.

ROONEY REACHES UNIVERSAL CITY.

Pat Rooney has reached Universal City and will be directed by Roy Clements in a series of comedies, the first one being entitled "The Bell Hop." Rooney has been appearing on the vaudeville stage, and is one of the best-known comedians in the country. He was at Universal City once before for a brief engagement. Additional film plays are being written for the comedian. Work will be commenced on the first episode next week.

NEW "VIM" POSTER TRADE MARK.

Vim Comedies have dropped the cartoon style of poster so long distinctive of the Vim brand, and have adopted a new device, consisting of a Shakespearean fool with a bauble. The device is used as a border for one-sheet posters, the Vim name appearing on a balloon which the fool holds tethered with a string. In the panel is inserted a comedy scene from the subject, posterized in three colors with photographic reproduction of the players' faces.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

COMING a week or ten days ahead of the Gaumont stock companies, Gertrude Robinson, one of the stars of these aggregations, has reached New York. As she is not cast in any of the final productions in work at Jacksonville, Fla., it was possible for her to get away ahead of time. Her first photoplay to be made at Flushing, N. Y., will be announced within a week.

Two sisters, Helen and Queenie Rosson, are employed at the American Mutual studios in Santa Barbara. Despite the year's difference in age, the two bear such a striking resemblance that it is with difficulty they are told apart. Both are stars, Helen in strong dramatic roles and Queenie in comedy parts. Their brother, Dick, is also a member of the studio forces, making it quite a family affair.

Director Smiling Billy Mason has completed the fourth episode of "Base Ball Billy," made in one reel, in which he plays the featured lead, supported by a large cast, and is now preparing to film the fifth chapter of this series of pictures dealing with the national game and full of comedy situations.

The U. S. Department of the Interior, which is releasing scenic film of National Parks through the Gaumont company, has a most remarkable series of views of the Yellowstone which will be released as a Mutual Picture June 14. These are equal in photographic excellence to the pictures of Yosemite, which proved such a popular Gaumont scenic release through Mutual. The pictures of the geysers, the stupendous falls, and the other beauties of nature with which the park is filled, made a wonderfully popular release.

Charles Chaplin is now at work on his third Mutual feature, the name of which as yet is undecided. In this release, the famous laughmaker will be seen in the role of an itinerant musician, in which character he has played in "The Tramp" and "The Circus." The picture will be produced by the same team which produced "The Circus," and the score will be furnished by the chief music, Edna Purviance, Eric Campbell, Leo White, Charlotte Minneau and the other members of his company appear with him in this production.

American Director William Bertram in "Like a Knight of Old" put Nita Davis through strenuous work in shooting that stage robbery picture. Nita is used to being dragged by runaway horses, hung over cliffs and plunged into icy cold mountain streams. "The director certainly made us earn our keep this time," Nita was heard to tell one of the extra men. "I've been in tight places many a time, but today he had me hanging on by my imagination. That's all I had left to cling to."

"The Fourth Tree" is the title of a one-reel comedy drama being produced by Director Clifford Eilfert, the featured lead being Viola Smith, and Hayward Mackay opposite. Eilfert also has finished his first one-reel production at Universal City, entitled "Muggins," the lead being taken by Gretchen Lederer with Norbert Myles opposite. Clever work was done in this drama by Elizabeth Janes, one of the child actresses of Universal City, and Adele Farrington in the heavy role.

Helen Holmes and her company of Signal-Mutual players are now far out on the Pacific, bound for Hawaii and the Orient, where they are to enact a number of scenes for "The Diamond Runners," a Mutual Star Production, to be released five acts later this summer. About twenty persons, including players, cameramen and assistants to J. P. McGowan, who is directing the production, made up the party.

Lone Star Deltz, the famous football coach, whose some years ago captained the Carlyle team when it defeated Harvard, has a small part in the next American Audrey Munson picture, "The Gem of the Western Seas." All the men that appear in this feature are six-footers. The celebrated model they support is a slight American girl of about five feet two.

With his company working in the lumber camps of Humboldt county, California, Director Jay Hunt is filming "The Wilderness Creed," featuring Lu Cille Yount, with Jack Holt playing opposite. Hunt already has filmed a one-reel sea drama, made en route to Eureka, and will make two mountain dramas of two reels each before his return to Universal City.

So powerful a means of education has the art of cinematography become that many large manufacturers throughout the country are adopting it as a medium of education. The Willys-Overland company was among the first of the automobile manufacturers to make use of the picture as a connection with its work in disseminating knowledge of motor car construction. A lecture descriptive of the Knight sleeve valve motor, illustrated by 2,000 feet of motion pictures made by Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, is being given in various cities throughout the country by Henry H. Hower of Willys-Overland. The picture, many of them interior views of a motor in actual operation, are declared by exhibitors to be remarkable for their sharpness and clearness of detail. Without them, according to Mr. Hower, it would be extremely difficult to drive home many of the points of vital interest.

Alan Forrest, who recently joined the forces of the American-Mutual studios, has had an eventful career as a screen actor. One of his most notable successes was as the heavy in the serial "The Master Key." Leaving the Universal he joined the Mutual, where he worked in many roles, including several features. He achieved a signal success in "A Sister of Cain," and in "Jackstraws" features. At present he is working in "The Sign of the Spade," to be released shortly in five reels.

Murdoch McQuarrie, one of the most widely-known character actors on the Coast, has been loaned to the American Studios to direct the company headed by Helene Rosson. His first picture will be "The Sign of the Spade," by Kenneth B. Clarke.

It will be at least ten days before Director Otis Turner completes the five-reel drama entitled "The Seekers," by Olga Printzlau, and featuring Elton Parker DeLaven, with the well-known character actor, Charles Mailles, as leading man. A strong cast is provided Director Turner, in support of the dainty little star, who plays the part of a nurse in a quaint religious comedy. The heart interest story runs throughout, with plenty of action.

Two women, Gertrude Robinson and Iva Shepard, play the principal parts in "Flames of Vengeance," a forthcoming Gaumont-Mutual three-part feature. A production in which the two principal roles are handled exclusively by women, are rare, indeed, in picture fields.

King Clark, who recently joined the American forces, is to be seen in "The Dancer" as his introduction to the public under the "Flying A" banner, with Vivian Rich and Margaret Nichols playing the principal feminine roles.

An automobile and a bicycle furnish the thrills for "Dare-devils and Danger," a Beauty-Mutual comedy, featuring that trio of Carol Holloway, John Sheehan and John Stepping. The story has to do with an invention of a self-aiming gun and an exciting chase after the inventor by a herd of foreign representatives.

Constance Crawley has written a story entitled "Fear" which is now being filmed in two reels under the directions of Frank Borzage, with Mr. Borzage, Anna Little and Jack Richardson in the important roles. It is now expected that "Fear" will be offered to the public on June 30.

The Smalleys nearly have completed the five-reel society drama, entitled "The First Step," written by Lois Weber and starring Mary MacDonald, with Horace Morgan appearing opposite her. A big cast of Universal players appear in this film story, including Maude Emory, Jack Muhlall and Ernie Shields. Many of the scenes were taken at the wonderful El Lito, Borzage, and Maude Emory, said to be the most beautiful in the United States. Other scenes were taken at San Diego and at a huge cattle ranch at Oceanside. Many beautiful sets were erected at Universal City for the use of the Smalleys for this production.

"Killed by Whom?" is a two-reel "Flying A" sociological drama written by William Parker and directed by Carl M. Le Viness. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat play the principal parts, and the story is very interesting from the standpoint of modern legal justice.

Alan Forrest and George Gebhardt are the most recent additions to the American-Mutual studios. Their initial appearances will be in support of Helen Rosson in "The Sign of the Spade," a forthcoming American-Mutual feature in five acts. Forrest will appear in the picture opposite Miss Rosson, while Gebhardt will essay the "heavy."

"Smiling" Billy Mason has completed the fifth episode of "Base Ball Bill," a series of one-reel comedies surrounding the diamond and in which Mason plays the featured lead.

The famous collection of Postock animals appearing in Horsley-Overland are now en route from the studios at Los Angeles to New York, where they will appear during the summer months at Luna Park in Coney Island. A "Horsley-Mutual Special," consisting of twelve cars, is bringing the animals East. During their stay in Luna Park, visitors will be given an opportunity of seeing just how the motion picture in which animals are used, are made. Captain Jack Bonavita is in direct charge of the transportation of the collection. At the close of the summer season at Luna Park the animals will be returned to the Los Angeles studios.

"Love's Bitter Strength" is an American photoplay without a villain. Edward Coxen, Lizette Thorne and George Field constitute the important cast, under the direction of Alfred Hollingsworth, who has taken over the Ricketts company. This subject is a film adaptation of a novel, by Anthony W. Coldewey from a story by Nelle Brown Duff.

Director William Worthington is preparing to take over the direction of Ruth Stonehouse, the well-known star, who will be featured in a five-reel film play taken from Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," introducing Ruth Stonehouse as a girl who dances, full of vivacity and life. The supporting cast has not been determined, and will not be until the film version is completed.

Director Murdoch McQuarrie, who for the past six months has been directing Signal-Mutual five-reel features, has transferred his baggage to the American-Mutual studios. His first production under his new employers will be released shortly under the title of "The Sign of the Spade," by Kenneth B. Clarke. The leading role in this production, supported by George Gebhardt, Alan Forrest and a strong company of players.

Early next week Director Lynn Reynolds will finish the picturization of his own story, written in five reels, entitled "The Deacon's Demise," featuring Little Gloria, Helen Rosson, and Miss Gonzalez, with a strong supporting cast including Nanine Wright, Lule Warrenton, Fred Church, George Hernandez, Frank McQuarrie and Jack Curtis. Miss Gonzalez does some notable work in this film play, and some very beautiful sets have been provided by Manager Charles Rankin of the production department at Universal City.

"The Wasted Years," next of the Horsley Mutual features, starring Crane Wilbur, will be released shortly in five acts. Thelma Salter, who boasts but six years of age, will be the featured child star. This production will mark Miss Salter's first appearance as a Mutualite.

"Flames of Vengeance" will be the second of the new three-reel features produced at the Gaumont studios in Flushing for release through the Mutual. Gertrude Robinson and Iva Shepard, popular Mutual stars, are to be the featured players.

Iva Shepard, famous Mutual "vampire," John Reinhard, John Macklin, Albert Macklin, Mathilda Baring, Charles W. Travis and James Levering are the other players in the cast. Edwin Middleton is staging the drama.

Edward Schuler, technical director at the Rolfe-Metro studios, is getting things in readiness for the production of "Romeo and Juliet," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will be starred.

Now it is the "homeliest boy" who is to make his bow as a star of Mutual releases. Gertrude McCoy, star of Gaumont-Mutual feature releases found him at the recent motion picture exposition held at Madison Square Garden. He introduced himself as "Tommy McCarthy." "It's not me real monicker," Tommy explained, "but it will have to do. I've got to have a phoney title, like all the other picture players." Tommy, they say out at the Gaumont-Mutual studios, where he is now working in his first release, has real ability and a wealth of talent. Tommy will shortly depart for the Vogue-Mutual studios in Los Angeles, where he will become a regular member of the playing forces.

Director Jay Hunt is in the woods of the northern part of California filming two logging camp photoplays, in which the lead is played by Lucille Lauges, with Jack Holt appearing opposite. Albert MacQuarrie also appears in the cast. En route to Eureka, Hunt filmed on the steamers a one-reel story entitled "On the High Sea." Ben Cohn accompanied the company as scenario writer. The director and his company will be away for at least ten days more.

Edwin Guestein, the Gaumont-Mutual cameraman, is now touring the South securing pictures for "See America First," released each week by the Mutual. After Atlanta, Savannah and Montgomery, Ala., were the first of the cities visited. His tour will occupy about ten weeks, during which he will obtain views of not less than twelve of the principal Southern cities.

"Any Youth," a psychological society drama, has been filmed by Director Allen Holubar from his own story. Holubar plays the lead, with Dorothy Phillips opposite, and supported by Hector V. Sarno as the heavy. This one-reel picture required a great deal of double and triple exposure, depicting as it does the thoughts of a man as they flash across his brain.

Following "Flames of Vengeance," the Gaumont company will release "The Criminal's Thumb," a melodrama written by Lionel Barrymore and Wright Huntington. The leading roles will be taken by Alexander Gaden and Iva Shepard. A peculiar twist to the story is given by the fact that the heroine does not marry the strong man, but says that the weaker of the two needs her. Others in the cast are Lucille Taft, Mathilde Baring, Charles W. Travis, Hector V. Pemberton and James Levering. The drama is being directed by Edwin Middleton. It will be released June 22.

Within a few days, director Joseph De Grasse will have finished the picturization of "The Grasp of Grief," a five reel production, featuring Louise Lovely and Lon Chaney. Some very beautiful sets have been used by DeGrasse in this picture, many of them being his own conception. His next story has not been announced, but it is being prepared for his use early next week.

The meetings, and ceremonies attendant upon each of the several conferences held, between General Scott and Funston, representing the United States, and General Obregon, Mexican Minister of War, were photographed by L. N. Burard, a Mutual Weekly cameraman who has been in Mexico with Gen. Pershing's expedition. In order to obtain these pictures, a special permit had to be obtained from both the United States and Mexican authorities and signed by each of the three participants in the conferences. General Obregon posed several times for the camera.

"The Silent Battle," a five reel feature production in which J. Warren Kerrigan is starred, with Lois Wilson opposite, has been completed by Director Jack Conway. He is now working on his next production, which will start early next week, with Kerrigan as the featured lead, supported by Miss Wilson, Maude George, Harry Carter, and others of the Universal City stock company.

Millions of dollars have been spent, countless lives sacrificed, fortunes made and lost and feuds born, in the big reclamation projects engineered on the desert regions of the great west. Now lived again the scenes of the Reclamation, a Mutual Masterpicture, "The Luxe" feature, filmed at the American studios and starring Winnifred Greenwood and Franklin Ritchie. The author was Enneth B. Clarke, Margaret Nicholas, Dick La Reno, and Clarence Burton are the principals in the cast supporting the stars. The piece was staged by Director Edward Slioman and most of the exteriors were filmed on the outskirts of the great Mojave Desert.

In "She Was Some Vampire" the featured leads are played by Gale Henry and William Franey, a comedy in one reel which is being filmed by Director Allen Curtis at Universal City. The story was written by Curtis and is a satire on the vampire world, many of the scenes being taken at the seashore. Others in this laughable screen play are Lillian Peacock, Milburn Moranti and Charles Conklin.

Old Town's Strand Sold

Well-Known Maine Theater Changes Hands When W. E. McPhee and O. B. Fernandez Buy the Strand Theater from Eugene Boucher—Latter Has Owned It Since It Was Built—W. E. McPhee Will Be the Manager for the Firm.

By John Flanagan, 147 Park View Ave., Bangor, Special Correspondent.

OLD TOWN, Me.—An important deal in theatrical affairs has just been consummated after days of consideration by the parties concerned, when the Strand theater was sold by Eugene Boucher, who has been its owner since it was built, to W. E. McPhee, owner of the New Central, and O. B. Fernandez, owner of the Bijou, who will be associated together under the firm name of McPhee & Fernandez, with Mr. McPhee as manager. Both the Strand and Bijou theaters were closed during the past week.

The New Central will be kept for road shows entirely, while the Strand will be devoted to a straight program of high-class picture shows, including regularly Paramount and Triangle plays. The Bijou will remain closed, at least for the present.

New Maine Film Company.

Portland, Me.—Lochen Film Corporation has been organized here for the purpose of conducting a general manufacturing, commercial, mercantile, mechanical, trading or real estate business. Capital stock, $1,000,000, of which $500,000 is common and $500,000 is preferred; par value, $10; paid in, $50. President, R. E. Monroe, Portland; treasurer, Carl W. Smith, Portland; clerk, Isaac W. Dyer, Gorham; directors, William Lochen, Stanley B. Houck, Minneapolis, Minn.; Carl W. Smith, E. R. Monroe, M. G. Connellan, Portland. Approved May 26.

W. U. Baker Opens New Theater.

Lubec, Me.—W. U. Baker opened a new moving picture theater here on Decoration Day, and is using Universal service. This new house has been built especially for Mr. Baker's use, and should prove profitable.

Pathe Comes to Bangor.

Bangor, Me.—Another film exchange, the Pathe, will be opened in Bangor shortly. Al Bevans, who is to be the manager of the local branch, is now looking for a location. Mr. Bevans has been in the business for the past ten years, having started with George Kleine when he opened his Boston branch. For the past few years Mr. Bevans has been managing exchanges. He was assistant manager of the Boston General Film exchange and was recently manager of the General Film exchanges in Albany, New Haven and Syracuse.

The local branch, which is to be established so that the company will be better able to furnish the people of the state with Pathe pictures, will control the territory this side of Lewiston. The Boston office has charge of the other territory in Maine. Mr. Bevans will be in position to furnish exhibitors in this section with features, serials and singles of all kinds made by his company.

Another benefit expected in having an exchange in this vicinity is that, with a man in Bangor, the company will be able to cover this territory for the Pathe

Weekly. When anything of particular note happens in this vicinity, Mr. Bevans will have a camera man on the spot at once to take pictures for the weekly.

H. P. Smith to Manage General Exchange.

Bangor, Me.—H. P. Smith, of the Boston office of the General Film Co., has taken the Bangor exchange, on Franklin street, as manager, to succeed George H. Newhall, who was drowned a short time ago. Mr. Smith has been in the film business for the past eight years. He was formerly in the booking department, but for the past three years he has been handling the work in the feature department.

Mr. Smith made a trip down through Eastport last week and is greatly pleased with conditions thus far. He likes the territory he has been placed in and thinks there are great prospects for business this summer.

Bluehill, Me.—The Century theater, Mason brothers, proprietors, has just contracted for the Broadway features from the Bangor office of the Universal Film Company.

BOSTON REPORTS EARLY SUMMER BUSINESS GOOD

Barnum & Bailey's Circus Dents Week's Business in Boston—Business in State Prosperous.

By William Flynn, Boston Correspondent. Address Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, Mass.—Barnum & Bailey's "Greatest Show on Earth" put a dent in the receipts of several Boston moving picture houses last week, but in spite of this counter attraction most of the larger photoplay theaters did a good business. This was particularly true of the Park, Fenway and Modern theaters, in which the cooling systems have been given a thorough overhauling in anticipation of the approaching warm weather.

Many of the Olympia theaters, the Orpheum and the Boston, drew their quota of moving picture lovers, and the majority of the smaller houses held their own. Judging from the present outlook the moving picture business in Boston and the rest of the New England territory this summer will be far better than it has been for years past.

Many of the local film exchange managers are enthusiastic over the prospects and their enthusiasm has been enhanced by the large increase in the number of summer moving picture houses that are due to be opened at New England summer resorts within the next few weeks. Edward J. Farrell, New England manager of the General Film Company, says the bookings of his office have held out remarkably well. Frank Vine, of the local International Film office; Frank Grady, of the World; W. H. Bradley, of the Triangle; George Balsdon, of the V-L-S-E, and

Harry Campbell, of the Fox office, also report large bookings, and the general business aspect throughout the territory is encouraging.

BRAINS AND BEAUTY GIRL.

New England's Fair Representative, Phyllis Curl, is a Blonde.

Boston, Mass.—Miss Phyllis E. Curl, the Boston girl who has been chosen to represent New England in the beauty and brains contest by the World Film Company, has received so many congratulations from her host of friends and persons she does not even know that she is in a quandary as to how she is going to answer them all.

Miss Curl is nineteen years old. She is a striking blonde with wavy gold hair and dark blue eyes. She is five feet six inches tall and has an erect and graceful carriage. Her father, who died some months ago, was a buyer of antiques, and with him she has traveled practically all over the world. She has been in Africa, Australia, Japan and Europe.

Following the death of her father the young lady was compelled to seek employment, and after working a short time as a stenographer she secured an engagement with William Hodge in "Flying Sister." She was persuaded to enter the contest by her friends and is overjoyed to think she won. Miss Curl is a graduate of the Girls' High School in Boston, and those who have seen her predict a wonderful future for her on the screen.

An Organist of Fine Discrimination.

Boston, Mass.—Part of the success of Loew's Globe theater, in Boston, is due to the brilliant talent of Francis J. O'Connor, the organist. Mr. O'Connor has made a deep study of the science of interpreting motion pictures on the organ and his work augments the value of the photoplay on the screen to such an extent that he has built up a following among film devotees that few moving picture house musicians can boast of. He follows the theme of the picture on the organ in a manner that makes one feel as well as see the action as the reel unwinds on the screen, and discriminating audiences are loud in their praise of his efforts.

NEWARK NEWS LETTER.

By Jacob J. Kalter, 51 Strand Theater Building, Newark, N. J., Special Correspondent.

Airdomes Are Opening.

NEWARK, N. J.—The season for open air moving picture places was practically inaugurated in this city during the last week or so. The expectations of the airdome owners are much better this year than last. Weather conditions last year were deplorable. In a conversation with an airdome owner, the Newark correspondent of the Moving Picture World learned that thus far ideal conditions have prevailed as far as the open air places are concerned. The larger parks have also opened their season. Vailsburg park, Newark; Olympic park, Belleville, and Hillside park, Irvington, all were opened last week. The wonderful business of the past week augurs well for the succeeding weeks.

Bayonne's New House.

Bayonne, N. J.—Plans have been prepared by Eugene Reilly, architect, for the erection of a one-story brick motion picture house to be built at 275 Broadway, Bayonne. The house, which will cost $5,000, is owned by A. Cohen.

Another Open Air.

East Orange, N. J.—James A. Endiso has built at 389 Dodd street, this place, a modern open air motion picture place at a cost of $500.

Success Company Chartered.

Trenton, N. J.—The Success Amusement Company, with registered offices at 135 East Hanover street, has just been chartered. The incorporators are: Charles C. Hildinger, George D. Bishop, Russell H. Lamont. The capital stock is $10,000, and the business of the concern is to do an amusement business.

B. S. Moss Interests Open Newark Office.

Newark, N. J.—The B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation has completed arrangements whereby they are to be represented in New Jersey by the Messrs. R. S. Clark and F. D. Hunt, who are to act as exclusive New Jersey agents.

Mr. Clark was with the V. L. S. E. Corporation for the past year as their New Jersey representative, and is now uniting with Mr. Hunt, who has been handling the Moss Features for several months.

The boys have opened an up-to-date office in the Proctor's Palace theater building, 114 Market street, Newark, N. J., where they will be glad to greet all their old friends.

Boylard at City, Irvington.

Irvington, N. J.—I. Boyland, well-known exhibitor around these parts, has taken over the City theater, 765 Springfield avenue, Irvington. Mr. Boyland has put on some extraordinary features in his house and he reports good business.

Atlantic Exhibition Company.

Newark, N. J.—With a capital of $10,000, the Atlantic Exhibition Company has been chartered at 823 Broad street, Newark. The members of the concern, which will conduct amusements, are Powell Crichton, Frank T. Matthes and Alex R. Fordyce.

Ruppert Opens Airdome.

Jersey City, N. J.—The Ocean airdome, at Bay River and Ocean avenue, has been opened by William Ruppert.

Madge Evans Popular.

Newark, N. J.—Madge Evans, recently shown at the Paramount theater, Broad and Hill streets, in "Sudden Riches," is probably now the pet of the city. The Newark correspondent of the Moving Picture World was informed that practically every theater booking World productions is making arrangements to have their house show this six-year-old wonder. The little film actress is very popular here in Newark, and it is expected that other playhouses will arrange for her personal appearance in the near future.

New Open Air Theater.

Newark, N. J.—An open air picture house has been opened at 287-289 Prince street by Morris Gold. He has installed a new operator's booth at a cost of $100. The booth was designed by M. B. Silberstein, architect.

Lakewood Incorporation.

Lakewood, N. J.—The Gem Amusement Company has been incorporated here with registered offices at 305 Sixth street. The capital is $3,000, which will be used for amusement purposes. The incorporators are Harry G. Hecht, Anna K. Otto and E. M. Firschbaum.

Syndicate at Penns Grove.

Penns Grove, N. J.—The New York theater Syndicate has been formed at this place with an authorized capital of $37,000. The incorporators are Frederick D. Doty, Giles S. Doty and E. S. Kilmer.

Regal Incorporated.

Paterson, N. J.—The Regal Amusement Company has been organized at 67 Main street, Paterson. The concern is capitalized at $10,000 and will probably take over the Regal theater, situated at the same address as the registered office. The incorporators are Salvatore Fernaldo, Sanfelici Alexander and American V. Alexander.

New Camden Concern.

Camden, N. J.—The Cumberland Amusement Company has opened offices at 509 Market street, Camden, for the purpose of promoting amusements. The authorized capital is $5,000. The incorporators are S. MacGregor, Max Satsinsky and Rose Black.

BALTIMORE ITEMS.

(For Baltimore Letter See Page 2078.)

"Gloria" at Strand.

Baltimore, Md.—The management of the Strand theater, 404-6 North Howard street, has booked "Gloria's Romance" and the first episode was shown this week for the first three days.

Ed Myrick presented all the lady patrons at his house, the Columbia Portland, with a small bottle of perfume one Sunday recently.

Philadelphia Ball

Local Operators Give Brilliant Dance on Decoration Day at the Eagles' Temple—
More Than Five Hundred Persons Attend—The Hall a Bower of Beauty—
An Excellent Program—The Committee in Charge.

Special to Moving Picture World

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—On Decoration Day more than five hundred Philadelphiaans attended the fifth annual ball of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local 307, held in Eagles' Temple, Broad and Spring Garden streets. The occasion was one of festivity, and those present voted it a huge success, which fact was corroborated by the members of the executive committee both as to attendance and financial results. The crowd gathered early and everything was running at full speed long before the allotted time. The ballroom presented a remarkable sight as the beautiful gowns worn by the ladies in attendance blended with the gorgeous decorations. Special efforts were made to have the decorations of character long to be remembered, and too much credit cannot be given to those in charge of that portion of the affair.

The moving picture industry in Philadelphia was strongly represented at the ball, exhibitors, supply men and folks from the various exchanges mingling together on the floor. Charles Segal, president of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League, was easily to be distinguished as he moved from place to place greeting those present. He made a brief address in which he remarked that the exhibitors as a body wished to congratulate the members of the Union upon the most proper manner in which their organization was conducted and that it was their sincere wish that Local No. 307 continue along the excellent lines already drawn.

A strange coincidence of the affair was the fact that the ball fell on the date of the birthday of William Katz, manager of the Stanley theater, a well known member of the union. Mr. Katz was showered with congratulations by those in attendance and this live film man was voted one of the most popular exhibitors in Philadelphia.

A Fine Program.

It would be unfair to state which form of entertainment was most enjoyed by those present, either the cabaret show or the dancing. A most excellent vaudeville program was offered, the talent being drawn from the members of the union, and it must be said that every act was well presented and the large crowd thoroughly appreciated the efforts of the operators. The dancing was enjoyed to the utmost, nobody seeming to tire, and it was noticed that there were more upon the floor as the evening progressed than during the early hours of the ball. While speaking of dancing, the grand march must be mentioned. It proved to be a beautiful procession led by Benjamin Harrison, a member of No. 8.

Much of the credit for the successful manner in which the ball was conducted is due the officers of the organization. B. F. Bache, John J. Stevens, Walter G. Murray, John A. Harris, Louis Krouse, Abbot Oliver and William Hamilton all deserve special mention for the untiring manner in which they went about preparing for the affair and for the commendable manner in which they handled the actual festivities. It is hoped by many Philadelphiaans that the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local No. 307, enjoy unlimited success, and judging from the general trend of conversation at the ball any future entertainments offered by the union will meet with the same well-deserved success.

CENSORS ACTED "ARBITRARILY." Court of Common Pleas Administrators Sadly Needed Rebuke to Censors.

Philadelphia, Pa.—In a recent opinion handed down in Common Pleas Court No. 2 Judge Auditor John C. Pennington, of the Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture Censors "abused its discretion and acted arbitrarily" in eliminating a number of scenes and sub-titles from a film dealing with motherhood. In effect the court held that motherhood was a fit subject for presentation upon the moving picture screen. The decision is hailed as a decisive victory by local moving picture interests, as it is established that their right of appeal to the Common Pleas Court from decisions of the censors may not be without effect. This follows closely upon the heels of a recent decision stating that the court was no place for viewing moving picture films and that the word of the censors was final except in extraordinary instances.

Joseph Graves' Airdome.

Water Gap, Pa.—Joseph H. Graves has opened an airdome on Main street, Delaware Water Gap, and announces that he has met with most gratifying results considering the earliness of the season. This form of entertainment is new to that place and the folks in that vicinity have taken a liking to the idea, all of which bodes well for the future prosperity of the airdome.

44th Street Airdome Opens.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Messrs. Somborg, Rosen and Geber have opened their airdome at 44th street and Parkside avenue, directly opposite to Fairmount Park, and report a very good patronage to date. This establishment has an ideal location and is frequented by many during the warm summer evenings.

Grand Will Be Larger.

Camden, N. J.—Announcement has been made in Camden to the effect that Abe Greenberg, owner and manager of the Grand theater, Broadway, near Mickle street, has purchased the property of Charles Foulon, 205 Broadway, adjoining the Grand. It was stated that plans are under way to rebuild the Grand and make it larger. The new building will have a front on Broadway of 62 feet and a depth of 125 feet. The seating capacity of the house when completed will be about 1,600.

Silver in the Photoplay Business.

One of the odd features connected with the recent growth in the value of silver is the added expense which it has put on the moving picture industry. Silver is now selling around 72 cents an ounce, owing to heavy European and Asiatic demand. It is well known that it is an essential in photographic chemical work. The Engineer and Mining Journal prints an estimate of the silver used by the moving picture industry as about 15,000,000 ounces yearly, or considerably more than $10,000,000 worth at the present price. If this calculation of consumption be correct the film producers now use about 7 per cent. of the world's annual production, which was estimated at 195,600,000 ounces for 1915.

Philadelphia Notes of Interest.

Steve Trumbette, well known exhibitor of Carbondale, Pa., was a recent visitor to Philadelphia, and paid his respects to many of his friends in moving picture circles before departing. He likewise purchased considerable new equipment from the Swanb Film Service, 1347 Vine street. Manager Stamper, of the Tioza theater, is to be complimented upon his new choralecello. This marvelous instrument, combining an organ, piano and orchestra, is certainly a revelation in the way of good music and folks living in the vicinity of the theater enjoy listening to the music in the evening with the result that Mr. Stamper's receipts have increased accordingly.

Bids are at present being received for alterations and the erection of an addition to the Poplar theater, 902-907 North Sixth street, J. M. Kennedy, Jr., and M. Steeple and Brothers, owners.

MID-NEW YORK LETTER.

By E. O. Weinberg, Special Correspondent, Novelty Theater, Troy, N. Y.

New V-L-S-E Manager at Syracuse.

Syracuse, N. Y.—F. F. Hartich, for a long time assistant to Mr. Partridge, New York branch of V-L-S-E, has been promoted to branch manager at the Syracuse office for the same concern.

Philip Gentile in Albany With Pathe.

Albany, N. Y.—Philip Gentile, at one time assistant manager of the Regent theater, Buffalo, N. Y., is now located at Albany in Pathe exchange.

Sunday Shows in Cohoes.

Cohoes, N. Y.—Picture theaters in Cohoes will soon try to open on Sundays. There is considerable agitation on foot at the present time for and against Sunday opening.

Leases Mechanicville Houses.

Cohoes, N. Y.—Louis Beutner, now interested in both theaters in Cohoes, has secured options on the two houses in Mechanicville, owned by C. Meyerson and F. Howland. It is expected that the deal will be closed by June 1.

E. J. Schmidt With Bluebird.

Albany, N. Y.—E. J. Schmidt, formerly road man for Rex film exchange, Albany, is now covering the entire State for Bluebird photoplays. Mr. Schmidt at one time handled "Neptune's Daughter" in Pennsylvania, and he is very optimistic on conditions in this State.

NORTH CAROLINA NEWS LETTER

By Clarence W. Linn, Special Correspondent, 635 2nd St. N. E., Washington, D. C.

Universal Exchange Incorporates.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—The North Carolina State Corporation Commission has recently granted a charter to the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., of Charlotte. The incorporators are J. J. Lanie, Paul Dubois and E. F. Darline. Mr. Darline is the manager of the business which is quite an extensive one.

New Theaters Hereabouts.

Wilmington, N. C.—The Auditorium at Wrightsville Beach is being enlarged preparatory to the opening of the season.

Raleigh, N. C.—The Strand theater here is practically ready for opening. The formal opening will take place upon the completion of some of the decorations and the installation of the seats. This will take place some time during the month of June.

Goldstone, N. C.—The Acme theater will not be completed for some little time and it may be that the formal opening will be postponed until after the summer months, probably until the middle of September or first of October.

IN THE NATIONAL CAPITAL. Uncle Sam Will Recruit with Films.

Washington, D. C.—The preparedness campaign is to invade the motion picture field, for Uncle Sam is to utilize the theaters in the effort to secure the additional soldiers required to recruit the army to its new strength of 175,000 or more men. To accomplish this the War Department is planning to have pictures made showing every side of army life. The cameramen are to start with the recruiting stations and then in following the work along, take up the drill work. There will be many feet of film showing the athletics in which the soldiers engage when off duty and the other fun and amusement provided for them. It is said that these pictures will be "unvarnished," showing army life as it actually is minus the gold braid. Prospective recruits will be shown the discipline that exists in the army. It is believed that the films will have a real effect upon the youth of the country and greatly increase enlistments.

Summer Films at the Gaity.

Washington, D. C.—The Gaity theater, on Ninth street, Northwest, between E and F streets, has recently closed its regular burlesque season and has been given over to the exhibition of motion pictures during the summer months. A new policy thus prevails and particular attention is to be given to women and children. A ladies' rest room under the supervision and care of a woman attendant has been provided. Smoking, permitted during the regular season, is now prohibited. Bluebird and Red Feather first-run features have been booked for this house.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "A fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

S. Robbins Opens Georgia Theater.

Washington, D. C.—S. Robbins has recently reopened the Georgia theater, on Georgia avenue, Northwest, as well as Schuetzen park, an air dome.

The Elite Theater Reopened.

Washington, D. C.—A firm trading under the name of Keane & Britt have reopened the Elite theater at Fourteenth street and Rhode Island avenue, Northwest, running an all feature program. There are said to be doing a nice comfortable business. This theater has been closed for some time.

School Benefit at the Princess and Apollo.

Washington, D. C.—Playground finances were given a considerable boost when Joseph P. Morgan, manager of the Princess theater, at Twelfth and H streets, Northeast, turned over that house to the teachers and pupils of the Henry T. Blow school for a profit period of one week. A similar performance was also given at the Apollo theater at 624 H street, Northeast, through the courtesy of Harry M. Crandall, for the benefit of the schools of the sixth division. At each of these houses the program included the film subject, "Hiawatha," loans for the occasion by E. T. Crall, of the Imperial theater, Newport News, Va. its owner, through Frank B. Spuler, manager of the L-S-E exchange here. These four films were everything possible to make the affair a success and it is said that the box office receipts were very satisfactory and sufficient to go a long way toward equipping the playgrounds for the summer.

Leo Yates' Fine Office

Washington Film Exchange Has Now Moved Into Its New Quarters and Manager Yates Is Delighted With Them—Some of the Interesting Details—Announces a New and Better Service After June 15.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth St. N. E.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Leo Yates is the happiest film man in Washington now for several reasons. First he is nearing the end of his laborious ride to the moving of the Washington Film Exchange from 419 to 307 Ninth street, Northwest, and in getting the new quarters in shape, and second, he has an exchange that is far superior to the old one in every respect.

When visited by the correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the rooms were in the possession of decorators for they are to be repainted, the partitions are to be refinished, and the ceiling is to be repainted. A new system of lighting is also being installed and when all of this work is completed Mr. Yates will have a very fine place in which to do business.

A considerable amount of space at the front has been partitioned off for office purposes. This space is in turn divided so as to allow of the use of one part thereof as the private office of Manager Yates, while the other section is occupied by the cashier's and bookkeeping departments. Beyond this is another space shut off by partitions which is to be utilized as a reception room. Here is to be installed a magazine table, and it is to bet that the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will always have a prominent place among the magazines that will there be made available for the exhibitors who visit the office. A comfortable chair and photographs of the famous actors and actresses will complete the equipment of this room.

Another room similar to the reception room is to be occupied by the booker, and at one corner of this section will be a place for the handling of incoming and outgoing films. The rest of the space is being devoted to the storage of films and paper, for the shipping room, and at the rear is a space fitted out for rewinding and splicing the reels handled in the exchange.

The entire upper floor of the building is to be used by the poster mounting department and for the storage of paper for Bluebird and Red Feather features.

There is still a lot of work to be done before the exchange will be put into the shape contemplated by Manager Yates, but when the last brushful of paint is deposited on the ceiling and partitions, he will be better situated to do an exchange as is to be found in Washington. "If an exhibitor is pleased with my new quarters," said Mr. Yates. "We are going to find them a whole lot cooler this summer, the rooms are better situated and we are going to find it much easier to serve our customers. The various departments are so separated as to avoid confusion. At the old place there was little or no privacy for the office and we were often interrupted while conversing with customers by having an expressman or some other person wander into the office and perhaps dump a load of films into one corner of the Ninth street car stop almost in front of the building and a few steps away are the Pennsylvania avenue cars. This exchange can now be easily reached from any section of the city."

Mr. Yates is also announcing that beginning with June 15, he will be able to offer a new four-reel lock box service. Up to the present time he has only been changing reels with the Philadelphia office of the Interstate Film Company. The two offices have been completely separated and Washington will hereafter buy four reels daily besides the Red Feather productions. One particular advantage of this to the exhibitor is that all of the reels he will get under the new service will be of the same size, and those who show Universal will not have to go elsewhere to secure a fourth reel.

V. D. Shreve Buys Reverse Theater.

Washington, D. C.—V. D. Shreve has recently taken over the ownership of the Reverse theater, on Georgia avenue, Northwest, and this house will hereafter be managed by W. O. Wren, at one time manager of the Strand, one of the string of motion picture houses operated by Tom Moore. Mr. Reverse was formerly operated by Mrs. Haveling, who has since retired from the motion picture business in this city.

New National Film Company.

Washington, D. C.—The National Film Company has been incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia, with a capital stock divided into 200 shares of a par value of $50 each, "to manufacture, photograph and print moving picture films, and to sell said films or other accessories pertaining to the film trade." The trustees who are to manage the business for the first year are Isaac B. Nordlinger, Benjamin A. Bowles and George H. McComber. They are all engaged in business at 2133 Pennsylvania avenue, Northwest.

The National Film Company will produce, among other things, catchy advertising films. Prior to incorporation it engaged in this same line with good results.

Universal Opens Clarksburg Office.

Clarksburg, W. Va.—The Interstate Film Company, which markets the Universal program in this territory, is to open a branch office in Clarksburg, W. Va. The Bluebird and Red Feather features will be served from the Washington office as heretofore. Surplus films and paper are being shipped from Washington to form a nucleus of the stock to be kept on hand for the service in West Virginia. The office is to be opened on or about June 15. M. H. Seigel has just left Washington for the West Virginia territory, intending to travel through the state for several weeks with the features of the Bluebird and Red Feather brands. Mr. Seigel expects hereafter to spend one-half his time in West Virginia and the balance in the state of Maryland.

April's War Tax from Theaters.

Washington, D. C.—Motion picture exhibitors and others engaged in the show business will be relieved of a great burden when Congress repeals the so-called war emergency revenue law which assesses extra taxes upon all theaters according to seating capacity, and it is said upon pretty good authority that this course will be taken to become effective the first of July.

The latest figures available at the Office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue are for the month of April. The show that during that thirty-day period there was paid into Uncle Sam's coffers the sum of $22,104.92 as against $21,852.70 in April, 1915. For the ten months ending April, 1916, the figures are $218,948.92 as against $258,723.99 for the ten months ending with April, 1915.

Clean's Clean Theater

Exhibitor Barnes of Olean, N. Y., Offers His Patrons $10 If They Can Find a Particle of Dirt on Any of His Seats When He Opens—Interesting Notes About Theaters and Exchanges in Buffalo—Screen Club's Outings.

By Joseph McGuire, 611 Erie County Bank Bldg., Buffalo, Special Correspondent.

OLEAN, N. Y.—"An all-feature program is the attraction at my theater," said J. W. Barnes, proprietor of the Grand, Olean, N. Y., who was a recent visitor in Buffalo. "Cleanliness is a rule always enforced at the Grand. If a person rubs a silk handkerchief over any seat in the house and picks up a particle of dirt I will give him $10. The walls were painted at a cost of $1,000 and the curtain came from the Burnham studios. My house has always passed the state fire inspection with flying colors. I use a new 6-A Powers machine. We lay particular stress on good order, and in eight years I have never had to elect a patron. My audience co-operates with me in keeping up the high standard of the Grand, and after a show even the floors are in a clean condition. To avoid all delays and disappointments I always have my shows booked two months in advance. To accomplish this I make frequent visits to the film exchanges in my territory, and for new ideas keep close tabs on the moving picture business in New York and other cities."

J. R. Levy New World Film Manager.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The newly-appointed manager of the World Film Buffalo branch says: "We shall use every means to co-operate with the exhibitors and give them superior service."

"No matter what the exhibitors' wants may be, we shall make every effort to please. We are featuring the Brady-made pictures, which we believe are second to none in the field."

Mr. Levy has joined the Buffalo Screen Club. He was visited by Y. T. Drum, assistant general manager of the World Film.

"In a number of cities from New York to Minneapolis and Dallas, which I recently visited," said Mr. Drum, "I found many evidences of prosperity, and the exhibitors generally were in an optimistic mood. We are catering both to the masses as well as the classes in the production of our pictures, and, with this popular appeal, their hold on the public everywhere throughout the country is assured."

Prosperity in Port Allegany, Pa.

Port Allegany, Pa.—A. Berg, of Berg & Ristine, proprietors of the Grand and Star theaters, Port Allegany, Pa., was a recent visitor in Buffalo.

"Moving picture fans in the smaller towns, like ours, are as discriminating as those in the big cities," said Mr. Berg, "and I am always on the lookout for up-to-date films and advertising features when I visit Buffalo. The moving picture business in Port Allegany is now on the top wave, because the glass factories, one of our principal industries, are booming, and there is plenty of money in circulation. My firm, with several merchants of the town, has given an appropriation for an old-home week celebration the week of July 3d. This will draw a big crowd to the town, and we hope to get a share of the benefits at our theaters."

A. Berg.

Exhibitor Cordingly Sick.

Oswego, N. Y.—Jerome Wilson, road representative of the Mutual Film, Buffalo, brings word that Manager Cordingly of the Gem theater, Oswego, N. Y., is still suffering from a serious illness.

The Hiltona to Be Enlarged.

Hilton, N. Y.—E. C. Weeks, proprietor of the Hiltona moving picture theater of the Gem theater, Oswego, N. Y., is still suffering from a serious illness. Mr. Weeks is noted for using an aggressive policy in pleasing his patrons.

Screen Club Outings This Summer.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The discussion of plans for a series of summer outings was a feature of the last meeting of the Buffalo Screen Club. Suggestions for this line were made by Manager Mack of the General, and if the plans go through, Buffalo exchange men, exhibitors and their wives will have enjoyable trips to Niagara river resorts. The members may also motor to the Buffalo Automobile Club's country headquarters at Clarence.

Items from Buffalo.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Lionel Edel, brother of Harold Edel, manager of the Strand theater, Buffalo, has been appointed assistant manager of the Strand theater, Syracuse. He succeeds Archie Moses, who has taken a similar position with the Eckel theater, Syracuse.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Ben Abrams was a Buffalo caller. He was handling the Universal feature, Madame Pavlova in "The Dumb Girl of Portici."

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. Feinen, formerly of the Elite theater, Buffalo, has taken over the Marlowe theater, this city. F. E. Grubb is now in charge of the Elite theater.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Rosedale, Buffalo, owned by the Rosedale Amusement Co., has been closed.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harold B. Franklin, manager of the Lyric theater, Buffalo, announces a new summer schedule for performances at his house. The matinee performances will remain as in the past, but on account of the lengthy day the evening shows will commence a half hour later than heretofore.

Geneseo, N. Y.—G. A. Hallstead of the Rex theater, Geneseo, N. Y.; C. H. Landers of the Fredonia opera house, Fredonia, N. Y., and F. C. Fisher of the Fisher theater, Fallville, N. Y., have taken on the Paramount service.

BALTIMORE NEWS LETTER.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Special Representative.

E. G. Evans Heads Mutual Exchange.

BALTIMORE, Md.—Edwin G. Evans, who for the past three years has been employed in the Washington branch of the Mutual Film, has been made manager of the branch Mutual exchange in this city. He succeeds J. T. Cunningham, who has resigned. A. Ramer, formerly of New York, has also become associated with the Mutual office here. Mr. Evans is well acquainted in Baltimore, having handled the Mutual master pictures and other feature pictures in this territory. He states that he will endeavor to give the exhibitors the same courteous treatment to which they have been accustomed. He is now making arrangements with the new booking arrangements introduced by the Mutual, whereby exhibitors can book a series of pictures featuring one star, to receive one a month.

First Milo Release Shown.

Baltimore, Md.—The first release of the Milo Film Corporation of Baltimore, entitled "The Charity Ball Game," was given a premier showing at the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, on June 13th. L. A. DeHoff, the manager, states that he will use it as part of his program for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, June 13th to 15th. Several prominent merchants of Baltimore were present at the exhibition, which was held at 11:45 A. M. Among them were A. S. Weinberg and Jacob Epstein, of the Baltimore Bargain House. The proceeds raised through the rental of the film will go for the benefit of the Hospital School for Crippled Children. Part of this picture was made at the Oriole Park ball grounds on May 29th. A. Kurnick was the photographer.

Grand Attired for Eagles.

Baltimore, Md.—Charles E. Anderson, manager of the Grand theater, 511-17 South 3rd street, Highlandtown, Baltimore, has just had elaborate decorations of bunting, pennants, flags and shields placed on the exterior of the house in large theater. The house has taken on quite a gala array and has been done in honor of the Eagles' convention, which is to be held here on June 24th to 10th.

J. A. Barry With Milo.

Baltimore, Md.—J. A. Barry, formerly associated with the force on the Fine Arts Film Co., Los Angeles, Cal., as assistant director, is now with the Milo Corporation, this city, and will shortly begin active operations for them.

E. Powell Leaves the New Pickwick.

Baltimore, Md.—Edwin Powell, who for several years has managed the New Pickwick theater, 115 North Howard street, gave up his position on June 1st and has left for New York, where he will become associated with the firm of William H. Nye, a building contractor. G. Horton Gaffney, who recently purchased this theater, will now manage it himself.

Pavlova Playing Record Houses.

Baltimore, Md.—Through the hard work of J. Blechman, manager of the Picture Garden theater, "The Dumb Girl of Portici" in which Anna Pavlova is being featured, is now playing to record houses at this theater. It was stated that the picture would be held for two weeks, to be followed by "Who Are My Children?" with a three weeks' run at this house.

Children's Programs at the Parkway.

The Parkway theater, Baltimore, of which Bernard Deplin, Jr., is manager, has been conducting the Special Children's performances for about a year and they have proven to be a great success both from a financial standpoint and as an advertising medium. Following is a list of some of the attractions he has played: Mary Pickford in Cinderella—Famous Players. Alice in Wonderland—Nonpareil. Little Mary Sunshine. Good Little Devil—Famous Players. The Wishing Ring—World Film Corp. The Little Devil Girl—Biograph. Rip Van Winkle—Republic. The Foundling—Famous Players. Wild Flower—Famous Players. The Patch Work Girl of Oz—Oz Film Co. The Mad Toy Maker—Oz Film Co. Rumpelstiltskin—Thanshouer. The Goose Girl—Lasky. The Old Homestead—Paramount. Treasure Island—Warner's. The Prince and the Pauper—Famous Players. Molly Make Believe—Famous Players. Uncle Tom's Cabin—Kalem. Loyalty. The Girl of Yesterday.

The Golden Locks.
The Camp Fire Girls.

This list doubtless will be of interest to our readers, as almost every week a request comes from some exhibitor regarding children's programs.

Show Mashers Punished.

Baltimore, Md.—On Tuesday, May 23d, Justice Gerech of the Eastern Police Station sentenced a man to two months in the House of Correction for hugging a seven-year-old girl in a moving picture show on South Broadway. The child was accompanied by her two sisters and they had the man arrested.

In the Western Police Station a man was fined $11.45 on a charge of assault preferred against him by a woman who stated that as she was standing near him in a crowded moving picture theater on Lexington street on Saturday night, May 20th, he tried to catch hold of her hand. The man claimed it was an accident.

New Owners for Dream.

Baltimore, Md.—The Dream theater, 582-4 North Gay street, which was formerly owned by Louis Katzner, has been sold by him to the Jorio Brothers. This theater will now be under the management of Herbert C. Jorio, who states that he intends to show only the highest grade pictures.

Ford's Treasurer Back.

Baltimore, Md.—This has nothing to do with the famous automobile man, but with Thomas Gavan, treasurer of Ford's opera house, who has now completely recovered from an operation for appendicitis. His many friends are calling at the opera house to give him the glad hand on his recovery.

Broadway Theater Rebuilt.

Baltimore, Md.—The Broadway theater, 509 South Broadway, opened its doors to the public on Monday, May 23d, finely arrayed, after the extensive remodeling which it has been given by the management. Fire destroyed this theater in the first part of February and it has now been entirely rebuilt. New Edison No. 7 hand driven projection machines and a hand theater screen have been installed. The house is now under the management of J. Louis Rome, assisted by I. R. Martin, who, it is understood, will succeed Mr. Rome as manager in a short time. Before the theater was destroyed by fire Mr. Martin was the manager.

Property to Bushman.

Baltimore, Md.—On Wednesday, May 17th, conveyance was made by Maude B. Blakiston to Francis X. Bushman of the 110-acre Blakiston estate, known as Thornton Park, located in the Green Spring Valley. The title was guaranteed by the Title Guarantee and Trust Company. F. N. Iglehart & Co. were the brokers through whom the deal was consummated.

In Detroit.

Alma, Mich.—The new moving picture house owned by C. A. Miller will be ready to open about the first of June. A Satin Goldfish Screen is being installed.

Grand Haven, Mich.—The Birchwood theater, Grand Haven, owned by N. and H. S. Robbins, will open the early part of June. It is a new enterprise in every respect.

Whitehall, Mich.—A new theater is being erected by the Whitehall Dramatic Club.

Detroit, Mich.—Harry R. Guest, of the famous newspaper family of Guests, has been appointed editor of the Weekly Film News, the house organ of the John H. Kunskey theaters. He succeeds Howard O. Pierce.

Detroit's New Ordinance

McCabe Measure, Now Before City's Common Council, Makes Stringent Regulations Governing the Storage of Cellulose Film—May Put Some Exchanges to Great Inconvenience—Ordinance Committee to Hold Public Hearing.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Special Correspondent.

DETROIT, MICH.—The film industry of Detroit has been greatly upset for the past few days over an ordinance governing the storage of cellulose film and introduced into the common council on Tuesday, May 24. It has been referred to the ordinance committee, although there is every likelihood that it will pass, especially in view of the disastrous fire of one of the local film exchanges a few weeks ago.

The ordinance in question is one of the most important in connection with the most rapid ever introduced in the common council. The ordinance is too long to be printed here. It has been published in Detroit and should be carefully read. Should it pass it will mean that quite a number of city residents will have to vacate their premises now occupied, as it would be impossible to make them come up to the requirements of the ordinance. The ordinance was drafted by John C. McCabe, city health officer, with the assistance of the building inspector and the corporation counsel.

The ordinance committee has agreed to grant a hearing to the managers of the local exchanges in connection with the proposed new ordinance regulating exchange buildings. There are some parts of the ordinance which are favored by the exchangers and other parts to which they are strenuously opposed. They will have full opportunity to express themselves before the ordinance committee at an early date.

New Big U. Exchange.

Detroit, Mich.—The Universal Film Co. and the Bluebird exchange, which this week moved from their temporary quarters at 133 Jefferson avenue, to the building at the southeast corner of Cass and Fort streets. This building is of solid brick, two stories high and is fireproof in every respect. A special fireproof vault is being built in the rear. When all completed the new quarters of these film companies will certainly rank with the best in the country. The building is centrally located, only four blocks from the heart of the city, one block from the post office and a stone's throw from the Detroit News and the Detroit Journal. For the present only the first floor and basement will be occupied, but ultimately the entire second floor will be added, so that the Universal and Bluebird will consume the entire building.

When seen by the World representative, George W. Weeks, general manager, stated: "The fire inconvenienced us very slightly because the New York office was exceedingly prompt in sending on new film and additional paper. But we want to say a word about our customers; they are a loyal bunch—they stood by realizing our predicament—and not a single one became impatient. They co-operated with us in every way they could, and I can't speak too high of this fine spirit of loyalty. In our new quarters we will be in a better position than ever before to give our customers good service." Just as soon as the new building is in readiness Manager Weeks will hold an informal opening for exhibitors in Detroit and Michigan.

E. O. Gurney, general auditor of exchanges for the Universal Film Co., has been spending several weeks in Detroit.

John C. Graham, special representative in Michigan for the Universal, was married on May 23th to Miss Margaret Hough. Congratulations, Bert. This should be an incentive to work harder than ever.

Robert S. Bendell, manager of the Bluebird features for Michigan, reports: "We haven't a single exchange to make. Business is getting better all the time and we are taking on new accounts every day." J. L. McCurdy now looks after the road work in Michigan for Bluebird productions, while Ira H. Cohen looks after Ohio.

Notes of Kunskey Theaters.

Detroit, Mich.—The Alhambra theater, Woodward and Kenilworth avenues, Detroit, has returned to the daily change policy for the summer months. The same statement applies to the Strand theater, Grand River and Fourteenth streets, both houses being owned by John H. Kunskey. At the Alhambra boxes are being installed in the rear of the main floor auditorium.

Mr. Kunskey has abandoned the idea of charging 50 cents per year for the Weekly Film News, his weekly house organ, and will send it out free each week to those who request that their name be placed on the mailing list. The Weekly Film News unquestionably is the finest house organ of its kind published in the United States by any exhibitor. It is more than a house organ—it is a film news magazine.

Jack Mowitt Managing the Knickerbocker.

Detroit, Mich.—Jack Mowitt, former manager of the Empire theater, has been appointed manager of the Knickerbocker theater, Jefferson and the Belle Isle bridge.

Detroit Notes of Interest.

The Avenue theater, Woodward and Jefferson avenues, will remain closed until sometime in August, when it will reopen as a second music comedy theater.

John E. Ryder, who for several months has been doing special work for the Esanay serial, "The Strange Case of Mary Page," is now representing the latest Esanay release, "The Little Girl Next Door." This film started an indefinite run at the Grand Circus theater, 301 Woodward avenue, Detroit, on May 25 and has been showing daily gains in business. All seats are 25 cents and the film is shown continuously from 9 a. m. to 11 p. m. Mr. Ryder makes his headquarters at the General Film Co. office, 100 Griswold street.

The oldest moving picture theater in Detroit still in operation is the Princess on Woodward avenue, between Congress and Larned streets, managed by Louis A. Chapoton. The interesting point about this theater is that it was originally started by John H. Kunskey, now the owner of the Strand theater in New York and chain of houses in Buffalo and other cities. In a later issue we will have something more to say about the Princess.

Detroit, Mich.—The Kercheval theater at 456 Kercheval avenue, has been leased for commercial purposes. The building will be remodelled into stores.

Jackson, Mich.—Arthur A. Frudenfeld has been appointed manager of the Orpheum theater, Jackson, succeeding Frank R. Lammpan, who has engaged in another line of business. Mr. Frudenfeld comes from Waterloo, N. Y., where he was manager of the Majestic and has been engaged at theaters in Springfield, Ill., and Davenport, Ia. He has also been in the newspaper business.

John C. Kunskey and George Trendle, of Detroit, have already made reservations for the thirtieth annual cruise of the Detroit Board of Commerce.

Hit at Sunday Baseball

Nashville, Tennessee, Authorities Are Proposing to Have Sabbath Games of Baseball Declared Nuisances Like Picture Shows—Exhibitors Are Hoping That They Will Soon Get Voters Tired of Blue Laws.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1104 Starke Bldg., Louisville, Special Correspondent.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Taking the recent State Supreme Court decision on moving pictures as a basis, the local authorities are endeavoring to so apply the law as to stop Sunday baseball in Nashville. Sunday moving picture shows were declared a nuisance under the old blue laws, and finally closed up. While there is no state law apparently relative to stopping ball games on Sunday, it is figured that it would be comparatively easy to declare baseball games nuisances if picture shows could be designated. In some states the courts have held that while the common law principles were applicable to picture shows and theatrical productions they were not applicable to baseball. City Attorney Albert G. Ewing, Jr., Attorney James A. Watts and Attorney John R. Aust are about to bring the question to an issue. Watts is backed by the ministerial association and contends that ball playing is illegal while Aust supports a contrary contention and represents the baseball association.

Moving picture men are of the opinion that the Sunday closing agitation is being carried too far by the ministers' contention, and that the citizens of the state will shortly become so tired of being tied down by a lot of ancient laws that they will take the trouble to support bills at the next session of the legislature which will permit the theaters, and the ball parks, etc., to run without a miserable being waged at all times.

Sunday Exhibitors Fined.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—At a recent session of the criminal court judgment was passed on the charges against picture exhibitors, namely, C. T. Bobo, H. M. Lusk, M. H. Silverman and Peter Block, who were indicted along with Howell Graham several months ago, for operating picture theaters on Sunday. The plea for the decision of the state supreme court. The men were all indicted, charged with "conducting a nuisance." Each was fined $5 and costs by Judge McReynolds. When the indictments were returned it was agreed that Howell Graham should test the constitutionality of the act upon which the charges were based, and the other defendants should abide by the decision in that case. The state supreme court affirmed Judge McReynolds' decision that it was much further than he did in its findings.

Free Picture Shows in City Parks.

Nashville, Tenn.—Subject to such regulations as the Board of Park Commissioners shall deem proper to prescribe, free motion picture exhibitions will be given in the city parks this summer. Secretary John Lewis has been authorized to close a contract with the Crescent Amusement Co., and has been instructed to endeavor to secure the presentation of pictures having an educational value along with comedy and other subjects. The performances really cost the city nothing as they are presented under a contract with the Crescent Amusement Co., whereby it is agreed that the company be permitted to devote one-third of its time to showing advertising matter at the performances.

Arthur Lane's Line of Autos.

Memphis, Tenn.—Arthur Lane, the new manager of the Strand theater in Bellevue, which is operated in connection with a summer garden, is making things hum in his latest venture. Mr. Lane is manager of the Orpheum theater, a legitimate house during the winter months, and his opening at the Strand compared favorably with former Orpheum openings. There was a big line of autos extending the full block for the opening of the picture theater. The success of the opening was largely due to excellent newspaper and other publicity.

Publicity in Ad. Puzzle.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Princess theater recently conducted a special little puzzle contest for the ladies through the columns of the "Tennessean." Each day except Saturday an ad was inserted in the papers in which one line was missing. This line was to be found in other columns of the paper. Every lady found the missing line and placing it in its correct position was admitted free of charge upon presentation of the advertisement.

LOUISVILLE SMALLER HOUSES PLAYING SHORT SUBJECTS.

Managers Find That Transient Patronage Doesn't Want Features.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1104 Starke Bldg., Louisville, Ky. Special Correspondent.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—According to several local Louisville managers, especially those operating at five cents, and playing to a transit patronage, long photoplays are not producing much money for such theaters, and most of the small downtown houses are going back to single and double reel productions. Good comedy, drama and melodrama are all good in short subjects, but the average person stopping into the five-cent house is endeavoring merely to kill a few idle minutes, and hasn't the time nor inclination to watch a long photoplay. For instance, in the middle of the day many people drop in to spend a part of the noon hour, but haven't time to stay an hour or an hour and a half to see a five-reel subject run off. Even two and three-reel subjects have been found a little longer than the popular demand, it is claimed, and the little houses are leaving the long photoplays to the big theaters catering to the higher class business. Judge W. A. Kinney of the Princess Amusement Company recently adopted a new program of short stuff which is coming back strong.

Screen Club Progress Slow.

Louisville, Ky.—Plans of local exhibitors to organize a local screen club, composed of exhibitors, film men, newspaper publicity agents, etc., are working out very slowly, and so far there has been no definite action taken in the matter. Louisville is badly in need of such an organization and it is hoped that the organizers will be successful in getting the plan over.

Another Boat Show.

Dover, Ky.—The Bryan Company, operators of a show boat known as the "Princess," recently purchased an additional barge, 40x140 feet, on which to build a theater seating 800 people. The barge will be equipped with all modern conveniences, electric lights, etc., and will be towed by a small steamer supplied with a calloope.

EXHIBITORS.

A new list of special correspondents is printed on another page. Send items of news interest to the nearest office.

Wants Chairs.

J. Dubinsky & Sons, of Newport, Ky., have asked for the names and addresses of manufacturers of opera chairs and chairs suitable for use in moving picture theaters.

Manager Ward Reopens the Alhambra.

Richmond, Ky.—Miss Anna Belle Ward, manager of the Alhambra theater, of Richmond, Ky., has reopened the house which was closed for several weeks while being enlarged. New chairs have been installed, a balcony built, the building extended back, and the entire theater done over.

E. A. Lawson Takes the Parkland.

Louisville, Ky.—E. A. Lawson has taken over the Parkland theater, which was recently closed by T. H. Johnson. Mr. Lawson has taken on Universal service, and expects to make the little house prove profitable.

Worth Noting in Louisville.

George Strong, who for three years was with the L. H. Howe travel pictures, has taken a position as operator at the Star theater of Louisville.

Virgil Winters, who recently opened the operating booth at the new Arista theater, has resigned to become operator at Keith's house, which is running summer pictures.

Joe Hebert, of the Unicorn Film Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., and S. N. Lohrer, of the Union Film Co., of Cleveland, O., were recently in Louisville calling on the exhibitors. Walter Vandewalker, of the General Film Company's Indianapolis office, was also in and made bookings with the Orpheum and Westonian.

Lee Goldberg, manager of the Mary Anderson theater, and temporary manager of the Keith theater, had a visitor last week in the person of J. J. Murdoch, a director of the Keith interests. The local Keith house has been showing the "Battle Cry of Peace" to good crowds. The picture was shown last winter at the Mary Anderson.

J. H. Smith, of Salem, Ind., and J. Wells of the Scenic theater of Scottsville, Ind., were recent visitors at the Louisville Mutual office. Ben Cohen, representing the new Clara Kimball Young Film Co., was also in the city and visited Percy L. Smith, manager of the Mutual office.

Rowland Clark, manager of the Arista theater of Lebanon, Ky., was in Louisville last week, calling on some of the film exchange offices and local exhibitors.

Heilner, Ky.—R. F. McClure and J. M. Pickell are now operating the Rex theater. The firm has moved the theater from the third floor of the Mullins building to the ground floor of the same building formerly occupied by G. W. Barkley & Co.

Extensive improvements have been made to the Jo Jon theater of Leitchfield, Ky., which has been done over and equipped with an entirely new front.

T. E. Neer, a special representative of the V-L-S-E Cincinnati, O., office, has been making a trip through Central Kentucky. At Danville, Ky., he closed a contract with Dr. John E. Stout, of the Danville Opera House, for showing a number of high class pictures, such as "The Ne'er Do Well," "Sherlock Holmes," "God's Country," "Woman," etc.

Middleboro, Ky.—The Brown Amusement Co., of Middleboro, is reported to be making arrangements to build a new three-story brick building in which a moving picture theater will be located.

Maysville, Ky.—The Washington theater of Maysville, has made several minor improvements, including a number of additional electric lights at the front and side entrances.

INDIANA NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

Bonfire Burns Airplane.

WASHINGTON, Ind.—A small boy destroyed the source of one of his chief pleasures here recently when he set fire to the airplane, a motion picture open air theater which had been closed, but which local men were planning to open for the summer run. The small boy started a bonfire near the frame side of the airplane and shortly afterward the theater was a mass of blazing timber. The loss was estimated at $500.

Big Tin Can Day in Spencer.

Spencer, Ind.—"Tin can day" proved a success at Spencer, just as it has proved a success in many of the smaller cities of the state. "Tin Cans for Movie Tickets"—each ten cans entitling the owner to admission to the theater—brought about a "million" cans to the theater front. The cans otherwise were worthless. The city health authorities thanked the Spencer manager for getting rid of the cans—they said they had tried and failed. Indianapolis papers carried some publicity, local papers were full. The plan is a success.

Gayety Airplane Opens.

Lafayette, Ind.—Horton Brothers' Gayety airplane has opened for the summer run after the big downtown open air theater was repainted and redecorated throughout. New machinery was installed as well as a ventilating system that is a novelty in an airplane. The Gayety has always been popular and this season promises to surpass others of preceding years.

Promoting Children's Films in Lebanon.

Lebanon, Ind.—Lebanon has taken up the idea of censored pictures for children and the women of the city who are leaders in social work have banded themselves together to provide this sort of entertainment for the kids. The theater managers of the city, it is understood, will get together with the women and the censored shows will be distributed around among the various theaters.

Nat Wolf Managing Terre Haute House.

Terre Haute, Ind.—Nat Wolf is the new manager of the American. Nat comes to this city from Chicago, where he was connected with the Interstate Amusement company as manager of the Playtex. Nat was formerly associated with the Alfred Hamburger company, owners of a string of fourteen houses. Wolf says there are some things the local theater needs to put it in the Terre Haute class, and he is going to work immediately to provide those things.

CLEVELAND NEWS LETTER.

By Hubert Persons, Special Correspondent, 410 Standard Theater Building.

Local Film by Social Leaders.

CLEVELAND, O.—Society men and women here, under the leadership of Mrs. James R. Garfield, are to appear in a photoplay entitled "The Perils of Society," to be screened at the Metropolitan theater the latter part of June. The proceeds are for the benefit of the French War Orphan Relief Fund. Mrs. Garfield is chairman of the Cleveland committee in charge of the fund and induced other society folk to become film stars for the good of the cause. Miss Katherine Hinkle of New York, is directing the making of the picture.

Screening Riley's Poems.

pany, is at work on a scenario dramatizing the poems of James Whitcomb Riley. The dramatic right to one of Riley's best-known works, "An Old Squirehead of Mine," has been purchased by Mr. McLaughlin from the Bobbs-Merrill Company of Indianapolis.

Mr. McLaughlin's screen and stage version of the poems will contain all the characters so dear to lovers of Riley, such as Little Orphan Annie, the Raggedy Man, Doc Sifers and Squire Perkins.

New Southern Theater Opens.

Cleveland, O.—Mayor Davis and councilman Zmunt delivered addresses at the ceremonies marking the opening of the new Southern theater, W. 22nd street and Frane avenue. The new house seats 1,000 and is one of the prettiest picture theaters in the city. G. T. Sharp and wife will manage it. The house will make a special effort to present only programs with big features.

Arrested for Banned Film

In Cincinnati, Exchange Manager, Newly in Charge of Local Office, Gets a Suspended Fine on Account of Film in Circulation Before He Came to the Exchange—Need of Some Better Way to Identify Censored Film.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First Nat'l Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, Special Correspondent.

CINCINNATI, O.—H. M. Berman, formerly of Kansas City, but for the past three weeks manager of the Cincinnati Buckeye Film Co., ran into an unexpected and exceptionally hard job very shortly after he took charge of things in the Queen City, in the shape of the vigilance of the local self-appointed censors who have been making the fur fly so busily of late. A certain film, "Dad's Doings and Dirty Dollars," came under the ban of the Ohio Board of Censors, but had none the less come into the possession of the Buckeye Company before Mr. Berman's arrival, and apparently had been making the rounds of some of the smaller theaters. The censors here viewed it and investigated.

The result was that during its exhibition at Othello Dempsey's Pekin theater it was seized and Mr. Berman, who was perfectly innocent of any knowledge of the circumstances, was arrested, charged with violating the censorship statute. He explained his position in court, and in view of the facts the heavy fine of $300 and costs, which was imposed, was suspended, with a warning that any similar violation would mean that the fine would be collected. Mr. Dempsey was held blameless, and was not arrested. Mr. Berman, who was with the Metro organization in Kansas City, and is familiar with the operations of local censors, says he appreciated the cordial welcome extended him in Cincinnati, and intends to use every effort to fight shy of trouble hereafter.

Need Better Identification of Censored Film.

As a result of the several clashes between film exchange men, exhibitors and censors, local and state, in Cincinnati, it is more than possible that some plan will be evolved, with the approval of the authorities at Columbus, looking to the more efficient operation of the censorship laws, for the elimination of objectionable films and the protection of the exhibitor against the trouble which results from showing films which he has no way of knowing have been turned down. At present the stamp of the board on the film is all that the exhibitor has to go by in determining whether everything is all right, and this, as in the case of Manager Edison, has caused four of the largest theaters in the city, is not always conclusive nor a sufficient protection against the annoyance and humiliation of arrest. There is a Cincinnati

Three Picture Hits.

Cleveland, O.—Four downtown theaters deemed the photoplays they had booked last week as strong enough to run the house week without a change. "The Girl with the Green Eyes" was at the Opera House; "The Battle of Hearts," at the Standard; "The Law Decides," at the Alhambra, and "The Suicide," at the Orpheum. All four productions drew crowds

Filmed the Kiddies Who Came.

Cleveland, O.—The Alhambra theater instituted a pleasing novelty at its children's matinee this week, when every child attending was given an opportunity to get in a picture for the children. The pictures were taken in front of the theater and will be shown in the house in a few days.

The Monarch and the Wind-a-Meer theaters have also adopted the policy of giving special matinees for children.

nati office of the State Industrial Commission, in charge of a deputy, with a force of fourteen men, who have been acting as film inspectors, in addition to their other duties, but this force has no apparent authority to enforce the mandates of the State Board of Censors, even if it had exact knowledge of its orders.

Religious Films at the Bijou.

Piqua, O.—Under special arrangements with the management of the Bijou, at Piqua, O., the house is being used on Sundays, Monday afternoon, and evening, by the local representatives of the International Bible Students' Association for the exhibitions of religious films. The first of a series, "The Creation of the Universe," was shown recently to large houses, the attendance being the larger by reason of the fact that no admission is charged.

Will Remodel the Columbia.

Portsmouth, O.—Manager Fred N. Tynes of the Columbia theater, Portsmouth, O., has let a contract for the remodeling of his house, with provision for additional space, which will enable him to increase its seating capacity to about 800, making it one of the largest houses in that part of Ohio. Work has already begun, and will be pushed so as to be completed before the end of the summer, and in ample time for the beginning of the fall season.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager Holish of the V-L-S-E local office announces that the forthcoming releases look quite as good as anything yet seen on the program. William Gillette's performance of his famous stage success, "Sherlock Holmes," is one of the new group, which includes "Salvation Joan," Kathryn Williams in "The Crisis," and others are receiving heavy bookings.

McMahon & Jackson, controlling some fine features on a State rights basis, received an inquiry recently which indicates the extensive popularity of moving pictures, and to the extent to which THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is read. The letter came from J. P. Caswell, of Long City, Alaska, where he has a picture theater, and indicated a desire for film services. Mr. Caswell had heard of the Cincinnati firm through another exhibitor, who was a regular reader of the WORLD, it appears, and therefore applied for service and information.

Strike of Expressmen in Chicago Brings Company Has Been Shipping Films —Film Men on the Job There and By Frank H. Madison, 6749 Emerald

PEORIA, Ill.—Peoria has become a film center because of the strike of expressmen in Chicago. Unable to get films in and out of Chicago by the usual methods, the American Express Company has been shipping stuff to Peoria in carload lots by freight and transferring it to other points from here.

The location is a good one for motion picture men supplying the Illinois field and several of the exchanges have men on the ground looking after the shipments. The Famous Players' Film service opened headquarters in the Federal warehouse. The Adams Express Company is partially solving the problem by making Galesburg a more important transfer point. Many means are used by Illinois exhibitors to secure films from the Chicago exchange during the express strike in the windy city. Bert Lindsay, one of the managers of the Star at DeKalb, drives to Chicago in his auto. Manager Harry E. Graupp of the Orpheum at Rockford is doing the same thing. When possible a week's supply of films is being secured. Manager Joseph Hogan of the Dreamland at Seneca missed a feature and had to go to Morris and Marseilles to borrow enough for his show. In Morris the proprietors of the Empire and the Regal take turns about in going to Chicago to get the show.

Local Comedy Paid Well.

Springfield, Ill.—"Us Three," a local comedy with a "Fatty" comedian, produced by the Illinois Film Company of this city, did so well at the Grand theater that the company is planning to produce a comedy a week. The Grand will have the first showings.

Peoria, Ill.—Motion Picture Operators' Union No. 434 attended in a body the funeral of John J. Spelman, one of the members.

Golden, Ill.—When the electric lights were turned on here for the first time it made good motion pictures possible. Quite properly the photoplay had a big part in the municipal celebration of the event.

Mattoon, Ill.—Manager Uran is expending $2,000 in improving the "K" and Grand theaters. Both get new interior decorations, new projectors and the Grand receives a syphon automatic ventilating system.

Omaha Expects Fine Exchange Building

Jake Schlank, Proprietor of the Hipp Theater, Plans to Build a Fireproof Building for Local Distributors.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.
OMAHA, NEB.—Omaha may have its film business concentrated. Jake Schlank, proprietor of the Hipp theater, proposes to erect on Douglas street between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets a four or five-story fireproof building especially designed for film exchanges and the other offices allied with the motion picture industry. The site will be used for a photoplay theater, but if enough of the film folk take to the idea the plans will be broadened. Lower insurance rates are likely in the proposed building. There are ten exchanges in Omaha.

Referendum on Sabbath Shows in Seward.

Minneapolis, Minn.—C. D. Wells, formerly a traveling salesman handling films for himself, will cover Iowa and the Dakotas with Billie Burke's "Gloria's Romance" for the Kleine-Edison Film Service.

W. L. Merrill Heads Local Unicorn.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Friends of W. L. Merrill learn that he has returned to Minneapolis after several months spent in New York. Mr. Merrill formerly was manager of the United Film Service of Minneapolis. He will assume charge here of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation.

J. D. Thatcher, Jr., Handling Serial.

Minneapolis, Minn.—J. D. Thatcher, Jr., of the Mutual exchange, formerly with the New Empress theater at Kansas City, is aiding in the work of booking "The Great of the Submarine." The date also is engaged in the sale of the film.

John May to Travel for Mutual.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Mutual exchange has secured the services of John May, the former Metro manager, who has accepted a position as general traveling representative. May is an old Iowa exhibitor and has been road representative for a number of exchanges.

Northwest Feature Exchange Moves.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The handling of several new big features already contracted for has forced the removal of the Northwest States Feature Film company from the Produe exchange to 9 Western avenue. Ben Rosenberg, manager, asserts the addition to the company's stock required the enlargement of the plant.

Victoria in St. Paul Opens.

St. Paul, Minn.—Three theaters in a mile on University avenue is the record of Henry Breillein. The Victoria, the last of his houses to be opened, is decorated in ivory and blue-gray tints. He has installed a $5,000 Fotoplayer. The Victoria is the largest of Mr. Breillein's string, having a seating capacity of 600. "The

Saenger Co. Gets Strand

New Orleans' Strand Theater, Now Building, Has Been Leased by the Saenger Amusement Company for Ten Years—E. V. Richards Will Have the Management of the House, Which Is to Be Like Its New York Namesake.

By George M. Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—With the announcement that sound would shortly be broken for the new Strand theater and office building in Baronne street came also the announcement by Leo Fellman, real estate operator and agent, that the theater had been leased for a period of ten years by the Saenger Amusement Company, one of the largest operators of motion picture theaters. In addition to its other large interests, this widely-known amusement concern directly operates ten theaters in Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, where their financial success determined them to come to the metropolis of the South. The affairs of the Saenger Amusement Company, which has amusement connections in fourteen other states, is handled by Julian and A. D. Saenger.

The new Strand, it was announced, will be managed by E. V. Richards, Jr., one of the best-known motion picture men in the country and close friend of S. L. Hochappel, of New York's Rialto. Mr. Richards will shortly take up his residence in New Orleans. The controlling interests in the DeSoto Building Company, which is building the new Strand, are Harold W. Newman, Commissioner of Public Safety in New Orleans; Leonard Newman, Henry Beer and Edgar Bright, of H. and B. Beer, the largest cotton firm in the world.

The new theater will be patterned along the lines of the Strand of New York. It will accommodate an audience of 2,000 within an auditorium of graceful and attractive proportions, finished with the best of the stone and marble. There will be three entrances, the principal one in Gravier street and the other two in Baronne street. The gallery will appear as one floor of seats, but will have three mezzanine floors, from which the seats will be easily accessible. The floor of the first mezzanine will have as a special feature a beautifully appointed reception room and retiring rooms for women and children.

The exterior of the entire building will be white terra cotta, and concrete and steel will be used throughout, assuring a perfectly fireproof structure. The ventilation will be thorough, and silent rotary fans will be installed six feet apart throughout the auditorium. A pipe organ will be a special feature.

The New Houses in New Orleans.

According to the latest compilations of film exchanges in the Crescent City, New Orleans now has 69 moving picture theaters actually in operation. In the same breath it must be mentioned that J. W. Fabacher's new Portola theater, at the corner of the new Newcomb theater, both Canal street houses of beautiful design, have but recently opened. Herman Fichtenberg is making rapid progress on the Canal street site that will be the future home of his $100,000 Globe theater. Construction of a great big Saint Charles street house by Ernst Boehringer probably will begin early in October, so it is safe to bet that New Orleans will have six or seven moving picture houses before the end of this year. And the city has not quite reached the 400,000 population mark, all of which is food for serious reflection.

The Broadway's Troubles.

New Orleans—Union troubles are blamed by the management of the Broadway theater, a prominent suburban house, for the cutting of wages and damages of the house, which necessitated closing down for the better part of a week. The malicious marauders did not stop at this, but proceeded to put the whole theater on the blink. The management of the house, determined to stop the vandals and show anyway, hired a watchman for the property, and proceeded to give their regular evening's performance after the damage had been repaired.

Manager Hoyt T. Morrow.

New Orleans, La.—The General Film Company's New Orleans manager is Hoyt T. Morrow, who has been in the moving picture business continuously since 1905, during which time he has been connected in the manufacturing, distributing and exhibition ends of the business, having been connected with the General Film Company in 1909 as traveling salesman for their Oklahoma City and St. Louis branches, later becoming connected with their Atlanta branch in a like capacity, then being placed in charge of the Jacksonville branch in 1912, which position he held until the latter part of 1913, when he became interested in the Odeon and Polly theaters, Savannah, Ga. Having last November and assuming charge of the New Orleans office in December, 1915. He is now in charge of the Memphis branch, in addition to the branch in New Orleans.

Manager Hoyt T. Morrow in His Office, New Orleans, La.

Charles R. Meade Here.

New Orleans.—Charles R. Meade, southern division manager for V. L. S. E., dropped off New Orleans this week and paid his respects along Film Row. During Mr. Meade's stay in New Orleans thirty film and newspaper men were the guests of J. J. Enck, chief of the city's new Lincoln theater, where "God's Country and the Woman," a new Big Four release, was given its premiere in New Orleans. The entire eight reels were shown the guests, who pronounced the picture a smashing success.

Heave Ho, My Hearties, With Film Men Abroad.

New Orleans.—J. Eugene Pearce, one of the premier yachtmen of the South, as well as premier exhibitor, has taken a number of New Orleans film men on board his yacht "Spitfire" during the regatta at the Southern Yacht Club. The film men had the time of their lives. The yacht was a handicap race with them on board. It was the Queen Handicap, and the Spitfire came in handily ahead with several minutes to spare. His guests included J. H. Kirkpatrick, handling the "Mary Page" series; H. T. Morrow, manager general; and K. A. Bugbee, manager of Metro. At the conclusion of the races the film managers sojourned to Spanish Fort, North Shore, and Chief of Montpelier, up a half barrel of speckled trout from the waters of Lake Ponchartrain on the way.

Miss Anna Sessions Heads Local World Film.

New Orleans.—F. P. Creswell, manager of the Crescent City office of the World Film, left last week to assume charge of the Cincinnati office of World, and thereby made some film history for New Orleans, inasmuch as Miss Anna H. Sessions was appointed to take his place. This is the first time in the history of the city that a woman has been named manager of a film exchange, and probably the first time in the entire south. Miss Sessions is a very capable young woman, who is very popular with the exhibitors, and there is every reason in the world to suppose that her position will be permanent.

Louis Levin Fox Southern Manager.

New Orleans.—Louis Levin, from the New York office of Fox, shortly will arrive in New Orleans to take charge of the entire southern district. He succeeds C. W. Harden, who last week resigned as southern division manager to take charge of the Metro exchange in Kansas City, Mo. The New Orleans office of Fox has been fitted out extravagantly, and its handsome appointments have made it an office envied by all in "Chang" the New Orleans Manager R. E. Barron has fitted a real nice front office with rocking chairs and fresh cut flowers on a table every day. Nowadays the film exchanges are getting away from the idea that they can be quartered in a barn and still get the business. They have something to sell, and they are getting so that they are making their selling quarters attractive.

ATLANTA GIRL VICTIM OF SCREEN AMBITION.

Blanch Hoover Dies by Own Hand in Los Angeles—Wanted to Act.

By A. M. Beatty, Special Correspondent, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—Did the sudden realization that her dreams to become a moving picture heroine were doomed prompt 20-year-old Blanche McMill Hoover, an Atlanta girl, full of soul and full of temperament, and a college graduate, to seek a seclusive spot in the woods near Los Angeles at 140 Luckie street, and put a bullet through her heart?

Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Hoover, of 140-A Luckie street, have wired the chief of police of that city to make an investigation.

A brief telegram conveyed the news to the family Saturday. It said that the body of an unknown girl, 20 years old, neatly dressed, clutching a gold cross in her hand, had been found Saturday that a note had been pinned on the girl's dress asking that Mrs. B. M. Hoover, of 140 Luckie street, be notified. Mr. and Mrs. Hoover are positive the body is that of their daughter, who have authorized the body be shipped to Atlanta.

For several years, according to Mrs. Ruby Wiley, a chum of the dead girl, who lives in an apartment at 140 Luckie street, on the floor above that occupied by the Hoovers, Blanche Hoover has nursed a tender affection for the moving pictures. She had her favorite screen stars. She never cared for Mary Pickford. But, according to Mrs. Wiley, Blanche was simply crazy about Theda Bara, Lillian Gish, now posing in California, and Maude Adams, the star of the legitimate stage.

Miss Hoover wanted to go west, believing her chances to get in the moving pictures would be better there.

Miss Hoover, who had written quite a few comedy scenarios, had been in California about three weeks, and the report of the tragedy comes as a shock to her many Atlanta friends.

Charles Chaplin in "Carmen" created some new records at the Trianon theater. In his latest Mutual release, "The Floor-walker," he has run a solid week at the Plaza theater.

WALTHALL IN ATLANTA.

Little Colonel Entertained by Screen Club.

Atlanta, Ga.—Henry Walthall, the idol of the South because of his vivid portrayal of "the Little Colonel" in the "Birth of a Nation," as well as his being a Southerner by birth, is this day the guest of the "Screen Club" of Atlanta.

Included in the club's program of entertainment was a beefsteak supper. The banquet at the club was an elaborate affair. President William Oldkn'w sat in the toastmaster's chair. When it came to a speech Walthall blushed and lost himself, apologizing for the misfortune of being to initiate oratory as one of his talents. But as a story teller he proved his value.

Oldknow Gets Two Big Features.

Atlanta, Ga.—William Oldknow, general southern manager of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, has purchased the southern rights for two motion picture productions, "The Dumb Girl of Portici" and the recently-filmed New York sensation, "Where Are My Children?" Arrangements are being made for the showing of the later picture at one of Atlanta's large houses in the very near future.

DeBruler Books First Run Paramount.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Paramount first releases will be shown at the Piedmont, Atlanta, beginning June 1. Manager Ralph DeBruler has secured the program from the Southern Paramount Pictures Company.

Second-run Paramounts will be shown in future at the Georgian, Atlanta, which is the policy formerly obtaining in this house.

Joe Marenquette Goes to World Film.

Atlanta, Ga.—Joe Marenquette, manager of the General Film office in Atlanta, and one of the most popular figures in the local moving picture colony, has resigned to take the direction of the Atlanta division of the World Film. The World headquarters are in the new brick building on Marietta street. Mr. Marenquette took charge Monday morning.

Joe Marenquette is one of the best-known and best-liked men in the southern film industry. He has been in the picture game since what is known in film vernacular as the "dark ages," when moving pictures was one of the world's tiniest and hardest-struggling industries. He has been in Atlanta for several years.

Mr. Marenquette is treasurer of the Screen Club in Atlanta.

At Kansas City Exchanges.

A new system has been adopted by George Bowles, the hustling publicity manager of the Universal, who also acts as editor of the Universal Weekly. This is in connection with that publication the suggestion of which was made by an exhibitor of Oswego, Kans., a number of copies are printed with one page left blank. On this blank page the manager of the theater which gets the paper has his week's program printed. The Monarch Booster is the name of the new exchange publication issued by the Kansas City office of the Monarch Feature Film Company, one of the Kansas City live-wire exchanges. The editor of this little paper is C. D. Struble, Kansas City executive of the Monarch office.

Recent activities at the Kansas City Feature Film Company include the return of Lee D. Balsey, publicity man, from the Omaha and Des Moines exhibitors' conventions, and the departing of A. D. Plintom, president of that company, for a three weeks' trip to the East.

"Pat" Hall, the genial manager of the Western Film Supply Company, is taking the initiative in starting the local moving picture interest in making preparations for participating in the preparatory parade to be held on June 20.

Kansas City License Fees

Fifteen Theater Managers Appear Before City Finance Committee and Ask for Reduction in the Cost of Yearly Licenses—Now Have to Pay $100, But Ask That It Be Made $12.50, the Average Cost of Trade Licenses.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—One of the most important movements undertaken by the exhibitors of Kansas City was recently launched when the managers of fifteen very prominent suburban theaters went before the finance committee of the Upper and Lower Council in an effort to have the cost of their license fee reduced. The first of July is the date when all such will be renewed, and this action is taken so that when the date comes the moving picture theater owners will be able to realize on their efforts.

The fee is now $100 per year, one of the largest required for any business in Kansas City. The plea of the owners was that this be reduced to $12.50, the average amount required for any trade. In the lower house their request was granted and the finance committee of that body agreed to support any ordinance decreasing the fee. The members of the upper house committee said the best they could do would be to cut the license in half, making it $50, and that their action would have to depend on the view taken by Mayor Edwards. If he was of the opinion that the city could not do without the revenue thus derived they could not favor it. However, it is believed that the efforts of the managers will be successful to the extent that the license will be reduced to $50, as suggested by the upper house. The matter is now in the hands of the mayor, after which it will be voted on in the houses, following the introduction of an ordinance.

John G. Hlatt, manager of the Gladstone theater, acted as chairman of the committee which made the protest.

CALL SCREEN CLUB MEETING.

Kansas City Picture Men Will Hold a Get-Together Dinner and Talk Plans.

Kansas City, Mo.—Kansas City's Screen Club is to become a reality. Following the mailing of 600 circulars to moving picture men around Kansas City, a meeting will be held at which final plans will be perfected and the organization put on a permanent basis. The following is an extract from the circular sent out by the three undersigned, which will probably cover every point that might be of importance to the body:

1st. Should the club be purely social, or organize to consider and advocate evils as well? 2nd. Should its membership be limited to exhibitors and exchange employees, or be open to all possessing actual interest in motion picture and allied enterprises? 3d. Should organization be perfected at a big star dinner at some leading down-town hotel, or at a formal meeting held at one of the theaters? 4th. Would you, personally, be interested in becoming a member of such an organization and assisting in guiding its destinies? 5th. What day of the week and what hour of the day or night would you recommend as being most convenient for all concerned to attend the organization meeting? 6th. What suggestions would you make as to the functions of such a club?

As the undersigned are taking the initiative in this matter at the suggestion of many interested, we earnestly hope you will let us hear from you immediately. Signed by E. C. Miller, Mutual exchange; J. H. Haggerty, Willis Wood theater; E. R. Pearson, V. L. & E. exchange.

City's Oldest Picture House Closes.

Kansas City, Mo.—Kansas City's oldest moving picture theater, the Yale Arcade, 720 Main street, has closed its doors. Harry Fogel, proprietor, announcing that the place could no longer pay its expenses. Coincident with the closing of the place a long article appeared in one of the Kansas City newspapers telling the history of the house. A remarkable fact concerning this theater is that since its first opening day, in 1898, it has changed hands but once, Carl Menzing and J. F. Menzing started the place, and in a short time admitted A. D. Plintom, at present the head of the Kansas City of middle age house, into the partnership. In 1911 these parties relinquished their claim, and the house went to Harry Fogel, the present owner. This place has witnessed every advance of the game from its location on the second story of a building over a penny arcade, but itself has seen very few changes. It is said that nearly every person in Kansas City of middle age has at some time or other witnessed a show in this house.

Frank Tracy Managing the Electric.

St. Joseph, Mo.—Frank Tracy, formerly doorkeeper and assistant manager of the Electric theater, St. Joseph, Mo., is now managing the theater. Barney Riley, proprietor, finds his time fully occupied with his law practice, since serving his time as first assistant prosecuting attorney of Buchanan county.

Osawatimie Airdome Running.

Osawatimie, Kans.—J. P. Kelley, manager of the Majestic theater, announces that he will open the Osawatimie Airdome in the near future. The place has been thoroughly overhauled and repainted, new seats provided, new electric wiring, and new stage machinery. The new airdome is now installed, making it one of the most up-to-date airdomes in that part of the state.

Kansas Theater Notes.

Anthony, Kans.—The Novelty theater at this place has been purchased by Mrs. Cora K. K.

Muscotah, Kans.—It is reported among local circles that a new moving picture house will soon enter the local field.

Bellefonte, Kans.—Work on the Chapin building on Broadway street is progressing in fine shape and the moving picture house which will be installed by Concordia parties will soon become a reality.

Missouri Theater Notes.

Kington, Mo.—Messrs. Bebermyer and Bathgate have purchased the Majestic at this place from the former managers, the Hamptons.

Murphy, Mo.—The Orpheum at this place, which has been closed for some time, has been reopened as a moving picture house under the management of Forrest Green.

Union, Mo.—If present plans now under consideration mature, W. P. Clarey will soon open a moving picture house here.

C. W. Harden Heads Local Metro.

C. W. Harden, well known to exchange men and exhibitors in this territory, succeeds to the office of manager of the Metro Picture Service in Kansas City recently vacated by M. Herman, who left here to take charge of the Universal office in Cincinnati. Mr. Harden has been a manager of the southern division of the United States for the past two months, and previous to that time he was manager of the Fox office here. Mr. Harden is an enthusiastic booster of the proposed screen club and will no doubt play an active part in its formation.

Film Frolic in Dallas

Screen Club, an Exchange men's Organization of Dallas, Texas, Plans Annual All-Star Entertainment on June 4—L. B. Remy Appointed Manager and Ned Depinet, the Treasurer of the Show—The Committee in Charge.

By S. A. M. Harrison, 618 Comal St., Dallas, Texas, Special Correspondent.

DALLAS, TEX.—The Dallas Screen Club, an organization of the motion picture exchange men of Dallas, will give the annual all-star frolic at the Majestic theater June 4. The program will consist of vaudeville and a number of short, snappy motion pictures donated by the various exchanges. It is planned to make the entertainment an annual affair. L. B. Remy of the Triangle is managing director; Ned Depinet of the Consolidated is treasurer, and others in charge of the entertainment are R. H. Logan of the World, C. A. Clegg of the Mutual, and W. M. Byrd of the Box Office.

New House for Houston.

Houston, Tex.—Paul Herracoe, who built the Texas theater at Houston, and has been its owner for several years, is just completing his new playhouse to be called the Best. The theater is located on Main street near Congress avenue, and will seat over 500. The building was formerly occupied by a bank and its interior is beautifully finished, which will make this one of the most attractive theaters on the inside in Houston. The house opened June 5 with "Peg o' the Ring."

"The Ne'er-Do-Well" Goes Big.

Houston, Tex.—The publicity campaign for "The Ne'er-Do-Well" was one of the biggest ever attempted in the history of Houston, and the result was that hundreds were turned away the first day of its showing Houston. Anthony Xydlas was the man that pulled off the campaign, and opened the Houston engagement of the picture at the Interstate Amusement Company's Majestic, Saturday, May 27, for an indefinite run. Xydlas is a well-known exhibitor, and is expected to have put on "The Battle Cry of Peace" in Broadway style in many of the larger cities in the Southwest.

Baseballdom.

Dallas, Tex.—On Sunday, May 21, the Consolidated "Cats" won out over the Hurst Bros' "Bears" in an exciting game of baseball with a score of 2-1.

The game scheduled to be played between the Motion Picture "Cubs" and McColdrick "Panthers" was called off on account of wet grounds.

Banquet for Cats.

Dallas, Tex.—The Consolidated Film & Supply Company gave a very enjoyable banquet May 26 at the T. M. Hall at Dallas in honor of the Consolidated "Cats" and their lady friends. A rousing good time is reported.

Princess at Midland Sold.

Midland, Tex.—H. P. Dunnagan has sold out the Princess theater at Midland, Tex., to Theo Ray. The Kirksey Bros. have been employed to manage the theater. They were formerly exhibitors at Alpine, Tex., also Lampasas, Tex.

Peebles Succeeds Touchon.

Houston, Tex.—H. T. Peebles has been appointed manager of the Houston office of the Consolidated Film and Supply Co., succeeding Charles D. Touchon, who has resigned. Mr. Peebles has been traveling representative of the Universal in this territory, and is a well-known film man, having been in the picture game since its infancy in Texas. Mr. Touchon announces that he has accepted a position with the W. D. Nevills' theaters in Dallas, having been employed as general representative of the theaters, of which there are six. Paul Christensen has been appointed assistant manager of the Houston office of the Consolidated. Mr. Christensen was recently with the World Film in Dallas as booking clerk.

Change of Management.

Ablene, Tex.—H. C. Hanle has succeeded J. C. O'Malley as manager of the Queen theater at Abilene, Tex. Although the Queen is one of the finest houses in the State in towns of 10,000 and under, Mr. Hanle has put in many improvements. The most notable one is that of the installation of a $5,000 pipe organ.

Hurley to Have New Theater.

Hurley, New Mexico.—L. P. Gooding of the Hurley theater at Hurley, New Mexico, reports that he has plans drawn up for a new $10,000 theater.

Leases Airdome.

Ablene, Tex.—J. T. Hodge of the Gem theater at Abilene, has leased the Dixie airdome in this city. The Dixie is one of the best-known in the state and one of the most substantially built in the South.

Manager Has Right Idea.

Bowle, Tex.—G. L. Berry has taken over all the shows in the city of Bowle, which includes the Lyric, Gem, Opera House, Grand and Airdome. Realizing that six shows are entirely too many for a town of 30,000 population, he has closed all except the Airdome and Lyric for the summer. Mr. Berry certainly has the right idea on the show business in small towns.

Cullimore Goes to Houston.

Houston, Tex.—Fred Cullimore, who has been assistant manager of the Mutual Film office at San Antonio, has been transferred to the Houston office of the same company, and will act as assistant manager to Mr. Tomes.

Theater for Colored People.

Houston, Tex.—Miss E. Johnson, owner of the Key theater at Houston, Tex., is building a new theater at the corner of Milan and Travis streets to be called the "Llan, and it is to be for colored people only. This is the most expensive house for colored people on record in the South.

Byron Johnson with Mutual.

Houston, Tex.—Byron Johnson, until recently with the Enterprise Film Company of Houston, has been employed by the Mutual Film office at Houston as shipping clerk. Mr. Johnson has been in the film business in the territory for several years and is well known to exhibitors.

Among Texas Exhibitors.

Wichita Falls, Texas.—M. Polse, of the Gem and Wichita theaters, has been in Dallas May 16-17. Mr. Polse has recently bought the Gem theater, and it is rumored that he is figuring on another.

Bridgeport, Texas.—E. L. Turnbow, of the Grand and the Grand Rapids, Bridgeport, Texas, is figuring on remodeling it at an early date.

Anson, Texas.—Graves & Purifoy have opened the Cozy airdome at Anson, Texas, recently with Universal service and Bluebird features.

Bremont, Texas.—Ed Muret has purchased the Rosary theater of Bremont, Texas, for S. D. Patterson.

Hearne, Texas.—J. W. Pinkerton, of the Queen theater at Hearne, Texas, will not use his airdome this summer as he has installed a cooling system in his theater. Franklin, Texas.—The Gem theater of Franklin, Texas, has been purchased by E. T. Book. The same policy of exclusive pictures will be followed as in the past. Brenham, Texas.—The New Queen theater at Brenham, Texas, has reopened. This theater has been closed for several weeks.

Galveston, Texas.—The Crystal, Vaudeville and Crystal Majestic theaters of Galveston, Texas, have closed for the summer. It is reported that both of the houses will open in the fall with exclusive pictures.

Victoria, Texas.—The Gem theater at Victoria, Texas, has been reopened by its manager, C. A. Dayvault, and reports good business. The theater has been reopened after a bunch of repairs and remodeling.

After all, there is only one moving picture paper that you really need, and this is IT, conducted by the largest and most experienced staff of editors and correspondents.

Houston, Texas.—The Union theater at Houston, Texas, under the management of S. B. Hall, is being remodeled. The Union is one of the best equipped and modern suburban theaters in the State.

Longview, Texas.—J. M. Wells, of Denison, has recently purchased the Garden theater at Longview from H. R. Yates, and has been in Dallas looking over service for his new house.

New Castle, Texas.—S. P. Wood has recently bought out the Majestic theater at New Castle, Texas.

Haskell, Texas.—Dick Nolan, of Haskell, Texas, has put his theater in charge of a manager, and he and wife are away on a two months vacation trip.

Denison, Texas.—L. M. Ridout (the man with the smile that won't come off), of the Star theater at Denison, Texas, was a visitor to Dallas the 25th.

Stamford, Texas.—H. L. Leese, owner of the Cozy theater at Stamford, Texas, closed his theater for the summer May 22, and has opened the new Cozy airdome. It is one of the best equipped in the city.

Big Springs, Texas.—Joe G. Carter has closed the Gem theater at Big Springs to have same remodeled, and about June 15 will open it up on a larger scale.

Stamford, Texas.—Pete Chopolas, of the Candy theater at Stamford, Texas, was in Dallas May 16 and 17 looking features.

Port Arthur, Texas.—J. A. Holton of the Port Arthur Amusement company, was in Dallas the week of May 15-20.

Clarendon, Texas.—J. H. Mulkey was in Dallas week of May 15-20, at which time he purchased a 1916 Motograph from the H. K. Barnhart Film & Supply Company for his theater.

Merkel, Texas.—H. F. Gronne, of the Lyric, was a visitor to Dallas week of May 15-20.

Bryan, Texas.—W. R. Fairman of the Dixie was in Dallas May 14.

Forney, Texas.—A. W. Ritter of the Childress paid Dallas a visit during week of May 15-20.

Kingsville, Texas.—R. D. Jones was in Dallas recently and purchased a 1916 Motograph for his theater.

Denison, Texas.—C. F. Colby, who formerly had charge of the Mirror theater at Denison, and recently sold to J. V. Smith, was in Dallas May 16. Mr. Colby will probably take a much-needed rest this summer, as the fall expects to be in the game again. He is on the lookout for a desirable location.

McKinney, Texas.—Chas. Kimball of the Pope and Lyric theaters was in Dallas during week of May 15-20, making some changes in his film service.

Sol Lesser Visits Branch Exchange.
San Francisco, Cal.—Sol L. Lesser, head of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc. and the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., is making a trip to Los Angeles to arrange for bookings on "Where Are My Children?" being accompanied by "Mike" Rosenberg. This production is to be shown here shortly at the Tivoli for an indefinite run. The Golden Gate Film Exchange handles the California, Nevada and Arizona rights in the Slaughter-Lamson films recently shown with great success at the Empress.

Exchange Management Changes.
San Francisco, Cal.—D. J. Chatkin, vice-president of the United Film Service Corporation, was a recent visitor here and appointed M. Epstein, formerly head booker for the California Film exchange, manager of the Pacific Coast interests of the concern. Dave Tompkins, who has held this position for some time, plans to go to Los Angeles shortly.

Fox Coast Manager Visits San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. R. Redlich, Western representative of the Fox Film corporation, was a recent visitor here, coming from Seattle, where he makes his headquarters. Redlich is regarded here as the city of heavy moving picture advertising, San Francisco as the home of amusements and the possessor of the finest suburban houses of any city in the world, and Los Angeles as the city of small theaters.

Exhibitors Visit Southland.

San Francisco, Cal.—Emil Friedberg, of the Lyceum theater and secretary of the Exhibitors' League of San Francisco, William Nasser, of the Palace theater; George Nasser, of the Castro theater; H. C. Schmidt, of the Marquee theater; Pafo Alto; and Mr. Roy, of the Burlingame theaters, Burlingame, left recently for Los Angeles and vicinity by auto to visit the leading studios. A great time is predicted, for a more jolly combination would be hard to find, and after the inevitable H. C. Schmidt the "once over" the producers there may be expected to announce a "find."

San Francisco Business Newslets.
Ford & Myers, who recently bought the Acme theater from George Knowles, have also taken over the Vicksburg theater at Twenty-fourth and Vicksburg streets and the new Palmer theater, located between these houses. The Acme and Vicksburg theaters have been closed, except on Sundays, while the Palmer will be conducted all the time.

Ed Herman & Harris have booked the Pathe serial, "Who's Guilty?" for their houses in San Francisco, Oakland, Portland and Seattle.

S. S. Hutchinson of the Mutual was a recent visitor here, making a stay of a few days.

E. H. Emmick has returned from a trip to Los Angeles and other southern California cities, where he did great business on the Mutt & Jeff comedies.

A. A. Richards of Modesto, Cal., was a recent visitor here and purchased a motor generator set from G. A. Metcalfe.

Bob Eories is now covering the Sacramento and San Joaquin valley territory for the Universal, and I. N. Cohen is touring the Sacramento valley in the interests of Bluebird.

"Doc" Gardner, an old-time exhibitor of Marysville, Cal., was a recent visitor here renewing old acquaintances.

Louis Hyman, of the All-Star Feature, is making a trip through the San Joaquin valley and upon his return will go to the Yosemite valley for his vacation.

The Western Pacific railroad is now showing moving pictures at Feather River Inn, Blairsden, Cal., twice a week, using World Features.

Film Trade Board Moves

San Francisco's Film Exchange Board of Trade to Be Located in Hewes Building at Sixth and Market Streets—Will Now Have an Assembly Hall for Its Meetings—Companies That Have Joined.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal., Special Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif.—The Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco has made arrangements to move its offices from the Merchants National Bank building, 625 Market street, to the Hewes building, Sixth and Market streets. This change is being made in order that more room may be secured and to get closer to the film exchange. A large office has been selected on the seventh floor and the organization will have the use of an assembly hall for its meetings. A number of new members have been added of late and the membership now includes the following concerns: California Film Exchange, Morris L. Markowitz; Mutual Film Exchange, X. K. Stout; Pathe Exchange, Harry W. Oviatt; Metro Film Service, Louis Reichert; Golden Gate Film Exchange, Sol L. Lesser; Progressive Film Exchange, Herman Wobber; Fox Film Corporation, William J. Clifton; World Film Corporation, M. E. Cory; International Film Service, H. L. Knappen; Triangle Film Corporation, Ben F. Simpson; Globe Film Exchange, I. H. Lichtenstein; and the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., Sol L. Lesser. Fred S. Peach is manager and Maurice L. Asher is attorney for the organization. The Film Exchange Board of Trade has been very active in the fight against censorship here and has secured financial assistance for the work from all but two exchanges in the city. It is lending its support now to an ordinance that is being prepared and which, if it is decided to pass, will end the agitation for censorship by placing moving picture houses on an equal footing with regular theaters.

VICTORY IN RAILROAD CASE.

Railroads Cancel Order Against Carrying Films on Trains and Boats.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco and the exhibitors in the suburban districts have won a signal victory in their fight against the order of the railroads that moving picture films could be carried no longer on trains and boats as hand baggage, but must be shipped by express. Several meetings were held that were attended by exchange men, exhibitors, representatives of the railroads and the National Bureau of Explosives, and the matter was discussed from all angles. It was agreed that conditions here were different from those prevailing in almost every city in the country, in that films are carried but such a short distance on boat and train. The cities of Berkeley, Alameda, Oakland, Richmond, Albany and Emeryville are parts of San Francisco in all but name, a state law preventing their consolidation, and but few films are carried by exhibitors outside the limits of the Greater San Francisco. At a hearing before the State Railroad Commission on May 22 the railroads agreed to cancel their former order, provided that in the future all moving picture film be encased in metal fireproof boxes under lock and key during transit from the film exchange to the theater. Exhibitors are being warned to use the utmost care in carrying films and printed notices of what is expected of them are being placed in every box.

WHAT A FEATURE IS.

It Is Quality Not Footage That Makes the Feature—New World Films Better.

San Francisco, Cal.—A jury in the court of Judge Edward P. Shurtall recently brought to a close the suit of the World Film against the Turner & Dahnen circuit to secure the payment of $14,900, alleged to have been due for feature film productions under contract and incidentally rendered a very interesting interpretation on the question of what constitutes a feature film.

Contracted for Features.

About a year ago the Turner & Dahnen circuit signed a contract with the World Film whereby it was to receive fifty-two feature films and to pay for the same at an established price. When deliveries of the films commenced the exhibiting firm contended that a number did not come up to the standard that was expected and refused to either run or pay for them, using but a few of the fifty-two contracted for. The World Film Corporation then brought suit to compel payment under contract and the Turner & Dahnen circuit brought a counter suit for damages in the sum of $10,000, claiming that a loss was suffered from the films not being run, and that the distributing company has also broken its contract in various ways.

What Is a Feature.

A large part of the testimony during the trial, which lasted two weeks, hinged upon what constitutes a feature moving picture. The attorneys for the Turner & Dahnen circuit contended that mere length of film did not make a feature picture, nor any one single element, setting forth that a single reel might be a brilliant feature. They set forth that a feature must have a star performer of prominence, a continuous story with an appropriate ending, good photography, proper settings and an efficient cast. Many of the subjects under discussion were analyzed and the weak points discussed among them being "Misses," "The Moonstone," "The Fairy and the Wolf," "The Arrival of Perpetua" and "The Master of the House." The case reached its climax when the judge ordered that some of the productions be shown on the screen at the Fairland theater. The jury decided that these were not feature films in the strict meaning of the term and found for the defendant. However, it also found that the Turner & Dahnen circuit was not entitled to damages in the counter suit filed.

New World Film Productions Better Than Old.

These suits have not interfered with the showing of World Film productions at the Tivoli theater, as the Brady pictures are being exhibited there regularly and are giving good satisfaction, the new releases being of a much higher order than the ones refused by Turner & Dahnen.

Supply House Doing Fine Business.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Breck Photo-play Supply Company, which recently took over the supply business of George Breck, is enjoying a splendid volume of business. Among the late sales have been two Simplex machines for Michelson Brothers, who conduct the Clement theater here; two Simplex machines, two Callie ticket selling machines and change makers for the new Reliance theater at Oakland, and the Powers and Co. 64 for the "Cleveland," and an Edison Kinetoscope for another battleship; a large dissolver for the Portola theater, and an Edison machine for J. H. Lenzue of Turlock, who still will be in connection with a traveling outfit.

Shows Too Long

Exhibitors Complain of Tendency to Lengthen Programs—Say That Long Shows Will Eventually Hurt the Business—People Do Not Want Long Shows or Free Admissions—Mixed Programs Welcomed.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—People do not want long shows, and the exhibitor who adds one reel after another to his program to meet the other fellow's competition by quantity instead of quality is hurting the whole film industry in the city, declared several of the prominent exhibitors, having in mind presumably the new policies of long shows that have been recently put into effect in Portland territory.

E. J. Myrick, of the Columbia, when questioned on the subject, said that it had never come to his knowledge that any demand had been made by the people for a long show nor for free admissions, yet shows are steadily being lengthened, and some theaters persist in giving free admissions under certain circumstances. Long shows will soon become tiring, said Mr. Myrick, and people will lay their lassitude to the photoplay as a class of entertainment and the whole industry will suffer.

Graham T. Holtzclaw, of the Circle theater, also stated that people were complaining of long shows and that an hour and a half or an hour and a quarter of a dime was giving the people their money's worth, which was all they wanted. Mr. Holtzclaw decried the scarcity of good short subjects, and declared that mixed programs are in public favor and would come back to their own the minute good pictures could be had.

CENSOR COLWELL ALERT. Caught Sight of Uncensored Scrap of Film in Vaudeville Act.

Portland, Oregon.—J. A. Johnson, manager of Pantages theater, was arrested on May 26th for showing an uncensored film. Julia Rooney, sister of Pat Rooney, used a short piece of film to hold the stage while changing her costume. In the act of changing, the film showed a scene about a minute and a half to show and had been used by Miss Rooney in her act in every part of the United States for the past five years, and had been censored in Canada, where five dollars had been paid to have the official stamp affixed. The act had nearly concluded its week's run when Mrs. Colwell discovered the presence of the short piece of uncensored film in the city, and, after viewing it with another member of the viewers' committee, its seizure resulted. Mrs. Colwell stated that, personally, she could see nothing wrong with Miss Rooney's film, and that the sole reason for its seizure was that it was being exhibited without a permit, in violation of the city ordinance. Miss Rooney was highly indignant over the treatment accorded her, declaring that she had no notice of the ordinance. She said she had taken the matter up with the White Rats, who had directed her that the assistance of that organization would be forthcoming, if required.

Mutual Exchange Notes.

Portland, Oregon.—W. J. Drummond and J. S. Woody came down from Seattle recently to attend a meeting of the Mutual exchange managers of the Pacific Northwest held here. The purpose of the meeting was not divulged. The Mutual moved into its new quarters at Ninth and Davis streets May 27.

Louis Amacher, former booker for Universal at Seattle, has been employed by the Portland Mutual office, and H. S. Hastings, formerly booker for the Mutual at Seattle, has become bookkeeper and cashier at Portland.

Code Travels by Auto.

Portland, Oregon.—C. H. Code, booking "Mary Page" in this territory, took a trip into the wilds of central Oregon recently and made several hundred miles across this rough country in a racing machine, making better than train time. Although the towns are small and far between, Mr. Code reports this good business in the Central Oregon territory.

Musicians May Fix New Wage Scale.

Portland, Oregon.—It is understood that at a meeting of the musicians' union, to be held in June, the question of a new increased wage scale will be raised. The growing popularity of showing a vaudeville act occasionally with pictures is said to be the cause of the raise, and the proposed new scale contemplates a substantial increase where vaudeville acts are shown with pictures.

Heard on Film Row.

Enterprise, Oregon.—S. A. Gardiner, who recently opened the Peoples' theater, is remodeling the house and extending its length 50 feet to accommodate a new stage and additional seats.

Pendleton, Oregon.—Deary and Chandler have sold the Alvin and the Gull and Cooper, who also run the Cozy.

The Dalles, Oregon.—Manager Bettinren of the Grand theater has taken over the Pastimes, recently closed, and will renovate the house.

Cottage Grove, Oregon.—W. J. White, who recently bought a theater in Springfield, has also acquired two theaters here. Portland, Oregon.—The Alhambra, a vaudeville exhibitor, has opened the Woodward theater. Emil Erickson, formerly booker and road man for Universal in Portland and Butte, has returned to Portland.

Picture Houses Follow Mining Boom

Near Nederland, Colorado, Discovery of Valuable Tungsten Deposits Bring Many New Picture Theaters.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, Col.—The tungsten mining boom which has made wealthy scores of poor miners and has attracted to Colorado hundreds of prospectors from all parts of the country has been followed by a moving picture boom that is only second to the mining excitement itself.

Six months ago the Nederland district, located about 30 miles north of Denver, was as quiet as a churchyard. The town of Nederland was the only place in the surrounding community and it was the only settlement in the vicinity. It had a hotel, a general merchandise store, a blacksmith shop, but little more. It had no theater or other variety of amusement.

Suddenly new uses were found for tungsten, the black metal which abounds in the mines of the district. The price of the ore took a sensational leap. Activity grew. There was an influx of people. New buildings sprang up everywhere, and among them was a moving picture theater. Then other settlements were established around Nederland. Lakewood, the first of these, four miles above Nederland, has its own picture theater. Stevens Camp, another settlement three miles below the town, is to have a photoplay theater as soon as one can be built. As another development in the moving picture boom, a second theater is being completed in the town of Nederland at a cost of $10,000.

Six months ago this district which once claimed a population of a few hundred struggling miners and had no moving picture show now is throbbing with humanity and is supporting two thriving theaters and waiting for two more to be completed and opened.

B. Long, owner of the first theater at Nederland, has been compelled to add 40 feet to his playhouse to accommodate the people. R. L. Humphrey, the Lakewood exhibitor, is contemplating enlarging his house. Mrs. E. B. Tenton, who is financing the building of the $10,000 theater, declares that it will be the most modern and up-to-date ever built in a mining camp. W. M. Mills, of the Hub company of Nederland, has been engaged to manage the place. Vieno and Hamilton is the name of the firm which is building at Stevens Camp. This company has arranged with the Mutual Film pleted arrangements with the Mutual Film exchange in Denver this week for complete equipment for their playhouse.

At Nederland quite a town has been built up in the few months since the boom struck the district, but at Lakewood and Stevens Camp there are few buildings. Stevens Camp, the newest of the settlements, consists now of a mill, a mine building or two and a newly-built store and the foundation or skeleton of the new motion picture theater. The mountains which rise on each side of the camp, however, are dotted with tents. They are the homes of the miners and prospectors, and they extend for miles in every direction. It is from these that devotees of the film drama pour each evening, and it is to accommodate these amusement seekers that four theaters have sprung up within six months in a radius of six miles.

Prosperity in Arkansas Valley, Colo.

The prosperity of the moving picture business in the Arkansas valley, south of Denver, is reflected in announcements of the completion of two new theaters in the district.

Manzanola, Colo.—Fred Russell at Manzanola has just finished work on his new opera house and opened it to the public for the first time June 15 with a program of high-class pictures.

Rocky Ford, Colo.—F. W. Todd, an experienced showman of Rocky Ford, has leased the old postoffice block there, and work of remodeling it into a theater is now in progress. When completed it will be operated as a photoplay house. The plans call for seating accommodations for 600.

C. R. Gilmour in Minneapolis.

Charles R. Gilmour, former manager of the World Film Exchange in Denver, has gone to Minneapolis to take charge of the World office there. Gilmour has completely recovered from his recent illness, due to an operation for appendicitis.

New Theaters and Changes.

Raton, N. M.—J. B. Yeager, owner of the Princess theater at Raton, is remodeling his theater for the purpose of increasing its capacity 150 seats.

Yuma, Colo.—The Gem theater at Yuma, Colo., was partially destroyed by a cyclone which caused several deaths, injured many and did great property damage. A. E. Conant, proprietor of the house, immediately began work of rebuilding the theater and expects to be operating again in a few days.

Crosby, Wyo.—Dr. S. G. Moser, of Denver, purchased equipment through the Mutual exchange for a moving picture theater which he will open at Crosby, Wyoming. The town is at present without a picture theater. Moser has several months learning the business under the tutelage of Rasmussen, so that he will be prepared for any emergency.

A. J. Conway With V-L-S-E.

A. J. Conway, former assistant manager of the V. L. S. E., has joined the Pathe staff in Denver as a road representative.

BRITISH COLUMBIA LETTER.

By E. C. Thomas, Special Correspondent,
821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

Manitoba-Saskatchewan Censor Board.

WINNIPEG, MAN.—The joint moving picture censor board for the province of Manitoba and Saskatchewan has just been appointed by the Norris cabinet, acting in conjunction with the officials at Regina. The board comprises John W. Rign, chairman, who has been serving on the old board under the Winnipeg city government; Mrs. H. R. Patriarche of this city, recommended by the Local Council of Women; and Charles Robson, who is retained on the new board as the representative of Saskatchewan. Alberta declined to join in the inter-provincial arrangement proposed, but will, it is stated, accept the rulings of the new board.

Manitoba and Saskatchewan will divide either the surplus or deficit resulting from the work of censoring, although with a tax of $2 per reel there should be no danger of incurring a deficit. The board takes up its duties on June 1, and for the present will use the same projection room which has been used by the city board, at the corner of King and James streets.

An appeal board of two men will also be appointed within a short time. No salary is provided for the appeal board members, but they will be paid a salary for each occasion on which they are called upon to review rejected films.

New Sign Regulation.

Winnipeg, Man.—As the result of the havoc created by the severe wind storm of a few weeks ago, during which the Strand theater's big electric sign fell to the sidewalk, the present Sign By-Law is to be so amended as to provide severe penalties for those who fail to erect or maintain their signs in a thoroughly substantial manner. The matter was brought up before the board of control following the receipt of a communication from the insurance brokers, informing them that the policy under which the city was insured had expired.

Mayor Waugh stated that the necessity of the situation would be met by ordered by bonding those who maintain signs, as the object of any legislation in this connection would be to protect citizens from bodily harm, rather than to protect the city's finances in case of possible damage suits.

A Beautiful Theater Lobby.

Edmonton, Alberta.—The Empress theater lobby has been completely transformed for the summer. The interior is now a beautiful bower of flowers and plants—artificial, but so naturally made and arranged that the illusion of reality is complete. The fountain has also been installed in the foyer, and in addition giving a very pretty effect, has the additional advantage of cooling the air. The house has adopted the sub-title of "The Garden of Flowers."

Takes Lease on Maple Leaf.

Vancouver, B. C.—William Brown has recently taken over the lease on the Maple Leaf theater, formerly held by the National Amusement Company. The admission has been reduced to five cents, and the program is changed daily instead of semi-weekly, as formerly. This gives Mr. Brown three houses in Vancouver—the Maple Leaf, Majestic and Crystal—all with the same price and policy. James Brown is in active charge.

Changes at Local World Film Office.

Vancouver, B. C.—C. B. Price, Canadian general manager for the Mutual Film, arrived in Vancouver recently on a trip of inspection covering all Mutual offices in Canada, and will probably remain in the city for two weeks or more. Mr. Price has accepted the resignation of A.

E. Vince, former manager of the local office, and C. R. Dippie has been installed in his place. Mr. Dippie is personally familiar with practically every exhibitor in the British Columbia territory, having previously been in the service of the Mutual, and should make a popular and efficient manager. W. G. Caruthers continues as booker, while E. P. Caruthers remains in charge of the shipping department.

Mr. Price announced that hereafter about fifty reels per week would come into each western office, giving a selection about twice as great as formerly and allowing of an extension of Mutual service to a larger field of exhibitors throughout the territory. It was explained that the Mutual productions have been sent over a circuit of the various branches, being allotted a certain length of time at each office. This circuit having been completed, the films are now on the second round, for older service, while a new lot of first-run pictures is on its first round. Mr. Price stated that the Mutual business in Canada is showing a steady increase, due partially, of course to the release of the first Chaplin subject, but not entirely so, as the bookings on films aside from "The Floorwalker" have been heavier than for some time. "The Floorwalker" is booked up solid for four weeks, without the loss of a day, and the manager states that the subject is sweeping the country. Eight prints are being used in Canada, and are available from each office on the regular release day.

Alterations are now being made in the Mutual offices here, as a result of Mr. Price's visit, and involve the re-arrangement of some of the departments, as well as the removal of all ground glass partitions, with the substitution thereof of clear glass.

W. F. Barrett, formerly in charge of the Universal office at Winnipeg, has just joined the Mutual forces, working out of Toronto as special representative of the head office.

E. J. Huttelmayer Goes East.

Vancouver, B. C.—E. J. Huttelmayer, operator at the Colonial theater and business manager of Vancouver, B. C., No. 341 A. T. S. E., will leave shortly for Niagara Falls, Ont., where he will have charge of the Queen theater.

Amend Ontario Patron Tax

Ontario Authorities Make Changes in Rate of Tax on Bought Theater Tickets—Now Only One Cent Asked on 15-Cent Tickets and Two Cents on Tickets Up to Fifty Cents—No Change in License Fees.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E. Toronto, Special Correspondent.

Admits Three on One Ticket.

TORONTO, Ont.—Immediately after the Amendment Tax Act went into effect in Ontario, whereby patrons of all moving picture theaters and other places of entertainment have to pay a war tax in proportion to the price of a ticket, the Provincial authorities revised the schedule of taxation. According to the original rates an admission ticket not exceeding ten cents required an extra one cent. Under the revised arrangements a five, ten or fifteen cent admission ticket requires a one cent tax and two cent tickets are paid into the Provincial treasury for admission tickets costing from fifteen to fifty cents.

The change makes a big difference, it is declared, for the theaters in outside centers which charge a regular admission of fifteen cents per adult.

The Provincial licenses for moving picture theaters for the year expired on June 1, and regardless of a previous announcement there is no change in the schedule of fees for such licenses. In municipalities of over 15,000 population the annual license fee in Ontario for a picture house is $150; in centers of 3,000 to 15,000 people the moving picture fee for the year is $100, and exhibitors in towns of less than 3,000 people must pay $75. A new operator must pay $5 for his first annual license and $3 for each renewal. Apprentices pay $1 during the year of their training. Film exchanges pay a yearly fee to the Ontario government of $150, with additional fee of $150 for each reel of film submitted to the Ontario Board of Censorship under the new regulations a municipality is compensated for the license to the holder of a Provincial license for exhibitors. Incidentally the Provincial fee for a traveling license is the same as for a moving picture theater license for municipalities of over 15,000 population, namely, $150 for the year.

The latest regulations to this act require a restriction in the amount of vaudeville which is included in the offerings of a picture house. This vaudeville cannot be more than one act, and not more than two people can appear in the act. The time limit for the act is fifteen minutes and there can be no change in scenery during this period. These regulations go into effect this year.

Toronto, Ont.—One Toronto exhibitor has discovered a way to "beat" the government in connection with the sale of war tax tickets to patrons of his house, yet his plan is perfectly legitimate and above-board. The Provincial authorities require that a war tax coupon be sold with every admission ticket used. There is nothing in the law, however, which directs that only one person shall be admitted on each seat ticket. This theater manager has arranged to hold special Saturday matinees for "other" mothers and three children are admitted with one ten-cent admission ticket. The latter requires a one-cent war tax. If each adult and child had to use a separate ticket the war tax would amount to four cents.

The announcement of the theater with regard to the special Saturday show reads as follows: "We would like the mothers to take advantage of our special Saturday matinees for the children. The price is very low—mother and three children, ten cents. War tax, one cent extra."

The theater in question is the Classic theater, Redwood and Gerrard street East. The house is running the Pathe serial "The Iron Claw" and other attractions, including Pathe, Gold Rooster, Famous Players and Biograph releases.

Films at Hamilton's Savoy.

Toronto, Ont.—The Savoy theater, Hamilton, Ontario, has switched from burlesque to moving pictures for keeps. Bluebird, Red Feather and Universal program pictures are being shown.

Paramount Leases St. John Opera House

St. John, N. B.—The Paramount Pictures Corporation, with headquarters in Toronto, have leased the opera house in St. John, N. B., where the company is running its own pictures.

The first exhibition of a Goldberg Boob Weekly in Canada was given at the Strand theater, Toronto during the week of May 29. The theater also had the third installment of the Strand Double Extra, the new Canadian news pictorial which is produced by Mr. M. S. Marvin, manager of the Strand. It consists of views of Canadian events exclusively.

OTTO THE COBBLER (June 12).—The cast: Otto (Davy Don), Katie (Patsy De Forest); His Wife (Emily Leary); Schmidt (Bernard Siegel); The Counterfeiter (George Egan); His Wife (Florence Williams). Adapted and directed by Edwin McKim.

Otto is a cobbler. He has a shop in a basement under a millinery store. Otto and two old cronies delight in watching the antics of the people that stop to look in the millinery window above. At Otto's home, Willie is courting Katie, Otto's daughter. Maggie, Otto's wife, disapproves of Willie as a son-in-law.

Willie catches Otto flirting. He threatens to tell Otto's wife and Otto, to insure Willie's silence, approves of him as a son-in-law and invites him back to the house. Maggie orders Willie out. Otto declares he shall stay. They argue the point and Maggie chases Willie. Otto counts his money and becomes resigned to the fact that he has not enough to uphold the dignity of being "Boss of the House."

A counterfeiter, being pursued by the police, runs past the entrance of Otto's shop and drops a suit case full of bogus bills down the alleyway. Otto finds the suit case and thinks he is a millionaire. He gives his business to one of his cronies, goes to a store where he gets himself tugged out in a swell suit and a plug hat, and starts for home.

Willie, meanwhile, has received word that he is inheritor of real money and Maggie now approves of him as a son-in-law. When Otto comes home, Willie's joy is cut short, for Otto declines to notice him, except to assume his former attitude and orders him out. He ejects Willie and then shows Maggie and Katie the suit case full of money.

Willie, meanwhile, is telling neighbors of Otto's behavior and when Otto with Maggie and Katie appear in the doorway, the neighbors are struck with awe and wonder. Willie goes to the bank, the counterfeiter is attracted by the excitement and recognizes the suit case. One of the neighbors tells him the meaning of the procession and he goes to head the party off.

At the entrance to the bank, the counterfeiter meets Otto and produces himself as the official of the bank. He takes the suit case and accompanies them up the steps. As they go up, the counterfeiter darts through the crowd and runs off with the suit case. Otto, Maggie, Katie, Willie and others give chase. The police catch the counterfeiter in front of Otto's shop. Otto and the others come on and Otto claims the suit case. The police inform him it is counterfeit and Otto is stunned.

ESSANAY.

ORPHAN JOYCE (Two Parts—June 6).—The cast: Joyce, the little orphan (Joyce Fair); Mason, a grain scavenger (John Cossar); His wife (Marion Murray); Jenks, the butler (John Burn); Jim Vaughn, burglar (Jack Milton). The loss of their little girl has saddened Mr. and Mrs. Mason. The day after the funeral the latter unexpectedly finds Joyce, whose only home is the nearby orphanage. She is struck by the resemblance of the child to her lost daughter. She conspires to her husband and they decide to adopt her. The child is delighted with her new home and the couple with her. The girl, however, resents the selection of a new butler and exhibits a distrust of Jenks. She is rich. Jenks is but the tool of Jim Vaughn, the notorious leader of a daring band of burglars.

At the close of business one day Jenks is told he must produce $3,000 next morning or he is declared insolvent. He goes out in the evening to the house of a wealthy neighbor where rewards are offered because of the numerous robberies attributed to his gang, breaks into the house. Joyce, awakened, hears him removing valuables, aided by Jenks. Desperate, she grasps her foster-father's revolver and covers the two men. While holding them at bay she shouts Mason and shouts a few words which explain her predicament. He comes with the police and Vaughn is captured. The $3,000 reward is given Joyce and she immediately turns it over to Mason to save him from bankruptcy.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF BERLIN AND SCENIC (June 7). This split reel offering is suggested as an extremely timely release. The German controversy has created a tense interest in the capital city of the Kaiser's empire and the sketch artist has to offer in motion drawings, a picture of the scene far than any photographs. His pencil has caught the principal government buildings, where the emperor's aids are now directing the great war together with the famous palaces are located have been transferred to the screen by this versatile artist who has made repeated trips to Germany. This release is highly instructive and at this time will satisfy a natural American's curiosity concerning the city of Berlin. Scenic from western America shares the reel.

FOOLS' GOLD (Three Parts—June 10).—The cast: Ralph Voss, "Daring O. Karr"; Helen, his wife (Hedell Craig); Gilbert, "Jude" (Patrick Mulrany); Lois Bedford, his accomplice (Marion Murray).

Judson and Lois Bedford live by their wits. Cards furnish them with their principal source of income. Helen Rowe, wife of a wealthy young business man, is their prey at the time the story opens. She is delighted with them as friends and participates in their games, winning. She is, however, a very clever woman and she, however, she begins signing I. O. U. slips for Judson. She gets in deeper than she can afford and is forced to flee.

Her husband purchases an expensive piece of jewelry for her. It contains an unusually large diamond and is so costly that it is the accomplice of another crook, who places her in the house for the purpose of robbery. She notes the diamond piece and the wall safe in which it is kept. One night the safe is broken and the maid disappears. Mrs. Rowe is relieved. She had purchased a paste imitation of the diamond and placed it in the safe. Her husband thinks the jewelry stolen.

She consents to Judson with the real one and offers it to him in payment. He suggests there are other ways of paying. Gunther, a detective, who found one of the I. O. U. slips, comes in to save her. He recognizes Judson as wanted for several other crimes. He lets the criminal go, takes the diamond piece and returns it to Mr. and Mrs. Rowe, keeping the latter's escape from him from her husband. But Mrs. Rowe has learned her lesson.

ANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 11 (June 14).—Animated Nooz camera men have recorded the opening of the baseball season, showing how the baseball bug works. Some terrible examples of its sting are shown. The animated picture of the taking of the home run is offered. The sieve-like appearance of his body, if he has been shot as often as reported, is shown. A gallon of gasoline of the gallon of gasoline is shipped to Miles O. Doe, the millionaire, and is placed under heavy guard. Creamy Dud has another hard day. He goes to school in his pajamas and his best girl sees him. "I hope you appreciate my embarrassment," he guesses most of the girls have dreamt the same thing yourself," says Dud. This is a split reel with scenic.

PUTTING IT OVER (Two Parts—June 13).—The cast: Vincent Evans (Harry Hammond); Margaret (Marguerite Clayton); Mabel (Chelsford); Camille (Adele); Calico Jake (Charles Stine); His Wife (Florence Williams); Lemuel Z. Hawkberry (Mark Smith). Vincent Evans, a very new attorney, gets Mrs. Chelsford, a friend of his mother's, as a client. She decides that he must live at her house and she takes a chance in naming him that her niece, Bernice, is engaged to Mr. Lemuel Z. Hawkberry, a wealthy butler merchant. The wedding of the niece and the nephew is planned in which Mrs. Chelsford's famous emerald necklace is to be used. Bernice insists the necklace be given to her, but instead of Hawkberry, and the two youngsters, each with a copy of the play in their hands, go to the local police station. Bernice, eloping, chooses Jake's getaway automobile and all end up in a police station. The groom is recovered and the bride is still. Everybody is happy except Mr. Lemuel Z. Hawkberry.

THE PROMISE LAND (Three parts—June 17).—The cast: David Hunter (Bryant Washburn); Margaret Jamison (Marguerite Clayton); Charlie Griswold (Edmund Collins). David Hunter is a bushful suitor for the hand of Margaret Jamison, Charlie Griswold, a young traveling salesman, comes to the town and promptly wins the girl's affections. She elopes with him. Some years pass and David, the drug clerk, has become a doctor. The surgeon. The Griswolds live in the same city. Charlie has taken up gambling and drinking and Margaret has become a prostitute. The baby becomes ill and Hunter is called. He saves its life and there is mutual recognition and reconciliation. Margaret tells Charlie, who has deserted the family, is killed in a train wreck. David Hunter shows Margaret that he has not been in the little town, rather than the city and they return together.

VITAPHON.

CAREW AND SON (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—June 3).—The cast: Silas Wheatley (Charles Kent); Emily Lewis (Mary Maurice); Bob Carew (Walter McGrath); Jack Lewis (Gordon Gray); Jane Belle (Gordon Gray); Col. Carew (Charles Wellesley); Mrs. Weston (Mrs. Kohler); Mr. Lewis (Frank Chapman). Author: Nathaniel W. Fikins. Produced by Harry Davenport.

Bob, son of Colonel Carew, a life-long friend of the Lewis family, is in love with Emily Lewis, where the latter's son, Jack, also is employed. Jack is in some straits because of the prohibition laws. He has a few dollars, but he is leading him on merely for the sake of the luxuries with which he supplies her. He is attracted to each other. After several proposals to her, telling her that he will be unable to touch his fortune for at least two years, and Jane is surprised to find that she has learned to love him. He is still. She has been mistaken about his wealth.

She consents to the marriage. Jack, down and out, comes to her. The latter goes out to get some money to help him out and meanwhile leaves the payroll in his desk. When he returns he finds that Jack has disappeared with the firm's money. Knowing that Jack's mother, Emily, who has been almost a mother to him, is seriously ill, and that the knowledge of her son's crime would kill her, Bob assumes the responsibility for the theft. Wheatley, the lawyer, is called in. He tells the truth about the robbery, and his memory goes back many years to the time when Emily had spurned him.

The thirst for vengeance is born within him and he determines to prosecute Jack to obtain satisfaction for his mother's treatment so long ago. He goes to Lewis home to tell him of the crime, but when he sees his former sweetheart for the first time since his proposal had been refused, he realizes that he loves her and the sight of her has driven from him all thoughts of revenge.

NEW YORK, PAST AND PRESENT (June 5).—Father Knickerbocker personally conducts a tour through the great metropolis. We see all the familiar landmarks—first, the rapid change of time—such as the site of Washington's headquarters, Van Courtland Mansion, Trinity and St. Paul's churches, Bowling Green, in fact, all points of interest. As the views fade out and in their place we see the same site as it appeared back in the Colonial days, when the city was a small town. The spot is noted, took place. Characters and locations of the days of Washington are reproduced. Washington and other notable men of the day, hearts of all true Americans, are shown in their favorite haunts. The reel closes with a wonderful panoramic view of the city from the pinnacle of the Woolworth Building.

SHE WON A PRIZE (June 9).—The cast: Molly Moore (Edith Storey); Charlie (Antonio Moreno); Grace Benap (Josephine

so much about the wonderful charms of music. Pokes decides to present him with Edith, with a piano, in order to win her love. On her birthday, Jabbs, another suitor for Edith's affections, appears with a box of cigars and a large bouquet of flowers. Pokes, in the meantime, has invested his entire capital of $1 for the piano, to be paid for on the piano. Pokes plans of $1 per week. When the piano is installed, to the disgust of Jabbs, who seeks to avenge himself upon Edith.

The smoke issuing from the chimney of Edith's home gives Jabbs an idea of how he can secure his revenge, and, accordingly, he begins to carry out his nefarious scheme. By slitting upon the chimney he succeeds in forcing the smoke back into the parlor, where Edith, here, Paul and Edith are spooning, while Edith's mother is executing some harmonious selections on the piano. When the smoke enters the room, the first thought is to save Edith, while the mother rushes for help. However, the awful thought of paying $1 a week the rest of his life for a piano that is about to be lost decides Pokes' conduct, so he forgets Edith, thinking only of his beloved piano.

Dropping Edith on the couch, Pokes drags the piano outside, when Jabbs from the roof above begins to pour water down on the piano. Pokes covers up the piano to protect it, but more trouble comes to him when the other returns accompanied by his wings armed with a street cleaning hose. Acting under the instructions of the revengeful Jabbs, the white wash is poured on the piano and his piano and sweep them down the street, over the dock and into the river.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE

THE STAINED PEARL (Three Parts—June 9).—The cast: Captain Ray (Henry King); Hawkins (Charles Dudley); Paul (Harry Southall); Bella (Clara Lee); Tony (Hercules Poirot); Tonio (Richard Johnson); Guiso (Frank Rencinger); Burns (Don Bailey). Directed by H. M. Warner. D. J. H. "The Stained Pearl" comes! No man knows. On the full tide it came to land in the pocket of a dress, and the woman who owned it was dead and was killed in his turn by Pietro, who, fleeing, came to the ship of Captain Ray and got the pearl. As the woman was dead, Pietro hid the gem and coveted it, but Captain Ray got the pearl, "for safe keeping," as he said. And he quarreled her down the river, and hid the body in a great sea chest. Stowed away in the hold was Paul, who loved the captain's daughter. He was killed by Pietro, and his death, and hid him in the hold, and he appeared as a ghost to Captain Ray. In his last moments, the captain hid the pearl in a shotgun, and with that strange bullet in his terror, he fired at Mate Hawkins and killed to the great grief was lost forever, and the girl found her lover again and death and desolation.

Diane Elanor De Vaudrey secretly weds a girl who is beneath her station in life. She is born in this union, Louise, the second wife. Henriette, a daughter of a noble family, is attracted by her beauty and influences her husband, and forces her to kill the Count Linieres, who is the father of Louise's existence. Louise is secretly placed in a convent, a peasant woman, who has an only daughter, Henriette.

Eighteen years later, the peasant woman, when the two orphans start in life. When they arrive in the city, the Marquis De Preles sees Henriette, is attracted by her beauty and wishes to kidnap her. In the meantime, Henriette is married to a man, and she takes her life and rescues her. Henriette is abducted by the Marquis.

Louise, of the two orphans, now left alone, is saved from a watery grave by Pierre Frochard, the crippled brother of Jacques Frochard. He is a beggar, lives with her two sons, Pierre and Jacques, and Louise now falls into their hands. She is rescued by the Marquis De Preles, who is in honor of the Chevalier Maurice De Vaudrey. Henriette, desperate, appeals to the Countess De Linieres to save her from the hands of the Marquis.

In an ensuing sword battle, De Preles is killed. Henriette tells of the loss of her father, and Louise, who is supposed to be dead, is rescued by the Marquis De Vaudrey.

The Count De Linieres, now Minister of Police, discovers that there is a mistake in the Count's overhauls enough to make him suspicious of his wife, but the Chevalier tears out the incriminating page, and burns it.

The Chevalier is in love with Henriette and arouses the King's displeasure by proposing to the girl, but she refuses him and he continues his search for the missing Louise. Meantime, Louise, clad only in rags, is forced by Frochard to follow him to the city.

The Countess pleads with Henriette not to marry the Chevalier, but she is forced to do so. Henriette is killed, but Marianne, the outcast, changes places with her. The Chevalier's search for Louise is continued. The Countess is killed by the Frochards. Picard carries the tidings to Henriette, and the Chevalier is killed by the Frochards. Henriette arrives at the Frochards, discovers her sister, but when they attempt to escape, she is killed. Louise is killed. HER WONDERFUL SECRET (June 13).—The cast: Colonel Fairfax (J. E. Nichols); Edith Fairfax (Edith Roberts); Beverly Spottiswoode (Alexander Hodge); Raoul Pinckney (Harry Benham); Rastus (Jack Ridgeway). Written by William Addison L. Thompson. Directed by William Addison L. Thompson.

Colonel Fairfax, an old-time Southern gentleman, and his sixteen-year-old granddaughter, Edith, live in the South. During the Civil War with a large and much run-down estate. They are poor beyond description. One servant, and Rastus, more than any other, is devoted to a loyal to the core, has remained in their service.

A letter arrives that has been delayed at the postoffice, from which the Colonel learns that Beverly Spottiswoode, his boyhood friend, whom he has not seen in years, is due the very day, in the month of June. Beverly Spottiswoode tells his nephew, Raoul Pinckney, who is to inherit his fortune, that he will be delayed for several hours, and sends him to the Fairfax plantation to make excuses for his delay. Edith is about to kill "Daniel Webster," the only chicken left of the Spottiswoode, in order to provide dinner for Spottiswoode when Raoul arrives. He asks Edith if she needs any help. She is in love with him, and she tells him the stranger, that she allows "Daniel" to escape. Raoul introduces himself, but does not specify that he is the nephew of Beverly Spottiswoode, and traveling companion. Edith explains that she was about to sacrifice the rooster, though he had been a pet for many years, as they expect a distinguished guest for dinner, and there isn't anything else available. Raoul assures her that, under the circumstances, the distinguished guest would be a disappointment. He tells her of the "Daniel," and persuades her to let him live.

Raoul is then introduced to the Colonel, and while he is in the room, he is in the room, he is not to divulge to her that he is Mr. Spottiswoode's nephew, and the Colonel agrees to keep his secret. He is then introduced to the room, and he is in the room, he is not to divulge to her that he is Mr. Spottiswoode's nephew, and the Colonel agrees to keep his secret. He is then introduced to the room, and he is in the room, he is not to divulge to her that he is Mr. Spottiswoode's nephew, and the Colonel agrees to keep his secret. He is then introduced to the room, and he is in the room, he is not to divulge to her that he is Mr. Spottiswoode's nephew, and the Colonel agrees to keep his secret.

Of course, the denouement had to come sooner or later, and Edith is much abused when she finds that Raoul is Spottiswoode's nephew, but she readily forgives the deception under the influence of the dinner. In the evening, when the Colonel and Mr. Spottiswoode are sitting by the fire, Edith and Raoul are seated over by the old piano in the shadow, talking in low tones and seeming very much in love. The Colonel and Mr. Spottiswoode look at them and smile at each other. There is every evidence of a match in the making.

THE DEVIL'S IMAGE (Two Parts—June 16).—The cast: Henry Delaney (Hobart Henne); Rex Delaney, his brother (Tony Moberg); James Mortimer (James Mortimer); Blanche Griswold (Rene Hunt). Written by J. Grubb Alexander. Produced by Hal Clarendon.

Blanche Griswold is engaged to James Mortimer. He has a secret, that his late father's estate is bankrupt and feels it his duty to release Blanche from her engagement until he is successful. He has a secret, that his late father's estate is bankrupt and feels it his duty to release Blanche from her engagement until he is successful. He has a secret, that his late father's estate is bankrupt and feels it his duty to release Blanche from her engagement until he is successful.

James Mortimer is a distant city, hears of the marriage and resolves to put Blanche out of his thoughts. Delaney, on one of his trips to the tropics, is beset by a serious form of tropical fever, and uses drugs in small quantities to ward off the recurrent attacks.

Delaney is a doctor, and he is in the habit of seeking to dissuade him from the use of the drugs, but without avail. At the first university of medicine, Delaney is a doctor, and he is in the habit of seeking to dissuade him from the use of the drugs, but without avail. At the first university of medicine, Delaney is a doctor, and he is in the habit of seeking to dissuade him from the use of the drugs, but without avail.

Rex follows and realizes that his brother has become a drug addict. After his brother has left the house Rex takes the remaining drug and returns to the anniversary reception. Later that day Henry returns to the office, and when he is retired, and he steals out into the darkened library for a dose of the drug. He finds the drug empty, and accuses the nurse of having taken the drug. She denies this in amazement, never having even known that he used a drug. Delaney sits through the night in the library in which he cannot satisfy. He reads a newspaper on the table and ascertains that the famous anti-drug artist, Billie, has been arrested. It will be impossible for him to obtain any more drugs.

Realizing that he cannot get any more drugs through the usual channels, he becomes a nervous maniac by morning, when a fierce fight ensues between him, his brother and himself. Delaney is overcome, and in his weakened condition, he is rushed to a sanitarium. In the meantime James Mortimer has become a successful architect, and his plans are accepted for a new building in New York. Delaney has recuperated slightly in the sanitarium, but the drug terror has not left him. He manages to bribe his nurse to procure drugs from the office, and, alone in his room in the sanitarium, he takes large doses of the drug. A vision of his wife appears before him, and he resolves to return home.

On the same night James Mortimer, having arrived in New York, attends a ball, and there meets Blanche Delaney. They are both shocked and embarrassed when the table is set, and she escorts her to her home. Delaney, drunk with morphia and whiskey, enters his house and sends Blanche and her maid to bed. He then puts a wrong construction on this and insults James Mortimer. An angry scene ensues, and Delaney goes to his bed. He awakes in the morning while Mortimer leaves the house in angry disgust.

Delaney beats upon his wife's door, and, failing to obtain admission, he seats himself at the table and indulges in large doses of drugs, followed by gulps of whiskey. While he is drinking, he looks across the table and sees the image of his other self, standing in front of him. His other self advises him to murder his wife. Delaney, undisturbed, goes to his wife's bedroom and leans over her. His hands start clenching and unclenching toward her. Blanche awakes in the morning and sees her husband's face, sinks back in terror. Then Delaney turns on his other self, draws a revolver and kills him. His other self is buried in the floor dead with a self-inflicted wound. James Mortimer, fearing to leave Blanche alone with her insane husband, goes to her. Hearing the shot, he rushes in, and the picture fades out with Mortimer and Blanche in each other's arms.

NESTOR.

—THEIR AWFUL PRECIPITATION (June 12). —The cast: Mr. Grey (Harry Rattenberry); his niece (Ethel Lynne); Cousin Mary (Billie Dickson); her maid (Betty Brown); Jim Slick (Ed. Burns); Potts (Lee Moran).

Mr. Grey and his niece invite their cousin, Mary, and her sweetheart to pay them a visit. Billie phones to her sweetheart, Eddie, to stop at the drug store for a package, telling him she will meet him at the depot. Jim Slick, a crook, steals a necklace from a large jewelry firm and is being closely followed. He manages to get into the drug store at the same time as Eddie is making his purchase, and they exchange the package. Slick is overtaken by the police, but as the jewels are not found on him he is allowed to go. Meantime Eddie meets Billie and hands her the package, which she places in her grip. The police search Eddie but cannot find the package. When Billie opens the package she finds the jewels and thinks that Eddie is a thief. One of Slick's pals is called by her to take her to get the jewels. Grey's butler, who is working with Slick, makes the excuse that his mistress is so ill that he cannot get away. He sends one of Slick's pals to take his place. Eddie and Billie arrive at uncle's, but Billie will allow no one to touch her uncle, but Ethel thinks rather queer.

A detective, Potts, has been engaged on the case and informs Grey that the crook is in his home. Potts talks with the crook and he thinks is the butler. Billie and Eddie discover a notice in the robbery in the paper, and Billie falls. The detective is watching, and Eddie leaves hurriedly. Billie has hid the jewels in her waist, but takes them out just as Eddie happens to knock through the curtain, revealing her suspicious actions, thinks that she has stolen them. He rushes up stairs.

Potts is in the room, and her room, but hearing Eddie coming, hides in the closet. Billie comes on and hides the jewels in the grip. Then she thinks of the package and sends them in her maid, which Potts sees through the keyhole. Billie seeks out Eddie and tells him that she stole them. He tells her to go to the house and says the best thing for the thief to do is to return the jewels to the firm. Both are greatly worried. The crook and Potts are examining the grip and the maid stands by the door, while Billie has again hid in the grip, and puts into his pocket. But when Potts accuses him, he helps them back into the grip, and Eddie later finds them and accuses them in her waist. Potts meanwhile searches Eddie.

Eddie wraps the jewels in some paper and gives them to the butler-crook to take to the jeweler. Potts then puts the handcuffs on Billie, and when Eddie tries to fight him, he puts the other handcuff on Eddie, in which plight they are discovered by uncle and Ethel. Each accuses himself to the other. But a confederate of Potts had been keeping his eye on the crook-butler, and as he leaves the room he grabs him by the wrist and follows and Billie and Eddie become engaged.

—ALMOST A WIDOW (June 16). —The cast: Mr. Gordon (Neal Burns); his wife (Betty Compton); her friend (Ethel Lynn). Story by Robt. McGowan. Produced by Horace Davey. Gordon has to leave to boat trip, misses the boat, and during the time which he has to wait for the next one is persuaded by his friend Eddie to play a little game. His wife and her friend decide to go slumming that night. The police also decide to make a raid, and catch Gordon, and his friends, and they are all arrested, take them off to jail and lock them up for the night. In the opium joint in which the friends are held, the police are ordered to arrest the whole bunch; but the wife manages to hide behind an officer and makes her escape. Gordon has to be released, but is accused by the news that the ship upon which her husband was supposed to have taken passage had been sunk. Gordon and his friends are all arrested, and friends send flowers. Gordon and his friend are in a quandary when they hear the news, but decide they will tell the wife that they are only survivors. She is overjoyed to hear this, but just at this point her friend appears with a later edition which announces that the friends are held safely in prison. The wife is very angry and is berating her spouse when the maid announces a policeman at the door to see her. She is obliged to go, and the policeman band that she had evaded arrest in the opium joint on the night before. When the officer is alone, he tells her she will give him a reward if she had dropped while shopping. "Never again" seems to be the favorite motto of the young couple now.

GOLD SEAL.

—THE MELODY OF LOVE (Three Parts—June 13). —The cast: Jack O'Brien (J. Warren Kerrigan); "Hardpan" Henry (Jack Connor); Dave (Norbert Johnson); Vera (Ethel Phillips); Vera Lou (Nell Shipman); Biddy Malone (Mary Talbot); "Rattlesnake Pete" (Tom Sherry). (Part 1.) Written by Nell Shipman. Produced by J. Warren Kerrigan.

Hardpan is taken to the mining town of Eldorado with nothing but his pluck and his music. Biddy Malone was the first to hear his singing, and it was a place for the lad in her heart and a job at her woodpile to pay for his board, while Mary, who lived with Biddy, looked and listened, and learned to love the big singer. Hardpan, who owns a guitar, makes a big claim, and who was really Mary's father, also hears the troubadour's song, took a fancy to the boy, and he was the first to tell her. In a saloon brawl, which followed an insult, cast by Diamond Dave, a gambler, upon the name of "Hardpan," Jack took the name of Hardpan, by shooting up the lights, saved the lad and took him to his own cabin on the Lucky Star.

Time passed, and Jack became Hardpan's partner. This did not please Dave, who wanted to see his old department. He told Hardpan that Dave did not know that Hardpan was Mary's father; but one night Jack found the old man in the saloon, and he told him that Hardpan confessed that he had quarreled with his wife and she had left him. Following the first clean-up at the mine, Jack O'Brien carried Cole to Mary, and told her that she was to be his wife. But Dave had caused the girl to believe that the gold did not belong to Jack, and he persuaded him. Jack went to the last Chance saloon and to Vera Lou, a dance hall girl, who loved him.

Realizing his mistake, Mary wrote to Jack, begging him to return, but the message fell into the hands of Dave, who ordered Vera Lou to burn the letter. Mary had to wait until morning. Dave then sent his tool, Rattlesnake Pete, to the Lucky Strike, and while Jack was waiting, he had her hand. Mary was shot. At dawn Dave led the sheriff's posse to the cabin and then to Vera. Jack O'Brien was shot, and Vera was killed. Mary was the woman. Then, her better nature aroused by Jack's plight, she aided him in his escape from the saloon. Jack and Vera went to Mary's house. Jack called on horseback to Mary's house, he commanded her to come with him, and the girl obeyed. When they reached the cabin, Hardpan, who was waiting, told the story, and Mary learned for the first time that he was her father.

Realizing the danger, Jack sought a hiding place in a deserted hole. Here he found Rattlesnake Pete. The murderer, escaping the scene of his crime, had fallen into the hole and broken his arm. Jack found the man, dragged Pete before the sheriff, and the man confessed to the murder. Dave was accused as the real instigator of the game. He was arrested. Before Hardpan died he said to Jack: "I leave you my little girl."

LAEMMLE.

—HER SOUL'S SONG (Two Parts—June 15). —The cast: Mary Salisbury (Dorothy Davenport); Paul Chandos (Emory Johnson); baby (Helen Kerrigan); girl (Virginia Johnson); Scenarist: Arthur Johnston. Produced by L. B. Carleton.

Mary Salisbury loves Paul Chandos, who is trying to make a start in life in a small town. Paul asks Mary to be his wife, but she tells him she will never marry until she has either made a failure or success of her voice. She leaves for the city to have her voice trained.

Five years later, Paul, now a successful business man, is in the city, and he hears her performance, and there he again meets Mary, who is now known as Valeria Salisbury. After a long time, Paul and Valeria decide to become his wife, and she consents on one condition, that any time she wishes to return to the stage, he will allow her to do so. Valeria consents. A year later, when Valeria gives birth to her child, she loses her faculty for singing, but the doctor expects that she will lose it. Valeria, that she will not be able to sing any more. As days go by she becomes moody and dependent.

Finally, she can stand the desire for her former life no longer, and decides to leave for Europe to receive treatment for her voice. Valeria and Paul separate after a heated conversation, leaving the child in his care. In Europe Valeria is advised by physicians that she should never return home, but she had better return home to her husband and child. This advice makes Valeria brood, and in time she has given up everything for nothing, she decides to return home. When Valeria returns to Paul, he is angry, but he has no choice. Paul, at first refuses to allow her to see the child, saying that it is her fault the child has no voice. But he has no choice. He pleads, and he allows her to see the baby.

Terror-stricken, she asks the doctor if there is any hope. The doctor says there is none. She becomes like an insane woman. She picks up the child, screams that no one shall take it from her, and when someone tries to humiliate a lullaby. As she sings, she realizes that her voice has come back. With this realization, she fights more and more, and she tells her husband and her mother, believing it is beyond all hope. Late that night Valeria is still seen at the bedside of the child, and the doctor comes to see her. The child much better, and tells the parents that with real mother love the baby may live. A touching reconciliation follows between husband and wife.

—ROMANCE AT RANDOM (June 18). —The cast: Arthur Rotts (Rupert Julian); Mrs. Sullivan (Elsie Jane Wilson); Tom Sullivan (Marc Fenton). Scenario by E. J. Clawson. Produced by Arthur Rotts. While seated near a table, he picks up an album and idly looks through it. The book is filled with pictures of "Tom Sullivan," a night promoter, and pictures of prize fighters he has trained. Sullivan's picture is of a strong man, and Arthur begins to feel pangs of remorse. When the woman enters, Arthur suggests it would be a good plan for him to "run along." But before he can leave some one coming in the front door. The woman, who is her husband and Arthur nearly collapses. The husband comes to the door and Arthur, hastily changing a weak preparation for a fight, tells Sullivan comes in. He is a small, sickly man, about four feet in height, and he looks from his eyes. Arthur in an instant smiles and invites him to make himself at home.

WHEN THE WOLF HOWLS (June 14).—The cast: Ralph (W. W. Mong); Elsie (Cleo Madison); Mary (M. G. May). Scenario by W. V. Mong. Produced by Cio Madison and W. V. Mong.

Gardner is an artist. His wife is about to become a mother. Things haven't gone well with Ralph and his landlady has ordered him to vacate her studio. Elsie, who broods over the situation, and with the idea that she is a millstone about the neck of her husband, she decides to eliminate her a troublesome factor. Elsie, however, leaves the studio, intending to kill herself.

During her absence, a messenger boy brings Gardner a note from an art collector as well as a check with the information that it is an advance on the purchase price of the picture. Gardner is overjoyed. He has a change in his fortune. Hoping to please and at the same time to astonish his wife, he hides the check in a little box. Elsie, however, had made in anticipation of the arrival of the little stranger, and then retires to an adjoining room. The wife enters and, seeing Gardner, and thinking he has gone out, prepares to drink the contents of the bottle, first sitting down to write a short note to Gardner.

Meanwhile, in an adjoining room, is impatiently awaiting the discovery of the check. In the other room the wife finishes the note and is unable to stand the suspense any longer, rushes into the studio. Elsie, in her nervousness, has put the bottle of poison in the box. There is something wrong but does not discover his wife's attempt at self-destruction. He joyfully tells her the good news and she finds the little sock containing the check in her hands.

THE FINER METAL (Two Parts—June 18).

—The cast: Jerome Hartley, a banker (Ben Wilson); Hester Hartley (Dorothy Phillips); Stephen Carlton (William Welsh); Grimes (Charles O'Leary); Marcia (Leonora Don O'Leary). Scenario by Harry Dittmar. Produced by Raymond L. Schrock.

Hester Hartley feels the call of youth and enjoys society and dancing. Her husband is devoted to his business interests, and often tries to coerce Hester to devote her time to her duties. Stephen Carlton, who is Hartley's assistant at the bank, through his many calls at Hartley's home, becomes acquainted with her. He finally succeeds in getting her to elope with him by telling her that her husband has been keeping secret from her the fact that he has a daughter. She misses the train to leave for two days, and the next one does not wait for two hours. Stephen suggests to Hester that they stop at a hotel. Hester is unwilling to want to go home, but Stephen dissuades her.

Just as Stephen is registering a boy from Hartley's bank enters the room and gives him a letter. He spies Stephen. After Stephen has given the boy notes that the bank clerk has registered the "Mr. Morton Gove and his wife, Pittsburgh." In the meantime, a book-keeper hands a ledger to Hartley, showing him the figures. He notices that the ledger shows the bank boy is dispatched to find Stephen, and he tells Hartley he saw him go into the hotel. Hester becomes suspicious of the boy when she registers. Hartley goes to the room of Stephen, and is conducted to the room at the door, and Hester sees it is time to hide behind the curtains. She is cringing to fear, believing that Hartley has been lying to her, and that he has not been written him telling of her elopement. Stephen, too, thinks Hartley has come to prevent their marriage. Hartley tells Stephen he has and has come to save him. Hester shrinks in fear behind the curtains. Hartley goes on to tell her that he has come to save him to help the directors find it out and imprison him.

When Hester hears this, she realizes her husband's nobility of character. Stephen asks Hester if she feels out of her head. She answers, and the banker tells him that Marcia, Stephen's former mistress, gave him away out of revenge. Marcia was the beautiful and mysterious woman who had been in Hartley's private office. Stephen recently quarreled with Marcia, and she told Hartley that Stephen was taking advantage of her. Hartley, however, of this accusation until Grimes, the bookkeeper, showed him the ledger. Hartley assures the bank clerk that he will back the money to him and give him another chance. Stephen is overcome with his employer's magnanimity, while his wife grieves, sobs softly behind the curtains.

It is imperative that Hester rush home to get her things. She hears her husband's knock and reaches the house. How can she get out of the hotel room? Hartley hears her crying, and accidentally having received the money in the room. Stephen pleads guilty, and begs that Hartley let the lady get out of the room without being seen. Hartley agrees to this, and switches off the light. Hester makes her way out of the room in the darkness, and rushes for home. There she destroys the note. She tells her mother of her escape. When Hartley returns home for dinner, he finds Hester waiting for him with open arms.

THE GOLDEN BOOT (June 10).—The cast: Miser's Wife (Mary Haines); Miser (Ed. Brown); Weary (Albert McQuarrie). Scenario by Olga Ventral. Produced by Wm. Bowman.

A little miser lives with Miser Tight, and his wife. They are at breakfast. Miser Tight stows some money in an old boot, when his wife notices it. She goes to the wall. Then he sets out to collect more rent from his tenants. Near the house Weary Blink, a tramp, is repairing upon an ash barrel. He awakens and sets out in search for food. He calls at Miser Tight's house, but the wife refuses to let him in. After a while, however, to secure food, she becomes exasperated and flings out the old shoe at the tramp. He finds the money in it and, after a while, decides to spend it. He tries repeatedly to find the different stores, but the merchants, alarmed at the sight of the roll of bills, think that he has stolen it.

When the tramp is detected by the police, Weary Blink, the detective, who follows Weary Blink. Miser Tight arrives at the home of a poor laborer, and tells him that he has been told that his wife has been working on the building opposite the little house, and Miser Tight sets out to get his money. Weary Blink leads the detectives and the police a merry chase, and in the officers' scramble for the money he gets away. Weary Blink, however, is hidden beneath the scaffold on which the poor laborer is at work, and in the scramble for the money he is able to call the man's attention to the commotion the tramp is in. He forgets, and the hurt man carried into his little home. Miser Tight, not at all touched by the pathos of the scene, follows the crowd there and demands the money.

When the crowd has left, Weary Blink, who has sneaked into the rear of the house for protection, hears the brutal miser hounding the injured man. Blink enters the room, pays the miser, and the miser goes down the street below. Then, realizing that he has caused the accident to befall the man, he showers the remnant of his money on him, and goes on his way, leaving the little family rejoicing. In the lumber yards, where he sits down to rest, he looks at the boot which contained so much—and yet so little for him, and falls asleep.

BETTY'S HOBBO (June 15).—The cast: Edward Farrington (Malcolm Blevins); Betty Zerk (Lillian Peacock); Bill (Wm. Franey); Gerness (Marjorie Ellison). Written by Calder Johnston. Produced by R. H. Cochrane.

Edward Farrington is a young man who is living in Southern California. Of late the community has been overrun by hordes of tramps. It is in the middle of the summer, and the tramp is invading the territory, and to sentence each one to the chain gang. Judge Farrington has a boy and a girl, the former in his early teens, and the latter of five years. A dower, his children are his greatest love, and little Betty is his pet.

One day while Betty is romping in the garden an old tramp comes to the gate and asks for food. Betty gives him a big plate full. Before long the tramp gives her a whistle, and a remembrance. The whistle is engraved with a peculiar coat of arms. The next day Betty goes to school, and her dog and most of the other nearby footfalls, where she lies down for a nap and falls asleep. Night comes on, and when Betty awakes, she finds the tramp in her room. Her father and brother go in search of her, but are unable to find her. Early in the morning she is found by Old Bill, the tramp she has fed, and he takes the little child to her home. Her father and brother ask her where she has been, and she tells them of her adventures. Before taking her back home, gave her as much food as he could. But Old Bill, knowing the new code of the law, has taken the advice of his cronies and hurried off.

A few days later in a nearby town Old Bill is arrested and two pairs are brought before Judge Farrington. All three are sentenced to sixty days on the chain gang. The old man takes it very hard, and when he is finally taken to the road, he is so tired that he falls into a deep sleep. He is so tired that he falls into a deep sleep. He is so tired that he falls into a deep sleep.

Betty is motoring with her brother Teddy at the time and passes the gang just as Old Bill falls to the ground. She has the car stopped and goes to succor her rescuer. Betty and her brother, however, are not allowed to enter, and the deputy refuses. That evening the children tell their father about it. Betty shows him the silver whistle the old man gave her, and when he looks at it he gasps with astonishment. Memories return and he wonders how the tramp came into possession of the engraved toy. The next day he sends to the sheriff's office the old tramp brought to his home.

When the tramp is led to the gate and sees the judge, he fears so much that he falls into his hands. But the magistrate treats him kindly, and sends for his daughter. Betty comes with her wedding veil, and the judge and his boy with wondering eyes. The judge questions Old Bill, and asks him where he got the whistle. The tramp tells him that he had been a servant in the home of John Farrington—"way back East"—and one of his chief duties was to carry a silver whistle to the man. The father gave to each a silver whistle, so that when they were out hunting or on long trips, they could be separated and then come back to each other. His employer fathered in justice, and Old Bill lost his position. He worked at various trades, but the on-coming years he had become physically weak, and he had no skill, and knowing no skilled trade, he had had a hard time of it and had gradually fallen into the jaws of a tramp.

The judge listened to the story, and when he is through asks Bill if he doesn't remember him. The tramp tells him that he does, and that was the boy he looked after years before, and that from now on he can watch over his boy and his daughter. The judge, however, leaves the children with Old Bill. He returns and shows the mate to Old Bill's whistle. He gives it to the man, and tells him to use it as in other days, and that he will carry the whistle Bill has given to her.

Russell. Mary is horrified and faints when she sees Milton pull out his gun. In the struggle Russell gets Milton's gun from him. Two of Mendoza's scouts, who have been reconnoitering, see the combat from a distance, and, recognizing Russell, decide to kill him. One of the outlaws fires, intending to hit Russell, but in reality wounding Milton. Russell fires at the outlaws bringing one of them down. The other, firing a last shot, attempts to escape, but Russell takes the horse of the fallen bandit and pursues his companion. The sheriff and his men find Mary and Milton lying on the ground. Milton tells the sheriff that Russell was insulting Miss Kendall, and he interfered, and that Russell then shot him and made him escape. Mr. Kendall, who has just arrived, hears the explanation, and orders the sheriff to get him. But before the sheriff can execute his orders, Russell comes riding in with the second bandit lying across his horse. He gives an account of the shooting of the recruits. An irascible Murray informs him that he is his prisoner for the shooting of Milton. The wounded bandit clears the situation, telling them that himself shot Milton, although intending to shoot Russell. Miss Kendall then gives her version of the affair, denying that Russell was insulting her, but accusing Milton. Russell is released by the sheriff. Kendall orders Milton and the bandits taken to the cart. He apologizes to Russell, and walking on ahead, leaves Russell and Mary to walk together to the "Special."

THE STAR OF INDIA (Two Parts—June 17).—The cast: Grace Radnor (Margaret Gibson); Lord Ashdown (William Clifford); Sir Lionel West (Frederick Nonne); Arthur Fitzallen (Al D. Blake); Con Magee (Louis Durham); Rajah (Charles Gay); Shung (Dave Allen). Directed by Charles G. Miller.

In the year 1756, the slaves of a certain Rajah of India unearth a remarkable diamond, which on account of its unusual size is christened "The Star of India." The gem is handed down as an heirloom to the Rajah's descendants. In the year 1912 the gem is mysteriously stolen and the blame is shifted onto the shoulders of one Sir Lionel West, a wealthy collector of jewels.

Previous to the theft, Lord Ashdown, an English nobleman, to escape the numerous traps of the law, had married a native Indian girl, marrying their daughters to him, takes up his residence in India, where he falls in love with Grace Radnor, a niece of Sir Lionel West. Arthur Fitzallen, Sir Lionel's nephew, desires to marry his cousin. Sir Lionel has observed the reckless and dissolute ways of Arthur, but does not openly show his displeasure until his nephew announces the fact that he seeks the hand of Grace.

Sir Lionel states his objections frankly and to the point and to avoid any possibility of Grace being annoyed by his unwelcome attention, drives Arthur from his home with a demand never to return. Thrown upon his own resources, Arthur subsequently accepts a proposition from a crafty and unscrupulous Indian Prince to secure for him the celebrated diamond "The Star of India." Success in this mission accomplished, Arthur returns to abduct Grace, so by means of a decoy letter she is lured to an unoccupied cabin which was formerly the headquarters of the conspirators who aided in the theft of the diamond.

Con Magee, Lord Ashdown's valet, witnesses the abduction, hides on the trunk rack of the auto and rides off with the party to the cabin in the jungle. Arriving at the Journey's end, Con appropriates the car and drives off to spread the alarm. At the cabin, Grace and Arthur are attacked by a lion. Grace flees to an adjoining room and Arthur, with a chair as his only weapon, attempts to defend himself. In the struggle with the beast the lion is overthrown, the cabin catches fire, and the sparks ignite the surrounding jungle.

Lord Ashdown and his friends, guided by Con Magee, have considerable difficulty in reaching the burning hut. Grace has escaped from the cabin, only to be met with a wall of fire. As she turns back to escape the flames she is confronted by the lion, which has also escaped from the cabin. Lord Ashdown arrives in time to match the girl from the ferocious beast. Trapped by the fire, the conspirators flee for their lives, but are intercepted by the rescue party, who overpower them and recover "The Star of India."

Jerry has boarded a freight and has successfully secluded himself from the watchful train crew. He is about to alight at a station near the town constable detects him. There is no way of escape and as he is about to give up, a bright idea comes into his mind. There is a big roll of stage money and with it he bribes the "law." Making for the town tavern, Jerry believes that he has fooled the man behind the bar with his fake money.

Meanwhile, the constable gathers his cronies together and as Jerry escapes, he the latter discovers that the bill handed by the guardian of the law is a fake. A fight results and in the mix-up Jerry escapes. In the battle for liberty Jerry comes across a settlement of moonshiners. He hides until all are out of sight excepting the pretty daughter of one of the band. A flirtation follows and the girl accepts Jerry's advances. Soon the mother appears, and Jerry is forced to flee. While Jerry is looking in another direction, The mother takes her place, as Jerry continues his scene, unaware that the girl has left.

The father arrives upon the scene to find a strange man making love to his wife. Jerry sneaks off, reaches the cabin, and is admitted by the girl, but, fearing her father's anger, she induces Jerry to hide in the attic. The moonshiners join the father in the hunt for the stranger, but the girl will not betray her new flame. The angry men start firing off their revolvers in every direction and several pierce the ceiling, one of which smashes a bottle of wine which Jerry is drinking.

The liquor leaks through a crack in the floor and drips to the floor below, divulging Jerry's hiding place. The moonshiners rush upstairs, but as they show their heads above the door, Jerry greets them with bottle after bottle, well aimed. Revenue officers who are searching for the moonshiners are attracted by the firing. Jerry sees them from a window and decides to escape, when, noticing the constable with the changes in his mind and comes down stairs, and, after a small riot manages to get out of the cabin, only to run into the arms of the revenue.

To save himself, Jerry offers to show them the way to the moonshiners' camp. His invitation is accepted, and the revenue men capture the moonshiners and the father. As they are led away, Jerry shows pleasure, believing that he will be left to woo the pretty daughter. The constable recognizes Jerry as the man who gave him the bad money and a moment later her hero is also a prisoner. Jerry and his captives are chained together and carried away, while the daughter and mother tramp along behind, weeping bitterly.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN'S OPERATION (June 7).—The cast: Billy Van Deusen (John Stepping); Nurse (Carroll Holloway); Doctor (John Sheehan); Sick Friend (Dick Ross); Nut (Robert Klein).

Billy Van Deusen was standing in front of his club, when he saw a woman who came to crank a "Ford" that refused to be cranked. Billy went to assist the lady. He cranked and cranked, and then he realized that perhaps there was no gasoline in the tank. When he found that that was the trouble he went out and purchased a five-gallon can of gasoline and started the lady's flivver for her. In starting the crank got back at him by slapping him on the wrist, and he was unprepared to bound up his hand, and suggested that Billy ride with her to his home.

At the constable's home amorous and insisted on holding the lady's hand. She couldn't guide the machine and control a man's advances at the same time. Billy was a little Billy a trick. She stopped the flivver and told Billy to get out and get under. While Billy was standing with the flivver, she had a sudden start and left Billy biting the dust.

Arriving home, Billy found a messenger pressing on him. Billy took the telegram and read with sorrow that his friend Jack Ainsley had been hurt in an auto smash and was confined in the hospital. Jack was lying on the bed when Billy rushes in and became demonstrative in his condolence. The nurse administered to him, and Billy, seeing his actions and when Billy turned to tell her where she headed in, he staggered. The nurse was none other than the girl who had been troubled with divertitis. Billy tried to recall the incident but the Fair One was all for and paid all her attentions to Jack. Then Billy left.

In the hospital hall, from the Harmless Ward, straggled a weeping "nut" who was weeping for his lost lam. He garnered Billy near the elevator shaft and wailed out a sobbing tale about how he had lost his "Ford" and his "clam." Billy gasped and tried to get away, but the nut was after him—until Billy fell down the elevator. The crash was heard all through the building and poor Billy was put in bed, a bandaged but not much injured invalid. "Nut" came from another invalid's door and hung it on Billy's entrance. The intercom came down the hall, saw the sign, entered the room and drugged the operating Billy; then dragged him off to the operating room to be cut into sections. But Billy suddenly awakened and refused to be cut up. The doctors and the internes fought with him and subdued him.

The "nut" strolled the hospital hall and whimpered while the Fair One tended Jack. The "nut's" imitations came to the ears of the Fair One and she rushed out to learn the cause. She soon realized that a grave mistake was being made in the operating room and she rushed there. The doctor was just about to begin the slaughter when the Fair One rushed in and announced the truth. Billy was revived quickly while the "nut" was being taken to the "padded cell." Billy came to, and, calling the Fair One to his side, announced that in return for her rescue he would marry her. She laughed, but the doctor laughed louder, and when Billy inquired the cause of the mirth, the doctor informed him that he admired his taste, but that being that the Fair One was already Mrs. Doctor, Billy could not possibly marry her. So Billy, after being treated for the other bête and put himself to sleep.

THINIM STOUT! (June 11).—The cast: Stout (Orral Humphrey); Mrs. Stout (Lucille Ward); Thinim (John Gough).

Thinim is the chief of a great thinning establishment organized to make fat people thin and thin people thinner. He and Stout and Mrs. Stout are hardly a matched pair, since Mrs. Stout is stouter than Stout. Stout's idea of "class" is the thin woman and she makes use of it to his spouse. She catches him flirting with one of the thin 'uns and weeps copiously, but he pacifies her and takes her to the park for an airing. Here they come across an advertisement in a paper and discover Thinim's advertisement. Still desirous to call on him.

Thinim has no trouble impressing the Stouts with his wonderful system. Mrs. Stout enrolls in the class, but Mrs. Stout insists that Thinim try the course on her husband. Stout is loath to be the "fai! guy," but Thinim and his funny helper hold him and force him to drink some of "Thinim's Thinning Fluid." Once the stuff is in his system they take him to the Apparatus Room for the radical cure.

Stout is thrown into the steam room and enveloped with steam under pressure. Mrs. Stout commences to feel doubtful about her husband's health and watches him through the glass peephole in the furnace floor. Thinim soon decides that Stout is not getting the desired results and lets him into the "Dry Room," a place full with heat and little air. Stout soon dries up and sags under the ordeal.

Mrs. Stout pleads that Thinim allow her shriveled hubby to come out into the open and offers the thinning magnate many shereks if he will comply. Money does not bribe him, but when the fair lady weeps many tears Thinim's heart softens and he opens the door to Stout.

But the Stout that staggers out is not the Stout that was forced in. He is thinner to the bone and the once nicely fitting clothes hung to him like so many rags. Thinim helps him to the office, where he falls into a chair completely unnerved. Mrs. Stout looks at the shadow of her former husband and threatens to go into hysterics. Again she pleads with Thinim to help her, and restore to his former rotundity her poor little hubby.

So Thinim breaks the rules and takes from his safe his "Anti-Thin Fluid," one gule of which brings fat and strength. He gives Stout a dose and lo! and behold! The shriveled person slowly assumes his former shape. Thinim turns his head upon the bed scene and, happy reunion, but Stout, imbued with fat and strength, cannot forget his harsh treatment and wreaks on Thinim a heavy vengeance.

Artistic Projection

Large sums of money, the best artists available, and the most particular care may produce a truly artistic film.

But its success or failure depends largely on the way it is projected.

Maybe you're trying to get perfect results from an alternating current light. It can't be done.

Any operator who has used both will tell you that the best results can be obtained only by using direct current. It alone produces that steady restful light so much desired.

A Westinghouse-Cooper Hewitt Rectifier Outfit will give it to you. Furthermore, it will give you regulation of light to suit the very dense and colored films. Operation of outfit is simple and noiseless. Nothing complicated to get out of order. Folder 4205-B will give you further information. Write for it.

A PLANE STORY (June 6).—The cast: The Chief Mechanic (Rube Miller); The Aviator (Col. Brown); Colonel Brown's Daughter (Madge Kirby); The Spy (Henry Hucksby); The Confederate (Alice Neale). Scenario written by Thomas Delmar. Produced by Rube Miller.

Col. Brown, Chief of the Aviation Service of the U. S. A., receives a copy of the new code of the service. The spy has orders to get a copy of it, so he goes to the office of Rube, who is Chief Mechanic of the Corp. Rube is insulted, so makes it rather warm for the spy. Later the aviator is approached by Rube, who has cut him out for the favor of the Colonel's daughter. Madge, he thinks to get square with Rube, also gets the big idea. Rube is intrusted with the book, therefore, Art is more than happy.

He engages a couple of rough necks that are also employed in the service and they attack Rube. At first they are successful, but Madge, fearing another attack, and thinking that Madge can't be so stupid, gives in her charge. He is seen by the Spy's confederate, who tells the Spy. Rube is then assaulted, his clothes torn from him and he is almost killed.

Madge is taken up in a plane with Art. She, of course, thinks it is Rube. Up in the air, Art tries to get the book from Madge. They struggle, and both fall out of the machine. Madge happens to grab a parachute, while Art saves himself by grabbing a rope hanging from underneath the machine. Art hits the book and lands safely. Rube finds her, they hurry to the office of the Spy and that Art has just arrived. He is showing the book, when Rube enters, regains the book and puts them all at tight with the office of the aviator that he is during the fight, then to the office of the Colonel where Rube is rewarded for his bravery with the hand of Madge.

HIS BLOW OUT (June 11).—The cast: The Crook (Arthur Acosta); His Accomplice (Rene Rogers); Bill (Paddy McGuire); Biogiole (Tom Turpin); The Plumber (Jack Connolly); A Frenchman (Edward Sedgwick); His Wife (Louise Owens).

Bunzlung Bill and Biogiole read that Murphy, a rich plumber, is willing to let two capable men conduct his business on a commission basis while he is on his honeymoon. They succeed in getting the job. Murphy's fiancée is the pal of a crook, and when he gives her the necklace, she distracts his attention and jumps into an auto.

Murphy is prevented from following by Slim, her accomplice, who knocks him off the running board of the car, and he is picked up by a cop, who thinks he is drunk. Murphy's wife, by a cop by putting his hand in his pocket, and the cop releases him. Murphy, the wily plumber, instead of giving him some money, makes him a wrapped slice of cheddar gum, and hands off before the cop realizes his trickery.

Arriving home, Slim and the girl, whose name is Dora, find that a water pipe is leaking in the wall. Dora insists the janitor, who phones for Biogiole and Bill. Before they reach Dora's apartment Biogiole and Bill have a number of unfortunate occurrences. Bill's efforts to stop the flow of water prove unavailing, and the water starts out of the room, when he sees the stolen necklace.

He takes it and starts out with Slim and Biogiole. He has seen Bill's car, and he follows him, and she informs her accomplice. Bill, knowing that Slim is following him, hides in the hall, and Slim thinks he has entered Romany's apartment. When he goes in Bill flees.

Romany's wife screams and Biogiole throws Slim out. Slim strikes the hallway floor with a grinning thud, and then hears screams in his apartment. He finds Biogiole trying to force his apartment. He and Biogiole start a fight, and Biogiole is again in his apartment trying to fight with the wife. Bill promises to do so after he kisses him, and he accomplishes this by giving her the necklace, and as they kiss, the janitor her husband, enters. He grabs a gun.

Bill, in fleeing, runs into the apartment of Romany, and the wife screams again. Romany, who is in the bath tub, starts out and comes into the room in his bathrobe. He throws Bill out of the hall at the same time that the janitor, who searching for Bill, enters Dora's apartment, and helps Slim subdue Biogiole, and throws Biogiole out. Bill and Biogiole meet

MEMORANDUM

May 21st, 1916.

TRIANGLE FILM CORPORATION,
1459 Broadway,
New York City.

Gentlemen:-

I've just had a last look at "The Love Count", the latest Keystone which is being shipped today, and it's one of the best yet. I doubt if I can make more of them, better, but now I am going to try to make more of them.

By the way, this is the 56th Keystone we have finished for TRIANGLE exhibitors and we're all at work completing ten more. At the present time there are fifteen companies in the field, and before the summer rolls around I hope to have twenty working.

Last November when we first began shipping Keystone comedies, we could not keep up the real work -- that either the quality or quantity would have to give, and that we could never live up to the reputation we had attained for producing the best comedies in the business.

Now we are willing to stand on what we have accomplished. Fifty-six comedies in seven months is almost a record, and I personally have received enough letters from exhibitors and moving picture fans to assure us that Keystone are now and will continue to be the most popular comedies.

Sincerely yours,

Mack Sennett

You should read the above note from Mack Sennett, the man who made Keystone Comedies famous. Don't you agree that 56 comedies in the past seven months is a record to be envied?

The making of a good comedy is a man-sized job -- far harder than the production of a large feature film -- for it's extremely difficult to have continued action so funny that the audience will be kept laughing, combined with a good story.

Years ago Mack Sennett discovered the knack of producing a comedy that could be guaranteed to furnish screams of joy, roars of laughter, and he has kept up the good work ever since, until now Keystone are even better than ever, if that is possible.

Now he has a special formula which is often used. Proved to get desired results at all times, it is something like this:

"Take one perfectly good dramatic plot, soak in several gallons of fun and laughter, pour in one villain and mix thoroughly. Add one favored sweetheart, and stir the contents until it is com-

But All Have Failed To Equal*
KEYSTONE

pletely twisted out of shape into a hilarious tangle of fun and frolic."

Time, expense, effort or inconvenience are never spared in the making of Keystone Comedies. The orders are to make the best pictures possible, regardless of cost. The wrecking of an expensive automobile, the burning of a two-story house are trifles. A dip in an icy lake at the top of a snowy mountain or a leap from a moving train are details, while a journey of five or six hundred miles for a special location at which to take a few scenes is all in the day's work.

The proper selection of a program is all important to the successful theatre. It is always necessary to furnish a good comedy or two to give the bill the proper balance.

Keystone Comedies are acknowledged to be the best Comedies today; and the exhibitor who can show these pictures to his patrons is sure to give them a laugh and send them home in the very best of spirits. Keystone Comedies are released only through The Triangle Film Corporation as a part of TRIANGLE PLAYS and on a regular program.

If you are not running Triangle Plays, drop us a line now for information regarding their presentation. It is just possible that we may be able to show you how to increase your box-office returns.

head on in the air in the hallway, and they both go out.

Murphy, meanwhile, has come upon Slim's auto standing in front of the apartment house, and he enters the janitor's, where he gets into a fight with the janitor and his wife.

Upstairs Murphy enters the apartment of Romany, and when the Frenchman's wife sees him, she faints. Murphy starts to take her by the neck, and opens the bathroom door as Romany finishes dressing. The sight of another intruder is too much for him, and he faints. Murphy, who thinks everybody is crazy, then goes to Dora's apartment, and runs everybody out. The janitor's wife calls in a cop, the same one Murphy tricked, and when he sees Murphy, he starts to beat him. The janitor's wife throws the necklace down, and goes with Blodde and Bill to the apartment beneath that of Slim and Dora. There they find the crook, Blodde, and Dora, and as they all start an argument, the sound of Murphy battling with the cop is heard in the apartment above. They are about to start when the ceiling of water is stopped by the janitor, who hammers a wooden plug into the hole in the pipe.

LOVE, BURGERS AND A BULL DOG (June 13).—The cast: Old resident (Rube Miller); his wife (Alice Neale); the new neighbor (Arthur Tavares); his wife (Nadja Kirby). Directed by Rube Miller. Scenario by Thos. Delmarf.

Rube, the old resident, whose principal work is sitting around reading while his wife does the work, is engaged at his regular task one day, when the new neighbors move in. He hurries over to greet the wife, and, too, his wife, sees him over there and promptly chases him home. Arthur, the new neighbor, also objects to Rube talking to his wife, because he is jealous. Later, when they are settled, Rube and the new neighbor's wife have a flirtation through their windows. Of course, they are caught and punished by their other half.

One day the laundry man makes a mistake and leaves the laundry for the new neighbor at the house of the old resident. While his wife is out, and the new neighbor is also absent, Rube takes the laundry over, but leaves a part of it at his own house. His wife comes home and finds this. The new neighbor also comes home in time to catch Rube and his wife together. In the meantime a couple of crooks that have seen an open window climb in and are going to rob the place. Rube, when he is caught, jumps out of the window. The new neighbor's dog chases him. Rube climbs in his own window and the dog follows him. The new neighbor and the wife of the old resident then cover the crooks and chase them in a closet. The new neighbor goes for the police. Rube, failing to shake the dog in his own house, runs out to the new neighbor's. The crooks get out of the closet and locked up the new neighbor's wife in it. Rube, to get away from the dog, gets in the closet and shuts the door on the dog. There he finds the wife. Then the husband returns with the police. Shots are fired through the door, etc. The crooks are caught by the dog. Rube convinces the new neighbor that he caught them, and everything is all serene.

AMERICAN.

JEALOUSY'S FIRST VIBE (Two parts, June 5).—The cast: The man (George Periolat); Helen, his wife (Vivian Rich); Randolph Truax (Alfred Vosburgh); Margaret Truax (Lillian Lawrence); Cal Kins (Robert Klein). Directed by Carl M. LeVine.

The green-eyed monster is depicted here in the mind of Homer Withington, successful business man, because he used his brains, and in an unsuccessful husband because he failed to do them. His wife, Helen, leads a terrible existence because of his jealous fears, and his little daughter Beatrice lives in the midst of turmoil and suspicion.

Homer is so obsessed with the fear that his wife is entertaining someone else, that he leaves the office and rushes home to spy upon her. On another occasion he accuses her of flirting with Randolph Truax, a social favorite, who, at that moment she does not even know. One day Homer catches his wife looking at a letter. He snatches it violently from her grasp, only to find that it is her mother. His frequent apologies satisfy each time, but leave a taint of bitterness.

Later on, Truax's auto knocks Helen down. Truax takes her in his machine to his own home. He places her on the davenport and makes her comfortable. Homer, snooping around, enters the back door, and just as Truax is placing the pillows under Helen's head, Homer enters and seizes. Magnifying the situation in his jealous anger, Homer seizes a heavy cane, and sneaking upon Truax strikes him unconscious. As Helen tries to explain, Homer strikes her in the face, accusing her of sending the child out by the back door. She that she could be alone with her lover.

Banished from her home by her infuriated husband, Helen seeks rest in the park. She is lured to an apartment and robbed of her clothes. Not knowing where to turn for assistance, she hastily scribbles a note and drops it out of the window. It falls into the hands of Truax, who rescues her just in time. He takes her home to her mother, but Homer has forfeited her love forever. Later on, Truax meets Helen, and wins her for his own.

CONVICTED FOR MURDER (Two Parts—June 12).—The cast: Elliott Reynolds (Edward Coten); Bob Kingston (George Field); Louise Helm (Lizette Thorne); Gordon Helm (Charles Newton); Pete Donovan (Jack Farrell); the butler (Harvey Clark).

Elliott Reynolds, handling politics for the "Call," receives an assignment from Bob Kingston, Elliott's closest friend and the city editor, to investigate charges of graft against the city administration. He meets and marries Louise Helm, the father of Louise, Elliott's fiancée, is the power behind the political machine. Elliott kidnaps her, but she accepts the assignment as a matter of duty.

In order to play fair with Helm, Elliott warns him of the purpose of the "Call" Helm, believing that Elliott is notifying him in a roundabout way of his determination not to press the investigation too closely, makes light of the warning, and goes on to do as he likes. This results in certain charges being brought home to Helm and proof furnished to the district attorney.

Helm's right-hand man, Donovan, learns that the expose is to be made immediately by the "Call" and gives Helm an advance copy of the story. Elliott begs Bob to hold the story until he has seen Helm and has explained his position fully. Bob agrees, and asks only that Elliott phone him immediately after his interview with Helm, so that the story may go through at once. However, when Donovan and Elliott result in a violent quarrel, Elliott and Louise, who has taken his side, leave the house, when Elliott remembers his promise to Bob. He returns to him a few moments after he has left Louise, she and the old family butler are startled by a shot and rush into the house to find Elliott lying on the floor, standing over his dead body. The butler having overheard the quarrel, accuses Elliott of the crime and he is arrested. At the trial the butler's testimony with that of Donovan, only too glad to see Elliott out of the way, ends in Elliott's conviction.

Louise is prostrated, and Bob's efforts to aid Elliott are vain. Upon the morning of the date upon which scandal is to be published, she is at work in the library, trips and catches hold of the portieres, pulling one of them down. He picks it up and finds a note behind it. The note is from Helm, written immediately after Elliott's departure and explains that a phone call from Donovan has convinced him that exposure is inevitable, as a result, he has taken the only way to save Louise the disgrace of being the daughter of a convicted felon. The butler goes through a struggle, but when Louise is in a critical condition, determines him. He hastens to the court, arriving just as the case is about to be passed to the jury. He sends a message to the judge. Bob grasps the situation and explains the possible chain of events leading up to the murder. The story of the phone call, the message from Donovan, Helm's decision and suicide and the falling of the message behind the curtain when Helm clutched the cover after shooting himself, is accepted by the judge and prosecution. Elliott is cleared and returns to Louise.

MUSTANG.

A MAN'S FRIEND (Two Parts—June 2).—The cast: Nell (Nita Davis); Jim, Her Husband (Lawrence Peyton); Tom, Her Brother (Tom Hannan); Hal, an Old Friend (Art Accord).

Jim and Nell are married, unhappily for her part. Jim spends most of his time in drinking and gambling and the rest in abusing her. In a nearby town lives Tom, Nell's brother, whose best friend is Hal, a trapper. One day he comes to visit his brother and learns of his unhappiness. He tells her that she must come with him, and she does so. Jim then introduces Nell to Hal, and there is at once a mutual attraction between them. Later, after Nell has obtained a divorce from Jim, she marries Hal.

A year passes and a child is born to them. One day Hal finds a dog in the cave where his leg is broken. He takes it to his cabin and nurses it back to health. Meanwhile, Jim is in serious difficulty in the town where he lives. The citizens there decide to get rid of him.

The calcined ore is shown being broken up by hand before being placed in sacks for shipment. It is then carried by a long line of juncy trucks, loaded and rapids, before it reaches the coast for export.

AROUND MOUNT FUJI (Picturequest Japan)—On same reel as foregoing.—Mount Fuji is also called Fujiyama and Fusuyama. It is a dormant volcano, the highest of the islands and is the loftiest summit of Japan. Lake Kawaguchi, which is at its base, is one of the most noteworthy parks in Japan. The snow-capped peak of the great mountain is reflected from its height of 12,300 feet in the waters of the lake below. One of the native of Funston's native threshing corn to be stored as winter food; scenes near Mount Fuji's crater; Lake Hakone; Lake Montsuzo, another beautiful body of water near Mount Fuji, and a general view of Mount Fuji and Lake Shoji are also shown.

WHO'S GUILTY? No. 5 (Sold Out)—Arrow—Two Parts—June 5].—This picture tells of Lella Austen, a wealthy girl, who leaves Halsey Brent, a young suitor, to marry Tom Carter, a mining engineer. Mrs. Austen was more than merely a rich mother; she was a good mother, devoting her life to Lella's growth. Rather than interfere with what seemed the choicest desire of their daughter's heart, her parents finally consented to Lella's marriage to Tom, though preferring Brent as a son-in-law. Mr. Austen even gave Lella a ten-thousand-dollar check as a wedding present, in order that she might continue to enjoy the luxuries to which she was accustomed.

Lella and Tom establish themselves happily near the mine that Tom owned and was developing, and Lella sank her ten thousand in her husband's property. In return she received stock certificates. Tom's mine, through lack of development, failed, and Lella's parents, in order to get the rights of their daughter, doing real work, dragged her back to the city with them. Then Lella, thinking to help Tom, offered to sell her stock to Brent, who she permitted to see her often. Brent learned Tom's mine was at last a success, and failing to inform Lella of this, bought the stock at a ridiculously low price.

Just after she delivered the certificate to Brent, Lella learned of his deception. Brent refused to return the stock except on impossible conditions. Then Tom entered the house, unknown to either Lella or Brent. He heard details of the transaction that left him bitterly suspicious, details that goaded him to madness, and resulted in tragedy. Was Tom guilty? Was it her mother? Was it her father? Was it Brent? Or were they all guilty? The picture raises this question.

THE IRON CLAW No. 15 ("The Double Resurrection")—Feature—Two Parts—June 5].—The mysterious veiled stranger steals the treasure from Legar, and the Claw, frate at his loss, attacks one of his henchmen, who doubts his sincerity. The latter, maddened, and approached by the veiled woman, offers to barter the secrets of the criminal for half of the fortune. The veiled woman then goes to Margery and her father, and asks them to be present when the traitor hands over the confession. They are suspicious, and the frightened girl orders the stranger to reveal her identity. She and her father are astounded beyond measure when Davy's face appears before the lifted veil.

But Legar and his confederates are at hand and manage to capture Margery once more. An exciting motorboat chase follows. The villainous Legar, trying to escape, is killed by a flat-car and rushes off with the girl, who is bound and gagged. Davy, Golden and the detective follow in the motorboat. When Legar sees this he throws Margery to the tracks. A train, travelling at express speed, threatens the girl's life, and the Laughing Mask, resourceful, does a trick at the switch.

LUKE LAUGHS LAST (Rollin—June 5)—Luxe a butler. He doesn't like his work, but he likes his job. It gives him a chance to wear a dress suit. He's a bum butler, too. Snub, a gallant who is sweet on the madam, makes snubs afraid of Law and Order, two cops, and takes refuge in the house of his own true love.

PROUBLE. Then in strolls a cop fond of the cook and founder of her passion. The cop, Luke and Snub have dealings with the cop. More trouble. Then in comes a burglar. He knows there's nothing in the place worth stealing—he just busts in so he can be arrested. He's tired of paying room rent. He gets up into the room of the lady of the house, and with the assistance of a professional brother, seizes the lady out of her bed and into a fit. Still more trouble. Then the crowd below makes an unwholesome clamor to get the gunners above. Most trouble. Luke gets his hands on a brace of regular revolvers and while he's worrying about what he'll do with them, the professional burglars walk into them and—Luke laughs last.

WHO'S GUILTY? No. 6 ("Sowing the Wind")—Arrow—Two Parts—June 5].—Turnbull employs both Hugh and Henry Scott as confidential employees. Both are deeply in love with Marjorie Turpin; but, despite her father's faith in Henry rather than Hugh, Marjorie loves the younger brother. Old Turnbull gives some valuable bonds in Hugh's care, and the latter, eager to meet Marjorie and who is destined married, misplaces them. Henry tries to cover his brother, but Turnbull believes Hugh has stolen the bonds. Weakly pointing himself to be persuaded into a hasty departure by the well-meaning Henry and Marjorie, Hugh runs away. Then, when he reads in the newspapers the next day of the general belief of his guilt, he feigns suicide. Marjorie and Henry, believing Hugh dead, are married. But when he comes back. Bitterly he accuses Henry of charging him with the theft so that Henry could marry Marjorie. In a struggle with the brothers, Turnbull is accidentally killed. And then, too late, the bonds are found. But for all this who was really guilty? Was it one of the individuals concerned—or can the tragedy more properly be blamed on a too general proneness to judge seeming circumstances as fact?

THE IRON CLAW (No. 6, "The Unmaking of Davy")—Feature—Two Parts—June 12].—Jules Legar, the Iron Claw, sends emissaries to get the fortune which he has recovered, and which is secreted in a woods some distance off. But when they arrive there, they are confronted by a revolver and a demand for the fortune, and are ordered to hand over the instructions for finding the hiding place. A battle ensues, and the paper flies from the hands of the man who holds it. As one of his companions jumps for it, Margery appears on horseback and dashing past makes a daring pick-up. In the mix-up the Mask is shot in the left hand. Margery returns home and there meets the detectives in search of the Laughing Mask. Davy appears with his left hand swathed in bandages and arrested. But just as the handcuffs are slipped on his wrists the Mask appears in the doorway, announces the innocence of the prisoner, and fools us to a fare-you-well. The next episode is called "The Vanishing Fakir."

AN AWFUL ROMANCE (Mittenthal—June 12).—Heinie and Louie wake from their slumber and after a quarrel about the division of their stolen breakfast, they set out to seek their fortunes in an unsympathetic world—and spoil a valuable painting in the hands of Don Mendez, an art connoisseur, who is out with his sister.

Don Mendez is a fiery don who was raised on a bottle of tobacco juice, and he tells the boys they will work for him, or else damage or die. He shall watch this door of my sister's room, so that her American sweetheart can't spirit her away. He tells Heinie, "And you this one," is his command to Louie. But sister's sweetheart comes in through the window, and together he and the plan. The hero's hero's lover's sister entices first Heinie into her room and then caresses him with a brick. Louie is next and receives the same attention. Then the two hearts clope and leave Heinie and Louie to the merces of (?) of the paprika person who awakes in due time and furnishes the last laugh with the excitement to which they are accustomed.

A $100.00 PICK-UP EVERY MONTH

If you are exhibiting to an average of a thousand people a day, you can add $100 a month to your income—and do it easily.

Here is a money-maker that is as good—thousands of theatre patrons the country over think—as a “feature.” It is a feature—with brisk, interesting action, live subjects, laughable cartoon effects, and a lot of entertaining tricks to please the crowd, tied to the most modern motion-picture advertising ideas to please your local business men.

You don't have to be an advertising solicitor to sell this service. It sells itself. Just show a scenario to one of your business friends—show him what the feature is like—have him try it one month—and you've made a friend and customer.

ANIMATED Camel Films ADVERTISING

The most important thing about these films is that the public likes them. They give you a source of increased revenue without drawing the criticism of the crowd. They are not to be classed with slides, because they are a part of the entertainment itself, and spectators seldom walk out when they are being shown.

Camel Films have revolutionized motion picture advertising. They are prepared with the good will of the public in mind—and they represent a kind of advertising that is so valuable that any live business man is a favorable prospect when you present the proposition to him.

Here is the Animated Advertising the people like—the kind that advertisers appreciate. We make the selling of this service easy. We send you complete, understandable scenarios for banks, drug stores, jewelers, etc., and you can soon interest one or more to the point of giving the service a trial.

Add this attraction to your program now; get it for your house before some other exhibitor has skimmed the cream.

Here is good money—easy to get; a service that will grow after you have shown your patrons what it is like.

Write for complete particulars—also ask for booklet, “Putting Life in Your Advertising,” which tells all about this service.

THE GORGES OF COLORADO (Picturesque America) (on same reel as the foregoing).—The film shows the Arkansas River, which has cut an impressive gorge through the mountain barriers. This scenic wonder, known as the Royal Gorge, is one of the grandest sights of the Rocky Mountain region. The canyon of the Arkansas River is surpassed in magnificence only by the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, beautifully photographed in this film.

A MATRIMONIAL MARTYR (Pathecolor—Gold Reel)—Five Parts—June 10.—Erma Desmond lives with her uncle and aunt on their large estate on Long Island. She is in love with Chester Clynch, but her uncle opposes her choice and the two decide to elope. Meanwhile, Mrs. Hugo Stanley, wife of a scientist and a lady of very uncertain temper, is holding the fort against her husband and daughter. She is in one of her moods, and the family fights shy of her.

Erma plans to elope, but balks at the last moment and decides not to go. Her uncle, however, learns of her plans, and in his anger insists that she marry them out. She goes to the city and takes up her abode with a friend. Later, she leaves to accept a position as companion to Mrs. Stanley. The latter notes the marked likeness between the girl and herself and hires her. Mrs. Stanley then, her husband and daughter having gone off, leaves for a pleasure trip, installing Erma as head of the house and leaving her a check of large proportions to cover the expenses. There is a house party in progress at Stanley's at the time, but even the guests and servants fail to recognize Erma. The father returns, and she learns that she has gone off. The only change they do note is in the remarkably sweet disposition of the girl.

Sometime later, Stanley and the suitor for his daughter's hand, to whom Mrs. Stanley objected, return. Then the daughter comes home from boarding school, all of which greatly complicates matters and creates some highly dramatic and laughable situations. Stanley falls in love with his "wife" (who isn't his wife at all) and Gilberta, the daughter, smother's her "dear mother" with kisses. It's a lovely fix. Matters finally are straightened out, but not without many absorbing complications. Finally a message from the real Mrs. Stanley, who had died, announcing that she has secured a divorce, clears the road for Stanley and Erma who wish nothing more.

THE PRIMAL LURE (Ince—Five parts—May 21).—The cast: Angus McConnell (William S. Hart); Lois LeMayne (Margery Wilson); Richard Sylvester (Robert McKim); Pierre Vermaise (Jerome Storm).

Angus McConnell is factor of the outpost of the Hudson Bay Company, which is dignified by the name of Fort Lu Cerne. The summer has been disastrous for the trappers, as they are deeply in the company's debt for provision. Angus keeps account of what they owe in a little book, and one night this precious book disappears. Angus vows all manner of vengeance on the culprit who has taken it. He keeps close watch on the office, and at last he beholds Lois LeMayne, the girl of the outpost, rummaging about his desk.

Unknown to him, she has come to make him a gift of a beautiful pair ofoccasins, made with her own fair hands, so he concludes she is the thief, and has her thrown into the goal. Then Richard Sylvester, the company inspector, comes to Fort Lu Cerne on his rounds. He sees Lois, falls in love with her, and has her released. When he promises that he will have Angus dismissed as factor and himself appointed, she agrees to wed him. This he accomplishes, and Angus takes to the trail alone. But before the wedding can take place an epidemic of sickness breaks out, and in terror the cowardly Sylvester flees with his bodyguard.

Angus, who has heard that the Blackfeet Indians are about to descend on the country, demands a white person to be sacrificed as an offering to the god who has brought down the plague, happily returns at this time and assumes the reins of authority. The Indian attack takes place, and after a thrilling fight, in which the whites are greatly outnumbered, Angus goes forth to offer himself as the victim. He is miraculously saved, however, and returns to the fort. But he finds that the Indians have gone save Lois; and with these two great enemies alone in a terrible situation there comes about a great climax to a remarkable film.

A CHILD OF THE PARIS STREETS (Fine Arts—Film Paris—May 21).—The cast: Mme. Dufrane (Jennie Lee); Judge of the French Court (Carl Stockdale); Eldest Son (Tully Marshall); Julie (Mae Marsh); Young Artist (Robert Harron); Nurse (Loyola O'Connor); an Apache (Hert Hadley).

Mme. Dufrane, queen of the Paris apaches, pleads with the judge of the French Court to spare judgment on her son, who is arraigned before him charged with the murder of a man for her entreaties, and sentences the youth to the gallows. Heartbroken, Mme. Dufrane, who has this boy as her only child, retires to the den of the apaches, determined that the judge shall suffer. Then, with the assistance of her eldest son, she kidnaps the judge's infant daughter, Julie, and escapes with her to the den.

Julie is raised as an apache. She is taught to steal with such expertness as to escape the inshrewd eyes of the police. But with her instinctive refinement, Julie rebels against her teachers, and is severely beaten, and threatened with death by strangulation. Marie, desperate, she packs her few belongings, and takes shelter in the studio of a young American artist, for whom she has posed several times. These two fall in love, and he attempts to protect and safeguard Julie; but one day she ventures out on the street, and the apaches seize her and carry her back to the den. Mme. Dufrane, her hatred aroused, orders her hand to strangle her. Meanwhile, Julie, old enough to be married, is reduced to the position of selling trinkets on the streets, has seen Julie carried into the house of the apaches at 17 Rue de la Harpe, the judge, her father. Also the young artist learns of her danger, and rushes with the gendarmes to the stronghold, where Julie is rescued just as the apaches are about to put her to death. Of course, the artist is entitled to some reward for his goodness, and he proposes that the judge let him have Julie's hand in marriage. And being a good father, if a stern justice, he gives his daughter to the young man with his blessing.

MR. GOODE, THE SAMARITAN (Fine Arts—Five parts—May 28).—The cast: Alphonse Irving Goode (De Wolf Hopper); Shorty Sal (Fay Fincher); Shifty Ed (Edward Dillon); Montgomery Fox, alias Foxy Monte (Chester Withey); Evelina Goode (Margaret Marsh); Mrs. Goode (Lillian Langdon); Butler (Max Davidson).

Mr. Goode, a wealthy old gentleman, takes his wife and daughter, Evelina, out for a spin in their automobile, but throwing in the wrong lever the machine backs into the side of the road and burns up. They continue their journey on foot. Meanwhile, Foxy Monte, a polished crook, has stolen a beautiful car from the police, left standing at the curb in a nearby town, and as he whizzes by he sees the Goode family. He stops and offers them a lift. Of course, they gladly accept. And while the ride is continued he persuades Mr. Goode to buy the roadster. Mr. Goode is so easy, in fact, that Monte determines to impose on him again.

When Goode is called out of town on business he makes the trip in his new machine. As an alarm has been sent out to the police by the original owner of the car he is immediately apprehended and thrown into jail. His family, believing he has been detained on business, make no inquiry about him, but go on entertaining Foxy Monte, who has come into their lives disguised by a full beard and another alias.

Ever making the best of his condition, Goode has the jail officers endeavor to contribute to the comfort of the inmates. Upon leaving at expiration of his sentence, he invites

THE MARKET OF VAIN DESIRE (Ince—Five parts—May 28).—The cast: John Armstrong (H. E. Warner); Helen (Clara Williams); Count Bernard d'Montaigne (Charles Miller); Mrs. Badgley (Gertrude Claire); Belle (Leon Hutton).

John Armstrong, a young minister, is called to a great metropolitan church from a small country parsonage. He has been there but a short time when he is utterly disgusted with the sham and hypocrisy of the fashionable people of his congregation who affect religion. That is, he is disgusted with all save Helen Badgley, daughter of the millionaire patron of the church.

On one day he is asked to announce from the pulpit the engagement of Helen to the reclusive Count d'Montaigne. The man is all that is loathsome in manhood, he protests to Helen. She readily admits she does not love the Count, but declares that she will marry him only in a story book. Pondering this situation in a walk about the streets, he encounters a woman of shame, and there dawns upon him the idea which he may find the answer. He bids this woman come to his church on the Sabbath and he will pay her well. Eventually she agrees.

Next morning, in the church, he takes for his theme the degradation of marriage. And calling Belle, the woman of shame, from the vestry, he draws a parallel which no one can mistake between the case of the girl who peddles her nuptial body for gain and the girl who barbers her beauty in the market of vain desire. The scandal that follows breaks up the match of Helen and the Count. With all his wrath at the minister, Millionaire Badgley has discerned truth in his words, and he orders the Count from his home. But not long after he learns that his wife has actually contracted with the nobleman to marry Helen. The Count goes, threatening suit.

Armstrong is reading in his study when the Count enters and demands that he accompany him to the side of Helen's chamber, and retract his words. Of course, Armstrong refuses, and as he turns to his chair again the Count strikes him a heavy blow over the head with his cane. Horse-stricken at what he has done, the Count flees the country. The directors of the church, calling to inform Armstrong that his resignation is automatic, had him lying upon the floor. They send for a doctor, and for Badgley, who arrives, accompanied by his wife. They find that Armstrong means what he says. The outcome is swift and satisfying.

GOING STRAIGHT (Fine Arts—Five parts—June 4).—The cast: Grace Remington (Norma Talmadge); John Remington, her husband (Ralph Lewis); their children (Nixon Fowler, Francis Carpenter, Fern Collier); Mrs. Remington's Maid (Ruth Handforth); Jimmie Briggs (Eugene Pallette); the Ragged Wait (George Stone); Mrs. Van Dyke (Kate Toncray); Her Children (Violet Radcliffe, Carmen Dureau).

John Remington, a respectable real estate man, goes down into the slums to negotiate the purchase of a warehouse for a client, and there meets Jimmie Briggs, a gangster. Briggs recognizes Remington as his former partner in crime, Higgins. Remington and his wife, Grace, used to work with Briggs in many house robberies, although for the last Remington and Briggs served time in prison. When they were released Remington found that Grace had borne him a baby, and for the baby's sake, determined to live straight.

Briggs blackmails Remington until he has no more money to give him. Then he demands that Remington aid him in one more big deal, or he will expose Grace for her complicity in by-gone crimes, and have her sent to prison to do her "bit." Remington loves his wife, and for her sake, although without her knowledge, he agrees. Unaware of his decision, he goes to spend the week-end at the home of a wealthy friend, the very place, it so happens, that Briggs has selected to burgle.

In due course Remington and Briggs jimmy open the library window and enter. The former tackles the safe in his old dexterous manner, and manages to get loose. He takes the jewelry he may "lift" from the bureau and the like. Briggs happens to enter the room where Grace is asleep. He hears her husband's awakenings. She attacks the intruder, and a desperate struggle takes place. Meanwhile, Remington escapes to the safe and, at the safe and follows Briggs upstairs. Seeing him struggling with his wife, he knocks Briggs to the floor unconscious.

Of course, this has aroused the other guests, and as they throw into the hall Remington's escape has been cut off. Grace's quick wit saves the situation. She plants her husband's mask, gun and jimmy on the unconscious Briggs and tells the guests that her husband followed her to the place in time to save her from a desperate burglar, the injured man lying on the floor.

Unfortunately, Briggs escapes in the excitement, and his desire to be revenged on the man who has double-crossed him leads to a smashing finale.

THE J'G'LE CALL (Ince—Five parts—June 4).—The cast: Billy (Willie Collier, Jr.); Captain W. Andrews (Wyndham Standing); Mary Lane (Lela); Sergeant Hogan (Thomas Guise); Billy (John Goodby).

Billy, who is the little son of Captain Andrews, commandant of a Western army post, has one ambition in life, and that is to become a good soldier. This he has confided to his friend, Sergeant Hogan, and the sergeant takes pains to foster it. While he knows about it, he all his courage to face a new situation that has come up in his life. His father is going to marry again. While he knows about it, he all his courage to face a new situation that has come up in his life. His father is going to marry again. While he knows about it, he all his courage to face a new situation that has come up in his life. His father is going to marry again.

In spite of Billy's however, the wedding takes place. The newcomer tries in every way to win over the little fellow, but beyond politeness his friendship stops. Soon after the wedding his father is called to the head of the regiment to quell an uprising of the Sioux Indians, forty miles away. He leaves his bride in little Billy's care.

The distant trouble is but a ruse on the part of Lame Bear, the Indian chief, and now, with his picked braves, he swoops down on the weakened garrison at the fort. The defenders of the fort are so few in number that it is but a question of time before they must surrender. Billy, hearing of the situation, the situation of his father to take care of his stepmother, takes her away from the fort by a secret passage and hides her in a cave in the hills.

Suddenly he observes the wavering men at the stockade. Rethinking himself of his oath and honor to lead the Indians who follow him, he blows the signal to charge from a distant knoll outside the fort. The outcome of that battle call saves the garrison and draws Billy and his stepmother together.

REGGIE MIXES IN (Fine Arts—Five parts—June 11).—The cast: Reggie Morton (Douglas Fairbanks); his Valet (Joseph Singleton); Agnes, the Girl of the Slums (Bessie Love); Tony Bernard (W. E. Lovejoy); the Cabaret Proprietor (Wilbur Higby); his Right-Hand Man (Frank Bennett); an Admirer of Miss Fleming (D. D. Sears).

Reginald Morton is a wealthy idler of athletic tendencies. He has become bored with the high life and the social set in which he moves, and he is engaged to marry Dorothy Fleming, a member of it. Dorothy is engaged to Reggie because of his money, and is flirting desperately with all comers.

While out in his automobile one day Reggie chances upon a lost little girl and takes her to the curb. He takes her back to her home in the slums and there he sees and falls in love with Agnes, Shannon, a sweet young girl of good family now compelled to earn her living in a cheap cabaret. He then discovers that Dorothy is faithless to him because of his engagement, leaving him free to pay court to Agnes.

His rival for the affections of Agnes is Tony Bernard, the leader of the gangsters of the neighborhood, and Bernard has instructed one of his henchmen to bring Agnes to him. Reggie frustrates the scheme, beats up the henchman, and the owner of the dive in which Agnes works hires him as his bounce.

But Bernard has not given up the idea of possessing the girl, and as Reggie is the only obstacle in the way of attaining her, he orders him shot. They way-lay Reggie, but he beats them out one by one. Cornered at last, Reggie challenges Bernard to a room alone with him and have it out, the man who survives the battle to get the girl. Bernard agrees.

A fight takes place, in which Reggie is smashed, but it continues until the two men, their shirts stripped from their backs, are too exhausted to go on. By a desperate struggle Reggie deals his final blow and staggers out, where he is attacked by the band. But the police have been hoped for. How Reggie finally wins Agnes is the culmination of a romance.

THE SORROWS OF LOVE (Ince—Five parts—June 11.)—The cast: Beatrice (Bessie Barriscale); Guido Earl (William Desmond); Contessa Angelica (the Yecchia); Prince Candoni (Hershel Mayall); Carlo Parodi (Wedgewood Nowell).

Beatrice, who is a nun and who is known to the rest of her sisterhood as the "Lily" because of her great goodness and purity, hears for the first time in her life of the real wickedness of the world without the convent walls, when the Prince Candoni brings his ward, the Contessa Angelica de Vecchio, to the place. He refuses to give up her love to the Lily, Carlo Parodi. The Contessa dies, pining for her lover. And Parodi is released from prison where he has been kept because of his marriage.

Beatrice steals away from the convent one night and meets Parodi just as he is being released. She tells him of the death of the Contessa; and his heart filled with the desire for revenge, he takes Beatrice with him to a meeting of rogues led by the Duke, an atheist. These workmen are laying plans for the overthrow of the tyrant Prince Candoni. Beatrice calls Guido back to life for his atheism, and they fall in love. She converts him to religion.

Then Guido is consoling the wife of a comrade who has met with misfortune, Beatrice sees him holding the woman in his arms, concludes that he is faithless and leaves him. Finding her gone, Guido becomes bitter and returns to his old beliefs. He goes to his eager and bids that he should take the place of the prince. Beatrice hears of their intention and warns the prince that they are coming. He at once summons the Contessa to the battle, and battle takes place in which most of the workmen are killed. The future has but one solution for the dying prince, and that is the death of Beatrice, and how it works out is the finish of the film.

BOBBIE OF THE BALLET (Five parts—June 12.)—The cast: Bobbie Brent (Lillian Gish); Jack Stimson (Jay Belasco); Mrs. Stimson (Jean Hathaway); Velma Vrooman (Gretchen Lederer); Henry (Gilmore Hammond); How Hoover (Lon Chaney); Mrs. Hoover (Lule Warrington). Scenario written by Ida May Park. Director Joseph De Grasse.

Bobbie Brent is a chorus girl who supports her invalid mother and her little brother and sister, Jack Stimson, just out of college, by lavishing his inheritance on Velma Vrooman, leading woman of the company in which Bobbie is employed. Young Stimson and Bobbie become interested in her, much to the disappointment of Velma.

Stimson's mother is a settlement worker. In her wanderings among tenement dwellings, she arrives at Bobbie's home, discovers the dying mother and her two children. When her mother suddenly dies, Bobbie adopts the children to another tenement, adopts for herself the girl of the widow, that she may keep her little brother and sister under her own protection.

Mrs. Stimson discovers that Bobbie is known in her new quarters as a widow with two children, and having also discovered her son's attachment for Bobbie, decides to bring a mad sort of criminal, who has found refuge from the police by one day dropping into Bobbie's apartment" through the skylight, the children might have starved or else Bobbie would have been required to force the promise made to her by dying mom.

Velma Vrooman in revenge sets a trap for Bobbie. Under pretense of securing her an engagement, Bobbie is lured to the city, where, some where the management of Velma's company likewise appears. Velma makes an excuse and meets young Stimson at a party of one of their customary banquets. Alone in Velma's apartment with the theatrical villain.

Bobbie is compelled to resist his forced attentions.

While at dinner with Stimson, Velma cannot refrain from taunting him that Bobbie is at her apartment with Velma and the theatrical manager. Stimson is suspicious and goes at once to Velma's apartment, arriving there in time to rescue her.

The noise of the quarrel between Stimson and the theatrical manager reaches the street and the police hurry to arrest him. Stimson goes together with Bobbie. Subsequent developments disclosed the fact that Bobbie is protector of her little brother and sister, and the police orders that the children shall be turned over to Mrs. Stimson's society of settlement workers and that Bobbie shall go to a reform school.

The closing incidents of "Bobbie of the Ballet" discloses how Hook Hoover rescues Bobbie from the reform school, after which she obtains a marriage license and they live happily ever after.

THE MASKED RIDER (Quality Five parts—June 12.)—The cast: Bruce Edmunds, a revenue detective, and "The Masked Rider" (Harold Lockwood); Grace (Lillian Gish); the "Squid" Monjar (John MacDonald); Patrick Hart (Harry Berkhart); Mrs. Hart (Clara Selwyn); George Edmunds (Lester Cuneo); Squid Archer (Lester Cuneo); Jimmy Jamison (Howard Truesdell); Jill Jamison (May Selwyn). Written and directed by Fred J. Balshofer.

Bruce Edmunds takes a place in the revenue service to help root the moonshiners out of the hills of North Carolina and to avenge the murder of his brother, George Edmunds, George, who was a landscape painter, owned a picture gallery in the south for his work, and while there became infatuated with Jill Jamison, a mountain girl, and daughter of Jimmy Jamison, owner of the Bat Cave Hotel. The friendship between the girl and George, aroused the enmity of Squid Archer, boss of the moonshining gang. On two occasions Squid and George quarrel over the girl. George is found dead with a bullet wound in his head and his body buried in the mountains.

Bruce arrives at Bat Cave disguised as a parson. Jill's father, the moonshiner, arrives and the moonshiners headed by Squid, are taking advantage of his absence. Bruce reveals a situation, and they have a fight. He immediately wins the respect and favor of Jill. After that Jill and Bruce are often seen together. Squid only hides his anger at this situation because of Bruce's ministerial garb.

The following day Jill takes Bruce for a walk, during which he learns much of his brother's life there. He does not disclose his identity and has difficulty in controlling his emotions. One night, soon afterwards, he moonshiners are startled by the appearance of a mysterious masked rider, dressed in a white, buckskin suit and holding a revolver. In his actions the moonshiners know he is not a bandit. They fire at him and give chase, but he eludes them.

While Jill is riding near a mountain stream she surprises the masked rider who is watering his horse. The masked rider is so startled that he covers her with his revolver before he realizes who she is. Recovering quickly he bows and profusely begs her pardon. Jill's ears are all smiles when she finds the terrible masked rider so gallant. Touching her golden curls Bruce tells her she can have them from now on. One night the next day Jill learns the parson and masked rider are the same person, when she finds her lock of hair in the parson's room behind his mother's picture.

That night Bruce leads a group of revenue agents in the moonshining district. The illicit distillers take refuge under cover through secret passages. They are driven out when Bruce explodes a heavy charge of dynamite, blowing up their catacomb. They manage to escape. He hurries to the Jamison Hotel, overpowers the proprietor and attempts to force Jill to accompany him in his escape. Bruce tries in time to prevent him and a terrible struggle between Bruce and Squid follows. They roll down a flight of stairs in which Bruce loses his revolver. Squid, retreating toward the door, fires at Bruce, who is prostrated upon the floor. The bullet enters his right shoulder and disables him. As Squid starts to fire a second time Jill crawls a chair over his head and sends him unconscious by the face. The moonshiners are made prisoners and Jill nurses Bruce until he recovers sufficiently to accompany her to a rural parsonage.

THE most telling advertisement of the Sealpacker-chief handkerchief reads "You can teach a parrot to say 'Just as good,' but it won't know what it means." The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the leader in its line not because it says it is, but because manufacturers and exhibitors KNOW through long experience that it is accurate, reliable and informed. It is not of mushroom growth, covering lack of knowledge with plausible but specious words.

It is founded solidly upon experience and knowledge.

It is recognized everywhere as the sole authority on matters pertaining to the craft. It is consulted and relied upon. It is as essential to business as the theatre is to the exhibitor, the studio to the manufacturer. It is a very part of the business it represents. It has helped hundreds of exhibitors to success through advice and caution. It is helping hundreds of others to attain the same result. It places at the disposal of the exhibitor in the desert the experience of the Broadway manager, and brings to him, in turn, the clever ideas of the man who must be clever to exist in a limitless field. It is the exchange for ideas for the entire business, and where but one paper is read, this is the paper that is found in the hands of the subscriber. The circulation field of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is not the waste basket. It forms the chief and most valued part of the exhibitor's working library. It is the cyclopedia of business kept constantly up to date, and it is indispensable.

child of five. Richard has a woman addicted to gambling. After repeated warnings he discharges him, fearing that some day he may have a losing streak and take some of his money. But, lo and behold, vindictive turn of mind, he vows revenge.

The same evening the Bartons are giving a party and it is arranged that Mrs. Barton recite for her guests. Charles Burnham, a theatrical manager, is present and, charmed with her elocution, tells her there is always a position waiting for her should she ever desire to go on the stage. The party is abruptly ended when Richard receives the news that the plant is on fire, having been set by the discharged employee. Richard assists the firemen, gets drenched and catches a cold. He returns to tuberculosis. The litigation over the insurance of the plant has forced the little family to hard circumstances and they are compelled to seek cheaper quarters in which to live.

During all this time, Howard Barton, a wild, young brother of Richard's, has been seeking his fortune in Australia, has at last achieved success, and decides to return to New York. He has written Richard at the plant, but when he arrives there, finds the place in ruins. He tries in vain to locate his brother's present whereabouts.

Richard is discouraged, and during this strenuous time, his wife is like a guiding star, taking discomforts cheerfully and giving him the loving care, tender sympathy and moral support that only a good woman can give. He, however, has not much moral stamina, and adversity breeds peevishness and irritability. After a time they are so impoverished she has to pawn her jewelry. While in the pawn shop one day, she meets a stranger, who is greatly impressed by her beauty, and, listening to her pretty tale, tells her that she will but let him entertain her that evening, she will not have to want in the future. Helen rebukes him but not until he has given her his name and address.

When she finds later that she cannot raise any more money and must have money to buy medicine, she dresses up for the sacrifice, and goes to Howard's apartment. A few days later, Howard's letter reaches Richard, who sends for his brother. Both brothers are happy at seeing each other, but when Richard introduces his wife, Howard recognizes her as the woman whose brother's wife as well as the visitor to his apartment.

Howard arranges for the little family to go into the mountains. He sees them off and makes all sorts of excuses for remaining away, until Richard insists that he come, as he has been injured while out sleighing. The presence of Howard is a trying ordeal for Helen as well as himself. Being unable to quell his passions, he resolves to leave for Australia, but while talking about the past, Richard steps into the room and hears the terrible truth. Angry, he turns his wife from the house.

She goes to Burnham and obtains a position on the stage at the same time caring for her child. She is cast in a play very similar to that in which she has figured in real life. Richard and Howard, now both in New York City, are present the first night. When he sees Madame Bonardi on the stage, Richard is struck by her resemblance to his own wife, but when he hears her speak, he is sure it is her. A few days later, after Richard learns the great depths of the sacrifice his wife made for him, he realizes how he had been unjust to her, and through Howard's efforts, they are brought together through the pleadings of their child. Helen, who has been in an orphanage during these years of estrangement. After the loving union of the three, Howard leaves for Australia, never to return.

THE MAKING OF MADDALENA (Oliver Morosco Color Co.—Five Parts—June 5).—George Hale, a rather good-for-nothing sort of wealthy parents, is engaged to marry Marie, a young society girl. She refuses to marry him until he has made good. Young Hale, chum, Augustus Foster, an art student, induces Hale to join him in his studio in Rome. To win the admiration of his sweet Marie, Hale accepts his chum's offer and starts his career as an artist. Being of a carefree, happy disposition, he dallies with his work. Here he meets Maddalena, very beautiful young Italian girl, who poses as his model. Her father, a rough and much-disipated Italian of the Italian class, has abused his daughter most shamefully, using the money she earned selling flowers to buy his drink. Young Hale is greatly attracted to the beautiful Maddalena. One night at the studio, where a number of his friends were celebrating the Fourth of July in true American fashion, the studio is lavishly decorated with American flags, bunting of red, white and blue, a letter is received by Hale from the American embassy denouncing him and announcing her engagement to Signor Pastorelli, a great artist, who was then living in America.

Leaving her home because of her father's abuses, Maddalena seeks refuge in the studio of Hale. In a fit of rage over the news of his sweetheart's betrayal, he decides to go to his son and announces to his friends his intentions of marrying his beautiful model, Maddalena. He marries her, his son is with them, but she finds the struggle for existence a very difficult one and seeks employment. He becomes ill, loses his position. Hale's father, who has learned of his marriage and illness, decides to go to his son and bring him to America, to his mother, who is grieving for him. This he does, takes his son away until he is well enough to go to America. He would like to take the child, but the mother will not give him up. Maddalena's brutal father, seeing the opportunity to get a few dollars from the elder Hale if he should bring him the child, kidnaps the baby.

Grandfather Hale, with his son and grandson, leave for America. Months later, Hale's chum, Augustus Foster and his aunt, Mrs. Wright, go to find young Hale, only to learn from poor little broken-hearted Maddalena of her assertion. Mrs. Wright takes the girl as her companion to Paris. Here she is educated. They finally come to America. Here Maddalena becomes interested in settlement work, meets Dr. Comstock and interests him in her great work among the poor. She is well known to her friends in the homes of these poor people. An epidemic breaks out in the city, a most dreaded disease and one day she learns through a newspaper that her child has been stricken with this disease. She goes to the home of the child's grandfather, acts as nurse to her child. The child becomes very ill, the elder Hale does not recognize the young nurse as his daughter-in-law, and thinking the child is dying, says: "Oh, but the child's mother was only a poor girl, Hale, who has been out of the city, has been called home because of the seriousness of his child's illness." Hale recognizes her and recognizes his wife. A reconciliation takes place, the elder Hale recognizes the great change in the girl, sees the noble character, and takes her into his home.

MYSTERIES OF MYRA (Seventh Episode—Two parts—June 5).—The Master of the Black Lodge is still bent on the destruction of Myra Maynard. He tells Varney that it is easier to materialize spirits upon red light than upon Varney to place a red light in the Maynard home. Mrs. Maynard entreats Dr. Alden for the sake of Myra to make peace with the Black Lodge, but he refuses to do so. Myra tells Dr. Alden not to think about her and not to weaken in his determination to exterminate the Black Order. Mrs. Maynard hands Dr. Alden a slip of paper on which is written the address of Bert Reese, the clairvoyant, and suggests that Alden see this man who can communicate with anybody living or dead. Dr. Alden states that he knows Reese. Myra says she will go with him and they leave together.

Varney arrives at the Maynard home and is admitted by his wife. While he is waiting for Mrs. Maynard, he cautiously removes the red electric light bulb from his overcoat pocket, places it in his coat pocket, tips the stairs to Myra's room, and places the red light in a closet. When Varney learns from Mrs. Maynard that Myra and Dr. Alden have gone to consult Bert Reese, he telephones the news to the Black Master. Alden and Myra arrive at the Black Lodge. Dr. Alden knows their errand. Mr. Reese thinks he can communicate with the Master of the Black Lodge, and Dr. Alden asks him to deliver the following message, "If you stop your attack on Miss Maynard and others I will agree to leave you in peace. Myra's father, the Master, retires into a lead lined chamber which is supposed to shut out all occult influences. Reese and Varney are to be executed with the Master confesses that there is an obstruction, and that he cannot get his message through to its destination.

The Master opens a small door in the door of his lead-lined chamber, and placing a black crystal in the opening reads Dr. Alden's message. He refuses the truce and his message is communicated to Dr. Alden through first Reese, Myra and Dr. Alden's refusal to fight the Black Powers to a finish. The Master prepares for action, he brings in a small table and a hypnotizing machine which he places on the table in front of a chair. Varney meanwhile, reading a book on the Maynard library, hears Alden and Myra talking and Dr. Alden starts to say good-by to Myra. Alden confesses his love, but Myra refuses, showing Alden Varney's engagement ring. Alden leaves and Myra tells Varney that she cannot marry him. Varney gets a fateful idea and leaves quickly.

Dr. Alden spends the evening testing his new mercury vapor lamps. Varney arrives at the lodge of Myra Maynard and resolves permission to materialize Myra's spirit, his love for her having turned to hate. The Master sends Varney's spirit to her. The Master's spirit enters her bedroom and then her clothes closet where he materializes under the red light. Entering Myra's room he picks up a pair of shears and catches a reflection of himself in a mirror. Unable to bring himself to the point of killing Myra, he turns out the light and closes the bedroom door. Re-entering the clothes closet his astral body dematerializes and upon leaving the house he awakes to his natural form. Mrs. Maynard smells gas escaping and with the assistance of the butler breaks down the door and rescues Myra from asphyxiation.

Next morning Alden can find no clue to the mystery of the previous night. Myra discovers a red light in her clothes closet. She starts to remove it but is restrained by Alden who initially tells her of mercury vapor lamps in her bedroom. These lamps are so situated that their light falls directly upon anyone standing under the gas jet.

That night the Black Master resolves to end Myra's life. He sends his astral body to the Maynard home. Materializing under the red light in Myra's closet he walks around the room hunting for a weapon with which to complete his ghastly work. Myra, who is asleep, starts to pick up a chair he finds he has not sufficient strength to lift it. He then decides to turn on the gas and in the attempt plays directly into Dr. Alden's hand. Alden turns on the mercury vapor violet rays under which he dematerializes in agony. Mrs. Maynard enters the room and Myra informs her that the Master has been destroyed by Dr. Alden's violet rays.

Author, James Oliver Curwood. Director, Ralph Ince.

"My leg had been badly crushed by the bear trap and I was unable to move about. The kind old hermit nursed me back to health and when I left him I loved him as if he were my father but he would tell nothing of his past. All I know about him is, that his name is Peter God."

Philip Curtis, of the Northwest Mounted Police, was telling the story of his adventure to Josephine McCloud, a young woman whom he had met near his cabin. Although only mildly interested at first, the name of Peter God visibly moved her and she began to be taken to him.

Curtis informs her that the name is covered and they cannot follow it until the thaw comes. He tells her of his love for her, but she implores him not to speak of it again. For her sake, he takes up the trail and agrees to carry a letter to Peter. Through the deep snows, he travels by dog team, wondering as man has ever been, and at times, tempted to return and tell her that Peter God is dead, but he pushes forward, despite all hardships on the trail, to the cabin. Outside the red flag is hanging, a warning to all that the "red death" lurks within.

Disregarding the warning, Philip enters and finds the lonesome hermit, apparently waiting for the hand of death to claim him. He delivers the letter and the stricken man's intense grief is clearly shown by the twitching of the muscles of the face. Then Peter tells him to listen while he tells the cause of his mysterious silence.

"First, Curtis, I must tell you that the woman you love is my wife. Years ago, my name was Richard Steele then Josephine and I were as happy as mortals could be. Lawlor, a friend of mine, was running for mayor, and I found that he had been connected with various crooked deals. It was a question of friendship or duty. As a respectable citizen, I thought it my duty to keep him out of the mayor's chair.

He gave him a fair chance by telling him to quit the race, but he refused. I presented my evidence and it defeated him. Some time later, through a ruse, mine was brought to a house on the outskirts of the city, where I was drugged. When I awoke, I found a woman, Coralle De Gar, whom I had known for some time, confronting me with hair disheveled and clothing torn. I asked her what had happened and she denounced me for enticing her to the house and assaulting her. I knew it was a plot of some sort and scoffed at her, until a policeman entered and arrested me. The papers, next day, had glaring headlines proclaiming my perjury to the public, and I was ashamed to look my fellow-men in the eyes. After the matter had blown over, I saw Coralle entering Lawlor's office, and followed her. By listening at the door, I heard enough to prove that Lawlor was at the bottom of the dastardly plot. I entered and got Coralle out of the room, determined to fight it out with the cur. He grabbed a gun and fired, but I deflected his aim and the bullet went through the door, killing Coralle. Then I shot Lawlor and ran out. I wrote a letter to my wife, telling her that I would hide under the name of Peter God—and here I am. Now, Curtis, you know all. Will you go back to Josephine and tell her that she must not come here, as I am dying, and when I am gone, if she loves you, I—I wish you lots of luck to—

Then Josephine, who had followed close after Philip, stepped through the door. The grief-stricken fugitive tried to hold her off, for he feared she would be infected with the malady, but she insisted on coming to him. After the first shock of the reunion she shows him a newspaper with the confession which Lawlor had made before his death, clearing Steele of guilt. Though happy at the reunion, Curtis still loves Josephine, and starts out on a hunting and trapping trip, hoping that in the sombre timberlands he will forget his great sorrow. With careful attention and nursing at the hands of Josephine, the signs of the pestilence have vanished from Steele's body, and, with a clear conscience he prepared to return to civilization with his wife.

KERNEL NUTT'S $100 BILL (Vitagraph—June 5).—The cast: Kernel Nutt (Mr. Frank Daniels); Cornelia Van Asterfeller (Miss Adele De Garde); Miss Betty Green (Miss Alice Washburn). Author, L. Case Russell. Director, Jay Williams.

Satisfying a champagne taste with a beer pocketbook is rather a difficult proposition—but a cute little country note comes to Kernel Nutt's assistance. Nutt finds the hundred bill on the sidewalk and proceeds to spend it, but is unable to do so, as no one has changed—that all insist on "chalking it up." Out with a pretty young heiress, Nutt was showing her a good time on his hundred bill, but, just when good things were coming along fine, all Nutt's creditors find change for the bill and besiege him for payment of their debts.

After the young fortune has vanished, he still finds half his bills unpaid, and then, to help matters along, the owner of the hundred gets after him, too. They start condemnation proceedings on his person and divest him of watch, hat, coat, vest, etc., in payment of their debts. When Nutt spreads the glad tidings that Cornelia Van Asterfeller, the millionaire, had promised him her hand, they all become very apologetic and return his belongings.

THE REDEMPTION OF DAVE DARCEY (Vitagraph—Five Parts—June 12).—This subject was originally scheduled for release on May 22, but was postponed until the above date. A description of it was printed on page 1583 of the May 27 issue. "The Suspect," a five-part Vitagraph picture, was released on May 22.

KERNEL NUTT IN MEXICO (Vitagraph—June 12).—The cast: Kernel Nutt (Mr. Frank Daniels); Mrs. Nutt (Miss Alice Washburn); Estralla (Miss Adele De Garde); Manuel (A. Lloyd Lack). Author, Frank Koch, Jr. Director, Jay Williams.

Why go to war when there is a fine cat, and a pretty senorita handy? No, no, Nutt prefers to make his permanent headquarters where the red wine flows and the girls amuse him with their wiggy dances. Just when Nutt is enjoying himself with petite Estralla, her husband binds in, armed to the teeth and out for blood, but when Nutt nonchalantly bends a rubber dagger, hubby is dismayed and seeks healthier quarters. Alone once more, Nutt turns to caress his Spanish beauty, but wakes up and finds himself making love to his own wife in his comfortable flat in old New York. Wifey sees the lay of the land and starts a real war right at home.

THAT SORT (Essanay—Five parts—June 12).—The cast: Diana Laska (Warda Howard); John Heppell (Duncan McRae); Doctor Maxwell (Ernest Maupain); Philip Goodier (John Lorens); Mrs. Heppell (Marion Skinner); Naureen Heppell (Betty Brown); An actress (Peggy Sweeney).

John Heppell, a wealthy young man about town, falls in love with Diana Laska, a noted actress, and marries her. After their child is born he tires of her and goes back to his old way of living. Infuriated at his neglect, Diana leaves him and goes abroad with Philip Goodier. He also tires of her in time, and she becomes a notorious character on the continent. Finally she awakens to the evil of her life and tries to reform. She finds her path strewn with thorns as the world holds her for what she has been. A longing is kindled in her heart for her daughter. Her first husband has remarried and refuses to permit her to see her.

Sick of life, she attempts suicide. She is attended by Doctor Maxwell. He instills hope into her by promising to aid her in her attempt to see their daughter. Maxwell is an old friend of Heppell and partly by persuasion and partly by threats Diana Laska is received into the Heppell home as the governess for Heppell's son by his second wife.

She meets her daughter only to find that she is engaged to Philip Goodier, the man who had cast her off. Horrified, she tells the Heppells her daughter must not marry him. Goodier denounces Diana, while admitting his relations with her, but cannot understand why she should have an influence over the Heppells. Finally, Diana tells him that the girl to whom he is engaged is her daughter.

He consents to break the engagement only on condition that she leave the house and never see her daughter again. The woman who has developed under Doctor Maxwell's influence, then makes the supreme sacrifice of giving up her daughter to save her from her own shame. And through this sacrifice she wins atonement for her sins.

The G-E Mercury Arc Rectifier

is a profitable investment. It is the simplest, most dependable and most efficient device for transforming a. c. into d. c.—and you know how necessary direct current is for projection. The clear, bright, white non-flickering pictures you can get with the G-E Mercury Arc Rectifier tells in the long run at the box office. And the big saving in current bills is another strong point in favor of your investment.

Buy of Today is

THE LATE MODEL MOTIOGRAPH

Every exhibitor when purchasing a Projector should take into consideration QUALITY, PROJECTION and PRICE.

The MOTIOGRAPH is made only of the best material, is unequaled in projection and is priced for conservative buyers.

Think from the Patron's Standpoint

Write today for booklets "GHOSTS" and "STANDING ROOM ONLY."

Put yourself in his position. Ask yourself if you would be pleased to be drawn to a theatre with a strong programme and then have the picture flicker and jump before your eyes.

Your patrons enter your theatre, after reading your advertisements, anticipating a pleasant hour or two—an hour of recreation and rest. If they leave your theatre with smarting eyes, disgusted, or ill-humored, how can you expect them to return?

Let us tell you how to send them away smiling: how to make EVERY PATRON A REPEATER. Let us tell you what WHITE LIGHT can do for you—what it has done for others.

OUR FORESIGHT MEANT YOUR PROTECTION!!

Ten days after the outbreak of war we received the largest stock of French-made condensers ever shipped into this country

That's why we are able to offer you now

THE KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSER

at before-war-time prices. Foreign factories formerly engaged in the manufacture of optical goods for the entire world now devote their sole energies to war merchandise for their own countries, thus making possible the distribution of inferior, cheaply made and costly-in-the-long-run-domestic substitutes.

PRICES:

Plano Convex

6 1/2, 7 1/2, 8 1/2, 9 1/2 and 10 1/2 inch E. F.
4 1/4 inch diameter $1.25
5 1/4 inch E. F. 4 1/4 inch diameter 1.75

Meniscus and Bi-Convex

6 1/2, 7 1/2, 8 1/2 and 9 1/2 inch E. F., 4 1/4 inch diameter 2.50

Spot Light Condensers

7 1/2, 9, 10 and 12 inch E. F., 5 inch diameter 2.00
9, 10 and 12 inch E. F., 6 inch diameter 2.50

KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSERS are ground from pure optical glass. They do not discolor—no green, pink or purple effects after a brief use. They are the only satisfactory condensers on the American market today. If you are not using them you are not obtaining maximum results from your projection equipment.

TO ALL MANUFACTURERS and DISTRIBUTORS of FEATURE FILMS

On behalf of
WILLIAMSON-WADDINGTON PICTURES, L'T'D
OF AUSTRALASIA,
whom I represent exclusively in this country, I beg to announce that they (WILLIAMSON-WADDINGTON PICTURES L'T'D.) are at all times prepared to consider and arrange for the purchase each week of significant feature films of the best and most attractive type, requiring at least fifty-two (52) big features yearly, for Australia and New Zealand. If you are prepared to deal with me HERE, to supply their requirements, I will be glad to hear from you at once, as to what you have to offer, what arrangements you would propose, and upon what terms, etc.

I am fully authorized and prepared to conclude all such business for this concern by direct dealing HERE IN AMERICA, rather than through any foreign office or connection.

New Money For Every Theatre

Even in the smallest towns, scores of motion picture theatres are making $600 yearly and over from this self-running BUTTER-KIST Pop Corn machine that stands anywhere and draws folks from all directions. Big houses making up to $3000 NET profits per year and more. We'll send you plenty of signed sales records from men on your own side of the wicket to prove it beyond a doubt.

Pay From Your Profits

One hour after this machine arrives you can start it coining money. Delivered on part payment. Balance soon paid from Butter-Kist earnings.

Capacity 70c. to $4.00 per hour. You make 35c. NET profit from every bag.

On the sale of only 80 bags a day you make $1000 NET per year. Theatre in Coffeyville, Kan., writes: "Average $3 NET per day."

BUTTER-KIST Pop Corn Machine

now a regular feature of theatres, stores, etc. all over America. Pops, removes the unpopcorned kernels, and butters evenly—with pure creamery butter. Then superheats each fluffy white morsel to an appetizing crisp!

This process gives crackling Butter-Kist its tempting, tasty flavor. Folks tell it bluffed from all other pop corn made.

Increases Attendance

Motion of machine makes people stop and look—coaxing fragrance makes them buy—exclusive toasty flavor brings them from blocks around for more! Attracts scores who read Butter-Kist advertising in powerful magazines. Ties up your theatre with a well-known national success.

"Little Gold Mine" Book FREE!

Send the coupon today and read in this famous book the actual letters, and proof of profits from theatre men in towns the size of yours.

THE MASTER MODEL MOTION PICTURE MACHINE

The only projector to buy for durability, least cost of operation, splendid service—the American Standard Motion Picture Machine, the MASTER MODEL.

Built of comparatively fewer, but bigger and better parts. This insures you against breakdowns, and big repair bills, and is a warranty against short life. Many American Standards have been and still are running that were installed six to eight years ago. They give good service, too.

The many practical features which are exclusively found on the MASTER MODEL make for greatest ease in operation. When your operator can completely control the machine without having to fuss about with a dozen annoying details, he can devote more of his time to the artistic projection of the film on the screen. This is a point your patrons will appreciate; and they will show their appreciation by becoming regular visitors.

Write for complete particulars about the MASTER MODEL.

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK

Published by
THE CHALMERS
Publishing Co.

The third and latest edition of this valuable work has just come from the presses.

It is bigger, better, and more helpful than have been either of its predecessors by the same able author.

In daily touch with practical operators throughout the country by reason of his connection with THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in which his PROJECTION DEPARTMENT is featured, Mr. Richardson is especially well qualified to deal with the problems which are constantly confronting the motion picture mechanics upon whose skill the industry depends so largely for its healthy growth.

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK is a carefully prepared guide to perfect projection.

It is an invaluable help to every single individual in the trade who has to do with the mechanical handling of motion picture film.

There are more than 400 Pages of Text and the illustrations—of which there are many—have been especially devised for this particular publication.

A NEW CHAIR

That Enables Everybody to See and Be Comfortable

Can be changed from an adult's chair to a child's chair by pressing the catch and raising as illustrated. Returns to adult's position and locks just as easily.

It provides a child with a seat proportioned to his body, a foot rest the right height and puts the child's eyes on a line with those of adults, enabling him to see without annoyance to others or discomfort to himself. The offers theatre owners something for which there is a real need. Fortunately it is not an extra expense but an added source of profit because it—

Does away with the free kids.
Increases the patronage of children; also the adults who come with children.

Attracts patronage of adults who won't now attend because of discomfort of holding children on their laps.

Attracts patronage from theatres not equipped with FOCO chairs.

FOCO Chairs cost now only a few cents more than ordinary chairs. Made in all sizes and finishes. Old chairs can be converted into FOCO Chairs at considerably less than the cost of new chairs. Leading chair companies are licensed to make FOCO Chairs and can supply you.

COMING!

THE WORLD'S GREATEST COMEDIES, STARRING
THE COMEDY KING OF THEM ALL

CARTER

DE H

AT LAST — the big event in Filmdom has arrived—and as usual, the UNIVERSAL — as in every other great enterprise that has given better films to the world—takes the lead.

This is the event that thousands of Exhibitors throughout the world have been wanting; the event that millions of photo-play lovers have been clamoring for.

CLEAN COMEDIES without the vulgar stuff; without the disgusting slap stick; and minus the cheap clap-trap.

! AVEN

CARTER DE HAVEN, the King of modern day comedy, will play the lead in a series of subjects that will establish, once for all, the fact that comedy films can be produced without the slam bang usually presented in the very ordinary, mediocre comedies of today.

This series will be elaborate, distinctively different, and distinguishable by numberless points of vast superiority in every detail. From script down to the last finishing touch of masterly direction, this series of comedies will stand out from the mass of offerings on the market today, as a genuine pearl stands out from all rank imitations.

The series will be directed and produced by Wallace Beery. No expense will be spared to give the public the rarest of treats and surprises that will mark the most radical departure yet conceived in this branch of the moving picture industry.

Watch for the first release. It will be announced soon. Watch for all the following releases. You'll see something new, different, distinctive. A series of convulsion producing pictures that will herald themselves from one corner of the earth to the other. Your nearest Universal Exchange can give you more facts and figures. Better investigate.

STOP! LOOK! LISTEN!

Here's a States Rights campaign based upon conservatism and truth.

We are firing our opening shot only after having carefully investigated every detail of existing conditions.

We know that the country is flooded with so-called "features."

We know, too, that, with scarcely a single exception, these features are as much alike as two peas in a pod.

We know that the public is being bored to death with spineless plays made only to exploit some "star" of doubtful ability.

We know that there is a great and growing demand for screen performances that will grip the feelings—performances that tell their stories in quick, lively action that is easily understood.

We Are Offering A Really Big Feature

—A feature that is big because it has been made to satisfy a big public demand.

—A feature that fairly teems with the kind of action that no solitary individual with red blood in his veins can resist.

—A feature that is full of startling surprises.

—A feature with an appeal for all classes of picture patrons.

—A feature that sweeps its audiences along with it at break-neck speed.

We Are Selling "The Jockey of Death"

at prices that cannot fail to make our proposition attractive to every State Rights buyer in the country.

We are determined that each man we sell shall make money.

The scale of prices we have established are based upon just what the feature will bring back to the buyer—and the figures which mean his making a substantial profit also mean the financial success of our enterprise.

Record That Billie Burke Made

George Kleine's Greatest

Billie Burke

(By Arrangement With F. Ziegfeld, Jr.)
A Motion Picture Novel by Mr. & Mrs. Rupert Hughes

STORY THAT WILL FIND ECHO IN EVERY HEART."

ity Kelly in Chicago Tribune

"Gloria's Romance" is the story of little girl who grows up. Miss Burke has mirrored with exquisite vision the adolescent unfolding fully indicated by the Hughes. Her youthful hoydenism or glimpses of aspiring young hood, but her attitude is mostly rebellion and effervescent mischief. Along with her mischievousness, Miss Burke is mistress of a selfishness that finds particular in some of the moonlit scenes where she wanders through lovely lens or scrambles slyly over the underground balustrade. "Gloria's Romance" is the human kind of a story that will find echo in hearts every city street and village lane.

SOMETHING FINE AND DISTINCTLY DIFFERENT."

worthy Day in Des Moines Tribune went to the Palace yesterday with a lot of other fans, to see something different—something wonderfully fine—Billie Burke in Gloria's Romance—and like all the others I am away satisfied. I had seen Billie Burke and something fine and distinctly different.

TENDER, SYMPATHETIC AND BEAUTIFUL STORY."

adianapolis Star

with Billie Burke as the star and advent of the first "motion picture novel" called "Gloria's Romance" is entertaining and full of people away yesterday. "Gloria's Romance" is a tender sympathetic and beautiful story that finds Miss Burke an opportunity to some really striking acting.

ITS A NEW STANDARD OF LITERARY QUALITY."

akland (Cal.) Tribune its new screen novel sets a new standard in literary quality of motion picture stories, for it is logically developed, carefully plotted and intense, compelling tale of the romances of a young society woman.

"PICTURE RECEIVED BY RECORD-BREAKING CROWDS."

—Seattle Post-Intelligencer

"Pretty Billie Burke in 'Gloria's Romance' at the Rex is just as delightfully dainty as she is on the stage. Miss Burke has a personality that fairly beams out on the screen. Manager Herrick of the Rex is much gratified with the reception the picture received by record-breaking crowds yesterday."

"BILLIE BURKE CHARMED THOUSANDS."

—Portland Oregonian

With Billie Burke, the "star supreme" in "Gloria's Romance," the million-dollar film novel, as the headline attraction on a program of exceptional merit, the T. & D. theater, the Portland home of Turner Dahnken motion pictures, opened yesterday. Billie Burke charmed thousands just as she did in "Peggy," and the two reels of "Lost in the Everglades" are full of Billie Burke pranks.

"TAKING MOTION-PICTURE FANS BY STORM."

—St. Louis Globe-Democrat

This screen novel by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes is setting an absolutely new standard in literary merit of motion-picture stories. Miss Burke is bubbling over with good spirits and cheerfulness. The film is taking the motion-picture fans by storm, and the Columbia is presenting the story to capacity houses from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m.

"ATTRACTIVE BACKGROUNDS AND FINE CAMERA WORK."

—New York Morning Telegraph

Billie Burke fastened her grip even tighter on New York audiences last night when she appeared in the first two chapters of the George Kleine photoplay serial "Gloria's Romance" at the Globe theater. The serial proved to be a happy combination of well-chosen cast and interesting surroundings. The picture is a personal triumph for Billie Burke, and she is excellently supported by Henry Kolker. Without being spectacular, "Gloria's Romance" is entertaining and exciting. The beauties of Palm Beach form an attractive background for the charming story, and her work is responsible for some admirable photographic effects which must be added to the finish of the production.

"BILLIE BURKE BROKE HOUSE RECORD SATURDAY."

—Houston Chronicle

Billie Burke, at the Queen theater Saturday, broke the house record for a Saturday attendance. Manager C. A. McFarland said the crush was the heaviest he had experienced since the house was opened, and that the crowds jammed the lobby throughout the day, and in some parts of the day blocked the sidewalk. Billie Burke appears in a picture that peculiarly fits her talents and makes an impression that lingers.

"GLORIA'S ROMANCE AN OUT OF THE ORDINARY SERIAL."

—Canton (Ohio) News-Democrat

Kleine is making an out of the ordinary serial in "Gloria's Romance," the first chapter of which is now being shown at the Lyceum. It is unusual in its story, in the excellence of its cast and in the elaborate manner in which it is being staged.

"BILLIE BURKE IS ALTOGETHER CUNNING."

—New York Times

An interesting experiment was begun last night at the Globe theater with the first exhibition of the first chapters of a new movie serial entitled "Gloria's Romance," with Billie Burke as the star. Miss Burke proved herself a good screen subject. She is winsome and girlish looking, and when she dons the clothes of a boy she is altogether cunning.

"MISS BURKE DEVELOPS CAPACITY FOR MISCHIEF."

—New York Sun

In her present play Miss Burke, who is in the role of a tomboy daughter of a millionaire, develops an innate capacity for mischief. This leads her into a variety of escapades from which most of the comedy action of the picture is drawn.

"NO MORE POPULAR PICTURE HAS EVER BEEN SHOWN."

—Indianapolis Star

No more popular picture has ever been shown than "Gloria's Romance," which, featuring charming Billie Burke, is packing audiences into the Easton. Week by week interest in this charming serial grows, and it seems that ere long the theater will not be large enough to hold all who want to follow the fortunes of Gloria.

"BILLIE BURKE GIVEN WONDERFUL OPPORTUNITIES

—Minneapolis Tribune

In order to accommodate admirers of Miss Burke, the "Gloria's Romance" production is shown at least six times a day at the New Palace. The doors open at noon, and "Gloria's Romance" is run until time for the vaudeville program, between the matinee and evening shows, and then again between the two evening vaudeville performances. Billie is given some wonderful opportunities to display her ability in the gymnasium with boxing gloves, with the foils in a fencing bout, as the hostess at a chafing-dish party, as a girl graduate and as her own natural, playful self.

"BILLIE BURKE MORE WINSOME THAN EVER."

—Tulsa (Okla.) World

If Billie Burke is to appear in more exquisite gowns than those worn in the first chapter of "Gloria's Romance," she will have to call in the services of a fairland sartorial wizard and to use a colloquialism, "there ain't no such article." In "Gloria's Romance" Miss Burke is ravishly beautiful and more winsome than ever before.

"PICTURE LOOKS LIKE IT COST A FORTUNE."

—Detroit News

Radiant Billie Burke in a new serial film opened yesterday at the Majestic theater; and Billie, who is introduced to us as a little girl, doesn't look a bit over twelve. The serial is said to have cost a million dollars, and from the introductory episode one guesses readily that the press agent is no faker.

"MAKING A HIT WITH MOTION-PICTURE PATRONS."

—Seattle Post-Intelligencer

"Gloria's Romance" with petite Billie Burke playing the part of Gloria, is making a hit with motion-picture patrons of the Rex. Rupert Hughes has written a story that fits Billie Burke like one of her own gloves. She just revels in it. And this diminutive comedienne has no competitor when it comes to revealing. She is the real spirit of joy. It is easy to see that she is having as much fun in the screen as her auditors are out of it.

"A PRETTY STORY; A NORMAL LOT OF CHARACTERS."

—New York Mail

Judging from the first two chapters of "Gloria's Romance," something different in a serial is being developed. All serial pictures heretofore have been built of weirdly impossible and thrillingly melodramatic incidents, but this serial is made up of subtler things; a pretty story, a normal lot of characters who are neither thorough villains nor thorough heroes and complications of a sort which will not make the sensible person writhe with laughter at their absurdity.

"GRAND OPERA HOUSE PACKED TO THE LIMIT."

—San Antonio Express

The Grand Opera House was packed to the limit Friday to see "Gloria's Romance," the new Rupert Hughes picture in which Billie Burke is the featured star. A hand-to-hand conflict with a real Seminole Indian is the big thrill in chapter two of the George Kleine motion-picture novel, and the fight appeared to be no make-believe affair, but the real thing.

"BILLIE BURKE OUTSHADOWS EVERYBODY ELSE."

—Houston Chronicle

Billie Burke has already established herself as a foremost screen star, just as she has long been beloved on the speaking stage. She photographs her part—so perfectly, in fact, that one can almost see the sunset red gold of her hair and the wonderful blue of her smiling eyes—and "camera consciousness" is a term wholly unknown to the little player. Miss Burke's support is excellent in every way, but Billie so outshadows everybody else in any and every production in which she appears.

"MOST EXPENSIVE FILM NOVEL EVER PRODUCED."

—Savannah News

The Odeon gave the Savannah amusement public several sensations last week, principal among which was the presentation of the most expensive serial ever produced, Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance." Those who saw the first episode of this production need not be assured of the high character of the new film novel.

"GLORIA'S ROMANCE ENTHUSIASTICALLY RECEIVED."

—Sioux Falls Leader-Press

"Lost in the Everglades," chapter one of "Gloria's Romance," Kleine's 20-part photoplay serial featuring Billie Burke, Henry Kolker and other stars, was enthusiastically received at the Colonial on Wednesday, and the opening of the elaborate film novel gave new insight on the work of Billie Burke.

"AUTOMOBILES LINE STREET, PEOPLE BLOCK SIDEWALKS."

—Omaha Bee

Automobiles lined the streets and people blocked the sidewalks in the vicinity of the Muse theater Friday night, when the first chapters of "Gloria's Romance," featuring Billie Burke, were shown at that theater, and "Lost in the Everglades," the opening chapter of the story was up to the expectations aroused.

"DESPITE HEAVY RAIN THEATER WAS PACKED."

—Atlanta Journal

Admirers of Miss Billie Burke flocked to the Piedmont theater Monday to see the first chapter of "Gloria's Romance." Despite the heavy rain, the Piedmont was packed from the opening reel at 11:30 o'clock in the morning, until the doors were shut at night. Miss Burke, as a mischievous girl (she grows up in later chapters), charmed her audience on the opening day, and they went away to tell their friends, so that Tuesday was another busy day at the Piedmont.

"GLORIA'S ROMANCE PLEASES LARGE CROWDS AT LYRIC."

—Springfield News-Record

Billie Burke, the most charming actress in filmdom, came to the Lyric Thursday in her latest offering, "Gloria's Romance," and it pleased large crowds at the theater. Many who saw the production declared that Miss Burke appears to far better advantage than in her first movie play.

"THEATER LOBBY PACKED—HUNDREDS TURNED AWAY"

—Milwaukee, Wisconsin

With the theater packed, the lobby jammed and hundreds turned away, Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance" was welcomed at the Merrill theater Sunday.

"INTEREST SO KEEN EXTRA SHOWS NECESSARY"

—Minneapolis Tribune

Despite the fact that the vaudeville program this week at the New Palace theater is one of the best ever presented at that theater, Miss Burke holds her own in the film portion of the program. The patrons demonstrate their interest by remaining after the vaudeville to view the serial, and so keen has the interest been that it has been necessary to run the film after the last performance on night, to accommodate those who came late.

"PACKED OUTSIDE DOORS OF REX THEATER."

—Seattle Times

Billie Burke is certainly a favorite with the women in this city, for every afternoon at the Rex theater they are packed outside the doors of the Rex theater in their efforts to see this famous little star in the latest and greatest of her successes, "Gloria's Romance." There is only one Billie Burke, and there will be only one, for her clever little mannerisms cannot be duplicated.

"MOST LAVISHLY PRODUCED SOCIETY PLAY OF YEAR."

—Peoria Star

The Apollo today has the second chapter of "Gloria's Romance," in which Billie Burke has achieved the climax of photoplay production—the most lavishly produced and whimsically delicious society play of the year.

"THRONES GREET BILLIE BURKE AT STAR THEATER."

—Illinois State Journal

Yesterday thrones greeted the arrival of the fascinating little star, Billie Burke, at the Lyric in her latest and greatest film success, entitled "Gloria's Romance," and her appearance on the screen can be appreciated as though she were appearing in person.

"GLORIA'S ROMANCE IS SHOWING UP BEAUTIFULLY."

—St Louis Globe-Democrat

"At the Columbia the George Kleine film, 'Gloria's Romance,' with Billie Burke, the star supreme, and an excellent cast is showing up beautifully. Miss Burke has the most engaging part in her career."

"BILLIE BURKE A STAR OF SCINTILLATING CAPACITY."

—Pittsburgh Press

Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance" is surely a star of scintillating capacity. Her charming actions, her sweet smile and her clean-cut act have made for her a reputation to be envied by stagefolks the world over.

"BILLIE BURKE MORE LOVELY THAN EVER BEFORE"

—Dallas News

Billie Burke is more lovely than ever in the third chapter of "Gloria's Romance," for she appears as a school girl who plays basketball tennis, fences and holds chafing-dish orgies in her room.

"AN ACHIEVEMENT IN A CLASS BY ITSELF."

—Norfolk (Va.) Pilot

Billie Burke in her 20-week serial came and saw and conquered. If the subsequent installments of "Gloria's Romance" measure up to the first on revealed yesterday at the Wells, Miss Burke's serial is going to be set down in the annals of motion pictures as an achievement in a class by itself.

"PRODUCTION A MARVEL OF BEAUTY AND EXCELLENCE."

—Worcester Gazette

If Worcester was ever treated a genuine screen feast, it was yesterday at the Pleasant theater, where Billie Burke was shown in the first chapter of "Gloria's Romance." The production is a marvel of beauty with a strong and rapidly moving story of deep interest.

"GLORIA'S ROMANCE TO BREAK ALL RECORDS"

—Milwaukee News

Billie Burke, in "Gloria's Romance," threatens to break all records she set when she appeared in "Peggy," some months ago at the Merrill on Sunday. In an excellent play and gives Billie Burke no end of opportunities.

THE ZEPPELIN RAIDS ON LONDON AND THE SIEGE OF VERDUN

A stupendously spectacular production staged at the cost of a million lives. These are the only authentic pictures ever taken of the Zeppelin Fleet's Arrival in England—their attack on London—the trail of destruction in their wake; "Deadman's Hill" and the historic siege of Verdun—as exhibited under the auspices of The New York Globe to turn away audiences at the Park Theatre.

"Shoes"—the work of these three notable women—is the nearest approach to screen perfection ever presented.

It is an intensely human story of a working girl who "sold herself for a pair of shoes."

It is greater than drama. It is a chapter from life.
It is a photoplay masterpiece. Maintaining the BLUEBIRD standard—"Shoes" is a perfect photoplay.

STARS: "I received my program which shows Bryant Washburn in an Essanay and Mary Anderson in a Vitagraph. It is rather soothing to an exhibitor to see the old favorites back again in the regular program. Honestly, I think one of the greatest drawbacks to the industry has been the withdrawing of favorites from the regular program.  Hope you will continue this policy.

"LIONEL DELACROIX,

PICTURES: "Just had the pleasure of running Edison's 'CELESTE OF THE AMBULANCE CORPS' and I consider it the most magnificent three reel subject that has been offered in General Film Service for many a day. The theme is very interesting; the lighting, directing and detail work excellent and the photography a work of art not easily forgotten.

STARS WITH BOX OFFICE VALUE!

Ham and Bud, Helen Gibson, Ethel Teare, Sis Hopkins—there are names that you know mean extra money in the box-office every time you announce them. You get feature drawing power at a one reel rental.

SIS HOPKINS

Supported by Henry Murdock and Frank Minzey in

"Her Great Invention"

Easily one of the best Sis Hopkins Comedies yet released. Sis has a wonderful invention for making gun-powder harmless. The only trouble is that it does not work and—well, things that happen then don't give you a chance to stop laughing until the last scene of the picture fades from view.

Released Friday, June 23rd

"The Beggar and His Child"

Ham dresses Bud as his darling child and is in a fair way to wealth when the fall comes.

Released Tuesday, June 20th

"That Lonely Widow"

Ethel Teare, as a girl reporter, gets into a jolly mix-up that keeps the laughs in swift succession.

Released Wednesday, June 21

HELEN GIBSON

The Screen's Most Daring Actress in

"The Mysterious Cipher"

You are missing the one sure bet, the single reeler that never fails to bring them back if you are not using "The Hazards of Helen." In "The Mysterious Cipher," Helen lives up to her title of "the screen's most daring actress" in a story that shows her exposing conspirators who sought to defraud the railroad. Thrilling horseback riding and a breath-taking leap to a speeding freight are among the punches.

What the Critics Say of the Latest Essanay-Chaplin Comedy “P O L I C E”

This is without question a tremendous box office production because its worth has been definitely proved. You can count it a real winner.—Wid's Independent Review.

This new vehicle of tremendous laugh getting power ranks with Chaplin's greatest work.—New York Dramatic Mirror.

Exhibitors who want to give their patrons a real laugh should show this picture.—Exhibitors Herald.

“Police” is funny in the extreme.—Motion Picture News.

Manager Field of the Colonial says Chaplin's “Police” drew the biggest Sunday crowd he ever had. It is as funny as the advertising would strive to make one think it, and moves the house to laughter.—Kitty Kelly, Chicago Tribune.

Chaplin in “Police,” if possible, is funnier than ever. To appreciate it watch the crowds.—Mildred Joclyn, Chicago Post.

“Police” is a winner.—Dallas (Tex.) Herald.

Chaplin fans are delighted with this comedy which drew capacity crowds at The Empress.—Des Moines (Ia) Register.

It is the most screamingly funny of all his funny comedies.—Atchison (Kans.) Globe.

This mirth provoking comedy is pleasing all crowds at the Regent theatre.—Indianapolis (Ind.) Star.

The Absolute Test of All Photoplays

Every photoplay must meet the final test of sales power.

If it does not, it is a failure. If it cannot attract the public it is useless, as no photoplay is of any value on a shelf.

Essanay's short subjects have met this test; its actors are known the world over; its plots carry the fundamental element of human interest that appeals to all.

Essanay plays sell; they please.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN

is presented in

"The Girl At the Curtain"

The strange case of a couple who wed with a curtain between them, so that neither sees the other. Having carried out the provision of a will, they separate. Later they meet and fall in love to find they are already man and wife.

2 Act Drama (reissue) - - - June 20

GEORGE ADE'S

"Fable of the Undecided Brunette" is another of his quaintly humorous satires on the present day girl. It keeps all in an uproar of laughter.

1 Act Comedy - - - June 21

ANN KIRK and EDWARD ARNOLD

are presented in

"A Traitor to Art"

The story of a girl's tragic failure as an artist in a great city; her final reclamation from the ultra-Bohemian life through a minister who loves her and brings her happiness.

“Stung”

ONE-PART COMEDY. RELEASED MONDAY, JUNE 19th

Sometimes there is a “back-fire” when a practical joker overworks his ingenuity. So it was with Hopper, who had made everyone’s life miserable with his pranks. To cure him of his peculiar sense of humor, his wife turned a little trick on him that made Hopper’s jokes look like kindergarten work. Oh yes, Hopper was cured.

“Curfew at Simpton Center”

ONE-PART COMEDY. RELEASED FRIDAY, JUNE 23rd

The married ladies of Simpton Center were going to have “some party,”—one of those fancy dress affairs like they have in the big city, by heck! They were all going to dress up like school girls and the men had strict orders to stay away. But before the party was over a hurry call was sent out for the men. “Children under sixteen must be in bed when the curfew rings at nine” said the law, and each husband had to pick out his own school girl wife and prove she was over sixteen.

Selig Service Praised in England, as Well as in America

The Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly says: "The Blood Seedling," a Selig production in three reels, is a remarkable production in several respects; uncommon and out of the ordinary in style and treatment, and a plot treated in so masterly a fashion as to keep one in excited wonder to the last moment, for the secret is not divulged until the final scene, and then in a most extraordinary manner. The old world atmosphere and the manners and customs of half a century ago are a welcome change from some of the super-up-to-date productions of which we see so many. Of course, it contains the usual elements of love, hate, jealousy, vice and virtue, but they are so disguised and presented in such a charming manner as to be almost unrecognizable. The photography is exceptionally good and the acting all that could be desired. The picture is one we can strongly recommend to Exhibitors who are on the look out for something novel, for it is a subject that cannot fail to be a success on any program."

Frank Daniels as "Kernel Nutt"

"His face is your fortune"

"Kernel Nutt" mobilizes the army of laugh lovers at every box office.

Frank Daniels is the master of his craft—the very imp of laughter. For years the big comedy attraction of the stage, he has proved an even greater feature on the screen. "The Kernel Nutt" pictures are the spice of the program—just the thing to send the crowds home with a laugh, and make them come back smiling. "Kernel Nutt, the Janitor," "Kernel Nutt Wins a Wife," "Kernel Nutt, the Footman," "Kernel Nutt's Hundred Dollar Bill," "Kernel Nutt's Musical Shirt," followed by

And be sure you cash in on "The Escapades of Mr. Jack" with Frank Daniels.

Do you know that you are getting unlimited publicity on "The Escapades of Mr. Jack" all over the country, day in and day out? The Hearst newspapers, and hundreds of dailies on the syndicate service, covering every corner of the country, are printing Jimmy Swinnerton's funny drawings of "Mr. Jack" on their comic pages. Everyone in your neighborhood knows "Mr. Jack" and follows his pranks. Frank Daniels has made him come to life and as a result "The Escapades of Mr. Jack" is another Vitagraph money-maker for exhibitors.

Stop! Look! Listen!

A MAN in Pennsylvania received $10,000 for suggesting the use of these words by the railroads.

They will be worth equally as much to you if you apply them to the conduct of your business.

Stop!

Consider the drawing power—the box-office value—of each picture for your theatre before you book it. You would not pay the same for a mixture of copper, silver, and gold that you would for pure gold. Neither should you pay the same for all pictures, regardless of whether they are good, bad, or indifferent.

Look!

See every picture screened before you book it, and then select only those which you know will please your patrons. Don't buy "a pig in a poke." All pictures are not of equal appeal. Do your booking on a basis that will permit you to take what you want and what your patrons want, rather than what someone else wants you to take.

Listen!

Keep your ear to the ground for your patrons' comments and then pass these on to the manufacturer. In short, use your position to have pictures made to their (your patrons') order. All of which, when summed up, simply means—

M. C. KELLOGG, Manager

Lead, S. Dak., May 20, 1916.

V.L.S.E., Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I trust you will not take as flattery, nor as a forerunner for some special concession, the few true facts as I see them, and as expressed below:

I have been an exhibitor of V-L-S-E features ever since they were first released in this territory, which is over a year. There must be a reason:

First of all, would say that if honest and square dealings, well balanced programs, with clean and wholesome subjects, are to be considered as assets, the V-L-S-E certainly has them.

Your open booking policy is a boon to every exhibitor, for the tastes of various communities are bound to vary, so it is up to each exhibitor to study his patrons and cooperate with your exchanges.

The plan of scaling the price of each subject is a splendid one and most equitable. Every subject can't be as good as another even though the directors and actors try to make them so. It's the box office statements that tell which are the best. In other words, the public has its likes and dislikes, and all you or I try to say or do can't change them.

In this day of so-called chaotic film conditions, it is apparent that the producers who stick closest to the real commercial side of the business, are those that will withstand the much talked of "over production."

Yours respectfully,

M. C. Kellogg

Manager.

TRIANGLE

Motion Pictures are successes or failures because the public patronizes them or withholds patronage. If a picture achieves financial success it is either because it is a bad picture depending on crude sensationalism, or because it is a good picture made according to high ethical standards by talented men and women with a definite purpose behind it.

TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAYS are of this latter class. Their aim has been to portray the big things of life, to bring to the screen the greatest possible quality and quantity of entertainment, until now TRIANGLE PLAYS have earned first place where all good things are appreciated by merit alone.

The actual cost of making TRIANGLE PICTURES is never considered. The orders are to make the best and then beat that in the next picture—to spare no effort to get just the right effect—that indefinable touch of perfection so noticeable in TRIANGLE Productions.

PICTUREPLAYS

TRIANGLE PLAYS are the very latest word in the production of motion pictures. They show you miles upon miles of wonderful natural country; peoples you have read about only in books.

They don't hold you to one set of emotions, either, but rush you swiftly through the gamut of them all. They give comedy, tragedy, laughter, tears, all in rapid succession. Their magic carries you delightfully through space and time.

You spend an hour among the marvels of the beautiful North, its ice and snow and wonderful scenery. Then, whisk! You are on the blazing Mexican battlefields holding your breath as a horde of savage soldiers descends on a defenseless city. Another change and you roar with laughter at the ridiculous complications of some Keystone Comedy.

If you are an exhibitor and are not running TRIANGLE PLAYS why not drop us a line for information regarding their presentation.

Facts and Comments

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD urges the fullest possible attendance of delegates to the National Convention of the Exhibitors' League to open at Chicago on July 11. At present the exhibiting branch in the industry is the only one with a considerable organization. The industry will soon be confronted with struggles and problems of many kinds and there will be need for a strong organization within the ranks of the industry. In the impending battles against censorship in Washington and in various states the aid of the exhibitor is indispensable. This aid can best be given by the organized exhibitor. The whole industry looks forward to the Chicago convention with great expectations. We look for much valuable constructive work.

ONE of the biggest South American buyers of films heretofore located in London announces his impending removal to New York. The South American market is knocking at our doors more loudly every day. Europe is utterly unable to furnish the needful supply. The monopolistic conditions now existing in South America depend for their continuance entirely upon the European supply. The conclusion from these premises is obvious enough to be drawn by a child. What we need is a little study, a little enterprise, a little progressiveness on the part of American producers and distributors. If you are interested let us tell you that Cine-Mundial, the Spanish edition of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, will point the way if you care to invest two cents in postage.

OUR esteemed contemporary and namesake, the New York World, amiably suggests that some of Shakespeare's plays might be made into films. Quite so. Our records show that the Vitagraph Company has filmed most of the great and popular Shakespearean plays in 1908 and in 1909. We are hungry for good suggestions; let the distinguished editor try again.

* * *

THERE will be a very lively and spirited contest for the presidency of the National League when the great hosts assemble in Chicago to elect a successor to Frederick J. Herrington. We have no doubt that the best man will win. We feel that the election may safely be left to the delegates without newspaper advice or assistance.

* * *

AN energetic young exhibitor in Utica, N. Y., publishes a neat little weekly the feature of which is a friendly chat with his patrons. He always has something of interest to say to them and the patrons read these weekly chats eagerly. There ought to be a special bond of good feeling between every exhibitor and his audience, and our Utica friend has reached an ideal condition. We heartily commend his example to all other exhibitors who want to try something original in advertising.

* * *

THE Motion Picture Board of Trade, it is reported, is about to end its activities. We will not defy the tradition which forbids criticism on epitaphs and in obituaries. The failure of the organization of course proves nothing against the principle of genuinely representative trade parliament, in which all interests are treated fairly and equitably. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD five years ago earnestly advocated the formation of such a parliament, calling attention to the similar institutions in France and Great Britain. We hope that the next effort to organize such a body will meet with success. In this hope we are confirmed by the sight of the dangers which confront the industry. The next six months will make it very plain to every man in the industry that a strong and united organization commanding the confidence of the whole film world is an absolute necessity.

Stealing Plays

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON.

THAT authors are plagiarizing is a general complaint of producers. That producers are appropriating from scenarios submitted to them for approval and as regularly rejected is a general complaint of authors. The usual excuse offered when the steal is discovered does not commend itself strongly to charitable consideration. There is not the slightest doubt that two men do have the same idea for a play at the same time and develop it along similar lines. There is also not the slightest doubt that comets now and then appear in the sky.

Honorable producers, like honorable book publishers, are aiming high. Their purpose is to establish a reputation for superior quality. They are constantly on the lookout for original compositions executed in a masterly way. They are employing men of discriminating intelligence to examine scenarios and eliminate all but those worth the risk and expenditure of thousands of dollars for visualization. A letter from one of these reputable houses recently came to my attention and I have taken the liberty of quoting from its contents. It was in general an encouraging letter to an author whose script was returned.

"It is against the policy of this company to buy scenarios or synopses from any source outside its organization unless we know the man or woman from whom we buy it. This protection is necessary in film procedure because plagiarism is an every-day occurrence, and it is also possible for a writer to sell the same idea to two or three producers almost simultaneously if the idea is good enough. We would not be inclined to buy even an exceptional story from an unknown writer because we should not be able to protect ourselves."

Now the unknown author may have a carking good story, all his own, worked out intelligently for the screen. How is he to market it under such conditions? I called on the producing concern responsible for the above statements and was further enlightened. Said the writer of the letter: "There is another reason why we would not buy from a writer whom we do not know, namely, that a man who has sent a scenario sky-rocketing to various studios can never be certain that he owns his own product, that some scenario man in some one of these studios, with a smaller sense of honor than is proper, might take a vital theme or punch out of the synopsis or scenario and then reject it. Then the innocent and properly qualified purchaser of this scenario might find himself face to face with the situation of having produced a stolen story."

The fact that the original scenario writer is innocent would hardly make the producer feel any better about having run into such a situation. Nor is the author benefited in the long run, in spite of the payment made for his hard work. He is bound to suffer a loss of reputation, the very thing he most cherishes, on which his success must eventually depend. Through contemptible pilfering, made possible by lax studio methods, an honorable producer is robbed of valuable property and the author, at the same time, robbed of good repute.

The problem of getting away from stories not-worthy, based on some devalitized subject or hackneyed situation, neither original in composition nor skilled in arrangement, may seem simple enough, but there are involved more complicated problems, those of encouraging fine authorship without involving a serious loss to the producer through plagiarism.

The high-class producers who took the pains to send a letter to the author who had taken pains in writing a scenario submitted to them for examination are justified in their attitude. They did not discourage the author. They simply enlightened him as to their policy and their principles, and they made it possible for him to establish himself in confidence. A step in the right direction has been taken, and there is little doubt that other reputable concerns will rise to the necessity of fair treatment and straight dealing within the near future, with a hoped-for result that crooks will be gradually eliminated from the business.

But listen to what the New York Evening Sun has to say: "Said the movie men to the Authors' League, 'we can't pay you writing fellows any big royalties. The reports of our profits are greatly exaggerated.' Said the movie men to the public, 'Come and see our marvelous million-dollar production. We spare no expense. We equip great studios. We buy vast Western ranches. We pay our stars $50,000 to $600,000 salaries.' But the ingenious men and women who furnish the ideas that give life to all this furniture get $25 to $50, or on a higher level $500."

For a capable author to imbibe and perfectly understand what is of deep interest to our people at the present moment is an immensely difficult matter in itself. For him to study his audience and discover how they must be addressed means mental effort. For him to contrive and construct through long weeks a story that shall at once be vital and entertaining, that lends itself to exposition both clear and artistic, means more than I can briefly tell—it means that he has entered the hardest profession on earth.

The hardest profession in the world is not becoming easier. Besides broad comprehension of his subject, wealth of invention and discriminating taste, the author of screen stories of the better sort must have a knowledge of what structural arrangement best suits screen presentation. Then if he merely submits a synopsis and leaves the rest to be worked out, he permits another man to write his story, and he cannot become known to producers as a dependable quantity, an author who has mastered his craft. The best introduction an unknown author can have is a scenario of masterly composition.

The scenario of today is a complete working scheme, carefully studied out in advance, so that it may be executed without costly delay. A masterly scenario is not only a great instrument of economy in the cost of production, it is the first and foremost essential to artistic and financial success. If it is all right to pay directors large sums for the supervision of story visualization, and actors adequate compensation for the interpretation of roles, there does not seem to be any reason why the author, who creates, not steals, a story should not be compensated as he is in literature and the drama except that that work of his mind can be easily stolen.

A reaction against those lax studio methods which permit stealing is found in the dearth of good stories on the screen. The entire moving picture industry is mainly supported by story value. That support cannot be replaced by makeshifts, and to rot that support with wormy speculation is to endanger its future safety for the sake of a small temporary advantage. If producers do not protect the author, it will only confirm that men are seldom blessed with good fortune and good sense at the same time.

The British Film in America

By W. STEPHEN BUSI.

THE CINEMA, our young and lively British contemporary, in a recent issue prints "An Open Letter to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD." The object of the letter is stated in these words: "Wanted: 'Reciprocity' for British Films." The letter no doubt reflects the feelings of most British film men, and we have therefore thought it worth while to reproduce all its important parts. This, however, is not the only reason we have for reprinting the substance of the appeal. The severe handicaps which now beset the British producer, the period of storm and stress through which the entire industry is passing in Great Britain and her colonies, are eloquently described in the letter. We think it is not without its historic value.

We are only too glad to comply with the request contained in this remarkable appeal. We are aware of its merit. Let us recall to the memory of our esteemed contemporary that THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has in the past on more than one occasion urged the special claims of British-made films upon the American public. We have on such occasions dwelt upon the bonds of language and literature and common traditions. We have spoken of the splendid possibilities of good British films in this market. We are pleased indeed to be able to add that the British producers have completely verified our predictions of success. Four and five years ago British producers could scarcely find a market for their films in their own country, today no foreign film is more popular here than the film of British origin and none sells as readily. This is no idle optimism. Only a few days ago the representative of a new but enterprising film producing company in London left these shores after having disposed of all of his feature subjects to one of the biggest American companies at prices eminently satisfactory all around. We, of course, have always tried to do our share by giving these good productions the favorable notice they deserved and we shall continue to pursue this policy.

Credit for the growing success and popularity of British-made films is of course due mainly to the merits of these films. While British producers keep on giving us such splendid productions as "The House of Temperley," "The Middleman," "Boote's Baby," "Brother Officers," "England's Menace," "How Britain Prepared" and "David Copperfield," we can do little more than join in the general applause. The reason we happen to remember these features out of the multitudes which oppress our memory is plain: Of all the foreign-made features the ones just named were the only ones shown in such big houses as the Strand and the Broadway, etc. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD does nothing more than voice the general and hearty welcome which the American public has always been ready to accord to the British-made film of merit.

As matters stand today and as they have always stood in this country the British-made film has a shade the best of it compared to other foreign-made films. We do not know whether our friend of The Cinema would call this reciprocity, but whatever you may call it it seems to us like a solid substantial advantage. We would like to have a representative of our esteemed contemporary come over and spend a few evenings at the Screen Club or in any other place where film men "most do congregate." We have little doubt that he would join the friendly chorus of British film men whom we are always glad to welcome. Let him interview any of his countrymen who have ever been our guests here and be convinced that our neutrality is not at all chilly but decidedly benevolent.

The most interesting part of the text of the letter follows.

My Dear World: You are a journal with a wide circulation throughout the cinematograph industry and you enjoy an enviable and well-deserved reputation for disinterestedness and reliability. You have been described as the "Film Bible," and we are disposed to agree that the exaggeration is pardonable. Without laying claim to "divine inspiration" your influence is far-reaching and dignified and comes as near to being Authority as one could hope for in the sphere of trade journalism. With one notable exception, practically every important aspect of the cinematograph industry has been materially developed by your instruction, guidance and encouragement.

That exception is the status of the British film in America and the measure of reciprocity which, we venture to think, is due, particularly at this juncture, from the American to the British industry.

Your editorial silence on the peculiar position which has sprung up between the American and British trades is all the more remarkable in that at least one other leading cinema trade organ in the States, and several American representatives on this side, have not only realized what is due from America to Great Britain in this matter, but are each "doing their bit," as we say here, to rectify to some extent the balance of cinema trade between this country and yours. To this movement, a commendable but somewhat belated one, the World, hitherto, does not appear to have lent its editorial support. The British cinema industry asks "Why?" and recollects certain editorial comments in the World which might almost suggest an attitude of very chilly neutrality towards the British industry.

A fig for neutrality! The time has come for the American industry as a whole to recognize that its fortunate position would be a very dignified, a graceful and a sportsmanlike in the British market, owing to the war, calls for, if it does not necessitate, a measure of reciprocity for British films in the American market. * * *

While the British producer fights, is it not reasonable to expect that his films should earn as much money as possible on behalf of his dependents, and, perhaps, even provide him with some capital to promote a fresh start in business on his return?

This, my dear World, is where you "come in." You—and none better—can point out to the American film men that the highly favorable position which they enjoy in the British market is due to the fact that the war has deprived them, and will increasingly deprive them, of competitors, and that it would be a very dignified, a graceful and a sportsmanlike act on their part if they made arrangements to see that while British producers, actors, and film men are fighting to keep British markets open for American films, the American industry, in return, gave British films a fair show in American theaters. That would be better than a "neutrality" which merely keeps the British producer's seat warm for him, but takes away the cushions.

It is certainly "up to" you, my dear World, and we feel sure that you will respond with a stirring editorial calculated to send American buyers hot-foot in quest of British films. The search will repay them, and the British producer will be able to devote himself more thoroughly to the task of perning in the Huns on this side of the Atlantic. Who knows but that, if allowed to escape, they might assault even the bulwarks of America?

With respectful greetings, my dear World,

Believe me, yours very fraternally,

THE CINEMA.

Film Men Discuss Organization

At Luncheon Attended by Unusually Representative Body Committee Is Appointed to Report on Plan for a Successor to Board of Trade.

By George Blaisdell.

ONE of the most thoroughly representative gatherings of film men ever convened about one board sat down to a luncheon at Delmonico's on Thursday, June 8. The invitations which brought out the threescore men had been signed by Walter W. Irwin as chairman and Edward Earl as secretary. Among the objects stated in the call was "the determination of definite policies on matters affecting the industry as a whole." The luncheon had been under way but a few minutes, however, before Mr. Irwin made the definite announcement that the Motion Picture Board of Trade had not been able to fulfill its objects, and that the meeting had been called for the purpose of considering the formation of an association which would be representative of the entire industry and one that would gain the confidence of everyone in it. He said the board was willing to amend its charter in any way to meet the wishes of those around the board. It was willing to go further than amendment—it was willing to dissolve. The speaker pleaded for a militant organization which would be able to present a concerted front on any question affecting the industry, and that without in any way lessening the effectiveness of any organization now existing or that may be formed in any particular branch of the trade.

The announcement came as a surprise to a great many of his hearers. Seated around the board were many manufacturers and exhibitors. At the conclusion of Mr. Irwin's remarks—he spoke for twenty minutes—Commodore J. Stuart Blackton talked briefly. The president of the Board of Trade expressed his conviction that the one big question of the day is whether the industry needs a trade organization, and he added that question should be put to the body should decide an organization was not needed, there was use wasting time talking. "Let us go right on as we have done in the past," he said, "and suffer as we have done in the past—and we will suffer a great deal more in the future, I believe."

"The present board is perhaps a nucleus, and I will reiterate what Mr. Irwin has said, that every man in the board will eliminate himself from any office he holds, if for the good of the industry it is necessary that this be done." Mr. Blackton expressed the opinion that the recent misunderstanding over trade shows would prove to be a blessing in disguise, in that all who had to do with either had realized the futility of trying to run a divided house.

Following the standing expression as to the advisability of forming an organization, in which only two men remained seated, the chairman was formally instructed to appoint a committee of twelve to draft a plan. The first action was taken as the result of a motion offered by J. E. Brulatour. Mr. Brulatour called attention to the nearly unanimous action of the meeting and then asked W. W. Hodgkinson, who was one of the two who had failed to arise, how he stood on the proposition. The president of the Paramount replied that he wished to know more about the purposes of the organization before going on record. A lively discussion ensued, in which W. A. Brady also tried to learn the position of Mr. Hodgkinson. Mr. Irwin called attention to the fact that next year thirty-eight state legislatures will meet, which emphasized the need for organization.

James Delves, national secretary of the exhibitors, was asked by Mr. Irwin if he believed the proposed association would in any way interfere with the exhibitors' organization. Mr. Delves said he could express only his own opinion, and added that the question should be submitted to the executive committee. He added that in Pennsylvania there was a censorship law, and in that fact was found one reason for his presence at the meeting. He said, in answer to Mr. Irwin, he believed such an organization as that proposed would on questions affecting the whole industry receive the co-operation of exhibitors.

After another long colloquy between Mr. Irwin and Mr. Hodgkinson, the latter said he was in favor of anything that would advance the interests of the industry, provided from his viewpoint it was feasible or workable. Asked as to whether he knew of any reason why the industry could not develop an effective organization, he replied there seemed to be no reason beyond the fact that the industry is in a state of flux. Not directly answering a query as to whether he would be willing to abide by the decision of the majority, Mr. Hodgkinson said he would like to attend the meeting at which the committee made its report, and if he found the plans such as he could sympathize with he would be very glad to come in. After much more discussion, he agreed to serve on a committee to investigate the feasibility of bringing about the formation of an organization that will be helpful to the industry.

Mr. Irwin, answering an inquiry of Mr. Blumenthal as to the genesis of the meeting, said it was called as a result of the last meeting of the directors of the Board of Trade; that the board had recognized the fact that it had not obtained the confidence and the support of the entire industry, and that for the general welfare it was necessary to have an organization that would. To that end invitations had been sent out to representative men asking them to come to the luncheon.

Objects were entered to the composition of the committee as it had been named by Mr. Irwin. One man was opposed to lawyers on general principles—and that brought the laugh on Mr. Irwin, in which he joined—while others thought the exhibitors should have a larger representation. After deciding to elect the committee that will take up the drafting of a report on plan and scope, there was a reversal of opinion, and Mr. Irwin was empowered to appoint a fresh committee, one that will comprise representatives of the supply men, the exhibitors, the trade press and the manufacturing. The list of names was as follows:

J. E. Brulatour, Nicholas Power, J. H. Hallberg, Lee A. Ochs, John J. Wittman, L. L. Levine, W. Stephen Bush, William A. Johnston, Tracy Lewis, W. W. Hodgkinson, Jesse Lasky and W. W. Irwin.

It was decided to meet again three weeks from date at the same place. The meeting had been in session for two hours and a half. The atmosphere had been somewhat heated at times, but at the close the best of feeling seemed to prevail.

Here is the list of the men present: Walter W. Irwin, J. Stuart Blackton, J. W. Binder, Terry Ramsaye, Tracy Lewis, Paul Gulick, J. C. Graham, Samuel M. Field, Paul H. Cromelin, Lee A. Ochs, W. Stephen Bush, L. B. Jennings, J. C. Flinn, Carl H. Pierce, J. M. Solomon, Jr., J. H. Hallberg, Arthur Leslie, John Manheimer, William Brandt, Samuel Lesselbaum, Louis H. Levine, P. A. Parsons, Fred Becroft, Carl Anderson, Lloyd D. Willis, Ralph Ince, Benjamin Lyons, George Blaisdell, E. K. Gillette, William A. Brady, Adolph Zukor, Charles Urban, Max Oestreich, Harry A. Cochrane, Edward Earl, H. T. Edwards, John H. Wittman, Henry Cole, John C. Bolte, Herman Pollak, W. W. Hodgkinson, Raymond Bawley, C. R. Macauley, William M. Seabury, William N. Seligson, Jack Edwards, P. A. Powers, J. J. Schnitzer, Leslie Mason, C. V. C. Van Deusen, Albert S. Le Veno, J. A. Berst, W. E. Schallenberger, David Horsley, Charles Condon, Cranston Brenton, Samuel Goldfish, Arthur S. Friend, Albert H. T. Banzhaf, Samuel Spedon, Sam Trigger, Ben Title, A. J. Barthell, Louis F. Blumenthal, James Delves, Arthur James.

Statement by J. W. Binder.

J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, after the meeting gave out this statement:

"I am much gratified at the representative attendance at the meeting. I believe the action taken is wise and along constructive lines. The original plan of organization and the budget of the Board of Trade were never considered by me as being permanent. The plan was tentative and the budget intended to suffice only for the organization period, until the full membership had been secured. When it became apparent that, from whatever reason, the full strength of the different branches of the industry could not be enrolled, I at once began work upon a broader plan, a larger budget and a more equitable method of raising the same. Under the former procedure, a few concerns bore the brunt of the expense connected with the board's work.

"I am sure that the committee appointed will work out a plan which will be fair and equitable and which will enlarge upon the beginnings made by the Board of Trade. I do not feel, nor does anyone, I believe, familiar with what the board has accomplished, that it has in any sense been a failure. I have only to point to the splendid fight made against the Federal Censorship bill in Washington, the achievement of the Wilson dinner and to the fact that in the eleven states in which the legislatures met this year, out of sixty-four bills hostile to the motion picture industry introduced, only eleven became laws, to prove this assertion.

"It is a source of keen regret to me that I shall not be here to take an active part in the organization to be built. I am sailing for London on Saturday to execute a private commission of an extremely important nature, which it is a great honor to have been asked to undertake. I shall be absent until July 15. If the committee has not completed its labors at that time, my best efforts and as much time as I can give will be at its disposal."

Ask Receiver for General Film

Percival L. Waters and James B. Clark, Acting as Protective Committee of Preferred Stockholders, Bring Action in Supreme Court.

ALLLEGING gross mismanagement and a systematic dissipation of assets of the General Film Company, Percival L. Waters and James B. Clark of Pittsburgh, acting as a protective committee, have commenced an action in the Supreme Court of the County of New York against Albert E. Smith and others constituting the directors and owners of the common stock of the General Film Company. The summons and complaints were served upon the defendants Monday, June 12. The plaintiffs are represented by Cadwallader, Wickersham & Taft. An accounting and a permanent receiver are asked for.

The summons is a lengthy one—it contains over 30,000 words—and recites the history of the Motion Picture Patents Company and the General Film Company and includes the license agreement under which those concerns were operated. As a resume of the history of the licensed motion picture companies for the past half dozen years the document makes most interesting reading.

After going into these particulars the plaintiffs demand judgment in the following terms:

1. That the loss sustained by the defendant General Film Company by reason of the wrongful acts of the other defendants here, as hereinbefore more particularly alleged, be ascertained and determined.

2. That the defendants other than said General Film Company be directed to pay said sums severally to said General Film Company, and that judgment be entered against them in favor of said General Film Company for the sums so ascertained.

3. That an accounting be had against each of the defendants other than said General Film Company respecting said payments and credits and every other matter that may be necessary to be so determined.

4. That it be decreed that the improper and illegal credits hereinabove referred to are not lawful liabilities of the said General Film Company and that the same be canceled upon the books of said company, and that all further payments of said amounts as so credited be enjoined.

5. That a permanent receiver of the property and assets of said defendant General Film Company be appointed, with all the rights, powers, duties and liabilities of permanent receivers in such cases, and that the officers and directors of said defendant General Film Company be enjoined and restrained from transferring, disposing of and interfering in any way with said property and assets, and from doing any acts which may interfere in any way with said receiver.

6. And that the plaintiffs may have such other and further relief in the premises as may be just, besides costs.

After enumerating various resolutions of the board of directors bearing on larger financial transactions the complaint sets forth:

"That pursuant to said resolutions said defendants not only have caused said sum of $2,396,397.50 to be paid in cash, but have also caused large credits to be entered upon the books of said defendant General Film Company in favor of the defendants, Biograph Company, Kalem Company (Inc.), Pathe Freres, Lubin Manufacturing Company, Melies Manufacturing Company, Vitagraph Company of America, Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, Selig Polyscope Company, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and Kleine, and said George Melies, on the following dates and in the following amounts respectively:

During the calendar year 1910.....	$134,863.11
During the calendar year 1911.....	1,055,579.98
During the calendar year 1912.....	1,678,268.23
During the calendar year 1913.....	510,552.95
During the calendar year 1914.....	1,133,437.56
During the calendar year 1915.....	123,860.54

$4,636,562.37

as alleged net profits so payable under said contracts for the years 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, and accrued interest thereon, of which aggregate sum of $4,636,562.37 said sum of $2,396,397.50 so paid in cash formed a part."

The complaint sets forth the years and the amounts in which the latter sum was to be disbursed, "leaving an alleged balance on the books of said defendant General Film Company to the credit of the aforesaid defendants of $2,240,164.87," it adds.

The plaintiffs aver that this "credit balance is an erroneous, improper, wrongful and illegal credit and that the said defendants and none of them are entitled to any part of the above-mentioned credit balance standing in their favor upon the books of said defendant General Film Company amounting to $2,240,164.87."

The complaint further alleges that the sum of $2,396,397.50 already paid in cash to the defendants "or a large part thereof is due and owing from the said defendants to said defendant General Film Company, together with interest on the said sum from the dates of the various improper payments."

As among the "negligent and wrongful acts" the complaint charges that the defendants, to the "great loss and injury of said General Film Company and its preferred stockholders, decided upon a policy disastrous to said company but favorable to the competitors of said company, many of whom were then accustomed to distribute said 'feature' motion pictures—to wit, the elimination of all 'feature' motion pictures from the distributing programs of said General Film Company, and in pursuance of said policy did so eliminate such 'feature' motion pictures."

Among the specifications in regard to the foregoing are the institution by George Kleine of a feature service, the organization of the V-L-S-E, Inc., and the discontinuance of releases through the General Film Service of the Kleine and Edison subjects. It is charged that this action constituted a "gross discrimination" against the General Film Company in violation of Paragraph 6 of a contract dated April 21, 1910.

The complaint is dated June 6, was sworn to on June 10 and served on June 12. The defendants are given twenty days in which to make answer to the complaint.

Dixon Denies Race Prejudice

Says German Strain in His Own Blood and Sense of Fairness Exempt "Fall of a Nation" from Charge.

BEFORE going to Los Angeles this week to start "The Fall of a Nation" there, Thomas Dixon, its producer said: "In view of the criticisms of certain scenes I wish to reiterate the statement that 'The Fall of a Nation' is not directed against any nationality, class or racial element in this country. My friend S. Stanwood Menken is quite mistaken in saying 'Your picture is manifestly anti-German.' Against Mr. Menken's expression I would put the opinions of the local German press which are uniformly as favorable to my play as the great majority of the English language papers. The entire point of the play is that the nationalities here, whether British, Irish, Teutonic, French, Italian or Eastern European, should be fused into an united Americanism.

"It is alleged that the large number of German faces in the hosts of the invading army and in the cast in The Fall of a Nation convicts the author of cherishing anti-German prejudices. On the contrary, I chose these men because they were out of work and hungry. Five hundred Germans, many of them socialists, applied to me for work in the battle scenes of the picture, and I was glad to give it to them. They represented fairly well the varying types of the imperial confederation of Northern Europe which I imagined to be attacking America. My great-grandfather, a Prussian, Colonel Frederick Hambricht, fought in the Revolutionary War at King's Mountain. The German strain in my blood, as well as my inherent sense of fairness to all the components of Americanism, would prevent me from singling out the Teutons for attack. My quarrel is with imperialism whether pro-Ally or pro-German. And my desire is to uplift the ideal of true American democracy, which is in danger of being lost sight of by the partisans of the overseas quarrels."

RALPH HERZ MARRIES.

Ralph Herz, the Metro star, who will make his debut in motion pictures on the Metro program in "The Purple Lady," which has just been completed, has been quietly married to Miss Frances M. Logan, a society favorite in Washington, D. C., and the daughter of the late Major William Richard Logan. The wedding, which grew out of a romance that had its beginning last winter, was solemnized in the presence of a few friends at the Shoreham Hotel, Washington. Mr. Herz and his bride are spending their honeymoon in Atlantic City and New York City.

Richardson in Nutmeg State

Projection Department Man Meets Exhibitors and Operators in Waterbury and New Haven.

Waterbury.

WHATEVER else may be said for or against the members of Local 304 at least it must be conceded that they know how to "get busy" and produce results on short notice, as I learned by my greeting here. Local 304 has twenty-two members. It is officered by live, progressive men, and that, let me tell you, is more than half of the fight in any labor organization. The Waterbury local has secured a remarkably good scale, going as high as $30 a week, the lowest being $20. This is decidedly above the average here in the East, and it follows that it is up to the Waterbury boys to deliver the goods on the screen. The projection department has long since taken the stand that in order to do justice to the photoplay it is absolutely necessary to have well paid men in the operating room, because you can't get real ability and brains for nothing; it has also taken the stand that the men who receive good salaries must either produce the goods in return or get out and let in somebody who will. I am a great believer in fair play, and managers who pay good salaries are entitled to good results on the screen, always assuming that they will provide the equipment necessary to enable the operator to apply the knowledge he is expected to possess. It must not be presumed, however, that the best operator in the world can put on high class projection with a No. 4 Power or an Edison Exhibition model machine, because it can't be did. There "ain't no such animal." On the other hand, given the best equipment in the world the incompetent operator can not put on real high class projection, and put it on at a reasonable cost, all of which is not to be taken as in any way reflecting upon the members of 304. It is an unfortunate fact, however, that some (not all) of the Waterbury managers are asking their operators to "make bricks without straw," in other words asking them to project high-class pictures with their equipment in sad need of repair. Also, I am told that some of the Waterbury managers require the projection of five reels in forty-five minutes, or, in other words, nine minutes to the reel, which, if true, is nothing short of outrageous.

Some of the men it was my very genuine pleasure to meet during the afternoon were J. Corrigan and Peter Murphy, respectively president and secretary of Local Union 304; Jean Belasco, manager Poli's Strand theater; Walter Griffith, manager Poli's theater; J. H. Nichols, manager of the Seenic; Frank Frauer, manager of the Star, and Charles E. Gradwell, editor of the Sunday Mail.

In sizing up the whole thing I find Waterbury seems to be distinctly above the average, both from the operating and managerial point of view. Take, for instance, such men as Mr. Nichols, Mr. Belasco and Mr. Frauer. They represent the future of the moving picture business simply, wholly and entirely because they are willing to learn—are progressive and not hide-bound. Managers who represent the other extreme are those who will not listen to argument, who have no real knowledge of the height, depth and breadth of the motion picture business, or the business of exhibiting, or the business of projecting pictures and who absolutely refuse to accept knowledge from anyone. I am told that Waterbury has one or two examples of this kind of manager, and if so they constitute a brake or a drag on the industry in that city, the one consolation being that in due course of time they will eliminate themselves.

At 11:30 practically all the managers and operators in and about Waterbury gathered at Poli's theater on East Main street and listened attentively to yours truly for one and a half hours, after which a buffet luncheon was served on the stage.

The general consensus of opinion was that, considering the difficulties due to non-delivery of a notifying letter, the affair was decidedly successful and all expressed themselves as well pleased.

New Haven.

The New Haven local is one of the really live wires. It contains such men as John Griffiths of Ansonia, and Charles Hyde, who justly style themselves projection engineers. A goodly percentage of the members are progressive and study both the practical and technical end of their business. The union demands of its members that they deliver the goods on the screen, so far as is possible under the conditions the individual works under—for not all New Haven managers. I am sorry to say, supply up-to-date equipment. In fact I saw one Power's Six still grinding away, and its little lamp-house and inefficient (by comparison) little lamp looked rather queer beside the large lamp-house and lamp of modern projectors. The retention of such equipment is a very poor business policy. It does not pay you, Mr. Manager, from any possible point of view.

The Simplex and Power's machines are both very much in evidence in New Haven, but H. B. Coles, president of the Coles Moving Picture Machine Corporation, was in the city preparing to place the new Coles machine on the New Haven map.

During the evening, under the guidance of Brother W. H. Upton, I was gasoline buggyed out to the Dixwell theater, Dixwell avenue, of which W. H. Whitman and W. H. Wood are proprietors and managers. I found Brother Nick Vallan projecting a really splendid sixteen-foot picture, using two Simplex machines and a Hallberg motor generator set. The latter had been through a fire and was not working very well. Vallano was using 50 amperes with a 60-volt arc. The picture was on a calcimined screen bordered with black and surrounded by a shadow box. The projection left but little to be desired. The picture was not too large, yet amply large enough, and stood out, clean-cut and beautiful. Messrs. Whitman and Woods are progressive managers and Operator Vallano is delivering the goods on their screens.

New Haven Moving Picture Local 273, I. A. T. S. E.

At the Winchester theater—F. W. Hart, manager; John Richardson, operator—was another excellent picture. The equipment is two Simplex projectors and a Wotton Rexolux. Brother Richardson has a most excellent operating room. The front wall is black and the spot shaded with amber glass. The observation ports are of ample size and the ventilation excellent. All the operating rooms I saw had incandescent lights burning, which is bad.

Printed invitations brought out practically every operator, theater manager and exchange man in New Haven, as well as several from other towns, to a reception to the World man. It certainly did credit to the local.

Douglass Fairbanks in New York

New Star of the Screen Will Remain in the East for Three Months—Through with the Sage, He Says.

By George Blaisdell.

JUST spent a quarter of an hour with Douglass Fairbanks. You know who I mean, that good bad man Reggie. Take my word for it, he is every inch all that and any one who has seen the player on the screen knows that he looks like a man—a regular fellow, one who "belongs," and in any company. The stage player who became a famous screen actor on one production — "The Lamb" — walked into his hotel on the afternoon of the day he arrived in New York. The smile with which he greeted an awaiting friend made unnecessary the identifying remark of the hotel clerk to the effect that "Here he is now." To one who had within a week seen "Reggie" it was the last word in naturalness. It was ten minutes before the World man saw fit to introduce himself — there was a bunch around the actor. Norma Talmadge, passing through with her mother, greeted her fellow-player. Master Fairbanks, as husky as his dad, stopped long enough to be introduced to the group. Mr. Fairbanks in talking to his friends was seated on a big circular table, nonchalant, indifferent to the easy chairs a few feet away. It was interesting to sit back and observe the manner of man this Fairbanks is when not before the camera.

The player's visit to New York meant his first sight of Broadway in six months. While in Los Angeles he has worked in seven pictures, six of which have been released. Come to think of it, that means thirty-five reels in twenty-six weeks—a record which bears no earmarks of "temperamental stuff." And there's an eighth picture well under way. The man, in fact, is without frills. His bearing is just what an admirer of his work and his personality pictures it — wholesome, frank, hearty. His conversation sparkles—the words flow fast and free, and so do the chuckles as he talks of his experiences the past half year. Asked as to the possibility of his return to the stage, both hands go up. "I've ducked the stage forever," he replies emphatically. "And I am going to have a ranch," he adds.

Mr. Fairbanks' last subject is "In the Carquinez Woods," one of Bret Harte's stories. The player seems to think it has "got it on" "Reggie." He didn't say just that, but he expressed the opinion that it ought to be a rattling good picture. The exteriors were photographed in the California County, up among the California big trees. The forest rangers to the number of ten helped out the seventy members of the company by starting a fire and burning over several hundred square yards for the benefit of the picture.

We were speaking of "Reggie Mixes In," or the writer brought the subject into the conversation. The latter had told of what happened in the Rialto on the previous Friday night. In the showing of the fight in the saloon in which the two men swing over a table, one powerfully big man in the balcony yelled "Oh!" It upset the house, already on edge.

"Yes," said Mr. Fairbanks "my opponent accidentally got hurt in that muss, too." The player spoke of strangle holds and half nelsons: something went wrong and the picture was held up for half an hour while the injured man was fixed up. The "gangster" who broke the fall of Reggie from the roof, too, was unfortunate in the result of the fight that ensued.

"We had some professional 'pugs' in the making of that picture," said Mr. Fairbanks. "Griffith was opposed to their employment through fear of my getting hurt, but I told him I would take chances. I told the boys in the beginning it was going to be real fighting, nothing easy about it at all. Nor was there. I got a bit gouged up myself. I've been told there were one or two fellows really looking for me since, too, but I guess that's not so.

"Do you know in the picture business money comes in from all directions. I've collected $1,800 in accident insurance since I went to the Coast. But it's great, though. I've been working outdoors for four months. I can hardly walk in ordinary shoes, these low-heeled affairs. I feel as if I was going to fall backward. I was just getting used to the big, high-heeled sort. No more for me the old days in New York—get up late in the morning, a stroll around to the Lambs, a ride in the park, a nap in the afternoon, then the theater and supper afterward. Now I am called at 5 o'clock, see the doctor and get bandaged up; then out on location. If by luck we escape the doctor and ambulance it is dinner between 5 and 6 and then to bed."

"Where did you learn to ride a horse?" was the somewhat personal question shot at the player. The writer was thinking of the remarkable horsemanship in "The Good Bad Man," where Mr. Fairbanks seemed to out-cowboy the cowboys. "Why, I used to play polo, but I had never ridden a western horse," was the reply. "You know when I first went out the cowboys said they would get me a nice easy horse. I told them I wanted nothing of the kind. I wanted a regular horse. They got me one. In this last picture they furnished me another regular one, too. I think I rode everywhere on that animal but on his back. For recreation I rode a bucking broncho. I got what I was looking for. I also tried roping a steer in this last picture. For five months I have been rehearsing with a rope—yes, the fancy stuff. I am going to try it on New York tonight at the Allied Bazaar."

A small copper—or was it gold?—button in the lapel of the player's coat caught the eye of the writer. The well-known expansive smile was in evidence.

"You know Catalina?" he said. "Yes? Well, that button means a twenty-eight-pound yellowtail. It took me an hour and ten minutes to get him in. And all the while Bill Farnum was smoking a big black pipe that nearly made me sick—that is, when the fish didn't. I have scrapped with Indians and Mexicans among others, and it hurt to feel I was being licked by a fish."

"Since seeing your last two pictures I have been thinking what unusual possibilities there would lie in a ten-reel western picture with you and Edna. But I don't know," said the writer. "I don't mean playing against each other, but as pals; a regular man's story, leaving the women out of it, perhaps, or largely so. You've met Hart?"

"Have I?" And Fairbanks was serious. "He's one of my best friends. The boys gave me a dinner at Los Angeles just before my departure. Bill Hart sat on my right. Alan Dwan in his speech said he would like Bill Hart and Dug Fairbanks to do a picture together. Hart remarked that he was agreed. I told them I was going into big training in New York for three months, but under those circumstances I would have to confine my diet to beef, bullets and blood."

We talked of men we admire on the screen and how sometimes the regard for the personally unknown is confirmed when meeting them in the flesh. "Take it from me," said the actor, "anybody on the screen that you love has got to be a pretty fine man to register. If you like Bill Farnum and Bill Hart it is because down deep, basically, they are fine men. It is not what they assume, it is what they are. If on the screen you dislike a man, it is because there is in his composition something that does not ring true, he's not a real man." At the dinner of which I have spoken every one of the hundred men was in fine jovial spirit when Hart began his speech. His remarks took a serious turn—you know that quiet, even tempered way of his. In a minute and a half he had us all in tears. These are the kind of men that make friends off the screen as well as on it."

Mr. Fairbanks' first work in New York will be the completion of a subject started in the West, a story combining the atmosphere of the Atlantic with the Pacific. Following his three months' stay here he said there might be a trip to South America, which was "on the lap of the gods." The player paid compliments to Mr. Dwan, his present director, and to John Emerson, a former director. Both are in New York, Mr. Emerson having arrived a few days ago.

UNITY SELLS TERRITORY TO VARIETY.

Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, announces he has just consummated a deal whereby the states' rights to the entire state of New York and northern New Jersey have been acquired by Louis Rosenbluh, president of the Variety Films Corporation, for the two Unity features, "My Country First" and "The Pursuing Vengeance."

Vitagraph Taking on New Players

Peggy Hyland and Virginia Hammond to Be Featured in Larger Company's Forces.

A Greater Vitagraph Company of America is the slogan recently adopted by the Vitagraph Company whose representative heads, Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, are bounding every energy, backed by an experience dating from the inception of motion picture production in this country, to accomplish this result. In the immediate future a number of new faces will be seen on the screen, fathered by this famous company, while new personalities and different methods of expression will add a distinctive attractiveness to the already popular picture stories enacted by the "old guard" of the Vitagraph Stock Company.

Heading the list of new players appears E. H. Sothern, whose fame on the legitimate stage dates from his first introduction to an audience at the Park theater, New York, September 8th, 1879, up to a few weeks ago when he retired from the stage for good.

Perhaps the next new player of importance to be signed by the Vitagraph is Peggy Hyland, who, although new to American audiences, is popular in England. In pictures Miss Hyland has played in "The Love of an Actress," "John Hallifax, Gentleman," "Infelice," and "Caste." Her first work under the Vitagraph banner will be as Mr. Sothern's leading lady.

Alice Joyce, a well known and popular player who also has won fame both on the legitimate stage and in pictures, is another recent and valuable addition to the Vitagraph roster. She is now working in "The Battle Cry of War."

Barney Bernard, representative of the better class of comedians who impersonates Jewish characters, is also a new Vitagraph player, who bids fair to become as popular in pictures as his Abe Potash was in "Potash and Perlmutter," on the legitimate stage. Mr. Bernard's initial work as a photoplay star will be in a character similar to Potash in which the humor and pathos of the Jewish race is exemplified.

Virginia Hammond, who has been leading woman for Sir Henry Irving, E. H. Sothern, William Courtenay, under the Frohman management and many other notable players is the latest legitimate stage star to join the Vitagraph forces. Miss Hammond's stage experience has embraced almost every kind and variety of work from comedy to tragedy. Her first appearance as a Vitagraph player will be in a feature written especially for her by Cecile B. Pettersen. Thomas Mill, Miss Hammond's director, has just been appointed to the position he now holds, having been raised from the ranks of stock player, where his work received more than usual attention.

NEW COMPANY FOR FLORENCE LAWRENCE.

For some time rumors have been afloat with regard to a new moving picture company to be headed by Florence Lawrence. These rumors have now taken such definite shape it is said, that the contracts governing the movements of the company have been drawn up and await only the signatures of those concerned. Some delay on the preliminaries has been caused through the temporary illness of one of the prominent members of the organization. A large capitalization has been placed behind Miss Lawrence in her new venture, and the services of one of the finest directors in the country is to be procured. The best of vehicles will also be placed at her disposal.

NEW SCENARIO EDITOR FOR UNIVERSAL.

Eugene B. Lewis, who recently came to the Pacific Coast from New York to write feature scenarios, has been made head of the scenario department of the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company by General Manager Davis. Mr. Lewis is an old time newspaper man. Before becoming associated with the Big U organization he was connected with the Biograph Company.

"INDIANA" SUBJECT PLEASES STATE OFFICIALS.

The preliminary presentation of "Indiana," the historic motion picture filmed by the Selig Company to commemorate the history of Indiana as a state, was given in Indianapolis State House on Wednesday evening, June 7. A select audience was present, including the Indiana State Historical Commission, the Governor of Indiana, members of his staff, and other state officials. All expressed their great satisfaction over the worth of the motion picture. "Indiana" will be shown in all parts of the Hoosier State and elsewhere.

Abrams Head of Paramount

New England Exchange Man Elected Head of Big Distributing Group—James Steele of Pittsburgh is Secretary and Treasurer.

THE first change in the administration of Paramount Pictures Corporation since its organization two years ago was brought about on the afternoon of June 13, at the annual meeting of the company. Following a meeting of the stockholders at which were elected a new board of directors, Hiram Abrams of the Famous Players Film Company of New England, was elected president. William Hiram Abrams.

L. Sherry of New York was elected vice president and James Steele of Pittsburgh secretary and treasurer. These, with William W. Hodgkinson, the former president, and Raymond Pawley, constitute the new board of directors.

Mr. Abrams who is now brought so prominently into the film world, has been connected with film exchanges for six or seven years. His entrance into the field was as manager of the W. E. Greene exchange of Portland, Me., he later becoming a part owner. Mr. Abrams and Mr. Greene three years ago organized the Famous Players Film Company of New England, of which the former is president and the latter treasurer. A year later on the formation of the Paramount company the concern took over the New England territory on that program. Mr. Abrams has been a director of Paramount from the beginning. The new president of Paramount will make his home in New York.

Immediately after his election Mr. Abrams notified Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company; Jesse L. Lasky and Samuel Goldfish, president and treasurer respectively of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and the heads of the Pallas and Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company of the change of administration. The executives of these companies, which release their productions through Paramount, promised their co-operation in making the new administration attractive to the exhibitors and the photoplay public.

Asked for a statement Mr. Abrams said:

"The constantly growing interest in the motion picture throughout the country permits us to anticipate a most active era for the Paramount Pictures Corporation in the future. The heads of the various producing companies releasing through Paramount have assured me that they will make every effort to surpass their artistic standards. On the roster of these companies are the most noted stars of the stage and screen, including Mary Pickford, Geraldine Farrar, Marguerite Clark, Marie Doro, Pauline Frederick, Blanche Sweet and many others.

"I was very gratified to receive these offers of continued co-operation from the producers. It is obvious their united support is essential to Paramount's success. Their statements to me today set at rest all rumors of the possibilities of their affiliation with any other film interests."

When Mr. Zukor was asked if he had anything to say in regard to the new administration in Paramount, he replied that Mr. Abrams was right when he said the producers would give every support to the newly elected officers.

Mr. Hodgkinson, when a World reporter called at his office, sent out word that there was nothing special to say, that the action indicated no change in ownership or policy so far as he knew. He declared there had been no disagreements and that everything had been harmonious. He would retain his interests in his western exchanges, he said, which distribute the Paramount program.

Mason Opens New York Office

Australasian Specialist Has Completed Picture of New York Which He Will Exploit.

C. POST MASON, known throughout England and Australasia as a manager of international tours, being formerly associated with Hugh D. McIntosh, Australasian Films, and the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company, has opened a New York office in the Candler Building, New York City, from which he will operate his Australasian tours.

Mr. Mason has just completed a three-reel feature, the American rights of which will be sold on the state right basis, entitled "The Wonder City of the World—Greater New York—By Day and By Night," which shows places of interest, including over a billion dollars' worth of world-famous buildings, theaters, bridges, hotels, etc.; depicting in reality slum and tenement life; Chinatown, Little Italy, the Bowery, Coney Island, the Great White Way by day and by night; marvellous night scenes of the Woolworth and Singer buildings illuminated.

The Australasian rights are not for sale, being retained by Mr. Mason for the Post Mason Travelogues, with which he starts on a world's tour in the near future. The production has been arranged to be presented in its entirety or as a series. Mr. Mason is open to arrange and finance Australasian tours for big features or to buy the Australasian rights of them.

Two features which Mr. Mason brought from Australia, "The Martyrdom of Edith Cavell" and the Official Australian Navy pictures, showing the sinking of the Emden at Cocos Island, will also be released shortly on the state right basis. The Canadian and English rights of these two productions have been secured by the Famous Players Film Service, Toronto, Canada.

Berst Distributes Bonuses

Seventy-two Employees Receive Checks from Pathe Executive Awarded Under Profit-Sharing Plan.

PLAYING Santa Claus in June is the unusual role which has fallen to J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Berst celebrated the first day of the month of roses by signing seventy-two bonus checks drawn to the order of seventy-two hustlers in the Pathe branch offices who earned this money over and above their salaries. These checks are the first to be sent out under Mr. Berst's new profit-sharing plan which has been responsible not only for greatly increased business for Pathe but also greatly increased earnings for many of the sales force. Members of the staffs of thirty offices will receive these checks which range from amounts representing "vacation money" to large sums.

C. R. Seelye, the Pathe business manager, who is now making an inspection tour among the various Pathe offices, reports that Mr. Berst's bonus system has everyone digging.

ACTON DAVIES DIES.

Acton Davies, for many years dramatic critic of the Evening Sun, and associated with the Edison Company during the years 1914-15, died in the Lakeview Hospital, Chicago, on June 12. He had been stricken about a week previously with rheumatism of the heart. Soon after resigning his place on the Sun, Mr. Davies became actively interested in scenario writing, his first important work being a series of newspaper stories produced by the Edison Company with Mary Fuller as the star. Later Mr. Davies was engaged by Edison to act in an advisory capacity in the selection of scenarios.

Owen Moore With Famous Players

Well-Known Player Is Re-engaged as Co-star with Hazel Dawn in Adaptation of Big Stage Success.

OWEN MOORE, one of the best known players on the screen, has been re-engaged by the Famous Players Film Company, under a long term contract, and will shortly be co-starred with Hazel Dawn in an adaptation of a great stage success on the Paramount Program, the title of which, when announced, will undoubtedly create great interest among the trade and public. Mr. Moore has been a popular figure on the screen ever since the pioneer days of the motion picture and has been identified with several notable productions. He has just completed a most successful engagement with the Triangle Film Corporation.

In his previous connection with the Famous Players Mr. Moore appeared in support of Mary Pickford, and played opposite her in the first photoplay in which she was starred by that company, "Caprice," as well as in several subsequent successful pictures. Their joint appearance under the Famous Players' banner marked the reunion of Miss Pickford and Mr. Moore since the old Imp and Biograph days, when they first appeared together. Mr. Moore has won his spurs chiefly by his delightful impersonation of whimsical, romantic young lovers, but in his forthcoming appearance with Miss Dawn he will play one of the most forceful characters which has been seen on the New York stage within the last few years. It is the first time Miss Dawn and Mr. Moore have been associated on the screen.

Miss McCoy to do Three-Reelers

Important Announcement That Already Four Manuscripts Have Been Accepted as Starring Vehicles for Her—First Release in July.

THE pronounced success scored by Gertrude McCoy in the Gaumont feature, "The Isle of Love," has influenced General Manager F. G. Bradford to give exhibitors of shorter photoplays an opportunity to feature Miss McCoy in their houses. Hence Miss McCoy will be seen in a number of three-reel Mutual pictures. Four manuscripts have already been prepared for her. The first picture will be Robert Burns' story of New York life, "Gates of Divorce." It will be released July 20.

No expense is being spared in giving Miss McCoy stories which have been fitted to her talent. Robert Burns has gone over his story, "Gates of Divorce," to fit it to her personality. John B. Clymer will provide the following photoplay, "The Wonderful Desire," to be released August 3. Rennold Wolf is the author of the picture starring Miss McCoy August 17. A strong company has been assembled from the Gaumont players to support her in these photoplays.

"THE JOCKEY OF DEATH" READY.

"The Jockey of Death," big "thriller," with its action and atmosphere smacking of the circus, is about ready for the market after a number of weeks of careful editing intended to make it a sure-fire success for state rights buyers throughout the country who are looking for exciting screen stories to attract and keep the interest of their summer audiences.

The picture is being handled by Signet Films, a company recently organized by J. L. Kempner and having offices in the Candler Building, New York City. Mr. Kempner and his associates express the opinion that they have "something different" in the picture line and expect "The Jockey" to achieve great popularity.

CHICAGO CONVENTION AND EXPOSITION.
Wide Interest Is Shown Throughout the Country in the Big Event—Various Committees Are Working Earnestly in Preparation.

At a meeting of the Convention and Exposition Committee of the Sixth Annual National Convention and Exposition, held in Room 1413, Masonic Temple, on Thursday, June 8, it was decided that the object of the Beauty Contest will be the selection of the best looking woman and man in action before the camera. The contest will be open to aspirants from all sections of the country, though the larger number naturally will be confined to Chicago. A committee of technical experts selected from men in the producing business will be the judges.

The selection of a hotel for convention purposes has not yet been decided, but the announcement will be made next week. It will be either the Hotel La Salle or the Hotel Sherman.

The contract for badges was awarded to Street & Wright of Chicago.

The contract for posters will be let on Friday, June 9.

The mail arriving at headquarters in the Masonic Temple is growing in bulk every day. The letters are from manufacturers and supply houses in all parts of the country, with inquiries concerning space, while a great many are from exhibitors throughout the country, asking for information regarding the amusements, entertainments, etc., that will be offered during convention week.

Following is a list of film manufacturers and machine manufacturers and supply houses, who have already contracted for space at the Coliseum:

General Film, Pathe Exchange, Inc., Universal, Mutual, Metro, World Film, International, Selig, Essanay, Vitagraph, Ivan, American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, Emerald Motion Picture Corporation, Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Bluebird, Melies, Monarch Film Producing Company, Nicholas Power Company, Midwest Theater Supply Company, Chicago; J. P. Seeburg Piano Company, Chicago; Bartola Musical Instrument Company, Chicago; National Cash Register Company, Dayton; E. E. Fulton Company, Chicago; National Carbon Company, Cleveland; Mirror Screen Company, Shelbyville, Ind.; Exhibitors' Supply Company, Chicago; Sosman & Landis, Chicago; Bell & Howell, Chicago; American Seating Company, Chicago; American Photo-Player Company, Chicago; Amusement Supply Company, Chicago; Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, and Mills Novelty Company, Chicago.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE CONVENTION.

Big Preparations Under Way, and June 26, 27 and 28 Promise to Be Memorable in Film History of Keystone State.

THE State Convention of Pennsylvania Motion Picture Exhibitors will be held on June 26, 27 and 28 at the Moose Temple, 628-634 Pennsylvania avenue, Pittsburgh. Committees have been busy for the last month or two in preparing a first-class event. An invitation has gone out to every exhibitor in the Keystone State, and a very full attendance is looked for, as the responses from every section have been most gratifying. Not only Pennsylvania but West Virginia will be represented at the Pittsburgh convention. While the convention will, of course, be one of business mainly, the social features have by no means been neglected. The Trade Exposition, held in connection with the convention, promises to be an unqualified success.

Every exhibitor will receive a hearty welcome, and Pittsburgh will take care of him and his wife to his entire satisfaction. A special Ladies' Committee will help the wives of the exhibitors see and enjoy Pittsburgh on its social and entertaining side.

At this writing, A. J. Barthell, president of the Pittsburgh local, and James Delves, state secretary of the Pennsylvania league, are in this city making final arrangements, being a special committee appointed for that purpose. Mr. Barthell and Mr. Delves have been hard at work securing the presence of distinguished film stars of both sexes for the state convention and have met with a good measure of success after much hard work.

Matters of supreme importance will come up for discussion during the business sessions of the convention. The question of censorship will not be the least important. Ways and means will be considered to secure a repeal of the obnoxious Breitingher law. The convention will invite the producers to co-operate in the campaign against censorship. For this reason alone there ought to be an impressive attendance at the convention. Another topic to be discussed will be the question of exhibitors' grievances. Mr. Delves points to the success of the convention at Albany and says that Pennsylvania ought not to lag behind New York in this respect. There will be the fullest and freest discussion, a fact which will be readily believed, for Pennsylvania has stood for free discussion at every state and national convention. The all-important question of projection will likewise be one of the big topics of the convention, and on June 28 Frank H. Richardson, the projection expert of the Moving Picture World, will deliver a lecture on this subject.

The convention promises to eclipse the historic gathering at Harrisburg. Delegations of big size are expected from eastern Pennsylvania. Western Pennsylvania will be represented at the convention as never before. The watchwords will be "Harmony and Co-operation" and "All for One and One for All."

President Ben H. Zerr of Reading is particularly anxious to have a creditable showing of eastern exhibitors at the convention. Realizing the many live-wires in the western part of the state Mr. Zerr is endeavoring to have the eastern part show up equally as well.

Among the locals to be represented at the convention will include Philadelphia, Reading, Wilkes-Barre, York, Harrisburg and the new local in the coal regions. President Zerr urges every exhibitor in the state, whether a member of the league or not, to attend this convention.

INDIANAPOLIS HOLDS ANNUAL MEETING.

Ike Beitman Is the New President—Organization of Screen Club Under Discussion.

THE Indianapolis Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held its annual meeting and elected its officers for the ensuing year. Ike Beitman, owner of the Savoy, Empress, Victoria and part owner of the Tacoma, was chosen president, succeeding Joseph Gavin. Roy Bair succeeds himself as vice president. Harry Cook, manager of a string of houses owned by Frank Rembusch, is the new treasurer, and A. C. Zaring, who long has been a leader in moving picture doings in Indianapolis, succeeds himself as treasurer. Mr. Zaring is the guiding hand in the office of the organization.

The Indianapolis league is one of the liveliest in the country, maintaining a fine suite of offices in a downtown building where the exhibitors may go and come as they please, talk over business affairs, and even enjoy themselves in a social way. The association was organized several years ago, when the motion picture field broadened out in Indianapolis, and it has proved a big help in the development of the business in the city. It has been one of the things which has contributed to the record Indianapolis holds—that of being the biggest motion picture theater city in the world when considered from the standpoint of population.

There was some talk at the last annual meeting of forming a screen club here, but no definite action was taken. There were some members of the league who favored the reorganization of the Exhibitors' League to make it into a screen club to which the managers and owners of film exchanges, their employees, film reporters and others would be eligible to membership. This plan did not meet with general approval, however. It was pointed out that the league was originally designed to become a help to exhibitors, and that under the present form of organization it had been successful in accomplishing that. It was feared by the opponents of the plan that the taking in of other branches of the film industry would tend to disrupt the organization perfected by the exhibitors, and this was a thing not desired.

It is possible, however, a screen club will be organized in Indianapolis. There is a need for some organization to bring the exhibitors and film exchange men into closer touch with each other and a screen club would fill the bill.

"I believe a screen club would be all right in Indianapolis if it was built around the social idea," said Mr. Beitman, the new president of the exhibitors' league. "I personally do not favor the other idea. While no definite action has been taken relative to forming a screen club it would not be surprising if meetings of the organization soon resulted in the forming of such a club."

BROXN EXHIBITORS MEET.

Lee A. Ochs Speaks on Proposed Standee Ordinance—Six New Members.

THE Cinema Exhibitors' Association of Bronx County held a well attended and highly enjoyable meeting at its headquarters, 1243 Southern Boulevard, on the night of Thursday, June 8. John Wittman was in the chair, while James J. Haggerty acted as secretary. The meeting was addressed by Senator J. J. Dunnigan and Alderman H. Robitzek. The subjects discussed were the standee law, the increased license fee (bill now before the Board of Aldermen) and the admission of minors. State President Ochs was present and spoke of the prospects of getting the Board of Aldermen to enact into an ordinance the principle of Judge Gaylor's standee rule. He reported progress and said that great efforts were now being made by the Manhattan organization to get such an ordinance through the Board of Aldermen. W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World made a short address urging the exhibitors of Bronx County to continue their splendid efforts to advance the cause of organization and promising them the support of the Moving Picture World. The following new members were received into the organization: John Shigler, Webster theater; Joseph Sobin, Billiken theater; John Mainaro, Tremont Casino; L. Ostend, Elkwood theater; J. Lowrie, Model theater; H. Rotenberg, Equatorial theater, and Richard Brady, associate member. Recruiting has been uncommonly good, owing to the tireless efforts of Organizer Henry Cole. At the conclusion of the meeting refreshments were served and heartily enjoyed by the big crowd of exhibitors.

MANHATTAN EXHIBITORS CHOOSE DELEGATES. Name Men Who Will Represent Local at Chicago—Beefsteak Dinner for Lee A. Ochs.

AT a meeting held by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Local No. 1, at their offices at 218 West 42nd street, on Monday evening, June 5, arrangements were made to send a big delegation to Chicago, and the following were elected as delegates:

Lee A. Ochs, Samuel H. Trigger, Louis F. Blumenthal, Benjamin Lyons, Max Oestreicher, J. N. Hartstall, William Hilkemeier, J. J. Wittman, Samuel Rothapel, Morris Needle, Charles Steiner, Adolph Weiss, Charles Haring, Otto Lederer, Gus Koenigswald, Ed. Gorman, Samuel Rhonheimer, Henry Haring, Joseph Klein, Albert Harstn, Frank Peters, Max Tischer, William Bigall, A. B. Samuelson, Herman Mayer, Mr. Bock, Louis Rosenthal, Charles Fisher, David Picker, C. R. Martineau, Philip Menschel, Al Jutkowitz and Messrs. Glynn & Ward. Arrangements have been made to engage a special train on the New York Central.

The committee reported final arrangements regarding the beefsteak dinner to be given to Lee A. Ochs on June 28, at Reisenweber's, Brighton Beach, and judging from all appearances and the great demand for tickets the affair will be one grand success. For tickets, apply to J. N. Hartstall, 218 West 42nd street.

A Legislative Committee has been appointed to take up the matter of adverse legislation.

An elaborate luncheon was served and the meeting adjourned at 3.30 A. M.

H. C. MOONEY AMONG NATIONAL DELEGATES.

Through a regrettable error in the report of the recent meeting of Brooklyn exhibitors the name of H. Clark Mooney of the Triangle Theater of Brooklyn was omitted in the list of delegates to the National Convention. Mr. Mooney, who has always taken a most active interest in organization matters, was elected unanimously.

KANSAS CITY HAS A SCREEN CLUB.

Eighty Exhibitors and Exchange Men Organize New Film Men's Club on June 9.

ONE of the largest meetings the Kansas City moving picture men ever held took place at the Hotel Baltimore Friday, June 9. This meeting accomplished a preliminary organization of Kansas City's much-talked-of Screen Club. The dinner was held at 10.30 that evening, and was attended by nearly a hundred. This included exchange men, exhibitors, supply house representatives and members of the press.

From the enthusiasm and spirit shown it looks as if the organization will be a great success. There has been much preliminary work on the proposed club and much credit is due to E. C. Mills, Joseph H. Gilday and E. R. Pearson for the progress made through the past month. These three men have sent out a number of letters and have done much personal work, with the result that they have the satisfaction of seeing an organization of the local industry formulated and on the road to success.

The officers elected are E. R. Pearson, temporary president; Charles W. Harden, secretary, and C. S. Edwards, treasurer. A committee was appointed on permanent organization and the club will meet again in two weeks.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of June 11 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Marguerite Clark at the Strand

Marguerite Clark was the screen star at the Strand theater for the week beginning June 11, in "Silks and Satins." The story is one peculiarly fitted to Miss Clark. There are two phases of the photoplay, one dealing with today and one of the long ago. Felicite, the little girl Miss Clark plays in the picture, is in some doubt as to the advisability of the marriage arranged for her by her parents. Finding an old diary of one of her feminine ancestors she lives through her trials and in this ancient person's history finds a lesson for her guidance. The photoplay was produced by the Famous Players Film Company.

On Monday the Strand offered Charlie Chaplin in his latest comedy release, "The Fireman." Other pictures on the program were the Strand Topical Review, an educational film, and a Mutt and Jeff cartoon comedy. A violin solo by Jan Rubini and numbers by Emma Eckert and Bruce Weyman were features of the musical program.

"The Making of Maddalena" at the Broadway.

Edna Goodrich in the Morosco-Paramount feature, "The Making of Maddalena," was the star attraction at the Broadway theater. Most of the scenes are laid in Rome, the picturesque atmosphere of student life surrounding the story of a beautiful Italian model, played by Miss Goodrich. Charlie Chaplin in his latest Mutual-Chaplin two-part comedy, the Broadway Weekly, scenic studies and cartoons completed the bill.

"The Apostle of Vengeance" at the Rialto.

William S. Hart in the role of a clergyman was the star of "The Apostle of Vengeance," a photoplay with scenes laid in the back woods of Kentucky and moonshining and a family feud figuring in the plot. In spite of his ministerial role, Hart becomes thoroughly "fired" as the story unfolds and states out a warpath until the still, small voice of conscience brings him back to the fold. The Rialto also included on its program news events, travel and scientific pictures, comedy features and solos by Mme. Jeanne Maubourg, Mr. De Frere and Cristeta Goni.

Eighty-first Street Theater Program.

At the Eighty-first Street theater another series of Triangle Films were shown. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday Bessie Barriscale in "Sorrow of Love," and Fay Tincher in "The Two O'Clock Train" were featured. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Douglas Fairbanks in "Reggie Mixes In" and Harry McCoy and Peggy Pearce in "Bubbles of Trouble" were the picture numbers of the program.

D'ANNUNZIO SIGNS WITH AMBROSIO.

The Authors Film Company, Inc., American representatives of Ambrosio, announces that Gabriel D'Annunzio, Italy's greatest poet, has signed a long-term contract with Ambrosio for the filming of all his works, past and to come.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Louis J. Selznick and Aaron A. Jones Close Big Deal.

A BIG deal between the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, of this city, and Louis J. Selznick, president of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, was closed in Chicago on Friday, June 9. Contracts were signed giving to the firm mentioned a five-year franchise for all the Clara Kimball Young productions in the territory embracing Illinois, Indiana, southern Wisconsin and western Kentucky. This means that Jones, Linick & Schaefer will have exclusive control of all the Clara Kimball Young features in this territory. This is considered one of the most important film deals, from a money standpoint, yet transacted in Chicago. While the money consideration has not been named, it is rumored that it goes well up into the six figures.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer, with the Ascher Brothers and Alfred Hamburger, control the largest circuits of theaters in this city, and they are not only owners of the houses, but they operate them as well. It is expected that the first release of the Young Company will be made some time in October. This will be "The Common Law," in six reels. It is understood that the following subjects will be of the same length, and that the releases will be made at intervals of about thirty days. The name of the firm through which the Clara Kimball Young productions will be released has not yet been named, but it is understood that the Central Film Company of this city will do the booking.

"I am extremely pleased with this deal and with everyone concerned in it," said Mr. Selznick after the contract was signed. "The Clara Kimball Young pictures will strike a new gait which will be difficult for others to follow." Mr. Selznick promised that Miss Young, his star and the part owner of his business, will be present at the Sixth National Exposition and Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held in Chicago from July 10 to 18.

An Appreciation That Is Just as Warmly Appreciated.

The following letter, bearing the date of June 2, from William Koenig, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, was recently received at this office:

Dear Sir.—As secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, I desire to express to you the sincere thanks of the members of our organization for the assistance you rendered in making our exposition a success. We particularly desire to express our appreciation of the kindly attitude you assumed toward our exposition and toward the motion picture exhibitors.

Trusting that at some future time we may be able to reciprocate, we are, etc.

It is very gratifying to receive such a communication, but the policy followed is one that has been made possible only by the earnest desire of the Moving Picture World to serve moving picture exhibitors and the moving picture industry in all its branches in any and every way that will contribute to the best interests of all concerned. That has been the policy of the Moving Picture World since its first issue in 1907.

Miss Bessie Eyton Inspires Devotion During Vicksburg Visit.

Charming Bessie Eyton, in the role of Virginia Colfax, the beautiful southern belle in "The Crisis," won the hearts of a host of admirers down in Vicksburg, Miss., who witnessed the filming of the big spectacular war scenes by the Selig Company that were taken on the original spots in that city where the events took place during the Civil War.

The Vicksburg press devoted many columns to the visitors, and one newspaper man, more intrepid than his fellows, contributed the following stanzas to the Vicksburg Herald, in singing Miss Eyton's praises:

Perhaps you do not realize
Just in how deep or two,
You have really captured Vicksburg,
We are all in love with you.
Your gentle girlish modesty
Your smile—and oh, such eyes!
Your acting of "The Southern Girl"
Are things that hypnotize.
"There's dear Miss Bessie Eyton!"
One can hear the ladies say,
While they gaze in admiration
At your poses in the play.

Do linger here for just as long
As you can make your stay,
For there will be some aching hearts
When you have gone away!

Chicago Film Brevities.

E. S. Bowman, traveling representative of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, recently opened a Chicago office for that concern in the Steger Building. During a conversation with a Chicago representative of the Moving Picture World Mr. Bowman remarked that in all his travels throughout the United States in the interests of his company he could not recollect having met an exhibitor who did not read the World. Mr. Bowman states that in many instances he found exhibitors who had a complete file of the publication from the first issue, in 1907. Mr. Bowman reports fine business for his company in this territory.

The Woman's City Club of Chicago has issued invitations for a special private exhibition of their "Child Welfare Film" at the Strand theater, on Monday afternoon, June 12.

W. R. Van Courtland, formerly connected with the Lyric and the Empire theaters in Lima, Ohio.; the Grand in Columbus, and the Grand in Tiffin, is now editor of the Photoplay World. He visited Chicago last week on business.

At the recent opening of the American theater in Salt Lake City, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Swanson received felicitous telegrams from Miss Billie Burke and George Kleine. Among the Shriners in attendance at the opening was H. H. Buckwalter, of the El Jabel temple, Denver, who is George Klein's western representative for the Billie Burke serial, which was shown at the opening.

I am glad to report the triumphant re-election of Superior Court Judge William Fenimore Cooper. The judge led all the other candidates in the first, ninth, eighteenth, twentieth and thirty-third wards. He received a total vote of 89,277, and stood fourth on the list, the first candidate receiving 95,673, and the sixth, 82,912.

F. H. Clifford, operator at the Beach theater, Harper avenue and Fifty-first street, this city, renewed his subscription for the World last week. "The Ne'er Do Well" was presented at the Beach on May 25 and 26, at 25 cents admission, and showed to capacity houses. H. W. Sams is house manager of the Beach, while Max Schwartz takes care of the bookings. Manager Sams and the cashier are also subscribers and readers of the World. The cashier reads it, he says, in order to be able to answer intelligently the questions asked by patrons concerning the features run at the theater. The Billie Burke moving picture novel is also having a heavy run at this theater.

Douglas Fairbanks, of Triangle-Fine Arts, stopped over in Chicago between trains on his way from Los Angeles to New York City. Miss Pauline Bush was another stop-over visitor, also proceeding from California to the metropolis. Another short-time visitor was Miss Valentine Grant, of the Famous Players forces, who was on her way to her home in Seattle, where she will spend a vacation with her family. In about a month she will return to New York to engage in another picture by the Famous Players.

J. K. Moore and C. B. Ryson, officers of the Vitaseope Film Corporation, with quarters in the Marquette Building, this city, were held to the grand jury on Monday, June 5, under $1,500 bonds, by Judge Caverly, in the South City Street Court, on charges of operating a confidence game. The complainant was Bruno Jasinski, of this city, who testified that he answered an advertisement of the company, in which they agreed to make a moving picture actor of him. Their terms required him to pay $100 for stock, in addition to $50 for a course of instruction. Jasinski testified that after he had paid his money, Moore and Ryson failed to give him the course of lessons, and kept changing their offices from place to place so that he was unable to get back the money he had paid for shares of stock.

Director Marshal Neilan began work in New York City on "The Prince Chap" on Thursday, June 8. Miss Bessie Eytton, Cecil Holland, Leo Pierson and other Selig players are under Mr. Neilan's direction. Special scenes will be filmed in Gotham, after which the company will return to Chicago, where the work on the photoplay will be continued. Mr. Neilan will not only direct "The Prince Chap," but will play the leading role.

James L. McGee, general manager of the Selig Pacific Coast studios, spent several days in the city last week on his return from Vicksburg, Miss., where big scenes of "The Crisis" were completed. He will return to Los Angeles in a few days. Mr. McGee was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. William N. Selig at their home on Lakeview avenue on Wednesday evening, June 7, when his birthday anniversary was celebrated. His brother from Milwaukee was also a guest on the occasion.

Director Colin Campbell, who has also returned from Vicksburg, will remain in Chicago for some time superintending the cutting and trimming of the big "Crisis" film, which will be in about twelve reels when completed.

Jack Wheeler, editor in chief of The Selig-Tribune, did some very enterprising work in filming the Preparedness parade in Chicago, Saturday, June 3. A special Selig Preparedness film was all ready for exhibition in numerous Chicago theaters Saturday evening, while the parade was still in progress. The Republican Convention at the Coliseum, which occupied the week beginning June 5, has also been filmed under Mr. Wheeler's direction. Among the special cameramen assigned to convention work were L. J. Simons, of Washington, D. C., Fred M. Delaven and John J. Pasztor.

Chicago Branch Manager Holah, of Pathe Exchange, Inc., also deserves credit for his enterprise in getting moving pictures of the great demonstration and finishing them in time to be shown in several Chicago theaters while the parade was still going on. Orchestra Hall and the Pastime theater in the "Loop" district showed the pictures to crowded houses, and other theaters in outlying districts also showed the pictures before the marchers disbanded. The Pathe News cameramen were Joseph Rucker and K. W. Fasold. The technical work on the Pathe News pictures was done at the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company's plant.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday or Monday, June 11 and 12.

Studebaker—"Gloria's Romance"—sixth chapter, "Hidden Fire" (George Kleine); Edna Wallace Harper and Frank Sheridan in "Perils of Divorce" (World), and the Pathe Weekly.

Fine Arts—"The Whirl of Life" (Cort Film Corporation), with Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, has proved so popular that it will be continued for another week.

Ziegfeld—"The Bondman" (Fox) has been retained for another week by Mr. Hamburger. This film has proved a big attraction and business getter.

Strand—Second week of the Casino Club players in the society film "Cousin Jim" (Van Dee Producing Co.) Mutt and Jeff cartoons, and other pictures.

Orchestra Hall—Marguerite Clark in "Silks and Satins" (Famous Players), Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, "Fountains and Palaces of Rome" and "Scenes Religious," travelogues (Swasticka). Nellie and Sara Kouns will be the soloists.

La Salle—Sixth week of "The Little Girl Next Door" (Illinois vice film).

The Reel Fellows Club of Chicago has made the following announcement to the film fraternity: The Reel Fellows Club of Chicago has moved to larger and better quarters in the Morrison Hotel, Clark and Madison streets. A big house-warming and ladies' night will be held on Thursday, June 15, at 6.30 p. m. The dinner is $1 a plate. Reservations are made for 100 couples.

C. T. Metcalf, of Kincaid & Metcalf, owners of the Opera House and Airdrome in Greenfield, Ill., was a caller last week. Paramount pictures are run two nights a week and Pathe one night. Good business was reported by Mr. Metcalf. He is an old subscriber of the Moving Picture World, and calls it his Bible.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., spent several days in the city last week.

Interested and Friendly Audience Gets Many Laughs from "The Fall of a Nation"—Praise for Herbert's Music.

ALTHOUGH critics differ widely as to the dramatic and technical merits of Thomas Dixon's propaganda motion picture production, "The Fall of a Nation," the large and friendly gathering which crowded the Liberty theater, New York, on the evening of Tuesday, June 6, to witness the first public presentation of that remarkable subject found lots to interest and amuse as the story was unfolded on the screen.

As first shown the picture was excessively long and it was nearly midnight before the finale appeared, but length did not seem to tire, for there was plenty of enthusiasm left at the finish to demand the appearance of the author and producer, together with the writer of the music, which contributed so largely to the success of the entertainment.

A noteworthy feature and one which aroused the curiosity of the audience at the start were the uniforms of the young women ushers—beautiful white costumes of military cut, including trousers and puttees, and altogether becoming. The significance was revealed later when it was shown in the picture that such was the uniform of the "Loyal Legion," an organization of patriotic women which was mainly responsible for turning defeat into victory according to the author's scheme of things.

Mr. Dixon's characterization of several men of affairs in the United States drew laughs and hisses from the audience, and some of his title and "cut-ins" were the cause of merriment. Throughout the more serious passages tense interest marked the attitude of all present and the beauty of some of the scenes elicited hearty applause.

As the light faded out on the last scene insistent calls for the author brought Mr. Dixon in front of the curtain. He briefly thanked the audience for their kind reception of his work and then gave way to Victor Herbert, the composer of the accompanying music. Mr. Herbert assured the audience that his part in the entertainment had been most delightful to him, as he was personally heart and soul for preparedness.

The audience was one of considerable distinction. His honor Mayor Mitchell and party were conspicuous, together with many other distinguished men and women in private life. The trade was well represented. J. Stuart Blackton, Jesse L. Lasky, H. E. Aitken and others equally prominent were there. During the first intermission "Long Tom" Dixon and "Short Tom" Ince met and exchanged congratulations. Altogether it was an auspicious opening for a most interesting picture.

Milwaukee Exhibitors Entertained

Chicago V-L-S-E Force Holds for Them Three-Day Reception.

MILWAUKEE exhibitors are still talking of the three-day reception held by the sales forces of the Chicago office of the V-L-S-E on June 1, 2 and 3 in that city, and of the novel and efficient manner in which the service of that distributing organization was brought to their attention.

Gordon Laurence, publicity manager of the Chicago office, and Frank Redfield, assistant manager, who as salesmen had been in close touch with the Milwaukee exhibitors for years, engineered the conclave. Several days in advance of the actual invasion by the Big Four forces of the Milwaukee territory, Mr. Laurence sent to each exhibitor in that territory a letter announcing the purpose of the reception, primarily one of better acquaintanceship.

Mr. Laurence then went to Milwaukee and engaged a large suite of rooms and the parlor floor of the Wisconsin Hotel. The day before the arrival of the salesmen, he telephoned each exhibitor in the territory, urging him to be the guest of the V-L-S-E during the reception. As the result, on the opening day and every day thereafter of the reception, the large suite of rooms was thronged from morning until night with interested exhibitors who had been impressed with a desire upon the part of the Big Four to cooperate with them to an even greater degree and to learn more intimately their problems and their needs.

Each morning those exhibitors who called at the V-L-S-E headquarters were taken to the Strand theater, where Big Four features were shown for their benefit. A five-piece orchestra was engaged so that the features would be reviewed to their best advantage.

A Dutch lunch for exhibitors was the feature of the second day's program, and on the night of the third day a supper was given.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

REAL REEL ROMANCE.

Kathlyn Williams, Selig Star, Weds Charles F. Eytton, Manager Morosco Studio.

STAGE lovers, film fans, and friends of Kathlyn Williams, Selig featured star, will be agreeably surprised to learn of her marriage, which took place in Riverside, near here, on Friday, June 2. Charles F. Eytton, a well-known picture manager, is the bridegroom. Mr. Eytton and Miss Williams, accompanied by relatives and close friends, departed for Riverside at noon and were married at 5:30. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. I. D. Van Arnan in the rectory of the First Methodist Episcopal Church. The bridal party comprised Juan De La Cruz, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Von Saxman, Mr. and Mrs. Al Filson and Mr. and Mrs. Ed. J. LeSaint.

Miss Williams is one of the bright stars of filmland, beloved from the Atlantic to the Pacific by that great army of Americans who march daily upon the moving picture theaters of the country. Mr. Eytton is one of the owners of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, and has been connected with the local show world for the past sixteen years.

The marriage was the culmination of a romance that had its inception in Salt Lake City ten years ago. At that time Miss Williams was a member of the Willard Mack Stock Company, which was playing in the Utah city. Fate sent Mr. Eytton there to overlook a new play, in which Mr. Morosco was interested. He met Miss Williams and was greatly attracted by her ability and beauty. Shortly afterward they became engaged and the wedding day was set, when the inevitable "lovers' quarrel" occurred and they drifted along different paths, only to meet again in this city about a year ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Eytton left for an extended trip through the Eastern States. Upon their return they will be at home to their legion of friends at their home, 858 Bryan street.

FILM FOLKS FROLIC.

Americans at Santa Barbara Have Lots of Fun Between Scenes—Thirteen Owls Club Entertains.

The Thirteen Owls Club was responsible last Saturday evening for one of the most enjoyable parties ever given in local filmdom. One hundred and fifty couples, members of the "Flying A" companies and their friends, assembled at Unity Hall, to be part of a hard times function, which members of the Owls had cleverly planned.

Nothing could possibly have been more appealing than the Owls themselves, as ragged country children. The following members fully maintained their reputation for cleverness in carrying out the general impoverished effect: Misses Carol Holloway, Peggy Perkins, Genie Forde, Nell Franzen, Vivian Rich, Opal Eason, Audrey Munson, Jude Martin, Teddy Eason, Marty Martin, Sally Newsum and Jodie Frame.

The "Flying A" quartet, Walter Beale, Jack Sarrell, Oscar Gerard and Bowman Johnston gave several musical numbers. Early in the evening and prior to the dance the Cliff Dwellers had a Dutch lunch in the western town at the end of State street. The Cliff Dwellers compose the technical department under Mr. Langley, but there were many guests, the party numbering sixty.

EXHIBITOR QUINN A LIVE ONE.

To Show "Preparedness" or "Battle Cry of Peace" During Preparedness Parade Week in Los Angeles.

Los Angeles has one live wire picture showman and he is J. A. Quinn, ex-manager of Quinn's Garrick, and until recently manager of Quinn's Superba.

In commenting on the ability of Quinn as an exhibitor, who is always springing some new and exciting pleasures for his host of patrons, the Times says:

"Coincident with the announcement that the big preparedness parade is to be held on June 14, comes the interesting news that the full week commencing Monday, June 12, is to be celebrated as Preparedness Week at Quinn's Empress theater. J. A. Quinn has again shown his enterprise as a film impresario by securing exclusively for those seven days the gigantic Vitaphone production, "Preparedness," or "The Battle Cry of Peace." In order to interest the youth in serving the flag, special matinees are to be held for school children, while military organizations of Southern California are writing Mr. Quinn for special nights at which they can attend in a body."

Mr. Quinn is building a formidable looking fort on the front of the theater building. Here will be stationed patrols, wireless station, aeroplane landing and many other things to attract attention.

ANOTHER BIG PRODUCING FIRM.

"The Spirit of '76" Is to Be Made by the Continental Producing Company.

Another film company has been started in Los Angeles. The ideas and prospects of the firm, as outlined by the president, Robert Goldstein, well-known coast costumer, are broad. It is the intention of this company to produce a new motion picture production in twelve reels, the title of which is to be "The Spirit of '76," to reproduce the American Revolution, including the picturization of the causes which led up to it—production to be perfect as to historical accuracy and detail, with an entirely original and sensational story closely interwoven.

Robert Goldstein, president of the Goldstein Theatrical Costuming Company of Los Angeles and San Francisco, is one of the stockholders in the Epoch Producing Company, which produced and own "The Clansman"; the Wark Producing Company, which is now making D. W. Griffith's largest production, "The Mother and the Law," and is otherwise associated with D. W. Griffith in a business way. Mr. Goldstein is also connected in a practical, artistic and business way with most of the large film producing companies in Southern California. George L. Hutchins, secretary and manager, is president of the Festivals Association of the Pacific Coast; was manager of the Portland Rose Festival, and later was engaged to plan, design and build the great pageants, spectacles and parades for the Exposition at San Francisco. He is also a writer and dramatist, having had theatrical experience.

The director of this production will be George Siegman, whose position as director of D. W. Griffith's companies, together with his experience in Mutual subjects, fits him for the position. In the "Clansman," Mr. Siegman played the part of Silas Lynch, one of the most important in the production. He has sixteen years of independent directing and acting to his credit.

Santa Barbara Welcomes Miss Minter.

Led by the Mayor and various of his official family, Santa Barbara, Cal., residents gave a rousing reception to little Mary Miles Minter, the American-Mutual child star, on her recent arrival at the southern Californian city to begin work on her first Mutual feature release.

Long before the arrival of the train at the station numerous of the city's stanch residents were on hand. Accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, Miss Minter appeared on the rear platform, and after a brief address of welcome delivered by the Mayor she was escorted through the crowd and rushed to the American-Mutual studios, where the celebration continued.

As a token of comradeship members of the American-Mutual playing forces insisted that Miss Minter be delegated to open the new concrete dressing quarters at the plant. In the parade from the depot to the studio exactly 162 autos took part.

"Civilization" Car Wins the Ascot Races.

As stated briefly in these columns last week, Arthur Hansen, of the Ince forces, won the ten-mile event at the Ascot races for the benefit of the Actors' Fund of America. Hansen, piloting a big Mercer flying the colors of "Civilization," made a spectacular race which earned him the Barney Oldfield trophy and the film championship of America. He negotiated the ten-mile distance in ten minutes and six seconds, defeating Ashton Dearholt, of the American Company, in a car entered by William Russell, and Wallace Beery, of the Universal, in another.

The race was a sensational climax to a sensational program. Leading almost from the start, Hansen maintained a consistent pace and never once was in danger of being passed, though there were some exciting brushes. A thrill was furnished in the sixth lap when Beery's car threw a rear tire and threatened to turn turtle. The driver handled the wheel with skill, however, and piloted the machine to safety.

Admiral Winslow Visits U City.

Admiral Cameron Winslow, commander of the Pacific fleet of the United States Navy, accompanied by a number of his officers, visited Universal City on Wednesday last week.

The Admiral was invited to take part as an "extra man" and agreed to become a spectator in a stock exchange scene. Other distinguished visitors to Universal City during the week were Madame Marie Rappold, the famous grand opera singer, and Dr. Alfred Hertz, the well-known musical director.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

We made a trip to the beach this week and found that the Balboa has added Fred Huntly to its staff of directors. Prior to his present connection, Huntly put on photoplays for some of the leading producers. Another newcomer here is Edward Jobson, the erstwhile endman of minstrel fame. He's one of those big, fat, happy men whose very presence is cheerful.

A certain section of the big Lasky studio is active again, because George Melford, having returned from his vacation, has begun work on another Cleo Ridgley-Wallace Reid production, "The House of the Golden Windows." This makes the fourth production in which these two have been co-starred.

Picture girls of Hollywood studios are going in for athletics and have formed a club to benefit of all actresses. As a result a conference was held with the young women, Mrs. C. H. Richmond and Miss Julia Tolman Lee representing the Young Women's Christian Association, and Mrs. H. T. Wright the women's clubs. The plan adopted was received with great enthusiasm. Lule Warrington talked on "The Value of Drama Study" and Miss Ella Stevens, physical director of the Y. W. C. A., conducted class work in gymnastic exercises and esthetic dancing. This week Allison Gow talked on "The Life of Ibsen," and Miss Stevens followed with the physical work. The Hollywood public library is being used as a meeting place at present, but it is quite possible that larger quarters will have to be provided.

Ever popular Ruth Roland and Roland Bottomley of the Balboa studio won a silver loving cup this week for being the best one-steppers in a free-for-all dancing contest. Several hundred couples entered and it was a nip and tuck affair. In the finale, the winners were pitted against Charles Murray, the Keystone comedian, and his wife.

Geraldine Farrar, the Lasky star, and her husband, Lou Tellegen, have arrived in Los Angeles to begin their annual summer engagement at the Lasky studios in Hollywood. It is expected Miss Farrar will do two pictures this summer. It has not yet been decided whether her husband will appear with her or in productions of his own. The Lasky company has secured the residence and grounds at the corner of Sunset Boulevard and Western avenue for the diva's home.

It is rumored in Los Angeles that fifty of the photoplayers are to organize a club with a star as its president. The initiation fee, so the rumor says, is to be one hundred dollars, the dues to be five dollars a month. These fifty men aim to make this club rank among the best of theatrical organizations.

A number of picture athletes are going to pull off a little handball tilt for the championship of film men of the Los Angeles Athletic Club. Harry Ham, comedy lead man, with Al Christie, a popular member of the L. A. A. C., will meet Douglas Grey, of the New York Motion Picture Company. Grey is the challenger. The man who wins must stand ready to defend the honors against any man of the profession.

Grey has started earnest training and expects to win easily. He is an exceptionally good handball player. Ham is well known in filmdom and in club circles. He formerly was connected with the Universal, but at the present time is playing leads in Nestor films.

H. M. Bunce, who recently came to Monrovia from Salt Lake City, has been secured by the Monrovia Feature Film Company to handle all detail work of the publicity campaign that will soon be launched by that firm in connection with its production of big feature photoplays. Mr. Bunce is an experienced newspaper man, having a practical working knowledge of all departments of the work.

Beverly Griffith, who, with Gilbert Warrenton of Universal City, was sent to the Mexican border by General Manager H. O. Davis to cover the news in film for the Universal Animated Weekly, believes in preparedness. Recently he wired from El Paso to Mr. Davis for a supply of flares which furnish light at night for the taking of scenes. When the "wo returned this week to Universal City they projected a number of fine night scenes. Beverly Griffith came into the World office to pay his respects and incidentally relate a few of his most thrilling experiences. He said when they were not dodging bullets they were being entertained by very high and gentlemanly Mexican officials. But they got the pictures.

One afternoon this week when the Rolin Players were out on location doing some big outdoor scenes for "Julius Caesar," sneak thieves entered the studio from the rear and went through several of the dressing rooms until they were scared away by an artist who was painting scenes for Caesar's home. Bebe Daniels lost a purse, together with a fine yellow sport coat. Miss Margaret Joslin discovered a pair of her good shoes had been taken.

The Balboa's annual plunge party in the Long Beach natatorium developed a new contender for swimming honors in Henry King, the film star, being located just a few blocks from the Pacific Ocean, the workers at this studio have daily opportunities to perfect themselves in aquatics. Mr. King had no trouble in pulling away from the bunch, and now he is thinking about entering the Pacific Coast championship contest, to be held this summer. The purse, hung up by the Balboa studio, which King won, he promptly turned over to the Actors' Fund. The women's race was won by Mrs. W. A. S. Douglas, who had just a shade the better of Ruth Roland.

Arthur Shirley, formerly leading man with Thomas Dixon, has joined the Selig forces and is playing lead opposite Kathryn Williams in a current five-reel feature, entitled "The Valiants of Virginia."

Director Charles Giblyn has started production at Culver City of "Somewhere in France," a picture play from a story written by the late Richard Harding Davis. The scenario was prepared by G. H. Hawks, and the leading part is taken by Louise Glaum, with a supporting cast including Howard Hickman, Robert MacKinnon, George Fisher, Jerome Storm. "Somewhere in France" is a tale of love and intrigue in war-torn Europe.

With a company of fifty players William S. Hart left this week for a point on the international boundary line south of El Centro, to film some scenes in a new Triangle play written by Monte M. Katterjohn.

The Fine Arts Studios have decided to change the title of Norma Talmadge and Tully Marshall's recent play to "Drugged Hopes," instead of "The Dope Fiend," which was the original working title.

Master George Stone, the five-year-old Fina Arts player, has been borrowed by the Ince Santa Monica studios to appear prominently in a Kay-Rec Triangle play with William S. Hart. Master George attracted considerable attention with his performance in "Let Katie Do It," and has appeared in Fine Arts plays ever since his inception.

Kenneth McGaffey, director of Lasky publicity, advises us that Marie Doro, the brilliant Lasky star, celebrated a birthday anniversary recently. Quite a party had been arranged for her at her Hollywood home. Among the presents was a complete motion picture camera, presented her by Charlie Chaplin. No sooner was the gift received than an automobile was dispatched to the studio, and some lights hurried to the Dexter home and a scenario was written and photographed with the little camera. Later in the week the scenes were projected in the basement of the house and promise to be a great success. The cast was an all-star one, including Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, Elliott Dexter, Miss Doro and others.

From Honolulu comes word of the activities of Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan and the Signal Film Company. A number of scenes were taken on board the steamer, and while they were in Honolulu and during a hard trip into the interior of the island. It is said some wonderful scenery will be shown to the public for the first time as the result of this expedition. The company is expected back at the Los Angeles studios some time this week.

Wheeler Oakman, who is well remembered in "The Ne'er-Do-Well" and other screen successes, is now Mable Normand's leading man.

Henry MacRae has taken his company of players to Glacier Park, where a spectacular film production, entitled "The Sun Woman," will be filmed. Several hundred native Indians will be used. Marie Walcamp plays the title part.

J. Warren Kerrigan and a large company of Universal players returned this week from Yosemite Valley after filming scenes for "The Beckoning Trail." Director Jack Conway took a large number of remarkable picturesque scenes in the famous national park and vicinity.

Ed Lyons and Lee Moran, who have recently returned to Universal City, are producing and playing feature leads in a one-reel comedy, entitled "Kill the Umpire," written by Ben Cohn, of the Universal staff.

Rollin S. Sturgeon, director-general of the Western Vitagraph Company, has gathered together about two hundred expert divers and swimmers to take part in a realistic shipwreck scene he has incorporated in a six-reel Blue Ribbon feature, "Through the Wall." In the filming of these scenes one of the largest liners on the Pacific Coast will be used.

Frank Borzage, of the American Film Company, Santa Barbara, was given a dinner party Thursday last week at the Arlington Hotel, when nine of his bachelor friends gathered to honor the remaining days of his bachelorhood. Among those present were Rea Berger, Ashton Dearholt, King Clark, Harvey Clark, George Aherm, Alan Forrest, Wallace MacDonald and John Sheehan. Mr. Borzage is to marry Miss Rena Rogers, of Los Angeles, some time next week.

To work in the films one had to belong to an association, said the proprietors of the "Movie" Employees' Association, 719 West Seventh street, to all who answered their advertisement for 200 men for moving pictures. Then they proceeded to charge 50 cents for initiation to the association and 25 cents for the first month's dues. So many persons were caught by the advertisement and paid their dues without result that H. A. Cable, deputy state labor commissioner, among those present, later applied to the association, paid his money and became a member. Then he arrested the man in charge of the office, Merrill Stearn, who was arraigned in police court, and pleaded not guilty.

Stearn alleges the real head of the association is missing, in company with $400. Commissioner Cable says he has received more than 400 complaints and believes the number of victims will exceed 1,000.

DICK EDMONDSON CAPTURES BLUEBIRD.

Con genial "Dick" Edmondson's latest triumph is the acquisition of the Bluebird program for the United Kingdom. This brand is meeting with favor in the trade across the pond, and with his unexcelled generalship will shortly rank with the best in the field.

Edmondson, a pioneer in the film industry, began his career in California as exhibitor and manufacturer of pugilistic events. He returned to his native land with the Johnson-Jeffries contest pictures and has since successfully exploited American productions, among which were the productions of B. A. Rolfe Photoplays, Dyreda Art Films, Masterpiece Film Corporation, Salisbury's wild animal pictures, California, Life Photo, Balboa, Equitable, and Frohman Amusement Corporation.

His main European offices are located at 118 Shaftesbury avenue, London, W.

Bessie Eyton Visits New York

Selig Actress Gets First Glimpse of Metropolis With Marshall Neilan's Company Making "The Prince Chap."

DIRECTOR MARSHALL NEILAN brought his company to New York a few days ago to get some exterior shots for Selig's "The Prince Chap," not to conduct a sightseeing tour, although it happens that three members of the party—Bessie Eyton, Leo Pierson and Cecil Holland—are visiting the metropolis for the first time. Between trips to Connecticut and hours spent on New York's waterfront, where some of the action of the story transpires, the visitors may find time to learn whether the most advertised Fifth Avenue shops and the lights of Broadway fulfill expectations. But first impressions were inconclusive, if not disappointing.

The company arrived in the rain and everything appeared rather dark and gloomy on the morning that Miss Eyton looked from a window of the Great Northern hotel and confessed a readiness to be convinced of the beauties of the city. Meanwhile it was easier to talk about what she had done and hoped to do in pictures.

Miss Eyton is a product of Southern California, and one of the few actresses who has never broken her allegiance to the city that she loved. She gave her first engagement. Five years ago she started with Selig as an extra and today is a star under the same management with a number of big pictures to her credit and others in prospect. She regards her work in "The Crisis" as the best she has ever done, for the story and the character she portrays offered ample opportunity for the kind of acting she likes best.

In speaking of her start as an actress Miss Eyton said that among her friends in Los Angeles were players who insisted that her features were ideally suited to screen needs. Without any previous stage experience she applied at the Selig studio and was employed as an extra, partially because of her usefulness in doubling for actresses who could neither swim or ride horseback, two accomplishments in which she is proficient. Presently, with the coming of an opening in the stock company, Miss Eyton was given a permanent place and since then she has been continuously busy.

"If I have any regrets," she said, "it is that my directors seem to believe that I am best adapted to serious emotional roles, when, as a matter of fact, there is nothing I prefer to light comedy, and I know that some of the most pleasing performances I ever gave were of that character. Perhaps I will get more similar opportunities in the future and still farther in the future I want to have a trial on the speaking stage, for it appears to me that the chances for young women will be better than ever in a few years."

Miss Eyton is a typical Western girl, fresh, vital and devoted to outdoor sports. When the present production is completed she will not regret returning to Los Angeles and her bungalow.

EDISON MAKING LOCKE'S "WHERE LOVE IS."

Ann Murdock, the famous Frohman star, and Henry Stanford, an actor best known to the American public by his appearance in the role of Jerry with Laurette Taylor in "Peg o' My Heart" for one thousand performances, are engaged at the Edison studios in New York in the production of a five feature serialization of "Where Love Is," an adaptation of William J. Locke's novel of that name. The cast engaged in making the picture is composed, for the greater part, of well-known stars, for among the members of the company that is playing in the support of Miss Murdock and Mr. Stanford are Leonie Flugrath, Mabel Trunnelle, Bigelow Cooper and other Edison players who have wide reputations. The first scene of the picture was filmed on June 5, and it is expected that fully two months will be required to complete the elaborate and carefully made production.

William J. Locke, the writer of "Where Love Is," is one of the best-known of present-day English novelists.

AUTOMATIC OPENS WESTERN HEADQUARTERS.

The Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company announces the recent opening of its Western branch in the Lytton Building, Suite 1432, Chicago. Arthur Klein, general manager, has already sent in some good business to the company.

Following are a few of the theaters which have just adopted the Automatic Ticket System in Chicago: Oakland Square theater, Midway Hippodrome, Rosewood theater, Cosmopolitan theater, Beach theater, Plaza theater, Band Box theater.

Clubwomen and the Motion Picture

Views of Eleven Leaders of the Recent Biennial Gathering in New York City.

By Betty Shannon.

THERE are eleven departments in the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the biennial session of which has just closed in New York City, all headed by women who are leaders and authorities in their fields. Each woman

Helen Varick Boswell.

That one reason alone would be enough to make me enthusiastic over them. They have given the poor, as well as the rich, a place to go to with their families. I feel also that it is better for people to read anything, so long as it is not vicious, than read nothing at all.

And so I feel that it is better for people to see motion pictures as they are today in the picture theaters, rather than see none at all. They are not up to the standard of perfection which they are striving for and will reach in the next few years, but to millions of people whose lives have been empty before they came they give things of beauty, of educational and social value to think about. There is much more good in them than many reformers are apt to credit them with. MRS. F. S. WARDWELL, Stamford, Conn.,

Chairman Music Department.

I believe the motion picture art is so young that it only has to be given time to develop into the sort of a power we who are interested in the welfare of the young want it to. We women may help in molding that art; indeed, we are helping mold it by the public sentiment and the public taste we are helping create. I believe legal censorship, which may become a political power, is unfair and may become pernicious. The only right way to obtain pictures that we want is to make the women and the men in every locality all over the land and all over the world ask for those pictures.

HELEN VARICK BOSWELL, New York City,

Chairman of Educational Department.

When my children were growing up they were constantly passing through various stages in their moral development which caused me sleepless nights for two weeks or more, when I would suddenly awake and find them entirely vanished. I feel the same is true to a large extent with the motion picture. We are spending sleepless nights, some of us, trying to adjust what we consider a great problem. The past two years have shown every thinking person that the pictures are so constantly changing that we cannot lay our fingers on any supposed weakness, for the minute after we do the weakness will have vanished or changed to something else. The pictures will go on developing and improving in spite of or along with our worry. The best we can do is to encourage. They will come out all right when they have been given time.

MRS. THOMAS G. WINTER, Minneapolis, Minn.,

Chairman Literature and Library Extension Department.

I am frankly fond of the "movies." I go very often, and I always find something which is instructive and good in them. It is my belief that the motion picture producers are giving us, the public, just as good pictures as we are permitting them to. They are businessmen. They will give us better pictures when we make it worth their while. The gospel of "better health" can and is being disseminated by the motion pictures, just as by the press. Their power is only being hinted at. The motion picture will more and more become allied with the better and higher interests of humanity.

MRS. BLAIR, Albany, N. Y.,
Chairman of Public Health Department.

Censorship, legalized, of motion pictures is in opposition to the laws of democracy. I do not believe that legalized censorship, if it were not so, would cause the production of motion pictures which are of a kind which mothers who are particular want their children to see. The women of the country must find it their share in this great amusement force, to help create a demand for better pictures. Every paying demand will find producers to fulfill the demand. The great future of the motion picture cannot be estimated.

MRS. GEORGE ZIMMERMAN, Fremont, Ohio,
Chairman Civics Department.

Mrs. George Zimmerman.

There is no doubt the motion picture is the greatest educational and amusement force in the world today. And there is no doubt all thinking people—whether the people who go to see pictures or the people who produce them—are struggling for a better class of production. There is no doubt there are many harmful pictures produced which can and must be remedied if the producers and consumers can come to an understanding. To me, one helpful solution would seem to be in the appointment of a federal commission to investigate all sides of picture production and consumption and to meet and consult with the producers and the National Board of Review, already established. I am not at all certain that legal censorship would be advisable, although I am not convinced.

MRS. FRANKLIN P. IAMS, Pittsburgh, Pa.,
Chairman Legislation Committee.

The power for ill or good of books is well known. And because motion pictures are visualizations of ideas which books may only present in words they are all the greater in their power for ill or good. I do not think producers know or realize how much harm the pictures they make can do to children. The women who gathered at the biennial meeting of clubs do, because they represent the mothers and neighbors of children who are being helped or harmed by pictures. I feel something must be done to improve the general standard of pictures which children are seeing. Federal censorship or state censorship I do not believe necessary. It must be a national feeling.

MISS HELEN LOUISE JOHNSON.

I believe in "Do's" not "Don't's." The finer side of the motion pictures should be emphasized, not the less fortunate. People should be taught to ask for better pictures, not to stop to criticize the poor ones in existence. I do not feel the present-day standard of pictures is by any means the highest they will reach. It remains for the public to say what kind of pictures it will pay for. The constructive thing for a body of women from women's clubs to do is to aid in the speedy establishment of a greater market for high-class film literature.

MRS. FREDERICK H. COLE, Omaha, Neb.,
Chairman Civil Service Reform Department

The motion pictures have done much to aid in the work of my department of the General Federation of Women's Clubs—the Conservation Department. They have spread knowledge of forest and bird conservation especially, and have been invaluable in their demonstrations in fire-fighting and other conservation methods. Their educational power may not be estimated. Because the motion pictures are of such value to conservation they are also of great amusement value. The producers do not realize as yet the possibilities they have, or they would not create the cheap and vulgar pictures which unfortunately are most often seen upon the screen. The picture entertainment must become more worth while, or they will lose out. I believe that they will become more worth while.

MRS. JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN, Chicago, Ill.,
Chairman Conservation Department.

I think motion pictures to be of great educational force, but not a great art force. I have never seen a picture which impressed me as being a work of art. They have been too cheap and shallow in their appeal to be considered as having any connection, I believe, with art. My advice to producers would be to have a real, inspired artist, a great moralist and a wonderful technician, in their employ. Motion pictures can never be real art until real artists who know true art values have a hand in their creation. The tawdry and cheap must be done away with.

The greatest offense which the motion picture can make is in its offense against good taste. Poor taste is being forced upon children in the photoplay. They are growing up with ideas given them in the pictures. It is vital that good taste be displayed in the majority of pictures and that the youth of the land be protected against evidences of bad taste.

MRS. MELVILLE F. JOHNSTON, Richmond, Ind.,
Chairman Art Department.

I believe there should be a federal board of censorship, because I think motion picture censorship should be standardized. State censorship is not satisfactory for the nation. Neither is censorship which is not legal. The calibre of pictures must be raised to a higher standard, and I think it can only be done through federal censorship.

MRS. JAMES W. REMICK, Concord, N. H.,
Chairman of the Industrial and Social Conditions Department.

PHILIP O. MILLS OFF FOR THE FRONT.

Many friends in the moving picture industry made by Philip O. Mills during his association with the Picture Playhouse Film Company will be interested in knowing that Mr. Mills sailed from New York Sunday, June 4, for France to take a commission with the American contingent of "soldiers of fortune" who are serving with the Allies.

In conversation with his friends months ago Mr. Mills expressed his determination to be on the ground in Europe when the present unpleasantness was brought to its close. That there was sincerity in his determination is indicated by the action which he has just taken. His commission is with the French ambulance corps.

Mr. Mills has always been active in military affairs, his liking for army life probably resulting from the fact that his father, now deceased, was an officer in the United States regular army and for a long time traveled in Europe studying military conditions there.

RIALTO FILMS EFFECT PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

Jesse J. Goldberg, the general manager of the Rialto Film Corporation, returned Monday morning, June 5, from a trip to Detroit, where a meeting of the Board of Directors of that company was held and the plans for future operations of the company were definitely determined upon. Officers of the company were elected for the ensuing year as follows: President, J. Goldberg; vice-president and general manager, Jesse J. Goldberg; secretary and treasurer, S. T. Goldberg, Messrs. I. & S. T. Goldberg are the financial backers of the Rialto Film Corporation and are also the owners of the Lilies Cigar Company of Detroit, Chicago, Tampa and Havana, Cuba.

MISS TALMADGE HONORED BY JERSEY CITY.

Norma Talmadge, the charming young Triangle film star, has been chosen as the Jersey City Maid for the "Made in Jersey City Week," which the Jersey town began to celebrate on Monday, June 5. Besides being guest of honor at a banquet of over 700 men Miss Talmadge's face will peek out at you every time one of the official badges for the week flashes into view, from the cover of the menu for the banquet, and finally Miss Talmadge herself will appear not only on the screen but at the conclusion of the banquet as the personification of the emblem chosen by the Chamber of Commerce under whose auspices the week's celebration is being held. Yes, Miss Talmadge was born in Jersey City.

Davis Returns to Universal City

Executive Head of Big Picture Plant Carries Back With Him Rights to Many Stories.

WITH his trunks packed full of scenarios, his grips crowded with scripts and plots bulging from his coat pockets, H. O. Davis, director-general of Universal City, has left New York for Los Angeles. Mr. Davis' stay in the East was prolonged from time to time, for the principal object of his trip was to purchase scenarios, moving picture rights to books, past, present and future fiction hits, and in fact everything which offered good possibilities for screen production. The moving of the eastern companies of the Universal to Universal City naturally increases the demand for scripts and Mr. Davis has spent considerable time reading manuscripts and visiting the various book publishers and magazine editors in his search for good material. During his stay in the East he read hundreds of scripts, and in the last four weeks of his visit he purchased over $20,000 worth of scenarios and negotiated for the moving picture rights for some of the best books and magazine stories on the market today.

It is the intention of Mr. Davis to produce photoplays that uplift, instruct and educate, as well as amuse, and he has been guided by these elements in his choosing of scripts. He is absolutely opposed to the morbid melodramas and plays without morals, for he believes the public do not want to see unpleasant things.

A careful study of some of his purchases is interesting. Mr. Davis has purchased the rights to "The Pearl of Orr's Island," by Harriet Beecher Stowe; "The Rose Garden Husband," by Margaret Widdemer; "Idle Wives," by James Oppenheim; "The Measure of a Man," by Norman Duncan; "The Place Beyond the Winds," by Harriet Comstock; "If Any Man Sin," by Cody; "The Spotter," by Canfield; "The Mainspring," by Charles McLean; "Little Eve," by Edgerton; "Walden," by Mary Kincaid; "The Edge of Hazard," by George Horton; "The Light on the Hill," by Martha Gielow; "The Message," by Louis Tracy; "The Promise," by James Hendryx; "The Last Lady of Mulberry," by Henry Wilton Thomas.

He also bought scripts and rights to plays from, among others, Fred Jackson, Captain Leslie Peacocke, H. O. Durant, John Russell, Robert Wells Ritchie, Suzanne Buck, Albert Payson Terhune, Lawrence McCloskey, Kate Jordan, Anna Wynne, Andrew Soutar, Mary Rider, Helen Bailly, the Rev. S. C. Spaulding, Thomas Smith, Edna Schley, Robert Davis, Clarissa Mackie, Willard Bradley and Robert Innis.

The scenario department will continue its headquarters at 1600 Broadway for several weeks, where Helen Starr and her big staff will be engaged in disposing of the enormous quantity of material now in hand.

OBJECT TO TREATMENT OF CHILDREN.

The Children's Society has secured a summons for the studio manager of a New York film company for allowing a young boy to take part in a screen drama, without having obtained a permit from the Mayor. The boy entered a restaurant near the studio, with paint on his face, and attracted the attention of some members of the society who were present. They followed the boy back to the studio, and upon finding out that he was working without a permit went to the Children's Court and obtained a summons for the studio manager; also one for the boy's mother.

The superintendent of the Children's Society stated that cases have been brought to his notice where young babies were subjected to fright and bodily discomfort in order that some thrilling scene could be filmed, the parents submitting without a murmur, so long as they received the amount of the child's hire. This condition, he claimed, and the reckless manner in which the lives and limbs of older children are risked in the making of moving pictures have aroused the society to the necessity of taking decided action in the matter.

SHIFTER IN EXCHANGE MANAGERS.

F. B. Kramer has resigned from the management of the Mecca Exchange, the Forty-eighth street distributing office for the Universal, and has taken over the management of the Bluebird Exchange at 1600 Broadway. With him goes his brother, Earl Kramer, who will in his new position continue to be assistant manager.

Hi Gainsburg, who has been assistant manager of the Twenty-third street exchange of the Universal, has been transferred to the Mecca. Sam Zierler will be the manager of the Twenty-third street branch. The changes take effect on Monday, June 12.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES

MONDAY, the 1st of May, was the release date of two good Australian pictures, "In the Last Stride," and "The Joan of Arc of Loos." Martyn Keith, a prominent Australian producer, directed the former and assisted in the direction of the other.

"In the Last Stride" is a picture which will have a wide appeal in this country. The story includes a boxing match, a football match, and a race meeting. Les O'Donnell and Dave Smith, both well known professional boxers, take an active part in the picture. Harold Horder, one of the most prominent Australian League footballers, appears in the football scenes. The leading role is taken by Alma Rock Phillips, who has appeared in several Australian productions to date. The story is good, though the action is slow at times.

"The Joan of Arc of Loos" has been already mentioned in my previous letters. It is a four-part war drama, with the locale in France. The scenes and locations have been so carefully chosen that it is hard to believe they were taken in Sydney. Big things may be expected from the George Willoughby Photoplay Company in the near future. They have just finished their second production, a screen adaptation of "The Woman in the Case," with several of the cast of the "Joan of Arc" picture.

Owing to the expiration of the leases, Union Theaters, Ltd., have lost two of their Sydney theaters this week. The first to close was the Colonial, which has been run as a continuous show. It was one of the first to be built by the man who founded continuous picture theaters and who did so much for the film trade in Australia, J. D. Williams.

Hoys Ltd., a Melbourne picture concern, has secured the building on a long lease, and will remodel and reopen it in a short time. Additional seating accommodation will be fitted, making a seating capacity of over 2,000 persons. It is understood that the new theater when opened will also run continuously, from 10.30 a. m. till 11 p. m.

The other theater is known as the Glaciarium, and has been controlled by Wests Ltd. (a branch of Union Theaters, Ltd.). The Waddington Pictures, Ltd., have secured this house, and have opened it as a continuous show. Heretofore only nightly performances were given. The Glaciarium has seating accommodation for 2,000, all on one floor.

The Sydney film market seems to be experiencing a glut in features just now. Nearly all the shows in the city and suburbs are screening two features (of four or five parts each) on the same program. The J. C. Williamson Co. were the first to start this system at their Theater Royal about two months ago, when two Fox features were the standard attraction. This was followed up by the Triangle program at the night sessions of the Triangle playhouse—two five-part features and a two-reel Keystone. Now it seems to have spread to almost every picture theater in and around Sydney.

The Triangle program presented this week is lauded by critics as being the best balanced program yet. Two Ince subjects, "The Iron Strain," and "The Corner" were the leading attractions in the dramatic section, while comedy element was supplied in the Keystone "Fatty and Mabel Adrift."

Of the two five-reelers the audience seemed to like "The Iron Strain" best. Dustin Farnum is known to picturegoers in this country, having been featured in a Lasky production some time ago.

"The Corner" features three stars totally unknown to Australian audiences. Willard Mack, George Fawcett and Clara Williams. The fine acting, however, made a deep impression on all present. This picture is a gripping drama, the kind most enjoyed by picture audiences in this part of the continent.

The attendance this week has been the largest yet, and probably this is due to the fact that the Keystone features Mabel Normand, who is extremely popular here.

"Fatty and Mabel Adrift" is easily the funniest Keystone screened in Sydney yet. The fine photography in the picture has been widely commented on.

filming a multiple reel production to be entitled "The Test," from a scenario by a prominent Australian writer.

Triangle Plays opened in Adelaide, S. A., two weeks ago at West's Picture Theater. The first subjects to be screened were "The Coward," and "Crooked to the End." The films have been very well received, and are attracting big crowds. The prices of admission charged range from 6d to 2/6 (10 cents to 60 cents).

The Melbourne season of these productions starts on Saturday, the 6th of this month.

The big twelve-part patriotic war topical "Britain Prepared," has just finished very successful screenings in Melbourne and Adelaide.

A concern, known as the Reliance Photoplay Reviews, has been formed in Sydney with the object of supplying exhibitors in the country districts of Australia with a review of all features released by the various exchanges. Hal H. Carleton, a motion picture journalist, and Tom S. Imrie, Photoplay Editor of "The Mirror," newspaper, control the company.

During the past two years Australians have become great picture fans. Since features came to the fore about eighteen months ago, and people began to find that there was as good amusement in photoplays as in stage plays and vaudeville, all the picture houses have prospered. In the past two years no less than eight fine photoplay theaters have been opened in the city of Sydney alone, the smallest of which has seating accommodation for 1,000 persons.

Reports received by the Chief Secretary, Mr. Black, show that there are now 113 picture shows in the city of Sydney and the immediate adjacent suburbs. The average weekly attendance is 430,000. The whole population of the above district is about 700,000.

Taking the average charge of admission at sixpence, the attendance given means that £10,700 ($53,500) is spent each week in this form of amusement.

I had an interview this week with a country exhibitor who controls several picture theaters in various country towns in N. S. W.

He states that features are much in demand by his patrons, and that picture plays are being very acceptable. Society dramas and similar subjects do not catch on.

Serials are still popular in the country, "The Exploits of Elaine" and "The Romance of Elaine" being a big attraction at present.

This exhibitor has been drawing large crowds with Equitable productions and is procuring district rights for Triangle plays. In spite of the fact that very few country exhibitors are able to personally see, or get advice about, the pictures they book, the usual programs submitted by the exchanges are of a very high standard.

"The Birth of a Nation" was presented on Easter Saturday at the Sydney Theater Royal, and will continue for an unlimited run. The price of admission are the highest ever charged for picture entertainment in Australia, ranging to 6 shillings ($1.50). A splendid orchestra of thirty performers rendered the musical score. The huge picture has been favorably reviewed by the Sydney press, as may be seen from the following excerpts:

The Mirror: "This is a remarkable production and in it D. W. Griffith has eclipsed anything yet done in the making of motion pictures."

The Sun: "The Birth of a Nation" is really a wonderful film, the most elaborate thing yet done in motion pictures."

The Sydney Morning Herald: "The captivating quality of this wonderful photoplay largely arises from the width of its outlook, and the manner in which it brings home to the mind the awful nature of the American Civil War, through the medium of vivid bird's-eye view of battles wide-spread over hills and dales."

Another new theater, the Haymarket, was opened in Sydney on Easter Saturday. The management claims that it is the largest "continuous" show in the southern hemisphere, as it seats over 2,000 people. The interior of the theater is beautifully decorated, the walls being painted with an artistic design on a brown background. The seating accommodation is very comfortable, tip-up seats being used throughout.

Broadway Features, Red Feather Photoplays and Blue Bird productions will be screened first-run exclusively at the theater. "Scandal" was the main attraction on the opening bill.

A picture company is at present engaged in New Zealand

Newcastle, N. S. W., also has a new theater. This is the Strand, which was opened last week by the Mayor of Newcastle. Ashmead Bartlett's pictures of the Gallipoli campaign (released in America by Universal) were screened at the opening program.

Newcastle is the second largest city in N. S. W., having a population of about 70,000. There are many fine picture theaters.

Since the war began many companies in England and elsewhere have produced "patriotic" war dramas, with stories based on actual incidents from the front. Some of these have been very good, while others were just the opposite.

An Australian production, in three reels, entitled "Murphy of Anzac," released this week, is unfortunately one of the latter kind. The story would win a prize for inconsistency, while the direction is poor. The location is Gallipoli, and is a story of the life of Private W. Simpson (known as Murphy) who saved many wounded with the aid of a donkey during the battle on the Gallipoli peninsula. He met his death while doing this good work.

A fine Triangle program was presented this week at the Tangle Playhouse. This consisted of "The Disciple," an Ince production featuring Wm. S. Hart; "His Picture in the Papers," from the Fine Arts studio, with Douglas Fairbanks in the leading role; and a Keystone comedy, "A Game Old Knight."

Although the Fine Arts comedy was the best picture, "The Disciple" was billed as the star attraction. It is a rather slow moving drama, though a very suitable vehicle for Hart. "His Picture in the Papers" is a genuine comedy, and every Sydney paper has had much to say about Fairbanks' fine performance. "A Game Old Knight" is a two-part comedy on the usual Keystone lines.

On Good Friday sacred and educational programs were presented at most Sydney picture theaters. The Crystal Palace screened the eight-part London film "The Christian," adapted from the novel by Hall Caine. The Globe had "The Life of Christ," while other houses had "The Passion Play," "A Trip Through Great Britain," and "The Salisbury Wild Animal Pictures."

A Melbourne picture theater proprietor has been fined £20 for opening a new show without the consent of the Victorian Board of Health.

Mechanical Demonstration

Automobile Makers Use Pictures to Explain Intricate Motor Mechanism.

THE motion picture long since has been recognized as an aid to the development of science in its various forms. The Willys-Overland Company was among the first of the automobile manufacturers to look with favor upon the picture screen in connection with its work in disseminating knowledge of motor car construction.

A lecture descriptive of the Knight sleeve valve motor illustrated by 2,000 feet of motion pictures is being given in various parts of the country by an engineering expert of The Willys-Overland Company. The pictures are declared by exhibitors who have seen them to be remarkable examples of what can be accomplished by the modern manufacturer with the aid of the camera.

In the pictures are brought out details of the construction and operation of the Knight sleeve valve motor, and without the aid of the film the lecturer declares it would be extremely difficult to explain to the public many of the points that should be brought out.

How properly to illustrate a power curve on the motion picture screen is a problem overcome by the Overland people. When this part of the lecture is reached, there appears on the screen a square frame, up one side of which is indicated by figures various degrees of horse-power; along the bottom of the frame are figures indicating the number of revolutions per minute, and the frame itself is charted. While the lecturer is talking a small mark appears at the lower left hand corner of the animated chart, and as he proceeds with his explanation of power development in the Knight motor, the mark becomes a small line and slowly finds its way upward and across the screen.

Thus, the lecturer with the aid of the motion pictures is able to give what is declared to be the most vivid description of the power curve ever developed.

That the public is interested in an educational film of this kind has been demonstrated in every city in which the motion picture lecture has been held. In showing the pictures, it is the policy of the Overland Company to select the best available theater in the city. The house is leased outright for the day, a full orchestra is provided, a vocalist is secured, and as a preliminary feature a popular song film is projected.

In Quincy, Ill., the motion picture lecture was held at the Empire Hippodrome, where crowds were turned away; in Canton, Ohio, an audience crowded the Alhambra theater and 200 were turned away because of lack of room; in Kalamazoo, Mich., the lecture was held at the Fuller theater, in South Bend, Ind., at the Oliver theater; in Warren, Ohio, the Warren Opera House was chosen; in Fort Wayne, Ind., the Majestic theater; and the lecture also has been given in Syracuse, N. Y., Harrisburg, Pa., Indianapolis, Boston and before such educational institutions as Cornell University, University of Michigan, John Hopkins University, Catholic University of America, University of Illinois and University of Minnesota.

The lecturer, according to exhibitors, is particularly well fitted for this work, because of his long association with Mr. Knight and with the men who have done so much to develop this motor.

Miss Justice in Wider Field

One of Her Famous Film Stories Reissued by Essanay on May 30.

THERE have been so many requests made of the Essanay Film Company by those who saw and never forgot Maibelle Heikes Justice's beautiful, heart-interesting story, "The Song in the Dark," for its repetition that the company reissued the drama in the two-reel original, May 30. This film, it will be remembered, was declared by many reviewers to be the most original story of 1914, and was woven around the touching and pathetic episode of the little canary bird which had been blinded by the cruel vendor who sold it, to make it sing better. Also how it sang so wondrously during the dark hours of the night to the amazement of the beautiful society girl who bought it, and how the tiny singer became the comforter in her life when she lost her own sight. In this unusual story, Richard C. Travers and Gerda Holmes are featured.

Maibelle Heiker Justice.

Miss Justice at the present time has entered into a wider field and is writing only long features. Coming into the photoplay field first as a successful writer of novels and fiction for Cosmopolitan and other magazines, she is now transcribing many of the strong, original plots she formerly intended to use for her longer novels, into complete scenarios for the screen stage, and by the original treatment of her material is accomplishing results which she has long cherished in the production of superior photo-drama.

Well-known Broadway stars have called upon her for original dramas to meet their requirements, so that lately several powerful features have issued from her pen. Miss Justice from the first, has been one of the very few authors who came over from the field of fiction to that of the photodrama, who has been able to write the finished, technical scenario, at the same time making her plot or story the biggest feature of her work. She writes wholly from inspiration, yet is as careful, conscientious writer, and has always declared that the screen drama will never reach its zenith of perfection until original photoplays alone are produced, to the exclusion of anything else. And so in order to establish the correctness of her principles, she has set out to accomplish much in a wider field. Miss Justice is at her home, 41 West Forty-seventh street, New York, but will leave for the north some time during the summer.

OBSERVATIONS BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

AT LAST the various interests in the motion picture industry have taken the only course open to them for an effective and decisive campaign for its protection. This course has always been open to them, but lack of foresight on the part of some, lack of confidence in each other on the part of others, and an uncalled spirit of independence on the part of not a few who felt that they were qualified and equipped to manage their end of the business without assistance or interference from other branches of the industry, has prevented inauguration of a movement to combine all interests in one great co-operative body. The idea to bring all producers of photoplays and all exhibitors, exchange men, and manufacturers of and dealers in projecting machines, as well as the makers of the raw film stock, into one league, cannot fail to win the hearty endorsement of all who aim to protect and advance the welfare of the moving picture business. All these interests are dependent upon each other. An attack upon or injury to one affects all, and none can stand idly by and see another suffer through the acts of those whose aims are inimical to the business as a whole.

The declared policy of the new movement outlines a united and decisive campaign against official censorship in any form and for the introduction of a bill at Washington by which a Congressional committee shall be appointed to investigate the moving picture industry which, with its capitalization of half a billion dollars, ranks fourth in the industries of the nation. This voluntary movement for public investigation is designed to get before the people the real facts bearing upon the standing, conduct, operation, importance and rights of the great industry. The promoters hope thereby to bring before the public mind facts and conditions which they have been unable to adequately present in their contests against the aggression of their rights before the various state legislatures, the censorship boards and petty officials in municipalities throughout the country. The rulings against them, with few exceptions, have been so unreasonable and arbitrary that impression has been created that there is no national or state constitution in existence. So arbitrary have the censors become that they have reversed the rule of law that the prosecution must provide evidence of guilt. In their eyes the producers and exhibitors of moving pictures are automatically guilty until they prove their innocence.

Through the united movement, followed by an impartial and the widest public investigation possible, the moving picture interests propose to convince the public that there is no need of local, state or national official censorship, and they also aim to obtain a convincing ruling that they are entitled to the same constitutional privileges that apply to the freedom of press and speech. At the same time they hope to conclusively show to the public that the official censorship agitators are not acting in good faith; that they do not stand by the conditions as they exist; that existing laws and municipal regulations are ample to attain what the agitators claim can only be secured through official censorship; that pre-censorship is a forerunner of political jobbery and graft; that censorship boards and their supporters have shown they cannot operate either impartially, conservatively or consistently. Governor Whitman convicted the latter when he refused to sign the Crisman-Wheeler bill and Judge Audenreid, of the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas, has just condemned a ruling of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors for an action he declares was "manifestly unreasonable and absurd." Judge Audenreid went still further and said the Board of Censors "abused its discretion and acted arbitrarily and oppressively." The decision must be the more humiliating to the censors and their supporters on account of it following upon the heels of a victory they secured in the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, which prohibited the lower courts from interfering with rulings of the State Board of Censors unless abuse of discretion could be shown.

The new movement for protection should be unqualifiedly and enthusiastically supported by all moving picture interests if for no other purpose than the maintenance of complete unity. Failure to secure Congressional investigation or defeat official censorship should not influence any interests in lagging. The magnitude of the industry justifies anti-padding the development from time to time of great problems affecting its vital interests which can be successfully met only by united conferences and action.

The necessity of an unswerving unity of all interests and efforts to secure it is not based upon any plan to direct the great wealth represented in such a combined movement towards the improper attainment of that which should not be sought. Aside from legitimate expenditures, the financial resources have no bearing on the matter. What the promoters seek is a unanimity which will prevent the recurrence of a condition which now exists, but fortunately is not formidable enough to cause apprehension on the part of the majority engaged in the business. For instance, we find a few of the film producers favoring Federal censorship. They do not want official censorship, but have the opinion that by a Federal enactment the multitude of State and municipal censor boards may be wiped out. Taking the pulse of the moving picture business as a whole, it is more than probable that had the organization now sought been in operation a joint conference would have left the Federal bill without any co-operation from the moving picture field, even as an expedient. The same may be said of action taken by exhibitors at Cincinnati, O., who went on record in favor of Federal regulation of pictures because State censorship has not been a success. With complete unity and a conference it is doubtful if one of these exhibitors would have declared "Those who oppose it (Federal censorship) say it is un-American * * * but I maintain that censors are required for motion pictures as well as other things, because there is always a certain class who will take advantage of the freedom given them. And yet the Congressional minority report on the Smith-Hughes Federal Censorship bill states: "This bill violates the principal of the constitutional guaranty of a free press * * * it is utterly un-American in its character and in the highest degree dangerous from every point of view." It will thus be seen that through lack of that unity and opportunity for joint conference which is contemplated by the new movement we find some producers and exhibitors diametrically opposed in opinion to those who are operating in their behalf and for the welfare of the moving picture industry.

It is a noticeable fact that every time opportunity is afforded to practically test their claims the censorship agitators are discredited. They stoutly maintain that there are no existing laws and municipal regulations to regulate the character of moving pictures. This is successfully refuted by recent action of the municipal authorities in Newark, N. J. The Chief of Police and witnesses pronounced a moving picture as "unclean, unwholesome and immoral," and the license committee of the Common Council suspended the license of the theater in which the picture was shown. For the present purpose it is immaterial whether the condemnation and action was justified or not. The fact is established that the authorities can suppress improper pictures and make clean the business with more keen effect than censorship can; and this can be accomplished after the people at large have had an opportunity to censor the picture. If a mistake has been made through faulty judgment, or otherwise, the aggrieved can have their day in court without being obliged to spend weeks in showing they were victimized through an abuse of discretion in pre-censorship. It is far better to take chances with the people and the municipal authorities than to be victims of the whims and prejudices of a handful of men whose court of last resort is their own discretion and acting arbitrarily and oppressively. The municipal regulations, aside from the constitutional point of view, are preferable to the official censorship system because they not only administer a decisive blow in cases where it is shown to be warranted, but also serve as a forceful reminder to showmen and exhibitors to be cautious in their selection and booking of subjects. It would seem that this is the true keynote to the purification of the motion pictures. It is the arm of restriction that reaches the stealthy immoral producers and exhibitors, who ignore or defy censorship regulations and must ultimately drive them out of business, which the legitimate people have been trying to do. It is not the absence of regulations which has given the censorship agitators their slight foothold for complaints, but the failure of the municipal authorities to perform their duties and the failure of the agitators and other self-styled reformers to see that they do it.

FREULER RETURNS FROM CHICAGO.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, returned on Wednesday, June 7 from a hasty trip to Chicago. It is rumored that important announcements concerning Mutual are being held pending Mr. Freuler's decision.

The house talk is a good argument for the open market, the heading running "Would you buy four apples to obtain one good one?" and following this up with the statement that they take their pick of features instead of contracting for an entire output. Here the use of a larger type makes the lines easier to read.

One!

The New Family theater, Adrian, Mich., is the first to announce that owing to the cost of paper it must discontinue its monthly program on surfaced paper, and also urges its patrons to save old paper stock, particularly rags and rag paper stock. Why not use your own program or screen to further this movement? It is getting more serious all the time. It may hit you soon.

To Production Press Agents.

Read this from the Rowland and Clark Regent program, Pittsburgh, and realize that perhaps a lot of your staff sounds just as silly to the exhibitors. They are not the collection of low browed asses that some press agents take them for. Do real work.

Actual excerpt from "press notices" of a film attraction:

"All this was taken only by great pains and hardships in an isolated mountain place in Georgia which was the only section of the American continent where the exact Scandinavian scenery could be found." In other words—the only Tuesday they found open during the week was a Thursday.

Draw the Line.

We are strong for foreign advertising in programs, but now and then something comes along that we do not much care for, such as this from a southern house organ.

Vote for

John J. Diffly

Candidate for

CORONER

Montgomery County.

Eminently qualified to perform the duties of office, being familiar with Post Mortem conditions, acquired thru experience as Licensed Undertaker and Embalmer.

(Paid Political Advertisement of John J. Diffly.)

As a matter of fact the house is only indirectly responsible. The big boss hedged on the cost of the house organ and farmed it out to an advertising man with the result that John and his ripe undertaking experience is thrust at the amusement seeker.

There should be a certain supervision of foreign advertising and contracts that are farmed should carry a clause that advertising should be of a suitable character, medical and certain other styles of advertising being barred.

Pastes the Pages.

Frank Whitebeck, manager of Poli's Elm Street theater, Worcester, Mass., sends in one of his advertising sheets made up of a page taken from this paper and some hand lettered announcement. The page is a bluebird insert and this is framed with a yellow band that also encircles this text.

This is A Page

From the Moving Picture World under date of April 22nd. Do you ever read it? Get a copy and convince yourself that the feature pictures shown at Poli's Elm Street theater are the highest and best and the most costly in the world today and Remember this

You see a better projected picture here than you do anywhere else in Worcester.

The house runs vaudeville with a one reel to open and a feature to close with. It is to be regretted that we cannot reproduce the advertisement which is about 9 by 20 inches for much can be done by an exhibitor who can letter signs. This holds particularly true of the insert pages in colors. Do not wait for paper to be sent you from the exchange. Supplement this with neatly lettered signs. They can be made to tell precisely what you wish to say and you can make it just right.

For a Change.

The Calhoun, Minneapolis, Minn., always sets out a pretty house organ but that for the second week in May is unusual. It is printed in a red-brown on grey-brown paper, twelve pages, with a daily program running through the pages and a full program on the inside pages. The days are not dated, but the Calhoun always has been careless about dates. The editor recklessly offers to print verse in which rhymes are found for the house title. No prize is offered. It is sufficient for the average poet that he gets into print. The scheme is a good one where the house title does not appear in the rhyming dictionary. It would not work with the Gem or the Star. Experiments with colored stock are to be conducted carefully, but now and then a change is pleasing and this program is one of the best of recent issues.

The Back Kick.

Writing from Owensboro, Ky., Roger Thompson, a state rights exhibitor, who at present is handling the Castles, The Whirl of Life in several states, writes of the clipping from a Cincinnati paper exploiting Forbidden Fruit as "more daring than Damaged Goods," recently reproduced in these columns. He has been following that film which is being sent through that section with the same exploitation and methods, and is better able to note the result. Those who attended expecting to see "The Garden of Eden" as Mr. Thompson puts it, were disappointed and the other and better element became suspicious of all appointed and the exhibitor. That is the trouble with this form of advertising. It does not react against the offender, but against the business as a whole. He cites one manager who lost money on the following attraction because of the offense given by the lurid stuff in the papers. Neither of the films mentioned lives up to the reputation given them and it is unfortunate that they and the pictures as a whole are made to suffer at the hands of the few.

Mr. Thompson has been hobnobbing with George A. Bleich and he says that all we have written and more is true of the man from Owensboro. He finds that a layover with Mr. Bleich takes the bad taste of the other rencontre out of his mouth.

With Scenic Effects.

J. W. Ballenger, of the Dean, York, Neb., tells how he handled "The Battle Cry of Peace." To some big town managers it may seem a small thing to frame up the setting shown in the cut, but Mr. Ballenger has no staff of artists to fix things up and he knows the advantage of giving an extra display for a special feature. For that matter it would work in the cities, and lots of theaters that could get something special have simply run the film on the screen without any special demonstration. Mr. Ballenger belongs to the class of managers who know the value of making a fuss over things and he knows that merely running pictures on a screen is not the beginning and the end of the exhibition business. He writes:

We are moved to write you a few lines occasionally to let you know that we are still moving the movies.

The enclosed photograph is just a stage set used on the "Battle Cry of Peace." It was the Opening Number, and called AMERICA.

The writer made a short address regarding the nature of the play, the house lights then dimmed down and the front curtain rose to the tune of AMERICA played by our special eight-piece orchestra. As the curtain rose red lights flooded the stage, and a red spot illuminated the BIRD OF FREEDOM. It looked RICH, and the music and enthusiasm of the audience put the pep in the picture to hold them through to the very end.

As you will note, the set is mounted on rollers, so that, as the orchestra closed AMERICA the eagle moved slowly to one side and the picture started without a minute's drag. In fact it was on before the eagle had entirely disappeared, and kept the audience interested.

We turned loose 25 little rubber balloons from the top of a Bank building, each with a complimentary ticket attached, good for any seat in the house, any performance. You ought to have seen the scramble. KIDS PILED UP TO DEEP. There was a bunch of kids almost large enough to have gray hair in the mix up. Everyone wanted one free. Also there was a big audience of onlookers, and the investment in balloons was sure repaid many times by the advertising the stunt got.

Our newspaper campaign opened with a full page, and ended with a 2 col. 6 reader introduced in every issue. We papered the country with posters for a 30 mile radius, and got out a special printed 4 sheet date, which carried the title, BATTLE CRY OF PEACE, so that it was an advertisement in itself.

Business is fairly good in spite of the exodus of 1,000 students, but it keeps the gray matter working to pull the business in the dull season. Thanks to the department of which you are the editor, we get a new bunch of ideas weekly. Some we change to suit, and others we grab as they are, and we wish to extend to yourself, your department, and the boys who contribute to it from the four points of the globe, our most sincere thanks, and expressions of good will.

You do not have to own a big stage and a staff of scene painters in order to be able to do things, but only clever man whose heart is in his business can start off the audience in the right frame of mind instead of throwing the title before a cold and unresponsive mob and, as Mr. Ballenger phrases, he can put pep in the picture. They think it is in the picture, but really it is more owing to the receptive frame of mind.

Writes Letters.

William Falt, Jr., of the Avon, Utica, N. Y., puts his trust in letters: possibly carrying out the idea advanced in Picture Theater Advertising that the man who can write a good letter can write interesting press stuff. The first page of the Avon Theatre News is always a letter to his clientele, well written, brightly phrased and dealing with his own doings and the show's coming. When he took in the expositions in New York he wrote of the people he met and remarked that the theater equipment did not interest him, as he already had all of the up-to-date things in his own house. That drives home the point better than a formal declaration would. The back page he gives to back of plays and players and the inside pages to the program and house announcement, the latter coming last, the three divisions of the bill taking the second page and top of the third. If he does not use all of a half page for his program he adds a couple of lines as space permits, calling attention to the possibilities of the house as a first aid to hostesses, building up the mailing list or whatever suggests itself. These are all set in the type used for the descriptive matter and appear to be a part of the program and not an interpolation. This is better than using an irregular measurement for the programs and taking the space gained for announcement, since it preserves the balance of the layout. Try the scheme yourself some time. It should work for you, too, if you divide your program into panels.

Well, Why Not?

L. J. Burkitt, of the Lyric, Morrison, Ill., errs when he says that he is going to "bother" us considerably from now on. He cannot bother us by writing letters, and he is welcome to go as far as he likes. His main point is that the local paper charges inch rates for any write up material it runs. He thinks he'll start his own program and let the paper slide. If he has to pay inch rates for a column and will run the right sort of sheet, we think it will pay better than buying space in the regular paper. It is a mighty short sighted editor these days who does not run a photoplay department. Editors the country over are not giving from half a page to four or five pages a week to photoplay just because the man who runs the local theater is a good fellow who gives the space because they find that it pays them in the approval of their patrons. Even in Philadelphia where it once was the rule that each theater got as many lines of reading notice as they ran lines of advertising now boasts some capital photoplay departments and it is the same the country over. It is only the fossil sheet that now holds off. But we note one line in Mr. Burkitt's letter. He says:

When I bump him for a little article once in a while he politely informs me that "I never see you bringing any comps down here for my office force," so every inch I get I pay for by the inch.

Passes are as the breath of life to the country editor. Why not send him some and see what he does after that? If we ran a house and wanted space we would make the editor a photoplay fan if we not only had to give him free tickets, but throw in a drink each time he visited the house.

Mr. Burkitt also asks for an opinion on some job work, a herald and a call-inse record, done by the local man. It is good work for a small shop, but the heading is badly done. The house mark seems to be this:

YORK THEATRE

Built up to a STANDARD—Not Down to Price

This is done with type and it will be seen that the condensed letter used is too thin to stretch across the space taken by the word "theater." Either a smaller type should be used for theater and an extended letter for Lyric or, better still, a drawing should be made in which the spacing is properly and neatly done and this should be used as an original from which cuts of one and two column widths may be made, and these in turn should be electrotyped. It will cost three or four dollars, but this investment will be more than returned in added effect. As it stands no two forms are the same. Three samples are sent and each is different. The slight variation from uniformity spoils the effect. Five dollars is not much to spend on a house trade mark. It will bring back more than that.

In the newspaper advertisement sent a double rule cuts one part of the advertisement from the other. Even the office boy should know better than that, let alone a compositor. He should be chided. It is not done in the best circles. The rest of the advertisement is not badly set, but this is inexcusable in a printer.

A Few More Dates.

The Dreamland, Augusta, Ga., sends in a four page program with a new idea. The cover is in two colors, black and pink, the tint being rather too light to pay for the second run. It is used to give color to a tropical scene with a most voluptuous lady swinging in a hammock over a pink lake. It would be better to run the design as a single black form and not only save money but gain effect, for the tint is too weak to help the effect, but, to the contrary, pulls it down. Inside the program for the week is run on the second page without comment, this comment being run on the third and fourth pages, the two chief attractions sharing the back page and other leading titles getting the third. The idea is good, but all days should be dated.

What's in a Name?

The Censor is the name of a theater in Albion, Mich. Now let us search for the Maude Murray in Cleveland and the Breiting in Philadelphia. It is not a fortunate choice for a house name, in spite of its oddity. The house gets out a ten page folder, paper 2½ by 4, nicely printed and on good stock, but it must add somewhat to the expense to get the accordion fold that they use. A better fold can be devised and the placing of folding marks will also help. Seven pages are used for the daily attractions, with two underlines and a front. The various subjects are told about, but the story is not given. This is the better plan when the publisher can do his own writing. It preserves the surprise and still gains interest for the release, greater interest than would rise from the bare sketch of the story.

Hard on Owen.

Owen Moore generally gets his press notices on his work, but the Orpheum, Gardner, Mass., advertises him differently, and this is how he looks:

You can see Owen Moore, he is the lucky man that married Mary Pickford—

JORDAN IS A HARD ROAD

A Triangle Masterpiece Featuring

DOROTHY GISH

(The Beauty in the Birth of a Nation)

AND

Mary Pickford's Husband

(OWEN MOORE)

It's the Best "Western"—We Ever Saw

It would have been better to have given Mr. Moore the large type and his alliance the underline. The announcement appears in a neat six page folder that shows that the house is still on the map.

Moving.

H. A. Chenoweth, of the Opera House, Milford, Mass., is changing over to the Opera House, Westfield, Mass. Before he left Milford he was given a benefit with a double Sunday program, the evening bill being entirely different from the matinee attractions. He sends in his most recent form of advertisement which is a strip of paper just wide enough to take in the column cuts supplied by Triangle for its aims. On paper these clips would be too small, but on card they can be doubled to fit the vest pocket and distribute nicely. The cuts show up well on cheap stock and give a far better display than would local composition. If you take any service that uses a rather deep single column cut in its mat service, it will pay to try this scheme out. Room is taken at the top for a few additional lines, the entire card being 2 5/8 by 7½.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

What Is It?

W. GRAHAM JONES says that Charles L. Gaskill puts into a nutshell the fault of the picture when he says that the photoplay is but another form of the novel. He says that it is, but that it should not be. And the same day Wyndham Gittens pronounces the chief drag of the pictures the fact that it is a story produced as a play instead of a story. Mr. Jones is an actor and wants to see the play form. Mr. Gittens is an old magazine man and wants to see the story told instead of acted. They are both right and both wrong. A photoplay is a story told in action, just as we said in the very first edition of Technique. A story told in action is a story form but acted out. It is NOT a play form, but it is acted like a play. If the directors, a majority of which are old stage directors, could only realize that the photoplay must have the story form and get the play form, we should have better and more competent direction, but so long as efforts are made to tell the story as a play because a director does not know any better, just so long will we suffer the sight of a hybrid. Photoplay is a new art form that combines the play and the story, but takes most of its qualities from the story. It is a narrative, not a drama, and should be treated as such, but most directors will continue to give heed to the visual situation rather than to the mental punch because they lack the intelligence to adapt themselves to the story form. We are inclined to side with Mr. Gittens and Bannister Merwin in their belief that the best director is a story teller and then, and then, and not until then—a man who can put the story into action instead of words.

The Only Way.

Unless you can get genuinely interested in a story yourself, how can you hope to interest others in it? But do not get interested to the point where faith warps judgment.

Synopses Only.

Don't be afraid to take words for a synopsis only. The old limit of 250 words for the reel is all right where you have the continuity to back up your sketch of the plot, but when your synopsis is all you send, do not send a sketch but a scenario in its proper sense; a complete resume of the story. If you wish, you can condense to a paragraph of a hundred words or so for an introduction, but follow this with the full and complete story, whether it is one thousand words or five. There are few editors who can see a full five reel story in a thousand words. Make it plain to them. Hold to the short synopsis for the full script, but take the space you need for the story when you try to tell it as a story.

Newness.

A thing is new when it has not been done before. It does not matter that you never heard of it before. It may be new to you, and yet be an old story to others. A new author is quite puffed because we told him that his plot was old. He lives among books six days a week, but he thought out a big idea all by himself and is surprised to be told that the idea is so old that now his story is merely the point from which practical authors now start their stuff. It is the old story of the half brother and sister who nearly marry, and we have personally seen hundreds in film and script, but it has been some time since merely seen hundreds has been done into film. Let it be your rule to take it for granted that most simple themes, no matter how great their strength, have been done before whether you have seen them or not, and then use these elemental themes as starts for even bigger and better stories. But at best incest is not a pretty theme, so take something less unpleasant. Only the other day a man complained that most strong stories were sex stuff and the very next story he wrote was one of his best and absolutely clean.

Hopeful.

When you read that some company has increased its capital, rejoice and be glad. Probably the time is coming when you can take some of that money away from it. The money that is coming into the business now is mostly business money. It is money that must earn something and if it doesn't the man who finds it loafing is going to know why and presently he will discover that the director who writes his own stuff or works with a studio writer is the basic cause of the lacking interest. Then that type of director will be led into the yard and executed and in his place will come a man whose story for this week will be unlike his story for last week and last month and last year. There will be variety and the free lances will be looked to for the variety.

Some Reasons.

When we printed a letter from W. Graham Jones lately, we wondered how many other writers would get indignant at the statements made. There seems to be just one, Franklin Hall, who writes:

In your May 6 number of The Moving Picture World Mr. W. Graham Jones makes some statements which call for criticism. He states:

"That $10 a reel for a five reel story is not too small." That "Similar successions of scenes in prose are turned out by magazine writers by the mile at five cents a word."

"That 'Two hundred words will easily cover any of the average current releases.' Any competent director can spread them over five thousand feet of otherwise valuable film."

The absurdity of these statements seems apparent for the following reasons:

1. Prose without a story containing vital incidents and action has no place in the photoplay, and a large amount of magazine stories turned out by writers by the mile at five cents a word would hardly produce a dozen scenes of interest because of the absence of that quality of incidents and action. Words don't make a play. 2. A two hundred word synopsis will not cover the average current releases of five reel films. A simple story of a word would in some cases be possible in so few words. But think of asking even our most competent directors to make a feature multiple reel picture from one so short and give the author of the idea credit for the work or pay him for what the director does!

Therefore? Why should not the author work out the acting plot himself? Mr. Sargent has well said—"There are others (beside editors and directors) who have ideas."

And further, why should an author who has a big idea sell it for a song when, if he is capable, he can give an original touch to the many scenes and turn out something different from the trite methods of the hack which we see so much and which the people are becoming heartily tired of.

The acting plot is the real thing. But it requires weeks of labor and believe me sometimes, more often, months of deep concentrated thought. He must visualize each scene and exercise care that he does not destroy continuity of thought. He must create incidents that are interesting, gripping and thoroughly in harmony with his plot or complications will arise and without great care that he does not destroy continuity of thought. It must work will be a hodge-podge of incongruities. Hence, fifty or a hundred words as a description of the main or vital theme of your play, together with the action, the cast and scene plot should be all that is necessary and for which one should be paid upon its merit.

We are with Mr. Hall "all fours" in his propositions. If a story is worth making from the author's synopsis, that idea is worth money, whether it is told in twenty words or two thousand. It is the idea and not the physical labor of typewriting for which the author should collect. Even the bare suggestion from which a two reel story should be made should be worth not less than $50, for without that idea the work of the reconstruction man would be valueless. He has everything but the idea. Without the idea his work is worth nothing. If a script is worth a theoretical price of one hundred dollars a reel surely the idea should be worth not less than half of that sum, yet even some of the best companies pay ten and even five per cent. for the idea. If you are a day laborer, charge for your time by the hour. If you are a thinker, charge by the idea.

Different.

The early bird may catch the worm, but the early script catches no checks.

Selling Wisdom.

If you have written a good story, do not lose faith in it if it does not sell—but first be positive that it really is a good story.

THE THIRD EDITION

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of material awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 142.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theatre managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Which is the more efficient, a carbon or metallic lamp?
lamp? What is the relative light-giving power per watt?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 135.

The Roll of Honor on Question 135 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; L. Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; R. S. Fanning, Chabonago, Texas; George F. Cusick, Elizabeth, N. J.; F. E. Bell, Palestine, Texas; and Walter Collins, Timin, Ohio.

The Roll of Honor replies to question 135 were of very good, but no single reply gave all the points for and against the use of glass in the lens ports, therefore I have myself, assisted by the Roll of Honor replies tabulated these various things and presented them in the form of a reply to question 135.

Reply to Question No. 135.

By F. H. Richardson, New York, N. Y.

The Question:

What arguments are there for and against glass in the lens and observation ports? What kind of glass would you suggest for lens ports? What is a "shadow box," how would you apply one to the observation port, and what purpose would it serve?

The Answer:

The various arguments in favor of glass in the lens and observation ports are: (a) Prevents draughts, which are always objectionable, may be quite injurious to the operator's eyes, are often unhealthy, and may be, under some conditions, highly dangerous. These air currents, with their dust, which is in fact the lenses and the mechanism of the projector. (b) Prevents noise in operating room from disturbing the audience. Noise may be caused by worn projectors, motor generator sets, alternating current arcs, talk, or rewinding. (c) Compels installation of vent pipes so that operator will get fresh air instead of the second hand article which enters via the ports, which is particularly unhealthy if the operating room is located up near the ceiling, as it usually is. With the lens ports stopped up it would be absolutely necessary to ventilate the operating room, since, unless this were done the room would be unbearably hot, especially in summer.

The points against glass in the ports are: (a) Glass in lens ports will cause some loss of light by absorption and reflection, though if proper glass is used the loss will be but slight. (b) There is likely to be some reflection from the surface of the observation port glass, which will, to some extent, interfere with the operator's view of the picture. This may, however, be entirely eliminated by setting the glass at an angle, instead of straight up and down. (c) The glasses must be kept perfectly clean and free from dust, which involves considerable additional labor.

Kind of Glass: A photographic plate from which the emulsion has been removed by soaking in a solution made by dissolving, a large handful of ordinary washing soda in about two quarts of warm water, is best for both the lens and observation ports. Such plates, already used, may be obtained from any photographer. Never use any other glass in a lens port, but if you cannot obtain a photographic plate large enough for the observation port, then you may use a very carefully selected pane of thin window glass. Be certain, however, to select one in which there is no visible flaw.

A shadow box is an open frame surrounding an object, the same being painted dull black on the inside. As applied to the operating room observation port, the shadow box should be just an inch or two larger than the observation port, and should be ten or twelve inches deep. It is designed to prevent the operator's view of the picture being obstructed by light reflected by glass in the port, or by light in the operating room.

Dual Brooklyn Union.

The editor is in receipt of an invitation to visit an organization known as the Motion Picture Workers' Union of Brooklyn, an organization recently formed, which designs to take into membership operators, musicians, ushers, reel boys, lecturers, exchange help, porters, etc., in fact, all men or women identified with the motion picture theatrical business. The writer of the invitation, Alfred De Gery, secretary of the Union, says:

The Motion Picture Workers' Union will not only cover Brooklyn, but the whole United States after we get Brooklyn and Greater New York organized.

Your plan of organization is the I. W. W. plan, pure and simple, and whereas I tell you frankly that from many points of view it is a very excellent plan of organization, still in my opinion and judgment it would be extremely unwise for New York City operators, or any other operators for that matter, to affiliate themselves with that kind of organization, since to do so would be to immediately enter into a fight not only with the stage employees and the electricians, but with practically the whole labor movement, which is, rightly or wrongly, organized under the American Federation of Labor plan of organization.

I am perfectly willing to admit, and, in fact, have upon several occasions pointed out to local 306 the fact that Brooklyn has been to some extent neglected. This was, however, taking all conditions into consideration, unavoidable. I do not believe, though, that the Brooklyn operator is going to benefit himself by taking an action which means, in effect, jumping out of the frying pan into the fire, and which I shall no doubt reap your enemy. I am compelled to most emphatically advise Brooklyn operators to not affiliate with your organization.

I have not a doubt but the manager will welcome your union with open arms, and make some concessions to it, because he very well knows that, regardless of the possible relative merits of the plan of organization, the entrance of a dual organization into the field is going to act just as it always acts, and that is to keep the operator back, and prevent him from securing any material advantage through organization. It is no use to tell me that it won't work that way, my brother, because you have been in the organized labor movement for more than thirty years, and I have seen literally dozens of instances of this kind. They always end the same: a fight between the two organizations and nothing permanent gained by either. Moreover, let me tell you that your organization is foredoomed to lose, because it will have to fight the entire labor movement of New York City, and you can't do that successfully. I freely grant that you are probably entirely sincere, but, my friend, when you start out to form a dual union of operators you are making a tremendous mistake, and one which will react on the men themselves by keeping them back, possibly for years. My advice to the Brooklyn men is, if you have any complaint regarding the methods practiced by 306 get into that body, attend its meetings, and proceed to literally and vigorously "raise the devil" until the things you complain of are remedied.

Off Center.

Hidelgo theater, El Paso, Texas, asks:

What will be the effect in the projection if the operating room is 8 feet out of center, the building being 41 feet wide, and the throw 100 feet.

If the operating room contains two machines and it is 8 feet off center, then one machine will be 8 + 1/2 = 9 1/2 feet off center with the screen, whereas the other will be 8 - 1/2 = 7 1/2 feet off center with the screen. The result would be a side keystone effect, which could be remedied by filling in the aperture at the top and bottom and filing it out. See Page 156, third edition of the Handbook. There would be some distortion. That is to say, the light ray would have to travel farther to reach one side of the screen than the other; therefore, since the rays spread as they travel, objects in one side of the picture would be magnified more than in the other, but if the picture be not more than 16 feet wide and the throw be 100 feet, this would probably not be very noticeable.

The worst trouble would be out-of-focus effect, which could only be remedied by stopping down the lens, or raising one side of the aperture plate, and raising one side of the aperture plate is hardly a practical thing to do with any machine, and is impracticable with many of them. You can secure depth of focus which will overcome the out of focus effect by reducing the diameter of the objective, but this, of course, means light loss. You had better get that operating room in the center if you can possibly do so. Of course you can get a fairly good picture under the conditions named, but you ought to want the very best picture possible, and the best possible picture cannot be obtained under those conditions.

Educational Committee.

R. J. Young, Boston, Mass., says:

Note that Utica, N. Y., Local 337 has started an Educational Division. This is, I believe, an excellent action for the local to take. Boston Local 182 has had an Educational, or Progressive Projection Committee for some time.

Glad to hear it, Brother Young, but the amount of good accomplished by committees of this kind will depend directly upon the activity displayed by the committee and the interest shown by the individual members of the organization. Personally, I believe that one of the very best, most effective actions an organization can take to arouse its members to the necessity for maintaining excellence in results on their screen is the checking up of the work of the individual members without the aid of the committee and the interest shown by the individual members of the organization. You Can Search Me.

L. P. Gregory, New York City, says:

I have a copy of the opening night program of the new Rialto theatre, 42nd Street and Seventh Avenue, New York City. I notice therein pictures of the musical director, the concert manager; also of the personal assistant to Mr. Rothapfel, of the manager, of the treasurer, of the director of publicity, and a picture of S. L. Rothapfel. I don't, however, find any picture of the chief operator. Why is this? In a list together with the head usher, master of properties, chief electrician, first assistant electrician, and second assistant electrician, I do find the name of the chief operator, though not that of the assistant. What is the idea? It seems to me the public would at least be as much interested in the personal appearance of the man who puts on the picture as that of the treasurer and the director of publicity. What do you think about it, Brother Richardson?

I don't think about it at all. The operator is merely the boob who puts on the show; he is the man who does more than any other individual to send the audience away pleased or otherwise; outside of that he does not amount to much. Seriously, however, this whole thing probably, away down at its roots, hinges on the fact that the operator is not spectacular. He doesn't wear a plug hat, nor does he appear before the assembled multitude in a claw-hammer, or even in uniform, and I believe that is the reason he gets little or no recognition in matters of this kind. It really is, however, just a little bit surprising that the projecting end receives even less consideration than the first and second assistant electricians.

From Cleveland.

L. J. Shafrenak, Cleveland, Ohio, writes:

Well, you are back at your desk again. No doubt your trip proved profitable, and I hope that operators and the business in general will benefit therefrom. I myself find that in our trip out to the National carbon factory I learned a whole lot more about carbons in their making than I thought I had. I wish also to thank you for your comments or our operating room. Possibly you did not know I also work for McGowan at the Cameraphon theatre, but I felt a little bit peeved to see only one of the operators, Brother Noonan, get all the credit. Besides had I not received your photo from the World when I purchased the second edition of the Handbook you would not have found it on the wall. Your remarks, however, with regard to Brother Noonan are not in the least exaggerated. He's a good man, is Noonan, and deserving of all you said. It was myself who sent you that cushion top with the T. A. emblem a few years ago.

Attached hereto find drawing of the belt tightener you saw on my machine. If it meets your approval you can possibly benefit some operator who cares to make one for himself by publishing it.

The belt tightener is O. K. Yes, I think we all learned considerable about carbon manufacture that day. The trip through the plant was both of interest and profit. My visit to your theater was a short one and, of course, I did not get all the details, which accounts for my apparent neglect to mention the "other operator," who it now appears was yourself. Apologies.

Can't Do Without Them.

William F. Reed, treasurer of the Harrodsburg Amusement Co., Harrodsburg, Ky., says:

Enclosed find check for $4.00 for which kindly mail me the new Handbook. I am glad it is out, for I have been waiting patiently for it. The Moving Picture World and the Handbook are two things the exhibitor absolutely cannot do without and stay in sight of the procession. I am operator for this concern, as well as its treasurer, and while we are, to quote Luke McLuke, "small town Hicks," still anybody who can beat our picture for clearness and steadiness will have to leave their couch very early in the morning; at least that is what travelling men and strangers say; also in my trips to Cincinnati and Louisville I have not seen any better picture, though to be sure there are nicer houses. If you are ever down this way on your no-devil just switch around into the oldest town west of the Allegheny Mountains and we will not run you away from the box office, but will take genuine pleasure in filling every one of your hollow teeth with spring chicken and old country ham, not to mention the trimmings. In closing I wish you every success in the world in your fight for the operator and the moving picture industry.

Man, man! If you knew how good that old country ham sounds to Yours Truly, you would not have taken the risk of offering it as a bait. I am particularly partial to that sort of fodder. Don't know when I will be able to come to Harrodsburg, but there's no telling what may happen in the future.

Some Job.

From Tennessee comes the following. The name of the town and theater is suppressed, because I could not publish such an article and give the names without knowing the facts to be absolutely correct, and I cannot go to Tennessee to investigate. Tennessee writes:

If a certain theater in this town should happen to advertise for an operator, here is what any brother who applies will be up against. First you must work with a negro. He threads and starts the machine and you do the rest. They want you to come down in the morning and pass around hand-bills, and paint signs on the sidewalk. If the colored man does anything wrong you are the goat. They won't allow you to associate with their competitor or his operator. If you are not kept busy at the theater proprietor owns a garage—get me?

The foregoing is given as illustrating the very vague and decidedly hazy ideas some small town managers and owners have of the responsibility of the position of operator. It would be, I think, a waste of good ink to comment on such an utterly foolish proposition as this. The "manager" in question would do exceedingly well to stick to his garage. He may be a garage man par excellence, but as a theater manager he is something worse than a very bad joke.

Spherical Aberration.

The following article contributed by Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., is presented for the consideration of our readers. It will be observed that Brother Martin's drawing sustains the conclusion we have long since arrived at, namely: that the practical effect of spherical aberration is unevenness of illumination at the spot and screen.

In Fig. 1, a pin-point crater is shown focused at the aperture, and the effect of spherical aberration in the condensers is shown, somewhat exaggerated in order to make the meaning more clear. It is also necessary to use a pin-point crater to prevent a confusion of lines which would make the drawing unintelligible.

Now it is well known that a properly corrected objective lens will focus every separate point on the film to a corresponding position on the screen. This idea has been faithfully carried out in Fig. 1, in the construction of the secondary beam, or the throw, although the screen is so far distant that it cannot be shown in the drawing.

It is noticed that the conditions produced by spherical aberration in the condenser system, or the primary beam, are carried forward and again reproduced in the secondary beam. Section A-A reproduced at A' A', and B B at B' B'.

In most cases when using a short focus objective, the shutter cannot be placed back much farther than B' B', where the beam from already begun to diverge. Also, with the same objective, position A' A' is really the narrowest section of the total beam; but the concentrated portion at the center continues to narrow down toward B' B', but the shutter cannot most effectively be placed there on account of the spread of the rays at the outer edges of the blades.

If the reader will examine those diagrams of the beam which show no spherical aberration in the condensers, there will be found a shutter position similar to A' A' which is ideal from every point of view.

In this position the beam has a minimum thickness and in passing through it the shutter blade simultaneously cuts off the light from every point on the film and the shadow of the edge of the blade does not show on the screen. The cut-off and cut-on of the shutter is thus made a true and clean division of action which is much sought after by machine manufacturers as a means for reducing flicker. Hence another boost for corrected condensers.

From San Diego.

K. G. Bush, secretary Broadway Amusement Company, San Diego, Cal., writes as follows:

The writer has recently received a copy of the new Handbook. It surely should prove of great benefit to any one connected with motion pictures. We are having a problem in getting sufficient light on the screen at our Broadway theater. We use Ernemann projectors, and have found them to be very satisfactory indeed. The two machines now in use have run steadily for a year and three-quarters, with absolutely no trouble, and seem to be still in first class condition. We use $\frac{3}{4}$ inch National top and $\frac{3}{4}$ inch American Bio lower carbons. Our success with this combination is very good. We ordinarily draw 60 amperes D. C., but can go as high as 72. Condenser sizes are $\frac{6}{16}$ and $\frac{7}{16}$ Klein French condensers; E. F. of objective 100 feet. We take current directly from the mains, using no economizer or transformer. The screen is plaster and is treated with a preparation put out by Win Browning of Los Angeles, which seems to give very good results, as the picture shows but little eye strain from the front seats, with a marked division of vision between the side seats. The house seats 350, and is 60 feet wide; front row of seats is about 20 feet from the screen. Until recently we used Paramount service, but now are in the open market, using the best from the World, Metro and Bluebird. The main trouble, as stated above, is that the picture is rather dark, particularly when running the heavily tinted films, such as Lasky frequently puts out. If you can offer any suggestions that would tend to improve this condition we would be glad indeed to hear from you and pay your fee for same. The objective lens diameter is 4.9 16 inches; distance from its rear surface to the film when picture is in focus on the screen is 3 11/16 inches, and the extreme distance possible to get the film from the apex of the front condenser is 1 1/4 inches. Apex of condenser is now about 1 1/2 inches from the film.

It requires but a glance at Table No. 1, page 141 of the Handbook to show that this condition is very, very bad indeed. In the first place you should pull your lampouse back just as far as you can get it in second place, in order to avoid light loss with your present objective lens it would be necessary to get the lampouse back so that the apex of the front condensing lens would be about 25 inches from the film. That, however, would be a very extreme condition. You need objective lenses of larger diameter. Looking at Table 1, page 141 of the Handbook, you will see that with 35 inches between the apex of the front condenser and the film, and a 3 11/16 inch back focus you would have to have a lens 2 1/4 inches in diameter in order to accommodate the light ray. Very likely the only way you could get that would be to purchase what is known as the Gundlach No. 2 lens, or a Crown or Bausch and Lomb lens of equal diameter, and then stop it down to the requirement of the table, namely: 2 1/4 inches. This, of course, would mean considerable expense. But it also means considerable expense to continue to purchase a large percentage of your light, and that is exactly what will happen just as long as you keep the lens you have working under the conditions the deficiencies of your projection machine make necessary. Possibly you may be able to so change the machine table that you can get the lampouse back where it belongs. I do not remember just how the Ernemann table was built, therefore cannot say whether that would be practicable or not.

As to the carbons I would call your attention to the new National metal cored negatives would.

You say you are drawing "60 amperes D. C." without any economizer or transformer. Well if it is D. C. you could not use an economizer or transformer, so I assume that is a typographical error, and that you are pulling 60 amperes A. C. If that is the case and you can go as high as 72 amperes A. C. why the screen effect of 72 amperes A. C. would be practically the same as 35 to 40 amperes D. C. except in the quality of the light. Use of alternating current is, for projection, altogether out of date, and you should have a current rectifying device of some kind, which I note in an unpublished paragraph of your letter you are going to install.

Lens System.

W. Becker, Schenectady, N. Y., says:

Please advise me as to my lens system, basing the advice upon the following data. Objective lens $\frac{5}{16}$ E. F.; diameter opening of objective lens 1 7/16 inches; back focus $\frac{3}{16}$ inches; width of picture 14 feet 4 1/2 inches; distance lens to screen 87 1/2 feet; drawing 50 amperes A. C. through an economizer using a Gold Wire Screen. Please don't ask me the same as 35 to 40 amperes D. C. as I just simply know the firm won't do it, therefore I am trying to make the best of what I have.

Brother Becker if you have a Handbook, as you ought to have, you could settle all this for yourself. Please understand that is not a slam at you, but merely calling your attention to the fact that you ought to have one of the books, and be prepared to deal with problems of this kind yourself. You have given me all the necessary information except the distance from the apex of the front condenser to the film when the lampouse is pulled back as far as you can get it. If you have a Handbook, turn to Table No. 1, page 141, and look at the left hand column until you come to 1 7/16, in the ninth horizontal division, then follow across that division to the right and you will find 2.88 to be the longest back focus that diameter objection will accommodate without light loss, provided you can get 22 inches between the aperture and the apex of the front condenser. Assuming you can get that distance, you would have to have a lens $\frac{1}{16}$ inches in diameter in order to avoid light loss. As the matter now lies the only thing you can do is pull your lampouse back as far as you can get it, and if that distance exceeds 20 inches use two $\frac{7}{16}$ inch condensers. If it exceeds 16 inches, and is less than 20 inches use a $\frac{6}{16}$ and a $\frac{7}{16}$ inch condenser. If it is less than 17 inches use two $\frac{6}{16}$ inch condensers, placing the condensing lenses so that they almost, but not quite touch each other. You say your firm won't get another lens. Well, perhaps not, but they will pay for one anyhow, because they have some bills, and they will pay for it very well have to pay for that loss in the form of electric bills, so that, in course of time, they will have paid the price of a new lens without getting anything at all in return, therefore the sensible thing to do is get a lens of larger diameter. If you will tell me the distance between the apex of the front condenser and the film when the lampouse is back as far as it will go, I will tell you what diameter lens you must have to avoid light loss, or if you have a Handbook you can get that information yourself from Table 1, page 141.

It Would Work.

E. Paterson, Tama, Iowa, answers question 132, and says:

Although this is my first letter to the department I have been a reader of its columns for some time, and find therein some very great helps to the operator. I procured the new Handbook and it sure contains some great dope, particularly in the optical and electrical end of things. Is there any possible way by means of which two arcs can be lit off one Fort Wayne compensator? The idea is, when nearing the end of the reel on one machine, to strike the other arc, and thereby obtain a perfect change. The way we have it now is: the two arcs are connected in series, and a single pole, double throw switch is connected to the switch in either lamp. I could find nothing with regard to this in the new Handbook. With our present arrangement, when near the end of one reel I freeze the carbons on arc No. 2 and open the short circuit switch, as per diagram. Then when we change over the switch is thrown to short circuit the other lamp.

Your arrangement, Brother Paterson, is perhaps as good as any I have seen. The only way you can burn two arcs off one compensator is to place them in series. The only trouble with this is that the added resistance of the second arc decreases the amperage considerably, which of course shows on the screen. The way Brother Paterson has the thing rigged up is: he connects one leg of the compensator secondary to the lower carbon of arc No. 1, and the other secondary leg with the lower carbon of arc No. 2. He then connects the upper carbons of both lamp one and two with the center binding post of a double-throw, single pole switch. From one end of this switch he connects directly to any wire running to the arc on the reel coming to the end of the reel, while the other end of the switch is connected to the other wire leading to the lower carbon arm of lamp No. 2. Sketch this out and you will see how it works. It is a very good arrangement.

Official Errors.

The powers that be in Sioux City, Iowa, have, evidently without consulting any competent authority, evolved a new building code which, insofar, as it applies to moving picture theater operating rooms, has only one thing to recommend it, viz: it might be worse. Here are some of the most glaring errors.

"The 'booth' shall be completely enclosed with fireproof construction, or shall have a substantial braced frame of structural steel with riveted or bolted connections. The door must be of corresponding construction, and must be substantially hung with hinges in an iron angle frame and must be self-closing. For the benefit of those who evolved this particular clause let me say that a gravity closing, sliding door, is, where conditions permit of its installation, much to be preferred as against the hinged door.

"There shall not be more than two openings in the 'booth' for each moving picture machine, and one opening for the operator and one for the machine. The opening for the operator's view (they mean observation port, but don't seem to know its proper designation, Ed) shall not exceed 48 square inches, and the opening for the machine shall not exceed 64 square inches."

This is indeed beautiful. The opening for the observation lens need not, in most instances, exceed 9 square inches, with an opening of no greater size for the stereopticon, if one there be, yet they allow 64 square inches, although they limit the area of the observation port to 48 square inches, which operates to seriously and needlessly hamper the work of the operator. I have not time to go into this matter and explain to the Sioux City authorities all the reasons why the limiting of the observation port to 48 square inches is not only utterly needless, totally foolish, and entirely bad. It probably wouldn't do any good anyhow. They evidently simply copied this particular thing from some one of the multitude of ordinances containing an idiotic clause of similar import instead of consulting those who are presumed to know something about such matters. And, as for instance, the Sioux City Operators' Union, or the projection department of the Moving Picture World.

"Shutters shall be held open by a small combustible cord in series with a fusible link at each opening, and one on the main cord so arranged that the link is suspended directly over the door when in the slide of the apparatus. The cord shall be so placed that the shutters may be easily released by hand."

This section is very loosely drawn, and it would take considerable guessing to determine what is meant by "in the slide of the apparatus." There is one item in this particular section which is distinctly good, viz: where it says that the master cord (they don't call it master-cord because they probably do not know the proper name for it) be so arranged that the link is suspended directly over the door when in the slide of the apparatus, meaning, presumably, over the aperture of the machine.

"There shall not be more than two shelves, 12 inches wide and 4 feet long. * * * All shelves must be of slate, steel, or other fireproof construction, or if constructed of wood shall be at least 2 inch thick, and entirely covered with tin, with lock joints, and shall be supported by iron brackets."

Piffle! Piffle! And then some more piffle. The operating room is presumed to be thoroughly fireproof. Will the owl-eyed wisecracks who promulgated this particular piece of wisdom inform me what earthly difference a couple of hard wood shelves, or even pine shelves, for that matter, would make in the case of fire, even though they be not "covered with tin with lock joints"? Extinguishing the two chunks of wood did catch fire. The little additional heat and smoke they would make would not amount to two whoops in the new Jerusalem one way or the other. That "cover it with tin with lock joints" is too ridiculous to receive serious consideration.

"Every permanent moving picture 'booth' must be provided with an air inlet in two opposite sides of the 'booth' for supplying fresh air to the operator. Each inlet must be 12 inches long by 3 inches high, the bottom located 3 inches above the floor of the 'booth.' All inlets must be covered with wire netting of not greater than 1/4 inch mesh, and must be securely fastened to the covering of the 'booth' by means of metal strips and bolts or screws."

Nothing said, you will observe, about connecting these outlets by duct with the outer air. Assuming the operating room (not "booth") to be where it usually is misplaced, viz: at the top of the highest gallery in the house, the operator would be regaled, NOT with fresh air, but with second hand atmosphere which had already been used by the audience and for which they had to further pay, the same being quite possibly beautifully flavored with garlic, onions and other more or less delightful odors. The "wire over the opens" is probably copied from the Massachusetts law. I have never been able to understand just why this wire is required. Possibly, however, it is to prevent the operator from "cricking out" of the opening during the hot summer months, which he might possibly do when you consider the following clause in the Omaha law:

"Near the center of the top of the booth shall be a circular opening of not less than 8 inches in diameter provided with a sheet iron flange securely fastened to the roof covering and made perfectly tight to prevent smoke getting out. Securely fastened to this flange shall be a circular sheet metal plate not less than 8 inches in diameter which shall lead to the outside of the building or into a fireproof flue. Such metal pipe shall be protected or spaced where it passes near any woodwork according to the provisions of this code governing stove pipes.

"Inlets and outlets as above described may be omitted if booth has window through outside wall, supplying equivalent natural ventilation."

Why is it imperatively necessary that the opening shall be circular?

The air would go out a square hole just as well, wouldn't it? But the absurd part is the "8 inches in diameter." For the information of the Sioux City law makers let me say that the absolute minimum diameter should be exactly twice that, and unless a fan is required in the flue then the diameter should be not less than 18 or 20 inches. Leaving ventilation out of the question, what earthly chance would there be of the smoke and gases from a film fire passing out through an 8 inch pipe? With that 8 inch pipe stuck in, instead of the gases and smoke passing away in case of fire it would generate so rapidly that it would very quickly be forced out around the sides of the shutters covering every opening in the room and when that happens you just watch the audience pile up in a heap. You will also observe there is no provision made for a damper, which should be normally held open, the same only to be allowed to be held shut by attaching to the master-cord. You will also observe that even this little, piffing vent pipe may be omitted if there is a window through the outside wall. These law makers do not know that in order to get good projection the operating room must be dark, and therefore the windows in the outside wall must be closed and made light tight or else effectually darkened by means of a properly constructed shutter, the installation of which the law does not require. Therefore if an operator knew his business and had this window closed, in case of fire the condition would be very much worse than bad.

"Every rheostat used in any moving picture 'booth' must be mounted on a slate insulator properly supported on steel supports properly fastened to the floor."

The law makers do not know that a rheostat should, if placed in the operating room at all, be put as high as you can get it so that the heat will pass directly out of the vent flue without first parboiling the operator. But I forget that the Sioux City operating rooms won't have a vent flue, merely a solid, gilded metal wheat straw: so it won't make much difference where the rheostat is placed.

"All the machines must be securely fastened to the floor to prevent accidental overturning or moving of same."

Ah Hah! At last we have before us an example of almost more than human wisdom. Strike your machine down, gentlemen! The railroad company will doubtless loan you a few spikes. Imagine accidentally overturning a Baird projection machine! Seriously, there is nothing wrong with this particular provision except its absurdity. It certainly would be an example of a solid ivory top theatre manager or operator who would not fasten his projection machine down, or at least so anchor it that it would not be accidentally moved by some one falling against it.

This whole proposition is but a repetition of the utterly foolish acts of other law making bodies, who, when a thing of this kind if up for action, instead of consulting some authority in matters of this kind, or the local organization of operators, proceed to copy the blunders already committed by others, and solemnly enact them into law. The only thing that can be said for the Sioux City law is that I have seen worse ones—considerably worse. The two distinctly bad features of it is the vent flue, and the needless limiting of the size of the observation port to an opening which makes for inefficient work on the screen.

Wagner Converter.

John Kortfil, New York City, orders a Handbook, and says:

Regarding operating room dimensions I would like to suggest 10 x 9 feet high for two machines. The present law, which compels a seven foot height, is not sufficient, particularly for a tall operator and big machines in the summer time. My room is 9 x 9 with a 7 foot ceiling, and I find the 9 x 9 port very comfortable, since I can walk around both machines easily; but the ceiling is too low.

Am using Specr carbons since 1916, 3/4 cored above and 5/8 cored for the bottom. I do not like the cored lower so will as the 5/8 solid Dio, but it is difficult to get solid carbons. The 3/4 upper I find to be excellent. There is no fault in them.

screen. The picture is as bright as can be.

Am pulling 50 amperes through a Wagner converter, which in two years has not given me even a little bit of trouble. Have an 80 foot throw with an 11 foot picture on an Atmospheric

Yes, I agree with you that a 7 foot ceiling is too low 8 feet ought to, where it is possible to get it, be the minimum. I also agree with your 9 x 9 dimensions. More than that I won't say until others have been heard from.

As to the "Atmospheric Screen," until the manufacturers show and demonstrate to this department that they have an article of merit I cannot comment intelligently. If their screen is a really good one it is to be presumed that they would make that fact known.

You had better be careful or the Wagner people will get angry and bite you for talking about their outfit in that way

Camp Fire Pictures.

C. A. H., Zanesville, Ohio, writes:

I have been a consistent reader of your department since its inception and can truthfully say that I have derived from it more benefit and secured more knowledge on the subject of cinematography than from any other source I have been able to find. I have read several books on the subject which I secured from the local libraries here, but none of them have the real "dope" as have your articles in the World.

Have been an amateur photographer for several years and about a year ago became interested in motion pictures." I bought a camera and have made some pretty fair stuff, mostly local pictures for exhibitors and occasionally sending some stuff to the weeklies. Now I want a little information direct. On Decoration Day I am going to make some pictures at the Soldiers' Home in the northern part of the state, parade and the unveiling of a monument, etc. There are to be some exercises in the evening which I want to get. The idea is, I believe, that the old soldiers are to have a campfire and swap yarns as they did in '61. This is part of the program and I think by the use of magnesium flares I can get it. I have never done this before and am writing you for the best method procedure. What lens aperture shall I use? I have a Eosch and Lomb Zeiss F. 3.5. From whom can I get these flares?

It is certainly most gratifying to me to know my efforts are appreciated and I wish to thank you for your kind words. My stock of knowledge is absolutely free to anyone who is interested in making motion pictures. All you have to do is to drop me a line and I will answer your questions to the best of my ability.

Motion pictures made at night are no more difficult than those made in the day time, providing, of course, you know how to proceed. Your idea of the campfire is a good one and should make a very pleasant picture. Magnesium flares are made in four different sizes and are about the shape of a Roman candle, but a little larger in diameter. They are made to burn one-half, one, one and a half and two minutes respectively, the largest size being about twenty inches in length. For a campfire effect it would be necessary to dig a hole deep enough to allow the flare to stick out of the ground about ten inches. Then pile the wood over it in such a manner that the flame would strike a part of it and spread. Be sure and set your camera on the lee side, for if you are on the windward side and there is a breeze blowing the smoke is liable to get into the lens and spoil the picture. A tree or two near at hand would also add to the artistic effect, as would the tinting of the positive a light copper color. Use your widest lens aperture. These magnesium flares can be obtained from I. C. Newman & Company, 320 Broadway, New York City, dealers in motion picture fireworks.

No Static.

J. F. D., Indianapolis, Ind., writes:

I see by your article in the Moving Picture World that static trouble seems to be the bane of the majority of camera men. Would you believe if I told you I have never had a foot of static since operating a motion picture camera. Well, it's the truth. I have exposed many thousand feet of film in my camera and have never had any trouble from that source. This camera I have been using almost daily for fourteen months and I think my good luck is due to the fact that it is of nearly all metal construction. The only part that is not metal is the top and bottom and part of the side, which is of wood, and the velvet clips in the magazines. But I have my troubles, nevertheless, particularly in the finishing of my work. Most of it I send to Chicago, but am not at all satisfied with the character of the work. Could you recommend a firm there in New York who do first grade work and what are the prices? Do you think there is any possibility of the price of raw stock advancing?

ing? Cameras, chemicals, lenses, etc., have gone up, and it seems only natural that film should.

Anyone who is not troubled with static can certainly consider himself very fortunate. But when you make that statement you had better knock on wood. Fully seventy-five per cent. of retakes in the studios are necessary because of this very aggravating occurrence. There is absolutely no sure fire preventive for static, but there are many things one can do to reduce it to a minimum.

Yes, I think your luck is due to the metal construction of your camera.

I cannot recommend any particular firm here who do developing and printing. Those whose advertisements appear in this paper can be depended upon for satisfactory work.

The most of them charge five cents a foot for developing your negative and printing on positive stock.

No, I do not think there is any immediate danger of film going up in price. Only those commodities that are imported have advanced.

Mysteries of Picture Making.

The Illustrated World Magazine for May carries a number of interesting photographs taken in the finishing department of the motion picture studio.

The explanations which accompany the pictures are quite amusing to the one initiated in the "mysteries of movie making" on account of the evidence ignorance of the author in the practical work of the studio.

Compensation.

This word compensation is the only one I could think of to head a few lines to thank the many correspondents whom I have never met except through these columns.

This department has been a labor of love with me—it has been hampered out in the spare moments that I could grab from a busy life of bread and butter grubbing, and had it not been for the encouragement of the letters you have written me I would not have been able to keep it up.

It was with many misgivings that I wrote an article (Bigger Salaries for Cameramen, March 25, 1916) and took a whack at some of the failings that beset our profession. I feel mighty proud and yet mighty humble, too, at the many letters of appreciation which were sent me and more than all else do I appreciate the Honorable Life Membership presented me by the Static Club of Los Angeles and the letter which they sent regarding the article.

That's what I mean by compensation, the feeling that my efforts have helped my fellow craftsmen and that they have sanctified my labor with their approbation.

Almost in the same mail with the letter from the Static Club came one from John Macdonald, Secretary of the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain, informing me that at last meeting of the executive council I had been elected to the coveted honor of a Fellow in that society, the highest of its kind in the world, but I assure you that I have not half the pleasure and pride in the decision of that august body that I have in the approval of my fellow workers in the great field of cinematography.

It is my fondest hope that I shall continue to merit the kind expressions you have accorded me and that with riper experience I shall ever grow stronger in your hearts and in your work.

It is only with your good will and your co-operation that I can do this. May it ever increase. Seiah!

Another Amateur Camera Builder.

Since publishing the notice in regard to the camera made by Mr. Conrad Thiele, Mr. Fred Keys of Sapulpa, Oklahoma, has sent photographs and a short description of a camera which he constructed from the mechanism of a Kinetograph camera and a Williamson claw movement.

The original camera which he used for this construction was a small one of one hundred feet capacity, in which the movement was largely constructed from die castings and which would, consequently, not stand a great amount of wear. For this reason he substituted the Williamson claw movement which he purchased separately.

It is perhaps pertinent to say that the Williamson claw movement to be used in the construction of either cameras or printers may be purchased from G. Gennert, 13th Street, New York City.

He enlarged the capacity of the camera from one hundred to two hundred feet by constructing a new and heavier case of mahogany and other hard woods.

He says: "I have made several films, one 2,800 feet long and have had very good luck, doing the developing and printing myself, printing with a home-made printer that I constructed from a No. 5 Power's head run by an electric motor."

It will be remembered that this is the same type of head which Mr. Thiele used in the construction of his camera.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Musical Setting for "Reggie Mixes In."

Released June 11th by the Triangle Film Corporation.

Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg (by special arrangement with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York).

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchanges in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues, which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 10½ T "A new sort of girl" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 30 D "Fight continues" is a description of action.

Reggie, a wealthy young man, proposes to Dorothy Fleming of the fast set in the faint hope she will refuse him; but she accepts. Aware that she is shallow and flirts with another he does not consider himself bound. While riding in his automobile he meets a new sort of girl, a dancer at Gallagher's saloon. Disguised as a tough he becomes the "bouncer" at the saloon. In a series of exciting adventures he proves the worth of the girl and the story closes with their hope of future happiness.

This picture is a comedy drama with many scenes in Gallagher's saloon showing girls singing at the tables. The whole character of the story is allegro in action.

Note particularly: 1½ cuckoo clock, 7½ automobile effects. At 23, 26½, 43, 50 to 61½ are scenes of fighting, struggles, smashing of windows.

The THEME selected is "Love is like a firefly"—Friml.
Time schedule: 69½ minutes (five reels—about 4,650 feet.)

To the Lone Pianist.

By S. M. Berg.

The writer is pleased to note that readers have found the articles under this heading of assistance to them. Among some correspondence received the following letter appears to be so earnest that I feel it deserves special attention:

Dear Sir: I have been reading your articles in the "Moving Picture World" and also your Music Cues for current releases. I would like to say a few words in appreciation.

I am employed in a theater seating about one thousand, using a program of Paramount, Metro, Triangle and World pictures, with a change of program daily. I have neither orchestra or organ, but am using straight piano. So you see your articles are of particular interest to me.

I have great difficulty in securing music that sounds well for piano alone and at the same time is appropriate for pictures. I would appreciate it very much if you would send me a list of music I can use.

Another thing I am unable to do is to use a theme for a picture. It seems to me when I play the same thing three or four times in the same picture people will think I am repeating too much. I suppose if I played an organ and used the different stops, such as violin, cello, flute, etc., it would seem different. I would surely be pleased to hear any suggestions you would be able to make.

Thanking you in advance for your valuable assistance and trusting your very interesting articles may continue to appear in "The World," I am,

Very truly yours,

RETTA HELLMAN.

The Lyric Theater, Covington, Ky.

This valued reader has asked for help and information on a subject that is probably confronting others who have only a piano to interpret the pictures.

The following suggestions, it is hoped, will be of assistance to others who have similar difficulty as outlined in the above letter. There should be no trouble in acquiring enough suitable music for the piano, for a perusal of the catalogues of the various music publishers will convince the ambitious player that there is no dearth of piano music.

It is simply a question of becoming acquainted with the works of the different composers, but before acquiring the music of the great masters one must realize that theoretical training and practice are necessary before satisfactory results can be obtained from the best music.

Czerny, Cramer, Clement and Bach are composers whose works are absolutely essential for the pianist who hopes to attain success playing for pictures. An hour a day spent on technical studies will do wonders for the serious student. Five-finger exercises, arpeggios, scales, chromatic scales, and octave scales, practised slowly and carefully, will do much towards improving one's technique so that an appreciation of the best music will be made easy for the painstaking and conscientious student.

If the reader who wishes to acquire a list of the practical theoretical studies and exercises that will benefit him will send an outline of just what he has accomplished in music the writer will be glad to furnish him with a list of studies that will prove helpful.

Few pianists playing for pictures realize the pleasure derived from playing the best music. Your work, which at present may seem irksome, can be made highly enjoyable and interesting if a program of meritorious music is selected and arranged.

There is a veritable mine of piano music and there is no reason why every scene and every phase of action cannot be fitted by the alert and intelligent pianist whose aim is to play the pictures well.

For example, what could be finer for a plaintive scene than the second movement from Haydn's 13 symphony; or the Andante from Brahms' 3 symphony?

For an outdoor scene, wooded dells and water falls, what could be more appropriate than Chopin's Etude, Op. 10, No. 5?

Several of Chopin's waltzes fit the pictures well, especially the slow movements, which are exceptionally melodious and pleasing to the ear. Chopin's nocturnes should not be overlooked when selecting music for pictures, nor his mazurkas, some which fit certain scenes.

Grieg's music is suitable for pictures, especially the Peer Gynt suite, the "Dwarf Dance," the "Butterfly," several of his nocturnes, and that beautiful masterpiece of tone coloring—"To Spring."

The average pianist must not be overlooked when willing to practice. Then he will be able to master the difficulties in many of these pieces. When this point is reached the pianist's work becomes a pleasure instead of a hard and unceasing grind, as many find it.

He who spends time acquiring a technique that will help understand the best music will be amply repaid for all time and labor spent, especially when he begins to appreciate the works of the great masters. It is well to vary your program with works of the modern composers. Rudolf Friml and Homer Bartlett have written some exceptionally fine numbers that are suitable for pictures.

Some of the pictures suited for pictures are: Egyptian Dance Op. 41, Russian Romance Op. 30, Minuetto Op. 28 and Mignonette, a delightful little number in E major.

He who wishes the best of pictures can find none better than those by Strauss and Waldteufel. Paul Lincke has written several waltzes that are suitable for pictures.

The works of Beethoven, Brahms, Rubinstein, Mozart, Haydn, and other great masters can be purchased in volumes. Tschakowsky's music is well suited for picture work, many of his pieces being in a minor strain.

Parts of Beethoven's sonatas fit pictures exceedingly well. Mendelssohn's Songs Without Words are also appropriate.

Two valuable volumes for the pianist who wishes to play the best music are:

1. Anthology of Piano Classics—A collection of 28 selected compositions by Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Field, Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Schubert, Schumann and Weber.

2. Anthology of Modern Classics for the Piano—32 compositions by Brahms, Dvorak, Grieg, Henselt, Jensen, Liszt, Moskowski, Paderewski, Raff, Rubinstein, Saint-Saens, Schmitt, Schytte, Sgambati, Sinding and Tschakowsky.

Carefully fingered and revised, these two volumes are an indispensable and important acquisition to any pianist's library.

This phase of musical interpretation has been dealt with in the issues of the Moving Picture World, January 15, 22, and February 12, 1916, when a series of articles, "How to Play the Theme" and "Themes," and their appropriate usage were discussed in detail.

To the lone pianist taking up this new problem—it possibly may seem that they are repeating themselves unnecessarily, but it should be realized that you are not a soloist, and to get the best results from your theme—it is advisable to vary the tempo occasionally or play slower or faster according to the action on the screen.

One of the successful musical plays of the season owes much of its success and popularity to the fact that the theme (love motif) is repeated over and over.

The theme selected should be of a melodious character—and always played with thought and expression.

In one of the articles I disclosed a score which has been prepared for a Triangle production. This demonstrated very clearly how much repetition is made by those playing the film.

Many readers may recall the theme in "The Birth of a Nation" and have frequently it was played.

We have just had presented to us Thomas H. Ince's wonderful picture "Civilization" and "The Fall of a Nation." A special music score has been written for the latter by Victor Herbert. It will be of great interest to follow the musical interpretations of these features.

It is mentioned in the above that if the pianist used an organ with its many varieties of colorings and shadings—that the repetition of the theme would not become monotonous. There are various ways of playing the theme—and an intelligent understanding of its importance can be realized in the fact that every cue-sheet prepared for the big features is never without its theme.

The theme is usually an andante movement of moderate tempo and should be played smoothly and legato. Develop a singing style to your playing and handle the theme in a clean and tuneful manner. Then it will not become monotonous, especially if it is a piece of recognized merit.

CHARLES HILL MAILES WITH UNIVERSAL.

Following his performance in Otis Turner's production of "The Seekers," starring Flora Parker DeHaven, Charles Hill Mailes was engaged as a member of the Universal City stock company to play leading character roles.

Mr. Mailes is one of the cleverest men at make-up in motion pictures, besides being one of the best actors. He was for six years with the Biograph before joining the Universal and his work has made a decidedly favorable impression.

Ivy Close Company is Complete

Robert Ellis to Direct Famous Beauty—Henry Murdock and William McKey in Strong Company.

THE first definite announcement concerning the organization that will produce Ivy Close comedies came from the Kalem Company this week with the news that Robert Ellis had been chosen to direct the new subjects. The famous English star has already begun work before the camera at the Jacksonville studio, and Kalem officials are enthusiastic concerning the outlook for the coming comedies.

That the company to support Miss Close will be of all-star proportions is indicated by the drafting of Henry Murdock, the acrobatic comedian who became a screen star over night in Sis Hopkins comedies, for the new subjects. On Murdock's shoulders will rest the principal farce-by-play in support of Miss Close.

William McKey, who for three seasons played the title role in "David Harum," throughout the country, is another comedian of prominence to be secured for the Ivy Close productions. Mr. McKey has been prominent on the screen during the past winter in feature productions and will also be remembered as a Kalem favorite a few years ago. In addition to his three seasons with "David Harum," McKey gained notice on the stage in the title role of "Eben Holden," in the Charles Frohman production of which he appeared for a season. McKey gained fame throughout the country as the Sheriff in "Pudd'nhead Wilson," a role he played for five seasons.

Robert Ellis, most valued members of Kalem's producing staff. Before taking the directorial reins for the first time, two years ago, Ellis was for years one of the most popular of screen players. His screen productions for Kalem have included many of that organization's most successful multiple-reel productions, many of the Broadway Favorites productions presenting prominent stage players being found in the list. The Sis Hopkins comedies staged under his direction have brought him into notice as a comedy producer.

NOVEL ADVERTISING FOR PARAMOUNT EXHIBITORS.

Scraps of wall paper were effectively utilized by the Regent theater, Alameda, Cal., for a novelty in advertisements during the recent engagement of Marguerite Clark in "The Prince and the Pauper," a Famous Players production for Paramount pictures. The announcement which the scraps of paper carried was reprinted in the "Talking It Over" column edited by William Walker Hines for Paramount exhibitors in Paramount Progress. It reads:

"We are tearing paper off the walls of the Regent theater to make room for the crowds who will want to see little Marguerite Clark in 'The Prince and the Pauper.'"

A small cut of Marguerite Clark was used and the printing was attractively done. Any exhibitor can obtain bits of wall paper from a paper hanger at a nominal cost and this kind of advertisement, because it is unique, may be used upon occasion very effectively as Paramount Progress points out. Big type and a few words should be ruled, however, as the paper is not particularly good for printing and small type cannot be read.

FILMING AN EXPRESS COMPANY.

The American Express Company, having reached years of youthful discretion, has had itself photographed—collectively speaking, of course. Imbued with a desire to set itself as others see it, the company engaged a motion picture camera, cast its officials for "leads" and subordinates for lesser parts, set the scenes, cried "camera" in the most approved film voice, and the machine began to grind out some 6,000 feet of film. The picture is decidedly interesting as showing the many commercial uses to which motion pictures can be put. The American Express Company intends to use this film for "interior publicity" purposes, that is, to interest its thousands of employees in all parts of the country. Eventually, it may show the film to the public.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY EMPLOYEE KILLED.

Miss Nellie Phillips, a bookkeeper employed in the General Film Company branch office at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., was killed Saturday, June 3, when a street car in which she was riding was struck by a train.

Miss Phillips had been employed in the Wilkes-Barre office for over two years and her efficiency and fidelity were highly appreciated by the General Film Company.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS.

A MINISTER'S ADVICE TO MINISTERS.

UNDER the title of "The Moving Pictures—Their Relation to Religion and Morals" a clergyman has recently addressed his co-workers as to the value of the moving pictures. After referring to the fact that the picture industry has become the fifth in the United States and that the financial results—"a veritable gold mine"—have enriched many worthy and some unworthy people; also pointing out effects for good and for evil of some of the "out of proportion" salaries paid to many of the "stars," the clergyman calls attention to the two sides of the uses of the pictures. The evils of the pictures are attributed first to the "commercialism" aspect as found in the desire of those whose chief object is only and alone "that which pays best" and has no regard to either quality or the effect upon the human mind or upon society. Already the pictures are of necessity classified as the "High and the Low," the latter appealing to the lower classes, somewhat segregated and fed upon the most sensational and least beneficial of subjects. The results of this class of subjects will be vicious in the extreme unless that demand which is calling for more and better stories is met.

Turning from the magnitude of the business, it is next proper to consider the influence of the moving pictures upon the people generally. First, with regard to education it promises to become the most potent of teachers. It is dwarfing the work of colleges and is demanding admission into our public schools, where it is covering the entire school curriculum. Added to these must be named all the sciences, arts, industries, sanitation, better homes, social reforms, and civic betterment, besides giving us in pictorial form the world's news, and travelogues whereby we are carried to the ends of the earth. Surely here is the teacher's best friend; and who has more far-reaching teaching possibilities than the minister? The wise teacher-minister is without doubt the one who is wide awake to the possibilities of the moving picture.

What is the relation of the motion picture to religion and morals? First, we find that the pictures have given a severe blow to the saloon and the pool parlors; they have united families in an unprecedented manner without thanks to either social or religious pretensions; this alone should win the support of the Church and auxiliary organizations. Again, they have brought a cheap, satisfying pleasure to all classes, especially those to whom a moderate price is the first consideration. Here they have put into the minds of the ministers a suggestion at least as to what course to pursue if they would capture and entertain the people.

What then is the right attitude of the Church towards this young giant? Let us be warned by past experiences. In former days in dealing with the peoples' amusements the Church has made many and fatal blunders. By standing aloof and condemning those pastimes it should have sought to direct and improve in tone; it alienated large numbers, and became greatly misunderstood. In their contentions, the ministers were never successful; they prevented nothing the people were determined to have, but, on the contrary, by branding them as scandalous and immoral they only helped to debase them. The result has been that church members pursued those things in spite of the Church's prohibition, and society was worse for the conditions thus brought about.

The churches claim to have 35,000,000 members nominally; these members represent most of the wealth and influence of the country; they can, if they choose, direct the course of the moving pictures by wise patronage of that which is best and by a friendly criticism of that which is worst. Managers are watching the crowds; let the better element demand and encourage that which is good and refuse the bad, and within one year the whole business will be revolutionized.

The pictures need the churches and moral forces—not as police, but as patrons, or even possessors—not as antagonists and arbitrary censors, but as friends and councillors. Let us seek the best good of this mighty power and help to make it the best teacher and preacher the world has ever seen or heard.

MACBETH.

This great subject in moving pictures has enriched the library of those films calculated to bring honor to the screen in general, and to the series of pictures dedicated to educational purposes in particular. Shown for the first time in the Rialto theater, New York, this week, an appreciative public, by their large numbers and intense interest, testified to their great satisfaction and pleasure that the moving picture had, if possible, immortalized one of Shakespeare's greatest productions. As a scenario writer Shakespeare is certainly in a class by himself, and with such an exponent of his art as Sir Herbert Tree everybody expected great things; and it is safe to say that the greatest expectations were more than realized. It is of especial interest to record here that in such a play as Macbeth, with "its accompaniment of fear-some killings," so great has been progress of the proper adaptation of the moving picture to most gruesome events that all the old-time crudities and horrors which shocked the average beholder and aroused the self-constituted censors have been entirely eliminated, making this film a model for all in its most admirable handling of tragic events.

There is a sense in which the film picture is superior to the spoken play, as evidenced by the mental pictures which distress Macbeth; as also by the use of similar pictures which show the growth of Macduff's suspicions. The sub-titles, or captions, are kept well in character by the use of exact quotations of Shakespeare's lines in timely and exact methods. We cannot see pictures of this description without feeling regret that we did not have the benefit of the moving pictures in our own school days. What wonderful helps in study the children of today enjoy! In Macbeth, Shakespeare as a writer becomes familiar and helpful to the scholar, Sir Herbert Tree as an exponent of histrionic art becomes a teacher, and the scenic productions revive the times portrayed, while the pictures become masterpieces for the enrichment of the youth of today.

At the close of the first presentation of Macbeth with himself in the title role Sir Herbert, in thanking his admirers for their reception of his efforts, spoke of "the educational value behind the attempt of the producers to depict the classics through the instrumentality of the motion picture." He added "It has been said, 'Money is not the only power'; and I hope we have carried that idea into the presentation of these wonderful works of Shakespeare, not only upon the spoken stage, but also through the medium of the pictures.

"Much has been said in a slighting way of Shakespeare on the screen; but did not Charles Lamb write his 'Tales of Shakespeare'?—and I may add without purpose. If we, too, though through the medium of the moving picture, contribute our small mite to the great cause of education, we shall not have labored without purpose. In viewing a picture such as this, the children, and perhaps others, get an underlying idea of the great work, and go to the study of it with greater understanding and a greater incentive to acquire its intellectual riches.

"This is primarily an undertaking of education, and I regard it as wonderful that we have at our command a medium through which we may teach by pleasure instead of through distasteful cramming. I deem it a wonderful privilege to be able to contribute, even in a limited way, to this modern marvel of teaching through pleasure."

There is no doubt that educational cinematography has received a great help, not only by the production by so great an actor as Sir Herbert Tree of one of the classics, but more especially by what he has said as to the educational object and purpose of such productions.

SUPERIOR FILM IN LARGER QUARTERS.

The Superior Film Manufacturing Company, of Des Moines, Ia., has taken a long-time lease on the building at 577 Seventh street. The company was organized in June, 1913. The past three years have been productive of most gratifying results.

The new home affords greatly increased facilities. Each department is under the supervision of competent men.

The New Piedmont Theater

Hugh Richardson Builds House in Atlanta at a Cost of $100,000.

THE new Piedmont theater in Atlanta, Ga., is one of the most modern moving picture theaters in the South. It is located in the center of the city, just on the adjoining corner from the Keith theater, and a few doors from the Ansley Hotel, the home of the Atlanta elite, and across the street from the Piedmont Hotel, one of the leading business hostleries of the South.

The Piedmont was erected by Hugh Richardson, an Atlanta capitalist, at a cost of more than $100,000, on a site that sold a few years ago for about $400,000. The house was erected from the plans drawn up by Architect A. Ten Eche Brown, who visited some of the larger cities to secure the most modern ideas before definitely laying out his plans.

The Piedmont was leased to Charles and Peter Mion, tile and marble contractors, for a period of fifteen years, at a rental that is said to be the highest ever recorded in that section of the country. The theater is under the management of Ralph De Bruller, a widawake and enterprising showman, and it enjoys the patronage of the very best people in Atlanta.

The theater has the exclusive first-run service of Paramount features and has also the exclusive first-run of the George Kleine Billie Burke serial that has just been released. A feature of the daily program is the J. P. Seeburg Motion Picture Player, style V, which was purchased from the Automatic Player Piano Co., the Seeburg southern representative. The big instrument is operated by a relay of three experts, who were brought to Atlanta for the purpose, and during morning and early afternoon exhibitions the instrument works automatically to the entire satisfaction of the management and patrons.

The accompanying cut shows at the entrance of the theater Mr. Seeburg, president of the Seeburg Piano Co.; Messrs. Charles and Peter Mion, the owners; Eugene Wilder, of the Automatic Player Piano Co., and Mr. De Bruller, manager of the house. The engraving fails to convey anything like a correct impression of the beautiful interior of the Piedmont, but the photograph from which it was made was the best on hand at the time of writing.

NEW PLAYERS FOR INTERNATIONAL.

Under the leadership of Director-General Paul Dickey, the human dynamo, things have begun to hum at the International Studios. Harry Fox has been engaged to play comedies, and says that he loves screen work. Betty Howe, fresh from her comedy successes with Vitaphone, has joined the International. This vivacious young woman has a charming screen personality and is particularly attractive in comedy roles.

Irene Castle is ready to act for International. Nigel Barrie, of "You're Here and I'm Here" fame, has been engaged to play leads. Mr. Barrie is a typical outdoor man. Olive Thomas will lend her charm to the lens for the new Hearst organization.

Miss Turner Heads Mutual for June 19

"Far From the Madding Crowd" Is the First of Six Subjects Featuring Popular Player.

THE chief feature offering of the Mutual Film Corporation for the week of June 19 is "Far from the Madding Crowd," a picturization of Thomas Hardy's popular story of the same name, first of a series of six five-act Mutual star productions featuring Miss Florence Turner, popular star of the screen and stage.

Filtered under the personal direction of Larry Trimble, conceded one of the most able producers in the film industry, and with the star surrounded by an exceptional cast of players, this Mutual star production is certain to take its place with the first rank of recent feature releases. Henry Edwards, Campbell Gullan and Malcolm Cherry, all members of the Royal theater of London, are the principal players appearing in Miss Turner's support. The picture will be released June 19. "The Welsh Singer," "The First Settler's Story," "Doorsteps," "Shop Girls" and "Redeemed" are the additional feature productions starring Miss Turner which will be released in forthcoming months by the Mutual.

Miss Turner has long been recognized by motion picture critics as one of the foremost porters of stirring emotional parts and announcement that she is shortly to appear as a Mutual star is certain to be received with just enthusiasm by Mutual followers and the industry at large.

"The Wasted Years" is the second of the feature releases issued on June 22. This is a Mutual Masterpiece, De Luxe Edition in five acts, featuring Crane Wilbur. "The Wasted Years" was written by Wilbur and screened under the direction of Edward Broadwell.

Mutual's three-part feature is Gaumont's "The Criminal's Thumb," with Iva Shepard, "vampire" of Gaumont-Mutual releases, and Alexander Gaden appearing in the chief roles.

The two-part feature releases are led by "A Gentle Conspiracy," an American production. In this picture, released June 19, Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh have the chief roles.

"A Modern Knight," featuring Art Acord and Nita Davis, Mustang, will be released June 23. This is a stirring and unusually interesting story of the West.

The Centaur release for the week, starring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, and bringing into play a number of the celebrated Bostock animals, will be released June 24, under the title of "The Siren of the Jungle."

Comedy releases for the week are comprised of "Ruff-house," with Rube Miller, and "The Iron Mitt," starring Ben Turpin from the Vogue studios, for release June 20 and 25 respectively; "The House on the Hokum Hill," with Carol Holloway and John Sheehan, June 21, and "The Jay's Work," starring Oral Humphrey, Beauty, June 25. "Jerry's Elopement," with George Ovey in the chief role, will be released June 23.

Mutual Weekly No. 77 and "See America First," will be released June 21, while Reel Life, the Mutual Film Magazine, will go to the public on June 25.

Miss Young Goes on Vacation

On July 16 She Will Begin Work for Her Own Company—Director Capellani Preparing Studio.

Clara Kimball Young, star and vice president of the film corporation organized in her name, has finished her last picture for her old company, World Film, and after a brief vacation will begin work on her first production, "The Common Law," an adaptation of the noted American novel by Robert W. Chambers. Before leaving for Poland Springs Miss Young will decide upon the three pictures to follow "The Common Law." While at the springs Miss Young will make a thorough study of the character of Valerie, the heroine of Chambers' novel, and on her return will be prepared to step right into the role before the camera.

In the meanwhile Albert Capellani, chief producer, will complete his adaptation of the novel and begin the construction of interiors at the studio so that there will be no delay in beginning the production on the date set, July 16. The Director General has practically decided upon the two directors who are to work under his supervision in the preparation of two pictures simultaneously. The title of the second picture will be announced within a week or two.

GEORGE R. MANN IN NEW YORK.

George R. Mann, general manager of Paramount's Washington Exchange, has returned home after a visit to the Paramount Pictures Corporation's offices, New York City.

Varied Program for General Film

New Stories and Famous Old Ones Will Be Released in Week of June 19 to 24.

IT IS not uncommon these days to find in one, two and three-reel pictures released the same day on the General Film Service program at least a dozen notable stars. You are likely to find in these reissues of famous short pictures the names of Lionel Barrymore, Mary Pickford, Dorothy or Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Jackie Saunders, Frank Mayo, Charlie Chaplin, Helen Gibson, Henry Walthall, Bryant Washburn, Marguerite Clayton, Mabel Trunnelle, Millicent Evans, Otis Harlan, Bigelow Cooper, Lillian Walker, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. This roster certainly embraces ability and variety; and it is not surprising that exhibitors are showing their appreciation of it.

The program for the week June 19-24 inclusive is exceptionally strong in names of performers who have attained fame in moving pictures. "The Reprisal," in three parts, by Selig, featuring Fritz Brunette and Jack Pickford, will be first on the program Monday. This is a story of the southland in which romance plays a prominent part. "Stung" and "The Elephant's Dinner," Vitaphone short subjects, will provide the first comedies of the week, while Selig-Tribune News will tell the story of important happenings. "The Most Understood Boy," a one-part Biograph reissue in which Robert Harron and Lillian Gish share honors, will be shown next. "Otto's Legacy," a Lubin one-part comedy, will be last to fade away on the screen that day.

Essanay's comedy-drama in two parts, "The Girl at the Curtain," a reissue featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, will be the first picture shown Tuesday. This will be followed by a Kalem comedy, "The Beggar and His Child," after which a Biograph reissue in two parts, "The Reformers," presenting Mac Marsh and Robert Harron, will be screened. Then will follow "Out of the Ruins," an Edison three-part reissue featuring Pat O'Malley and Gladys Hulette. This picture achieved great success when originally released.

The program for Wednesday will start when "That Lovely Widow," by Kalem, is shown. Then will follow Essanay's "The Fable of the Undecided Brunette," one of George Ade's best stories. Edison offers "The Pied Piper of Hamelin," a drama reissue in one part, in which Herbert Prior is starred and which will be the closing number for that day.

Lubin's three-part drama "Love's Law," in which Adda Gerson and E. Van Amburgh are featured, will be the first presented on Thursday's program. Then will follow the Selig-Tribune, bringing the big news of the day right down to the very minute, after which a Vim comedy, "Never Again," featuring Plump and Runt, will be offered.

Virginia Norden will be starred in the first picture shown Friday, a Knickerbocker Star feature three-part drama, "The Ancient Blood." A Kalem comedy, one of the Sis Hopkins series, "Her Great Invention," will follow, and Vitaphone offers "The Curfew at Simpton Center," and "For Better or Worse," a Vim comedy featuring Podes and Jabbs, each a single reel comedy, will close the day's program.

"A Traitor to Art," an Essanay production in three parts in which Ann Kirk and Edward Arnold have the leading roles, will be screened as the opening pictures Saturday. "Persistence," a Lubin one-part comedy, precedes "Would You Forgive Her?" a Vitaphone drama in which Leah Baird and Arthur Cozine have the leading roles. Then will come "The Mysterious Cipher," an episode in Kalem's "Hazards of Helen." The program for the week will be brought to an end by "Taking a Chance," Selig's one-part drama featuring Tom Mix, whom Selig claims is the only original Simon Pure cowboy in moving pictures.

General Film Advances Employees

Change Announced in the Heads of Exchanges at Des Moines, Oklahoma City, Philadelphia and Atlanta.

EFFICIENCY is meeting with its reward these days among the General Film Company's employees and substantial recognition in the way of promotion is order of the day. This is in line with the policy announced by President George Kleine when he took over the reins of the General Film Company six months ago, and in so doing every opportunity to demonstrate that he meant every word he said when he announced that "good things were in store for efficient employees."

The latest beneficiary of Mr. Kleine's policy is Charles Stombaugh, who has just been named branch manager of the office at Des Moines, succeeding C. W. Jeffries. Mr. Stombaugh has been in the employ of the General for some time, his last position being in charge of the booking department at the Minneapolis office, from where he was transferred to his present responsible post.

J. W. Hicks, until recently assistant branch manager at the Kansas City office, has been transferred and promoted to branch manager of the Oklahoma City office, succeeding A. L. Teagarden. Both these promotions are considered rewards of efficiency.

George T. Aimes, widely known in the industry, has been placed in charge of the Philadelphia office, succeeding H. H. Buxbaum, who was recently transferred to New York to occupy a similar position there.

Another change announced is the designation of C. C. Ezell as branch manager at Atlanta, Ga., succeeding Joseph L. Marentette. Mr. Ezell's experience in the film business goes back to the early days of the industry, and he has never failed to win his spurs in any of the responsible positions he has held.

Coming Bluebirds

Outline of Feature Productions Designed to Combat the Call of Out of Doors.

ANNOUNCEMENTS of forthcoming Bluebirds indicate a diversity of subjects, and there is promise that during July and August exhibitors will have at their disposal some of the best subjects that have ever been shown under the Bluebird trade mark. The concentration of exceptionally good features has been planned for the purpose of giving showmen material with which to combat the call of out-of-door amusements—an opposition generally considered to be more potent than anything the regular season presents.

"The Silent Battle" will recall J. Warren Kerrigan and his leading lady, Lois Wilson, to the Bluebird program late in July. F. McGrew Willis created the scenario from the novel of the same title written by George Gibbs. The director was Jack Conway and the photoplay has just been finished. Maud George, Harry Carter, Ray Hanford and J. E. Connelly will be among the principals.

"The Deacon's Demise" may be changed as the title of a novel production, written and produced by Lynn Reynolds, to be released in early August. The leading players will be Val Paul and Myrtle Gonzalez, others in the company being George Hernandez, Fred Church, Frank McQuarrie, Nannie Wright, Jack Curtis and Lule Warrenton.

Another release of high class will be "L'Abbe Constantin," adapted from the Ludovic Halevy story of the same title by E. J. Clawson, and directed by Rupert Julian. Mr. Julian will also be one of the players in a company that will include Francella Billington, Louise Lovely, Zoe Bech, Elsie Wilson, Henry Girard and George Berrill.

The more immediate releases, for late June and July, embrace the gripping problem play, "Shoes," with Mary MacLaren playing in a Lois Weber production of surpassing interest and importance to the Bluebird program; "Broken Fetters," presenting Violet Mersereau, William Garwood and an excellent company of players; "The Love Girl," which presents Ella Hall and Harry Depp in a Robert Z. Leonard presentation, and "The Grasp of Greed," based on one of H. Ryder Haggard's stories, which will be played by Louise Lovely, Lon Chaney and Jay Belasco and others.

WORLD FILM TO GROUP STARS.

Within the next three months William A. Brady will offer on the new World Film program a series of all-star cast pictures in which the cream of the array of players under control of the World Film Corporation will be seen together.

The first production is that of last season's Broadway success, "Husband and Wife," which under the direction of Barry O'Neill, was completed in two weeks of actual work. The cast includes Ethel Clayton, Holbrook Blinn, Emmett Corrigan, Gerda Holmes, Montagu Love and Dion Tithridge.

Mr. Brady is going to produce a number of similarly cased plays.

BEN GRIMM ENGAGED BY METRO-YORKE.

Ben H. Grimm, of the editorial staff of the New York Evening Journal, has accepted a position as special press representative of the Yorke Film Corporation, the new producing company headed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison, releasing regularly on the Metro program. Mr. Grimm is now with the company at the Thousand Islands, where the Lockwood-Allison company is engaged in photographing the exterior scenes for "A One Cylinder Courtship."

Consolidated Making Big Serial

New Company Will Release "The Crimson Stain Mystery" Through Metro—Costello and Grandin Co-Stars.

AFTER several months of painstaking efforts in perfecting details of its organization, the Consolidated Film Corporation announces its plan to release "The Crimson Stain Mystery," a serial screen story in sixteen episodes, the first to be offered on August 21.

The Consolidated has been organized for the purpose of doing big things in the industry.

Maurice Costello.

The new company is making its most modernly equipped studios in the East and this week establishing itself in comfortable business offices in the Longacre Building. O. E. Goebel, a general amusement purveyor, who has been active in the motion picture field for the past few years and is widely known throughout the United States, is president of the company.

Of importance almost equal to the announcement of the organization of the company is the announcement that Maurice Costello, for many years a bright star in the firmament of the Vitagraph Company, has been secured to play the lead in the new serial which will be the company's initial offering. Mr. Costello has been enjoying a vacation for the past few months, but will return to his work before the camera well qualified to add to the laurels which he has already won.

Ethel Grandin, also a screen star, by right of many past successes, has been secured to interpret the leading feminine role in "The Crimson Stain Mystery." T. Hayes Hunter will generally supervise the direction.

The scenario for the new serial is the product of Albert Payson Terhune, whose work for the screen within the past few months has attracted almost as much attention as have his hundreds of short stories and books contributed to modern American literature.

NATIONAL TO ISSUE WORLD'S FAIR SERIAL.

The National Cinema Syndicate, Inc., has just purchased the World's rights to the official Panama-Pacific International Exposition negatives from E. M. Asher, who recently acquired these rights from the Exposition Players' Corporation. E. H. Kaufmann and S. M. Krellberg, executives of the National Cinema Syndicate, Inc., announce that they will market the pictures throughout the world in serial form, this being the first attempt to market scenic and educational pictures in this manner.

Bluebird Will Plunge on "The Play"

Announces That in Future It Will Exploit the Brand and Not the Players.

THROUGH M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., announcement is made that in future exploitation of its product the customary heralding and promotion of individual stars will be abandoned. Instead of directing efforts to create new stars or to further magnify the transient notoriety of players Bluebird will center on advertising its trade mark and establishing the Bluebird name as an insignia of merit in photoplay production.

"We shall immediately undertake a national advertising campaign," says Mr. Hoffman, "to bring to the attention of theatergoers the merits of our productions. We shall point out the many good qualities they possess, and will demonstrate to devotees of motion pictures just why Bluebirds are worthy of public patronage."

"This advertising campaign will forward the interest of Bluebird exhibitors in every community throughout the country. We shall not localize, but will use papers of national circulation and will back the national campaign with billposting in localities we shall select as necessary to our purpose. The play, the author, the entire acting company, the director and the merits of the production as a whole will be expatiated upon in our publicity."

"We expect that there will be objections and kicks from many and various sources; we anticipate that some exhibitors will say that they cannot survive unless the passing notoriety of individual players is emphasized. But there was never an innovation but what there were those ready to decry its feasibility, and we are fortified by the merits of our own conviction, and shall proceed unwaveringly with our purpose."

"We have thought it all out. We know the nature and quality of the releases we have prepared, and we know that there is not one of our plays that require a name to make it better. We know that our plays are better than any star we might employ. And we also know that any number of players, male or female, could be billed and boosted from obscurity into prominence through the medium of these plays."

"We shall be one organization to insist that Shakespeare was right. And in advertising our trade mark and exploiting our products we shall advance arguments that will influence the public and bring home the fact that the play is, indeed, 'the thing.' And while we are explaining to the theatergoing public wherein Bluebirds are superior because of the quality and because of the superior methods employed in producing and photographing our plays the exhibitor is going to have a greater support than we could give him by placing our publicity dependence upon the mere name and notoriety of any particular individual."

Let Public Choose, Says Goff

V-L-S-E Assistant General Manager Makes Suggestions to Exhibitors.

THE assistant general manager of the V-L-S-E, A. W. Goff, is back in New York, following a tour of four middle western cities in which the Big Four has branch offices. These included Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati and St. Louis. As was the case last summer with the V-L-S-E, Mr. Goff found the lie given all along the line to the stereotyped assertion that warm weather reduces the volume of film business. Increased business, and lots of it, was the report in each of the branches visited.

"Let the public dictate the sort of photoplays the producing companies present," says Mr. Goff. "That is the aim of the Big Four, through its open booking policy. Our idea is that each day an exhibitor should flash on his screen the titles and plot outlines of releases that will be available for him the following week. The slide requests his patrons to indicate their choice by applause or in some other manner."

"Another plan that strikes me as being practicable is for the exhibitor to distribute among his patrons slips of paper outlining available releases, giving names of stars and such information as the patron should have, and upon which they may indicate their choice. The blanks could be deposited in a vote box at the exit, and by the verdict of his patrons the exhibitor could be guided."

John W. Grey, International publicist, is going to the Motion Picture Exhibition at Chicago. John says he is going to have the most startling exhibit on the lot. He is just likely to do that little thing.

Ethel Grandin.

Vitagraph's, Week of June 19

Two Comedies and a Drama Go Out Through the General and a Blue Ribbon and Daniel Comedy Through V-L-S-E.

Released Through General Film.

TWO comedies and a drama are scheduled by Vitagraph for release through the General Film for the week of June 19. "Would You Forgive Her?" is the three-part Broadway Star Feature drama. "Stung" and "Curfew at Simpton Center" are each thousand foot comedies. Leah Baird, who is featured in "Would You Forgive Her?" is seen as Eleanor Baine, a shopgirl who possesses more than average feminine charm. Van Dyke Brooke, Arthur Cozine and Jack Ellis are also seen in this picture. Van Dyke Brooke directed the picture from the scenario by Dodd Crane.

Scene from "Would You Forgive Her?" (Vitagraph).

"Stung" is from the pen of Stanley Dark, who also plays the leading role. Wally Van directed the production with Lillian Burns and Templer Saxe as the remainder of the cast. In "The Curfew at Simpton Center" six wives find themselves in a strange predicament. Otto Lederer, George Kunkel, Webster Campbell, Jack Mower and Florence Vidor are seen in this comedy which was produced by William Wolbert and written by Edwin Ray Coffin.

Released by V-L-S-E.

"The Man Behind the Curtain," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in five parts, featuring Lillian Walker with Evert Overton and William Dunn, is listed for June 19. Minnie Krakner wrote the story. Templer Saxe and John Costello are also seen in this production.

Frank Daniels is seen in the title role of "Kernel Nutt Flirts with Wife," the latest of the "Kernel Nutt" series. Beryl Caton is the author of the story and its action was directed by C. Jay Williams. Alice Washburn is active in the "double crossing."

NAT GOODWIN SUES MIRROR.

Nat C. Goodwin claims $13,750 salary and expenses for eleven weeks' unfulfilled contract with the Mirror Film Company, and on June 8 his attorneys filed with the Sheriff of Queens an attachment against the film company's property in Glendale, where it owns fourteen acres and a series of studios. Justice Thomas F. Donnelly of Manhattan issued the attachment.

Goodwin alleges he was engaged under a six months' contract by the film company on Jan. 17. He was to receive $1,250 each week for taking a leading part in the productions of the company.

ROSE—DE MONTFORD.

The wedding of Norman S. Rose, one of the heads of the publicity department of the Triangle Film Corporation, and Miss Eloise de Montford, stepdaughter of Maurice V. Samuels, a New York playwright, who is widely known in theatrical circles as secretary of the Society of American Dramatists and Composers, was solemnized June 10.

Miss de Montford is a native of Chattanooga, Tenn. Mr. Rose is a former Cleveland newspaper man, but has been in New York for several years.

New Studio Facilitates Production

Essanay Company Paying Particular Attention to Shorter Subjects, Including Use in Them of Leading Players.

ESSANAY'S new studio, which now has been in full operation for several weeks, has proved a boon to the company in facilitating the quick production of photoplays. With the large number of feature productions as well as shorter films, Essanay was greatly handicapped for a time in producing with sufficient speed. All obstacles were overcome with the opening of the new studio. With the extra floor space and with the summer camps established, all of Essanay's score of directors can work at once if necessary.

The result of this speeding up of productions through additional floor space has resulted in the company having completed plays for many weeks ahead. Practically all photoplays for the month of August now have been finished with work going on for still further advance dates. This additional room also gives more opportunity for careful detail work on the shorter subjects. George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, is a firm believer in the one, two and three reel comedies and dramas, and believes in giving them as much attention to detail, as the longer features.

"While there is room for first-class features the shorter subjects will always be in demand," said Mr. Spoor. "I believe in putting just as good material into the shorter subjects as in features and in playing up the leading actors. The popularity of the short photoplay will never wane. In fact it is on the ascendancy without interfering in any way with the hold features have on picture patrons. A two or three-reel drama well played, to my mind, is one of the real attractions of the motion picture theater."

The three-act Essanay releases for July are ample proof that President Spoor practices the theory in which he so thoroughly believes. In all of them actors of established reputations appear. "The Regeneration of Margaret" is a strong story on the topic of defective babies which carries a love interest also. Warda Howard, Ernest Maupain and John Junior take the leading roles. "Power," a powerful story of politics and love. Sydney Ainsworth and Nell Craig, with excellent support, appear as the leads. "The Secret of the Night," a detective story with the hero's part one of deciding interest, is played by Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and John Lorenz.

"The Grouch" is a comedy drama with Harry Beaumont and Harry Dunkinson. John Lorenz and Ann Leigh are featured in "Repentance," a story of how a girl drives away her fiancé by her sneers at religion, only to see her error and win back her faith and the man.

CHICAGO TO SEE "CIVILIZATION."

Thomas H. Ince, producer of the photo-dramatic spectacle "Civilization," which has proved a sensation at the Criterion theater, New York City, left for Chicago this week to arrange for the production of his spectacle in that city.

Mr. Ince is accompanied by his executive staff, including J. Parker Reade, Jr., general representative, and J. L. Bernard, director of publicity and advertising. The Chicago opening will be at the Chicago Grand Opera House between June 24 and 30.

It is understood upon good authority no confirmative statement has yet been issued in regard to the purchasing or marketing of the states rights on "Civilization." There have been many rumors but none are confirmed. Victor Sertzing, who wrote the score of "Civilization," accompanies Mr. Ince to Chicago with the party.

RUTH ROLAND IN KNICKERBOCKER SUBJECT.

Ruth Roland is the latest acquisition to the group of popular stars appearing in Knickerbocker Star Features. Pursuing its policy of obtaining the best-known and most highly gifted players, the Melies Manufacturing Company has arranged with H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer for the production of a number of three and five-reel dramas featuring Miss Roland, and the famous star of "Who Pays?" and other popular serials is now working in her first picture for release on the Knickerbocker program in the General Film service.

SOUVENIRS FOR PARAMOUNT PATRONS.

Several thousand artistic Paramount buttons are being supplied by the Paramount Pictures Corporation for sale through its exchanges. They carry the Paramount trademark on a yellow background and make attractive souvenirs for distribution among audiences seeing Paramount pictures.

Activities of Unity

General Manager Cobe Takes on "Twecedlum" Comedies—Deposits Enlarged

ANDREW J. COBE, general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, announces he has signed up for the comedy releases of the Eagle Film Company of Jacksonville, Fla., following negotiations with William J. Dunn of that concern.

Mr. Cobe declares that in the person of Fernandez Perez, the Spanish comedian who portrays the principal comedy character of the "laugh pictures," he has discovered the Charlie Chaplin of the future. The films will be known as the "Twecedlum and Twecedlum" series, each being complete in itself but connected by an underlying plot.

The activities of the Unity Sales Corporation in the past few weeks have covered a wide field considering the youth of the corporation. Besides planning extensive advertising campaigns in connection with "The Yellow Menace," the sixteen episode serial in which Edwin Stevens is starred, Mr. Cobe has developed plans by which the story of "The Yellow Menace" will be presented in serial form in 1,100 newspapers in the large cities of the country.

The business of the Unity has developed so rapidly that during the past week new quarters were engaged for the press and advertising department and the auditing department was enlarged. Mr. Cobe reports unusually heavy business with "My Country First," and "The Pursuing Vengeance."

A forthcoming release by the Unity is "The Bishop's Secret," which employs many well-known players and has many thrilling scenes.

"We have only just started to develop our plans," said Mr. Cobe, "and in the near future I will have an announcement to make which will be of interest to everyone in the trade. I can only say at the present time that it involves a new plan of distribution elaborated from my present ideas."

Universal Eastern Forces Thinning

Big Fort Lee Studio Will Be Emptied by June 15—Julius Stern to Produce His Own Series

BY THE MIDDLE of June the half-million-dollar studio which the Universal completed at Fort Lee only three months ago will be practically deserted, and the eastern Victor and Imp companies will be on their way to Universal City, where the Universal forces will be centralized in the future. Julius Stern, who has been the manager of the eastern studios for a number of years, will leave for the Coast within a fortnight. He is taking with him the best wishes and good will of the many actors and actresses who have been employed by him during his sojourn here. At present he is very busy getting affairs straightened out preparatory to his leaving for the Coast, where he is to embark in the field of film manufacturing.

"It is my intention of starting a producing company on the Coast, where I will make my own pictures," said Mr. Stern, "which may be released on the Universal program. We have engaged Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, who will probably make a serial for us after they have finished 'Peg o' the Ring' for the Universal. And we are now negotiating with other well-known players.

"At present I am getting everything in shape preparatory to my leaving. All the companies are making strenuous efforts to have their pictures finished by the latter part of next week so that they will be able to leave for Universal City. William Garwood leaves the company and goes with Violet. There is a bare possibility that Mary Fuller and Violet Mersereau will remain here in the East. However, that hasn't been settled as yet."

CAMPBELL "TAKES" PORTS FOR "THE CRISIS."

Director Colin Campbell of the Selig Polyscope Company secured special players and a staff of cameramen to Charleston, S. C., on Thursday, June 8. At Charleston, old Forts Sumpter and Moultrie were filmed for the forthcoming Selig production of "The Crisis." After visiting Charleston, Director Campbell will go to New York on business connected with the production and then will return to Chicago.

SCENARIOIST ALEXANDER GOES TO U-CITY.

J. Grubb Alexander, scenario writer at Universal Heights, N. J., is one of the staff of that studio who left for Universal City in advance of the "main guard." This occurred because Mr. Alexander, who has been preparing to write in the Western atmosphere, had his application for a transfer "in" before the general transfer of Eastern Universalists was decided upon.

International Launches News Reel

Hearst International News Pictorial Will Make Its Bow to Exhibitors on June 12.

THERE is a brand new current event release in filmdom. This news reel is booked for two releases a week by the International Film Service, Inc., and is known as the Hearst International News Pictorial.

The International has cameramen in all parts of the world to contribute to this news reel. With the Allies at Salonica and representing the International is Aerial Varges, a cameraman who has more adventures every week than the average person has in a lifetime. Mr. Varges will record the more interesting events on the battle front for the new Hearst Pictorial.

Nelson G. Edwards is another film faithful who will take a chance on getting shot a few times a day for the benefit of the camera. He is now at Constantinople with the Turks and Germans. Tracy Mathewson is with the United States punitive forces in Mexico.

E. B. Hatrick, who has personal charge of the Hearst International News Pictorial and who is an authority on news subjects, has arranged for the quick shipment of the film from all parts of the world. Mr. Hatrick has the new system so clearly defined the releases will go out on time without a hitch.

No small measure of credit for the success of the new reel is due J. K. Burger, manager of branch exchanges for the International. By means of the telegraph, which is used extensively by the I. F. S., on account of affiliations and wire service with the various Hearst publications, Mr. Burger arranged for the distribution of the news reel to the many exchanges.

General Manager E. A. MacManus states Mr. Hearst will infuse some radical and revolutionary ideas into the new pictorial. Hence it is confidently expected a news reel of a brand new and different type will be developed in the Hearst International News Pictorial. The first release date is June 12.

ESTABROOK POPULAR WITH COLLEGE BOYS.

Knowing that Howard Estabrook is being starred in that remarkable scientific series of spirits and astral bodies, "The Mysteries of Myra," one might think this was a snap of one of the scenes in this most unusual film. It is not. The Myra mystery does not follow the hackneyed melodramatic lines of the early serials. It has a wonderful new theme that compels attention because of the puzzling thoughts regarding mental and spirits presented in a manner which follows authenticated scientific discoveries.

Mr. Estabrook is working at Ithaca, N. Y. That's where Wharton, Inc., the producers of the big International Film serial, has its big plant. At Ithaca is also the big university, Cornell. The college boys often work with Wharton, Inc., which has exceptional exclusive privileges about the campus and buildings, and Mr. Estabrook, being a regular fellow, was soon a real hero with the college men. He helped them with a big benefit entertainment for the athletic fund and then had a big prize contest for an amateur one-act play, in which he afterward appeared personally at a benefit which he gave, with the help of the Cornell boys, for the Actors' Fund. This was a tremendous success, breaking all attendance records in Ithaca.

Mr. Estabrook's work with the college men has made him a real enthusiast about the Cornell varsity eight. He picked them to win the spring regatta and perched himself on the pilot of the observation train from which vantage point he saw his prediction fulfilled. The star of "The Mysteries of Myra" also thinks Cornell will win the big regatta at Poughkeepsie, July 17. He says he has become quite a forecaster since doing so much mental telepathy and scientific work in "Myra."

Paramount Program for June 26

Pauline Frederick and Myrtle Stedman Will Be the Headliners—Cartoons, Travelogue and Pictographs Complete List.

PARAMOUNT pictures released for the week of June 26 will be "The World's Great Snare," in which the Famous Players will feature Pauline Frederick, and "The American Beauty," a Pallas production starring Myrtle Stedman. "The World's Great Snare" will be released on June 26 and the Pallas picture on June 29. Short subjects also announced for release this week by Paramount include "Bobby Bumps' Fly Swatter," Earl Hurd's drawing in the Scene from "Bobby Bumps' Fly Swatter" (Paramount Bray).

Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons; the "Spreewald Near Berlin," in the Paramount-Burton Holmes travel pictures showing Europe before the war, and the twenty-first release of the Pictographs.

In the opening scene of this release of the Animated Cartoons Bobby Bumps, the adventurous youngster originated by Earl Hurd, discovers that a perfect skating rink is supplied by Dad's unadorned head. Dad is shown on the screen attempting to take a nap and keep off the flies at the same time. A close-up of the rink reveals the flies performing stunts on roller skates. Bobby pauses in his industrious knocking out of the flies for the pup to brush a few off of Dad's head, but the sport proves too tame, so he shifts the responsibility to the pup. The fly brush attached to the pup's tail works nicely and entirely to Dad's satisfaction until a bee enters the scene, causing general excitement, a chase, and an aeroplane flight.

Pictographs in this edition will show the "Training of a Lion"; "Which Do You Remember," in Hugo Munsterberg's "Testing the Mind" series; a screen jaunt to Coney Island, and the picturizing of Montessori methods in the "Better Babies" release, "Seeing with the Fingers."

"BEAUTY EMPORIUM" FOR VITAGRAPHERS.

A "Beauty Emporium" for the convenience of actors and actresses will soon be opened at the Flatbush studios of the Vitagraph Company. It is the result of a suggestion made by Evert Overton to Studio Manager A. Victor Smith, and will be the only one of its kind connected with any motion picture plant.

A building located within the inclosure, directly opposite the big studio is being converted into this new department and when completed will contain a woman's hair-dressing and manicure parlor, barber shop, bootblackening stand, tailoring establishment and first aid department, for the exclusive use of members of the Vitagraph Company.

SHEER ANNOUNCES NEW ENGAGEMENTS.

Among the engagements announced by William A. Sheer are Carlyle Blackwell, to star with the Solax Company; Alma Hanlon, to star with the Ivan company; Jack Meredith, to play the lead in a Premo picture; J. Herbert Frank and Helen Weer, with Triangle; Arthur Donaldson and Robert Vivian, with Ivan and William Hinckley, as the lead with Olga Petrova in the next Popular Plays and Players production.

NOT ASSOCIATED WITH WEIR.

Editor of The Motion Picture World:

Sir—A recent issue of The American Magazine contains a sketch of a Mr. Hugh C. Weir, in which is included the statement that I am collaborating with him in the writing of motion picture plays. This is a mistake. I have no connection with Mr. Weir—business, literary or social—whatever.

REGINALD WRIGHT KAUFFMAN.

Stars Shine in Universals for June 19.

King Baggot Heads a Good List With "The Man from Nowhere," a Red Feather Drama.

KING BAGGOT, Mary Fuller, Herbert Rawlinson, Ben Wilson, Violet Mersereau, William Garwood, Thomas Jefferson, Paul Panzer, Edith Roberts, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Billie Rhodes, Edna Hunter, Gale Henry, William Franey, Hobart Henley, Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, stars of "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," all appear on the Universal program for the week of June 19, supported by dozens of other seasoned players who work under the Big U banner.

King Baggot has the position of honor on the program for the week of June 19, appearing in the five-reel Red Feather drama, "The Man from Nowhere," in which he is supported by Helen Martin. On the same day Neal Burns, Betty Compson and Ethel Lynn disport in the Nestor comedy, "Wanted, A Husband."

On Tuesday, June 20, Herbert Rawlinson and Agnes Vernon share honors in "The False Part," a two-reel Gold Seal light drama, which is followed on the same day by the Imp comedy, "His Picture," in which William Garwood and Violet Mersereau play the principal roles. Thomas Jefferson and Zoe Bech, his little co-star, share the screen in the Big U drama, "The Grip of Crime," on the same day.

Mary Fuller in the two-reel Victor detective drama, "The Scarlet Mark," is the feature of the program for June 21. Miss Fuller is ably supported by Joseph Girard. On the same day Animated Weekly, No. 25, and the L-Ko howler, "The Jailbirds' Last Flight," with Bill Armstrong, Carmen Meyers and Gene Rogers will be released.

"Behind the Secret Panel," a three-reel Imp drama, in which Paul Panzer, William Welsh and Sonia Marsel take the principal roles, will be released on June 22 as the feature of the day. It will be followed by the Powers comedy, "The Young Sleuths."

Harry Benham and little Edith Roberts make a delightful pair of sweethearts in the Imp comedy drama, "The Heart Wrecker," which will be released on June 23. On the same day Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley reissue "The Rosary," which, although four years old, is considered to be one of their masterpieces. Just so the day won't be too serious, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Billie Rhodes cavort about in the Nestor two-reel comedy, "What Could the Poor Girl Do?"

The supernatural and life after death enter in a large measure into the Bison two-reel animal drama, "The Ghost of the Jungle," which is said to be one of the earliest productions in which Rex de Rosselli and Yona Landowsky have appeared for the Universal. On the same day William Franey and Gale Henry cut up some dicos in the Joker comedy, "The Fall of Deacon Stillwaters."

On June 25 Ben Wilson appears in the two-reel Rex domestic drama, "The Fool," in which he is supported by Edna Hunter. On the same day Hobart Henley shares honors with Sydel Dowling in the Laemmle drama, "The Rogue With a Heart." On the same day Gertrude Selby and Reggie Morris do their worst in the L-Ko comedy, "Dirty Work in a Beauty."

During the week of June 19 the eighth two-reel episode of "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring" will be released, with Francis Ford and Grace Cunard furnishing the thrills. "Peg" is putting all the other Universal serials in the shade as far as popularity is concerned.

VIM COMPANIES REMAIN IN SOUTH.

Contrary to expectation, the three Vim comedy companies will not come to New York for the summer months, but will remain in Jacksonville, Fla. Managing Director Louis Burnstein, after consultation with Mark Dintenfass, determined to take advantage of the extraordinary season which Florida is experiencing, and dispense with the difficulties attending removal from the spacious and up-to-date studios on the St. James River. This decision affects the companies headed by Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby, Bob Burns and Walter H. Stull, and "Babe" Hardy and Billy Ruge. The news was received with satisfaction from all the players, who have formed ties that bind them to the Southern city.

J. K. BURGER GOES SOUTH.

J. K. (Simon Legree) Burger, manager of branch exchanges, International Film Service, Inc., left on Thursday June 8, for Philadelphia, Washington and Atlanta. Mr. Burger has just recently returned from an extended business trip west and reports that "The Mysteries of Myra" are showing to unprecedented business.

Alec Francis with World Film

TWO popular film players, Alec B. Francis and Johnny Hines, well known from their work in past productions, are now permanently with the World Film Corporation. Mr. Francis, formerly in such Broadway successes as "The Solicitor," "The Girl from Kays," "The Bar-Rister," and "Our Flat," and long time photoplayer, made his World Film debut in "The Wishing Ring," in which Vivian Martin appeared. Since then he has portrayed many successful film productions as "Vanity Fair," "After Dark," "The Imposter," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "Man of the Hour," "The Ballet Girl," and "Human Driftwood," and is now at work in support of Miss Young in "The Story of Susan." He has just completed his appearance in a highly important role in "The Perils of Divorce," in which Edna Wallace Hopper and Frank Sheridan appear.

Mr. Francis' mentor was Uppingham College and Mount Memory College, Ireland, and for years he sought the education that comes from experience by roaming the British Empire from Lands End to Simpra.

Johnny Hines, one of the leaders of the young school of eccentric light comedians, also has become a permanent World player. He is now at work in support of Alice Brady in her forthcoming production, "Miss Petticoats." During his several years as a screen player, Hines has appeared in fifteen features.

Johnny Hines graduated from the stage, where he has appeared with William Gillette, George M. Cohan, under the management of William A. Brady, and with Oscar Hammerstein.

In addition to Francis and Hines, Frank Beamish and J. Clarence Harvey are allied now under the Brady-Made banner.

PHOTODRAMATISTS TO HOLD OUTING.

The Photodramatists, formerly the Ed-Au Club, numbering among its members the most prominent writers for the screen, have reached the age-old conclusion that "all work and no play" may affect them as it did the immortal Jack, and at a meeting held June 8 decided to enjoy an outing and general reunion. At the invitation of Edward J. Montague, of the Vitagraph's Bayshore studios, that particular beauty spot of Long Island was chosen as a Mecca, a shore dinner to follow after the pilgrims have paid their devotions at the shrine of Director Ralph Ince.

June 24 was set for the pilgrimage. Recreant members of the Photodramatists take notice, and send in reservations if intending to join the caravan. Address the secretary, Mrs. Mary Louise Farley, 607 West 136th street.

After an address by L. Case Russell, the club members were treated to a showing of the latest Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, "The Destroyers." Planning big things for the coming year, an entertainment committee composed of Mrs. L. Case Russell, chairman; C. Doty Hobart, of the Famous Players, and Edward J. Montague, of Vitagraph, was appointed.

The club, which already numbers among its members the best-known writers and directors for the screen, plans to open its doors to the established writers of fiction and drama who are entering the photoplay field.

Director Rupert Julian is filming "L'Abbe Constantin" as a five-reel feature, the scenario having been prepared by E. J. Clauson of the Universal City staff. Julian will play the lead, supported by an all-star cast, including Flandia Billington, Louise Lovely, Elsie Jane Wilson, Zoe DeRae, Douglas Gerrard and George Berrill, who plays the Abbe. A great deal of expense has been gone into in providing sets for this screen production of the famous book by Ludovic Halevy.

Kemble Secures Zeppelin Raid Films

Pictures Which Showed at Park Theater Under New York Globe Auspices to Be State-Righted.

THE park Zeppelins are playing in the World War is portrayed in moving pictures in "The Zeppelin Raids on London, and the Siege of Verdun," which played to capacity audiences in the Park theater under the auspices of the New York Globe. Pronounced at the time of their first showing as "the most spectacular war pictures ever seen," they show the giant Zeppelins flying over London, the bombardment of the city, the attack on the huge dirigibles by anti-aircraft guns, and the devastation the "Zepps" leave in their wake.

"Deadman's Hill," Le Mort Homme as it is known all over France, is shown in all its thrilling realism. The blowing up of the Malancourt Bridge at Verdun shows how a magnificent structure of steel and brick is shelled into a heap of ruins.

The Kemble Film Corporation of Brooklyn has secured the American rights for these films, and they will be state-righted by them.

Alice Hollister, First Vampire

WHEN the writer of screen history comes to a chapter dealing with the vampire craze, he will have to give special mention to Alice Hollister as "the original vampire of the photoplay." The Kalem star, featured in "The Lotus Woman," will be remembered by old-timers as being for years "the" vampire of the photoplay before that type of character became so common a source of inspiration to writers and producers for the screen.

It was in Kalem's famous Biblical spectacle, "From the Manger to the Cross," that Miss Hollister began her playing of roles bordering on that type when she appeared as Mary Magdalene. "The Vampire," a well remembered Kalem two-reeler, was another production of the early days in which Miss Hollister essayed an interpretation of the lurid colored woman. More recently Kalem's feature, "The Destroyer," will be remembered.

Of French descent, Miss Hollister is ideally fitted to parts making the emotional demands of the vampire roles. She was born in Worcester, Mass., and educated at the Convent Villa Maria, Montreal. In "The Lotus Woman," which is released June 28 on the General Film program, Miss Hollister presents some of the best work of her career as the woman of fate whose hidden hand rules the destinies of a Latin-American republic. Her vain efforts to win the love of Jerry Mandeville, an American soldier of fortune, bring on the train of circumstances of which the story is made.

"The Lotus Woman," which is in five parts, was staged under the direction of Harry Millarde in locations found at such distant points as St. Augustine, Jacksonville and New York. Millarde is also seen to advantage as Jerry Mandeville.

EARLE WILLIAMS IN VITAGRAPH SERIAL.

Earle Williams, the Vitagraph star, who won favor in such popular feature productions as "My Lady's Slipper," "The Juggernaut," "The Sins of the Mothers," "The Goddes," etc., has been working in a serial by C. N. and A. M. Williamson for the past six months, and which was originally intended for release during the latter part of last May. But weather conditions during the winter months held up the work, extending the time of production, which will entail work on his part well into the summer. The serial is now scheduled for release in September, when Mr. Williams will again be seen on the screen in one of the most pretentious serial productions ever released by the Vitagraph Company, and one suited to his personality and dramatic ability.

Censorship in Australia

Deputation of Clerics and Reformers of New South Wales
Broach Matter to Chief Secretary.

Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, May 5, 1916.

A DEPUTATION representing the Catholic Federation and the Council for Civic and Moral Advancement waited on the Chief Secretary of N. S. W., Mr. Black, to ask for a censorship on picture films. Mr. Earp, M.L.C., who introduced the deputation, said that although many of those who purveyed amusement for people were worthy men, there were others—now that picture shows have spread far and wide—who placed pictures on the screens which were only moral poison. They debauched the mind, and the debauching of the body followed. These pictures were shown largely to children.

Sir Thomas Anderson Stuart said that the censoring of films was essential, especially in country centers, where managers put on films which they would not dare to screen in the city. The attraction of children to the picture shows was bad—morally and physically. The picture shows had grown to such a magnitude that it was necessary that the government should take some control in order that healthy and wholesome pictures should be put on the screens.

Archbishop Wright (Church of England) said he believed that it was the duty of the State to control the picture films. There was exceeding danger of the morals of young people who were taken to see the pictures being misdirected. The fact that there was no censorship enabled people to spread poison through the country by means of the pictures. He believed that the spread of venereal diseases was due to a certain extent to pictures which had a bad effect upon the morals of those who saw them.

Mr. Cleary, president of the Catholic Federation, said he had the approval of Archbishop Kelly to speak in behalf of the Catholic community. A great commotion was being raised in other countries upon these doubtful pictures. Many of them were immoral; others were greswome. The books of Victoria Cross were tabooed by the Customs, and yet pictures of them had been permitted to be shown in various photoplay houses in the state. There were other films, which were not immoral or greswome, but were anti-religious, and this being a Christian community some decency should be shown towards the religion of the people. The leading managers of the theaters were agreeable to a censorship being established (?). (I doubt the correctness of the last sentence.)

Rev. Father Sydes gave instances of films which he thought not only vulgar, but highly immoral.

Rabbi Cohen said there were immense possibilities for good in picture shows if the censor got to work and suppressed the coarser and degrading tendencies.

Professor McIntyre (Presbyterian) thought there could be no doubt that the picture theaters were being used for a purpose which was not in accord with the good growth of moral life in the community.

Sir Philip Sydney Jones and Rev. C. Prescott (of the Methodist Church) also addressed the Minister.

Mr. Black, in reply, said that films which were shown here had passed certain censurings. It was a mistake to say that films were shown which had been rejected elsewhere. It was, he thought, also wrong to say that pictures were being shown in country districts which could not be screened in the city. He would have a report prepared, and if it could be proved that pictures of the kind had been shown in the country, the people who screened them would have their licenses cancelled. He did not think that any one censor or any group of censors could agree on the question of the moral or immoral character of any picture. He agreed that scenes of murder were injurious to the young mind to the very greatest extent. The state had recently gone so far as to compel the excision of parts of films which showed murder scenes. It might be better if pictures—no matter how accredited—were submitted to a committee privately for censorship. That point would be submitted to the Cabinet. There were many pictures of educational value which gave great pleasure. Pictures showing scenes of murder, scenes of horror, and salacious scenes should not be shown. Neither should irreligious pictures or those which made a display of disloyalty. Children were the chief visitors to picture houses, and he thought it would be necessary to limit the hours at which children should be allowed to attend. He would endeavor to secure the sanction of the Cabinet to the creation of a board to censor all films shown here, and also to allot the hours at which children could attend—on Saturdays and holidays in particular, when films of an educational value might be shown.

It is just the same thing as has happened in America. These reverend gentlemen no doubt mean good, but it is questionable if they are ever within the walls of a photoplay theater once a year. They have got it into their heads that pictures are bad for the community, and no doubt wish to be made members of the board of censors they are so keen about.

It must be admitted that there are a few exhibitors in Sydney who, like many others in other countries, draw big crowds by suggestive advertising. For instance, "Five Nights," Victoria Cross's novel, as a picture was a most harmless production. But the management advertised it widely as being a formalization of the banned novel. The same took place with the picture "Three Weeks," which was no worse than the usual sex picture or play. Perhaps these gentlemen go by the outside appearances; but, if so, it does not say much for their methods.

The various exchanges in Sydney are, as a whole, strongly against censorship. Australasian Films and Clement Mason, Ltd., are strongly against the movement; the Co-operative Film Exchange does not agree with censorship, but favors a mild form of regulation. The Fraser Film Exchange has never given its views on the subject.

Australian Feature Films, Ltd. (agents for Paramount) are the only exchange that has announced that it favors censorship. This announcement was made about two months ago in a weekly newspaper. A week later the exchange released the Lasky feature, "The Secret Orchard," and widely advertised the fact that the Paramount Corporation had defeated the Pennsylvania censors in court over the picture. And yet they say that they favor censorship!

There is no doubt that the movement will meet with strong resistance from exchanges and showmen.

"A Real Pal"

So Tom North Describes Exhibitor I. L. Williams of Snohomish—A Simple Story That Reaches the Heart.

EVERY night at a certain time down the street comes a man, gently pushing in front of him a wheel chair in which reclines his crippled mate. Unable to walk and dependent upon her husband for every move she makes, she is nevertheless made happy, for not alone her husband but everyone who knows her are always finding ways to help her.

They live in Snohomish, Wash., where Pal I. L. Williams runs the Orpheum theater, and are very fond of moving pictures. The wheel chair they thought would hinder them from attending, so the husband one night decided to wheel his wife down to the Orpheum and carry her into the theater. Pal Williams was there and saw how anxious the husband was that his wife should see the show. He carried her in, and with the help of Pal Williams gently placed her in a seat. With her husband sitting beside her she talked and laughed at the picture and showed more genuine enjoyment than anybody there.

The next night Pal Williams missed the couple, but the next they were there again. "My wife cannot stand being lifted about every night, so we were unable to come last night," he said. Pal Williams and the husband again carried the wife into the theater and placed her in the same seat she had before. She had said she liked the seat.

After the show that night Pal Williams, armed with a hammer and screw-driver, went to the back of the house and tore out the seat that the crippled wife had occupied, drew the nails from the floor and made everything ready. On the following night when the couple arrived he told them to go right in, wheel chair and all. They found the space where the seat had been, made ready for the chair. Delighted beyond words, the husband placed the chair in the vacant space and sat down next to his wife.

The seat next to the space is always vacant, no matter how crowded the house is, for everybody in town knows of Pal Williams' act of kindness. The couple come to the theater every night now, and the days are less long for the wife, she tells Pal Williams.

How great appear some of the little thoughts we have when they take form in action. How easy it is to do these little kindnesses and how happy we feel for doing them. This thoughtful idea of Pal Williams' is typical of him. These are the things that make him the leading exhibitor of his town, and respected by all his associates. A REAL PAL.

Clifford Eflert has completed the production of "The Fourth Tree," written by Olga Printzlan and prepared for the screen by Fred Myton of Universal City. The featured lead was played by Viola Smith, supported by Mina Cunard, Hayward Mack, Nohert Myles and Edwin Brown. Eflert is expecting to produce three or four mountain pictures, featuring Miss Smith, most of the scenes of which will be made on Mount Baldy, near Los Angeles.

What Is a Photoplay

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

JUST what is a photoplay? It seems remarkable that in a business largely, almost wholly, founded upon their production, there should be such indifference as to what a photoplay really is. It is even more surprising that so few should really know the answer. The man who makes automobiles knows all about the manufacture of automobiles. He studies every angle of production. He knows something of metallurgy, something of mechanics, knows fabrics and material in general, shop costs and systems and he gathers men about him whose expert knowledge of these matters supplement his more general information. In motion pictures it is all different.

There are not three manufacturers of films in the entire business who really and truly know a photoplay when they see one. They do not even know that the very term is a misnomer. They have been running plants and have been making money. They were content. Now that most of them are no longer making money, they are turning to costly stage stars, to camera tricks, to new advertising forms and some are even spending money for manuscripts, but there are few manufacturers who know what a photoplay is or how it should be made.

In the first place, a photoplay is not a play. It is here that most of the misconception has arisen, fostered largely by the directors, most of whom have been drafted from the stage or who have risen from the ranks of photoplays trained by stage directors. Wyndham Gittens, of the Melies company and formerly one of the editors for Frank A. Munsey's string of periodicals, puts most compactly the thoughts of others when he says that a motion picture is a story and not a play and is to be told as a story and not as a play.

This is not exactly correct, for the motion picture is neither a story nor a play. It is a form peculiar to itself, but it is best described in a definition this writer originated for a Lubin form sheet some seven years ago and which was later incorporated into Technique of the Photoplay. A photoplay is a story told in action instead of words.

It is not a play told in action instead of words. That would be a pantomime and photoplay is not pantomime. It is a story told in action and it should be told as a story and not as a play. That is where the trouble has laid right along. From the very beginning there has been something radically wrong with photoplay production, but the novelty of the idea, the cheapness of this form of entertainment and the favor in which the leading players have been held has permitted the imperfect productions to find acceptance just as in 1896 people crowded into the vaudeville houses and scene shows to see fifty feet of film showing perhaps a scene just outside the theater.

For twenty years the success of the business has been based upon varying forms of novelty and not upon the intrinsic value of the work presented. The old scenes tired. They were replaced by short farces. These in turn palled and were amplified into the full reel length. In time they grew to two, three, to five-reel lengths, and with "Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis" length alone was supplemented by a splendor of production hitherto undreamed of. This was followed by the presence of stars of the dramatic stage and for a time this served just as the exhibition of the dramatic has been in the vaudeville theaters served their turn to bring to these houses a clientele hitherto strange and, in passing, a clientele now largely lost again.

In vaudeville when the novelty of the dramatic art waned the problem became one of presenting real plays instead of old stars in any vehicle that would serve to take them on and bring them off. It is the same way with the pictures. We have played the last of the trump cards, apparently, and at last, after twenty years, are suddenly required to make good with motion pictures and not with novelty alone, and there are not a dozen directors in this country who can bat an average of 300 successes, because there are not a dozen directors who have even a rudimentary knowledge of the true principles of photoplay. They are making plays; not stories, and they are successful only to the degree in which they unconsciously place narrative before the artifice of the stage. It is almost wholly accident that brings about the hits.

Take from your own experience the photoplays that have made the strongest and most lasting impression. How many of these are plays and how many are stories? If you can differentiate, you will find that the most, if not all, were narratives in action, rather than plays in action alone.

This is because the men who make them are trained to the stage. They view all stories from the angle of the stage.

They produce them with the technique of the stage, modified but slightly to conform to the new conditions. They are not story tellers. They cannot appreciate story telling. They demand plays and accept only those stories in which the theatrical predominates over the truly dramatic, which is something very different from the theatrical. If the play is not striking from the producer's point of view, he proceeds to fix it up to his liking, cramming it with old and threadbare tricks that he has used in all his other productions and reducing it to the same level of mediocrity. He cannot realize a real photoplay because—no matter what his reputation—he knows little or nothing about photoplay production. He is a stage director working as a stage director would work because he has no knowledge of story telling and would not use it if he had.

When the business outgrew the old-time picture people; when a higher standard seemed to have become necessary, manufacturers turned to the stage for men competent to direct the players. In all these years these directors have ruled production with iron will, doggedly and determinedly adhering to old standards and methods. They are the products of a time when the men who were there when the business started were no longer competent to conduct affairs. They were an improvement and their work a novelty. So long as novelty lasted there was no complaint, but now the order is changed. If there is to be a photoplay business there must be photoplays, and a photoplay is not a play at all but a story told in action instead of words and told as a story and not as a play. The action must be vivid, interesting, gripping, but it must be narrative action and not play action. Not until this is understood will the condition of affairs improve and those who have drifted from the theaters be brought back to the enjoyment of real productions.

As a play "The Clansman" was but an indifferent success. As a photoplay it finds a better exposition because Mr. Griffith has told a story and not a play, something he does not always do.

Frank Shaw

ALITTLE over four years ago, a clean-cut young chap walked into the Vitagraph yard at Flatbush and asked to see Sam Spedon, head of the publicity department. At that time the Vitagraph Company operated a stock room, where were kept photos and cuts of players, banners, postal cards, etc., that found ready sale among the theater proprietors and picture fans. This branch was growing so fast it became necessary to enlarge the force in order to have one person devote his entire time to looking after it. The sixteen-year-old boy got the job.

Young Frank immediately began making friends with the Vitagraph players and other employees, and it was but a short time before he was in the good graces of every one connected with the company. He was also making his personality felt outside the plant by his willingness to oblige and promptness in looking after mail orders and telephone requests of nearby theater managers.

From the position of office boy in 1912, through the intermediate grades, to the head of the news service department of a big motion picture concern in 1916, where he not only has innumerable duties to contend with, but directs and oversees the work of a force of twelve, is the enviable record of Frank Shaw, head of the news service department of the Vitagraph Company, who has yet to reach his twenty-first birthday.

The Country Theater

Frank G. Andrews Writes of the Importance of the House in the Small Town—One of the Ribs of the Industry.

THE country theater may not be the backbone of the moving picture industry, but it is at least one of the ribs—and it's no fifth rib, either. By country theater I mean picture houses in towns of less than 5,000 population.

The condition which the country exhibitor has to face is somewhat different from that of his city brother, and it is one which manufacturers, and exchange men as well, should carefully study. I am not posing as a know-all in the moving picture game, but I have been peculiarly favored for several years to watch and study this particular end of the business. I think I know the country side of the picture show business as well as the next man, this because most of the highbrows of the industry have given the better part of their attention to the problems of the city exhibitor.

You eliminate the country theater—the house where they give just one show a day, and that in the evening beginning at 7:30—and you have done something that will make sellers of film vince when once they come to realize its full effect. Therefore I think it of extreme importance that manufacturers of picture films and exchanges who catered to patrons who should give this end of the business more than passing thought.

It is probably true that the picture business is just now facing a crucial test. Thousands of theaters are closing, and the boards are not being nailed up alone against those located in the cities. Closed theaters are numerous in the country, too. The reason is that there are and have been for some time too many theaters for the number of people available. It has reached a point now where the old question of the survival of the fittest makes its inevitable intrusion.

It used to be that some fellow with a hundred and fifty dollars fixed up a storeroom and packed 'em in. Somebody else saw him carrying his money to the bank and rented a storeroom along the street. Both did so well that a third man started. They were all doing well until some experienced fellow from a larger city down the road heard of it. He came up, built a modern place, introduced modern methods, and "hogged" the business. The three little fellows cussed the big fellow to his face, but the other man had the place, showed the goods and got all the business. His one blade of grass is now growing where three grew before, and the public wouldn't go any farther to the big fellow for anything. That is why so many small places are closing. It doesn't necessarily mean that fewer people are attending picture shows or that they are growing tired of pictures—although I'll admit that the long features of mediocre quality, of which there are many, do try their patience and faith in pictures at times.

Here is the strong point about the picture business in the small town: The exhibitor must depend upon the same patrons night after night. The every-nighters are the backbone of his business. When he loses one he has just cause to weep. And he can't hold any one customer unless he continues to please that customer. He may advertise the top of his head off and tell 'em in the papers that he is showing the best pictures on earth, but it won't draw the country patron, only just about so long. You may entice them into a city theater by various dodges, but it's what you show in the country that counts, because there are no transients.

Here is where the small theater faces its greatest problem. The exhibitor knows what his customers want and goes to bed sick when he is stung on some feature. He knows that the showing of the unsatisfactory picture is going to react and hurt his attendance for several nights to come. He knows that the showing of one unsatisfactory picture will do more to tear down his business than the showing of three good pictures can counteract. Patrons are too prone to call a picture "rotten" and as slow as cold molasses to praise a good one. People characteristically will knock twice where they will boost once.

Now the small exhibitor would very much like to satisfy his patrons and thereby swell his receipts; but how is he going to do it? His heart is right and he means well. He wants only good pictures and is willing to pay for them. But how is he going to get pictures that are uniformly good? There ain't no such animal. Take the best feature service in the world today. You may get features that the company will guarantee to be all masterpieces, but you will find some among them that your patrons will classify as very ordinary, and in some cases will call absolutely rotten—an unpleasant but fairly descriptive word of quite modern origin.

If an exhibitor takes a service, he has got to take it. He must take it as it runs—good, bad and indifferent—which is, to be candid, about the way they run. He can't pick out the good ones and sidestep the poor ones. He can't have all Mary Pickfords, Pearl Whites, Francis Bushmans and Clara Kimball Youngs. He must take the culls along with the primes.

Country people generally prefer the features to the smaller subjects, but there are times when they are dubious. To watch through five or six reels of a widely-advertised feature, waiting for the punch that never comes, is a trying test on the nerves. To watch the antics instead of the acting of a company of misfit actors and actresses, who apparently are trying so hard to earn the money that they overdo their parts, is not entertaining; it is pitiful. Don't get the idea that patrons of the city theaters are the only ones wise enough and intelligent enough to perceive these things. Country people are picture-wise quite on a par with patrons in the centers of civilization. They see pictures, dream pictures and serve them at the table, and some picture fans and fannesses living in towns of two thousand can tell you more about certain actors and actresses in a play than the men who made the picture know about it themselves. Some of our people are travelling encyclopedias of information on pictures. Really, in a country town, what else is there to do?

Much can be written about the moving picture situation in the country towns, and perhaps I shall contribute more at some future time. The point of what I have said is that people who manufacture and sell pictures should give especial attention to the peculiar needs of the country exhibitor because even the fellow with no opposition is having just as hard a row to hoe as some of his desperate city brethren. In other words, whether you've got opposition or not, you can't get people into your theater unless you please them. You may drive a horse to water but you can't make him drink.

Will Pay $1,000 For Scenarios

Herbert Blache Says He Will Give That Sum for First Choice of Writer's Output.

HERBERT BLACHE, president of the United States Amusement Corporation, announces he is willing to pay $1,000 apiece for good dramatic scenarios. "In fact," states Mr. Blache, "I would rather pay $1,000 to good feature writers who will give me first choice of their work than a lesser sum. But I must have first choice and the work must be the writer's best. I have no objection to writers who sell $1,000 stories to me writing for as many other producers as they please, but they must first present all their dramatic themes to me if they want $1,000 right along for the play. With that simple understanding I am willing to give $1,000 for every dramatic theme I can use, and I accordingly hope to surround myself with the best staff of scenario contributors in the country."

Madame and Herbert Blache will shortly open their Greater Blache Studios adjoining the present Blache-Solax studio on Lemoine Avenue, Fort Lee, N. J. The Greater Blache Studios will produce dramatic features for World and Pathe, in addition to the programs with whom they have present arrangements. It is due to this additional production which starts the morning of the Greater Blache Studios are opened that Mr. Blache needs scenarios of the strictly feature order. A spirited effort is being made to interest all the bigger writers of moving picture scenarios, but the figure will be as cheerfully paid to an unknown if he can write "big" stuff.

NEW YORKERS FORM PHOTOPLAY LEAGUE.

ONE of the outgrowths of the recent meeting of the delegates of the Federated Women's Clubs which was held in New York City was the formation of the Photoplay League and the appointing on the advisory committee of such prominent New Yorkers as Cornelius Vanderbilt, Adolph Lewisohn, Isaac N. Seligman, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, Mrs. James Speyer and many others prominent in the social life of the metropolis.

At their first official meeting held at the Seventh Regiment Armory recently, after the organization was instituted, the forthcoming Pallas release "Davy Crockett" was shown as an example of the modern high grade picture.

Mr. Lascelles, one of the speakers, closed his remarks with an appeal to the Womens Clubs of the country to form committees to review all motion pictures in their respective localities and memorialize the manufacturers of any plays which seemed to them as improper to be shown.

Horsley Pictures for July

Has An Interesting Program for the First Week—Good Cub Comedy.

A UNIQUE romantic comedy drama, in which a motion picture star portrays the part of a motion picture star, is among the Horsley-Mutual offerings for the week of July 1, the novel characterization falling to Crane Wilbur in the two reel Centaur feature, "The King O'Make Believe."

The play was written by Mr. Wilbur and the author has provided a very strong up-to-the-minute vehicle, highly dramatic in many respects with an excellent comedy relief. Mae Gaston shoulders the leading feminine role, which is a synthetized part, allowing this talented young actress plenty of opportunity for splendid acting. John Oaker, the popular young juvenile actor, is also well cast and he handles a difficult part in good fashion. Others supporting Mr. Wilbur are Joseph Hazelton, Pearl Elmore and O. Biglow.

As Neil Stuart, "The King O'Make Believe," Crane Wilbur accidentally comes into contact with Hope Hathaway, Miss Gaston, who has been crippled since childhood and wealthy by inheritance is the victim of a scheming guardian who insists upon a marriage between the girl and his lazy and uneducated son.

"The King" comes into the girl's life and he, hearing of the abuse she is forced to endure, offers help. The guardian plans a hasty marriage and the faithful colored nurse summons the actor to prevent the wedding. The guardian is successful, however, but while the youth is fleeing with his bride, the horses attached to his buggy become unmanageable. To save his own life the youth leaps to the road, but his act is fatal to him. "The King" overtakes the runaway team, saves the girl and takes her to his mother's home. Science and love work wonders for a happy and pretty end. The play was staged under the supervision of Director Robert S. Broadwell.

A screaming one reel Cub Comedy, featuring the little star George Ovey in his famous Jerry character, is another of the Horsley output for this week. "Jerry's Big Haul" is the name of the comedy and Mr. Ovey introduces some new and very laughable antics before he finally makes his haul, which is his engagement to Josie, a pretty little dark-haired hearse, ably played by Claire Alexander, the dainty Cub ingenue.

At the start Jerry gets in trouble with the landlady and then the police. To escape he runs away and is confronted by Josie. It is love at first sight. The father of the girl does not approve of Jerry until the funny little fellow saves the father's treasure box, after several would-be safe blowers have done a lot of damage. Director Milton H. Fahrney has produced a very realistic explosion scene, rarely seen in comedy.

Others in the cast are George George, Jefferson Osborne, Janet Sully, Louis FitzRoy, Robert Kenyon, Gordon MacGregor, Harry Jackson, Arthur Mund and Ray Lincoln.

Favor Extended Bookings

Exhibitors in Kansas City Territory Finding Many Advantages in Longer Runs.

A FACTOR of more than passing interest among local exchanges in Kansas City, Mo., is that of extended bookings. Although most managers are influenced by their particular needs, the general consensus of opinion is that extended bookings are extremely desirable. The fact remains that nearly each week sees a new house in the Kansas City territory adopting the extended booking policy. The exchange men in favor of this have many arguments to present to the exhibitor: higher in express rates, cutting in advertising bills, lower film rates, and better music. All these, and many others, the exchanges contend are factors in developing this phase of the question. Better pictures for less money when taken on extended bookings is one of the most important items favoring this scheme.

When Frank Newman, proprietor of the Royal theater, opened that house and announced that he would change the program but twice a week, he was scoffed at by pioneers of the game. This, however, did not deter Mr. Newman from going ahead. Now he has the most successful moving picture theater in Kansas City, and his place is taken as a model of successful show-houses in the entire Southwest. A short while after Mr. Newman started twice-weekly changes, the Willis Wood opened up with shows lasting not less than one week, and many times much longer. Gradually other houses adopted the plan, until now many little suburban theaters play pictures successive days. One noticeable exception to this is the Apollo, which in the past several years has shown but one picture two straight days; that was "Chaplin's Burlesque on Carmen," and a new attendance record was established on the second night.

Prominent theaters which have adopted the extended booking are as follows: Regent, Royal, Winnwood, Warwick, Lencord, Sapphire, Wonderland, Empress, Gilham, Benton. A few of the out-of-town theaters are Watson, Holland, Wichita, Majestic, Wellington, Chelsea, Springfield, and the Orpheum at St. Joe.

NEW PLAYERS FOR HORSLEY.

During the past week four new members have been added to the acting force at the David Horsley studios, and they will be seen in the near future Centaur features of the Horsley-Mutual productions.

Myra Davis Dowling, an experienced actress of the legitimate drama has been engaged as a member of the supporting company of the co-stars Margaret Gibson and William Clifford and her first effort will be in a character part which gives her an opportunity to display her talent in such work. Marguerite Foss, who is familiar to motion picture viewers, has also been added to this company.

Lloyd Holton, who in the past has been seen in a number of big productions for Southern California producers, has been cast with the supporting company of Crane Wilbur and Corine Bradford, known as the "girl on the cover," she having posed for many artists throughout the country, makes her debut as a motion picture actress in a forthcoming Centaur feature, with the Crane Wilbur company.

RAVER MOVES TO ROCKVILLE CENTER.

The Raver Film Corporation moved their executive offices to their studios at Rockville Center, Long Island, last week. The building which will house the offices of the company is finished and ready for occupancy.

So much of Mr. Raver's time was demanded at the studios in the supervising of construction and installation of equipment that the offices which have been maintained in the World Tower building were moved to the studio as soon as the office building was completed.

In their new home the Raver Company will have even better facilities than they enjoyed in their New York offices. Everything was carefully planned by Mr. Raver personally with the result that things have been arranged to secure the greatest amount of efficiency.

The studios are only thirty-five minutes from New York City. Territory buyers seeking state rights on "The Other Girl" the Augustus Thomas play featuring James J. Corbett or "Driftwood" from the play by Owen Davis; "The Fortunate Youth" from Wm. J. Locke's novel or "Life Without Soul" adapted from Mary W. Shelley's book Frankenstein will be met at the depot by the company's automobile and the pictures will be exhibited to them in the studio projection room.

BROOKLYN EXHIBITORS TO HOLD FORUM.

At the regular meeting of the Brooklyn Exhibitors at the Triangle theater, at 11:30 o'clock on the evening of Thursday, June 15, an open forum will be held. The exhibitors will be addressed by General Manager Walter W. Irwin of the V-L-S-E, General Manager M. H. Hoffman of the Bluebird exchanges, Commissioner Hartigan of the Weights and Measures Bureau, General Sales Manager C. R. Seelye of Pathe, Deputy Commissioner Kaufman of the License Bureau, and Borough Inspector John Dillon of the Police Department.

MR. URBAN RETURNS TO ENGLAND.

Charles Urban, who two months ago came to the United States to exploit "How Britain Prepared," the remarkable subject produced under his supervision with the co-operation of the British Government, returned home on Saturday, June 10.

GOLD KING SCREEN FOR NEW JOPLIN, MO., HOUSE

Grubel Brothers, of Kansas City, Kan., who own and control a chain of theaters in Kansas and Missouri, have recently purchased a Gold King Screen for their New Electric theater in Joplin, Mo. President Jones will personally supervise the installation of the screen.

FRIEDMAN INCREASES "SPOILERS" TERRITORY.

Benjamin Friedman, general manager of the Friedman Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, has secured the rights for "The Spoilers" for Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas. This makes eight states in which Mr. Friedman is booking the big Selig film, as he already controlled Minnesota, Montana and North and South Dakota.

"The Redemption of Dave Darcey"

James Morrison Featured in Five-Part Vitaphone Blue Ribbon Feature of Thrilling Melodramatic Style.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE enjoyment which the spectator feels in viewing this production may be due to the fine impersonation by James Morrison of the character of Dave Darcey, a crook, whose addition to crime began, when, as a hungry little street urchin, he stole from a fruit stand and was hauled off by a police officer to face the punishment of the hardened criminal. Or it may be due to the magnetism of the story it-to better the standing of the screen among thoughtful people. The moral tone is not objectionable, in that right and virtue triumph; but the story, in material and treatment, suggests nothing new or elevating.

We gather that divorce is perilous because it may be the outcome of unjust suspicions leading to the separation of a congenially mated couple, the wife in the present instance being played by Edna Wallace Hopper, the husband by Frank Sheridan. They are an entirely devoted pair—despite a disparity in years, and the young wife's fondness for pleasures that are quite beyond the middle-aged husband—until a designing woman enters the household and deliberately plots trouble. Fortune favors her in the presence of Mason Tegar, a debonnaire man-about-town, who is in love with Constance, regardless of the barrier of matrimony.

Everything works out according to the plans of the adroit schemer—Graham becomes secretly jealous, then openly jealous and finally, confronted by seemingly undeniable evidence of guilt, he disrupts the happy family, and all the while there was not the slightest cause for a divorce. In the last part of the final reel, the home-wrecker, having appropriated as much of Graham's money as she needs, runs away with another man, leaving a note that clears Constance and makes possible a fond reunion.

For its variety in locations and the richness of its settings the picture is to be recommended, the scenes of an ice-skating carnival at night being especially worthy of note. It is here that Constance falls through a hole in the ice and is rescued by the man with whom her name is unfavorably linked. Scenes in a restaurant where the deposed wife is employed as a dancer, and those in a Chinatown dive also are well presented.

self, which deals with a sociological problem in which none of us can fail to be interested, although the utopian manner in which certain important events are introduced leads us to regret that the story had not been developed in more professional style. There are also frequent disturbing jumps in the assembling of scenes. At times the picture runs smoothly and we find ourselves absorbed in the remarkable tale of "The Redemption of Dave Darcey" when suddenly a roughly molded connecting link causes our senses to awaken to a point of criticism.

In the opening of the story we see Dave returning with his booty from a thieving expedition. A few hours later at a dance to which he is treating his friends he is attacked by a rival gangster, resulting in a spectacular scene in which Dave shoots the gangster who feigns death. In his flight Dave enters the home of Grace Harrington, where a dance is also in full swing. Here he is protected from the police, and Philip Benton, Grace's sweetheart and son of a munitions manufacturer, at Dave's request for a chance to make good offers him a position. This he fills satisfactorily until he is discharged for interfering on behalf of Benton's sweetheart, when the young millionaire has become infatuated with a foreign secret agent. An attempt to blow up the munitions works by associates of the adventures is frustrated by Dave, and results eventually in restoring him to the good graces of Benton.

This production which was released on the program of the V-L-S-E on Monday, June 12, has in the cast Edna Bruce, who plays the feminine lead; Billie Billings, Emanuel A. Turner, Mary Maurice, Robert Gailford, Gerald Gordon, John Costello, Logan Paul, Dan Hayes and Charles J. Giegerich, Jr.

"Perils of Divorce"

A Peerless World Film Melodrama in Which Edna Wallace Hopper Plays the Part of an Ever Faithful Wife.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN the introductory title "Perils of Divorce" is frankly and correctly called a melodramatic story, thus criticism such as might be leveled at a nominally serious study of divorce is disarmed. As a melodrama in which the situations govern the characters and not the characters the situations, this five-part picture, directed by Edwin August, makes very passable entertainment, although it is scarcely the type of production

Scene from "Perils of Divorce" (World).

Without being an exceptional screen subject, Mrs. Hopper plays Constance with considerable spirit, whereas, Frank Sheridan, in an effort to portray strong feeling, is in danger of becoming too melodramatic. The remainder of the cast is efficient, particularly Alec Francis as the faithful friend of the wrongly accused woman.

Biographs Worth Reissuing

"Men and Women," a Three-Part Drama—"The Squaw's Love," an Indian Subject, With Many Stirring Scenes.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AS in most of the Biograph releases, the cast presenting "Men and Women" includes an exceptional number of screen notables, whose presence is bound to give the picture an interest apart from the story. This three-reel drama, in the matters of plot material, development, and the production supplied by James Kirkwood, fulfills requirements; but had it been met by a less distinguished company, there would have been slight reason for singling it out from among other photoplays of a similar nature.

In the part of a girl whose faith in her lover remains unshaken, even after he has been found guilty of theft, we find Hilda Seward looking pleasingly girlish and acting with her accustomed repose. Then there is Marshal Nellan, as the youth who suffers sufficiently for his misdeed; also Lionel Barrymore, as a man who lives down one serious mistake and becomes governor of a state. Gertrude Robinson figures prominently in the story, whereas, several of the subordinate parts are presented by players whose names are now featured whenever they appear on the screen. Were the story less diverting than it is, the cast, no doubt, would assure its success. The plot follows with plenty of detail the trouble resulting from the theft of bonds from a bank, the subsequent run on the institution and the series of circumstances that

To show affection and at the same time a heart full of selfishness takes more art and is more effective. A mother's caress while she deceived her daughter would have made the audience hate her to a triumph of art. But she seems not to have tried to do it.

The story, even with its drawbacks, holds extremely well. Many of the parts are finely acted. The staging is excellent, many of the sets being perfect in atmosphere and effect.

"The Making of Maddalena"

In Morosco Subject Edna Goodrich Gives Splendid Interpretation of Pathetic Italian Character.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN "The Making of Maddalena," a five-part subject produced by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, the splendid characterization of Edna Goodrich is the making of a picture that has much to commend it. She is the center of interest throughout. It is a pathetic role, that of Maddalena, an Italian girl, a painter's model, who falls in love with a would-be artist who comes to Rome to "study." Miss Goodrich's portrayal of Maddalena, the timid, sweet-faced step-daughter of a sof, is marked by unusual charm and sympathy, and also judgment.

nearly ensnare an innocent youth. Practically all of the scenes are in appropriately staged interiors.

Mabel Normand, Alfred Paget and Claire McDowell, are the leading players in "The Squaw's Love," a vivid little romance of Indian life that works up to a thoroughly impressive climax. Particularly fine are the river scenes, with the canoes being tossed about in the rapids during a chase that means life or death for an ostracized brave.

"Hypocrisy"

A Melodrama by Fox That "Holds Up the Mirror" in Part—Will Be Considered a Big Picture.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

MOVING PICTURES with vital themes are not too many, and this one, "Hypocrisy," a five reel Fox picture, not only deserves praise, but is sure of popular success. It shows us the bluff and pretence of a certain circle of modern society and of people who live without means in splendor, parasites often of the most shameless kind. The picture makes them out a mean lot, and it is pleasing to see them shown up. It tells the love story of the daughter of one of these shameless social parasites. The girl is played by Virginia Pearson, who makes her very charming indeed. That the story develops with imagination and has several exciting, melodramatic incidents is in its favor; but it doesn't take much imagination to see shortcomings in it. Perhaps the producer of it knew that the spirit shown by his letting what was pretty good remain for good enough was, at bottom, part and parcel with the spirit he holds to our scorn. He is as wise as the king who puts tin in his own silver coin. It is a spirit of bluff and pretence that is often shown by picture makers.

The worst thing in the picture, perhaps, is this: The villain thinks he can fasten a great crime on the hero and make him a "by word," and the crime is the selling of stocks in a railroad that everyone knows is in the hands of a receiver. The buyer is the villain himself, a great figure in finance, who knows all about the road and wants the stock to effect an illegal merger. Would modern society count that a crime or a business virtue? The picture makes the crime so great that the hero's wife does the selling, since her husband would never consent to it, to pay her bridge debts and thereby gets into all kinds of trouble from which she nobly rescues herself.

Again, the picture makes itself trivial by keeping the villain in the limelight in season and out. That he should come with the mother on her first visit to the daughter after her runaway marriage to the poor young man, is almost unthinkable, the more because the mother came for his sake. His being there in spirit makes it disgusting to have him there in person. The mother is trying to get her daughter away from the young husband for the rich man's sake. It would have cost more money and more pains to have made the situation clear by suggestion rather than by having the man himself come to rub in the truth, so to speak, and make the dull spectator understand.

Again, the mother, as played, is but a poor figure without atmosphere or background or understanding of the role, a dead weight all through. She is nothing but the typical stage villainess. Such a villainess thinks that a character to be hateful must smile hatefully and leer with lifted eyebrows.

Scene from "The Making of Maddalena" (Morosco).

The excellence of her acting tends to submerge that of her supporting cast. One player who stands out, however, is John Burton in the role of Randolph Hale, the father of the artist.

The locale of the picture is New York City in the opening, Rome in the second phase, and back to New York at the denouement. The subject is an adaptation of the play by Samuel and Mary Lewis. There is a typically long stage cast. While in construction, "The Making of Maddalena" is not impressive, nevertheless there are a goodly number of situations that stir, some of them notably. That such is the case is due much to the personality and the work of Miss Goodrich.

Randolph Hale, when informed that his wife is declining in health on account of the casting out of the son, kisses his wife good-bye and announces he is going to Rome to bring back the boy. He leaves the house if he were catching a street car rather than a steamer making weekly sailings. Again, the unidentified pestilence supposedly sweeping the east side so virulently as to register 900 cases in 24 hours violates the probabilities because it is against the history of the town these modern days.

Director Frank Lloyd has well staged the subject.

"The Avenger"

Two-Reel Lubin Melodrama Founded on a Mysterious Murder—Written by Julian Louis Lamothé.

Reviewed by Edward Weltzel.

ALTHOUGH the Stars and Stripes protects all sorts of religious beliefs, it has remained loyal to the Hindu faith to supply the Hindus of this country with a temple for the worship of Buddha. It is located in the cellar of a tenement in one of the Coast cities and is the scene of the closing episode of "The Avenger," the two-reel photoplay which is the subject of this review.

A mysterious murder is the first incident in the drama. William Worthing, a collector of curios, is the victim. He is found upon the floor of a room, the door and window of which are bolted on the inside. Suspicion points to Manu, a Hindu servant, but until the son of the murdered man is sent for no progress is made in solving the mystery. Young Worthing recalls that, while in India with his father, they visited a temple and learned of a little image of Buddha that contained a bit of sacred parchment. This image he had seen later among his father's curios. Knowing that the sacred relic had been stolen, the younger Worthing concludes that Manu murdered his father in 1916 to get back the image and to square accounts with the despoiler of the temple. His suspicion is correct, and the last reel shows Manu restoring the relic to an altar of his god. The deity proves very ungrateful, however, and allows the American to hoodoo the Hindu into taking his own life by a series of hanky-panky tricks from the "Magician's Own Book."

Ever since Wikke Collins wrote "The Moonstone" tales of the relentless avengers of the East have held a weird fascination for many simple souls, and also for those of a loftier mental growth. When transferred to the screen stories of this order have the added merit of being able to visualize the "magic and spells" performed for the benefit of the faithful. Fairy tales, detective stories and tales of mystery, a relish for them long outlasts our childish faith in their verity!

Leon D. Kent, who directed the picture, has shown a fair appreciation of its needs. The acting of L. C. Shumway, Sidney Hayes, Robert Gray, George Routh, Velma Whitman and Melvin Mayo is equal to the requirements of the scenario.

New Vim Comedies

Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby Appear in Amusing Stories of Domestic Life.

Reviewed by Lynde Denix.

THE joys and disappointments and the everyday incidents of domestic life are the inspiration for the comedies being made by Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, late of Universal, and now producing for the Vim brand. The titles of four single-reel pictures shown in advance of release will indicate the nature of the subjects. They are "Spring Cleaning," "The Connecting Bath," "Will a Woman Tell?" and "Their Dream House," probably the most laughable of any, although the others may take equally well with an audience that appreciates refined comedy.

Scene from "Will a Woman Tell?" (Vim).

In their clean tone and the absence of horseplay these new Vim films are pleasantly unlike the customary run of pictures issued under the head of comedy. Moreover, they are acted with fine spirit by the co-stars and the photographic work of Harry Keepers is so uniformly good that it merits particular mention. "Spring Cleaning" presents the troubles of a husband on May 1st because his wife removes the rugs and the hangings and otherwise disturbs his comfort when he had counted on several days of domestic ease after a trip on the road. In "The Connecting Bath" a couple preparing to get a divorce are placed in adjoining rooms in a hotel where there is considerable confusion over the use of the bath. Needless to say a chance meeting brings about a reconciliation.

"Will a Woman Tell?" is founded on the notion that it is impossible for a woman to keep a secret, though a lack of reticence may have serious consequences; whereas in "Their Dream House" we find an amusing exaggeration of the trials of newlyweds, who are fooled by a glib real estate agent into renting a cottage that is very pretty to look at but unsubstantial. Mr. Myers and Miss Theby are to be complimented on the first of their comedy productions for the General Film program.

"On the Italian Battle Front"

Official War Pictures Are Handled in This Country by the Italian Journal.

Reviewed by Lynde Denix.

EVERY nation in Europe has its official war pictures, just as it has a blue book, or a white book, or a yellow book, and in due time the pictures as well as the books are circulated in this country. England, France and Germany have had opportunities to present their versions of the conflict, and now the military activities of Italy are at hand in six reels of the most varied, interesting and pictorially beautiful film that has come to America from any source. The Italian Journal, under whose direction the picture is being shown, engaged Weber's theater, New York, for an indefinite run beginning June 12. Other prints will be displayed elsewhere.

The great difference between this and the usual picture of armies at the front is due to the wonderful country in which the Italian forces are operating. There are hundreds of feet that might be selected from these six reels for release as a scene subject, and of course their value is increased immensely by reason of the human interest attaching to the graphic depiction of the offensive and defensive operations of the armies of Italy. Those who visit the various battle fronts generally return convinced that the war is lacking in romantic qualities, a conclusion that in no way applies to the conflict between Italy and Austria.

There is no attempt here to show actual fighting on a large scale; rather a detailed visualization of the problems confronting modern soldiers engaged in mountain warfare. The Alpine troops in action bring a sequence of remarkable scenes in which one is made to feel the perils of mountain climbing supplemented by the perils of war. In the background we see towering, snow-covered peaks, and then follow every step of the military operations necessary for the occupancy of these immense natural fortifications. The hauling of great guns up the mountain sides, the provisioning of the men, the building of redoubts to make more impregnable those provided by nature, are problems being met by military science, but in this particular phase of the great campaign science has not eliminated the need for heroism and initiative on the part of the individual soldier. The Italians occupying the summit of Mount Nero, sentry duty at an altitude of 10,000 feet, the lowering of the wounded from a mountain top after an engagement, destroying wire entanglements placed by the Austrians, are among a quantity of scenes calling for attention. Then, too, in this very ably edited collection of pictures, there are first rate scenes of the Italian fleet in action in the Adriatic. Concise sub-titles are printed in English and Italian.

The first thing Director Edwin Middleton did on arriving at Flushing, N. Y., from the Gaumont winter quarters at Jacksonville, Fla., was to announce the stars who are to appear in Robert Burne's "Gates of Divorce." Alexander Gaden and Miss Gertrude Robinson have been chosen for stellar honors in this three-act Mutual picture.

"The Fall of a Nation"

Thomas Dixon's Spectacular Play for Preparedness Is Presented at Liberty Theater—Music by Victor Herbert.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE author of "The Birth of a Nation" essayed his second big picture without the aid of Griffith, and in "The Fall of a Nation" he produced, with the assistance of Bartley Cushing, a photoplay that need not be compared with earlier works because in several vital respects it is quite different. Where magnitude was desirable in arousing a war spirit in the audience Mr. Dixon prepared battle scenes on a gigantic scale, and the thrill one experiences when watching them is intensified by Victor Herbert's stirring music, probably the most appropriate score ever written for the accompaniment of a motion picture. For nearly half an hour toward the close of the first act the horror, the excitement, the noise and the tragedy of battle are brought within the four walls of a theater, and again at the end of the second act there is a thrilling depiction of an active nation in arms. But for the really distinctive quality of the production one need not wait for spectacular effects, necessary as they are in a cinema entertainment of this type.

Mr. Dixon chose a tremendous national theme and treated it with keen regard for the importance of trivial personal affairs in the lives of those who constitute the nation. In numberless ways and with a cleverness that might be called tricky he aimed to show just how a national calamity means unavoidable personal suffering, the breaking up of families and death of the death of the individual as well as that of the community, the state and the nation. He used many children in his picture, comedy such as lends spice to everyday life, others to bitter ridicule, perhaps the bitterest ridicule of public men ever placed on the screen. The good taste of showing actors unmistakably intended to represent William J. Bryan and Henry Ford, carrying flowers to a conquering army where they are given the task of peeling potatoes, would be more questionable if newspapers had not accustomed us to such strained satire. At all events a New York audience laughs very heartily, more heartily, no doubt, than will the audiences in Detroit, Mich., and Lincoln, Neb.

The argument of the picture is that of Theodore Roosevelt and the New York Tribune. What we need more than anything else just now is militant Americanism armed to the teeth to defend us from the forces of European powers certain to turn their attentions to this country as soon as their own disputes are settled. In a pogrom covering important historical happenings in Europe and the United States between 1620 and 1905 Mr. Dixon shows with some success why the ideals of this country are worth preserving. This is his first reason for preparedness.

But unfortunately the dominant factions in the nation are blind to the impending danger, while right in the heart of New York conspirators employed by a foreign emperor are organizing to aid the invader. Even the heroine of the story, Virginia Holland, a leader of women's clubs, is an ardent pacifist, whereas the most prominent adviser, John Vassar, is a stalwart young congressman, who tries without results to put through defense legislation. These are but two of the characters figuring prominently in a quite complex plot that keeps all of the essential figures in the foreground, either as patriots or traitors, during the ensuing period, terminating with the fall of the nation. Following a succession of tremendous battle scenes, clearly photographed and well assembled to work up suspense, unprepared America is annexed by the conqueror. During all this time the picture is so much only open to conviction through a logical presentation of plausible arguments or facts; but most audiences will be carried along on a wave of patriotic emotion.

When it comes to reclaiming the country Mr. Dixon gives his imagination yet freer play by creating a band of loyal women, "Daughters of Jael," who secretly organize and then use their wits and charms to ensnare the officers of the dictator's army, preparatory to a country-wide uprising. The final scenes, with their dash and spirit and the young women riding here, there and everywhere in their pretty white uniforms, recall the Ku Klux Klan episodes in "The Birth of a Nation," except that in the present instance it is rather difficult to take the military operations seriously.

Flores MacDonald gives a particularly sympathetic performance as the Italian woman devoted to her little Tommaso, Loraine Huling is a pleasant girl, but too young in appearance to suggest the leader of a great movement; Arthur Shirley makes a manly young congressman, whereas Percy Standing and Phillip Gastrock, among others in a large cast, deserve mention.

A little pain, a little strife,

A little joy—and that is life.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

AS I viewed the first filmed act of "That Sort" I was impressed that the opening half of it was somewhat tedious; but this was soon forgotten as the story progressed. My interest grew until the final act created in my mind the verdict that the film play, based on the stage play by Basil McDonald Hastings, is a fine picture. But I restrict the application of "fine" to the powerful and convincing story and to the excellent acting of Miss Warda Howard, Duncan McRae and Ernest Maupain, not omitting due praise to John Lorenz and Miss Betty Brown.

Nor must commendation be lacking for the adaptation which was done by Charles J. Brabin, who also directed the production. Director Brabin made some oversight in the settings which will tend to detract from the merits of the production when viewed as a whole. I refer particularly to the theater scene where John Heppell (Duncan McRae) is seated in a box and Diana Loska (Miss Warda Howard) is on the stage dancing. Not another soul can be seen in the picture, which is intended to represent the interior of a theater while a performance is going on. And to make the scene still more incongruous, we see John Heppell, personally, present the actress with the flowers he has brought for her on the occasion. The scene should have been omitted altogether rather than to produce it unrealistically. The contrast between this and other fine interior settings of the photoplay makes the blemish all the more conspicuous. In his direction of the cast, Mr. Brabin is able and skillful, and in the time he leaves too little to the imagination of the spectator. The attempted suicide of Diana Loska, as I saw it in the pictures, is an instance; though I believe this will be changed before the release of the film.

The construction of the photoplay impressed me as novel. One of the opening scenes in the first act shows Diana Loska lying on the floor of her room in the Hotel Carlton, apparently knowing full well that nothing moves an audience more surely than the tears of a child; he introduced fresh, pretty girls and subjected them to the ruthless hands of drunken soldiers; he made much of an ignorant Italian's devotion to his adopted country; he presented dumb animals, appealing in their helplessness; in fact, he overlooked few means of reaching the heart as it responds to patriotism or sentiment.

Then there is another yet more exceptional quality in "The Fall of a Nation"—the adroit use of humor and satire, the quick contrast by which the author shifts from a scene of tragic moment into one of effective comedy. For of an admittedly serious work the number of laughs in the production is unprecedented, and they are laughs having a legitimate place in the story. Some of them are due to natural, human dead. She is discovered by the help, and a doctor is summoned. Doctor Maxwell (Ernest Maupain) restores her to consciousness, and, struck by her intelligence and refinement, persuades her to tell him the story of her life.

The story of a woman's wrongs is thrillingly told on the screen up to the moment of her attempted suicide, and once, during its recital, the pictures tell us a story within the main story, a striking instance of the flexibility of moving picture art.

It develops that Doctor Maxwell is acquainted with John

Heppell (Duncan McRae), the woman's husband that was, and with the daughter that she had borne him before his drunkenness and brutality had driven her from her home into a cold and callous world, in which she had fared badly and sadly; and so from this point in the story until the close we watch with ever-increasing interest the contest for Diana Laska's re-instatement in her rights.

The closing scene, in which Diana's mother love forces her to renounce forever the hope of letting her own daughter know that she, and not another, is her real mother, is powerfully emotional, and aways both heart and mind by its fervid spell.

In this scene Miss Warda Howard is seen at her best in the part of Diana. Indeed, Miss Howard may always refer with justifiable pride to this fine characterization.

Duncan McRae's John Heppell is a worthy opposite to Miss Howard's Diana. There is an air of distinction about Mr. McRae's acting that stamps him an artist. He will be remembered by many as the Edison director for some time, and also as a member of several distinguished dramatic companies. He was specially engaged by Essanay to play John Heppell.

That old favorite, Ernest Maupain, adds another to his numerous photodramatic successes in the role of Doctor Maxwell.

In the final fade-out we catch sight of Diana and the Doctor seated in an old boat on the sands, in absorbed conversation. Director Brabin has been very happy in the introduction of this scene, as the thought flashes on the mind of the spectator that, perhaps, after all, there is a haven of rest and true happiness in store for the greatly wronged actress; and so everyone who sees the picture will go home with a relieved and happier feeling in both mind and heart.

The release date was June 12.

"Medicine Bend"

Signal's Five-Part Western Melodrama, Sequel to "Whispering Smith," Well Produced and of Sustained Interest.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A NOVEL by Frank H. Spearman is the basis for this and a previous five-part production made by the Signal Film Corporation, entitled "Whispering Smith." In these two pictures is employed an extensive cast headed by Helen Holmes. The characterization has been remarkably well carried out and presents a bevy of types well suited to the atmosphere in which they are placed. The story is one of the most thrilling kind of western melodramas and in its continuation into its second and last period opens a struggle of fierce proportions between McCloud, the superintendent of that particular division of the railway, and the wrecking gang, which has looted wrecked freight cars of thousands of dollars worth of goods. The struggle closes with the roundup of Sinclair and Du Sang, the evil spirits of the gang, who meet death thereby.

J. P. McGowan, the director of the production, is to be congratulated on the careful and artistic manner in which he has developed the story on the screen. As a melodramatic production it can be considered one of unusual power and magnetism. Whether or not the story is true to the west of to-day seems of little moment from the viewpoint of the spectator. It does not far jar his bump of consistency. Its characters are red-blooded and stirring, and easy continuous action marks every inch of the film.

"Medicine Bend" will please children as well as adults. They will be pleased with Helen Holmes as the faithful wife of the bully, Sinclair, and they will be pleased with J. P. McGowan as "Whispering Smith." Leo D. Maloney, as Du Sang, who was "as cruel as a soft bullet," will be a much admired type. Paul C. Hurst carries away laurels as Sinclair. Tony is another type that has been splendidly cast, and Thomas G. Lingham as the sheriff of Medicine Bend is not easily forgotten.

This production will be released on the program of the Mutual Film Corporation July 3.

"Shoes"

Impressive Five-Part Bluebird Production, Directed by Lois Weber, Features Mary MacLaren.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

PICTURING a brief chapter in the life of a girl who worked in a five and ten cent store at five dollars a week, Lois Weber has made a production that is a credit both to herself and to the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc. The picture is founded on a story written by Stella Wynne Herron, the basic idea of which originated in a book by Jane Addams. Eva Meyer, the girl of the story, after months of struggle against poverty, relinquishing her pay envelope with little complaint each Saturday night for the support of the family, which included a lazy father, is "sold out for a pair of shoes."

The production rings true, and at no moment do the players appear to be acting. It reminds one of turning the pages of one of life's unhappiest chapters. No detail of the simple little drama of life as it passed in a poor family, consisting of four children, a hardworking mother and a father whose chief concern lay in having plenty of beer to drink and novels to read, has been forgotten. Perhaps the picture's only fault presents itself in an overanxiety to get the intention of the story "over" as it were. This will be noticed particularly in the repetition of scenes relating to the worn shoes in which Eva nightly places insoles cut from cardboard boxes to keep her tired feet from contact with the pavement. The characterization in the hands of Mary MacLaren, Harry Griffith, Mrs. Witting, Jessie Arnold and William Mong is splendidly taken care of. The cloak of stolidity behind which Eva conceals her misery is appropriate to the character of the girl. Her final desperate plunge when she sells her virtue for a pair of shoes closes as far as we are concerned this chapter of her life without a conjecture as to what the next may bring forth. The suggestions of what she might have developed into under other conditions increase the value of the picture as a sociological study.

"Macbeth"

Sir Herbert Tree and Constance Collier Appear in Finely Artistic Adaptation of Tragedy Produced by Reliance Corporation.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WITH few exceptions attempts to place Shakespeare's plays on the screen have been disappointing. There has been little Shakespeare and a dull picture. To say that "Macbeth," acted by Sir Herbert Tree and Constance Collier for the Reliance Film Corporation, is among the exceptions is too much like damning with faint praise, whereas the production deserves the heartiest and most emphatic commendation. It will win on its merits as an interesting, artistic photoplay, as a faithful representation of Shakespeare's tragedy and as a masterpiece of expressive acting that truly reflects the genius of Sir Herbert and the marked ability of Constance Collier. There has been much talk about preserving the art of great actors through motion pictures, but slight accomplishment, either because the players were lost in the new medium, or because the subjects were unwisely selected. Here we have a happy combination of actor and play, also a director competent to handle a great tragedy—John Emerson.

Students of Shakespeare who fear a desecration of a masterpiece, or what amounts to much the same thing, a mere skeleton lacking the mind, the soul and the psychology of the phantom dagger or the pursuing ghost of Banquo. Judiciously used close-ups of his wonderfully mobile features enable Sir Herbert to reveal the ever-increasing mental torture that eats into the soul of the usurper.

The Lady Macbeth of Miss Collier is no less impressive, for she, too, possesses a rich personality perfectly suited to Shakespearean tragedy. She uses natural advantages of face and figure with unfailing intelligence to indicate emotional feeling and the hard cruelty of the relentlessly ambitious woman. In the sleep walking scene and the scenes preceding the tragic death of Lady Macbeth, Miss Collier reaches the high moments of a superb performance.

But it must not be gathered that the picture depends entirely upon these two characterizations. Other roles are properly presented and in the concluding reel, bringing the attack on Macbeth's castle, there is a stirring spectacular conflict handled on a large scale. From first to last the production, 7,500 feet in length, is marked by artistic lighting, tinting and appropriate settings.

"Who's Guilty?"

Fifth and Sixth of the Series Continue to Bear Evidence to the Fact That the Commonest of All Crimes Are Crimes of Circumstance.

THIS series which is being made for the program of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., by the Arrow Film Co., can be likened in quality and drawing power to the "Who Pays?" series terminated some time ago. Both draw attention to the unhappiness and oftentimes tragedy resulting from careless actions, selfish aspirations, unjust suspicions and various other causes from which others than the original blunderers suffer.

original, will be given a new insight into the possibilities of the screen. As Mr. Emerson adapted the play and directed it, his credit for the production of a picture that not only visualizes the dramatic incidents completely and convincingly but makes clear the mental processes of Macbeth and Lady Macbeth. Of course, he could not have done so much without actors of the first caliber, but it is equally true that Sir Herbert and Miss Collier received the most valuable sort of co-operation in making the audience understand. There is not the least excuse for missing the vital points of the drama.

In constructing a photoplay of this type the art of a director is manifested in the scenes he chooses to visualize, scenes that cannot be shown on the stage, but the meaning of which is communicated to the audience through subsequent dialogue. When such additions are made it is not altering the original, rather expressing the same things in the language of the screen, and it is this language that Mr. Emerson utilizes with fine effect to realize the true spirit of "Macbeth." The murder of the king is visualized, as are many other happenings left to the imagination in stage performances, but never once is anything foreign to Shakespeare's tragedy allowed to intrude. When speech is necessary, lines from the play are invariably used, and the arrangement of the scenario necessitates few explanatory leaders. It is a treat, indeed, to read so much of Shakespeare on the screen, even if some familiar quotations are slightly altered.

Sir Herbert is a virile, compelling Macbeth, possessed of the rare art that makes possible the communication of emotional states. Characterization with a psychological background is possible where such an actor is concerned. We see the birth of ambition after the prophesy of the witches and feel the irresistible force of temptation as Lady Macbeth urges courage that his deeds may fulfill his hopes. There is infinite variety and subtle shading in the portrayal, as Macbeth, suffering from the conscience that "makes cowards of us all," shrinks before

For this reason is the series useful as well as entertaining. No. 5 of the "Who's Guilty?" series entitled "Sold Out" draws attention to a lack of faith in human efforts. A young wife becomes discontented with the provision made for her by her young husband who is still in the throes of prospecting a mine which has shown no signs of paying. Lured away by a foolish lover the wife pays a visit to her home and meets a former lover whose every effort has met with success. A letter from her mother-in-law asking for the release of her daughter from her matrimonial tie brings the husband who has now struck it rich, post haste to the city in time to see his wife attacked by the millionaire who has also succeeded in swindling her out of the stock she had in her husband's mine. A fierce struggle takes place between the two men, resulting in the wife being hurled down the stairway to her death.

No. 6 handles another situation in which one of two brothers employed in the same office is unjustly accused of stealing valuable bonds on the day on which he secretly marries his employer's daughter. He then runs away at the proposal of his wife and brother who upon hearing that he has committed suicide marry. The return of the falsely accused upon accidentally learning that the bonds have been discovered where they had fallen behind his desk, results in a fight between the two brothers and the lodging of a bullet in the body of the young wife's father, causing his death.

While this number which is entitled "Sowing the Wind" may lack the consistency of story which marks the preceding number, the interest never flags. The stars, Tom Moore and Anna Nilsson, are holding themselves worthy of having been chosen for this series.

"It Happened in Honolulu"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Tells Light-Running Story of Love and Travel in Many Lands.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN this five-reel number Lynn Reynolds has written and produced a pleasing comedy number, not strikingly original in plot or incident, but attractive at all times to the eye and enacted by a good cast.

Myrtle Gonzales and Val Paul play the young couple whose love affair is the leading feature. C. Norman Hammond, Fred Church, Lulu Warrenton, Jack Curtis and George Hernandez play the minor roles. The settings are pleasing and suggest satisfactorily American, Oriental and Hawaiian scenes. The photography is also very good.

The comedy tone is excellently maintained and the main criticism of the plot is that it follows too closely a given trend, lacking the element of surprise which lifts a production into the first class. In other words, it has a rather obvious development for this type of story. Yet it sparkles with life and interest in a scenic way.

Val Paul appears as the son of a wholesale fish dealer, who wins the heart of a girl in spite of the fact that his rival is a titled English lord and that her mother is opposed to him. He leaves to keep his appointment with the girl in Honolulu and is subsequently suspected of stealing a large sum of money from his father. The secretary is the really guilty one. The son is followed by his father's detective, whom he evades frequently. He is thrown into jail in Honolulu, but manages to escape and is afterward cleared.

Bathtub Perils

Two-Reel Keystone Farce of Lively Ingenuity Directed by E. A. Frazee.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AMAZINGLY contrived on the old Sennet lines, "Bathtub Perils" moves rather slowly during its preparatory scenes, and there is not a great deal of amusing character revelation at any stage of the story, but all is forgotten when the mechanical contrivances begin to work. It makes little difference who the people are when so much that is new and astonishing is going on in such a lively presentation. A remarkable state of activity is set up when the stupid proprietor of a hotel, impersonated by Fred Mace, goes into the cellar to shut off the water—a flood has been started by the careless-trained bullet of an excited guest—for the proprietor, by means not explained or explainable, sends gas through the water pipes and water through those intended to carry the gas. A fire is started in the lobby, and the proprietor's wife attempts to use an emergency hose pipe to extinguish the flames, with a result of adding to them. The unexpected happens elsewhere throughout the building, water bursting from pipes in every room until a flood comes pouring down the stairs, out through the entrance, down the street and into the ocean. On this flood, riding on rocking chair and in small tub come the guilty proprietor and a guiltless young wife with whom he has been flirting. They shoot the shoots on the staircase, glide swiftly down the streets and gutters, and, so great is the momentum they acquire, they are last seen racing swiftly out to sea. The farce is quite as startling in its mechanical effects as it is amusing. Once under way it moves with zip, and it will provide a spirited contribution to the variety of any program.

"In the Service of the State."

THE thirteenth instalment of the George Bronson Howard serial contains a new line of adventure for the Lady Avengers. A foreign spy steals an important paper from the Government and gets on shipboard with it. The vessel is well out to sea before the loss is discovered. Knowing that Carson, a Secret Service officer, is on the same ship, the U. S. officials communicate with him by wireless and order him to recover the paper. His efforts meet with no success, until Mona and Mary take a hand in the affair. They, also, are passengers on the ship, and woman's wiles once more triumph over susceptible masculinity. The spy has placed the paper in a safe in his stateroom, the combination being known to the purser of the ship. As soon as Mary and Mona learn this, a trap is laid for the pursuer. Under the influence of the tender passion, he plays into the hands of the two girls and gives Mona a chance to extract the paper from the safe and turn it over to the Secret Service man.

Most of the scenes occur on shipboard, and were photographed on a vessel at sea. As a natural consequence, the locale is the real thing; the director, James W. Horne, has taken every advantage of this fact. The picture is the most novel of the series and is also among the most entertaining. Marin Sals and Ollie Kirkby display a new and varied wardrobe for the ocean trip, and manifest all their old relish for the task at hand. E. Forrest Taylor is a good looking and capable Carson. R. L. Dell and Frank Jonasson are cast for the spy and the pursuer.

"The Stenographer's Strategy."

It was a foregone conclusion that any young woman who was endowed with such natural gifts for spelling, punctuation and grammar as Sis Hopkins displays every week on her slate, would end up by becoming a stenographer. Sis does this very thing in her latest one-reel comedy. While it cannot be denied that her copies of the boss' letters read like a sub-title that has strayed from the path laid down for it by the scenario writer, the gentleman who pays Sis a weekly stipend has cause to bless the day she entered his employ. Being of a loving disposition and an elastic conscience, he is rescued from an embarrassing entanglement and saved from the fury of his muscular wife by the timely intervention of Pa Hopkins' gal. S. A. Van Patten, the author of the reel, has strung together a number of amusing incidents, and Rose Melville still makes Sis great fun. Henry Murdock and the versatile Frank Minney are Miss Melville's chief support.

Marguerite Clark Has Delightful Role in Costume Play by Famous Players.

IT IS a delightful role Marguerite Clark has in the Famous Players five-part "Silks and Satins," released June 12. The picture is of a story within a story, but the one within comes so near being all of the show that what remains, that with the modern touch, may almost be left out of consideration. The Felicite of the day that is past is by her father engaged to wed not the man she loves; before the wedding the death of the father throws the young woman under the guardianship of an uncle and into the same home with a drunken cousin whose suit takes a forceful turn. It is to Jacques Desmond, the cavalier, her thoughts turn; it is to Jacques that Felix, her fiancé, also turns to rescue Felicite. Jacques gets Felicite from her uncle's house at the point of his sword—and it is to her bold knight the young woman elects to give her hand.

Miss Clark well fits the role of Felicite—come to think of it, she has a habit of fitting her roles. Vernon Steele has the leading male part, that of Jacques. He possesses the dash and the physique that make it convincing. Clarence Handies is the drunken Marquis, the uncle who assumes the "guardianship" of Felicite—a good characterization, as is also that of W. A. Williams, who is unrecognizable in the make-up of the equally drunken son. Thomas Holding makes much of the minor role of Felix, the exquisite engaged to Felicite.

There are stirring scenes following the arrival of Felix at the home of the Marquis, where the cavalier swings his sword in approved d'Artagnan manner; and there are, too, scenes that amuse when the tall fellow and his diminutive companion in male attire arrive at the inn, to which the good knight-tying mood is brought.

"Silks and Satins" is an ideal matinee subject—the marked approval of the women in the Strand Monday afternoon attested that fact—and it should be a popular subject with evening houses as well. It is finely staged and costumed. J. Searle Dawley directs.

Latest Fashions in Vitaphone Blue Ribbon.

Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno do credit to the leading roles of "The Shop Girl," a Vitaphone Blue Ribbon Feature in five parts, announced for release June 25. "The Shop Girl" was pictured from the novel of the same name by C. N. and A. M. Williamson and directed by George D. Baker. Miss Storey is first seen as a clothing model on board a steamer returning from Europe. Peter Rolis (Antonio Moreno), son of a rich man of the same name, becomes infatuated with her despite her station, but his sister, Ena, breaks off the affair by telling Winifred that Peter is already engaged and is only trifling with her.

In the city Winifred loses her position with the modiste and finds herself blackballed in the trade. She finally obtains a position as saleswoman in a store owned by Peter's father. Meanwhile Peter searches the city in vain for her. His search leads to his father's store, where he is informed that his sister had obtained Winifred's discharge that morning. Following information given him at the store, Peter is just in time to rescue Winifred from the clutches of Megeison, the store manager, who had inveigled her into his home. Although skeptical of Peter's intentions at first, Winifred's happiness is complete when she sees that he really loves her.

A capable cast of Vitaphones is seen in this production, among them Lillian Burns, Edward Dunn, Thomas R. Mills, Josephine Earle, Harold Foshay and Templer Saxe.

Mutual Makes Changes in Titles.

The title of the five-act Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, for release June 12, has been changed from "A Man's Soul" to "The Inner Struggle" and that of the two-reel American-Mutual release for the same day from "Circumstantial Evidence" to "Convicted of Murder."

Putting a Thrill in "Gloria's Romance."

Despite the fact that the manufacturer announced in advance of its release that "Gloria's Romance" was going to be absolutely free from sensationalism and "stunts," Chapter 5 of the new George Kleine motion picture novel, in which Billie Burke is the featured star, contains a real thriller in the way of an automobile accident, one which is going to make theater patrons sit up and gasp.

The "accident" occurs when Gideon Trask, a new character in the story, is pursuing Richard Frenau, the "heavy" of the piece, as the latter speeds away in a high-powered car. Trask rushes down the street after Frenau's car and since his gaze is fixed on the disappearing automobile he fails to see a big car that is turning into the avenue from a side street. The driver catches sight of Trask, makes an effort to avoid hitting him, discovers it is too late to swerve clear out of the way, and a moment later the body of Trask is sent forty feet away by the impact of the big auto. The body of the actor, already known to thousands of screen fans for his work with the Edison company, plays the role of Trask, and he literally took his life in his hands when he calmly staggered in front of that big auto and then allowed it to hurl him to one side. There was nothing "staged" or "faked" about the accident. It happened exactly as it appears on the screen, and no dummy was substituted. But McGlynn is mighty glad there was no "re-take" on that particular scene, for he was badly bruised and battered when he arose from the pavement and brushed the dust off his clothes at the end of the film making.

Vest Pocket House Organs Successful.

John A. McNear, Jr., manager of the Mystic theater at Petaluma, Cal., advocates the use of vest pocket house organs in a letter to the Progressive Motion Picture Company, which has been contributed to Paramount Progress. Paramount Progress, the exhibitor's organ of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, receives on an average of eighty to one hundred letters each week, and this communication of Mr. McNear's is particularly worthy of attention.

"I strongly advocate the use of a program only large enough to be accommodated in every man's and woman's pocket or pocketbook, of the patronage of the motion picture houses are those on the street who are engaged in work that drop in to see a show or arrange their dates so as not to conflict with other business, in order to see a picture that appeals to them. It is a fact that a program such as I suggest and make use of will please them and be appreciated by every one, more so than one that is too large to be conveniently carried in the ordinary pocket," declares Mr. McNear.

"My program is issued weekly and is ready for distribution at Saturday and Sunday shows for the week commencing the following Monday, thus giving the best two days of the week for advance advertising."

Ivan Inaugurates All Star Cast Policy.

Somewhat along the lines of revivals of famous old-time successes in the legitimate, where a cast is composed of all stars, will be the newly adopted policy of the Ivan Film Productions, which will in future limit its productions to casts composed only of performers, each one of whom would ordinarily be starred alone.

The first film to be made along these lines will be "The Faded Flower," the next release on the Ivan program. Besides employing Miss Marguerite Snow, Rose Coghlan, the famous legitimate star who this year celebrates her golden jubilee as an actress for fifty years, will be in the cast. Alma Hanlon is included.

Arthur Donaldson, the original Prince of Pilsen, a well-known delineator of character roles; Edvard Mackay, a name known to theatergoers the country over, and William A. Bechtel, the "Man of a thousand faces," are also included in the next Ivan. "The Faded Flower" should be ready for release about July 1, through the Ivan Exchanges.

THE GIRLS ACROSS THE WAY (Biograph), June 5.—Another of the Biograph reissues, acted by Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Chrystie Miller and Mildred Manning. The story is simple, clearly told and strong in heart interest.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, No. 45, 1916 (Selig), June 5.—Monster aeroplane for U. S. Army, Washington; fire in Detroit motion picture exchange; Boy Scouts build bridge at River Grove, Ill.; Sinn Féin parade at Dublin; scenes after the rioting in Dublin; International auto race at Indianapolis, Ind.; German and Irish parade at San Francisco; Garden party at Governor's Island, N. Y.; Mrs. Finley J. Shepard and Finley J. Shepard, Jr.; Oyster Bay, parade of Roosevelt boaters; Col. Roosevelt addressing the crowd at his home.

NEW YORK PAST AND PRESENT (Vitagraph), June 5.—An excellent guide to many of the most interesting buildings and locations of New York City is furnished by this one-reel release. The plan of reproducing the early life of such historical spots as Bowling Green and Washington's Headquarters enhances the interest of the reel.

MIDNIGHT AT THE OLD MILL (Kalem), June 6.—Ham and Bud have a weird experience in this one-reel feature. Both worthies are nearly frightened out of a year's growth while trying to obtain a subject for a number of doctors to experiment on. A quick moving comedy of average merit.

IN CINDERELLA'S SHOES (Kalem), June 7.—In this one-reel comedy Ethel Tetre gets most of her comedy out of a pair of shoes that are several sizes too large for her. This is contrary to the original Cinderella's experiences, but Louis B. Gardner has built a number of clever comic complications around Ethel's over-generous footwear, and Gus Leonard, Jack McDermott and Victor Rotman help her to keep the action stepping lively.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, No. 46, 1916 (Selig), June 8.—Hospital in Lincoln Park, Chicago, during G. A. R. parade; school girls have outing at Manchester-by-the-Sea, N. H.; San Francisco, encampment for citizen soldiers; monster procession, London; Republican candidates at Congress Hotel, Chicago; President Wilson at Memorial Day services, Arlington, Va.; fashion show at Madison Square Garden, New York; Preparedness Parade, Chicago.

THE SEA DOGS (Vim), June 8.—Several of the incidents in this one-reel feature are not only good for a hearty laugh, but required a deal of hard work and expense to transfer them to the screen. Plump and Runt are the chief fun-makers, and the scenes where Plump is forced to tow the boat while walking on the bottom of the sea, is one of the best features of the reel.

THE TREASURE TRAIN (No. 83 of "The Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), June 10.—The operator at Lone Point again puts the railroad in her debt by preventing a robbery on the line at the risk of her neck. S. A. Van Patten is the author of the scenario and Producer James Davis has staged it with his usual keen eye to correct local color. P. S. Pembroke, Harry Schum, Roy Watson, Ed. Gibson and G. A. Williams supplement the efforts of the nervy Helen Gibson.

TWO SMITHS AND A HAFF (Luhin), June 10.—There is a good deal of plot in this one-reel comedy, but not much amusement. The film was written and directed by Clay M. Greene, and is not up to his usual standard. Francis Joyner, George R. Clarke and June Daye have the leading characters.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF BERLIN (Essanay), June 7.—The sketches of the German capital showing the palaces and the principal government buildings, make this reel doubly interesting. The artist retains his old cleverness with the pencil. A western scenic is on the same reel.

JUGGLING JUSTICE (Kalem), June 9.—Sis Hopkins turns suffragette in this one-reel comedy, runs for Justice of the Peace, is elected, and administers the law in a manner wonderful to behold. The reel is full of amusing character types and laughable situations. Rose Melville's beaming smile is of vast importance to Sis, the actress never seeming to tire of her creation. Henry Murdock and Frank Minzey are prominent members of the cast. The author of the scenario is Samuel J. Taylor.

A DOLLAR DOWN (Vim), June 9.—The dollar applies to the first installment paid on a piano by Pokes. His adventures with the instrument are surprising, as you the least. He plays upon it, then sits astride of it and rides it down the street. Jabbs is also in the picture and holds up his end of the merry-making. A novel reel.

GOING WEST TO MAKE GOOD (Selig), June 10.—Tom Mix is the author, producer and star of this one-reel drama. The scene opens in the East, but soon shifts to a western ranch and ends with a stage hold-up and a dashing rescue of the heroine by Tom. Expert horsemanship adds to the interest of the reel. Victoria Forde and Joe Ryan are members of the cast.

OUR PEOPLE (Essanay), June 3.—This three-reel photoplay chronicles the doings of the inhabitants of a small town. A run on the local bank forms the high dramatic moment. The story is wholesome and well supplied with character studies. The sub-titles are cleverly worded. Bryant Washburn, Gertrude Glover, Thomas Commerford, Richardson Cotton and Florence Oberle form a strong cast.

THE FANGS OF THE TATTLER (No. 11 of "The Social Pirates") (Kalem), June 5.—The methods of a blackmailing editor are exposed in this installment of the George Bronson Howard serial. The picture keeps pace with the previous releases. It was reviewed in the issue of June 10, page 1901.

THE YAQUI CUR (Biograph), June 6.—Made by Griffith several years ago, these two reels comprise a strong Indian drama, well worth re-issuing. Robert Harron, Walter Miller and Lionel Barrymore are in the cast. A review appeared in the issue of May 6.

THE STONING (Edison), June 6.—A three-part re-issue that will be remembered as one of the most successful photoplays ever released by the Edison company. A finely acted story, filled with the truth and beauty of life.

ORPHAN JOYCE (Essanay), June 6.—A two-reel drama in which little Miss Joyce Fair has one of her juvenile roles that find favor with many patrons of the screen. The story tells of a little orphan who is adopted by a wealthy couple, the child repaying them by saving the household from being robbed. The youthful star is as winning as ever, and is assisted by John Cosar and Marian Lydon.

THE SCAPEGRACE (Luhin), June 8.—The story of a banker's son who steals from his father and commits suicide when he is found out, this three-reel photoplay by Josephine McLaughlin offers nothing new in plot, but has the merit of sticking to its theme. The material has been ably handled by the director, Jack Byrne, and is acted by a competent cast which includes George Routh, Bird Hopkins, Alan Forrest, Adelaide Lronti, Ada Gleason and Evelyn Paz.

THE STAINED PEARL (Knickerbocker), June 9.—Frank melodrama is this three-part subject. The action is fast and the story contains interest. Henry King has the leading role, that of the captain of a ship one of the crew of which brings aboard a pearl he has stolen. Two murders already have been done to secure the jewel, and before the story is finished two or three others are killed. In major part the picture is staged on ship-board.

A TEMPERANCE TOWN (Selig), June 5.—A three-reel screen version of Charles Hoyt's celebrated character comedy, "A Temperance Town," featuring Ollie Harlan as Mink Jones, could not possibly fail to provide excellent entertainment. Hoyt's good-natured satire on vice committee and temperance reformers has no dry moments, and his sketches of the leading citizens of a country town are humorously true to life. The picture was directed by T. N. Hefferon, and Ollie Harlan is supported by Grace Darmond, John Charles, James Bradbury and Leslie J. King.

Fox Film Corporation

HYPOCRISY, June 5.—A notable five-reel melodrama that the audience seemed to find worthy. It is a substantial picture holding up to scorn the "huff and pretense" of a certain circle of modern society and of people who manage to live in luxury on nothing a year at the expense of others who are worth more to the world than they ever thought of being. A longer review will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation

REEL LIFE, No. 5 (Gaumont), June 4.—Fine pictorial glimpses of El Estero de Butte Dam, New Mexico, with interesting statistics concerning this project, are first shown in this. Then come entertaining views of the way in which Hampshire hogs are raised and bee farming is conducted. The number is full of instructive views.

A PLANE STORY (Vogue), June 6.—A slapstick comedy that will be found rather amusing. The plot concerns the attempted theft of a certain cotton book. An aeroplane and its owner figure considerably. The action of the last few scenes was excellent, giving the production a good climax.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, No. 75 (Gaumont), June 7.—The wedding of Dr. Grayson, training camp at Ft. Wadsworth, preparedness parades, a daring air stunt by Rodman Law, and other interesting features are included in this.

JERRY'S BIG LARK (Cub), June 9.—A farce comedy number in which Jerry (George Ovey) after various other amusing adventures meets with a motion picture company, mistakes artifice for reality and goes mad and up generally.

WHERE WIVES WIN (Falstaff), June 10.—This is an unusually good comedy number wherein the daughter of a truck driver receives her lover in her father's home and makes him dance so much that while she helps her mother with the dishes he falls asleep and dreams that he is a western cowboy. He rides down stairs on a white horse, sees his sweetheart's mother, her father out of a white saloon, lasso him and give him a run home while she rides the horse.

THINNEN STOUT (Beauty), June 11.—An amusing farce comedy in which Orall Humphrey plays the role of Stout, Lucille Ward that of Mrs. Stout, and John Gough that of Thinnen, who claims to be able to make people thin or stout as they desire. Some comic occurrences take place in the institution, various domestic disturbances are also in order, and altogether the offering is of fair entertainment value.

REEL LIFE, No. 6 (Gaumont), June 11.—An interesting group of subjects will be found in this issue of the magazine in film, including the construction of a $1,000,000 concrete bridge over the Tennessee River, which is a fully detailed and remarkable illustration, the making of a moving picture, showing the manipulation of a theater audience by a director in the photographing of "The Idol of the Stage," and Gaumont animal studies which were photographed at Bronx Park.

HIS BLOWOUT (Vogue), June 11.—A slapstick comedy containing only a moderate amount of entertainment value. It concerns principally the attempt of two novices to take care of the business of a party while he is away. It would be difficult to outline the plot which is as usual with this kind of picture a jumble of various things.

REAL ESTATERS (Falstaff), June 12.—Oscar and Conrad buy two lots, with running water. They find they have purchased a section of the ocean beach and have considerable fun with the agent who sold them. This is just a whimsical idea and gets up a fair amount of amusement.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, No. 40 ("Yellowstone National Park" Gaumont), June 14.—This number contains some beautiful views of Yellowstone National Park showing various terraces over which the mineral water trickles, Shoshone Lake, and the geysers. An animated cartoon entitled "Johnny's Stepmother and the Cat."

JOHNNY'S STEPMOTHER AND THE CAT (Gaumont), June 14.—On the same reel with the above this animated cartoon will be found distinctly amusing. Johnny's stepmother goes uptown and leaves him to mind the cat. The cat gets frightened and breaks up the china and Johnny is locked in the closet in punishment for same.

DOUGHNUTS (Falstaff), June 17.—Riley Chamberlin appears in this as a street car conductor on a vacation. He marries a girl who cannot cook and her food brings him to the hospital. The dog and the fat boy eat her doughnuts and both are sent to the hospital. A light comedy subject with smiles running all through it.

DELINQUENT BRIDEGROOMS (Vogue), June 18.—A knockabout picture, by Robert A. Dillon, featuring two hoboes and two well dressed gentlemen who get their wardrobes mixed and all land in jail. This has no particular novelty in plot, but has some fairly amusing moments in it.

Mutual Film Corp. Specials

THE PILGRIM (Mustang), June 9.—A two-reel Western drama, by Edward Kaufman, with Frank Borzage, Anna Little, Jack Richardson and others in the cast. This is much better than the average Western number in presentation. The action is not pronounced, but works up well to the climax, where the traveler saves a man's life after stabbing him, win the girl's love and then gives it up to resume his tramping. The production arouses considerable feeling in the observer and is altogether effectively done.

THE LION NEMESIS (Centaur), June 10.—A two-reel number, featuring Wm. Clifford, Margaret Gibson, Al Garcia and a well trained lion named Monte. The lion is presumed to be possessed by the soul of a murderer, according to the legend, and the girl is lured away by the Rajah, who has hypnotic powers. The one thing he fears is the lion, and at the end of the story the beast kills him and saves the girl. The soul of the murderer is then released. This makes on the whole a better offering than usual of this semi-mystic sort. It is not extremely dramatic, but keeps a close hold on the interest of the audience.

BROTHERS EQUAL (Thanbouser), June 13.—A two-part production based on race prejudice. In visiting an estate of his father the heir of the estate meets a white man who he afterward discovers is the son of a colored woman by his own father. The mother, a leper, about to be buried to death, is rescued by her son, who then kills himself in the presence of the white girl with whom he is in love, his brother and others. The picture, although not a pleasant one, inspires thought. It portrays the young man after preaching equal brotherhood to the negroes discovering what the problem means when brought home to himself.

MEDICINE BEND (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe—Signal), July 3.—An unusually attractive five-part Western melodrama, directed by J. P. McGowan. The production is a sequel to "Whispering Smith" and is played by an excellent cast headed by J. P. McGowan and Helen Holmes. A full review of this production appears on another page of the magazine.

THE SHERIFF OF PLUMAS (Mustang), June 16.—A two-part Western featuring Charles Newton. Helen Rosson and William Stowell are also in the cast. The picture is well produced and entertaining, and tells the story of a sheriff with a shadowy past. The unexpected appearance of an old pal in company with whom he used to tap safes is the cause of a tragedy in which each shoots the other. The story is not exactly a probable one in some respects, but is entertaining.

Mutual Special Feature

SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE, No. 4 (Special Feature), June 12.—Chapter four of this serial leaves a good impression and shows a marked improvement of the previous chapters in adaptation and production. The action, which is continuous, is interesting and well arranged. With all concerned endeavoring to gain possession of the secret which is supposed to be contained in the book bought by Step-han, Cleo is seized and bound and placed in the cellar of the Step-han's house. A bomb is later exploded, and we are left to wonder how Cleo escapes.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, No. 41, 1916 (Pathe), May 20.—Interesting items of this issue are General Cousins decorating soldiers' widows with honors gained by their husbands at Verdun, at Greenwood, S. D., one hundred and sixty Sioux Indians are admitted to U. S. citizenship, the first National Guard seaplane put in operation, and various scenes from the European war front.

LUKE LAUGHS LAST (Phunphillips), June 5.—An amusing farce comedy in which Lonesome Luke in the role of a butler is the center of a pretty mixup, accidentally capturing two burglars at the same time. Some of the comedy types in this film are unusually comical—the fat policeman, for instance, and his partner, "tall and lanky." This is an unusually stirring comedy.

THE FATAL PIE (Pathe), June 5.—This amusing animated cartoon from the pen of Rube Goldberg concerns principally Lotta Mince-meat, her father, Julius Mince-meat, Nut, her sweetheart, and Pickan, her would-be sweetheart. A peculiar turn of fate in which a pie stuffed with dum-dum bullets plays a forceful part lands Lotta and Nut in the same garbagemobile, after various unhappy incidents. On the same reel with "Head-dresses of Holland."

HEAD-DRESSES OF HOLLAND (Pathe), June 5.—An unusually interesting subject showing in colors the many quaint head-dresses worn in different parts of Holland.

THE ZINC MINES OF LANG HUI (French Indo-China) (Pathe), June 5.—In this picture will be found instructive views to the extent of possibly four hundred feet of film, showing how zinc is mined, crushed, conveyed to the smelters, etc., in French Indo-China at the mines of Lang Hui. On the same reel with "Around Mount Fuji."

AROUND MOUNT FUJI (Picturesque Japan) (Pathe), June 5.—A most beautiful scene consisting of views of a dormant volcano, showing the people at work in its vicinity, the lakes with which it is surrounded, and other attractive and beautifully photographed scenes.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE IRON CLAW, No. 15 (Feature), June 5.—"The Double Resurrection" is the name of this episode, which is as thrilling as the rest of this series. This time Davy reappears as a mysterious veiled lady, is afterwards pursued into a certain attic by Legar and his men, and is apparently thrown from the window in a trunk. It transpires, however, that Davy has let himself through the floor by means of a trap over which the bottomless trunk had stood. Margery is also kidnapped again, and rescued by the "Laughing Mask."

WHO'S GUILTY? No. 5 (Arrow), June 5.—"Sold Out" is an intensely interesting number of this series. A young woman marrying the man of her father's choice goes with him to a foreign country and invests ten thousand dollars in her as a wedding present. Her father, in the mines. Before they have begun to pay she becomes discontented. A tragedy occurs later in which the husband, defending his wife against a former rich lover, who has swindled her out of her mining stock, is killed, the indirect cause of his wife's death. Well produced and well photographed. A full review will be found on another page.

WHO'S GUILTY? No. 6 (Arrow), June 12.—The title of No. 6 of the series is "Sowing the Wind." The production, in which Octavia Hand-worth appears, as well as Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore, is well staged and intensely interesting. The story concerns an unhappy play of circumstances in which two brothers employed in the same office, employer, his daughter and housekeeper are involved. An unjustified suspicion and its consequences make this one of the best of the series.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

A COLLEGE BOOMERANG (Imp), June 18.—This number, by Catherine Carr, featuring Keith Robinson and Harry Belafonte. The girl acts as maid while working her way through school, and wins the love of the young professor of chemistry in spite of a false accusation of dishonesty made against her. The plot is not particularly new, though rather pleasing in sentiment.

WANTED, A HUSBAND (Nestor), June 19.—A comedy, by Al E. Christie, featuring Neal Burns, Betty Compton, Earl Lyon, Stole Adams and Joe Jancke. The young wife pretends a young lawyer is her husband, during the absence of the real one. This leads to amusing complications. This rather conventional story includes some interesting scenes taken at Coronado Beach, Cal.

THE GRIP OF CRIME (Big U), June 20.—A story of an Italian seissors grinder and his child, by Calder Johnston. The old man is as used as a tool by some blackmailers. He is arrested and the child's story saves him; the gang members are punished. The story is quite appealing. Thomas Jefferson and Lena Baskette appear.

HIS PICTURE (Imp.), June 20.—A pleasing comedy subject, featuring Violet Mearau and Wm. Garwood as a young married couple. The wife dresses as a little girl in order to allay her suspicions regarding hubby's conduct. She carries out the part effectively. This is novel and amusing in a quiet way.

A JAIL BIRD'S LAST FLIGHT (L-KO), June 21.—This pictures the experiences of two male flirts, lured to the police station by a pretty little cop. Bill Armstrong and Ed Rogers and Carmel Myers play the leads. The running scene, explosion in jail and other episodes are laughable. Slightly rough in tone but amusing and acceptable.

THE YOUNG SLEUTHS (Powers), June 22.—A juvenile subject, featuring Frank Butterworth and Irma Sorfer. The boy and girl play detectives and assist in catching a bank thief. This is rather slow in action, but gets more interesting toward the close. It makes a fairly strong juvenile number.

THE FALL OF DEACON STILLWATERS (Joker), June 24.—A character study of the eccentric type, by A. E. Bishop, featuring Gale Henry, Wm. Francy and others. The deacon is appointed by the Anti-Sin Society to stop prize fighting. He winds up by taking part in a fight himself. This is slightly rough in tone, but has a number of laughable incidents.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials

THE SHERIFF OF PINE MOUNTAIN (Rex), June 11.—A two-reel number, by Wm. Addison Lathrop, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and others. This is a story of the northwest, in which a young sheriff collides with a gang of opium smugglers. The settings comprise a winter landscape, a heavy fall of snow on the ground, a dog team, smugglers' den, etc. The story is conventional in plot, picturing the way in which the sheriff and brother of the girl clash and then make up their difficulties. The story has no particular novelty, but the cast is pleasing and presentation agreeable.

THE WRECK (Universal Special), June 12.—No. 7 of the "Peg o' the Ring" series. The opening scenes contain considerable repetition of things already pictured. Peg recovers and discovers that she has been falsely accused. Ed, Jr., of being one of the counterfeiters. She tries to clear him of this implication. The circus is started again and Peg once more jumps in her act. The second reel closes with Peg and Lund, Jr., appearing from a freight car running wild, to escape an approaching train. The number as a whole does not contain much action.

THE MAN FROM NOWHERE (Red Feather Photoplay), June 19.—A five-reel feature offering, by Wm. H. Clifford, unusually well constructed and directed carefully by Henry Otto. King Baggot is featured as a young man, sent to prison for killing his own sister, though he is entirely innocent of the crime. The events are dramatic and consistently worked out. There is quite a lot of originality in plot and incidents. It is one of the best all-around five-reel subjects shown by this company in some time. Fred Hunter, Helen Menden, Joseph Gerard, Frank Smith, Johnnie Walker and others also appear. A first rate subject.

THE FINER METAL (Rex), June 19.—A two-reel number, by Harry Dittmar, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips, Wm. J. Welsh and Chas. Ogil. The characters concerned are a bank president, his wife and the cashier. There is a piece of unusually good drama in the second reel, where the president spares Carlton and then allows the woman to flee without learning who she is. This situation alone makes the offering one of unusual strength. The parts are all well played. A good number.

THE CRY FOR HELP (Universal Special), June 20.—No. 6 of the "Peg o' the Ring" series. Both Peg and Lund, Jr., escape from the counterfeiters' den after exciting experiences. Secret Service men strike a trail which is about to connect Mrs. Lund with the gang, but Peg, in a sudden seizure, hysterically points to Lund, Jr., as the guilty one. The number contains a number of quite thrilling incidents.

THE SCARLET MARK (Victor), June 21.—A two-reel offering, by Catherine Carr, in which Mary Fuller plays the double role of Allison, a wealthy girl, and Wanda, an adventures. This would have been more convincing if Wanda had not been employed directly, but had managed to substitute herself secretly as the rich girl. The situation as presented is too improbable to carry the illusion strongly. There is also a little too much coincidence in the closing scenes. This contains some fairly strong plot material but is faulty in construction.

WHAT COULD THE POOR GIRL DO? (Nester), June 23.—A two-reel burlesque comedy, by A. E. Christie. Eddie Lyons, Billie Rhodes, Lee Moran and others are featured. Jed, a country youth, falls in love with a young lady safe cracker, who has come to the country to reform. The gang, led by Dirty Jerry, follows and takes her back. Jed goes to the city on a rescue expedition and some rapidfire situations ensue. A chas scene, a dash over high rooftops, and rough and tumble gang fighting are features. This has numerous precedents, but is strong on action and enacted by a pleasing cast.

THE GHOST OF THE JUNGLE (Bison), June 24.—A two-reel number, written by Rex de Rosell, who plays a leading role, assisted by Yona Landowski, Guy Hedlund, Colin Chase and others. The South African settings are pleasing and the plot better than the average for this type of story. The girl is lured away from the cabin by an adventurer, who carries off the treasure's diamonds. The father gives pursuit and meets with terrible suffering in the jungle. The animal scenes are exciting and interesting.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 45, 1916 (Vitagraph), June 6.—Boston, recruit fireman at drill; anniversary celebration at Berkeley, Cal.; J. Edgar Hoover, Veterans' memorial; services at Soldiers' Home, Hampton, Va.; new motor car test, San Francisco; Women's Federation delegates at Vitagraph studio; Dr. Mary Walker and Frank Daniels; Harvard regiment given flag; President Lowell and General Wood review regiment; prominent men in Republican ranks; New York, burial of Policeman Henry Schwartz; Harlem River "rescue"; Peace Advocates gather at Washington; push ball contest, New York.

THE REDEMPTION OF DAVE DARCEY (Vitagraph), June 12.—A five-part melodrama in which the title role is splendidly impersonated by James Morrison. The development of the story is not done in a professional manner, and several rough spots are noticeable; but what the picture is entertaining. It deals with the regeneration of a crook and contains a number of spectacular scenes. A full review appears on another page of this issue.

World-Equitable

PERILS OF DIVORCE (Brady-Made), June 12.—A melodramatic story showing how a wife is cast off by her husband when in reality she is entirely guiltless. The picture was correctly produced by Edwin August and adequately acted with Edna Wallace Hopper in the role of the wife. A review may be found on another page of this issue.

MUNSON ART FEATURE RELEASES JULY 17.

On July 17, Samuel S. Hutchinson will present to the public a high-art, six-part photoplay featuring Miss Audrey Munson, the famous model, in the title role "Purity." The subject is an allegory written by Clifford Howard for the renowned Miss Munson, and directed by Rea Berger under the personal supervision of Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc. Prominent in the cast supporting Miss Munson are Eugene Forde, Nigel De Brulier and William Carroll.

The play is based on Greek mythology—with Purity, represented by a nude female figure, exerting an influence for good over the world. Then, as stanzas of allegorical poetry are composed by a poet, the characters, Evil, Beauty, Art, Music and Drama are introduced in the flesh.

AHEARN COMEDIES FOR RESERVE.

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., manager of production and publicity of the Reserve Photo-Plays Company, sons of Ray Comedies, has just returned from the Cleveland studio and reports excellent prospects for the future. In conjunction with the single reel comedies releases beginning June 21, the Reserve Photo-Plays will release through Mr. Cobb a series of comedy cartoons by "Abearn," head of the Ntwspaper Enterprise Association, which controls many papers in the Middle West.

Mr. Cobb has so arranged the future releases as to allow for a serial of six episodes of Johnny Ray in "Jerry the Janitor," which will be followed by the "One Armed Paper-hanger with the Hives," a one-reel subject.

KERRIGAN COMPANY IN YOSEMITE.

Universal City, Calif., June.—J. Warren Kerrigan and a large company of Universal City players, including Miss Lois Wilson, who has been opposite him, Mrs. George and Harry Carr, who are in the Yosemite Valley filming scenes for "The Book-oning Trail," a five-reel feature photoplay written by F. McGraw Willis of the Universal City staff. Director Jack Conway expects to take a large number of the scenes in the famous National Park and vicinity before the company returns to Universal City for work on the big stages.

MYERS-THEYBY RELEASES BEGIN JULY 5.

July 5 has been determined upon as the date for the first release in the General Film service of the Vim feature comedies starring Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theyby. "House-keeping" is the title of the first release. One of these feature comedies will be released each Wednesday in the General service. "Spring Cleaning" is the title of the second release.

"A MILLION FOR MARY" (Flying A).

Aaron Hoffman, the well known playwright and author, has written the vehicle in which the famous stage comedians, Kolb and Dill, will make their debut under the "Flying A" banner. The direction of this comedy has been placed in charge of Rea Berger under the direct personal supervision of Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE REPRISAL" (Selig).

"The Reprisal," a Selig Diamond Special, produced by William Robert Daly, from the story written by Elizabeth R. Carpenter, will be released Monday, June 13, in regular service through the General Film Company. "The Reprisal" is an unusually strong drama, and in every respect upholds the enviable standard set by Selig shorter-length productions. It features an all-star cast, including Fritz Brunette, Jack Pickford, Guy Oliver, Frank Clark, Al W. Filson and Lillian Hayward. Miss Scene from "The Reprisal" (Selig).

Brunette and Jack Pickford are afforded many opportunities for versatile work, and they take every advantage of these.

The plot of the story deals with the fruitless love of a southern girl for the man of her choice. The man's brother interferes in the love match. The girl vows to be revenged and years later marries the brother. How all the wrongs are righted and how the woman finally comes to understand that her thoughts of revenge are really thoughts of love add in making "The Reprisal" an absorbing production. The scenic effects are exceptionally good, and there is a succession of climaxes.

MASSIVE SET USED IN COMEDY.

What is considered the most massive set ever used at Universal City was provided by Charles Rankin, director of productions, and his department for using in filming a number of the scenes in "The Bell Hop," in which Pat Rooney is being featured, under the direction of Roy Clements. As indicated by the title, it is the lobby of a big hotel, and in it is produced some of the clever comedy which has made Rooney a favorite on the vaudeville stage in all parts of the United States. Working with Rooney are a number of the best known players of Universal City, including Adele Farrington, Beulah Lewis, Hayward Mack, Jay Belasco and Ed Sedgwick.

MORE GAUMONT ANIMAL STUDIES.

In the sixth "Reel Life," the Mutual magazine in film, the Gaumont company will show more of its popular animal studies. These have been taken by Elwin R. Sanborn. Although pictures of animals in captivity, Mr. Sanborn has caught them so characteristically that his film is being used by naturalists for purposes of scientific study. The film shows the beaver at work and at play, and the white peacock and the zebra.

As "Reel Life" has at least three divisions of interest, the reel for the week also contains pictures of the million-dollar concrete bridge being built over the Tennessee river at Chattanooga, and entertaining views of how a motion picture director handles two thousand extra persons in a photoplay.

NEW ENGLAND SOLD FOR "YELLOW MENACE."

Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, announces that through negotiations conducted between himself and Herman Rifkin, general manager of the Eastern Feature Film Company, that concern has purchased the New England rights to "The Yellow Menace," the sixteen-episode serial starring Edwin Stevens, and featuring Florence Malone and Margaret Gale. The states covered by Mr. Rifkin's franchise include: Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

"JAFFERY" (Frohman).

Interesting personalities will surround C. Aubrey Smith in "Jaffery," which the Frohman Amusement Corporation is filming from the new novel of that name by William J. Locke. Almost without exception those who have been chosen for the various parts are known equally well on the stage and screen. Ability as well as appearance are particularly necessary in making a picture from this book, for its effectiveness rests largely upon portraying the subtle shades of characterization which Mr. Locke's pen has so skillfully conjured.

Eleanor Woodruff went from the stage to photoplay work. Eric Blind has been familiar to play-goers both in England and America for many years, his principal engagements here being with Mrs. Fiske and Margaret Anglin. Paul Doucet has just completed his engagement with Elsie Ferguson, playing Fritz Schiller in "Margaret Schiller." Florence Dashon, after finishing an engagement with "My Lady's Dress," was first called to picture work by The Famous Players company, Doris Sawyer is an English actress whose last parts before leaving for America were Ruth in "Hindle Wakes," and Agnes in "Jim the Penman."

With such material to portray Mr. Locke's story, so thoroughly known in book form, the Frohman company should produce a picture of unusual interest.

"A TRAITOR TO ART" (Essanay).

This is the tragic story of a girl's struggles to succeed as an artist in a great city, calling for an emotionalism in portraying her sufferings and lack of success that keeps the drama at a high pitch of tension. It is tragic almost throughout, relieved, however, by light touches of the sometimes happy days of studio life, where the artists, successful and unsuccessful, romp at their Bohemian dinners. These touches act more as a foil to the more somber elements which is intended to show the almost unmountable barriers that lie in the path of those who hope for success, alone and unaided. There is nothing of the sordid in the play, however, reaching more a depth of pathos that touches the heart and wins the sympathy. The story also is brightened by the climax, after the girl had succumbed to the inevitable and admitted herself a failure, she finds she has won the love of a young minister. Although she awakens to the fact that a career is not for her, she finds happiness in love and in the fact that through her duties as the minister's wife she at last can be of some use to the world.

"THE FALL OF DEACON STILLWATERS" (Universal).

The Woman's Confederated League of Clubs and Rolling Pins is in session. They are about to elect a president and it looks very much as if Deacon Doolittle (William Franey) will be elected, although he is a mere man. You see Beatrice Fitznoodle (Gale Henry), the chairman of the Associated Hen Fest, is strong for the deacon, and if there is any way she can swing him into office she will do it.

On the afternoon when this imposing flashlight group picture was taken the deacon was addressing the Anti Sin League, an auxiliary of the Confederated League. All the women are hanging on to the deacon's every word. He is telling them that wine and women "never got no man nothin'" that drink is damnation and dice are the devil's own work.

As a matter of fact the Deacon is a hot old sport and pulls off cock fights in the basement of his home every once in a while, is a regular feller with the ladies and has been caught in cabaret shows. He once knocked out a famous pugilist. He can be seen doing his double dealing work in the Joker comedy, "The Fall of Deacon Stillwaters," which will be released on the Universal program on June 24th.

"THE ETERNAL QUESTION" (Metro).

Mme. Petrova, the gifted actress, will be seen in the starring role in "The Eternal Question," a five-part Metro wonderplay, produced by the Popular Plays and Players, which will be released July 3. This feature was produced under the direction of Burton King and the supervision of Harry Revier, supervising director at the Popular Plays and Players studio. A strong supporting cast includes Arthur Hoops, Mahlon Hamill-ton, Edward Martindel, Warren Oland, Henry Leone, Howard Missimer and Evelyn Duno.

The story of "The Eternal Question" deals with the discussion of two club men on the eternal question, woman. One held that birth and breeding made the woman, while the other contends that clothes were largely responsible. They made a wager to test their theories. A young woman, the role essayed by Mme. Petrova, playing a grind organ and carrying a monkey, comes along at this time. She is selected for their subject.

There are a wealth of interesting situations and big scenes in "The Eternal Question."

"THE GENTLE CONSPIRACY" (Flying A).

The combined efforts of Author Charles M. Peck and Director Carl M. LeViness offer Miss Vivian Rich a golden dramatic opportunity in the two-part "Flying A" drama, "The Gentle Conspiracy," in which Alfred Vossburgh and the famous character actor, George E. Periolat, have the supporting roles. This is the story of an idle girl who tires of her unromantic life of luxury and seeks romance in the city, where she falls in with a fast young man and is killed in an automobile accident.

Scene from "The Gentle Conspiracy" (Flying A).

In her second part she comes to the home of the rich girl as a burglar in the dead of night and is caught. Her striking resemblance to the dead daughter is discovered, and she is adopted, in a gentle conspiracy to defraud the blind mother who has not been told of the death of her daughter. It later is proved that the adopted girl is the daughter of her mother's sister.

"The Gentle Conspiracy" is to be released by the Mutual on June 19.

PARAMOUNT POSTER ATTRACTS ATTENTION.

The Fenway theater, Boston, Mass., has been using a most effective bit of poster advertising for Paramount Pictures, one which is attracting widespread attention and causing general comment, although very few words are used. The management is getting out a quarter-sheet poster in two colors bearing an eight-inch Paramount trademark, which at once arrests the attention.

PICTURES AT CHURCH CONFERENCE.

Motion pictures of an educational, religious and scenic nature played an important part in connection with the Twenty-seventh Delegated General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held in Saratoga Springs, N. Y., during the month of May. Great care was taken in the selection of proper equipment and the results obtained proved conclusively that motion pictures could well be adapted for use in connection with church work. In the Convention Hall, another Simplex Projector with dissolving stereopticon attachment was installed.

Hall at Methodist Episcopal Conference, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

The Board of Foreign Missions held their meetings at the Casino and here a special platform was erected outside of the building. This platform supported the metal booth which contained a Simplex Projector.

"THE GHOST OF THE JUNGLE" (Universal).

No, this is not an illustrated song slide for "Howdah, how do you do," the new Universal fox trot; it is not even a scene from "Hawaii, how are you?" It is a scene from "The Ghost of the Jungle," a Bison two-reel animal drama in which Rex De Russell and Yona Landowska play the leading roles. A complete native African village was built for "The Ghost of the Jungle," and two hundred of the blackest negroes west of the Rocky Mountains got temporary jobs while Director Hunt was busy filming the great animal picture.

A great deal of double exposure work was done in the picture and some of the "supernatural effects" have been admirably commented upon. In one scene the heroine dies of fever in the African jungle and her spirit is seen leaving her body when death comes. Her spirit again plays an important part in the development of the plot when it leads the man who left her alone to die to his own doom. She is seen leading the way down a raging torrent which ends in a waterfall and over this waterfall the man who has deserted her finally plunges to his death in a frail canoe. "The Ghost of the Jungle" teems with exciting adventure and tragedy.

"THE LOVE GIRL" (Bluebird).

The release of "The Love Girl" on July 10 will mark the second issue on Bluebird's summer program of features. Originally announced as "Ambrosia," the change of title to "The Love Girl" was decided upon for commercial purposes and is considered by the producers to be in the nature of an improvement.

The leading players will be Ella Hall, who enacts "the girl;" Harry Depp, a youthful actor who is really the "leading man" of the piece, although still in his "teens;" Adele Farrington, Scene from "The Love Girl" (Bluebird).

Betty Schade, Kingsley Benedict and Grave Marvin. The writing and producing has been done by Robert Z. Leonard and the play is in five acts.

Hindu mysticisms and occult science play an important part in the plot, and there will be a lesson for "faddists" in the final discovery that the disciple of Buddha is shown to be an impostor with a criminal record. This unmasking of villainy is accomplished by the boy and girl, who exercise better judgment and show more common sense than their elders.

The boy and girl will interest every theatergoer through the naturalness and charm of their acting—they are perfectly logical and healthy children, clean-minded and hoydenish that they fairly romp through the five acts, while showing their elders the sensible way to arrive at results.

VIVIAN MARTIN IN INITIAL MOROSCO PICTURE.

Vivian Martin, who recently arrived in Los Angeles to take up her engagement with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures, is now engaged on her first vehicle to be released under the Morosco brand on the Paramount Program. "Nell of Thunder Mountain," by Alice von Saxmar, is the title of Miss Martin's new subject.

The story tells of Nell, a mountain girl reached by the spirit of progress to the extent of rebelling against the sordid conditions and stifling scope of her life. Although different from her people, she yet retains a great love for her own kind. The photoplay will present an unusual ending that will grip any audience with its logic. The star and supporting cast under the direction of Frank Lloyd is now at work in the pine forests at the top of the San Bernardino mountains in a spot noted for its wild beauty. The cast includes Edward Peil, William Jefferson, Jack Livingston, Louise A. Emmons, Alice Knowland, Herbert Standing and John McKinnin. James Van Tress is master of the tripod.

"DESTINY'S TOY" (Famous Players).

Louise Huff makes her first appearance as a featured player in the productions of the Famous Players Film Company when "Destiny's Toy," written and directed by John E. O'Brien, is released on the Paramount Program on June 15. This is Miss Huff's second Famous Players role, however, as she appeared in that company's adaptation of Denham Thompson's "The Old Homestead."

In this production Miss Huff has an exceptionally strong supporting cast, including J. W. Johnston, John Bowers and Harry Lee. The major portion of the action was staged on Block Island, the picturesque scenery of which makes it an admirable location for that part of the story which has to do with the life of Nan Carter, the role played by Louise Huff, after she has been rescued from shipwreck by Barnacle Joe and has been adopted by the kindly old fisherman.

"Destiny's Toy" is a combination of romance and desperate battles, the fight in which the police raid the headquarters of the gang being one of the fiercest struggles ever recorded on the screen. Special music has been arranged for this production by G. Schirmer, copies of which are obtainable from the various exchanges.

"SUBMARINE" COMPANY DOING STUNTS.

The entire "Secret of the Submarine" company, under the leadership of Director George Sargent, recently journeyed down to Los Angeles to film some of the exciting scenes with an aeroplane which furnishes a series of exceptional thrills in the big picture.

After a revolver duel between Lieut. Hope, U. S. N. (Thomas Chatterton) and Lamar Johnstone (Gerard Morton) the aeroplane catches fire and burns in mid-air. When this part of the scene was being taken the fire got too warm for comfort, the aviator adding unexpected realism to the film by the way in which he made an almost perpendicular dive for ground and safety. It was a narrow escape, but the speed of the machine forced the flames and smoke to the rear and away from the wheel until the ground was reached. Miss Juanita Hansen, leading woman of the company, has become an enthusiastic aviatrix since working in this picture.

"REEL LIFE" (Gaumont).

The Gaumont company, producer of the interesting single reel Reel Life, the Mutual Magazine in Film, has outlined several interesting programs in this weekly release. It is the policy of the company to have "Reel Life" edifying as well as entertaining, the same in character as a magazine. For this reason its subjects are chosen with great care. There are usually three different ones upon each reel for the sake of diversity.

"Reel Life" No. 7 is largely devoted to Gaumont animal studies. It also has an entertaining section showing the work of students at an agricultural college. The following issue, No. 8, may be the means of saving many lives, since it shows how gasoline may be safely handled. This is one of Gaumont's important contributions to the "Safety First" crusade. There is an interesting series of pictures showing the New York City Street Cleaning Department at Work. A third section shows the growth and habits of the snail.

Until it is flashed upon the screen in "Reel Life" No. 9, few people will know that spinning of wool as a home industry is not a lost art in America. The Gaumont camera man stumbled into a mountainous section of Georgia, where he was surprised to find the women of the families of even well-to-do farmers were engaged in carding and spinning wool for home use.

There are pictures of ancient Egyptian temples, mammoth pyramids and kingly tombs that were old when King Solomon ruled in Jerusalem. A third section of this issue is made up of more of Gaumont's popular Animal Studies. Bird Life will be featured.

"Reel Life" is released as a Mutual Picture every Wednesday. No. 8 was issued June 18.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS SHOW FIRST AIDS.

First aid to the injured has been pictured in an interesting manner by the Paramount Pictures Corporation in a release of the Pictographs showing what the emergency aids are and how they may be applied in various cases. The pictures were posed by a young boy and a nurse and the films show what ready remedies should be applied in certain accidents, how a pencil and a bandage may be utilized in making a tourniquet to stop the flow of blood, how a wounded knee may be bandaged, and what to do for gas in the head, an injured hand and cuts about the face.

MARY MILES MINTER AT AMERICAN STUDIO.

Mary Miles Minter is now busily using her wonderful powers in her first picture for the American Film Company, Inc., under the personal supervision of Samuel S. Hutchinson. It is "Youth's Enduring Charms," a striking appropriate title for this tiny actress' photoplay effort. The story is by Mabelle Heikes Justice, and direction has been placed in charge of William C. Dowlan, a director of recognized ability.

MORE PIANOS AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

"If we keep on we'll soon have enough pianos to stock a piano house," remarked Charles Rankin, manager of productions, at Universal City several days ago, on the arrival of two grands and one upright. The twenty-six companies working at Universal City make frequent use of the pianos, and as many as fourteen instruments have been known to be on the sets in a single day.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

HERBERT RAWLINSON, who for some time has been a featured player under the direction of William Worthington at Universal City, has been transferred to the Robert Leonard company and will be featured with Miss Ella Hall, under the direction of Leonard. Under his new director, Rawlinson will appear in a five-reel feature photoplay entitled "Little Eva Edgerton."

Arthur Acord, popular hero of Mustang-Mutual releases, is in his home at Santa Barbara seriously injured, the result of being thrown from his mount while enacting a scene for "Sandy, Reformer," a forthcoming release. As a result of Acord's injury, work on the production has been halted, pending his recovery.

During the time the members of the New York police department will be engaged in military training at Fort Wadsworth, perfecting themselves in the handling of the big coast defense guns, the Vitagraph Company of America has generously offered to supply a moving picture entertainment with a change of program nightly.

Lillian Hayward again appears as a vampire type in "The Germ of Mystery," a Selig drama in course of production by William Robert Daly.

Before proceeding with the work of picturizing the five-reel feature, by Harvey Gates, starring Ruth Stonehouse, Director William Worthington will produce a one-reel political photoplay, with the leads played by Jessie Arnold and J. F. Connolly. It is entitled "Cross Purposes," and is written by Bess Meredith.

"The Girl Philippa," story by Robert W. Chambers, which ran in one of the popular magazines, is being produced by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of S. Rankin Drew. Anita Stewart will be seen in the title role. Others in the cast are S. Rankin Drew, Brinsley Shaw, Anders Randolph, Frank Wupperman, Ethel Corcoran, Alfred Rabock and Julia Swayne Gordon.

Twelve lions, six leopards and a number of elephants, in addition to various other members of the Bostock animal aggregation, appear in numerous of the scenes of "The Siren of the Jungle," two-act Centaur-Mutual drama, starring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford.

"The Deacon's Demise" has been finished by Director Lynn Reynolds, in five reels, and will be released as a feature. Reynolds declares that it is the best story he has made. Myrtle Gonzales is featured, supported by Val Paul and Fred Church, with a strong cast including Lule Warrenton, George Hernandez, Frank MacQuarrie, Nanine Wright and Jack Curtis. Reynolds is preparing another story for production, in which Miss Gonzales is featured, but the title has not been announced.

Carl Rich, the five-year-old son of Charles J. Giegerich, a well-known New York newspaper man, has joined the ranks of motion picture stars and has already made his initial appearance in "The Redemption of Dave Darcy," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, announced for release early in June.

Little Carl enjoys the distinction of appearing as the character impersonated by Jimmie Morrison when a child. What made special appeal to players and director was Carl's almost uncanny resemblance to Mr. Morrison, both as his natural self and when made up for the character.

Miss Cleo Madison and her co-director, William V. Mong, have completed "An Eye for an Eye," in two reels, featuring Miss Madison, and with a cast including Mong, L. M. Wells, Charles Gunn, Bertram Grassby and B. T. Henderson. Many of the scenes were taken in the Malibu mountains near Los Angeles, and some beautiful photographic effects were secured. Miss Madison expects to produce next a three-reel film play entitled "Tilly, the Little Swede," written by Mong.

Director T. N. Heffron, of the Selig Company, has begun work on "The Old Man Who Tried to Grow Young," a drama in three reels. The cast includes Al. Wilson and Vivian Reed.

Dr. Mary Walker was one of the prominent members of the General Federation of Women's Clubs who visited the Vitagraph studios at Flatbush recently on special invitation of Messrs. A. E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton. It was Dr. Walker's first introduction to the mysteries of motion picture production and she was as happily interested as a young girl with her first mechanical doll.

Director Eugene V. Mullin, of the Vitagraph Company, is hard at work upon a three-reel melodrama, with Ewart Oretton, Denton Vane, Miss Mayfield, Logan Paul and Adele Kelly in the cast. This production will be released under the Broadway Star trademark.

Allen Holubar has produced his second one-reel society drama, entitled "The Primitive," featuring Ruth Stonehouse and himself, with Jack Holt playing the heavy. Miss Stonehouse consented to appear in this drama while awaiting the preparation of the five-reel feature, in which she is to be starred. Holubar will begin next week on another one-reel film play, which he has written.

S. Rankin Drew has begun work on a new Vitagraph photoplay, pictured from a popular serial by Robert W. Chambers. It is to be a Blue Ribbon Feature, in which an all star cast including Anita Stewart, Brinsley Shaw, Anders Randolph, Frank Vupperman, Julia Swayne Johnson and Mr. Drew will be seen in the principal characterizations.

Lyonel Barrymore is the co-author of "The Criminal's Thumb," a three-reel Gaumont-Mutual detective drama, in which Iva Shepard and Alexander Gaden are starred. John Reinhardt, Henry W. Pemberton, Lucien Taft and several other members of the regular Gaumont-Mutual stock company appear in support of the co-stars.

Director Lloyd Carleton is working on the production of "The Shepherd," prepared for the screen by Eugene B. Lewis, from the story of Elwood Hemming. The featured leads are played by Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson, supported by Richard Morris and Alfred Allen.

E. H. Sothern began work as a Vitagraph star on June 1. His first picture as a cinema player will be a domestic drama by Paul West, in which the distinguished actor will be seen as Blake Waring. The picture is being produced under the direction of Frederick Thomson. Mr. Sothern being supported by a specially selected cast.

Pat Rooney is at work at Universal City, under the direction of Roy Clements, filming the first two reels of a comedy series entitled "The Bell Hop," written by Charles E. Van Loan, especially for Rooney. Rooney is supported by Adele Farrington, Ed Sedgwick and Hayward Mack and a number of others of the Universal City stock company.

Director Fred ("Bing") Thomson, known throughout the motion picture world as one of the most capable directors, has returned to the Vitagraph Company and will direct Mr. E. H. Sothern, the famous legitimate stage star in his screen career. Supporting Mr. Sothern in his first picture are Peggy Hyland, a recent acquisition by the Vitagraph Company; Rose Tapley, Charles Kent and Florence Radloff.

Director George Cochrane has started making a one-reel comedy drama, entitled "When the Stars Foretell," the leads being played by Marjorie Ellison and Jack Connolly, supported by Malcolm B. Sothern in his first picture are Peggy Hyland, Johnstone, of the Universal City staff, and is the tale of a girl with an uncanny sense of forecast.

Frank Daniels is still working with Alice Washburn, under the direction of C. Jay Williams in the superlative single-reelers, which are released by the Vitagraph weekly.

Mitchell Mark in Boston?

Rumor Has It That the Picture Theater Magnate Is Contemplating Building a Picture Theater in Boston—Denied by Al Newhall of the Strand in Lynn, a Mark House—Building Theater Now in Worcester.

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—It is persistently rumored about this city that Mitchell Mark, one of the most prominent moving picture men in the East, is planning to build a magnificent new theater somewhere in Greater Boston. Al Newhall, who is associated with Mr. Mark at the Strand theater in Lynn, says he is not going to build a theater in Boston. However, the rumor refuses to be downed and exhibitors and exchangers are speculating as to where the new theater will be located should it become a reality.

Mr. Mark has been very successful as an exhibitor and his connections with the Strand theaters in New York and Lynn, the Comique in Lynn and theaters in Buffalo, N. Y., and other cities in this section of the country has given him great experience and a wider outlook than most exhibitors are fortunate enough to possess. There are many persons who believe that another large moving picture house in the heart of Boston would not only find it difficult to show a profit, but would also hurt the houses that are there now.

Available down-town sites are practically all occupied by moving picture theaters at the present time, and with the tremendous expense the major theaters are laboring under the advent of another playhouse would spell disaster to one or more of them. In view of the existing conditions it is believed that if another large house is contemplated by anyone it is to be built somewhere outside of the so-called theater district of the city, possibly in one of the suburbs.

Mr. Mark is building a theater in Worcester at the present time.

General's New Boston Offices.

Boston, Mass.—The New England branch of the General Film now boasts of the largest moving picture exchange in New England. Manager Edward J. Farrell, who went to New York on an important business matter this week, is highly pleased with the new home on Ferdinand street. The lower floor of the building contains the executive offices, the bookkeeping department and the exhibiting room. Upstairs are the poster and shipping departments, while the poster department and vaults are situated in the basement. There are thirty-three vaults capable of storing 20,000 reels of film.

Preparing for Patriotic Film.

Boston, Mass.—Emile Chautard, the well-known director of the World Film, was in Boston last week looking over some settings for the new World picture he is to direct, called "Nathan Hale." He went out to Dover, Mass., and also visited Salem and inspected several prospective sites in both communities. While in Boston Chautard was entertained by Frank Grady, manager of the local office of the World Film, who is now actively waging an advertising campaign which he claims has been a tremendous help to exhibitors showing his releases. Alice Brady and a company of players were in New Bedford last week posing for some scenes in Miss Brady's latest vehicle, "Miss Petticoats." The Park and Fenway theaters in Boston are now handling Brady-made programs and other large theaters showing Brady-made goods include the Empire at Providence, R. I.; the Empire at Portland, Me.; the Eagle at Manchester, N. H., and the Park theater at Worcester.

Heard at International Exchange.

Boston, Mass.—Mr. Frank H. Vine, New England manager of the International Film Service, is enthusiastic over the new Hearst International Pictorial series, the first of which was released in this territory on June 15. The new series was formerly put out by the Hearst-Vitagraph Company, but since the reorganization of the Vitagraph Company it has become a distinctively Hearst product and receiving all the benefit of the publicity in the Hearst organs in this territory.

Abe E. Penn is the latest addition to the staff of road men connected with the local office of the International. Penn is new to the moving picture business, but with his reputation as a salesman and his knowledge of people and conditions in New England, through which he will travel, he is expected to prove a valuable addition to the staff working under the direction of Manager Vine.

Walter S. Davidson, who was formerly connected with the Boston office of the Pathé Company, is also on the road for the International and reported to be doing very well. Most of his efforts are confined to the State of Maine, where he is said to have a host of friends among the exhibitors.

The Boston Journal has launched a novel moving picture contest—a contest which offers an opportunity for fifteen young women and fifteen young men to appear in a moving picture to be made and produced in Boston and also gives the local scenario writers a chance to see what they can do. The name of the company that is to film the picture has not been made public.

The contest is based on the popularity vote idea. The leading fifteen young women and fifteen young men are to be selected as the cast for the photoplay, and the young woman and man receiving the greatest number of votes will be selected to play the leads. As the photoplay is produced it is planned to publish daily the locations at which various scenes will be taken, and all particulars of interest in connection with the filming of the picture.

The contest will extend over a period of three weeks and in addition to the other honors, cash prizes are to be awarded to the winner of the scenario contest and the leading vote getters. The contest is open to all young women and men who are at least sixteen years old and of good moral character. The rules also provide that the scenario must be written about a girl named Flo.

NEWARK NEWS LETTER.

By Jacob Kalter, 51 Strand Theater Bldg., Newark, N. J.

Levison Returns From Trip.

Newark, N. J.—Leo F. Levison, manager of the local branch of the World Film, has just returned from a most successful trip on the Atlantic coast, stopping off at Long Branch, West End, Asbury Park, Ocean Grove, Manasquan and Point Pleasant. He reports that the exhibitors and hotel men in this territory are complaining bitterly of the delay in the summer season. He also states that according to Dame Rumor, Walter Rosenberg will reopen the Parker theater, Long Branch, and run same in conjunction with the airdome adjoining the new Broadway theater.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

"Myra" Doing Well.

Newark, N. J.—H. W. Johnston and A. H. Westfall, working the Jersey territory of the International Film, dropped in the other day. They report exceptional bookings on the new serial "Mysteries of Myra."

Rambonnet With Universal.

Newark, N. J.—Edwin A. Rambonnet, formerly with the General Film, has joined the staff of the Universal, at 286 Market street, as roadman. In his new car Mr. Rambonnet expects to make many trips throughout the state in search of business. Mr. L. Galsborg, manager of the Newark branch, also reports that S. E. Fried, his other road man, is doing exceptionally fine business.

Keystone Park Opened.

Newark, N. J.—M. Rubenfeld has opened the airdome at Broad street and Eighth avenue. The place will be called Keystone Park. Every Tuesday evening will be country store and on Thursday evenings amateur night will be held.

Kimball Representation in Newark.

Newark, N. J.—Eugene F. Licombe, representing the W. W. Kimball Company, organ builders of Chicago, was in Newark all week making the exhibitors in Newark to his organ for the motion picture theater. Mr. Licombe comes here from New York.

World's Free Reels.

Newark, N. J.—"Something for nothing." Don't believe it? Yes, you can secure free sales reels for the World Film's pictures by applying to Leo F. Levison, Newark manager. Mr. Levison reports tremendous demands for these novelties. Fox's Carlton, Newark, having exhibited the same picture four times in a week. "No trouble at all booking pictures at this price," he says.

Philadelphia Prospers

Opening of the Summer in the Quaker City Brings No Falling Off in Attendance at Moving Picture Shows—Early Closing of the Larger Theaters and General Prosperity of Local Business Reasons for the Good Attendance.

Special to Moving Picture World

from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—A most peculiar situation confronts the exhibitors of Philadelphia and vicinity at the present time. Despite the unseasonable period of the year the most satisfactory conditions are being experienced at the majority of local theaters. During the past several weeks the moving picture theaters have been exhibiting to large houses and there seems to be no indication of any tendency contrary to this analysis. Large theaters such as the Stanley, the Arcadia, the Palace and many others report unusual crowds and in many instances the picture been forced to close the box office long before the accustomed time. Generally, at this time of the year, the moving picture industry suffers a relapse and small attendances are the result. This is due largely to the warm weather and the fact that many persons commute to nearby resorts where they can escape the hardships of the warmer weather.

While the weather to date has been of a most unseasonable character, the mere fact that summer has set in generally serves as a notice to the public to discontinue the practice of visiting their favorite theater and the exhibitor suffers as the result. Many reasons are being advanced to explain the contrary conditions now prevailing, but the main cause seems to be the general prosperous conditions of practically every line of business. Commercial and industrial establishments in this vicinity are operating to capacity and labor is at a premium. This has naturally resulted in bringing about a state of affairs whereby the average working man has more money to spend on luxuries such as theaters, smoking, visiting, etc. Most exhibitors are willing to attribute their good fortune to this reason and a strong feeling of optimism is prevalent in moving picture circles in this grand old Quaker City of Philadelphia.

Majestic, Fine Shore Theater, Opens.
Atlantic City, N. J.—Monday, June 5, marked the opening of the Majestic theater, Jersey Shore's largest and most modern moving picture theater. The management of the theater had published notices to the effect that the theater would be opened to the public on Saturday, June 3, but through some misunderstanding it was found impossible to do so on that date, hence the postponement. Notwithstanding this fact, a large crowd was on hand to witness the first show in the Majestic and they were certainly not disappointed in either the accommodations afforded or the character of the pictures exhibited.

New Amusement Incorporation.

Highlands, N. J.—The Highlands Amusement Company has recently been granted a New Jersey charter. The character and object of the new concern is to conduct moving picture theaters. Harry A. Scull, Jesse H. Schupp and Joseph E. Jenkinson, Jr., are the principal incorporators.

New Producing Company.

The Feibel Film Company has been incorporated in Delaware to manufacture moving picture films. The company has been capitalized at $50,000. John E. Fitzgerald, John T. Costello and John E. Feibel being the principal incorporators.

Ben Zerr Leases Star Theater.

Reading, Pa.—Ben H. Zerr, well-known moving picture exhibitor of Reading, Pa.,

proprietor of the Schuylkill Avenue motion picture theater, has leased the house to Haas & Moyer, owners of the Star theater, located on South Tenth street. The new management will make an effort to give the Schuylkill avenue patrons the best pictures available and will continue the majority of the features instituted by Mr. Zerr.

NEW THEATER IN RALEIGH, N. C. Aaronson & Brown's New Strand a House to Be Proud of.

By Clarence L. Linz.

RALEIGH, N. C.—Aaronson & Brown have opened their new Strand theater, one of the real show places of the South. The foyer is handsomely finished in marble and the rear walls are finished in a Russian marble. The lighting and ventilating systems are as near perfect as possible. The lights are so arranged that not a single shadow is thrown nor are any of the lights visible to the audience even in the top row of the balcony. The house has six ventilators controlled from the roof, where two large fans are so arranged as to inject and eject air as required.

The projection room is built to afford the greatest possible amount of safety. It is above the balcony and the walls and ceiling are of concrete. In the lobby is a writing desk, public telephones and distilled ice water is obtaining. Restrooms for men and women patrons are located on the balcony.

A direct view of the stage and screen is obtainable from each seat. They are upholstered in green leatheroid, and the doors are covered with the same material.

C. E. Tandy Visits Asheville.

Asheville, N. C.—C. E. Tandy, general manager of the Southern Paramount Picture Corporation, was a visitor here last week. He came to Asheville to confer with S. A. Lynch, president of the corporation, on the affairs of that organization. Mr. Lynch announces that the corporation has procured Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas as additional to the other states now controlled. Mr. Lynch, Mr. Tandy and their associates have controlled the output of Paramount pictures in the Southern states for some time. Both the gentlemen named are among the best-known film men in the country.

Baltimore's New Fire Regulations

City Committee Recommends Changes in Local Building Laws That Will Be Important to Exhibitors and Exchange Managers.

By J. M. Shelmian, 1092 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Special Correspondent.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Among the many recommendations that have been made by the committee on fire prevention of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, which should be called to the attention of all the exhibitors and owners of moving picture theaters in this city are listed below.

The committee made its investigations during the months of January, February and March of this year. The following are the recommendations of import which might affect the moving picture theaters:

That the building laws be amended, with special attention given to modern requirements for construction and fire prevention, particularly as to limitation of areas and to private fire protection.

That additional ordinances be adopted and the present ones be amended to form a complete code of regulation governing the manufacture, sale, storage and transportation of explosive and inflammable substances.

That a systematic inspection of old wiring be made, defects corrected and all wiring be subsequently reinspected at suitable intervals.

Manager Wales Introduced.

Baltimore, Md.—H. E. Friedman, who is soon to leave the Washington, D. C. branch of the World Film Corp., brought Manager Wales over to Baltimore on Monday night, June 5th, and spent several hours visiting his many exhibitor friends in this city with the purpose of introducing him to the sales to them and to bid them all goodbye before he leaves for Chicago to become associated with the Pathe office there. Mr. Friedman has many friends in Baltimore and all wish him good luck.

L. A. DeHoff Worked for Benefit.

Baltimore, Md.—Through the activities of L. A. DeHoff, manager of the New theater, 210 West Lexington St., a large portion of the success, attendant to the benefit card party and dance given at Evergreen Ave., the benefit estate of Mrs. T. Harrison Garrett, should be accredited to him. Moving pictures were a feature of the event, and Mr. DeHoff worked very hard on the preparations.

The proceeds gained through the affair will be sent to Mrs. John W. Garrett and Edith Wharton, the novelist, in Paris, for the benefit of the American hospitals in France.

G. S. Benjamin's Showmanship.

Baltimore, Md.—As a unique advertising feature, G. S. Benjamin, manager of the Red Moon theatre, 20 West Baltimore St., had the lobby of his house decorated with Chinese lanterns, banners and flags and employed a travelling showman, A. Anderson, to give a demonstration exhibit and talk in front of the theater explaining how opium is smoked. This was all done to call attention to the showing of the Bluebird feature, "Hop, the Devil's Brew," which was playing there on Saturday, June 3rd. In addition to the show, Mr. Benjamin costumed his usher as a Chinese mandarin and he sold a large number in front. The exhibit consisted of a Chinese drum, daggers, sandals, etc. A splendid crowd was attracted to the house.

I. O. O. F. Campaign at Hippodrome.

A big I. O. O. F. campaign has been carried on at the Hippodrome theater, through Harry Woods, the manager. This campaign will be continued until June 30th, and it is stated that through this activity the Hippodrome has been given the beneficiary organization. It is understood that it has been successful in every way.

New Theaters Near Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—The contract for the one-story $100,000 picture theater, to be erected at Pennsylvania and York streets, has been let to Gustav Stohr, 2851 Pennsylvania Ave. It is stated that contractor Stohr wants sub-bids on the electrical fixtures. J. R. Forsythe, 232 St. Paul St., is the electrical engineer.

Baltimore, Md.—Plans are now being drawn up by architect, A. Lowther Forrest, Law Building, for additions to be made to the old Casino building located at 2 E. North Ave. The cost $100,000.

Hancock, Md.—Plans are now nearing completion by Architect A. J. Klinkhart, 29 West Washington St., Hagerstown, Md., for a three-story moving picture theater, store and apartment building in the city by Chas. Myers, Station Agent of the W. M. R. R. of this city.

Hampden, Md.—Through Julius J. Goodman, representing the Goodman Estate, the ideal skyline of Hampden has been purchased. At the end of this season it is the intention of these interests to erect on this site a dance hall and moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 1,200.

ASSISTANT OPERATORS

ORGANIZE IN NEWARK

Will Attempt to Induce City Authorities to Issue Licenses to Competent Assistant Operators.

By Jacob J. Kalter, 51 Strand Theater Bldg., Newark, N. J., Special Correspondent.

NEWARK, N. J.—At a recent meeting held at Iroquois hall, the assistant moving picture machine operators banded themselves into an organization to be called the Assistant Motion Picture Machine Operators' Association of Newark. The new organization is not affiliated with any other body and is not connected with organized labor.

The main purpose of the association is to attempt to induce the local city authorities to issue licenses to all qualified assistant operators. The new organization also intends to see that only licensed assistant operators shall work in the booths.

Jacob J. Kalter, Newark representative of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, acted as temporary chairman, and in opening the meeting explained briefly the objects of the association. The officers for the ensuing term were then elected. They are: Morris R. Heslowitz, president; Martin Kirschner, vice-president; Edward Krasny, secretary; William Reyle, treasurer; George Heslowitz, business agent; Milton Feldmeyer, sergeant-at-arms. The association gave a rising vote of thanks to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD for the interest displayed by that publication in the new association.

On Tuesday, June 13, a delegation consisting of M. R. Heslowitz, Martin Kirschner and William Reyle of the association, with Jacob J. Kalter of the WORLD as spokesman, conferred with Captain C. Albert Gasser, of the bureau of combustibles and fire risks in regard to issuing apprentice licenses. Mr. Gasser stated that he was heartily in accord with the objects of the organization and would do his part in keeping the booths protected. It is due almost entirely to Mr. Gasser's efforts in the past that the Newark booths have been so free from fires and other danger. The result of the conference was more than gratifying to the committee, and the assistants of Newark are anticipating with pleasure the day when they will receive their licenses.

IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Len. L. Berman with Masterpiece Film.

Washington, D. C.—Len. L. Berman, formerly with the local V-L-S-E, and who has been traveling through North Carolina booking "Cabrila," "Neptune's Daughter" and "The Sign of the Cross" for the company, will continue to cover that section with these and other features for the Masterpiece Film Company, of 1325 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa., which organization recently took over the business in this territory formerly handled by Mr. Rosenberg before he went west.

Another Crandall Dividend.

Washington, D. C.—The Crandall Amusement Company recently announced that another dividend of five per cent. has been declared by its board of directors. From their size and the rapidity with which the dividends come, this company must be enjoying exceptional business.

Object to Censored Films

Washington, D. C., Exhibitors to Make Strenuous Objections to Censored Film from Maryland Thrust Upon Them—Patrons Don't Want Mutilated Pictures—Want to Have the First View of the Films.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington, D. C., Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The exhibitors of the District of Columbia are soon to hold a meeting to voice their objections to any move on the part of the local exchanges to pass on to them films that have previously gone before the censorship board of the State of Maryland and perhaps have had the most vital portions stricken out.

The theater managers, particularly those who show nothing but features, are wondering what the outcome will be in commenting on the matter, Joseph P. Morgan, who is associated with Harry M. Crandall in the management of a string of hotels here, said: "The exchanges should see to it that all films make the rounds of the theaters in Washington, Virginia and North Carolina, which states, with Maryland, form the Washington territory, before they go into Maryland. This would insure to us here in the District of Columbia and the exhibitors in the other states named, where there is no censorship, pictures that have not been shot to pieces by the hands of three people who cannot possibly speak for the other hundreds of thousands of people who must and want to see the same pictures untouched."

"I feel that the exchanges owe to their other customers to see to it that they are served before those in Maryland. To do other than this is going to put the exhibitors in the uncensored territory in a very embarrassing position. For instance, in Baltimore, if an exhibitor there shows a vital scene taken out somewhere in the middle of a reel, if their patrons complain, can say: 'Well! You must not blame us; your board of censors ordered that part eliminated.' We of Washington have not that excuse for the people will say to us: 'The Maryland Board of Censors has not the right to say what we shall see and we believe you should give us help that are not all jump on us or which have parts missing,' and they will be right."

"There is another point to look at. If we see our patrons that Maryland has censored our pictures it is going to start another hue and cry for home rule and home censorship; we are putting a thought into the heads of those who would perhaps just jump at a chance to state something."

"I am firmly of the belief that if the people of Baltimore really knew what this board of censorship is and what it will do, there would be a kick for its elimination. The public generally has no conception of what is going to happen. Now, if the exchanges do as we suggest—serve us first, right down to the last exhibitor in the moving picture theater patrons of Baltimore are soon going to complain of an inability to see other than ninety-day films that are perhaps rainy and more or less battle-scarred. Our patrons do not want to see disconnected stories, and we do not want to show them."

Other Washington exhibitors interviewed on this subject hold views very similar to those expressed by Mr. Morgan, and they believe that in the end the plan suggested would prove of great benefit to the Maryland exhibitors in ridding themselves of censorship.

WATCH YOUR C. O. D. RETURNS.
Petty Larceny by Express Employees May Not Be Noticed.

Washington, D. C.—Another aggravating matter that is very productive of cuss words is a new stunt alleged to have been pulled off by one or more express agents in the territory. It is said that these men so manipulate their C. O. D. returns as to make quite a little change on the side. For instance, the complaining exchange manager stated that some time ago he sent a case of films and paper as C. O. D. $15.70. The man who handled the transaction as an employee of the express company changed the wrapper to read $15.50 and sent that amount back to the shipping office. The victim was very loath to make any very big complaint as long as the matter remained involving only a few cents, and in overlooking it he evidently led the manipulator to believe they were getting away with a good thing. Much to his surprise very recently a $15 C. O. D. came back $10—somebody had gotten away with a five spot. The authorities were then notified and they quickly made up the difference, promising immediate action to see that there was no recurrence of the trouble. Exchanges and others doing a C. O. D. business should watch their returns closely to see that they are not similarly victimized.

Worthless Check Nuisance.

Washington, D. C.—Some of the local exchanges are again complaining against the prevalence of worthless checks, one of their number having received seven in a single day, although that is perhaps not an unusual occurrence. Bad checks, however, are not so much feared as in the old days, for most of the exchanges now demand payment for service in advance and some ask in addition that the patron give a check for the service he made. The time is fast coming when some few men who knowingly give worthless checks are going to be made to answer in court for their actions. The exchanges have long hesitated about doing so, but are becoming exasperated and want some man punished to the limit as an example to all others similarly inclined.

International Takes Over V-L-S-E, Business.

Washington, D. C.—The International Film Service, Inc., which recently opened offices here with Fritz E. Wathne as manager, has taken over the business formerly handled by the V-L-S-E exchange involving the booking of the Hearst-Vitagraph Weekly, now to be known as the Hearst International News Pictorial.

Capital City Notes.

Marcus Notes has as his guests at the Casino theater, Seventh and F streets, Northwest, several hundred newspaper men, representing papers all over the United States, at an initial showing in this territory of the photoplay "Where Are My Children?"

Tom Moore, of the Garden, Strand and Plaza theaters, has just presented himself with a $5,200 Pierce-Arrow automobile. For comfort the machine approximates a Pullman car, and Mr. Moore is more or less envied by all his friends.

Sidney R. Lust, owner of the business of the United Film Service in this territory, has purchased at 1231 Street Street, "Tillie's Punctured Romance" and state rights for Florida, Tennessee, South Carolina, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas. He previously had control of the business of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina for this picture.

Sherman Mason, formerly an exhibitor of New York City, has taken over the picture business at 1231 Street Street, Northwest, and intends operating the same as a strictly college theater.

Screen Club Makes Good

Pittsburgh's Film Organization Proves Its Power in Effecting the Death of a Ridiculous Ordinance That Would Have Banished Film Exchanges from the City—Fire Marshal's Attempt to Scare the People Foiled.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—Through the efforts of the campaign committee of the Pittsburgh Screen Club a proposed ordinance to relegate all film exchanges to the suburbs of the city was finally defeated at a session of the councilmanic committee on public safety last week. The attempt of County Fire Marshal Thomas L. Pfarr to foist the ridiculous measure upon the lawmakers of Pittsburgh was laughed at by the moving picture men, but nevertheless created some uneasiness for a time. Considerable indignation over the proposal was expressed by film concerns and real estate interests alike, in view of the recent removal of many of the exchanges from the old district in Ferry street and Fourth avenue known as the "film row," into modern fireproof quarters.

Tried to Scare Pittsburgh.

The ordinance originally considered by council was to limit the height of buildings used in the film business to 30 feet. In testifying before the councilmanic committee Marshal Pfarr asserted that there were enough explosives in downtown Pittsburgh in the form of moving picture films to blow up the entire business section. He further advocated his ordinance to prohibit the use of any building either for the manufacture or storage of films except in the suburbs. Another clause in Marshal Pfarr's proposed measure was to issue an order prohibiting any child under five years of age from attending a moving picture show and forbidding the carrying of bundles and baskets into theaters, as these things would add to the loss of life in event of a panic.

At the final hearing on the proposed ordinance John McAleer, chairman of the campaign committee of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, opposed the measure successfully. He demonstrated the explosive qualities of film under ordinary conditions by attempting the (?) hazardous feat of burning a strip of film while holding same in his hand. Among film men who testified as to the ridiculousness of the ordinance was B. F. Lyon, manager of the International Film Service, who refuted the charge that films are dangerous as explosives and stated that danger of fire from that source is very small, as a result of the precautions taken in handling them.

Pittsburgh Screen Club Nominations.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—One of the liveliest and best attended gatherings ever held by the Pittsburgh Screen Club was the nomination meeting held recently in the club headquarters, Lyceum Building, Pittsburgh. President H. B. Kester occupied the chair. Following the reports of the committees the candidates for officers and board of governors for the annual election, July 2, were named.

The nominees are: For president, H. B. Kester, A. W. Cross, A. H. McClelland, Charles Seltzer; vice-president, H. A. Lande, J. P. Donovan, G. R. Ainsworth; secretary, Wm. Mayer, Wm. Egan, Wm. Reamer, David Simon, Wm. Silverman; John Lohn; corresponding secretary, M. J. C. Kornblum; official organizer, Max W. Herring; board of governors, three-year term, G. R. Ainsworth, M. Feiler, George Switzer; two-year term, Chas. Seltzer, George Oldfield, C. W. Eckhardt, John McAleer, John Lohn; one-year term, Wm. Silverman, D. L. Harmon, A. J. Barthell.

New House in Connellsville Ready.

Connellsville, Pa.—The attractive new theaters of Messrs. Wagner and Wishart, at Connellsville, Pa., is receiving the finishing touches of decorators and furnishers and will be ready for opening about July 1. It will be called the Paramount, and promises to establish a place among the foremost theaters in western Pennsylvania. The building itself is a fireproof and thoroughly up-to-date in every way, having cost about $30,000 to erect. The seating capacity will be 1,000. Among other features of the house the projection booth is built of steel and is located on the outside of the theater. Two Simplex machines are being installed. Wagner and Wishart have conducted the Globe theater in Connellsville for the past four years with much success, and they are embodying in the Paramount the results of their experience. When the new house is opened the Globe theater will be discontinued and the building it occupies converted into storerooms. C. A. Wagner, who has personally looked after the Globe, will continue in the active management of the new house. The large patronage which the Globe has enjoyed will assure the popularity of the Paramount among the moving picture goers of Connellsville and vicinity.

Vaudeville House Books Film.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Sheridan Square theater, in the East Liberty district, Pittsburgh, has booked a number of big features to be shown in connection with its vaudeville, and a decided change in the policy of this handsome house is contemplated. The vaudeville showings after the film attractions prove a success a regular program of pictures will be continued beyond the summer months. In preparing for the inauguration of the new policy the lobby of the theater has been enhanced by new decorations and the lobby is a bower of palms and flowers. Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" serial will be shown three days to an episode, beginning June 15. The Essanay Chaplin film "College" is shown June 16 and 17, in addition to the George Kleine serial "Gloria's Romance," which has also been booked.

Albert Ayles Takes Over the North End.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The North End theater, on Perrysville avenue, near East street, Northside, Pittsburgh, has been taken over by Albert Ayles, former operator at the Royal theater. East street for several years past. Located in one of the best residential sections of the city, the North End has an exclusive patronage and will continue to maintain a high standard of picture quality, and a very attractive and up-to-date and seats about 450.

May Build New Theater.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Ezraotes & Antonopolos, owners of the Olympic theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has purchased for $150,000 the property at 317-319 Diamond street, at the rear of their theater. It is likely that an addition to the Olympic or a new picture house will be erected by these well-known exhibitors, but no definite plans have as yet been formulated, as the building on the site is now occupied under lease for another year.

Buys Theater at Springdale.

Springdale, Pa.—The Grand theater has been purchased by J. A. Faulx, who is remodeling the house and adding greatly to its attractiveness by new decorations on both exterior and interior. Feature pictures are to be shown in the near future.

W. K. Provan With Pathe.

W. K. Provan, formerly assistant manager of the Pitt theater, Pittsburgh, has recently joined the road force of the Pittsburgh Pathe Exchange and looks after the Northwestern Pennsylvania territory. Mr. Provan makes his headquarters at Erie.

George P. McKee Comes to Local Fox.

The Pittsburgh offices of the Fox Film has strengthened its road staff by the addition of George P. McKee, an experienced film man, formerly of Washington, D. C.

Wolf & Brown, prominent exhibitors in the Western Pennsylvania section, have recently purchased the latest model Motiograph projection machines for their theaters in Cresson, Lilly and Ebensburg. The machines were installed by Ludwig Hommel & Co., Pittsburgh.

A mammoth electric sign, in the form of an American flag, has been erected atop of the Liberty theater, Pittsburgh, one of the finest of the larger theaters in Pittsburgh. The emblem is visible for a great distance and makes the Liberty stand forth conspicuously at night.

AN INTERESTING THEATER.

Colonial Theater's Use of Colored Light Globes Novel and Effective.

By Clarence L. Linx.

THE LIBERTY theater which was recently opened here has a seating capacity of about 350. It is equipped with a huge orchestra and everything has been done by the management to insure the comfort and entertainment of its patrons, including good fiber screen and two modern projection machines.

A feature of the house is the electric illumination. In each of the globes there are three sets of lamps, one of yellow, one of red and the third green. If there happens to be a fire scene, the lights within the theater imitate the reflection from the flames by the use of the red globes; for night scenes the green lights are used, and during all of the daylight scenes the yellow-globed lights are in use. The colored globes are all controlled from the operator's booth, and the operator has become very efficient in his handling of these lights to the end that many pleasing spectacles are produced.

The house is in charge of James L. Brown, formerly manager of the Orpheum theater, which was recently darkened. The Colonial is owned by Mr. Katz, of Chicago. It is interesting to understand that he is considering the erection of a new theater that will have a seating capacity of 1,600.

Serving a Mountain Territory.

Ponceville, W. Va.—Mr. Egan, who maintains a station here for the General Film and the motion picture theaters located in the coal field country, carrying as high as five hundred reels in stock, has a new Buick which he uses to make quick deliveries to his patrons.

An Attractive Little Theater.

Alderson, W. Va.—The Russell theater, a very attractive small-town house, has recently been opened by its owner, R. R. Russell. The theater has a seating capacity of about four hundred, the floor which is reserved for the white patrons. In addition there is a balcony for the colored population. Two modern machines have been installed in an up-to-date operating room, and a very complete orchestra is a great attraction.

Royal and Dixie Combine.

Princeton, Va.—Mr. Pearce, of the Dixie theater here, has taken over the Royal theater, formerly operated by F.

A. Mole, and is consolidating the two programs with the intention of closing the Dixie. This latter is a small house with perhaps a seating capacity of about 350. The Royal can accommodate about seven hundred patrons and is in a very good location.

Richmond, Va. Turns Down Censorship

Ordinance Committee Votes 6 to 2 Against Local Censoring of Film—Police Have Powers Enough to Handle Matter.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington, D. C., Special Correspondent.

RICHMOND, VA.—The Ordinance Committee of the City Council recently voted adversely on the proposed motion picture censorship ordinance which has been before or less in the hands of the committee some time. The final vote was 6 to 2. As previously reported in the columns of the Moving Picture World it had generally been thought that the committee would take this action and the results of the vote caused little or no surprise among the exhibitors of this city. A number of the members of the committee had expressed the opinion that a rigid censorship could be enforced by existing law if required, and these and other officials of the city have contended that the employment of a paid board of censors was not necessary.

The Council has before it two separate propositions involving censorship. At the meeting at which rejection took place, Clerk of Committee A. H. McDowell read a letter from Congressman Montague, at Washington, containing information to the effect that the bill for national censorship of motion picture films would probably not be acted upon at this session of the National Congress. The motion picture rejection was made by Councilman Walsh and voting with him were Messrs. Cheatwood, English, Ferguson, Gunst and Ladd. Those voting in favor of reporting the ordinance with the recommendation that it be adopted were Messrs. Christian and Paul.

The members of the Council were informed by Manager Chesley Toney of the Theatre that the Richmond managers were just as anxious as anyone else to have the proper kind of pictures out of regard to their patrons. He declared that the proposed ordinance would drive the small theaters out of business, as it is called upon for the payment of 50 cents on all films viewed by the censors. Moses Hofheimer offered to supply those interested in censorship with free tickets for a 10 o'clock matinee when they could look over the films in his theater before they were regularly exhibited.

New Hopewell Amusement Co.

Hopewell, Va.—The Gayety Amusement Company of this place was recently granted a charter by the Virginia state corporation commission. The incorporators are J. C. B. Gholson, of Hopewell, Va., president; C. O. M. E. Jones, of Washington, D. C., secretary. The maximum capital stock is placed at $50,000 with a minimum of $5,000, the par value being $10 per share.

Lynchburg's Gayety Will Be Pretty.

Lynchburg, Va.—There will be no pretentious motion picture theater in this city than the Gayety when the improvements contemplated by C. A. Goebel, its present manager, are completed. Contracts have recently been awarded and the work is well under way. The interior of the house is to be gone over completely. The decorations are to be quite elaborate. On the side walls there will be a number of panels showing Swiss scenes and dancing girls, harmonizing with borders of rich colors and a ceiling of pale blue and gold. The effect of this will be very attractive. The lighting system has been changed over to the new indirect type. An important ventilation system is also being installed and it is expected as a result of this, the house will be kept cool and comfortable at all times during the summer months. This in itself is a very worthy improvement.

During the six months that he has been manager of the Gayety theater Mr. Goebel had made a host of friends.

L. Walker to Open Theater.

Poehantons, Va.—L. Walker, who was formerly engaged in another line of business here, has undertaken to remodel his store so as to convert it into a motion picture theater with a seating capacity of about 350. Mr. Walker expects to open for business about July 1. There are two houses here already showing motion pictures; the Opera House has a seating capacity of about 350 and the Star theater will accommodate perhaps 200. Both of these are controlled by a Mr. Mulholland.

Bedford City, Va.—Robinson Brothers, of Christiansburg, Va., have purchased the interests of Harrison & Tate in the Lyric theater here, and extensive improvements to the house are contemplated.

Ontario Operators Win

Provincial Parliament Refuses Request of Exhibitors and Will Not Reduce the Apprenticeship Requirements.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E. Toronto, Ont., Special Correspondent.

TORONTO, Ont.—Officers of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Ontario waited upon Hon. J. W. McGarry, not long ago, to press for a reduction of the training period for apprentice operators from one year to six months. The claim was made that so many both men and women for war that there was a danger of labor shortage, while several exhibitors expressed the belief that they might be compelled to close down their houses for want of machine operators. The government's representative promised to investigate the matter.

A few days later a delegation representing the Moving Picture Projection Machine Operators' Union waited on the authorities to point out that there is a sufficiency of "grinders" for all present needs and any reduction in the training period for " rookies " would receive the serious objection of the operators, who claimed that the exhibitors were merely trying to flood the labor market in order to weaken the wage feature. It was pointed out that the scale for union operators in Toronto is only $15 a week, whereas operators in many cities in the states were making much higher wages.

The representatives of the exhibitors suggested to the government that the training period for apprentices be determined according to the individual merits of the new men in place of being a stated time for all apprentices.

On June 6 it was announced here that in view of the representations of the operators as to the number of men available, no change would be made in the statutes insofar as restrictions for apprentices are concerned, especially as it had been found that more qualified operators had taken out licenses for the year starting June 1 than there were licensed moving picture theaters in Ontario. At the time that this decision was

ST. LOUIS NEWS LETTER.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Weather Man Features "Rain"—Long Run Fared.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Exhibitors have been casting their eyes skyward the last few days—when they could see the sky—and making doleful forecasts that the bad weather that played a summer's engagement in this section of the country last year will make a return booking this season. June, so far, has been a little better than June a year ago, but it has been far from satisfactory. We have had five or six rainy days—and what is worse, rainy nights—so far this month, and the days when it does not rain the air is too chilly for all fresco performances. Last year was disheartening. Lots of exhibitors lost enough money trying to keep their outdoor places going through May and June to put a crimp in the whole summer's business, and many who stuck it out and played the whole season, just did beat the wolf by a few yards. Usually St. Louis is dried out almost to the bone before last the season was long and hot and dry. There were not more than five evenings during the whole season that outdoor performances could not be given. The number of airmen in St. Louis is not as large this year as last summer, and many have waited until late in the season to open. Many film men prophecy a gradual decline of the airman business if our weather does not prove more satisfactory, with the probable exception of cases where the theaters and airmen are adjoining, and the programs and audiences can be moved into the house when the clouds begin to weep.

reached all operators in Ontario had not yet applied for a renewal of the Provincial cards. The operators have, therefore, scored a victory over their employers.

There are more than four hundred licensed and qualified operators in Ontario at the present time, it is declared.

I. Soskin with Paramount Staff.

Toronto, Ont.—I. Soskin has been added to the staff of the Paramount Pictures Corporation here as the direct representative of Messrs. J. J. and Jules Allen, president and secretary respectively of the company. Mr. Soskin was the Paramount representative in Vancouver not long ago and he was recently transferred to the management of the branch at St. John, N. B., right across the continent. Mr. Soskin has been authorized by the company to have general supervision of the business under their direction.

Walter Davidson Joins World Film.

Toronto, Ont.—Announcement has also been made that Walter Davidson, until recently at the head of the Canadian Union, at Toronto, has joined the head office of the World Film in Toronto. Mr. Davidson is widely known in Canadian film circles. Mr. Burton has left the World.

Miss T. Burns has left the staff of the Toronto Mutual branch to enter the employ of the V-L-S-E at the Canadian headquarters in Toronto.

E. Y. Watson, moving picture editor of The Sunday Worker, Toronto, is left in the employ of that paper. Mr. D. K. Billings, another member of The World staff known to film folks here, has also resigned. Mr. Billings was Toronto correspondent of this paper for many months.

League's Civic Work

Cleveland, O., Motion Picture Exhibitors Put Shoulder to the Wheel in Campaign for "Better Babies"—Raise Several Thousand Dollars—Theaters That Showed Special Film for the Dispensary and Hospital.

By Hubert Persons, Standard Theater Building, Cleveland, O., Special Correspondent.

CLEVELAND, O.—The biggest and most far-reaching activity Ohio motion picture exhibitors have ever engaged in, is the way Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League characterizes the "better babies" campaign the league has just completed.

For the week ending June 10, 146 picture theaters in Cleveland and suburbs, showed the film "A Baby's Fight for Life," for the benefit of the Babies' Dispensary and Hospital, and contributed one cent a head for every person viewing the film. Not only did the picture men contribute money to the campaign to raise funds to help the babies, but they gave the use of their theaters and permitted Camp Fire Girls in nurses' costume, to solicit funds for the dispensary in each theater.

Ten downtown theaters showed the film June 3, following a parade for the opening of the babies' campaign. Contributions from persons in audiences in these ten theaters reached nearly $600, in addition to the contributions from the theater owners. The total amount the Babies' Dispensary men have succeeded in raising for the babies has not been tabulated as yet, but it is certain to be several thousand dollars.

Theaters That Showed the Special Film.

Special Film to Help French Orphans.

Cleveland, O.—Miss Katherine Russell Becker, of New York, has just completed a reel entitled "The Fight of Society," to be shown at the Metropolitan theater the latter part of this month for the benefit of the fund Cleveland society women are raising to aid the French war orphans. Some of the scenes were laid in the old Garfield homestead, the former residence of President Garfield at Mentor. Other pictures were taken at the Country Club, the Hunt Club at Chagrin Falls, the Cleveland Yacht Club, and the town house and country estate of Charles A. Otis. One scene shows a number of society folk dispersing themselves in the swimming pool at the Cleveland Athletic Club.

The Enjoy-U's Own Weekly.

Cleveland, O.—Gustave C. Schroeder, proprietor of the Enjoy-U theater, 7700 Lake avenue, plans to give his audiences weekly features of his own making, as the result of an experiment he tried on Memorial Day. Schroeder mounted a motion picture camera in his automobile and drove about among holiday crowds in his neighborhood.

The result was a goodly number of feet of snappy neighborhood stuff which his audiences enjoyed a week later on the screen. Now Schroeder will repeat the experiment weekly.

"Where Are My Children?" in Ohio.

Cleveland, O.—"Where Are My Children," the film argument against race suicide, opened June 10 at the Cleveland Opera House. It was first privately screened by Manager George Gardner, before an audience of city officials, clergymen and educators.

E. P. Strong and Fred Desberg, of this city, have incorporated a company to handle the film in Ohio. It is attracting wide attention.

CINCINNATI NEWS LETTER.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 1st Nat. Bank Bldg., Cincinnati Correspondent.

McMahan & Jackson Get Another Big Film.

CINCINNATI, O.—McMahan & Jackson have added to their list of big features the Great Northern Film Co.'s production, "The End of the World," a six-part film portraying what happened when a comet struck the earth. It will be handled on a state-rights basis, like some of the other features which the Cincinnati firm controls. "The Dumb Girl of Portici," which McMahan & Jackson own in Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana, is showing to capacity business, they report, while "Diana," which was shown here in conjunction with the Pavlova film, is also drawing well. The firm entertained a remarkable assemblage of stage and literary notables recently on the occasion of the visit of the touring Friars to Cincinnati. The attraction was a private showing of "The Burglar and the Lady," a film version of James J. Corbett's stage play, in which he is featured, and as Mr. Corbett was a member of the Friars' company, the occasion was opportune for the special exhibition, which was apparently much enjoyed.

Small Fire at Museum Theater.

Dayton, O.—A small fire in the operating room of the Museum theater, at 213 Valley street, caused a loss of about $75 by the destruction of a film and some other damage, and incidentally illustrated that a panic is not necessary when a blaze occurs. Manager Charles Wood calmly announced to the audience that there was a small fire, but that there was no cause for alarm, and the audience, under his instructions, moved out with equal calm. The fire spread rapidly, and the spread of the fire, extinguishing the blaze at once. Manager Wood's coolness undoubtedly contributed largely to the prevention of possible trouble.

Children's Films at Zanesville.

Zanesville, O.—The organizations interested in having picture designed especially to interest and instruct children have succeeded in making arrangement for special programs once a week, on Saturday mornings, and the several exhibits which have been held were all well attended. A typical program shown recently included a Pathe colored picture, "The Adventures of a Madcap," and several other comedies, as well as some scenic pictures.

IN DETROIT.

Admission Raise at the Alhambra.

Detroit, Mich.—Thomas D. Moule, manager of the Alhambra theater, Woodward and Kenilworth avenues, Detroit, announces that on account of the ever-advancing cost of first class programs and of the increased cost of every other item in the conducting of a high-class theater, they are confronted with the necessity of increasing revenue, or of presenting mediocre attractions. "We prefer to maintain our policy of 'No picture too good nor too expensive for the Alhambra,'" he says, "we will, commencing Sunday, June 11, charge 15 cents for all seats except box seats. The new theater, and ten cents for all balcony seats (including boxes). Main floor boxes will be 25 cents, and all seats ten cents at matinees as usual.

Gilligham Out of G. F.

Detroit Manager of General Film Exchange Resigns to Open His Own Distributing Company—Calls New Concern National Film Company—Offices at 189-191 Woodward Avenue—Some of Mr. Gilligham's Activities.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich., Special Correspondent.

DETROIT, MICH.—A. J. Gilligham, of this city, a national light in the film world both as an exhibitor and exchange manager, has resigned in protest of continuous service of the General Film Company, has resigned the management of the Detroit exchange, and has opened offices at the New Empire theater building, 189-191 Woodward avenue, where he occupies the entire third floor. Mr. Gilligham will conduct an exchange business under the style of the National Film Company, the name under which he formerly operated before he sold to the General.

Mr. Gilligham started as an exchange man some ten years ago, operating the National Film Company in Detroit and the National Film Company in Grand Rapids. There were six motion picture theaters in the United States when he opened the Vaudeville theater in Grand Rapids in 1906. Since then he has gradually increased the number of houses until they include the Majestic, Orpheum, Strand, Idle Hour, Original Vaudeville and Monroe Vaudeville, and the New Empire in Detroit. The Grand Rapids theaters are operated as the Gilligham & Smith Enterprises, Mr. Gilligham being president and the largest stockholder.

When the General Film Company took over the National and Vaudeville Film companies, Mr. Gilligham was appointed manager of the Detroit exchange immediately opened, and has continued in that capacity until sending in his resignation June 1st.

Mr. Gilligham has extensive motion picture holdings as well as numerous valuable real estate investments which require a great deal of his time. Besides the interest in the theaters above mentioned, he is vice-president of the Union Amusement Company, operating the Detroit Opera House; he is substantially interested in the new Circle theater in Indianapolis; he owns the property on which is located the Parkway, Woodward avenue, near Elizabeth street; he is just placing on the market 24 acres at Livernois and Twelfth streets which he has sub-divided into lots; he is president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade; Thirty-Second Degree Mason; Member of the Mystic Shrine, F. & A. M., Wolverine Automobile Club, Board of Commerce, Life member of the Lodge of Elks as well as other clubs and social organizations.

Mr. Gilligham will always be glad to welcome exhibitors, exchangers and those interested in the motion picture business at his new offices, New Empire Theater building, 189-191 Woodward avenue, where he owns the lease on the entire building.

Detroit Board of Commerce Cruise.

Detroit, Mich.—When the steamer City of Detroit sailed away from the foot of Third street, Thursday morning, June 8, it had on board John H. Kunsaky, George W. Trendle and Edward Pierce, as well as I. Reubens, the latter going as a motion picture operator. The trip is an annual one in the form of a cruise taken by the Board of Commerce for its members. A different route is taken each year and new places of interest are visited. The trip lasts five days.

At This Paper's Detroit Office.

Detroit, Mich.—Every day we run into exhibitors and exchange men who tell us that they couldn't get along without the Moving Picture World—and that it is the best and most complete journal devoted to the trade. Occasionally someone calls at the office to find out why the paper can't be purchased at every newsstand. In this connection we want to say that the circulation of the Moving Picture World is practically all paid-for circulation and represents individual paid-in-advance subscriptions. This is the best kind of circulation for the advertiser. Don't depend on being able to get the World at a newsstand—subscribe for it by mail and get 52 issues direct to your office or residence for only three dollars. It's the best investment you can make.

Centreville's Community House.

Centreville, Mich.—Work was commenced June 3 on the new Centreville theater, which it is expected will be completed by September 1. The cost will be in the neighborhood of $10,000. It has been financed by a stock company consisting of fifty members—citizens and farmers of this village. It is designed to fill a place in the community life and make Centreville a better place in which to live.

J. P. Church Managing the Forest.

Detroit, Mich.—John P. Church is now manager of the Forest theater, Woodward and Second streets, Forest, where he owns the ownership as the Your theater.

New Deltha Theater.

Detroit, Mich.—Seating capacity for 1,200 persons on one floor is to be provided in the Deltha theater, which is to be located on the west side of Holcomb avenue, just north of Mack avenue, for the Deltha Amusement Company.

David Stott Dies.

David Stott, proprietor of the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, died suddenly of a heart attack at his home, Sunday, June 4. He was buried the following Wednesday.

Worth a Passing Glance.

Detroit, Mich.—The Garden theater, now under the management of Joe Woods, and the Strand, under the management of David C. Snook (both Kunsaky theaters) have followed the example of the Alhambra and announced a daily-change policy instead of changing four times a week.

The Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation of Michigan has filed articles of association with the Secretary of State at Lansing, Mich. The amount of authorized capital stock is $200,000 and the stockholders are Harry I. Gordon, Charles Beals and Edward W. Butcher.

Good luck and best wishes to Edward W. Butcher, manager of the Broadway-Strand theater, who became a benedict on Wednesday, June 7, at Troy, N. Y., his former home.

Port Huron and Detroit parties are negotiating for the City Opera House, Port Huron, Mich., on Military street, and to erect thereon a handsome new motion picture theater. The plans already drawn call for a house seating 1,500.

The Stratford theater, Dix and Ferdinand avenues, Detroit, under the management of E. V. McGarry, has declared dividend every month since it opened, March 11.

Charles G. Roos, formerly with the Atlas Feature Film Company, of Detroit, recently called at our office. Mr. Roos is superintendent of photography with the Canada Film Company, at Galt, Ont., which firm is now engaged in producing an elaborate war picture.

Watch Your Thermometers

Louisville Exhibitor Gives Worth While Talk to World Readers on the Importance of Keeping an Equable Temperature Throughout the House While Show Is On—Pointers on Comfort That Every Exhibitor Ought to Realize.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky., Special Correspondent.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—According to one of the leading moving picture men of this city, careful regulation of temperatures in moving picture theaters is something that is overlooked in the majority of cases. This exhibitor has placed a number of thermometers in various parts of the house, and either in winter or summer a close watch is kept on them and the temperature kept at about the same point. This house has a washable air cooling system in addition to its many fans and is enabled to keep the air equable either in winter or summer. Many exhibitors place a thermometer somewhere near the front of the house, look at it once or twice a day, and think they are regulating temperatures. As a fact it is necessary to view the thermometer every quarter or half hour in order to keep the house really comfortable. It is comparatively an easy matter to keep a house cool that is merely half full, but as it fills up it is necessary to use artificial cooling.

It Pays to Watch Closely.

Early in June a case was called to attention where a audience was fanning itself in an effort to keep cool, while through oversight the side doors to the theater were securely closed. A glance at a thermometer would have called the manager's attention to the fact that everything was not as it should be. Another house in an effort to hold down expenses is guilty of the penny wise and pound foolish system of turning off its electrical fans about the way through the second night performance. According to this manager the house is half empty during the latter part of the last show, and its a waste of current to use the fans. However, he overlooks the fact that after sitting under a fan for the first quarters of an hour the patron feels uncomfortably warm when the breeze is cut off, and stale air from the previous performance has not escaped from the house.

Make It Some One's Regular Job.

"Of course it is possible to overdo ventilating" said this manager, "as in the case of a house that had its side doors wide open last December in an effort to cool off the house. A number of people became chilled, and dissatisfied with the management. What's everyone's business is no one's business and the wise manager should detail one of his ushers, door men, or someone to keep close watch on the thermometers, and hold him responsible for any slip ups."

New Aristos Sunday Matinee.

Louisville, Ky.—The New Aristos theater, Second and A streets, has the advantage of the fact that it is in a residence neighborhood that is free on Saturday afternoons, and has just announced that hereafter matinees will be held on Saturday afternoons as well as Sundays. While most of the theaters run Sunday matinees even in the suburban districts, this theater is the first to announce regular Saturday afternoon performances. The neighborhood is excellent for this program which the management feels confident will prove a success.

Switow Wants to Retire.

Louisville, Ky.—M. Switow, head of the Switow Amusement Co., which has built many moving picture theaters in Louisville, Kentucky and Indiana during the past few years, reports that he is preparing to retire from the industry, and is disposing of his moving picture theater holdings. During the past few months Mr.

Switow has sold his holdings in a number of houses, and most of his holdings are now confined to local theaters. His success in the moving picture field has been phenomenal.

"Manhaters," Local Film, Ready.

Louisville, Ky.—J. Johnson Musselman, manager of the Star theater, and actively connected with the management of the Princess Amusement Company, operators of the Orpheum and the Capitol, has completed playing "Henry," the leading part in the "Manhaters," a Ruth picture produced by the McHenry Film Co., for the Broadway Amusement Enterprises. The completed film will be shown at the Novelty, during the week of June 18, and later at the entire string of Broadway houses. Miss Sara Weissberg won the leading role of "Ruth." Mr. Musselman went through the throes of a fake wedding on the wide steps of the Jefferson County Court House. William Conklin directed the picture, while Arnold Rocard directed the camera work. The picture took in a number of interesting local scenes, mostly in the business districts. What will add greatly to the picture's drawing power is that it is entirely free from advertising matter, and is really merely an interesting little local photoplay.

Local Business Notes.

Louisville, Ky.—That a really high class film production never becomes dead is the contention of Manager Lee Goldberg, of the Marx Anderson theater, who again showed "The Spoilers," The Rex Beach story in which William Farnum, Thomas Santschi, Kathleen Williams take the leading parts. This film was shown on a number of occasions at the Marx Anderson, and twice it pulled good attendance. Mr. Goldberg brought the film back and showed it for four days at the local Keith houses starting the run on Wednesday, June 7. It is said that many Louisvillians have seen this picture a number of times, but are not tired even yet.

The Orpheum theater, Louisville, has been doing a good deal of advertising in connection with its showing of the new serial "The Secret of the Submarine," which will be run in single chapters for fifteen weeks, the showing having started on Sunday, June 4. The Cherokee theater, in the Highlands, which will also show the serial, has been running slides announcing the picture for several weeks previous to the first showing.

New Middlesboro Theater.

Middlesboro, Ky.—The Brown Amusement Company, operators of the Marlins and the Adelphi, has confirmed the report that the company will shortly build a new theater. The new building will be of fireproof construction, will seat 450 to 500 people. The newest types of heating and ventilating plants and a mezzanine balcony will be installed. When completed the house will be the largest and finest in the mountain district of the state.

Kentucky News Items.

Eminence, Ky.—The New Grandstand air-dome, was recently completed and has just been opened to the public.

Prestonburg, Ky.—The management of the New Magnet theater has opened its new house, which is very attractive though small.

Weeksburg, Ky.—The Weeksburg Amusement Co., with a capital stock of $2,000, has been incorporated by E. M. Brown, S. V. Haworth and G. A. Lund.

Irvine, Ky.—J. H. Stivers has just returned from Cincinnati where he purchased equipment for the new Grandstand theater, the new air-dome which will shortly be completed. A power plant with a voltage of 220 has been installed, and Mr. Stivers expects to open the new picture dome in a blaze of light.

TENNESSEE NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

Where Negro Theaters Pay.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Exclusive negro picture theaters have done so well in Nashville, which has a large colored population, that the Bijou Amusement Company recently opened the old Bijou theater as an exclusive colored theater. The Bijou, on Fourth avenue, was at one time a part of the Jake Wells circuit in the South. With the opening of this theater the colored people will be well represented by photoplays. It is planned to keep the place up to a high standard and show the best photoplays obtainable. The building is in good condition and should make a good opening with the circus play "Peg O' the Ring."

Free Films in Parks.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Free moving pictures have been started at Chattanooga in Warner Park, under the auspices of the park commissioners, and operated by a Main street moving picture man. Nashville will also start similar pictures before long. Advertising slides will be shown between pictures. It has been stated that the pictures would be interesting photoplays and that travel stuff and so called educational pictures dealing with the manufacture of this and the world would be shown. Conducting free moving pictures along this line is a new idea in the Chattanooga district.

Co-operative Boosting.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Several of the Chattanooga theaters have recently come out with a co-operative advertisement reading "It's always cool in the Alcazar, Fine Arts, Alhambra, Superba and Bonita picture theaters." The Typhoon cooling system is used in all of these houses. The Alcazar is featuring its cool house in its advertisements which carry a line "Come in and get cool." The ad paid them all, no doubt about it.

Local Notes About Film Shows.

The Majestic Amusement Co., of Memphis, Tenn., rec'd. the following interesting new serial "The Secret of the Submarine." The picture will be shown at Empire theater, No. 2 every Wednesday, and at Empire, No. 1 on Thursdays. Price of admission at these two houses is five cents.

The Strand theater, of Memphis, Arthur Lane, manager, recently announced a new feature program whereby five or more reels of feature material will be shown nightly with a daily change in program.

According to the Majestic Amusement Co., of Memphis, Tenn., Charlie Chaplin is as funny or funnier in the Mutual releases than in his former productions.

The Gay theater, of Knoxville, Tenn., recently played a return engagement of "The Love Mask."

The Glendale Zoo, at Nashville, is now featuring band concerts and moving picture shows as added attractions, and is opening the season with a good run of business.

The Belmont theater, the popular little suburban house of Nashville, located at Sixteenth and Grand avenue, is offering long bills. Eight reel programs are not unusual at this theater.

Camden, Ind.—Merchants are giving free motion picture shows at night.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The "Little Girl Next Door," the big screen production based on vice conditions as revealed by an investigation by an Illinois vice commission, was shown at the Regent recently and no mistake was made by Bingham, Col. Cohn, owner of the Regent, when they booked the production which had taken Chicago by the ears. Indianapolis fled in and out of the doors of the theater continuously and the picture was well received.

Daylight Movement in Minneapolis

Local V-L-S-E. Office Decides to Take the Extra Hour of Daylight—Calls Office Hours from 7 till 4.

From Perry S. Williams, Special Correspondent, Address Minneapolis Tribune.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The V-L-S-E officers here have set an example for the other exchanges in the city in the matter of early closing during the summer months. A statement issued by the manager announces the company has decided to make a new trail if necessary and has joined the extra hour of daylight movement. So far no other establishment in any line of business in Minneapolis has tackled the extra hour proposition although much talk has been going on about it in the newspapers. The V-L-S-E employees now are coming to work at 7 a. m., and quitting at 4 p. m., instead of working from 8 a. m., to 5 p. m.

S. N. Robinson Heads Local Fox.

Minneapolis, Minn.—S. N. Robinson, formerly manager of the Fox Los Angeles office, has been made manager of the Minneapolis exchange in the new Exchange building. He succeeds Earl A. Westcott who is to become western representative for the Fox company. Mr. Robinson worked under Mr. Westcott here several months ago.

J. C. Wolf Will Guide Local Unicorn.

Minneapolis, Minn.—W. L. Merrill, who has been in charge of the Unicorn office in the Produce building has been promoted. The shift in authority was announced as Mr. Merrill left for a vacation of some length, after which he is to be given a higher position with the Unicorn service. He is being succeeded here by J. C. Wolf, who was manager at the Minneapolis exchange at a previous time.

I. A. T. S. E. Local Elects.

St. Paul, Minn.—The officers elected by Local 355, I. A. T. S. E. are: George La Victor, president; Guy Whittaker, vice-president; Earl Hoffman, recording secretary; Albert Trizone, financial secretary; Harry Cunningham, business agent and W. S. Smith, sergeant-at-arms.

Kasson, Minn.—K. L. Niles, a newspaper man of sixteen years' standing and formerly editor of the Republican here and the Adams Review at Adams, Minn., has purchased the Orpheum theater at Menominee, Wis. He also is owner of the Idle Hour theater here with Mr. Dyer.

Hardin Theater Notes.

Hardin, Mont.—M. L. Patton and A. L. Bliven of Alberta have bought the Peacock theater here from R. W. Hickman. Mr. Hickman will move to Vandalla, Ill. Mr. Bliven is a theater manager of experience having managed theaters at Council Bluffs, Iowa; Omaha, Neb., and Superior, Wis. Dan King will erect a new theater in Hardin.

Edward Hinz Will Build Theater.

Austin, Minn.—Edward Hinz, already owner of three theaters at this city, seems to have an insatiable ambition to stage moving picture field. He has announced plans for a new playhouse. His present interest are the Cozy, Lyric and Princess.

Batters Will Try Their Averages.

Minneapolis, Minn.—A. A. Hixon, assistant manager of the Minnesota Metro office, has gathered a team of baseball men from among the employees of the 25 exchanges in the city and has challenged the Twin City Screen club to organize a nine and fight out the burning question of superiority. Hixon has announced the game on some Sunday morning at Nicollet park while Mike Cantillon is on the road with his Minneapolis baseball league team.

Business Good in Both Dakotas.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Business in the theaters of the small towns throughout North and South Dakota is brisk and indications point to a continuation of that healthy condition. This is the report brought back by H. C. Remington, who covers the field in the Dakotas for the Paramount exchange at Minneapolis. He has been on the road continuously since March 1 and had an opportunity to get a first-hand view of the situation.

Minneapolis Short Notes.

Newton Davis, a film road man of some experience, has been added to the city staff of the Universal exchange here.

The Theater Equipment Co., has taken office in the new Exchange building, constructed exclusively for film business. It has taken advantage of a removal to larger quarters and installed a machine repair department with W. C. Phillips in charge.

The Independent Film Corporation again makes an announcement of enlarged service to its trade. J. E. Moor, one of the proprietors, says that the weekly release of the company now will be twenty-one reels.

Carrington, N. D.—Ralph Botts and John Lang have purchased the Grand theater.

Elgin, N. B.—Jacob Ballett has let the contract for the construction of an opera house.

Hillsboro, N. D.—Mr. Harry Hay has purchased the moving picture theater from J. M. Freeman.

New Orleans Lowers Tax

Parish Tax Assessor Takes Lower Idea of Value of Film on Hand at Local Exchanges—Managers Still Consider Their Assessments Too High and Have Asked to Have the Matter Threshed Out in the Civil District Court.

By George M. Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—As announced in Moving Picture World, eight exchanges of New Orleans filed suits in the Civil District Court last Friday afternoon against the Board of Tax Assessors of the Parish of Orleans for reductions of assessments on film. The companies and amounts of assessments and amounts they want reduced are:

Mutual Film Company	$27,000 to $7,000
World Film Corp.	20,700 to 2,900
V. L. S. E. Inc.	20,000 to 2,000
General Film Co.	20,700 to 5,500
Consolidated (Univ.)	22,500 to 5,500
Sou. Paramount	15,500 to 3,500
Pathe, Inc.	20,700 to 3,500
Fox Film Corp.	20,500 to 1,700

The exchange men declare in their petitions that the taxation is onerous and unfair. They state that they are willing to pay a fair price per foot for all film carried locally, but that they do object to paying for 20,000 feet of film, for instance, when only half that amount is carried. An early hearing of the case is expected.

Big Film Men Visit New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—This city has been favored with visits of a few "big guns" in the business. Only a week ago, Harry T. Drum, of the World Film Corporation, was entertained during a short stay here. Then Pat Powers, treasurer of the Universal, dropped off in New Orleans for a few hours between trains to the coast. Mr. Powers didn't have time to visit the exchanges, but held a few chats with picture men in the vicinity of Herman Pichtenberg's Plaza theater. Arthur Lucas, manager of the Crescent, was the latest visitor. He left New Orleans continuing his journey westward.

Sabbath Referendum at Bogalusa.

Bogalusa, La.—A petition signed by hundreds of women has been presented to Mayor Sullivan, and it asks that Sunday motion pictures and baseball be abolished. A much longer petition, signed by 800 Bogalusans, and requesting that Sunday amusements, and the question women, followed it. Ever since the agitation started, an old Sunday blue law was dug up, and Bogalusa is observing it strictly. It incidentally develops that in the coming election to decide the question women, that is, married women, will be allowed to vote for the first time in the history of the state.

They Assisted at Nola Barbecue.

New Orleans film men and representatives of the local and trade press "assisted" at a barbecue on the grounds of the Nola Film Company Thursday afternoon. Ernst Hochinger, manager of the Triangle theater, was master of ceremonies by virtue of having barbecued the meats, working over the pit from early morning. William Hannon, president of the Nola Company, was official host and a good time was had by all.

Among the exchange men present were S. T. Stephens, of Mutual, and Al G. Shear, of Consolidated. Among the newspaper men present were E. S. Pritchard, picture editor of The Item; N. S. Thatcher, moving picture editor of The Times-Picayune, Messrs. Morton and Bowdin Caldwell, and the former chief advertising manager of The Item, were also present. Newman, business manager of The Item, and James M. Thompson, the publisher, also dropped in.

Everybody talked shop a good deal, and seemed to enjoy it. The Nola Company's plans for the near future were also under discussion. These include the engaging of a complete producing company of the first order under a successful director. Operations are scheduled to begin on a large scale within less than thirty days.

Changes in Local Fox Forces.

New Orleans, La.—Louis Levin, the new Southern Division Manager for Fox, left on May 29 for Dallas. Mr. Levin announced an important Fox change at Atlanta. In that city Thomas W. Brady, formerly a Fox road man out of the Detroit office, has been appointed manager of the Atlanta headquarters, succeeding O. P. Hall, resigned.

Paul Engler, heretofore acting manager at the Fox Atlanta office, has been made personal representative of Mr. Levin, and as such will be transferred to New Orleans.

Mr. Levin finds a healthy increase apparent at the New Orleans office, and excellent prospects for his company control the whole of the Southern territory.

Film Favorites as Fashion Leaders.

New Orleans, La.—Madam Antoinette Evans, wife of R. King Evans, New Orleans manager of the V-L-S-E exchange, who several months ago put on a fashion show at the Crescent theater in conjunction with the showing of the Paramount program there, has been engaged by the New Orleans Times-Picayune to write a series of fashion articles for that newspaper. Mme. Evans will conduct her own daily department. Her wide acquaintance with film folk will enable her to answer any questions as to just what the noted film planets are wearing—and not wearing. Mme. Evans is of an engaging personality herself, and with her husband, has won many real friends.

Southern Film Convention Notes.

New Orleans, La.—It is not too early to talk about the convention of the Southern Motion Picture Trades Association, thinks J. Eugene Pearce, Mr. Pearce, who is president of the association, said so recently, while making several interesting announcements. In the first place, it is probable that the exposition will be held in January, and not in February as the Mardi Gras season as was originally planned. The exposition will last four or six days, Mr. Pearce said, and already, from the promises he has received from managers, the greatest, the greatest galaxy of film stars ever sent South will assemble in New Orleans for the big film show. Mr. Pearce this week began to send out exposition literature broadcast. He has determined to get a part of his handsomely appointed Canal street offices to a secretary whom he will appoint shortly to attend to exposition matters. Assisting him in arranging various details are Al G. Shear, manager of the Universal-Consolidated, and Karl A. Bugbee, manager of Metro's Crescent City office.

New Orleans News Notes.

Fire caused a loss of $1,025 at the Peoplesville, Ala., and J. G. Landen, at 2735 St. Andrew street. Flames started from a projection machine and spread to the main floor.

E. V. Black, owner of the Grand theater, Donaldsonville, La., and J. G. Landen, of the Isthmian theatre, Jackson, Miss., were visitors this week on Exchange Row, and purchasers also.

"The Little City of Peace," indorsed by unpretentious advertising in the New Orleans Times-Picayune, which newspaper brought the noted film to the Crescent City, is entering on its second week to crowded houses.

The Pathe office this week broke all collection records. "After all," Manager Raoul Junet said, "that's the only things that count, anyway. Pathe has gone ahead consistently in this city, without a bit of bragado to help along. I find that business is on the increase, and that the Goldberg cartoon series will prove a winner in the South."

Bay St. Louis, Miss.—Bay St. Louis is soon to have an airtime that will show the latest feature releases. The new theater opened June 3, and its owner is E. E. Saucler.

Jackson, Miss.—The Plaza airtime, which opened on May 22, with Bell and Carleton as managers, reports exceptionally good business.

PICTURES IN GEORGIA TO PAY FOR PROHIBITION.

Rates for Yearly Theater Licenses Raised—Exchange Licenses Also Go Up.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Special Correspondent.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Prohibition in Georgia has caused a decrease in revenue over the state, and in order to meet expenses municipalities are busy endeavoring to raise tax on not only necessities, but the pleasures people enjoy.

The Atlanta tax committee is making vigorous efforts to bring the income of the city up to total of last year, when the near beer licenses were paid.

The committee took up the question of raising the tax on soft drinks, but found that the services of the city attorney were needed before any move in the matter could be made.

The committee however, turned its attention to moving picture shows, and raised the rate of the additional seal of $100 for 5-cent houses, $200 for 10-cent houses and $300 for houses charging more than 10 cents.

Film distributors will have to pay more taxes in future, their license being raised from $50, on those doing a business about $8,000 and $200 for those above that amount.

R. H. Goodman With Mutual.

Atlanta, Ga.—Robert Hastings Goodman, who made his stage debut in Atlanta about twenty years ago, has returned home to be connected with the local office of the Mutual Film. When he received orders to report to the Mutual offices in Atlanta, Mr. Goodman was actively engaged in helping with the rehearsals of the Friars new Frolic.

Alpha Fowler Buys the Vaudette.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Vaudette, for eight years one of the leading motion picture houses in Atlanta, has changed hands. Alpha Fowler, former manager of the Alpha theater, has returned to Atlanta from a trip to the New York City lake sole charge of the Vaudette. He succeeds John and Gus Evins, who have not yet announced their plans for the future.

KANSAS CITY NEWS.

Juvenile Film Movement in Kansas.

Kansas City, Mo.—Coming hand in hand with the women's clubs and the Parent-Teacher councils, is the project of supervised pictures for children in Kansas by a committee of the New York City. It is said that they are contemplating the establishment of a community theater. It is said that with the closing of school, the special matinees will be discontinued, and plans proposed for the community theater. If such a place is not erected especially for these events, it is probable that a hall will be rented and equipment purchased.

At Kirwin, Kansas, moving picture exhibitions are put on every Saturday afternoon at the local theaters under the direction of the women. The pictures exhibited are supervised in every sense of the word.

Among the Kansas City Exchanges.

The Kansas City Feature Film Company reports an excellent business. New contracts are coming in in great shape and it looks like a banner year for Plintom's firm. Three pictures which are taking in exceptionally good shape are: "The Eternal City," "The Hypocrite" and "The Alien."

A recent caller at the local office of the General Film was E. A. Schuster, auditor of the company. Mr. Schuster was here for several days.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

C. A. Jones, traveler with the Universal recently left Kansas City on a trip of unusual duration. On this journey Mr. Jones will visit the eastern line of Colorado. The employees of the local Pathe office recently held a banquet at the Baltimore hotel, the occasion being as a result of the revenue derived from the profit-sharing plan of the Pathe. The following were present: C. S. Edwards, Jr., William Beckenstein, Hattie Bolton, Ruth Richards, E. E. Heller, K. A. Agnew, Darline O'Dell, Mary Bowman and Emma Guenther.

Pathe's New Publicity Department.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. E. Edwards, Jr., local Pathe manager, has installed a publicity department, placing Howard Jamison, who formerly traveled in southern Kansas and northern Oklahoma at the head. The chief function of this department for the present at least, will be to boost serials. It will not be so much a publicity department as it will be a co-operative department. The idea is to work with the various newspapers and exhibitors throughout the district with the view of boosting not only exhibitor's shows but Pathe pictures.

Theater Changes Hereabouts.

Hoxie, Kans.—T. F. Menefee is building a new moving picture house here.

Scottsville, Kans.—Louis Christie is considering the erection of a new moving picture theater here.

Seneca, Kans.—Albert Koelzer, manager of the theater here, has sold his house to Mr. Turley, who takes immediate charge. Beverly, Kans.—July 1 is the date set for the opening of a new theater here. There is at present but one house in the city.

Kansas City, Mo.—Mr. Farow, of Fowler, Kansas, building a very modern theater at Buckner, Kansas. It will be managed by his brother, who is an experienced motion picture man.

Wellington, Kans.—Mr. Chris Grayman of Wellington, has leased one of the theaters to Mr. Hurdell, who formerly managed the Imperial theater of that city. Mr. Grayman decided to broaden his field a little, and he did not want to be burdened with two shows in the same place. Mr. Grayman is known as a successful theater manager.

J. E. Folan, traveler for the Pathe, was recently in the office of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD representative, and gave some very interesting material regarding theaters in small towns in Kansas. He told of one house at Norway, Kansas, that seated 250 people while the population of the town was just that number. Mr. Folan says the house is packed at every show.

Another prominent exhibitor is N. N. Morris of Manato. Although the town has a population of but one thousand, the theater is one of the most upward in the state.

Enjoin Sabbath Closing and Police from Enforcing Local Ordinance That Forbids Sunday Pictures—Interesting Line-Up of Forces.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

WICHITA, KANS.—Eight moving picture exhibitors of this city have applied to the District Court for an injunction to keep the city commissioners and police from enforcing the local ordinance against Sunday theaters. Those who brought the suit are as follows: L. G. Hicks, Don Powell, J. M. Benson, A. E. Fox, Joe C. Fox, C. C. McCollister, E. L. Martling and the Southwestern Amusement Company. The case was brought before presiding Judge Thomas C. Wilson on June 3 and was postponed until June 17, on account of the absence from the city of City Attorney James Conly.

The petition alleges that the ordinance is void because there is nothing legal to uphold its adoption; that the Kansas constitution is being violated; and the right of citizens of this country to be protected in the constitution are being infringed on by forcing the houses to close on Sunday. These however, will probably not be the main points which the exhibitors will adopt. The basis of the fight will be on the argument that the people of the city are in favor of keeping the moving picture houses open. This, it seems, will be a much stronger argument than any of the others, as they would require much legal squabbling.

E. C. Mills Will Lead Picture Men.

The exhibitors of the city have enlisted the aid of E. C. Mills, assistant manager of the Kansas City branch of the Mutual. Mr. Mills has been through campaigns of this sort in Oklahoma and Texas and is an experienced man. It is said that most of the city commissioners are on the part of the exhibitors, but they fear the political effect of opposing the ordinance. They would undoubtedly welcome an injunction of this sort, as it would make them neutral, while a repeal would make them unpopular with those favoring the strict observance of Sunday.

Blue Stockings Hire Counsel.

The Sunday observers, fearing that the city commissioners will not protest with sufficient vigor against the repeal of the ordinance, have retained O. A. Keach, a well known lawyer, to uphold their side of the case. The city churches have appointed a committee of three of the leading ministers to present their view of the question, one of whom is Guy W. Brown, who, for four years has been supervising their censor for the city commission and church federation of Trenton, N. J., and who was at the head of the "Clean Theater Movement" in New Jersey.

The exhibitors held a mass meeting at the Pathe theater on June 10, at which was attended by a very large crowd, so large, in fact, that many persons were turned away. The pastor of the Unitarian Church, Rev. L. M. Birkenhead, was in charge of the gathering, and made a talk favorable to opening the theaters on Sunday. Mr. Mills was also present at this meeting, making the first big talk of the campaign. Mr. Mills did not touch on the subject of the unconstitutionality of the law governing Sunday closing, but based his argument on the theory that the people of Wichita wanted their moving picture theaters opened on Sunday, the same as they want Sunday baseball.

The outcome of this fight is being watched with much interest by all Kansas exhibitors, and by the Kansas City exchanges, who are lending every effort to the managers. Wichita is the second city of Kansas in size, and any action it may take on this issue will undoubtedly reflect on the smaller towns of the state where Sunday pictures are also prohibited.

Colonial's New Policy.

Wichita, Kans.—Don Powell, proprietor of the Colonial, has recently taken a very important step in the policy of his house, raising his price from five to ten cents per performance. Coincident with this he also signed a Blue Bird contract requiring a two-days run each week.

The Regent's Fern Pots.

Kansas City, Mo.—The new Regent theater of this city has gone one step farther than most theaters in regard to floral decorations. On the outside of the house, suspended from the beautiful canopy, six bowls of ferns have been hung. The bottom of these bowls has been covered with a grassy substance and the effect is certainly very pleasing. This house is located on Kansas City's busiest street and the freshness and novelty of the display is exceedingly refreshing, and especially pleasing to the eye.

To the Allisons, a Girl.

"Doc" Allison, of the paper department of the Kansas City Feature Film, has been busy informing his fellow-workers of the addition of a baby girl to his family. Although the maiden is rather young to map out her own career, it is freely predicted that she will eventually land in a Paramount picture. This baby has as yet not been named, but the office force is full of suggestions and Mr. Allison still has hope.

G. B. Howe Heads Local Associated.

After three years consecutive labor with the Universal Film and Supply, G. B. Howe, assistant manager, recently resigned his position. He now active head of the Associated Film Service, 319 Gloyd Bldg., formerly owned by H. H. Gill. Mr. Gill recently organized the Motion Picture Supply Company and his time will now be spent on directing the activities of that firm. He still retains an interest in his former enterprise, however.

The Road Man and His Roadster.

Kansas City, Mo.—Salesman J. Erwin Dodson travels out of the local Universal Film and Supply Company's office in an automobile. With pleasant weather in the near future, and the convenience of a machine as a time-saver, Mr. Dodson opines that he will not only gain more prestige among the exhibitors but will materially increase his sales record. As it now stands Mr. Dodson is the last winner of the $25 monthly prize contest offered by the Universal for the salesman getting the most business.

W. Beckenstein Goes to Unicorn.

William Beckenstein, traveler for the Pathe, is now connected with the Omaha office of the Unicorn Film Service, having recently severed connections with the Pathe. While here Mr. Beckenstein represented Pathe in Kansas and Missouri, nearby Kansas City. C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Kansas City branch, has not yet filled the vacancy.

Contracts with over 200 moving picture theaters in Kansas and Missouri for showing the "First Blue" is a record made by C. S. Edwards, Jr., local manager of the Pathe exchange. This is exclusive of thirty-nine in Kansas City. This is a record that is probably not equaled by any other serial now being shown in this territory and speaks well for Edwards' travelers.

A Big Dallas Studio

J. D. Barton Investigates Possibilities Around Texas Metropolis for the Production of Moving Pictures—Said to Have Contracted With Margaret Anglin for Two Years to Make Screen Productions.

By S. A. M. Harrison, 618 Comal St.,

Dallas, Texas, Special Correspondent.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—A motion picture studio said to represent an outlay of $500,000, and to be backed by leading producers of the East, is a prospect for Dallas. Margaret Anglin will be featured in the productions, it is announced.

J. D. Barton of New York, a motion picture producer who has obtained a two-year contract with Miss Anglin and James Shesgreen, her manager, was in Dallas recently investigating the possibilities of a site for the studio. They are to produce eight pictures a year.

Mr. Fitzhugh, who has been associated with the motion picture business for several years, said the Dallas climate the year round is better than that of either California or the East for the production of motion pictures. He explains that heavy fogs especially in the winter, interfered with taking pictures around New York, Chicago and California, and that these conditions would not be encountered here.

New House Manager for the Queen.

Dallas, Texas.—Nash Well, formerly of San Angelo, has been appointed assistant-house manager of the Queen theater at Dallas. John DeStefano is the house manager. This is one of the many Hulsey enterprises scattered over the state.

First Annual Frolic, Dallas Screen Club.

Dallas, Texas.—The Dallas Screen Club entertained their many friends with their first Annual Frolic at the Majestic theater at Dallas on June 4th, giving matinee and night performance, and from all appearances it was success. The program consisted of "vodeville" and first run pictures, the latter being donated by the different film exchanges in the city.

Boyer Buys Southern Cabiria Co.

Dallas, Texas.—On May 27th a sale was consummated whereby F. J. Boyer took over the Southern Cabiria Co. from his former partner, L. C. McHenry. The company is doing business at the same stand and report an excellent business.

At It in Houston.

Houston, Texas.—The Houston exchanges are experiencing the same trouble that the Dallas exchanges have, that is, the sub-rental of films, and they have combined their efforts to eliminate anything of the kind. They are going to take full advantage of the State law for protecting themselves against this mode of stealing.

Solan Takes Over Texas Theater.

Houston, Texas.—G. W. Solan is now owner and operator of the Texas theater at Houston, Texas. George Graham, administrator of the estate of "Tony Solan," former owner of this theater, has been discharged by the court.

New Travelling Salesman.

Dallas, Texas.—A. J. Pluess has been added to the travelling force of the V-L-S-E office at Dallas, with San Antonio as headquarters. Mr. Pluess has succeeded W. B. Nelson, who has returned to Chicago.

Among Texas Exhibitors.

Dallas, Texas.—W. D. Neville has closed the Nickelodeon theater at Dallas for an indefinite time, and it is rumored that same is to be remodeled. This theater was one of the first to be opened in Dallas when moving pictures were in their infancy in Dallas.

Dallas, Texas.—E. T. Peter, manager of the United Film Exchange, who has been quite ill recently, has recovered.

Temple, Texas.—J. J. Hegman of the Crecent theater in Temple, was a recent visitor to Dallas.

Shreveport, La.—E. V. Richards of the Sanger Amusement Co. at Shreveport, La., visited the film exchanges in Dallas recently.

Amarillo, Texas.—W. H. Coons of the Mission theater at Amarillo, was in Dallas, week of May 29th.

LONG RUNS RULE IN DENVER.

Local Public Makes Three Day Runs Profitable—Features in Small Towns.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLO.—The daily change in program, which a year or so ago was believed to be absolutely essential for the success of any moving picture theater is gradually being shoved into the discard. First the Big Denver theaters tried two day runs and have increased it from time to time until now no theater is put on for less than three days and in a majority of cases its run is even longer.

The plan also has been found to be a success in the smaller towns and even the neighborhood houses in Denver are holding big features for two days and making a success of the venture.

Albuquerque has gone a step further and demonstrates that even a small community can stand a week's run with a big feature. This town of 11,000 saw its first week's run with "The Birth of a Nation" as the attraction. Then it put on "The Battle Cry of Peace" for seven days and followed this with "Sherlock Holmes." Each was a success and now "Sherlock Holmes," "God's Country and the Woman," and the Unwritten Law" have all been booked for, each for a week's run. It is proposed to stick to the plan permanently.

V-L-S-E. Service Department.

Denver, Colo.—Frank Harris, manager of the V-L-S-E exchange, has announced that he has added a service department to his already efficient office. It has been placed in charge of A. G. Edwards, an experienced advertising man.

Explaining the objects of the latest departure, Mr. Harris said: "It has been the plan of our exchange, as well as all others in this section to devote our entire time to finding a market for our pictures. Once we have booked a feature we devote no time to the matter. The new service department will follow each booking to the date of its exhibition and Mr. Edwards will assist the exhibitor in exploiting every picture that is booked by the exchange. He will make newspaper advertisements, or advise exhibitors in the conduct of special advertising campaigns. This plan will help the exchange as well as the exhibitor."

Vick Roy to Manage Tabor Grand.

Denver, Colo.—Another change in the management of the Tabor Grand theater house has brought back to the moving picture industry one of its earliest and best boosters, L. B. Vick Roy. As manager of concessions at City Park, he was first introduced to the local picture business. Moving pictures were a novelty and Vick Roy threw them onto a screen which was built out over the lake. They were shown free for the purpose of attracting a crowd with a view of building up his concession business.

At the time downtown exhibitors complained of the free show. However, it developed that the scheme did more to benefit the moving picture business in Denver than any other one thing.

Vick Roy, while a pioneer in the amusement game has never before conducted a moving picture theater. He took over the Tabor after several weeks of operation of its successful operation by Peter McCourt. The policy of showing only big features with a minimum admission charge of 25 cents will be continued.

William B. Hene who has been manager of the house for McCourt will continue in the same capacity for the time being at least. The Tabor has just completed a two weeks run of the "Unwritten Law." No picture is shown for less than one week.

Subrenters Caught Through Labels.

Denver, Colo.—A flagrant case of sub-renting of films has been discovered by exchange men in Denver. A Nebraska exhibitor who has been served through Denver offices and who has given local managers more grief than all of the other patrons on account of delays in returning films, has been caught sub-renting pictures to exhibitors in nearby towns and a warm session is in store for him.

The scheme was discovered through express labels that the exhibitors had failed to remove from the shipping cases before returning the films. When the parties to whom the pictures were sub-rented were in on the plan and divided the expense of one rental for two or three shows, or whether the exhibitor who did the sub-renting reaped the harvest alone has not been definitely ascertained.

However, the exchange managers have followed bills for the amounts that would have rightly come to them through the proper renting of films, and have served notice on the guilty party that his place will be attached unless he retracts.

Theater Changes Hereabouts.

Douglas, Wyo.—W. J. Butler has almost completed work on his new theater and expects to be showing moving pictures regular before July 1st.

Thermopolis, Wyo.—Otto Schmidt late of Basin, Wyo., sold one theater and bought another. He disposed of his interest in the Big Horn theater at Basin to G. H. Edgerton and immediately purchased the new Opera House at Thermopolis. The latter will also be named the Big Horn and will make a feature of high class pictures.

Breybul, Wyo.—This city has one new theater and another is in course of construction. The Amusement Hall which has been used by road shows and for dances and amusements of various sorts has been taken over by J. C. Preston and turned into a moving picture theater. Liebrecht and Bickert have started work on a $5,000 photoplay house which they expect to have in operation by the middle of July. The new theater will be known as the Breybul.

Lusk, Wyo.—W. L. D. Beedy, owner of the Opera House at Lusk, has sold out to J. C. Manning. He will continue to show pictures in the theater.

PRAIRIE STATE NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Theater Changes in Nebraska.

KEARNEY, NEB.—The Crescent theater will be replaced by a $15,000 moving picture theatre to be erected by Fred G. Keens.

Waco, Neb.—Smith & King sold the moving picture theater here to Harry Hedrick.

Theaters and Changes in Iowa.

La Porte City, Ia.—H. I. Salmon, of this city, has purchased the Royal theater at Albert Lea, Minn.

Waterloo, Ia.—Nick Webber sold the Crystal theater at 212 East Fourth street to Wm. McIntosh.

Gilmore City, Ia.—The partnership of Willard & Keck has been dissolved and Keck is now sole owner of the Cozy theatre.

Mystic, Ia.—Manager Charles Fuller, of the Gem theatre, will erect a new theatre. Sac City, Ia.—Frank G. Smith and Claude J. Miller will operate a moving picture airdome here this summer.

Wapello, Ia.—H. C. Wittman, formerly manager of the American theater in Muscatine, has purchased the Gem theater here.

Sheldon, Ia.—B. C. Boggs, of Anthon, Ia., has purchased the Harvey theater. He will be assisted in the management by J. A. Bernard, of Anthon.

Shenandoah, Ia.—L. D. Hall has sold the Zenith theater to H. B. Holdridge, of Madison, S. D.

SAN FRANCISCO NEWS.

Northern California Notes.

Lindsay, Cal.—F. H. Smith of the Empress theater has opened a fine airdome for the summer.

Porterville, Cal.—Howell Bros. have equipped an airdome for the summer months and will occupy this until the house now in course of erection is completed. The cooling system to be installed in this will make the use of an airdome unnecessary in the future.

Exeter, Cal.—The Una theater will be closed for the summer shortly and will be made of a fine airdome. The latter has brick side walls and is a very attractive place.

Visalia, Cal.—The American airdome will be opened shortly with moving pictures and vaudeville. The walls of this airdome are covered with advertisements, but forest effects have been produced with these, making the setting quite artistic.

Lindsay, Cal.—F. G. Hyde, an exhibitor of this place, was injured recently in a mine explosion and nearly lost his eyesight.

Hayward, Cal.—The Hayward theater has been closed and important alterations will be made by F. F. Madsen, the proprietor. The house will also be renovated throughout and new draperies installed.

Pinoie, Cal.—M. Therassy, who conducts a theater at Richmond, Cal., is equipping a large house here, the projection equipment being furnished by Walter Preddey, of San Francisco.

Pittsburg, Cal.—S. Enea, who conducts the Palace theater, has purchased a Powers Cameragraph No. 6 B. from G. A. Metcalfe of San Francisco.

Stockton, Cal.—The Grand theater has been sold by M. D. Serrano to W. T. Metcalf.

Yreka, Cal.—White's theater will be closed during the summer season, except for two nights each week.

Globe Film Exchange Moves.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Globe Film exchange, conducted by H. H. Lichtenstein, which has been located for the past two years on the third floor of the Pantages theater building, has removed to better quarters on the fourth floor of that building. New shelving and fixtures have been installed and the exchange is now in better shape than ever to serve its customers.

California Motion Picture Company Activities.

San Rafael, Cal.—The photographic work on "The Woman Who Dared" has just been completed, with the greatest stage set ever made by this concern, and the task of assembling the big production for its trade showing at the new Rialto theatre, New York City, will be rushed. Otis Skinner, who was recently at San Francisco in "The Cock of the Walk," visited San Rafael while here and accepted in residence in which will be during the production of "Kismet."

Another Frisco Theater?

San Francisco May Have Another Immense Theater on Market Street, Between Fifth and Sixth—Will Have Seating Capacity of 3,000 Persons—Protests Against It Have Been Made, But Backers Expect the Permit.

By T. A. Church, 1307 North St., Berkeley, Cal., Special Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—If present plans are carried through, and official sanction can be secured, another great theater will rise shortly in the amusement center of the city on Market street between Fifth and Sixth streets. D. M. Fraser recently had plans prepared for a large house on Stevenson street, a thoroughfare running parallel to Market, and has asked for a permit to construct a covered bridge over this narrow street to secure an entrance from the main artery of the city. It is the plan to erect a moving picture and vaudeville house with a seating capacity of more than 3,000 and to use the Empire theater, a five cent moving picture house, as an entrance and lobby. This lobby would be almost two hundred feet in length and would be on an easy grade from Market street, passing over Stevenson street at a height of sixteen feet.

Upper Market street theater and property owners feel that such an arrangement would greatly upset property values and have appeared at the Board of Street and Building committee to protest against the granting of a permit for this bridge. Sid Grauman, manager of the Empress theater, appeared before these committees of the Board of Supervisors recently with a long petition signed by property owners and merchants in this block protesting against such action being taken, but the petition was turned down as the Supervisors recommended that the permit be granted.

Paramount Releases Catalogued.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Progressive Motion Picture Company has just issued a splendidly illustrated catalogue of three hundred and thirty pages of all its Paramount releases and is now distributing this among exhibitors in the Pacific Coast states from its exchanges at San Francisco, Los Angeles and Seattle. The publication is in great demand as the same illustrates the advertising matter available, even the heralds being reproduced.

World Closes Big Contracts.

San Francisco, Cal.—M. E. Cory, manager of the local branch of the World Film, reports a heavy volume of business of late on Brady-made pictures some of the contracts signed being among the highest ever made for films here. The Turner & Dahkner circuit has taken these for its Tirolli theater here and its T. & D. houses at Portland, Oakland, San Jose, Reno and Watsonville, first runs being secured for each place. Charles Godard of Sacramento, Cal. has contracted for these pictures in the Capitol City and after the first of September will be able to show them in his fine 1,700 seat house now in course of construction.

Large Film Stock Moved.

San Francisco, Cal.—The George Kleine and Kleine-Edison releases handled for the past year by Sol. L. Lesser have been taken over by the local George Kleine office recently established at 288 Golden Gate avenue and this place now presents a very busy appearance. As the accumulation of films and advertising matter had become quite extensive the task of moving proved to be quite a strenuous one as can be attested to by office manager F. E. McCoy.

Mutual Manager Visits Studios.

San Francisco, Cal.—X. K. Stout, manager of the local branch of the Mutual, made a short trip to the southern part of the state recently accompanied by Mrs. Stout, following a visit here by S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing company. After spending a short time at Los Angeles a trip was made to Santa Barbara by automobile and the studios in that vicinity inspected.

Country Exhibitors Visit City.

San Francisco, Cal.—During the past week a number of exhibitors from interior cities have been here to arrange for summer service and exchanges have done an increased volume of business.

H. D. Hubbard, of the Photo Play theater, Callagosta, Cal. was here a short time ago arranging for the opening of his airdome and was given a special review of "Carmen," featuring Geraldine Farrar, which was booked for the opening attraction.

J. B. Barnard of Niles, Cal., whose theater is within a half a block of the Essanay studio, which is now closed, was also a recent visitor here, as was John Di Stasio of Sacramento.

Other visitors were M. Schuhmann of the Gem theater, Pleasanton, who booked the Paramount program, and Mrs. Viola Rice of White's theater, Salinas, who is showing Paramount pictures five days a week.

Pictorial News Proving Popular.

San Francisco, Cal.—The popularity of the Pathe News here is steadily growing and the Rialto, Tirolli and Hippodrome theaters are all featuring first runs, quite a showing for the downtown district. The latter house has booked the Pathe serial "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" and this has started off to a flying start.

San Francisco Briefities.

The Royal Feature Producing Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $7,500 by V. S. Jones, M. P. Hansen and W. H. Kiler.

Winter's theater, a new house at Templeton and Mission streets, has been opened by Charles Moser with a Paramount and select feature service.

C. L. Williams, head of the C. L. Williams Company, Mechanics bank building, has been seriously ill but has recovered sufficiently to be able to attend to his duties again.

H. S. Levin, the well known San Francisco exhibitor, has purchased the theater at San Mateo, Cal. formerly conducted by the late Charles Hart.

Mrs. Mabel C. Boody, formerly with Balboa, has opened a Marinello shop in the Field building.

E. H. Emick, of the Peerless film service, is preparing to make a trip to Los Angeles again shortly and will visit exhibitors on the way. He has been making these trips so frequently of late that he might almost be classed as a commuter.

O. V. Traggard of the Union Film & Supply Co. is awaiting the arrival of the first Tom & Jerry releases, having made extensive arrangements to introduce these here.

Harry Hunter, formerly manager of the branch of the Union Film & Supply Co. at Los Angeles, was here recently from Portland, Ore., and has gone to Butte, Mont. to open a film exchange.

P. Courneen, formerly of the local office of G. A. Metcalfe, has been sent to the Seattle branch of this supply house.

The Lyric theater, Fillmore street has dropped its vaudeville and is now showing moving pictures exclusively.

Censors in Oregon

Portland Body Considered by Exhibitors to Be the Nucleus of Censorship in Beaver State—Portland Censors Circulate Reports to Tributary Towns—New Boards Formed.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore., Special Correspondent.

PORTLAND, ORE.—This city is considered by the state's exhibitors as containing the nucleus of the censorship in Oregon. So-called reform bodies in the smaller cities send to the state's metropolis for censorship data and the Portland censors supply the other censor boards of the state with lists of its condemnations and eliminations.

Within the past few weeks a new board has been established at McMinnville and reform organizations are demanding a censor board at Corvallis. Each of these towns have but two theaters. The McMinnville board consists of three women and two men and exists by virtue of a new city ordinance. The members journeyed to Portland on May 30th and consulted with F. T. Richards and Mrs. E. B. Colwell, chairman and secretary, respectively, of the Portland board. The McMinnville board then went back to the valley town and blossomed forth armed with elimination blanks similar to those used by the Portland body and committed to censor pictures. The Pathe brand was the first affected. A misunderstanding arose as to what the Portland board had told the McMinnville body its opinion was of "The Iron Claw," and the latter body received rough handling by the new censors until the misunderstanding was cleared away. The McMinnville board was set upon condemning a picture in the "Who's Guilty" series until R. J. Sperry, manager of the Portland Pathe office, made a flying trip to the valley town and convinced the censors their action was too drastic. The compromise ruling of the board was the elimination of about 200 feet of film. Roy Madden, road man for Mutual, also made a trip to McMinnville to treat with the new board.

The Portland censor board has on its mailing list the censor boards at Medford, Ashland, Salem, Pendleton, Eugene and McMinnville.

Sunset Reopens.

Portland, Ore.—After being closed for two weeks for alterations in the lobby, the Sunset theater opened June 4, again under the ownership of J. A. Jennings, who remodelled the house two years ago. E. M. Loy, former booker at the Metro exchange, is manager of the house. The policy will be straight first run pictures at 5 and 10 cents.

Newcomers.

Portland, Ore.—Leonard Clark, former booker at the General Film Exchange, and now with Universal, is a happy father. The reason is an eight-pound boy born June 2. It is highly proper that this event should be given space in these columns as the marriage of Mr. Clark to Mary Damain, then stenographer at the G. F. office, was also chronicled herein about a year ago. Verily, time doth pass.

Jimmie Cassell, who edits the photographic column of the Portland Oregonian, is also a happy father. The event came to pass about the same time as Mr. Clark's.

Lunch Still Interesting.

Portland, Ore.—The weekly luncheons of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association are still well attended. The newest member to be inducted into the organization is M. C. Leonhart, of the T & D. The initiating ceremonies in his case consisted of making him pay for his own lunch.

The deceptive titled one-day-of-rest-insensate law is still receiving the attention of the association, and present at the luncheon of June 1 was Dan Kelleher, president of the Independent Retailers Association, who are leaders in the fight against the measure.

New Enterprises in Idaho.

Boise, Idaho.—A new air dome opened here May 27. The seating capacity is 850. Manager Mitchell of the Liberty theater and Liberty gardens also operates the air dome.

Emmett, Idaho.—A theater seating about 800 will be erected here.

Will Change Twice a Week.

Portland, Ore.—The T & D, Portland's largest photoplay house, has changed to a twice a week change policy. Manager Leonhart stated the reason for the change was that the film market had so adjusted itself that two good programs weekly were now available. The T & D has signed up for World pictures commencing June 21.

Changes in Portland Managers.

J. V. Lynn, recently road man for Universal, has become publicity manager for the Peoples Amusement Company and will handle publicity for the Peoples and Pickford theaters. Mr. Lynn had previously occupied a similar position at the Peoples.

Lester Fountain, who opened the A & H Hippodrome and made the house a phenominal success from the first day, has returned to Los Angeles where he is manager of the local A & H house. Walter C. Smith, manager of the Speckles Hippodrome, San Diego, has been transferred to Portland and arrived June 2 to take charge of the Hippodrome here.

Travelling Visitors.

Portland, Oregon.—Ira J. Dodge, manager of the George Kleine offices in Seattle, was in Portland recently in the interests of "Gloria's House of Mystery." He has a volume of business on this picture and has booked it at the Pantages in Tacoma and Spokane. He reports that E. J. Donnellan, formerly manager of the S. & C. Empress in Seattle, has become traveling solicitor for Kleine, working out of the Seattle office, and will book the Billie Burke picture on the road.

W. C. Ryner, manufacturer's representative for Melies, was a recent visitor looking over the field for Knickerbocker features and Vim comedies and made his headquarters at the General Film exchange while in Portland.

Local Briefs.

Portland, Ore.—F. M. Simpson closed with Edwin James the Majestic to show E & R Jungle films in that house.

Portland, Ore.—J. R. Harrington, manager of the Universal exchange in Seattle, and Wm. Potter, manager in Spokane, attended a meeting of the Pacific Northwest managers here recently.

Stayton, Ore.—O. P. Leslie has sold the Star theater to Chas. S. Clark.

Portland, Ore.—The censor board's report for May shows no condemnations in 703 reels viewed, but 24 eliminations were ordered.

Spokane Considers City Censor Ordinance

Council May Pass Law Giving Power to Some City Official to Censor Both Pictures and Theatrical Acts.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—An ordinance creating the office of a city censor for moving pictures and other theatrical productions has been presented to the city commissioners by Commissioner F. K. McBroom, because he now lacks authority to prosecute violators of present city regulations on pictures or acts.

The ordinance followed the presentation in Spokane of a couple of alleged "shady" productions, one a picture without regard to eliminations ordered by the National Board of Review. The proposed ordinance imposes a fine of not to exceed $100 for managers to which may be added 30 days in jail for one or misleading statements with reference to pictures to be shown. The ordinance was given its first reading and many objections were entered by members of the Theatrical Managers' Association.

Following a star chamber session of moving picture exhibitors and Commissioner McBroom the latter said. "The gist of the remarks of the managers was that they have always been good and carried out the suggestions of the Public Affairs department, and the proposed ordinance is entirely unnecessary. The ordinance did not suit some of them and they wanted it out of our place. At one vaudeville house last week the performance was rotten, and one of the acts indulged in much unnecessary profanity during a drinking scene. I went to the theater on night and told the manager to stop the performers from using bad language and he promised to do so. When I went again the next night the same thing was going on as if nothing had happened. One of the picture houses the recommended eliminations of the national board were not made after they had been ordered. We do not want to hurt anybody's business, but these people have got to obey the rules."

Commissioner Argall presented an amendment which would give the city censor, created under the proposed ordinance, the right to bar a picture which tends to incite race riot or race hatred, or that shall represent or purport to represent any hanging, lynching, burning or placing in a position of ignominy any human being, the same being incited by race hatred. "After the European War," he said, "there were a number of motion pictures taken by one side or the other which will tend to arouse prejudices against one or more of the nations now in conflict."

Street Parade Film Case Settled.

A. B. Hager, of the Hager Amusement Enterprises, Idaho Falls, Idaho, and who operates the Orpheum theater there, has finally settled his suit, started almost a year ago, to recover damages for having his moving picture camera and some reels destroyed by the chief of police and deputies during a round-up parade. Manager Hager says: "I wish to state that the case was set for May 11 in the district court, but the trial was postponed. The parties whom I was suing opened negotiations and were willing to compromise, they paying me a sum of money to have the case withdrawn, which we did."

An Idaho Falls paper says: "The much talked of case of Al Hager of the Orpheum and Rex theaters versus Dow Williams, president of the War Bonnet Round-Up, and J. H. Hansen, chief of police, has been amicably settled to the satisfaction of all parties concerned."

Spokane Brevities.

W. Potter, manager of the Spokane Universal Film exchange, recently returned from Portland where he attended a meeting of the managers of the Spokane, Seattle and Portland houses, to confer relative to business. He reports business brisk in his territory.

Miss Lucille Zintz, of this city, has been selected winner of the recent contest and will be afforded a chance to be a motion picture star with the World Film company.

Priest River, Idaho.—J. Edward Feist has opened the Strand moving picture theater here and is running Mutual pictures.

Spokane, Wash.—A. R. Patton, traveling representative of the Mutual Film Corporation exchange, has returned from a several weeks' trip over the territory and reports that business is generally good.

Thompson Falls, Mont.—Carter Brothers at Thompson Falls have sold the Rex theater to H. H. Lux.

BRITISH COLUMBIA NEWS.

Moving Pictures in the Trenches.

Edmonton, Alberta.—A letter received by a local paper from the chaplain of the 49th Battalion of Edmonton, now in the firing line in France, conveys the information that the band of the 49th is engaged regularly in supplying the music for a picture show which has been established in a large tent, slightly to the rear of the trenches. Two shows are given each evening, and this tent is on a circuit with several others of a similar nature. Power for the projection machine is derived from an old ammunition mechanical transport. Calgary, Alberta.—Another interesting letter just received from the trenches was written by a Strathmore boy, who had the shock of his life one evening while in one of the moving picture tents which are such a factor in the entertainment of the soldiers. Among the pictures shown were several views of the Strathmore district, which he recognized immediately, and then followed other scenes in which appeared several of his friends. This film was made about four years ago by representatives of an English company, who were in this country securing scenes of Canadian farm life.

Worth a Passing Glance.

Winnipeg, Man.—Manager Seamans of the Strand theater donated his entire net receipts on two recent days to the 15th (Scandinavian) Battalion. Recruiting speeches have been given at the Strand every evening for some time past, in an effort to secure additional men for the 15th.

Vancouver, B. C.—The British Columbia Electric Railway Company has recently put out a set of films demonstrating the many uses of electricity on the modern farm. These pictures were shown a short time ago at Chilliwack, B. C., under the auspices of the board of trade, and an explanatory lecture was given by G. Porter, chief electrical engineer of the company.

Vancouver, B. C.—A. D. Kean of Kean's Canada Film Exchange is the first comedy ever produced in Vancouver at the opening of the bathing season, May 20, recruiting principals and superns from the ranks of the Vancouver Amateur Swimming Association. The picture was shown at the Dominion theater during the week following, and on the opening night the members of the club attended in a body.

H. J. Allen Visits.

Vancouver, B. C.—H. J. Allen, in charge of the Calgary office of the Famous Players Film Service, was in Vancouver recently ahead of the British government's ten-reel war picture, "Britain Prepared," which will be shown at the Orpheum for the week of May 23 at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.00. Manager James Pilling reports a very gratifying advance sale for this engagement.

After a few days spent in Vancouver and Victoria, Mr. Allen returned to Calgary.

To Break I. A. T. S. E.?

Vancouver, B. C., Theater Managers May Combine to Eliminate All Union Operators—Complain That Union, for Its Own Purposes, Spreads Alarming Reports of Dangers in Booths and Frightens Patrons.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C., Special Correspondent.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—A particularly drastic action is about to be taken by a large proportion of the exhibitors of this city, affecting their relations with the operators' union, and individually, with the members of the Vancouver Local No. 348, I. A. T. S. E. As given to the Moving Picture World representative by J. B. Dewees, managing director of the Rex Amusement Company, Ltd., operating the Rex theater, the plan contemplates the elimination of all union operators employed in the theaters which have entered into the agreement, and the substitution of non-union men. In some local houses non-union operators are at present employed, and these will of course not be affected by the change; but those who are members of the labor organization will be notified that if they wish to retain their position they must get out of the union forthwith. In any case, states Mr. Dewees, some of the men who have been considered agitators will be dismissed, and others given their places.

Complaint of the Managers.

The particular objection to the union lies in the stress they are stated to have laid on the dangers attending the work done by operators, and the consequent effect of these statements on the minds of the public. "After the manufacturers and exhibitors have spent untold thousands of dollars in educating the public to the absence of danger which exists in a moving picture theater," says Mr. Dewees, "and in providing elaborate safety appliances in making conditions so that it is practically impossible for an accident which would injure any member of an audience to happen, the operators have continued to spread alarming reports of the dangers attending the exhibition of films. Not only was this emphasized at the recent hearing in the Victoria relative to the proposed amendment to the Licensing Picture Act, but the operators' union has even caused to be published in the local paper an article along the same lines. Our contention is that when the members of an organization exaggerate the dangers of the business that it is supporting them, and in that way affect the prosperity of those engaged in the industry, they are a menace to the business, and should be put out of it." He also ridicules the contention that a long term of apprenticeship is necessary before a man is competent to operate a projection machine.

Mr. Dewees stated that the matter of safety does not involve the projection machine, and that no reduction is contemplated. Neither is there any intention of employing returned soldiers as operators. The sole object is the elimination of the union's control of the operating rooms.

Union's Interest in Legislation.

At the latest meeting of the Vancouver Theatrical and Labor Council, J. L. Delegate Thomas of the Moving Picture Operators' Union called the attention of the council to the impending change, and charged that the reason for the move was that the operators had interested themselves in the legislation consulting applicants for operators' licenses to pass a practical examination. He stated that he had knowledge that all houses in the city had agreed to do away with union operators, and included in the list of houses. It is not thought that there will be any change at the Pantages theater, however, and Manager James Pilling of the Orpheum has definitely decided to continue with union men.

wife of one of the members of the Permanent Players stock organization at the Dominion theater, has been adjudged the Canadian winner of the "Beauty and Brains Contest" conducted jointly by the World Film Corporation and the Photoplay Magazine. She is the only one to be selected from Canada, and will leave for the United States in the near future to take up her new work, accompanied by her husband, who has also decided to enter the photoplay field.

"Secret of the Submarine" Coming.

Vancouver, B. C.—C. R. Dipple states that great interest is being shown by local exhibitors in the American new serial, "The Secret of the Submarine," the first episode of which is expected here about the middle of July. Special advertising matter has been prepared for Canada under the direction of C. B. Price, general manager, and the nature of the subject should guarantee big business with the picture throughout the Canadian territory.

Pictures to Pay for Prohibition.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Macdonald Prohibition Act, which went into force on July 1, has brought about a very serious financial problem which promises considerable trouble before it is finally solved. With prohibition in effect, there will be a loss of more than $250,000 annually in public revenues, and in an effort to find some way of raising at least a part of this, a heavy tax on places of amusement has been proposed. Strong opposition to this plan is being voiced, but so far there is no assurance that the theaters will not be burdened with a large additional tax.

What Manager Groves Turned In.

Regina, Sask.—The last of the Sunday concerts promoted by Manager Barney Groves to swell the funds of the 195th Battalion was given on a recent Sunday evening, when the collection amounted to $104.50 at the Regina theater. This brings the total amount realized from these entertainments up to $1,015.55, and Mr. Groves has earned the lasting gratitude of every member of the battalion. Numbers were given by the 195th orchestra, the battalion male chorus, and various individual performers.

First Run Features at Rex.

Vancouver, B. C.—The enterprise of W. P. Dewees of the Rex theater in acquiring first run privileges for the leading brands of comedy, is exciting considerable comment in Vancouver. The Rex has just finished a successful three-day run of "Charlie Chaplin's Burlesque in Carmen," secured through the Big Four office in Seattle, and next comes "The Floor-Showers," given by the new Mutual Chaplins, with the last of the Essanay Company's productions featuring the perennial Charlie ("Police") to follow. In addition to all these features, the Rex has first run on all the "Triangle-Keystones," showing two of these each week. The "Carmen" burlesque was run in conjunction with Keystone's "Stolen Magic," and did capacity business.

Crowded houses were also the rule at the Globe theater, where "Carmen" was shown for three days following the Rex engagement, and the World man found Manager Creighton in the box office wreathed in smiles. All the productions mentioned are booked for second run at the Globe.

Stories of the Films

General Film Company ESSANAY.

THE GIRL AT THE CURTAIN (Two parts—June 20)—The cast: Warren Bradley (Francis X. Bushman); Mary Burns (Beverly Bayne).

To Warren Bradley, a young attorney, half of an immense fortune has been provided for marry a distant relative, a girl he has never seen. He is content, but, it seems, the girl is not. Mary Burns, a pretty country school teacher, refuses even to see him. Reverses, however, make her agree. She insists that she be married with a curtain between, so that neither shall see the other.

They separate immediately. Later she decides to get first-hand experience as a business woman and goes to work as stenographer for Warren Bradley under an assumed name. After a few months Bradley discovers his marriage, having fallen in love with the stenographer. She returns the affection but thinks he is in love with a society woman. When he dictates a letter to Mary Burns asking her to divorce him, she can stand it no longer and reveals her identity. Warren tells her the real reason for wanting a divorce and both are happy.

THE FABLE OF THE UNDECIDED BRUNETTE (June 21)—A dark-eyed maiden was being rushed by two candidates, one a cheap man, the other a provider. The cheap man has trench broke and could be kept busy changing the records on the phonograph. The provider was a financial featherweight. The brunette was in a state of indecision, making a choice. She could not bring herself to lean against a stingy old man who never unbuckled. If it must be, she would give her everything he owned, but what he owned you could put in a steamer trunk. Auntie's advice was to settle to center her affections on some tractable person who was neither a prospective pauper nor a close-fisted cat. Brunette falls desperately in love with general manager of sex habits and calm, un-theoretical generosity, who put things on a business basis.

Moral: It is necessary to make a few purchases both before and after marriage.

VITAGRAPH.

STUNG (June 19)—The cast: Hopper (Stanley Dark); Anita (Lillian Burns); West (Templar Saxe); The Boss (Charles Eldridge). Written by Stanley Dark. Produced by Wally Van.

"Putting one over" on his friends is hubby's particular hobby. Such jokes as allowing a friend to break his teeth on a wooden sandwich and frightening nervous old women by making their plates dance mysteriously before them are his usual style. When a rich old aunt calls at his house, preparatory to making her will, he drives her to a neighbor's for pranks. Then he thinks of a capital joke—by placing a love letter in his pocket he causes her to believe that he has an admirer. Wife recognizes in this one of her husband's witticisms and decides to call a halt. Rushing him to his room, she confronts him with the evidence, then snoots herself and falls over, apparently lifeless. When hubby sees the tragic result of his joke, he is anxious to end his life. When his wife comes back to life mysteriously and makes him see that the joke is on him.

CURFEW AT SIMPTON CENTER (June 23)—The cast includes Otto Lederer, George Kunkel, Webster Campbell, Jack Adams, Florence Vidor. Author, Edwin Ray Coffin. Producer, William Wolbert.

"Children under sixteen must be in bed when the curfew rings at nine, or, b'gosh, I'll run 'em in."

"en in." This is the edict of the new constable at Simpton Center. Wrote the constable of the town plan a "school girl" party they pay no attention to this order. The women at the party all dressed as school girls and, at a fine time, while their husbands at home are enjoying themselves over the cards and a cold bottle of beer.

Long after the curfew has tolled the hour they start for home, but the hawk-eyed constable insists on arresting them under the new curfew law. After a night in jail their husbands, who are very sorry for them, are able to get them stable that their wives are really over sixteen, and they are released, but the experience sets their hubby back one ten-dollar bill for one night's lodging.

WOULD YOU FORGIVE HER? (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—June 24)—The cast: Eleanor Baine (Miss Leah Baird); Frank Trux (Arthur Cosine); Walter Paxton (Jack Ellis); City Editor (Van Dyke Brooke). Author, Dodd Crane. Producer, Mr. Van Dyke Brooke.

Trux, a reporter, arriving on the scene of the murder of the wealthy Paxton, is caught in the carpet at the murdered man's feet, and, knowing this as the secret means of entrance to the optimum life, he decides to hide it to follow up the clue. He phones his paper, giving the details of the case, but withholding the story for a later issue. He gives a "scoop" later on. On his way to Chinatown to visit Fon Too he stops for a moment to see his fiancée, who is in the department store where she is employed, but is told that she has not appeared that morning. Worried, he goes to her home, but finds her there more than that she has not been since the previous day.

Reluctant to abandon the search for Eleanor, he is forced to do so when his editor demands a better story on the Paxton murder. He goes to Fon Too, who he has known, and finds him jade and, by force, wrings from him the fact that Paxton brought Eleanor there the previous night. He insists, however, that she had escaped, and he knows where she is. Seeing that the Chinaman is telling the truth, Trux wastes no time on him, but arrives once more for Eleanor's home, hoping to find a clue to her disappearance. On his arrival he finds that Eleanor is already there, but at first she refuses to see him.

He forces his way into the room, and, once inside, she tells him the story of how Paxton, through married and honest means, got her at the store. From time to time he asked her to lunch or for a drive with him and was irritated at her continued refusal. Then, the night before, while walking through a dark street, she was set upon by two men, chloroformed, and woke up in Fon Too's opium den. Here, still obstinate, she was given the choice of going to Paxton or Fon Too, and, having no recourse, she chose the lesser evil by accepting Paxton. Then she escaped and took a silent vow to be avenged on the brute who forced her to marry him. She was waiting for Paxton came into his office, she was waiting for him and shot him dead. At first she insisted on his death, but when he is willing to give herself up, for in so doing she will be helping many other girls in the same predicament. Paxton's wife comes to her out of her grief, though she thought that all was over between them after her disgrace, he still loves her, and she almost recompenses her for all her suffering.

UNMASKING A RASCAL (Episode No. 10 of "The Social Pirates"—Parts—May 29)—The cast: Mona (Marin Sals); Mary (Ollie Kirby); Fuller, a banker (Frank Jonnsson); Duke (L. D. Duple); Holm (L. D. Duple); Stakes (R. L. Dell). Director, James W. Horne.

Fuller, the banker, when in Holden's cabaret, is Wentworth, a man about town. The plight of his ward whom he has defrauded marks him for the justice of Mona and Mary. When comes "professional introducer" at the cabaret, and arranges matters so that Fuller, as Wentworth, becomes acquainted with the girl from the country. The acquaintance ripens, and one day Fuller makes a statement which Mary prefers to receive as a proposal of marriage, and her lover, who takes the banker's breath away. Mona, as has been prearranged, arrives at that moment and Mary joyfully announces her engagement. Fuller is dumfounded, for he knows that Mona has knowledge of her real identity. Still, the former friend of the girls posing as a reporter, is worked into the climax that results in a brisk fight between the two parties, which ends with Mona and Mary recovering the amount of which Fuller has defrauded his ward.

A BUNCH OF FLIVERS (May 30)—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); Norma (Norma Nichols); the Swami (A. Edmonson).

Ham has at last found a job—and he really works it. The mysterious Stranger, a Hindu mystic, endows him with power to win Norma. Bud, without the aid of the mysterious Stranger, is in strong with Norma and takes her in a canoe for a spin on the lake. But the Mysterious Stranger has the goods, for, to and behold, Ham, pushing the motor boat, is seen, actually, to walk out of the water and across the lake in pursuit of Bud and Norma. He captures Norma and sets out to buy a divorce card.

Bud succeeds in stalling The Mysterious Stranger's package of all-powerful pills. From then on he is just one knock out from another for Ham, for each one he purchases ends in smithereens. As long as he has $1.98 left he can keep on buying. As the money runs out, the bottom of the trouble you can imagine the fate in store for Ham when he finally sets out with the money. He is seen, actually, to walk out of the wheel. It's a riotous, breath-breaking ride, and finally ends when the car, Ham, Bud and Norma all race off the side of the pier.

Previously, Col. Ashton, an elderly friend of the Thorne family, has proposed to Alma and has been rejected.

Despite the objections of her friends, Alma remains steadfast in her determination to wed Jack Rodney, and the wedding is celebrated. Friends gather for the ceremony, and as the minister is about to say the words that will unite Jack and Alma in the bonds of holy matrimony, Louis, brother of Jack, appears. "This wedding can never take place," he says. As his younger brother swoons from the shock the elder brother carries Jack away.

Later the boy dies, and Alma, grief-stricken, swears to be revenged on the man who has stepped between her and the man she loved. Mrs. Thorne, Alma's mother, passes away, but swears her death will not prevent her from avenging Col. Ashton, and Alma marries him.

Years pass, and Alma Ashton, now a wealthy widow, still holds the promise of revenge in her heart. She meets Louis and exerts all her feminine wiles to capture him. At last she succeeds, and there is a grand wedding ceremony, and when Rodney and his bride are left alone, the woman tells him who she is and that her vows of revenge are still burning in her time when he ruined her youthful love for his younger brother.

After he comes to understand her successful plan of vengeance he leaves her, retires to another room, and brings forth a revolver with which to end all. But she is too quick for him to live without this beautiful creature whom he has made his wife. But before he can perform his rash act the revolver slips from his trembling hands, falls upon the floor, explodes.

In an adjoining room Alma hears the explosion. She has horrid visions of having caused her husband to suicide. Too late comes a realization that she loves the man. She rushes into the room and finds Louis Rodney alive and well. He takes her into his arms.

A COLLEGE BOOMERANG (June 18).—The cast: Jean (Edith Haywood); Betty (Marguerite Grayson); Miss Preston (Inez Marcell); Prof. Grayson (Harry Benham); Written by William Robert Daly; Directed by William Robert Daly.

Jean, a young girl attending college, works her way through by making a few dollars at odd jobs. She is very popular with the boys, etc. She hears much of the coming engagement of David Grayson, a professor of chemistry in the college, and of his sister's good looks. Grayson arrives and is attracted to Jean through sympathy. He notices she is snubbed by a companion, and he tries to get her to attend some of the classes, she gets behind in her studies. He offers to help her after school hours. One night, when Grayson is in the library to study together, Grayson considers Jean in the light of a child whom he wishes to help, not realizing that his attentions may compromise her.

Betty Marshall, a wealthy girl and belle of the school, falls in love with Grayson, and, upon his gently but firmly repulsing her advances, and having seen Jean and Grayson together, she determines to win him by a rivalry, causing her disgrace in the school. She accuses Jean of having stolen several articles from the laboratory, and she is amazed to find that Jean has access to her room and her capacity of hairdresser. Jean is unable to deny the charges, but she is so sure of her innocence that she enters the final further examinations and passes.

Thus ends the first winter ruin Jean. One night she enters the laboratory, changes the chemicals at Jean's test table, knowing that if Jean fails, the school will condemn her. She causes an explosion, and Jean Grayson in the laboratory for the last time. As she enters the laboratory, she is amazed to hear a terrific explosion, and sees Betty sink to the ground. She rushes in and at the risk of her life, she saves Betty, who, with her careless use of chemicals has caused the explosion. Betty, badly burned, but, when convalescent, she sends for Jean, and confesses that in her jealousy she was the cause of the explosion and the disappearance of the jewels.

In asking Jean to forgive her, Betty tells her that she acted on the principle that "all is fair in love and war," but had not counted on the intervention of fate to cure her of it. She is now a changed girl, and is ungenerous, and her face is radiant with happiness as the Professor draws her to him and makes her his wife.

Philip, who does not understand the silent, violent, is pulled out and dragged off to the barracks. He is brought before the paymaster, who confirms his innocence, and Philip is released. Rufe, who has been waiting for him, and realizing the extent of Marcia's affection for him, and the sacrifice it has led her to make, he releases the girl to go to her father, to be reunited and the reunion of Philip and Marcia is silencing from her. In time his regeneration is effected on the screen as the picture fades away.

RED FEATHER.

THE IRON HAND (Five Parts—May 29).—The cast: Jerry Simpson (E. Clark); Tim Nolan (Hobart Bosworth); Connors (Jack Curtis); Slim (William V. Mong); Slim's wife (Grace George); Jim's baby (Frank Newberg); Mr. Winslow (W. Harris); End Winslow (Jane Novak). Produced by Ulysses Davis.

Tim Nolan, leader of a notorious gang, and tries to ingratiate himself in Tim's favor by asking Jim the girl to stand for him to swing a big majority of votes for the coming election. But Tim refuses. Simpson plans to force Connors, who has been refused membership in the gang because of lack of nerve, is captured by Connors and tries to obtain information from him. Tim notices that Slim keeps a cool head and admires his pluck, so he talks and tells Connors to keep his hands off his friends.

Tim's gang start to pull a job, but is caught by Connors and his men, who, after a struggle, arrest Tim. Slim, who is Tim's very dependent and Tim, feeling sorry for the boy, writes to Billy to get him out. Billy is asking him to be the care of Slim's wife, as he has money in the bank and will pay him when he is free. The day that sentence comes, Connors calls on the warden and asks that he be allowed to talk with Tim. When Tim appears Connors tries to intimidate him and bully him. Tim, after explaining the situation, goes on the square, loses his patience, and seeing that Connors will not let him alone, knocks him down. The warden orders the guard to arrest Tim. The warden refuses, saying that he tried to give a free man the third degree and was punished.

Tim goes with Slim to his room and finds Slim's wife dying, a neighbor attending to the child and the sick woman. After getting the child to go to the hospital, Tim goes up on the square for the wife dies. Tim tries hard to secure work for himself and Slim, but Connors and his men then threaten every step. Some of the old gang meet the two men and urge them to go back to the old life, but Tim stands firm in his resolve to go straight, and will have nothing to do with them. Slim is a weak character and decides to join them in spite of Tim's protest.

The following evening Slim does not come home and Tim decides to look for him. So placing the baby in the coal box, he starts out. He is followed by a police officer, who with him not to bound them any longer and the officer agrees to lay off. Slim is killed in a crash. The Count, who has been waiting for him upon Tim and he is arrested. The burly policeman, however, proves his innocence.

Jerry Simpson has become Alderman of the ward and is holding a reception to welcome all his friends. He is having a dinner with Dr. Brevoort, who holds that there is nothing in this heredity criminal instinct. Dr. Brevoort declaring that he is willing to prove his statements by adopting any child or criminal prize that Simpson will produce. During the evening Tim, having become desperate, calls on Simpson asking for work, explaining that he has the baby to support. Simpson then recalls Dr. Brevoort's offer and tells Tim that the doctor will adopt the baby, which he has.

Fifteen years have passed and Tim, who has been aided by Simpson, has become a wealthy politician, is looking forward to having Slim's son, Dr. Brevoort, as a member of the majority, to live with him, according to the agreement with the doctor when he allowed him to adopt the baby. But when Dr. Brevoort, Winslow, whose father is leader of the Purty League in opposition to Tim's party. When Dr. Brevoort's son is born, Tim, who has his enemy he declares the engagement broken. Roy goes to Tim with his trouble and Tim calls him in and tells him that he is a weakling and his temper and knocks the man down, but on returning home he has a stroke of paralysis. Roy, calling on End, learns what Tim has done and is very angry, declaring that he will no longer have anything to do with him. Tim having a deep love for the boy, writes to him, enclosing a check for $25,000. Roy tears up the check and returns it to him, but lost all his money on the election, and when he sees the torn check begs Roy to let him try to win him the money. Roy and End, in company with father and Jim, find the seashore recuperating. When Roy makes known his fraud Tim announces that Winslow will eventually have to return to him. Winslow enters and asks Tim, offering as security a bunch of worthless stock. Tim laughs, but twice. After a short time, however, Tim, broken-hearted, falls with another stroke. Tim, upon awakening, finds love and appreciation ever by his side in the hearts of the young people.

THE MAN FROM NOWHERE (Five Parts—May 19).—The cast: James Herron (F. V. (Kling Sargent); Betty Herron (Irene Hunt); Hon. Dudley Ward (Joseph W. Gerard); Ruth Ward, his daughter (Helen Maitland); Larry Ward, his son (Johnny W. Auer); Alvin Gaudio (Joseph Granby); the prison warden (Frank Smith). Written by W. H. Clifford. Directed by Henry Otto.

After a two years' stay in Western mining camps James Herron returns to his Virginia home. Antonio Gaudio, a foreigner, has won the affection of Betty Herron, but when Jim is playing cards Betty writes a letter addressed to her brother, in which she promises to marry him. Herron, however, delays his departure. Arriving in the city, Jim tracks the eloping couple to a fashionable boarding house, where he eventually engages to marry the girl, one for Betty and another for himself across the hall. Jim enters and listens at the door and tries to convince her that she has no need she have no fear of scandal, as he intends to marry her the next day, while Betty insists that she has no use for him as she has a pronounced man and wife. As Gaudio tries to prevent her Jim breaks into the room. Gaudio rushes toward the window and finds Jim. Betty runs into her brother's arms. The bullet hits Betty and she falls on the floor. Gaudio makes his escape, and Jim is placed under arrest.

Jim is brought up for trial and on the testimony of the maid, who works in the Herron household, but who has been bribed by Gaudio, his sister if she did anything wrong in killing the prisoner is promptly convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment. The next day later the Governor makes an inspection of the prison where Jim is serving his life sentence. He is surprised to find that Gaudio is still in the prison and try to make their escape. Several of them make an attack on the Governor and Jim, seeing that comes to the Governor's rescue and saves his life. For a reward for his brave Jim is made a trusty. Ruth, the Governor's daughter, hears of his heroic action and, as a token of her regard for his bravery, she gives him a carrier pigeon to lighten the gloom of his imprisonment. While Jim is brooding in prison over a face he cannot forget, the man who murdered his sister decides to return to America, having spent the intervening three years abroad. His sister, with a smart set, is married to the title of Count Lorenz. The Count, as Gaudio is now known, is a notorious card sharp, and at the same time a member of the high society and the Governor's "sporty" son, and cheats him out of all his ready cash at the card table. After he has been put into his power by accepting promissory notes.

Larry learns that the Count is a cheat and decides to consult the prison warden, who is a friend of his. On consulting the warden, the office Jim finds Larry in conversation with the warden. Presently the warden turns to Jim and tells him that at last he has a chance to see some clever card stunts for the prisoners' entertainment." Jim replied: "It has been years since I have seen a card stunt, but I can catch any sharper at his own trick." Jim learns that Larry is the brother of Ruth, who served time in prison for the same crime. Jim feels interest in him and turning to the warden suggests a plan of coming to Larry's rescue. Accordingly, under the pretext that he requires an important report, he goes to see the guard that the prisoner is not to be returned to his cell, as he will remain in his apartment for the night. The warden dresses Jim up like a gentleman of leisure, and Larry takes Jim to his house. As he is introducing him to his sister and her friends, he regards to see if he can get Jim breaks in and says, "Just call me Barrs, the man from nowhere." Jim, Ruth and Larry then go to the counting room, where they are in progress. During the ten minutes' ride Ruth decides that Mr. Barrs is quite the man for her. She looks at him and says, "I like you." Jim sees the Count dancing in the crowd and immediately recognizes him as the man who shot her mother.

At the card table that night Jim catches the Count manipulating the cards and exposes him. The Count grabs a sword from the wall and makes a lunge at Jim. Jim knocks the sword out of his hand, and, taking two swords of the equal length from the wall, he strikes the Count with a warning to defend himself, denouncing him as the murderer of his sister. Although the Count tries to knock Jim down, his master and the Count falls to the ground mortally wounded. He calls for a piece of note paper and writes a dying confession, in which he admits having killed Betty accidentally while trying to kill her brother, thus establishing Jim's innocence.

The Governor receives the confession and pardons Jim. Ruth learns of Jim's real name, and as she has been a friend of his, she has a pathetic understanding between Jim and Ruth that promises a bright future.

THE GRIP OF CRIME (June 20).—The cast: Giovanni Marro (Thomas Jefferson); Santa Marro (Lena Bakette); Glorio Colombo (Burton Law); Lieutenant Giotto (Frank Newberg). Written by Calder Johnstone. Produced by George Cochran.

Giovanni Marro, an old Italian, earns his living as a knife grinder. With him lives his little granddaughter, Santa Marro, a child of about six years of age. They are poor and Santa does all of the housework. She tries to eke out an existence by taking in boarders. One day a man, who is a member of the police, comes to the door. He is supposed to be a laborer, but is really a member of a blackmailing society which pays up the police for their protection. The police have been hot on the trail of the gang, but have been unsuccessful in getting a lead. The police have been told by the Italian detective squad is Lieutenant Giotto, a young man of keen mind and kind heart.

Glorio learns of the retirement from business and sends him a letter, asking him to plan to blackmail him. He is afraid to write any more letters himself, as the police already have several samples of his handwriting, and have not been able to prove them to be his. He therefore thinks of a scheme to make another write the letter. He writes a letter and hits upon the idea of making old Giovanni do it. When the old man refuses, Glorio tells him that if he agrees to do it, he will be a gang in the eyes of the law, as he houses them. Still the old man remains firm, but when Glorio threatens to turn him in, he agrees to write the letter.

It happens one day while Lieutenant Giotto is driving his car through the streets that he knocks little Santa down. She takes her home and meets her grandfather. A friendship is formed between the two naturally fond of children, the police officer and the little girl become chums and she frequently visits him. He is so fond of her that he calls upon her and her grandfather. Glorio meantime brings his plans to a head and the blackmailing scheme is being carried out. The rich merchant, the gang, wait for his reply. The merchant goes with the letter to the police and he is referred to Lieutenant Giotto, who advises him to place the money they demand in a package and leave it in the spot named, but to mark the bills. This is done and the money is in the hands of the police.

Giovanni is ordered by the gang to act as the go-between and bring the money back. He goes to the designated spot, finds the package of money, pockets it and starts away when he is arrested by Lieutenant Giotto and his detectives. Giovanni admits his part in the crime, but is fearful of the result if he implicates the others and declines to do so. In his favor, that he may see his little granddaughter. His request is granted and she is sent for. She begs to know why she is being arrested, but Lieutenant Giotto tells her she would not understand. She becomes very angry and declares that she will never see him again. "Mañana"—a terror known to all Italian children. She asks if he had anything to do with writing the letter and he writes a letter for her what she means. She tells him that her grandfather did it cause Glorio made him.

Questioning them that one night they overheard an argument between her grandfather and the Italians in which the old man refused to write a letter for them, and she heard them threaten him. She ran into the room, but was told that it was all a joke, and that she was not to tell anyone. The lieutenant if the plot also had to do with getting a package of money from under a rock. This is the clue to the case. Santa corroborates what the little girl said on June 20, Glorio who is soon rounded up. Under a further grilling, he confesses the whole thing. He is therefore set free as a State's witness. The gang are sent up for a long term. The police lieutenant remain friends, he seeing it that the old man and little girl want for nothing.

THE GHOST OF THE JUNGLE. (Two Parts—June 24, 1916).—The cast: Albert DeWitt (Rex de Rosselli); Anna, his daughter (Edythe Sterling); Drake, a hunter (Bud Kane); Egbert (F. D. Crittenden). Written by Allen Dils and Rex de Rosselli. Produced by Jay Hunt.

Albert DeWitt, a South African miner, has a daughter, Anna. Charles Egbert, a young prospector, passes the miner's home and meets Anna. In the course of time Egbert learns through the girl that the old man has a score of valuable rough diamonds. Egbert obtains the diamonds and runs away with them and Anna. Their father is in a bad luck, and finally goes in search of his daughter.

Egbert and the girl become lost in the jungle. He builds a small hut for temporary shelter for them, for the girl has developed a fever which grows rapidly worse. Egbert, seeing she cannot live, deserts her. After days of horrible suffering Anna dies.

A year passes. One day, while riding along the road at the foot of a cliff, a hunter and Egbert see what is apparently a wild man poised on the edge of the cliff, in the act of raising a huge rock to hurl down upon him. Just as the rock leaves his hands, the ground upon which the wild man is standing gives away and he is pitched forward and falls to the bottom of the cliff. Though unconscious, the man still lives, so Drake picks him up and carries him away to his cabin.

The fall has restored the old man's memory, which for the past few years has been an utter blank. He tells his story to Drake and his partner. It is the story of the elopement of his daughter years ago. Into the tale, Drake's partner comes a look of horrified terror as he stares at the face of the old man. We then get a flash of the old man searching for his beloved one. He is seen wandering through the jungle. Darkness overtakes him. Mournful dawns. Through worry and the terror he has experienced the old man has lost his memory and his reason. The old man makes friends with a baby leopard, a small grey, shaggy cub, who shares with the old man, even as the old man shares with the leopard what food he may himself obtain. The old man tells how that day he has been roaming about in search of food, when suddenly far below him he saw a horse and rider. Instinctively he sought to kill them. He was about to hurl a rock down upon them, when—

Here the story fades back to the scene showing the old man, with his cub, standing at the foot of the cliff, of Drake hastening to aid him and of the old man regaining consciousness. As the old man finishes his story, Egbert is seen to start with a look of guilty fear. Drake busies himself with the old man, while Egbert, casting fearful glances toward the old man, creeps over to the corner of the room and reaches out his hand for the bag of diamonds in his hiding place. But just as he is about to touch it, vision fades in, showing Anna, the beautiful, sick girl, dying of fever and thirst on the rude bed in the jungle hut. The vision fades away, leaving Egbert faint and sick with horror.

When the story is all told the old man lies back on the bed, weak and exhausted. As he lies there, there is in a vision of Mary's spirit as it appeared when leaving her body in the little hut. She reaches out her arms toward her father and weakly holds out his arms to her; then he dies. As he dies, his spirit is seen to leave his body and float toward the spirit of Anna.

Meanwhile the old man's pet leopard strikes a scent. He follows the trail down the hill; stops at the foot of the cliff where the old man has lain and finally goes to the cabin where Drake carried the old man, and then into the room where the still form is lying on the bed. The leopard jumps up on the bed and lies down beside the body of his old comrade and friend.

Egbert leaves the cabin and stumbles aimlessly along. In the path ahead of him there appears the vision of Anna's spirit, seeming to lead him over on and on to a stream, and then gets into a canoe, which is lying near the shore. As he drifts idly down the stream, the spirit of Anna can be seen floating slowly ahead of him, leading him on. A scene fades in showing a waterfall, with ragged rocks below. Then it fades out and again is shown a scene to the stream, with Egbert drifting silently and aimlessly along in the little canoe. Next morning, with the break of dawn, an upturned canoe is found on the rocks below the waterfall, and with this scene the picture closes.

"THE SCARLET MARK" (Two Parts—June 21). The cast: Allison Reeves and Wanda Travers (Mary Fuller); Mrs. Vandergrift (Mrs. J. H. Brundage); Tom Moore (Arthur V. Theatrical); Marcen (Joseph W. Girard); Jimmy (Matty Rupert). Adapted by Catherine Carr. Produced by Lucius Henderson.

Allison Reeves, a young heiress, is engaged to Tom Moore. In a luxuriously furnished apartment two crooks, Marcen and Jake, read in a newspaper an announcement that Miss Allison Reeves has retired from society owing to the death of her father. Marcen, accompanied by a picture of Miss Reeves, and the two crooks are impressed with its striking resemblance to Wanda, who is seated in another part of the room. In looking over the paper Marcen discovers an advertisement for a maid at the same address and he conceals a scheme to rob the Reeves establishment by having Wanda apply for the position. She secures the position.

Jimmy, a product of the slums, steals a bag of peanuts from a pushcart and, being pursued by a policeman, finds refuge upon the roof of an apartment near door to the residence of the Reeves family. Afraid of capture, Jimmy decides to remain in the safety zone and falls asleep. Next we see Mrs. Vandergrift, Allison's aunt, placing the Pearl necklace, given her by her niece, under her pillow before retiring for the night. Jimmy awakens on the roof and, seeing the necklace, he sees Wanda, who has been given permission to leave until the next morning, enter Mrs. Vandergrift's room. He notices that Wanda removes the pearl necklace from under the pillow and also catches a glimpse of the scene on her forearm. Then he sees her take a handkerchief with the initial "W" plainly marked on it and drop it beside the bed. She then chloroforms Miss Reeves, and has Marcen and Jake take the helpless heiress to an old hag in an East Side tenement house. The following morning the robbery in the Reeves household and the caretaker's discovery that she has disappeared, owing to the discovery of a handkerchief with the initial "W" marked in the corner.

Wanda, who is now impersonating Allison, declares that she is positive of the maid's guilt. She succeeds in deceiving Mrs. Vandergrift, but Allison, who is in the room at her and indicates that he, at least has not been deceived. Wanda, fearing the dog may eventually betray her, betrays Mrs. Vandergrift to Tom. Presently Marcen arrives and Wanda explains that he is a new acquaintance, and she is anxious to ask questions Wanda as to her success. She gives him an assortment of jewelry she has stolen, which he hides under his coat as they hear some one coming. Tom, Marcen and Wanda's face is a blank as she doesn't know Allison's name, but she has sense enough to greet him coolly.

Marcen leaves and manifests jealousy as he looks back through the portieres and sees Wanda clasped in Tom's arms. After Tom's departure Marcen returns and accuses Wanda of being in love with Tom. Tom returns for his gloves and comes upon them just as Marcen is kissing Wanda. Tom accuses her of faithlessness and demands the return of her engagement ring. Protesting to be too overcome to get the ring, Wanda promises to let him have it if he will return later, and Tom leaves in indignation. Wanda tells Marcen that the situation is growing serious, as the ring is in Allison's safe, and that he must get the combination for her at once.

The Jimmy is held for truancy and petty larceny and Tom, having offered to serve as a "big brother," is appointed to look after him. Jimmy takes Tom to the tenement house where he lives, which happens to be the very house where Allison is being held captive. Jimmy explains to his mother who Tom is and shows her the new suit she has bought for him. Marcen enters the room in the tenement, where Allison is held. He dismisses the old hag in charge of the captive and demands of Alison the combination of the safe. She refuses and while he is in a distracted state escapes through the window and happens to run into Jimmy's room, where she sees Tom. When Marcen follows her through the window she and Tom confront each other in amazement. Marcen insists that the girl is Miss Reeves' maid who stole the pearl necklace and that he has just succeeded in trapping her. Jimmy tells about the scar on the maid's arm that came from the fire escape, and Alison to prove that she is not the maid, bares her arms.

Later at the Reeves household they take Wanda by surprise while Tom, who still draws the portieres aside. Then Alison enters and Wanda realizes that the game is up, she is placed under arrest and the game played for high stakes, terminates fatally for the crooks, for after their conviction, Marcen and Alison are sent in prison. Alison sits at the bench and elsewhere in the prison Wanda is scrubbing the floor. Tom places the engagement ring upon Alison's finger as the picture fades out.

THE ROSARY (June 23).—The opening scene shows a soldier holding a string of pearls with a cross in the center. As he kisses the cross the words of the song appear on the screen:

"The hours I spent with thee, dear heart,
Are as a string of pearls to me;
I count them o'ever, every one apart,
My rosary, my rosary."

The soldier is seen bidding good-bye to his sweetheart. For the last time they embrace. The girl's mother weeps as she sees the start of duty leaving for the front. As the young officer mounts his horse and rides away the girl falls in a faint to the ground.

At the end of the words of the song appear among the leaves the trees above her:

"Each hour a pearl, each pearl a prayer,
To still a heart's unceasing wrung,
I tell each bead unto the end,
And there a cross is hung."

The month passes. The soldier is seen now at the campfire and now in battle. Always there appears before him the face of the girl he loved. And then one day he is wounded and taken to the hospital. The girl hears that he has been killed and, grief-stricken, she enters the convent. But her soldier's sweetheart finally recovers after long months of fever and delirium. And when the war ends he returns—to find that the one he loved best has taken Irrevocable religious vows.

THE FALL OF DEACON STILLWATERS (June 24).—The cast: Deacon Stillwaters (William Franey); Miss Crobar (Gale Henry); Elsie (Lillian Peacock); Jess McDuffy (Charles Conklin); McDonald (Milburn Morant); Writ ten by A. E. Bishop. Produced by Allen Curtis. The Anti-Sin League elect Deacon Stillwaters as president. When the league learns of the disgraceful illegal prize fights that are going on they decide to take the matter into their own hands and appoint their honorable president to put a stop to the shameful outrages. Deacon Stillwaters is forced to go to Ramany Hall, where these terrible fights are held. There the deacon is received with a hearty and friendly and finds Jess McDuffy, the champion a princely fellow. It is not long before he has the deacon interested in all the technicalities of the great science of prize fighting. And so enthused becomes the deacon that he is finally induced to get in the ring himself.

But it so happens that on this very night the police raid Ramany Hall. Many are caught, but the deacon manages to slip out and join among those who escape and take refuge in McGuire's cafe, one of the toughest joints in town and a place of refuge for its spicy cabaret girls. Now it also happens that on this same night Miss Crobar and other ladies of the Anti-Sin League have started a new movement for chorus girls, and begin with the girls at McGuire's cafe. They are at this time waiting in the girls' dressing room for the girls to finish their wootchie-goo-wootch dance.

Finally, the prettiest of the cabaret girls, graciously admires Stillwaters, for she admires prize fighters. She protects him from the police and the two become the best of friends. Then Miss Crobar sees the deacon at McGuire's she thinks he has come to protect her, but she

THE JAILBIRDS' LAST FLIGHT (June 21).—The cast: Jailbirds (Bill Armstrong and Gene Rogers); the little Cop (Lucille Hutton); the Girl (Carmel Myers).

The two old flirts flirted just once too often, as is always the case. They did not know that the city wherein they dwelt employed female police and ran afoul of one of them, a beauty and a courtier. The result was, however, you could not blame them, for she was a Bill got seemed such easy prey.

Bill got seemed such easy prey to start with, but Gene called a real cop and falsified with, but it was his sister that Bill was annoying and had him plucked. The judge gave Bill five years for annoying the school children.

Gene, left alone on the field, thought he was having a great time flirting with the little girl. But all the time she was leading him into a trap. Gene, poor old man that he was, followed her headlong right into the police station, where he was nabbed and sentenced to a long term. He was shoved into the "buns" cell with the other boys.

Right there the cops did wrong, for they fought like two wildcats. Bill was shoved through the wall and into the station, where the cops were playing cards. Did you know them so they started in to administer a severe drubbing to Bill, to make him stop. Bill got away and ran into the arsenal, where he lit a cigarette and blew up the place.

DIRTY WORK IN A BEANERY (June 25).—The cast: The Head Waiter (Reggie Morris); the Chef (Dave Morris); the maid (Gene Rogers); the Cashier (Gertie Selby).

The boss should have known better than to hire a pretty little maid who would maintain two amorous Frenchmen under the same roof, but he did that very thing and thereby hangs the tale. The headwaiter loved her, and bought her flowers and fruit. The chef, who was jealous of the waiter, ate the fruit and spoiled his own card amid the beautiful flowers.

This caused a little trouble and the boss arrived just in time to get into the fray and receive a few missiles on his head. The chef was given a drubbing and sent along about his duties. But being of a warm-blooded nature, the drubbing stuck in his craw and he swore vengeance. When the boss ordered a nice steak for the fair cashier the chef thought he would get even by poisoning the steak, not knowing that it was the cashier's. There was some commotion when it was found that the fair cashier had received the steak. But she was saved from a horrible death by the timely action of the head waiter.

GOLD SEAL.

THE FALSE PART (Two parts—June 30).—The cast: Herbert Rawlinson (By Himself); Dorothy Moore (Agnes Vernon); Mrs. Moore (Mrs. Ethel Clark); J. Kenneth Simpson (Jack Secor); William Worthington and Phyllis Horne. Produced by William Worthington. This story deals with moving picture life, much of the locale being around Universal City. Herbert Rawlinson, played by himself, is introduced in his dressing room and is shown later doing the usual work on the stage. One of his many admirers, with her mother, visits the studio on this particular day. She tries to get into the dressing room and Rawlinson's set, where her admiration for her favorite is shown. Rawlinson also is impressed with the young admirer.

Later the mother, becoming suspicious, happens on a photograph of Rawlinson in the daughter's dressing room. Through worry over her daughter's infatuation chances a phone call to Rawlinson, which results in an agreement between the two to discontinue the work on the plan is agreed upon and Rawlinson is to dine with the Moore family the following day. This takes place and Rawlinson on his arrival at the Moore home is greatly surprised to find the girl who so impressed him at the studio the day before.

Nevertheless he is forced by his agreement to carry out his idea and through ill manners,

NESTOR.

WANTED—A HUSBAND (June 19).—The cast: "The Husband" (Joe Janacek)—The Wife (Betty Compton); Lawyer (Neal Burns); His Girl (Ethel Lynn); the Uncle (Harry Rattenbrenner). Written by Al. E. Christie. Produced by Horace Davis.

The young husband is called from the city on business for a month. While he is gone Uncle Nestor tells his niece, the wife, that he will telegraph a certain hotel at the beach, where he wishes her to bring her husband, and if she meets with the uncle's approval he will leave them his entire fortune. If not he will cut her off. The wife is desperate, as she is anxious to secure the money. She decides to consult with her lawyer.

With offices adjoining the wife's lawyer is a young lawyer who has never had any clients. He has a sweetheart, but her mother refuses to consent to their marriage because he never has earned any money. When the wife finds that her attorney is out of town for a couple of weeks she talks to the young lawyer, explaining the situation to him and finally secures his promise to act as the husband. He accordingly tells his sweetheart that he must go out of town for a few days, which does not meet with her approval, especially after some false friend tells her that she has seen her sweetheart with another woman.

The wife and lawyer arrive at the hotel, meet the uncle, who is favorably impressed, and everything is working out nicely, although the lawyer is quite nervous. The girl, very much broken up over the lawyer's departure, decides to go to the beach with her mother and set up at the same hotel where the uncle and the others are stopping. The girl sees her sweetheart with the other woman, hears the uncle speak of him as the woman's husband and is nearly heart-broken.

Meanwhile the husband has been ordered home and finds the telegram. He immediately sets off for the beach. There is a grand scramble when all parties get together, the husband starting to shoot the young lawyer. After a long chase and much excitement the parties all get together, explanations follow and everything ends happily.

WHAT COULD THE POOR GIRL DO? (Two parts—June 23).—The cast: Jed (Eddie Lyons); Father (Harry Rattenbrenner); Mother (Stella Adams); Clarice (Ellie Rhodes); Diamond Jack (Ed. Burns); Jerry (Lee Moran). Directed by Eddie Lyons.

Jed and his father and mother live on the farm. Father tells mother do all the work. She is busy churning one day when the churn wears out and Jed is sent by his father for a new churn. On the way he meets Clarice, the safe cracker, who has decided to give up her past life and seek honest employment. He tells her story to Jed and he takes her home with him. Mother puts her to work churning and it is not long before father discovers the notice that Jed is becoming quite attached to the girl. In fact, they discover him in the act of giving her a ring.

The gang with whom Clarice had been forced to rob a safe and Diamond Dick, the leader, wants Clarice to work for him, but the men return with the note saying that she is through with that kind of life. Jack seizes her and takes her for her money, known as the "Dirty Worker," who is addicted to the use of hellebore perfume, and Jack finally discovers Clarice at the farm house and to her she must return with them. Jerry mooned Jerry sprinkles some perfume on Jed. Father has become incensed at Jed's attentions to the girl and tells her she must leave. Jed overhears this and says he will go, too, which causes quite a commotion in the family circle. As Clarice is preparing to leave, the two crooks throw a blanket over her head and take her to the hansom cab. Jed pursues them in his auto, but they manage to elude him and by force take Clarice to the vault, compelling her to open the safe. This she finally does, but locks Jack in the vault. Jed has been captured by the bank guards and runs away left with the box of dynamite in charge of one of the crooks. He manages to free himself after a battle with the crooks, dresses in his clothes and starts once more in pursuit of Clarice and arrives just in time to frighten the crooks away from the vault. However, the robbers both him and Clarice, take her back to the vault, compel her to open it, take the money and then lock Jed in the safe. The gang take the money and Clarice to their rooms and there determine to brand Clarice. Meanwhile she is trying to escape from the vault. She finally lights the fuse of the dynamite, blows open the safe and makes his escape. He gets the police and the cash is just in time to prevent Clarice being branded and the crooks are captured. The bank rewards Jed and Clarice, and they return to the "cows and chickens."

THE YOUNG SLEUTHS (June 22).—Frank is an inveterate reader of dime novels. The adventures of "Old Sleuth" afford him the greatest entertainment, and he often reads aloud to his sister, Irma. One morning, while Frank, captured and the dog are enjoying the latest adventures of "Old Sleuth" mother calls and tells Frank and Irma to go to the store.

Frank puts down the book and follows Irma. On the way to the store Frank and Irma witness a daring bank robbery. They see the thief, with a mask over his face, bang open the door of the bank and the cashier runs out with revolver in hand to notify the police. Frank and Irma hear the cashier tell the policeman the details of the robbery and they thereupon determine to capture the thief by following "Old Sleuth's" methods.

Irma cuts some hair from the dog's tail and disguises Frank with a moustache. While they are scouting around back alleys Frank sees the thief and he and Irma trail him into a cellar. Irma runs for a cop while Frank keeps driving. The cop catches the thief, but the latter's wife drives the cop off after she has turned over the money to him.

Later the crook seen the cop drinking and bumping into him, manages to snatch back the package of money. Then follows a merry chase, the crook finally escaping by jumping a fence. Irma and Frank are much surprised when they see a hand popped under the fence with a roll of money in it. Frank grabs the money and takes it to his mother.

Meanwhile the cop sees the thief, and jumps over the fence, subdues him. The crook points to the spot where he hid the money and is astounded when he finds it gone. Frank's mother comes up at this point, however, and returns the money to the police office. Then Frank's mother receives a letter from the CITY National Bank enclosing $25 as a slight token of their appreciation of the service rendered by her children.

into the woods to drink the nectar from the babbling brook.

Likewise, when artists have their troubles and have not the money to see them through, they, too, stroll into the woods, there to find inspiration. This artist's party is surely no trouble as is evidenced by the few sandwiches and other things they carry. But the Lone Man in the party—this is the artist's friend and himself—is the jester of Joy and insists that they make the best of their worries. So the party breaks up to select locations for their sketchy tendencies. Nonette, the prettiest of the party, selects a lovable nook in the fastness of the shrubbery, and here she idly sketches landscapes. She is dressed in a simple dress with ease and brush posed in strict artist fashion—and this is the picture Van Deusen took. Nonette, and when he sees her listening to the chatter of the cornput penance, his heart-strings tighten and he resolves to stop the hectic flirtation. But Nonette stops him with a hastily sketched note and the Lone Man reads the note and laughs, for he realizes that Nonette has an eye for business and her subtlety is cultivating for them a client.

The Lone Man and the other girls stroll. In on Van Deusen and Nonette. Introductions follow and the party is in the air. Billy notices the evident absence of goodies and realizes that the party must be in need of funds. Billy's sympathy goes to the aid of him and he gives a deposit on Nonette's behalf of the beautiful sunset. True, Billy's heart butters a little when he gives Nonette his card and tells her that he will be pleased to hear from her.

Nonette and her friends arrive home, are escorted by the hard-hearted landlord who insists that they pay their rent or get out. So Billy's deposit goes to the landlord's pocket and the party is no other than a failure. Realizing, however, that they can procure money from Van Deusen as soon as the sunset is finished, they all hasten to the artist's house. Billy discovers that there is no yellow paint with which to paint the sun and force in the yolk of an egg with his hands to the artist's house. The sun is quickly painted and Van Deusen informed that his masterpiece is finished. To make things more realistic, Nonette is reclining on a couch when Van Deusen arrives, and her friends inform him that it is the result of an over-exposure on the Sunset picture. Billy is sorry and pays many, many times the value of the picture, and leaves sadly but intent on recapturing the evening.

He no sooner leaves the studio than everything is supplanted with life. Billy arrives home, takes his picture on a chair and goes to unburden himself to his friend next door. While he is being refreshed, his cat admiring the sunset, sniffs the sweet scent over the mountains and preens its little picture into shape. When Billy arrives home with his friend as cannot explain the disappearance of the sun, so he goes to the studio.

He arrives in the midst of the feasting and staggers as he sees Nonette on the Lone Man's lap. Billy loudly accuses the Lone Man of having broken his heart, and likewise his pocketbook. But Nonette informs him that he had no call upon her inasmuch as the Lone Man was her poor artist husband, and her little scheme their salvation that they might continue to linger in Bohemia. Billy was fisher-gasted and about to leave, but one of the little artist maids bids him linger, while the other captures his friends by bringing a bit of a comedian himself, merely calling it an "egg-sensive adventure" and lingers.

THANHOUSER

BROTHERS EQUAL (Two parts—June 13).—The cast: The Girl (Barbara Gurney); Son of the Retired Trader (Robert Vaughn); Another Son of the Fisherman—(Thomas A. Curran); His Sweetheart—(Clayde Lane); Retired Trader (Arthur Bauer).

Heartbroken at the death of his wife, the retired trader left his infant son in the care of relatives and returned to the sea ventures of his early life to seek solace in excitement and hazard. He never returned to his son in the North; he died in a remote land, whence word of his death was later sent to his executor in the United States.

The son grew to manhood and took up the cause of socialism. To practice his theories of "Brothers Equal and the Right of Man," he bought an island in the tropics and, accompanied by his fiancée and her family, visited the beautiful spot.

Arrived at the island, the Socialist and his fiancée were delighted with the socialistic material they found in the nature of the population, and here at once the socialist began to preach his doctrine. Meantime the sister of his fiancée, a young girl, named Claire, was rescued from drowning by a handsome fisherman of the island.

The fisherman, however, was discovered to be the half-brother of the socialist, for it was to this island the trader had come on his ventures, had taken a native wife and raised a son, was a half-breed, and as such was no mate for the dainty Northern girl.

In the frothy love and elementary; the socialist soon found that in trying to restrain the fisherman's passion for the girl he had undertaken a tremendous task. He was angered, too, by the fisherman's bitter statement that his own vaunted "Brothers Equal" was but a slogan and a depth to reach a higher plane was a black man.

The socialist staunchly stood by his principles so far as he was concerned. He made preparations to divide his estate with this other son of his father, but he made it a condition that the fisherman go away without again seeing the girl. The fisherman broke his promise and was discovered on the eve of eloping. To save the matter from disclosure, the socialist told the girl the bitter truth about her lover's parentage. Horrified, the girl repudiated her lover and the socialist. The fisherman attacked the socialist, but his onslaught was interrupted by an alarm of fire.

The fisherman rushed to save some of the fire. There he gave his own life in exchange for that of his mother, whom he rescued from the flames. Dying, he turned his eyes toward the socialist and asked to be remembered only as a "Brother Equal."

GAUMONT

THE CRIMINAL'S THUMB (Three parts—June 22).—The cast: John Denham (Alexander Gaden); Claire Kenwood (Lucille Taft); Robert Royce (John Reinhard); Kara Dalton (Iva Shepard); David Reed (Charles W. Travis); Tom Carroll (Henry W. Pemberton); Louise Darront (Louise Byrd); Maggie (Matilde Baring); Joe Shook (John W. Wright); Lionel Barrymore and Wright Huntington. Directed by Edwin Middleton.

Seeing that her employer is falling in love with him, Claire Kenwood, a stenographer in the law office of John Denham, resigns. She is in love with Robert Royce, a young man who works for David Reed. Unfortunately for Claire, Royce is under the influence of Kara Dalton, an adventurous girl, a cabaret singer. Kara finds it profitable to stand in with Tom Carroll, a gambler who wields some power in the underworld. Carroll has a spatula which he will implicate the customer from that on the other. This is recognized by criminologists as the "murderer's thumb." Medical authorities say that only one person in one hundred thousand has such a thumb. The hearer is a marked man.

Things go from bad to worse with Royce. Kara is getting all his money and continually demanding more. While with her one day, he drops a letter announcing that wealthy customer, John Brewster, is coming to meet Mr. Reed. Kara turns the letter over to Carroll. As it says Brewster has never met Reed, Carroll decides that Royce will implicate the customer in the hope that he can profit by the deception.

Just before Carroll appears at Reed's office, Royce robs the safe. The door of the safe happens to be open when Carroll calls after office hours. Reed catches him at it and is astonished that his customer, Mr. Brewster, should be going through his strong box. Seeing that he has been detected, the gambler grapples with the aged merchant. The shock is too much for Mr. Reed. He succumbs to a heart disease and dies. Carroll takes the money left in the safe and gets safely away.

Royce is suspected. Despite the fact that Denham believes Royce and a hand is taken, the police believe to be a murder, the lawyer looks after the case for him because of his love for Claire. He even gets the gambler taken and places it where there can be no suspicion of Royce's theft. The clerk, however, is arrested. Denham is able to show that the thumb mark on the lawyer's collar are not those of his client. It is then that suspicion points toward the owner of the spatula thumb. Through Denham's efforts, Royce is acquitted at the trial, and Carroll is brought to justice.

JERRY'S ELOPEMENT (June 23).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Count (George George); Father (Jeffrey Gibson); Mother (Mabel Sully); Daughter (Claire Alexander); Sergeant (Louis Fitzroy); First Cop (Harry Jackson); Second Cop (George Mack); First Henchman (Arthur Munn); Second Henchman (Ray Lincoln); First Butler (Robert Keayton); Second Butler (Louis Fitzroy). Directed by Milton H. Fabray.

Jerry, without position or wealth, finds an obstacle in his efforts to win the hand of a pretty daughter of a land owner, in the person of a French Count. The girl favors Jerry, but her father, to better his position in society, insists that she accept the Frenchman. Jerry is pleading his love when the nobleman arrives. Fearing the wrath of her father, the girl receives the foreigner.

Jerry argues with the Frenchman and the latter challenges him to fight, after slapping Jerry's face with his gloves and pulling his nose. The father is attracted by the noise of battle, and when Jerry sees the man coming, he beats a retreat, followed by the girl. The next night Jerry plants his hands outside of the old man's home, writes a note, ties it to a brick and throws it through an open window. The brick strikes the father and lays him low.

The girl obtains and reads the note, which suggests they elope. She hurriedly prepares to escape from the house and join Jerry. The Count unexpectedly arrives on the scene, accompanied by two henchmen. They detect Jerry's going and as the girl comes out to meet him, she is made a captive by the Count and his henchmen, who throw a robe over her head and carry her off. Jerry follows the abductors.

In the meantime the father has regained consciousness. He telephones and a search is made for the girl and Jerry. The girl has been carried to a lonely house and cast into a deserted room, to which Jerry later gains an entrance. He is discovered by the henchmen and the Count and is lured to a position over a trap door. While he is talking with the Count the trap is sprung. Jerry lands in the cellar below.

The police arrive at the house and one by one they are sent below to join Jerry. Jerry gains the confidence of the Count and they place to get upstairs to save the girl and to capture the Count and his henchmen. They make their escape from the cellar and surprise the party upstairs. Just then the father arrives and Jerry is tempted to send him through the trap door but on second consideration decides to lead the father to his daughter and thereby gain his favor.

The reunion takes place and the police are about to depart when the Count again appears. Jerry springs the trap and the Count and his henchmen disappear. The father, realizing that the Count is of no account, turns to Jerry and places the hand of his daughter in that of the persistent suitor. Then the trio departs for the minister's house, while the Count and his henchmen are placed under arrest.

CENTAUR.

A SIREN OF THE JUNGLE (Two Parts)—June 24).—The cast: Vida (Margaret Gibson); John Cameron (William Clifford); Jan Suita, Vida's father (Frederick Montague); Tom Long (Charles Lampton); Jim Longden (Charles Ingraham). Directed by Charles Swickard.

Vida is the daughter of a Boer Jan Keoper; she is a siren and plays havoc with the hearts of the diamond miners, and others who frequent her father's tavern. She has scorned the advances of Tom Long, who, heart-broken, kills himself. His partner, Joan Cameron, a tramp of wild animal, is returning to the camp with his catch. Vida is warmer to amuse with him, as he has a rather bad record, having killed a life.

This information hot inflames her coquettish heart, and when John Cameron, furious at learning of the death of his friend, comes to the camp to berate her, she immediately practices her wiles to capture him. Cameron resists her fascinations for some time, but finally succumbs and is a slave to her wiles. He soon admits her secretly conquered, but warns her at the risk of his own life, that if she does not leave the camp, he will enter for the first time as Cameron has made her fear him.

Jim, cousin to the camp and Vida's fickle heart is finally awakened, and she finds herself in love. She persuades Jim to take her far away from the present surroundings, fearing that Cameron will kill her on his return from the hunt, finding her faithless to him. Jim Langdon takes her through the forest to a distant jungle. Here they live happily for three years, Vida becoming a noble woman devoted to the good of her little clan.

Cameron on finding Vida gone, allows every vicious instinct to dominate him and swears vengeance. Through the years that pass, his search for her has been unsuccessful. When one day he happens to come to the camp, he encounters Vida's daughter, who has wandered from the house, and by a well-directed shot kills her. Then he goes into the forest, turning through the forest with the child, he meets Vida's husband frantically searching for her. Knowing Jim is the father, he enters the cabin with him, he sees through the window of the cabin Vida, praying at the empty crib of her child.

The old hatred is still in his heart and slowly he raises his rifle intent on carrying out his mission. At this moment Vida comes running from her husband's arms and it forms a shield for her heart. When Jim and Vida leave the cabin to find and thank the savior of their baby, he is gone, and Vida never knows that her nemesis has passed.

MUSTANG.

THE SHERIFF OF PLUMAS (Two Parts)—June 16).—The cast: Jess Martin (Charles West); His Mother (Margaret Stowell); Homes (Harvey Clark); Jim (Harry McCabe); White (Burr Ritchie); Eason (Ashton Dearholt); Helen Ross (Helen Ross). Scenario written by Karl Coolidge. Directed by Warren Ellsworth.

His mother, a desperado, has made Jess Martin has spent twenty years of reformation in the West and has become the sheriff of Plumas. He is of the opinion that it is the ambition of Martin and his wife that their son obtain a college education. Later they place the proposition before Roy and he endorses over the idea, especially as May agrees to wait for him until the four years of college are over.

But at the college Roy falls in with a fast set and, due to poker games, is soon deeply in debt. While at home his father and mother undergo every sacrifice for him. Roy's roommate is a student of criminology, and from him Roy learns something of the methods of detection by thumb prints. His pocket soon begins to increase, and he is forced to write home for money, stating that he finds it necessary to go to college on a private course, which is very expensive. By this time Martin's resources are deeply drained, and he is at a loss to figure where he can get the money. Mr. Martin pleads with him, and he agrees to get the necessary funds somehow.

The sheriff brings in a tramp, and Martin recognizes the man to be a pal of his from years ago. He arranges to let him go, to release him. That night Martin enters the general merchandise store and has the safe opened, where he finds the money. The robbers, Homes forces Martin to divide the spoils with him, and more than ever Homes has a hold on him. At college Roy receives the money and also a letter from his mother stating how they are afflicted. He returns to the camp, his senses, and, packing up, hurriedly leaves for home. To his father he tells his whole story. His father is investigating the robbery when that his son has disappeared away the money for which he committed the crime.

After a little while the position of deputy sheriff, acting under his father. While Homes tells Martin that he must aid him in one more robbery and reverse the tide of the country. Martin is obliged to agree, and that night the express office is robbed. In the morning Roy is investigating the robbery when he finds a thumb print. This he takes a photograph of, and after it has been developed and printed, he shows it to his father. His father takes it, and when Roy is handed the wet print back there appears an additional thumb print on it. Roy is investigating the robbery when the two prints are similar, and he realizes that his own father must be the thief. Roy and Martin again meet. Homes, and Roy, who has followed his father, secretly watches them. Homes states that they mean to do more jobs, and in a fury Martin knocks him down. Roy hurries to the scene, but before he arrives both men have drawn guns and both are dead. Others appear. All the money taken from the express office is found on Homes, Martin having refused to accept it. Roy shows his father shows his mother a copy of the Plumas newspaper, which gives a glowing tribute to Martin, stating that he met his death in the performance of his duty.

DELANQUEUR BRIDEGRIMS (June 18).—The cast: Orlando Turpin; Bill (Paddy McGuire); Rena (Rena Rogers); Her Sweetheart (Arthur Moon); Two Widows (Mack Gales and Ednaurie); Two Widows (Louise Owens and Margaret Templeton).

Thompson and Brown are engaged to marry the Widow Thompson and her father. For this purpose they hire two dress suits to be married in, and during the wedding ceremony they show their daughter, Rena Thompson, spooning with her sweetheart, who is ejected violently from the premises. To do this, Bill and Brown fought with the fury of tigers, and the result was that they spoiled their clothes. Thinking to remove a blemish from their full dress had acquired, they hung them out on the line in the back yard for an airing.

During Bill and Brown employed the attention of a hard-working laborer who is emerging from a saloon with a can of beer. While the exponent of beer, Bill tells Bill to a certain street he has asked about, Blorgie is inserting a hose in the beer, and remains it. To make matters heavier to the laborer he puts in a handy brick and allows Bill to have some beer while he keeps on talking to the laborer. While Bill is puffing like an engine to suck some beer through the hose, Blorgie tells the laborer what he is doing, and the laborer takes the brick from the can and hits Bill on the head with it, while Blorgie makes his escape.

Later this team passes the fence along the back yard of Thompson. They steal the clothes and leave their own regalia in place of the stolen ones. Thompson and Brown are then pursued them, but they steal an auto and make their getaway. While speeding in the auto they are arrested and brought to the station house. Unable to pay the fine, they are jailed, and the cop is then warned to let them go. The reason men who are heading for the town. The photo he shows the cop of the desperate men is that of Blorgie, who has been arrested. Taking these two men to the widow's house, he hides them in the banquet room, and then, after everything is over, he presents them. Meanwhile, Thompson and Erown have broken jail and are chased by the cops. They run to the jail just as Bill and Ellogie have been discovered in their thefts.

From this on things happen with great rapidity. Thompson kidnaps Bill, and then, after a chase, makes him marry Rena and himself. Just as the ceremony is over, Bill comes out of the crowd, and, after a chase, kills and steals the presents. Then a chase ensues, during which the team of rough robbers are forced to jump on a passing train, and the cops are holding on to a rope attached to the truck. Bill cuts the rope and makes their escape, while at the widow's Thompson, Brown and the widows embrace.

MUTUAL MASTERPIECE.

SOIL, MATES (American—Five Parts—June 8).—This picture was originally scheduled for release on May 8 but was postponed until the above date, as the subject of a bona fide girl, printed on page 1376 of the issue for May 26.

THE INNER STRUGGLE (American—Five Parts—June 12).—Tech cast: Dr. Stephen Grant (Franklin Hutter), Myra Hamilton (Winifred Greenwood), Harry Elliot (Roy Stewart), Dr. Grant, in charge of a lacer operation in the face of a woman, the subject of a bona fide girl, Myra Hamilton. Though she met Harry Elliot, a dissipated young society man. Dared by the boys, Harry proposed to Myra. Grant warned her of Harry's character, but she would not listen.

Myra and Harry visit Grant's laboratory, where Myra learns the vivisection experiment. Grant was working on. She bitterly berated him for his cruelty to his canine subject. While Harry was busy, Harry saw a cat, a small dog.

Grant, furious at this ruthless destruction of his months of labor, resolved that Harry would pay.

Myra denounced her engagement to Harry a few nights later. Myra soon found that she had a hopeless task before her in trying to reform Harry. Grant, the overboard, Harry's estrate with him for his actions in causing her pain, and she began to appreciate his nobility.

Myra noticed that Harry was inclined to be jealous and discussed with Grant a plan to bring him to his senses. Grant was to pay ardent court to Myra. Soon Harry began to notice Grant's attention to his wife. He found them together one day, and wild with rage, left a note stating that they would find his body at the country home.

Grant raced after Harry to the country house. Harry, with an oath, rose and struck him, and charged Myra. Grant picked up a telephone to the telephone, called up Myra, and told her he would bring Harry back to her a man.

Grant then brought him to a insane asylum and Harry, with a ruin drink, came out. After weeks of hard work Grant felt that Harry was ready for the test. He deliberately placed temptation in his way. He showed her a letter which Grant brought him back to Myra. She forgave him. Grant then quietly left. Soon Myra looked for him. She saw Harry, who had been in a letter which stated that his application as physician at the leper colony had been accepted, and he left an address. Harry, who had been in a letter from Myra asking him to come back to her as Harry had died. His first impulse was to go, but when he realized his mission he burned the letter.

THE WASTED YEARS (Centaur—Five Parts—June 10).—Tech cast: June, the Old Weatherly (Crane Wilbur); The Passerby (Joseph Hatherby); the Policeman (M. D. Moran). The cast in the play of "The Wasted Years" was an orphan boy (Master George Harris); June, an orphan girl (Thelma Burns); Harry Weatherly, the youth (Crane Wilbur); June, the maiden (Mae Gaston); "Billie" (Jessie Burnett); Robert Leslie (John Oaker); Little Pal (Thelma Salter).

Old Weatherly, a broken down tramp, finds a young girl with money and goes away by the good samaritan. Weatherly starts off to satisfy his hunger. He is attracted by some theater posters announcing a play of "The Wasted Years." The pangs of hunger urge him to buy food, but the play of "Youth" calls him and he spends his money to witness the play. In the story of his own youth, the years he wasted.

Harry and June were child sweethearts in an orphanage at Cedarville. They grew up together, Harry becoming a machinist in a village factory and June a milliner's apprentice. As they grew older they planned to marry, but the young man was summoned to a big city where he was informed that he had inherited a vast amount of money, left him by his uncle. He went to New York, where he met a girl and he lingers among the white lights. The village physician is also in love with June, but she does not encourage his attentions and people make known that she is betrothed to Harry.

A desire to see a little of life takes a hold on Harry and he visits on the road and meets a woman, the Bernians gather. "Billie," a woman of the world, and Robert Leslie, her friend, are attracted by the strange actions of Harry. The woman plans to catch him in her net and Leslie helps to pave the way by bidding her a hasty good-night, to go to his to fascinate Harry.

Her charms set Harry's brain in a whirl. One night at the roof garden, Leslie "dares" Harry to marry "Billie," for such is the trap set for him. Harry, who has been a woman and his brain dull from wine, Harry consents and the party hurries to a Justice of the Peace and the ceremony takes place.

Not until the next day does Harry realize what he has done.

In the mean time June's heart has wilted and she weeps for his love. She goes to the city to seek him and there confronts Harry with the woman. June is heartbroken at the news of the wedding and she would find country and the young physician, still pleading his love for her, she marries him and they establish a happy home.

Gradually Harry extracts the wealth of her husband and so great is his love for her that he is blind to her sham love for him. Suddenly his eyes are opened and he finds his wife and Leslie scheming against him in his own home. A scene follows, Harry ordering Leslie from his home and Leslie never to return and the woman then betrays her real attitude toward Harry. As Harry broods, his wife gathers her belongings and goes away with Leslie, although it is the eve of her motherhood. Through a detective agency Harry tries to trace his wife and her would-be lover.

Four years have passed and Harry has used every means to find his wife and child without result. Leslie has sunk to the level of a common crook, deserted "Billie," who heartbroken at her folly, passes to another world. The little daughter is left in a wretched condition in a dirty tenement room. The child goes out into the open in a dreaching rain and looking for shelter climbs into an unoccupied automobile. Harry enters the machine and discovers the child, and her home. But that night, Leslie and some of his associates go out on a burglarizing expedition. Masked, Leslie climbs into the house and finds a woman in a room, a struggle follows and the mask is torn from his face. The little child is aroused by the noise and Leslie makes a dash for it. As the father clings to the child, Leslie steals away. The young girl, who has been returned to Cedarville. As he and his little "Pal" near the town, Harry sees the scene of his happy childhood. Harry's swimming pool appeals to him and he attires himself in a bathing suit and plunges into the water.

A gypsy and his family come across the automobile belonging to Harry and, wearing the man's clothes. These the gypsy appropriates to his own use and leaving his wagon behind hides away in the woods. Harry, who has been "Little Pal" and her father are ready to go they are forced to use the abandoned wagon and Harry attires himself in the clothes left by the gypsy. Reaching the town of Cedarville, the child has taken sick and Harry goes to the town doctor. He learns of the marriage of June and the gypsy. Harry, who has been in the town, starts off to lead the life of a gypsy. For months he and his daughter travel near the outskirts of the town. One day, however, she suddenly taken very ill and dies. He takes the body back to the scene of his younger days and the little girl, little grave, is buried.

The play of "Youth" is ended. The crowd leaves the theater and "Old Weatherly" remains unmoved. An usher shakes him and then draws back, realizing that the old man has passed away.

WHO'S GUILTY NO. 7.—TRUTH CRUSHED TO EARTH (Arrow—Two Parts—June 19).—Tom Blake from the time he was a small boy, always got into trouble because he told the truth. As a youngster, instead of lying out of some small offense, he manfully told the truth—and was invariably punished for it. His instinctive desire for the truth was strong—but not strong enough to stand the repeated outrages visited on his young person for upholding it. It was, literally, beaten out of him, so that when he reached man's estate, and was confronted by a situation that demanded a straightforward moral fabric, he was not equal to it, and lied. The lie cost him dearly, for with it he lost a beautiful love, and the fortune which he sought quickly the end of the weak and the outcast. "Who's Guilty?"

Jugs, one of the Claw's henchmen, gets himself employed by a caterer arranged on the lawn fence at the Golden's summer place. He then writes to the Claw telling him of a plan to dynamite a bug on the lawn, which bug tree will fall and kill every one in the pavilion. Margery's dog gets mixed up in some maulings, and in rolling over attacks the note, which

FROM KITCHEN MECHANIC TO MOVIE STAR. OR, ACHIEVING SUCCESS VIA THE NOODLE ROUTE (Cartoon Comedy—June 19).—The stoutest opens with Ammonia Entymode, who is the man who all work. When father gets his shirt back it is so full of holes he feels like a sponge.

Ammonia is supposed to serve dinner. Thus the madam of the house is a Goldberg: "By the way, I brings dinner we'll either starve to death or die of old age." When Ammonia gets the B. R. (Bum's Rush) and would ordinarily be hooked up with a guy who's taking a motion picture and who needs a girl with a face like something that was started but never finished." He tells her, "You must first start posing in a hamburger steak. Just look perfectly natural." And Ammonia leaps into fame. Her old mistress hasn't heard from her and imagines she has walked off a dock. Then "the poor, clumsy boob comes back"—fresh from her conquests in flimflam and flashing diamonds in all directions—and madam does a fadeout that would defy any ordinary bottle of smelling salts to bring her to.

JAPAN'S ANCIENT CAPITAL—NARA (On Same Reel as Foregoing).—Japan's ancient capital—Nara—located on the island of Nondo, and the first film capital of Japan, noted for its many beautiful temples and monasteries is the subject of this film. It shows interesting and intimate views of the buildings, streets, public and private life of its residents, and their religious and industrious occupations.

LUKE'S FATAL FLIVVER (Rolin Film Co.—June 19).—The film starts with a gentle pastoral scene of some fashionable folk spending a day in the country. Luke's car of fifteen (not counting the fat boy who at least half a dozen), are out in a two-seater "in Lizlie." The car parts get mixed, the lunch and combat as an added starter, and the show is on. It follows many ludicrous incidents, and the end of the film sees Luke at the helm of his bucking motor car with his select party of society stragglers along through the jolly mud of a swampy land to the title of "At the end of a perfect day!"

LUKE'S SOCIETY MIXUP (Rolin Film Co.—June 26).—This film shows Luke "battling" for a world-famed violinist, and, needless to say, his attempts at the high-society star are a success. You see, Luke is a second-rate musician on the country estate of some regular people. His long, unimpaired hair has never appeared as anything but slovenly until, after arranging a party at which the great "Violinsky" will be the main attraction, he receives notice telling of the virtuoso's inability to attend, and suddenly sees in Luke's matted locks the badge of genius and the one way to success.

Luke hates to do it because, in the first place, he feels it lowers his professional dignity as "assistant wiper," and in the second place he doesn't know a G string from a clothes line. The first objection is forcibly overcome and the latter is circumvented by swabbing his business hand in bandages.

Then Luke makes his debut. His uncouth actions are at first put down to general stupidity, but they finally get to be just a bit, you know, and the laughs resulting from his contact with the punch-bowl and the society guests make a dry reel of action.

WHO'S GUILTY? TO. S.—BEYOND RECALL (Arrow—Two Parts—June 26).—The story tells of two young men, financially embarrassed, who try to seek their fortunes by becoming bandits. The sweetheart of John Leonard, Margaret, is imbued with a desire for professional laurels and tells John before he goes that she has accepted a position under the district attorney. John tells her that she will be an accomplice to a system of justice that is unworkable by an angry dispute they part. The other man, Edwin Martel, finds it difficult to leave his sweetheart, Elsie, who forewarns him when she hears of his intended trip. Edwin has been seen entering Elsie's apartment, but was not seen leaving it. That when John and Elsie

He is found there, and his only witness, John Leonard, has sailed. Because of his poverty he is railroaded to the electric chair, Margaret, until the last moment, helps the district attorney push the case against him. Then Leonard comes back, but it is too late. "Who's Guilty?"

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 8.—"THE GREEN-EYED GOD" (Two Parts—Feature Film Corp.—June 20).—The detectives employed by Enoch Golden to track down the Iron Claw, his enemy, The Laughing Mask, assure Golden that his discharged secretary is the wrong rider. Margery Golden does not believe this, but because of reports that The Laughing Mask, whom she loves, has been seen to kiss another girl, decides jealously to help track down her defender and settle the question of his identity once and for all.

Accordingly, a decoy note, supposed to be written by Legar and informing his henchman that Margery will be captured in a stone pit nearby, is placed where the Laughing Mask will find it. It is believed he will try to effect Margery's rescue and can be captured.

But the note falls into Legar's hands, and, although he knows it to be a trick, he decides to make capital of it and blow up the stone pit, which is mined. The Laughing Mask hears of this and effects a rescue of the Golden girl, just as Legar sets off the fuse which wrecks the pit.

OUR LOBSTER SUPPLY (June 26).—This picture shows how, to compensate for the depletion of the lobster supply through wasteful fishing, the U. S. government maintains three lobster culture stations in Maine and Massachusetts, where almost 200,000,000 eggs are hatched each year.

An interesting view of the hatchery at Boothbay, Maine, is shown; then the details of lobster culture. First, we see the setting of the lobster pots. The lobsters, attracted by the bait, enter through funnels at the ends of the pot and cannot find their way out. Then the pots are hauled in, after remaining on the bottom for a day or more, and the lobsters are removed. About 10,000,000 lobsters, weighing about 15,000 pounds, are taken by this means each year.

How the egg-bearing lobsters are placed in a pound, where they are held until the eggs are well advanced; how the lobsters are removed to obtain the eggs, and how the eggs are finally hatched, are the subjects of this entertaining film.

PERAK—THE PROTECTED (On Same Reel as Forsaking).—This film shows the mineral and agricultural resources of Perak, the lives and habits of its natives (Malays and Chinese), its places of amusement, its athletic sports, and, lastly the famous Tower of Ipoh, which occupies a prominent place in the town and which has been cut in the solid rock.

Triangle Film Corp.

THE DIVIDEND (Ince—Five parts—June 18).—The cast: John Steele (William H. Thompson); Frank Steele (Charles Ray); Betty Price (Ethel Ullman); Malzie (Margaret Thompson).

John Steele, a capitalist, makes formal announcement as president of the great corporation of which he is the head, that the new year just starting will see the company earn the greatest dividend in its history. Then he virtually offers his entire life to the task of making good his boasts to his wife, and when his son returns from college he has so little time to devote to the boy that the young man soon drifts into life of idleness and degradation. He is disowned by his father and soon takes up with evil companions who drag him lower and lower. The father meanwhile, seeks to discharge his obligations to society by a generous contribution to a charitable organization that is overtaxed by relief for people of the slums. The fact that the very corporation of which Steele is the head will declare its dividend at the end of the year by crushing the people who are expected to take advantage of the mission, does not lessen the public action with which Steele's princely gift is received.

The paths of Frank Steele, the rich man's son, and Betty Price, a girl of the slums who has been driven to the streets by the oppression of Steele, the elder, eventually cross, and they take up life together. With them are other companions of the underworld, one of whom attends the dedication of the mission upon its completion, and when words of praise are being said for Steele, the millionaire, a girl of the underworld arises and denounces him as the man responsible for the condition of herself and hundreds of others like her at that very minute.

Young Steele has long since ceased to make efforts to see that his father has a surer body and soul to a life of the deepest degradation. With his companion, Betty, he becomes a drug fiend and his greatest struggle is to secure the money needed to supply them with opium. And then Betty, the strong, wretched, depraved woman of the streets, deserts Steele, and takes up with a thug who soon fires of her and casts her out. Deserted by the one creature to whom he might have clung, young Steele becomes a wanderer on the streets.

There is to be a big ball of one of the gangs a certain night. A rival gang plans an attack on that night. Just as the attacking gang is about to reach the hall where the ball is in progress, young Steele shambles into sight. A fight ensues between the two gangs. Steele is mortally wounded, and the police, who reach the scene almost immediately, are able to identify him and notify his father. The magazine has made good his boast that the company will pay its greatest dividend, but the price has been greater than he reckoned. His wife has lost her only boy wounded unto death. The aged man sends word to have his son brought to his home. The boy, just before he dies, for yes his father, but makes clear to him the enormous price he has paid for the record dividend.

AN INNOCENT MAGDALENE (Fine Arts—Five Parts—June 18).—The cast: Dorothy Raleigh (Lillian Gish); Colonel Raleigh (Spottiswoode Aiken); Forbes Stewart (John Grasse); The Woman (Mary Alden); The Preacher (Seymour Hastings); Mammy (Jennie Lee); Old John (Wm. de Vaull).

Dorothy Raleigh is a high-spirited Southern beauty who has been brought up by her father, Col. Raleigh, an unrepentant Kentuckian, to have nothing to do with the townspeople of the little village of Norwalk, just outside of Louisville. She has no other companions than the old negro servants, her animal pets and her books. One day there comes into her life by chance a young millionaire gambler named Forbes Stewart. He makes love to her and asks the Colonel for her hand. Indignant at his presumption, the Colonel orders him from the house. But the young people escape.

When Dorothy meets her husband's friends she is grievously disappointed. They determine, rather than cause her unhappiness, to change his mode of living, and give up his old friends. But a detective who knows something of his past, tries to blackmail him. His defiance leads to his arrest, and he is sentenced to a year in the penitentiary. Dorothy is left alone at first but when another woman enters her home and seemingly proves that she is Stewart's wife by an earlier marriage, she goes back to her father. The stern old man, however, has disowned her, and she is compelled to seek shelter in a cabin with her old negro mammy.

When Stewart is released from the penitentiary he hastens to his home to find his wife. Instead he finds his other woman, an old flame who has taken this method to win him back again. He repudiates her, however, and carries to Norwalk to see the Colonel and demand Dorothy. The Colonel refuses to tell her whereabouts, but from an old servant Stewart learns the truth. Dorothy in the meantime has been led to believe her baby illegitimate, and the villagers, glad to see the proud name of the Raleighs dragged in the mud, make her life miserable. She is about to kill herself when Stewart arrives. The outcome reunites the lovers and brings a change in the heart of the father that is supremely satisfying.

THE APOSTLE OF VENGEANCE (Ince—Five parts—June 25).—The cast: David (William S. Hart); Mary (Nona Thomas); Tom McCoy (Joseph J. Hawling); "Marm" Hudson (Fanny Midgley); Willie Hudson (Jack Gilchrist); Elsie (Helen Mabel).

David Hudson is a young minister, living in Vermont. He is the son of a family of Kentucky feudists. The mortal enemy of the Hudsons is the McCoy's. At the very time the young minister is being honored by a call from a richer and more influential parish in the North his father is killed in a pitched battle between the Hudsons and McCoy's. The news of the call brings the young minister's word of his promotion, brings him a letter from home, telling him of the killing of his father and asking him to take aid in the extermination of the McCoy's.

"Dave" Hudson declines the call from the church in the North and says to his mother, but not to murder but to preach the gospel. His family is so enraged at his refusal to take up arms against the McCoy's that they drive him from the house. He takes up his residence in a little mountain cabin and puts out handbills announcing he will preach the following Sunday at "The Neighbor."

Chance gives him the opportunity to rescue Mary McCoy, the favorite daughter of the Hudson's worst enemy, from a brute who has attacked her. A little later the oldest McCoy boy attacks little Elsie Hudson and buries her in a bridge into the river, where she would have been drowned and not have so her floating downstream and rescued her.

This attack of a McCoy on a defensible girl is more than Dave can stand and he renounces for the moment his ministry and goes forth to kill the man who has attacked his sister with his bare hands. Straight to the McCoy house Dave makes his way and there learns that the elder McCoy, having written a confession from his son, had turned the boy out and disowned him. Dave turns back to the woods in search of the man he sought. A terrible storm breaks and at its height Dave begs the god he has served to bring the man he was after into his power. In answer to his prayer, young Judson falls down an embankment and lands at the very feet of the man who has sworn to kill him. As Dave's hands close on the man's throat, his victim begs that his life be spared and makes his plea for "God's sake" as words strike Dave hard and he unloosens his grip on the man's throat.

Dave has returned to his preaching. He has allowed the man he sought to escape when he had him in his very grasp, but the effect had been better than as though he had killed him. A feeling of friendship sprang up between the families that had been enemies for twenty-five years. Dave eventually marries Mary McCoy and the oldest and bitterest enemies in the two families become friends.

A WILD GIRL OF THE SIERRAS (Fine Arts—Five parts—June 25).—The Wild Girl (Mae Marsh); Jim Hamilton (Wilfred Lucas); Mrs. Hamilton (Maizie Macford); Moll (Orra Grey); Bob Jordan (Robert Harron); A Westerner (James O'Shea). Directed by Paul Powell.

Fifteen years before the picture opens Jim Hamilton had gone with his wife and little three-year-old daughter into the wilds of the West to prospect for a mine. One day while he was away from the cabin, Indians swooped down on it and killed everyone but the little girl, who had been some distance away and who had fled, at the sound of the shooting, into the woods. When Hamilton returned he found his wife dead and his daughter gone. He returned to the cities and became a professional gambler.

Hamilton remembers the old worthless mine one day and decides to try and sell it. He induces Bob Jordan, a wealthy young man, to accompany him to the mine with the idea of purchasing it. On the trip, which is made across the country, Jordan shoots at what appears to him to be a young deer. When he finally comes up to the object he finds it to be a strange wild little girl. He tries to kill her, but she is clothed in leaves of grass and she neither understands a word that is said to her nor can she speak.

Jordan nurses the little girl who he has wounded by his shot back to health and she becomes his devoted slave. She is shy and afraid of all other humans, however, and prefers the company of wild animals and birds. When Jordan inspects the old abandoned mine thoroughly he decides it is worthless and refuses to purchase it. Hamilton determines to get possession of the young man's money by robbing him at the point of a gun, but the little wild girl has hidden the money belt of Jordan as a prank and the gambler is frustrated.

Jordan, angered by the supposed loss of his money and by the knowledge that he had been picked as victim for an intended swindle, was unusually cross to the little wild girl and she decided to run away from him the next day. When Jordan discovers she has fled he starts after her and finds her in the bear cave where he had found her the first day. By treating her kindly, he wins back her confidence and she shows her gratitude to him by restoring his lost money. The discomfited gambler returns to his old haunts, poorer than when he started, and Jordan goes back to his simple life with the little wild girl following at his heels.

HIS GREAT TRIUMPH (Columbia Picture Corp.—Five Parts—May 22). The cast: "Butsy" Gallagher (William Nigh); Nick Gallagher, his father (Julius D. Cowles); Judge Winters (Roy Applegate); Gus Ewing (R. A. Brown); Robert Ewing, his son (Robert Elliott); Count Carl (Martin J. Faust); Detective Frank Code (David Thompson); "Lefty" Jake (Victor de Linisy); "Frank the Mex" (Frank Montgomery); Peggy Winters (Marguerite Snow); Mrs. Madden, her aunt (Cecilia Griffith); Florence Madden, her cousin (Florence Vincent); "The Pest" (Citta Cameron). Written and directed by William Nigh.

"Butsy" Gallagher is a harmless young product of the slums. In all his life he has never been of the slightest importance. His spirit is to be subdued that he has almost forgotten how to get angry.

One night the gaily going on in Judge Winters' home attracts him, and he becomes on the fire-escape to watch it, becomes interested

In the judge, in his pretty daughter Peggy, in her cousin Flo, in Flics admirer, the Count, and in Bob Ewing, a struggling lawyer. Then he falls asleep on the fire-escape.

Peggy is fascinated with the Count and decides to cut Flo out, if she can. She consents to meet him in the drawing-room after the household is asleep. When the Count is concealed in the window niche when the house is burglarized, "Frank the Mex" and "Lefty Jake," securing their booty, pass through the room when Flo awakens and screams. A servant who runs to see what is wrong is killed, and the crooks escape through the window. "Butsy" is lying asleep. They roll him over into the room. "Butsy" is arrested as the murderer.

"Butsy" finds himself suddenly famous. Women and kind flowers. Great men argue about his case. The people in his home alley decide that he has more in him than they thought. Peggy, who was hidden in the other window and who knows that he is not the murderer, does not dare speak for fear of injuring his reputation. Flo Ewing takes up the case. He is sure "Butsy" is not guilty, and finally makes Peggy tell what she knows. Her father, Judge Winters, moves her marry the Count.

"Butsy" is given a new trial and is released under a five-year probationary sentence for having committed perjury. He has "confessed" to the murder, delighted at having so much attention.

Brought into prominence by "Butsy's" trial, Bob is engaged by a firm of unprincipled men to condemn and take over for a reservoir some land belonging to Judge Winters and some farmers in his old home town. The two crooks, "The Mex" and "Lefty," are hired, and bind and gag the Judge when he tries to fight the matter in the town council. Peggy and the Count, who follow, are about to meet the same fate, when "Butsy" intervenes. He has left the city because it is not interested in him except as a criminal. The Judge accuses him of being mixed up in the conspiracy and his long-buried spark of anger flames forth. He puts up the fight of his life. He and the Count turn on the hoboes, and "The Mex" the driver of the servant, is mortally wounded, confessing just before he dies.

Flo gives Bob a piece of her mind. She tells him exactly what she thinks of him for having turned traitor to her uncle's interests in such cowardly fashion. She shows him a sleeping manhood within him. He goes to the council meetings and argues, not against the Judge, but for him, winning the case. Flo forgives him and they are married. Peggy cannot help admiring the Count's valor when she sees him fighting the crooks, and thereafter she realizes a real one. As for "Butsy," he sees again the girl known in his tentment house as "The Pest." Now she is lovely young woman. She has become a trained nurse and he asks her to be his own private nurse as long as he lives.

"THE SCARLET WOMAN" (Popular Plays and Players—Five Parts—May 21). The cast: Thora Davis (Mme. Petrova); Hanlin Davis (Edward Martindel); Clinton Hastings (Arthur Hoops); Robert Blake (Eugene O'Brien); Paula Gordon (Frances Gordon). Written by Aaron Hoffman. Directed by Edward Lauder.

Hanlin Davis, vice-president of a bank, has been gambling in stocks, and loses heavily. While in the act of robbing the bank he is surprised by another man, who is also a gambler. Davis is arrested and his wife goes to Hastings, the District Attorney, and makes a plea in his name. Hastings is a corrupt politician and does not hesitate to make an improper proposal to Thora. He agrees to free her husband off with a light sentence after she accepts his demands.

When Davis is released from prison and learns of the sacrifice his wife has made he openly denounces her and turns her into the street. Then he gets a divorce, ignored by all her friends and driven out of society, she is thrown upon her own resources and becomes known as "the scarlet woman," void of heart and conscience. The District Attorney becomes notorious for his own station with an sporting element along Broadway, and is believed to be a graft taker. Robert Blake, a wealthy young man, institutes a reform investigation, and the District Attorney is exposed.

Disbarred and disgraced, Hastings decides to engage himself once more in the stock market for the cause of his downfall. He cultivates the friendship of Paula Gordon, an unscrupulous society woman, who is in love with him. Paula of Blake and holds his respect. Hastings has evidence of a crooked transaction in which "Paulie" participated in the stock exchange, unless she does his bidding. Through Paula, Thora is introduced to Blake. He is made to understand the situation, and she is made to believe that he knows about her past. They fall in love and soon afterward are quietly married.

After the wedding Hastings confronts the couple and denounces Thora, telling Blake of her past and that she is "the scarlet woman." Blake gives Hastings a beating but hears Thora confess that he has told the truth. Before he can regain composure, following this blow, and speak to her, Thora is gone. She secures employment in a factory, hidden from her former friends. Paula now hopes to win Blake's love, but he remains steadfast in his love for his wife. Blake becomes a melancholy weakling in his deep sorrow. Paula goes to Thora and tells her she is wrecking his life; that if she would save him she must divorce him and openly return to the life of the street and cafe. This Thora does. It proves the severest blow of all for Blake, and he is unable to yield to Paula's persuasion to come to her when he learns the truth. He seeks out Thora, begs her to forgive him, as he long ago has forgiven her, and they are happily reunited.

"THE FLOWER OF NO MAN'S LAND" (Columbia Pictures Corp.—Five Parts—June 19).—The cast: Echo, the Flower of No Man's Land (Viola Dana); Roy Talbot (Duncan McRae); Big Bill (Harry C. Brown); Kaboma, the Indian (Mitchell Lewis); Pedro, the Mexican (Fred Jones); Mrs. Talbot (Nellie G. Mitchell); the Talbot Child (Eldine Steuart); Potter, the Butler (Marcus Moravia). Written and directed by John H. Collins.

Dan Barrett, a miner, is murdered in the heart of the Great American Desert. His orphaned son named Pedro, in whose mine Barrett offered to take a half interest. Pedro escapes with his money, leaving his father's body to Echo, alone on the plains. She is rescued by Kaboma, an Indian, and brought up by him. The miners call her "The Flower of No Man's Land."

When Echo has become a winsome girl of sixteen, a great change comes to her. Roy Talbot, a Metropolitan grand opera idol, suddenly loses his voice as the result of disipation. His immediate arrest is prescribed, and he goes West. His stage career is overtaken by the shock of Echo and Kaboma. He suffers a painful injury and Echo takes care of him. As he convalesces he is struck by the charm of this simple Western girl, and she is impressed by his evident importance and his polished manners. The two are married to the wife of Roy of Big Bill, a kind-hearted miner who has always loved her.

When given her the love arrow which, according to the custom of his tribe, goes to a bride, the gift of her nearest male relative. It was with Kaboma by night, and he is killed by a great chief, and Kaboma's heart is buried in her grave. Talbot suddenly finds that his voice has returned, and he is given the right to marry. There Echo finds it difficult to accustom herself to the ways of polite society. Talbot growing bored, soon shows her his real nature. He is secretly in love with Fily, a woman of the fast set, for whom he is buying expensive new clothes. He mistakes her necklace for a seal, and the Talbot home and Echo opens the parcel, thinking it is for her. When it is left in Talbot's room, and he does not give it to her, her suspicions are aroused.

Accordingly, when a boy comes with a note which he merely says is from "a woman," she opens it. It is from Talbot's deserted wife, who is dying. She asks for aid for her child. Ben goes to her and, overcome though she is by the terrible discovery that she is not a wife, promises the real Mrs. Talbot that her child shall be cared for. She goes home, takes the love arrow and snatches it from the girl's wedding ring and the letter from Mrs. Talbot, puts on her simple Western clothes and leaves for the nearest town. Kaboma, who has been fatherly nurse her broken spirit back to life, and after a visit of vengeance, in which he makes Talbot for his treachery, restores her to restore the smile of happiness to "The Flower of No Man's Land."

THE THREE GODFATHERS (Five Parts—June 10).—The cast: Ruby Merrill (Stella Ray); Bob Sawyer (Harry Carey); Tim Gibbons (George Berrell); Bill Kearney (Frank Lanning); Rusty Connors (Joe Rickson); Pete Cule (Hart Hoole). Screenplay written by Harvey Gates. Directed by E. J. Le Saint.

Three bandits, escaping from the scene of a bank robbery that have committed, are caught in a mad storm which sends them to the trail, but works disaster in their immediate vicinity. A prospector strays from his traveling outfit and perishes in the storm. The three bandits come upon the "prairie schooner" just at the time the prospector's wife gives birth to a child and dies, leaving the infant in care of the bandits.

Miles away from any habitation, the methods employed by these hardy men in the body of the new-born babe, and the tenderness in which they fulfill their strangely-imposed mission, constitutes a remarkable example of human kindness. When the three men are able to proceed toward the nearest settlement, two of them die as a result of wounds and privation.

One of the "three godfathers" manages to reach the settlement where he discovers the girl with whom he has fallen in love, just previous to robbing the bank. Here, too, he finds the sheriff awaiting his arrival. The handit turns the child over to his girl, and submits himself to the authority of the sheriff while recovering from the effects of his well-nigh fatal experience on the desert.

Subsequently the handit escapes and his escape, taking with him the baby and the girl he loves. Once more on the desert, the bandit locates the lost wife and her husband. His conscience overcomes his desire for freedom when he remembers that he has promised the mother to rear the baby boy in the path of rectitude.

Retracing his steps, the handit surrenders to the sheriff, confesses his share in the bank robbery, and by a strange coincidence the baby is proven to be the sheriff's nephew. Then his wife, the sheriff stretches his hands generously to the extent of giving to the handit and his girl the reward that has been offered for the band robbers, dead or alive, and the story ends with the apparent prospect of a happy and useful future for all concerned.

"PERILS OF DIVORCE" (Brady—Five Parts—June 12).—The cast: Constance Graham (Edna Wallace Hagg); John Graham (Frank Sheridan); Mason Tegars (Macey Harlan); Alice Lorraine (Ruby Hoffman); Craig (Edwin August); Geraldine (Geraldine). Screenplay by Alice Lorraine. Directed by Edwin August.

John Graham, of settled and quiet disposition, is married to Constance, a girl of twenty. They have a little child, Geraldine, whom they idolize. Alice Lorraine, a girl who wishes to visit the Grahams. One day John brings home the news that Mason Tegars is to open the estate adjoining the Grahams'. John tries to remember that which would hurt Constance, says, "An old sweetheart of yours, wasn't he, Constance?" Alice sees the jealous fire in John's eyes and she feels that she has the key to the situation—jealousy. That is what she must play upon—the jealousy of a middle-aged man with a young wife.

Mason Tegars arrives and visits the Grahams. Alice arranges to visit his home with Constance, but at the last moment Alice turns back on pretense of having forgotten something, allows Constance to go alone, and arrives a little later with John. When John and Alice see Tegars and Constance seriously chatting, Constance convinces John that there is nothing between Tegars and herself. Alice then, in a clever ruse, arranges that, while out skating, Tegars should find Constance apart from the other members of the party alone. She falls and seriously injures her ankle and Tegars carries her in his arm. Her hair disheveled and when presented to the Grahams, the conclusion is reached that something of an unconventional nature occurred and tells Constance that a reconciliation is impossible. John finds John disabused. Constance goes back to the city and later learns that John is obtaining a divorce, alleging unfaithfulness. Constance is forced to work in cabarets, and, despite that, remains pure and noble. Once divorced, Alice has John at her mercy, and succeeds in having him marry her, after which she neglects the child and spends John's money recklessly and foolishly. She has a younger lover, with whom she is situated.

Some years have passed and Constance has gone down the ladder of youth and is dabbling for the night in beautiful men. One day a young girl comes into the cafe where Constance is employed with one of the tough young customers. The night is beautiful and the young girl learns from a friend that the young girl is the daughter of the wealthy old reclusive John Graham, and that "old bet her father would spread if he knew his carefully brought-up child was in a place of this calibre." Constance, realizing that it is her daughter, invites her to her dressing room and makes her identity known.

Mason Tegars Constance's friend at the club and is told the story. Realizing that Constance is the woman meant, he signifies his intention of telling John the truth. Mason tells him that Constance never yielded to his cabarets, and that she was a good woman when divorced and still in John convinced, goes to his wife and suggests that she is cold toward him. He hopes to win her back in time and provides for her needs, but the hard life she has led begins to tell on her. She is taken aback and, although John and Geraldine give her every attention, she passes away.

KNOWLEDGE BRINGS SUCCESS

Messrs. Exhibitor, Exchangeman, Operator, and Film Men Everywhere:—The moving picture business is one of the youngest but one of the leading industries of the world to-day. We may well be proud to be connected with it. Are you keeping up? Do you know all about it? It will yield larger returns for an equal amount of work to the men who know. Each weekly issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD contains more up-to-date information than you can get from all other sources. Subscribe now if not already on our mailing list. You will get your paper hours earlier than from the newsstand and it costs less.

Motion theater patrons who daily exclaim over the clearness of the pictures may not know that is stenciled in the film margin—but you do.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipment

enables you to produce clear, steady pictures which please your patrons.

This equipment is compact and easily installed.

There is nothing complicated in construction or operation.

It gives constant voltage over a wide range of load which is very important for "fading in" as it enables the operator to "warm up" his second arc without affecting the brilliancy of the first.

The services of Westinghouse engineers are available to assist in the solution of your problems.

Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipments were awarded a Medal of Honor, the highest award granted in this class, at the Panama Pacific International Exposition.

OUR FORESIGHT MEANT YOUR PROTECTION!!

Ten days after the outbreak of war we received the largest stock of French-made condensers ever shipped into this country

That's why we are able to offer you now

THE KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSER

at before-war-time prices. Foreign factories formerly engaged in the manufacture of optical goods for the entire world now devote their sole energies to war merchandise for their own countries, thus making possible the distribution of inferior, cheaply made and costly-in-the-long-run-domestic substitutes.

PRICES:

Plano Convex
6 1/2, 7 1/2, 8 1/2, 9 1/2 and 10 1/2 inch E. F.,

KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSERS are ground from pure optical glass. They do not discolor—no green, pink or purple effects after a brief use. They are the only satisfactory condensers on the American market today. If you are not using them you are not obtaining maximum results from your projection equipment.

The 1916 Convention Number of The Moving Picture World

¶ Pursuant to our custom for several years past, the only Special Number of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be published current with the National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

¶ The Convention will be held in the Coliseum, Chicago, the week of July 10th. Our Convention Number will be dated July 15th.

¶ We respectfully suggest that prospective advertisers reserve their space now. All advertising copy must be in our hands by June 24th, marked plainly so that it will receive proper publication.

¶ Please note that in spite of the unusual advantages offered through this number, because of its increased circulation and intensified interest, the advertising rates remain the same.

17 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK CITY

We are six years old and proud of what we have accomplished
since our first birthday.

We are particularly proud of this new home of Perfect Developing and Printing.

Magnificently built, elaborately equipped
—it represents the best that human brains have invented, and money can buy, for moving picture production.

Efficiently operated on honor—scientifically managed—it gives you the supreme degree of film quality and absolute security.

We offer this laboratory, combined with multiple set studio, for your inspection and service.

Come and see for yourself why we are growing and how we have grown.
